years. Dan. 10:2-4 shows as much: (b1) "I Daniel was mourning 3 full weeks." Would he mourn 21 years? (b2) "I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till 3 whole weeks are fulfilled." Would he have gone without eating these things for 21 years? (b3) "And in the four and twentieth day (24th) of the first month...." Would he talk about the 24th day in verse 4 after just talking about 21 days (3 weeks) in verse 2 if these 3 weeks meant anything other than 21 days, such as 21 years? If 21 days means 21 years then the 24th day should be the 24th year. The KJV does not mention "years." (c) 483 years were supposed to elapse from the command to rebuild Jerusalem to the coming of Jesus. The decree of Cyrus to rebuild the temple and Jerusalem was made in 536 B.C. (Isa. 44:28) which is 532 years before the birth of Jesus in 4 B.C., not 483 years. The prophecy was 49 years short. (d) The KJV says "the most Holy," which implies a person, not a place; while the RSV says "a most holy place" and shows a place, not a person, is being referred to. (e) The word "Messiah" is never applied to the expected deliverer of the Israelites in the whole Bible. It is indifferently applied to kings, priests, prophets, and those who are inducted into their office. (f) In order to make "Messiah the Prince" apply to Jesus one must distort the text because he was no prince or "Nagid". The Hebrew word "Nagid" always denotes a prince or ruler with temporal authority which Jesus lacked. (68) DAN. 9:26 ("And after threescore and two weeks (62) or (7 X 62) = 434 years shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood..."). (a) After what? If after Cyrus' decree in 536 B.C., there is a problem. Jesus died in 33 A.D according to most accounts. From 536 B.C. to 33 A.D. is 569 years. Five hundred and sixty-nine years exceeds 434 years by 135 years. The prophecy is 135 years short. (b) If after Jesus' birth, it would mean Jesus lived to be 434 years old. (c) How could Jesus be cut off, i.e. die, after 62 weeks when verse 25 said he would not be born or appear until after 69 weeks? (d) The word "and" implies that Jerusalem was destroyed when the Messiah came. Yet, this did not occur until 70 A.D. which was more than 40 years after the Messiah was cut off. (e) When was Jerusalem ever destroyed by a literal flood? Apologists will, no doubt, abandon their literal approach and claim this is referring to a flood of people. (69) HOSEA 6:1 ("Come, and let us return unto the Lord; for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up"). Apologists let their imaginations run wild in many instances and this is a good example. (a) "Us" shows that more than one being is under discussion, not Jesus alone. (b) How could Jesus return to the Lord unless he left him, which is impossible, since he is the Lord. (c) When did God tear Jesus? (d) When did God smite Jesus? (70) HOSEA 6:2-3 ("After two days will he revive us: in the 3rd day he will raise us up...Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord....and he shall come unto us..."). (a) Again, "us" and "we" show that more than one person is being raised, not Jesus alone. (b) In Matt. 27:63 and Mark 8:31 Jesus said he would rise after 3 days, not "in the 3rd day." (c) "To know the Lord" implies that Jesus did not yet know him which is impossible. (d) How could God come to "us," to Jesus, when Jesus is the Lord? (71) MICAH 5:1 ("...they shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek"). Apologists claim this was fulfilled by Matt. 26:67 ("Then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him; and others smote him with the palms of their hands....") when nothing is said in Matthew about hitting Jesus on the cheek with a rod. (72) HAGGAI 2:6-7 ("For thus saith the Lord of hosts; Yet once, it is a little while and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea and the dry land; And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come"). (a) Jesus was never the desire of all nations. (b) The universal earthquake which was to precede his coming appears to have passed unnoticed. Haggai 2:21-23 ("Speak to Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth; And I will overthrow the throne of Kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the Kingdoms of the heathen.... In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel...And will make thee as a signet....") shows that Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah, was to be taken when the earth and heavens quaked. He was to be taken by the Lord "in that day," which shows that this prophecy is referring to the immediate future and not to Jesus who lived 500 years later. (c) The verse says "a little while;" yet the "desire," which is allegedly Jesus, appeared over 500 years after the prophecy. (d) The RSV says "treasures" (pl.) rather than the "desire" (sing.) of all nations.

THE HOLY GHOST--Anyone who has studied the Trinity with any degree of objectivity knows that Christians believe in tritheism--three gods. They hold that the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God, yet we are to believe simultaneously that there is only one god. Supposedly, within the one God are three persons--the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. With logic such as this, is it any wonder that they concede the Trinity is not to be understood but accepted on blind faith. Besides the problems with the Trinity that were discussed in the commentary of Issue #15 and on page 5 of Issue #36, several other points are worthy of note. First, the word "person" is never used in the Bible in the manner employed by biblicists. In fact, within the King James NT the words "person" and "persons" only appear 10 and 14 times respectively and none has any reference whatever to the Trinity. Creation of an artificial word such as "persons" is nothing more than a subterfuge to evade an obvious imbroglio. As used by biblicists the word "persons" refers to three separate and distinct beings with all the powers and prerogatives of a god. Thus, in effect, the deceptive euphemism, "person," becomes nothing more than another word for "god," and the words "god" or "godhead" become generic terms encompassing the three gods. "Godhead" or "god" no longer refer to a being per se but become general terms referring to three gods. Second, nowhere in the Bible is the third person in the Trinity--the Holy Ghost--directly referred to as God. The Father (1 Peter 1:17) and the Son (Titus 2:13) are referred to as God, but the Holy Ghost is not. Apologists seek to use Acts 5:3-4 ("But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost....thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God") but conveniently ignore the fact that "agency" is a well-known precept in communication. One does not have to have said something directly to someone in order for communication to have occurred. If someone says something to a company's lawyer that is treated as if one had said it to the company's executives or CEO. Communication with a person's physician is often treated as communication with that person. Many relationships are often considered so close that contact with one element is equated with contact with the other. But that does not mean the elements are identical. Third, many verses clearly show that the Holy Ghost is a spirit, not a person, as biblicists use the term. It has no mind, will, or personality, but is only a feeling or attitude. For example, Luke 1:15 ("...and he--Jesus--shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb") says that Jesus was filled with the Holy Ghost. How could this have occurred when they are separate persons? How can one person fill or indwell another person? Acts 10:38 says, "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power...." One person can not be anointed with another. The verse says Jesus was anointed "with the Holy Ghost" not "by the Holy Ghost." Matt. 3:11 makes the same point by saying "...he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire" not by the Holy Ghost. Luke 4:1 says, "Jesus was full of the Holy Ghost....". How could one person in the Trinity be filled with another person of the Trinity? Second Tim. 1:14 says, "That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us". If one can be filled by the Holy Ghost which is allegedly one person of the Trinity, then why couldn't one be filled by Jesus the Son or God the Father as well, since they are all allegedly equal?

Other relevant verses in this regard are: Luke 1:41 ("...and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost"), Acts 2:4 ("And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost"), and Acts 13:9 ("Then Saul, filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes...."). Granted, another group of verses say the Holy Ghost is a being, but that only exacerbates the problem.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #310 from TF of MENSA in Pasadena, Maryland Continues from Last Month (Part e)

(The 4th point in BE's pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD?, was: How can Num. 23:19 ["God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent...."] which says God doesn't repent, be reconciled with Ex. 32:14 ["the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people"] which clearly says he does? What follows is TF's reply--Ed.).

God does not "repent" or "turn back" from his eternal principles, standards, and criteria. He does not "turn back" from his purposes and plans. Thus, if God provides an "umbrella" or shelter to deflect his wrath from us, we may seek that protection or reject it. God doesn't change as a result of our choices. Yet our relation to him changes. Our choice can "turn back" his wrath. Even in Exodus 32:11-14 when God chooses to "turn back" from imminent judgment of the children of Israel, he chooses on the basis of eternal criteria and objective facts which were eternally foreseen. The dialogue in that passage occurs and is recorded so that creatures may learn those eternal criteria.

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part e)

Dear TF. This answer, like your others, is fatally flawed. First, the text says God does not repent, period. It says nothing about his eternal principles or standards. Could you show me where the text has qualifiers? Where does the text say "repent" only has your limited application? You are engaging more in eisegesis than exegesis. Second, God's "umbrella" or "shelter to deflect his wrath" has nothing to do with the text and is something you have added gratuitously. Third, the text says nothing about our relationship to God changing. In effect, you are rewriting the script as you would like the Bible to read. Man's relationship to him is irrelevant. The fact is that the text says he does not repent and that settles the matter. He either does or he does not. If he does, regardless of the reason, then Num. 23:19 is false. Fourth, you obviously don't like the word "repent" and have created a phrase of your own--turn back--to minimize the clash. Why do you equate the two and are we going to use the words of the text or those you prefer?

Letter #310 Continues (Part f)

(The 5th point in BE's pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? was: How can 2 Kings 8:26 ["Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign"] which says Ahaziah began to rule at age 22 be reconciled with 2 Chron. 22:2 ["Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign"] which says he was 42? The following is TF's reply--Ed.)

This one is easy. II Chron. 22:2 is copied incorrectly from the original. Ahaziah started his reign when his father died at the age of forty (2 Chron. 21:20). Therefore Ahaziah was 22 (rather than 42) when he replaced his father. Even in the Bible, at birth children are younger than their parents.

It is easy to copy parts of the Bible incorrectly. Try it yourself with any passage chosen at random. If your experience is like mine, the words will not disappear or correct themselves. The amazing thing is the degree of corrective support or "parity checking" made possible by the biblical context.

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part f)

Unfortunately, TF, there is nothing easy about this one. First, how do you know it was copied incorrectly? This is the standard ploy that has been used by apologists for centuries. You have never seen the originals nor has anyone else in the modern era. This tactic is rather amusing as it is often employed when nothing else can be thought of. In his classic work, Alleged Bible Discrepancies, Haley used it profusely. When one group of writings say 2 Chron. 22:2 should be 42, how do you know it should say something else? How do you know 2 Kings 8:26 is copied correctly? Maybe it's in error and 2 Chron. is correct? Apparently you obtained your answer from one of the standard apologetic works and took no more account of the problem involved than most apologists. Second, there are many Hebraic texts supposedly accurately reproducing the original OT text. Surely you aren't saying the translators of the text into English based their translation on only one inaccurately copied text among many. If there were a copyist error, then many Hebrew texts would have to have precisely the same error, which would be incredible. Third, the fact that 22 would seem to be more in harmony with other parts of the text is hardly worthy of serious consideration since consistency is certainly not one of the Bible's hallmarks. Indeed, the entire history of this publication provides evidence to the contrary. (To Be Continued)

Letter #316 from DM of Pasadena, California

Dear Dennis. I suspect that we're mostly talking past one another, so I'll state my position again. I just don't see any "conspiracy" by the better translations of the Bible to eliminate legitimate discrepancies. I'm talking about the New English Bible, the New Oxford Annotated Bible, Today's English Version, the Jerusalem Bible, and certain others. In fact, the great majority of the deviations from the King James Bible are probably justified. Note what I'm not saying: I'm not saying that the effects of prejudice are wholly absent in such works. Nor am I talking about the history of the Bible, its origins, or how it has been used down through the ages. Neither am I talking about inferior translations. I am saying that the above translations are worthy of scholarly acclaim, that they are the work of high standards and cannot justly be characterized as vehicles for eliminating legitimate difficulties.

Any translation of the Bible represents a tremendous number of decisions. Manuscripts or portions thereof must be selected. Rare words must be interpreted, and nebulous expressions must be clarified. And, of course, many words and expressions will have no precise counterpart in the new language. I've tried to illustrate some of those obstacles in previous letters. In many of these decisions there is a legitimate range of opinion, and thus even good translations will differ on many points.

It is my judgment, with respect to those difficulties which I have studied, that in some Bibles they may be toned down while in others they may be highlighted. With respect to other difficulties the roles are often reversed. This is the type of random effect one expects to find in good translations....

If you wish to believe that there is a general movement underfoot to gradually smoothe away the Bible's difficulties, a movement to which the above translations are a party, then that is your privilege. I just don't see that in the evidence currently available to me -- and that includes your input on the matter.

Editor's Response to Letter #316

Dear DM. Apparently I'm not making my position very clear on this matter so I'll try again. I do not believe the King James is the most reliable version nor do I think there has been a steady drift away from the KJV for the sake of political expediency. I do, however, feel that translations are political documents reflecting the theological orientation of their creators and the era in which they are produced. The purpose for which a version is created has more to do with the underlying motives of its creators and the milieu in which it emerged than the discovery of new documents or manuscripts. As far as actual validity is concerned, I'd say the Revised Standard Version of 1946/52 is the least political and most reliable version on the market, but it is by no means immune from tendentious interpretations.

Letter #317 from TD of Morgantown, West Virginia (Part a)

Dear Dennis. ...In my letter of last August, I criticized items (8), (10), (17), and (24) of the flyer "THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD?" Some of the others, I think, are also weak, and should be omitted or amended. Item 7 [Rom. 3:23 says, "All have sinned." All means all. Yet, Gen. 6:9 says, "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations." Job 1:1 and 1:8 say Job was perfect. How could these men have been perfect if all have sinned?--Ed.] could be criticized on the grounds that the term "perfect" as applied to Noah and Job only refers to their well-integrated personalities, not to any sinlessness. I do not go along with this criticism, but it seems to me that there are better contradictions that could be used instead of (7).

Editor's Response to Letter #317 (Part a)

Dear TD. I realize you are trying to provide assistance to BE but your criticisms resemble those of many apologists and must be addressed as such. First, probably the most common excuse employed by biblicists is: "that's what it says, but that's not what it means." It doesn't take long for one to become rather perturbed with this hackneyed approach. Nearly every time I quote the Bible or a version of same they'll come back with this overdone retort. I can't help but reply, "Then, write your own version and send me a copy and we'll discuss it. Before we can begin to analyze the Bible we have to agree on the version to be used. Since you are dissatisfied with the version I quoted, send me one you have created or one that is available that you support. In the meantime, I'm not going to engage in a guessing game of trying to pin down not only the phantom originals but a current version that is eternally in flux. You and other apologists are going to have to 'get anchored' on one version or the other." As I said many issues ago, I'm not going to accept apologists having 15 or 20 different versions of every verse in the Bible which they can insert or extract as expediency dictates. I work on the theory that the text means what it says and it says what it means. The text says "perfect" and it's the same "perfect" that is applied to God in Deut. 32:4 and Psalm 18:30. If you wish to argue that this does not mean Noah was sinless, then I'll argue with equal force that Deut. 32 and Psalm 18 are not alleging God is morally perfect. Second, the word "perfect" in Gen. 6:9 comes from the Hebrew word "taw-meen" which means without blemish, without spot, undefiled, upright, and perfect. If that does not mean he is morally sinless, then what does? How much clearer do you want it to be? What would the text have to say to convince you that it means Noah was morally sinless? Third, the verse must mean moral sinlessness or perfection; otherwise, the incident with respect to Noah and the Flood has no significance and reeks with injustice. If Noah was not morally perfect, then he had no more right to be saved than anyone else on the planet. If he was a sinner like everyone else, then he should have drowned like everyone else. The difference between his morality and that of others would be more one of kind than of degree. Fourth, what is a "well-integrated" personality? That's a nebulous phrase that can be interpreted at will. What I strongly suggest to anyone who seeks to use this defense is that they write their own version of the Bible, translate the text in such a manner that it says precisely what they want said, and send me a copy. In your case you'll need to change Gen. 6:9 to "Noah was a just man with a well-integrated personality in his generations."

If my response to your objection sounds rather acerbic, it's because over the years I've grown to disrespect biblical apologetics in general and certain apologists in particular. Apologetic scholarship is not really pursuing truth and honesty but is actually seeking to justify at all costs a belief-system which they feel is the only hope for mankind. They are willing to ignore or rationalize thousands of problems in search for what they mistakenly believe is the higher good.

Although they'd never admit as much, they have surreptitiously adopted the time-honored maxim that the ends justifies the means. If you have to do some unscrupulous things in the short run for the good of all in the long run, then so be it. Unfortunately, as many of those who commit unlawful activities will admit, the problem with lying and distorting is that once you start down this road you have to create additional prevarications in order to be consistent with the original perversion. One is rarely sufficient. A chain reaction is set in motion that pulls the apologist down a slippery slope to an awaiting cliff. "Apologetics" is an appropriate description of biblical defenses, because if there is any book for which apologies need to be made it is the Bible. (To Be Continued)

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) Several subscribers took exception to my final comment to TF on page 4 of Issue #78. In reference to the length of Hell's punishment I said, "How can an infinite series have a finite total? The number of finites within an infinite series is infinite, not finite." Apparently several people feel that the number of finites within an infinity can be finite and one even provided some mathematical calculations with a liberal sprinkling of calculus to prove as much. When I entered college decades ago, math was my major and calculus my nemesis. Perhaps I missed something by switching to philosophy, but after reading the explanations provided I still don't see how a restricted number of finite numbers can total an infinity. Perhaps I've erred; it's happened before. So I'll not pursue the issue.

(b) We'd like to express our appreciation to those who have successfully helped us appear in the media (radio, television, or print) by publishing their names, addresses, and the assistance rendered if they have no objection. It's entirely voluntary and no one will be entered unless we receive definite interest and permission.

COMMENTARY

MESSIANIC PROPHECIES (Part Five of a Five-Part Series)--This commentary will conclude our comprehensive listing of the main OT prophecies that are applied to Jesus of Nazareth by Christian apologists. (73) ZECH. 2:10-11 ("Sin and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee"). (a) If this refers to Jesus as Christians claim, then how did he dwell in their midst? He was actually killed and passed away from them. If it refers to the future, then it's pure speculation. (b) Christians may argue that his spirit rests in the midst of Zion, but the divine presence has not been found in Jerusalem from the time of the exile. As Isaiah 52:5 says, "Now therefore, what have I to do here, says the Lord, for my people have been taken away for naught." (74) ZECH. 6:12 ("Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is the BRANCH; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord"). (a) Jesus never built the temple of the Lord. (b) When was Jesus ever called "The Branch"? (75) ZECH. 6:13 ("...and he shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both"). (a) Jesus never had much glory. (b) Jesus never sat or ruled on a throne. (c) Jesus was never a priest. (d) Who is "both"? Both means more than one. (76) ZECH. 9:9 ("...behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass"). (a) According to some Hebraic scholars, "having salvation" should have been translated as "having been saved." (b) The RSV translated "having been saved" as "triumphant and victorious is he" which is also inapplicable. Jesus was neither saved nor victorious. (c) This event could not refer to Jesus since it was to occur at the same time as the restoration of Israel and the establishment of peace and happiness. (d) Actually Zechariah is congratulating his countrymen who are returning from captivity in Babylon to Jerusalem. Zech 1:16 ("I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies") shows that Zechariah was discussing the entry of the Jews into Jerusalem, not the entry of Jesus nearly 700 years later. Zech 8:7-8 ("Behold, I will save my people from the east country, and from the west country; And I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem....") also shows it was referring to the return of the Jews from captivity. (e) The verse is also inapplicable to Jesus because Luke 19:30 and Mark 11:2 say there was a colt but no ass is mentioned. (77) ZECH. 9:10 ("...and he shall speak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even unto the ends of the earth"). (a) Jesus never had a dominion stretching from sea to sea or to the ends of the earth. (b) If Jesus had had a kingdom this would have violated his basic purpose and nature as set forth in Matt. 8:20 ("The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath nowhere to lay his head") and Matt. 20:28 ("Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto...."). (c) In Matt. 10:34 Jesus said that he came not to bring peace but a sword. (78) ZECH. 12:10 ("And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him,...."). (a) It would make no sense to have the House of David be responsible for Jesus' death when that is the house of which Jesus was a member. Would his own house kill him? (b) "As one mourneth for." Why would this say as? Jesus is a son of the House of David. The House of David would not mourn for Jesus as if he were an only son when he was, in fact, a son of the House of David. (c) The text has "Upon me whom they have...." while the RSV has "on him whom they...." If "me" is the correct term, how could they pierce the speaker who is Jehovah (God)? (d) This verse has nothing to do with Jesus. Zechariah is saying that God will make Judah and Jerusalem very powerful in the future, such that those nations who attack them will be destroyed. Then the people of Jerusalem will look with compassion and mourning on those whom they have pierced and killed. Interest in the life of one's fellow man will be deeply felt in the latter days. (79) ZECH. 12:11 ("In that day shall mourn, every family apart, the family of the house of David apart,...."). Yet, there was very little mourning for Jesus on the day he died. (80) ZECH. 13:2 ("And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that...I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land"). Jesus was a prophet, so according to this verse he will have to pass out of the land along with the unclean spirit. (81) ZECH. 13:3 ("And it shall come to pass that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of the Lord: and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesieth"). (a) If this verse applies to Jesus as some biblicists allege, it would mean Jesus: lied in the name of the Lord according to his parents, was killed by his parents, and died by being thrust through rather than by crucifixion. (b) The prophet spoken of in this verse says in verse 5 that he is a tiller of the soil; yet, Jesus was a carpenter. (82) ZECH. 13:4 ("And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied...."). If this applies to Jesus, then he must eventually be ashamed of his vision because he, too, is a prophet. (83) ZECH. 13:5 ("But he shall say, I am no prophet, I am an husbandman; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth"). How could this apply to Jesus since he was a prophet and carpenter, not a cattleman. (84) ZECH. 13:6 ("And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends"). (a) There is no biblical record of Jesus making this statement. (b) Jesus was not wounded in the house of his friends. (c) Biblicists apply the crucial part of this verse ("...What are these wounds in thine hands?....") to Jesus on the cross but conveniently ignore the fact that the five prior verses apply to the same individual who couldn't be Jesus. (85) ZECH. 13:7 ("Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts: smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered: and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones"). (a) The command given to the sword to "smite" the shepherd who is my fellow merely signifies that those kings who oppress the Jews and in their delusion believe that they are doing God's work shall be punished. (b) "Smite the shepherd and the sheep shall be scattered" indicates that the rulers of the Gentiles shall be overthrown and out of their fall shall arise the deliverance of Israel. Many shepherds must be struck prior to Israel's complete deliverance since Jews are scattered everywhere.

That completes our entire list of OT messianic prophecies that allegedly refer to Jesus. For those who stayed with us this far, congratulations. You have demonstrated the kind of sticktuitiveness that is indicative of one who is dedicated to a cause. For those who remain unconvinced, I'd suggest measures having more to do with fostering one's objectivity than investigating the Bible further.

ANTI-INTELLECTUALISM--One of the most insidious biblical teachings is that the intellect is not to be trusted as the final arbiter of one's decisions. Faith in Jesus, theological insights, and spiritual gifts are to replace knowledge, disputation, and philosophy as the ultimate source of truth. In effect, faith is to replace proof, hope is to replace work, and trust is to replace evidence. People are to rely on forces and beings beyond their control rather than their own talents and abilities. This debilitating approach to life's challenges, which can only lead to self-effacement and low self-esteem, is exemplified in such verses as: HEB. 11:1 ("Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for the conviction (evidence--KJV) of things not seen"), ECCLE. 6:8 ("For what hath the wise more than the fool..."), 1 COR. 1:22-23 RSV ("For Jews demand signs and Greeks seek wisdom, but we preach Christ crucified, a stumbling block to Jews and folly to Gentiles..."), 1 COR. 4:10 ("We are fool's for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ..."), 1 COR. 2:1-2 RSV ("I {Paul--Ed.} did not come proclaiming to you the testimony of God in lofty words or wisdom. For I decided to know nothing among you except Jesus Christ and him crucified"), 1 COR. 3:18-19 ("Let no one deceive himself. If any one among you thinks that he is wise in this age, let him become a fool that he may become wise. For the wisdom of this world is folly with God"), 1 COR. 1:19-21 RSV ("For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and the cleverness of the clever I will thwart. Where is the wise man? Where is the scribe? Where is the debater of this age? Has not God made foolish the wisdom of the world? For since, in the wisdom of God, the world did not know God through wisdom..."), 1 COR. 2:13-14 ("And we impart this in words not taught by human wisdom but taught by the Spirit, interpreting spiritual truths to those who possess the Spirit. The unspiritual man does not receive the gifts of the Spirit of God, for they are folly to him, and he is not able to understand them because they are spiritually discerned"), 1 COR. 2:4 ("...and my speech and my message were not in plausible words of wisdom..."), ECCLE. 1:18 ("For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow"), 1 COR. 1:17 ("For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words..."), 1 COR. 4:4 ("For I know nothing by myself..."), 1 COR. 1:25-27 RSV ("For the foolishness of God is wiser than men....not many of you were wise according to worldly standards...but God chose what is foolishness in the world to shame the wise...."), 1 COR. 8:1-2 ("...knowledge puffs up, but love builds up. If any one imagines that he knows something, he does not yet know as he ought to know"), 1 COR. 2:6-7 RSV ("Yet among the mature we do impart wisdom, although it is not a wisdom of this age or of the rulers of this age, who are doomed to pass away. But we impart a secret and hidden wisdom of God..."), and COL. 2:8 RSV ("See to it that no one makes a prey of you by philosophy and empty deceit, according to human tradition, according to the elemental spirits of the universe, and not according to Christ").

Central to any sensible society is the belief that truth is discovered through the interchange of ideas in an open forum. Yet, Christians are repeatedly admonished to avoid those of another persuasion and shun the exchange of ideas through dialogue. They are told to flee non-biblical ideas because the latter are not only wrong and lead believers astray but possessed by those with less than honorable motives. Christian beliefs are not to be open to questions and doubts. Many verses expose these dogmatic sentiments: ROM. 16:17-18 RSV ("I appeal to you, brethren, to take note of those who created dissensions and difficulties, in opposition to the doctrine which you have been taught; avoid them. For such persons do not serve our Lord Christ, but their own appetites, and by fair and flattering words they deceive the hearts of the simple-minded"), 2 TIM. 2:16-17 ("Avoid such godless chatter, for it will lead people into more and more ungodliness, and their talk will eat its way like gangrene"), 1 TIM. 6:20 ("O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called...."), 2 TIM. 2:14 RSV ("Remind them of this, and charge them before the Lord to avoid disputing about words, which does no good, but only ruins the hearers"), TITUS 3:9-10 ("But avoid stupid controversies, genealogies, dissensions, and quarrels over the law, for they are unprofitable and futile. As for a man who is factious, after admonishing him once or twice, have nothing more to do with him...."), ROM. 14:1 RSV ("As for the man who is weak in faith, welcome him, but not for disputes over opinions"), 1 TIM. 6:3-5 RSV ("If any one teaches otherwise and does not agree with the sound words of our Lord Jesus Christ and the teaching which accords with godliness, he is puffed up with conceit, he knows nothing; he has a morbid craving for controversy and for disputes about words, which produce envy, dissensions, slander, base suspicions, and wrangling among men...."), COL. 2:4 ("I say this in order that no one may delude you with beguiling speech"), 2 TIM. 2:23-25 RSV ("Have nothing to do with stupid, senseless controversies, you know that they breed quarrels. And the Lord's servant must not be quarrelsome but kindly to every one, an apt teacher, forbearing, correcting his opponents with gentleness"). How one corrects one's opponents with gentleness after one has been repeatedly told to avoid the opposition entirely is rather hard to fathom.

Imagine giving your followers the impression in 2 THESS. 3:2 ("And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith"), 1 JOHN 2:22 ("Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son"), and 2 JOHN 7 ("For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist") that all those who lack faith in Christianity in general and Jesus in particular are unreasonable and wicked! Who would be open to dialogue with anybody so portrayed? Additional relevant verses are TITUS 3:2, HEB. 13:9, and 2 JOHN 9-11.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #310 from TF of Pasadena, Maryland Continues from Last Month (Part g)

(TF also attacked the 6th point in BE's pamphlet, JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER?, which says: How could Jesus be our model of sinless perfection when he denies his moral perfection in Matt. 19:17 ["And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God"]. What follows is TF's reply--Ed.).

Jesus did not deny his moral perfection in Matt. 19:17.

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part g)

That's it! That's all you have to say, TF! I don't see how it can be any clearer. If there is only one who is good and that is God, then Jesus, along with everyone else, must be less than good. He must have some moral imperfection, no matter how small; otherwise he is as good as God. So, in fact, he is denying his moral perfection.

Letter #310 Continues (Part h)

(TF attacked the 18th point in BE's pamphlet, JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER?, which says: In Mark 10:19 Jesus told a man to follow the commandments. Yet, one of those listed by Jesus was "defraud not" which isn't even an OT commandment. What follows is TF's reply--Ed.)

You are incorrect. Jewish tradition lists the total number of divine commandments at 613, of which ten are known best. "Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor..." is found in Lev. 19:13.

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part h)

Are we going by the Bible and Jesus or Jewish tradition, TF? In Luke 18:18-22 a ruler asked Jesus what he had to do to inherit eternal life. Jesus told him to follow the commandments which included the usual references to adultery, stealing, killing, bearing false witness, and honoring thy parents. After the ruler said he had kept the short list provided, Jesus told him he still needed to do one thing more--sell all you have and distribute it to the poor--in order to have treasure in heaven. Jesus' list of commandments follows the usual list of 10, not the 613 you mentioned, in which case the reference to defrauding thy neighbor found in Lev. 19:13 is irrelevant.

Letter #310 Concludes (Part i)

(TF attacked the 2nd point in BE's pamphlet, JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER?, which says: "Jesus said, whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire" [Matt. 5:22]. Yet, he repeatedly called people "fools" as Matt. 23:17, 19, Luke 11:40 and Luke 12:2 show. Shouldn't he be in danger of hell too?" What follows is TF's reply--Ed.)

"But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the councils: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool shall be in danger of hell fire" (Matt. 5:22, emphasis mine).

Read the context. The phrase "without a cause," in the first part of the verse is the failure that Jesus is condemning. We should condemn sin (in ourselves and in others). We should express anger (Prov. 20:2, Eph. 4:26) towards those who violate the rights of others. We should call the atheist a fool because God has already called him a fool (Psa. 14:1, 53:1).

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part i)

You ignored your own advice about context, TF. "Without a cause" applies to being angry, not to calling others fools. The verse prohibits being angry "without a cause," while saying Raca to one's brothers or calling others fools is prohibited, period. There is no qualifier. You have taken the phrase "without a cause" and applied it to everything in the verse. Secondly, as I mentioned approximately 10 issues ago, the phrase "without a cause" does not exist in 11 of the 14 versions I have in my inventory. You used the version which suits your purpose (the KJV) and ignored nearly all the others. I also recently mentioned that I not going to accept the apologetic attempt to have many different versions of each verse from which they can draw as expediency dictates. Thirdly, what does condemning sin have to do with the issue? You have "sin" on the brain when, in fact, the word is never mentioned. The verse is only condemning being angry, saying Raca, and calling others fools. You have made a broad generalization that is not warranted by the verse. You are not only "taking out-of-context," but expanding the text. Fourthly, the verse says we are not to call others "fools," period. Nothing is said about atheists, nor are they made an exception. Again, could you provide textual support for your theories? And lastly, bringing in Psalm 14:1 and 53:1 contributes little other than exposing a contradiction: in the OT God, i.e. Jesus, calls some people fools while later condemning such activities in Matt. 5:22.

Letter #317 from TD of Morgantown, West Virginia Continues from Last Month (Part b)

...In regard to item 14 in the pamphlet THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? ("Matt 27:9-10 quotes a prophecy made by Jeremy the prophet. Yet, no believer in the Bible has ever been able to show me where it lies in the book of Jeremiah"), the prophecy occurs at Zec. 11:12-13. It is an error, of course, but a relatively minor one. Perhaps something stronger could be used instead.

Editor's Response to Letter #317 (Part b)

Unfortunately, you are incorrect on two major points, TD. The prophecy does not occur in Zec. 11:12-13 either. Although similar in some ways, the facts differ in important respects. That which occurs in Matt 27 conflicts with that which occurs in Zechariah 11 as will be detailed later in a section entitled ACCOMMODATIONS. Secondly, there is nothing minor about this mistake. It is one of the most obvious, important, and easily disproven references to a non-existent OT prophecy that can be found. When one can easily prove apologists are clearly asserting black is white, you don't dismiss that as of minor importance.

Letter #317 Concludes (Part c)

...Item 17 ("Jesus told a man in Mark 8:34 that 'whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me.' What cross? He hadn't died on the cross yet. There was nothing to take up. That man would have had no idea what he was talking about") is also weak because the Roman method of crucifying on a cross was widely known in ancient Palestine, and was probably that to which Jesus was referring.

Editor's Response to Letter #317 (Part c)

Maybe I'm wrong, TD, but I don't think you understand the problem. Most people know that Romans often executed people by crucifying them on a cross and Jesus was referring to crucifixion. But you have not addressed the issue. The cross to which Jesus was referring was the cross as a Christian symbol. He was referring to a specific cross, not crosses in general, and that was the cross on which he was going to be killed. But that cross couldn't possibly be a symbol until after he died on it. There was no Christian cross when he spoke to this man; the cross was not a Christian symbol until after the crucifixion. Consequently, for Jesus to tell a man to pick up a symbol which did not yet exist is absurd. The man would have had no idea what Jesus meant unless he knew the future. You can't pick up something that's yet to be.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #318 from Steven Overholt of the FRONTLINE, Box 154, San Juan Capistrano, California 92693

Dear Dennis. BIBLICAL ERRANCY is easily the most interesting and informative periodical on the Bible that I have ever encountered. I frequent major theological institutions in California as part of my independent research and cannot help noticing that most of their libraries seem determined not to carry your publication. Your readers may want to raise this issue whenever they encounter Christian fundamentalists seeking to challenge their sense of fairness.

I regret to report that BIBLICAL ERRANCY is not the only important publication being denied a hearing to Bible and divinity students. The same sort of censorship is being applied to the important New Testament history newsletter which I edit. Even though the background information we provide Bible students is uncannily relevant, very few Bible colleges see fit to allow their students--or even faculty--to include it among the reading material of their libraries....

Letter #319 from DES of Davenport, Iowa

Dear Dennis. Biblical Errancy (May 1989) arrived in the mail today and I was reading your note at the end in reference to suggestions (or bitches) about the quality of printing.

I have had the same problem with the minutes that I put out for the local ACLU chapter, of which I am the secretary. With my computer I have compacted the text with my word processor. A couple of members complained that the minutes were too short so I made up a sample with double spacing and normal pica 10 to the inch letters. The same text that I put on one sheet took two full sheets and a paragraph on a third sheet. When I made this demonstration, they (expletive deleted--Ed.) and moaned that the type was hard to read. At this point I told them to use a reading glass.

The point of all this is that you should stay with what you are doing. I think you are doing a fantastic job with BE and you are putting it out dirt cheap; so don't change a (expletive deleted--Ed.) thing.

Letter #320 from VEC of Hood River, Oregon

Dennis: A comment on "Editor's Note" at the end of Issue #77 (May 1989). Keep the format of BE as is. Just keep up this important work.

Letter #321 from JRC of Parlin, New Jersey

Dennis. Having only recently renewed my subscription after a year, I now need to catch up on your excellent periodical. I understand that you have published an index during the past year. If so, please send me one and bill me accordingly....

You and your staff are to be commended for a fantastic job on all-important issues such as these. Keep with it and if you have any radio or TV appearances scheduled in the near future, would you mention some dates and places? Your subscribers would love to follow such shows or debates. Maybe you could start listing them regularly in BE.

Editor's Response to Letter #321

Dear JRC. Your comments are only too kind. The only index we have at the present time is distributed free to everyone who requests a copy and is sent out with all sample issues. As far as radio and TV appearances are concerned, we try to inform our readers whenever possible. Unfortunately, publishing them ahead of time is risky because the schedules are often changed by the stations on a moment's notice.

COMMENTARY

PETER VERSUS THE OT (Part One of a Two-Part Series)--Nearly all of the NT verses in which Peter contradicted Jesus, Paul and himself were exposed in the commentary of Issue #44. This month's commentary and that to follow will reveal nearly all of the conflicts between the sayings of Peter and OT verses. What follows are the most prominent examples. (1) ACTS 10:34 ("Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, 'Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons'"). In effect, Peter said God does not play favorites. But, evidence to the contrary is overwhelming. God does have his chosen: DEUT. 14:2 ("For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God, and the Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the face of the earth"), DEUT. 7:6 ("...the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth"), DEUT. 7:14 ("Thou shalt be blessed above all people...."), 1 CHRON. 17:22 ("For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, Lord, becamest their God"), 1 SAM. 12:22 ("For the Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake: because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his people"), ISA. 51:16 ("...and say unto Zion, Thou art my people"), EX. 2:25 ("And God looked upon the children of Israel, and God had respect unto them"), EX. 11:7 ("...the Lord doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel"), AMOS 3:2 ("You only have I known of all the families of the earth...."), GEN. 4:4-5 ("And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering: But unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect"), ISA. 65:9 ("And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains; and mine elect shall inherit it...."), and PSALM 138:6 ("Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off"). Clearly, the biblical God plays favorites. (2) 2 PETER 3:10-11 ("...the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved....") versus ECCLE. 1:4 ("One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth for ever"), PSALM 104:5 ("Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever"), and DEUT. 4:40 ("...that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, for ever"). (3) 1 PETER 3:18 ("For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that it might bring us to God....") versus DEUT. 24:16 ("The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin"). If God decreed that every man should be put to death for his own sins, then why would he accept the sacrifice of Jesus for the acts of others? (4) ACTS 1:24 ("And they [which includes Peter--Ed.] prayed, and said, 'Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen....'") versus DEUT. 8:2 ("And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments or no"), DEUT. 13:3 ("Thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul"), GEN. 18:21 ("I [God--Ed.] will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know") and GEN. 22:12. Although Peter claims God knows the hearts of all, some OT verses show he does not. (5) In ACTS 3:21 Peter said, "...which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began"; yet, prophets did not exist when the world began, even in the Book of Genesis. (6) JER. 51:26 ("...thou [Babylon--Ed.] shalt be a desolate for ever, saith the Lord"), JER. 51:62 ("...that none shall remain in it [Babylon--Ed.], neither man nor beast, but that it shall be desolate for ever"), JER. 51:29 ("...for every purpose of the Lord shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant"), JER. 51:64 ("...Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her...."), and JER. 51:37 versus 1 PETER 5:13 ("The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you...."). Jeremiah repeatedly said Babylon was to be destroyed forever and never reinhabited; yet, Peter said there was a church and people at Babylon. (7) 1 PETER 1:25 ("But the word of the Lord endureth for ever") versus JONAH 3:10 ("When God saw what they did, how they turned from their evil way, God repented of the evil which he had said he would do to them; and he did not do it") and NUM. 14:30-34. Peter claims God's word endures forever; yet, God did not treat some people as he said he would. (8) 1 PETER 2:22 ("Who [Jesus--Ed.] did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth....") versus numerous false, misleading, and erroneous statements by Jesus that were discussed in the commentaries of Issues #24, #25, #27 and #28. (9) ACTS 2:22 ("Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know....") versus EX. 7:11-12 ("Then Pharaoh called the wise men and the sorcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, they also did in like manner with their enchantments. For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents....") and EX. 8:7 ("And the magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt"). If the ability to do miracles proves one is approved of God as Peter alleged, then the Pharaoh's magicians must be approved of God also. (10) 2 PETER 2:4 ("For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment") versus JOB 1:6-7 ("Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan came also among them. And the Lord said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it"). Satan was one of the angels that sinned and was among those cast down into hell into the chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment; yet, Job states he presented himself before God after walking back and forth over the earth. If he was to be kept restrained in the chains of darkness until the judgment, how could he have been walking back and forth on earth? (11) In ACTS 3:22 Peter made the following statement: "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me...." Jesus was supposedly the prophet that was "like unto Moses." Yet, if Jesus was really like unto Moses, then he could not have been God incarnate, since Moses was not God incarnate nor did he ever claim to be such. Moreover, Jesus could not have been a prophet since he failed to meet the requirements outlined in DEUT. 18:22 ("When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously...."). One is not a prophet if what he predicts fails to materialize and since much of what Jesus prophesied failed to come to pass (e.g., See Issue #28), he could not have been a true prophet. (12) 2 PETER 3:9 ("The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance") versus PROV. 16:4 NASB ("The Lord has made everything for its own purpose. Even the wicked for the day of evil"). Peter says the Lord wants all to come to repentance. Yet, he intentionally created wicked people. Why create something that is wicked if you want everything to come to repentance in order to be saved? Why create a problem you seek to abolish? (13) And 2 PETER 2:15 ("...and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor....") versus NUM. 22:5 ("He sent messengers therefore unto Balaam the son of Beor to Pethor...."). Unless the "son of Bosor" and the "son of Beor" are identical, a contradiction exists.

PRO-INTELLECTUALISM--Although the Bible is essentially anti-intellectual as was shown by many verses cited in last month's issue, oddly enough, a lesser but distinct element of pro-intellectualism is evident in a few biblical comments. The Bible occasionally reverses itself by urging believers to engage in dialogue and debate with the opposition. I've found these verses to be useful when biblicists have refused to engage in a biblical exchange because of the anti-intellectual philosophy propounded by "God's Word." Because of those verses cited in last month's ANTI-INTELLECTUAL commentary, some believers avoid all contact or ideological interaction with freethought advocates. That's unfortunate because closed and indoctrinated minds are among those most difficult to penetrate. You can't influence someone who flatly rejects openness to any antibiblical ideas and mistakenly assumes everything in your inventory is erroneous. People such as these are as hard to persuade as those who have fallen into a purely metaphysical ideology entirely divorced from reason, logic, and proof. The former believe the Bible in spite of reason and proof, not because of them. They are all but impossible to reach and are often found in the back rooms of psychiatric hospitals. As the famous psychiatrist Carl Jung once said, "I have treated many hundreds of patients. Among those over 35, there has not been one whose problem in the last resort was not that of finding a religious outlook on life." Or, as Sigmund Freud said, "Religion is comparable to a childhood neurosis." The Bible supports Ingersoll's comments that, "When religion becomes scientific, it ceases to be religion and becomes science. Religion is not intellectual--it is emotional. It does not appeal to the reason. The founder of a religion has always said, 'Let him that hath ears to hear, hear!' No founder has said: 'Let him that hath brains to think, think!' (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 8. p. 606) and "In the OT no one is told to reason with a heretic, and not one word is said about relying upon argument, upon education, or upon intellectual development--nothing except simple brute force" ("Some Mistakes of Moses," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 260). On pages 131-132 of Vol. 9 in The Life and Works of Thomas Paine Paine said, "As you can make no appeal to reason in support of an unreasonable religion, you then...bring yourselves off by telling people they must not believe in reason but in revelation." Voltaire said, "The truths of religion are never so well understood as by those who have lost the power of reason" and Havelock Ellis was probably as blunt as anyone when he said, "The whole religious complexion of the modern world is due to the absence from Jerusalem of a lunatic asylum."

The opposite of reason is faith, a concept biblicists readily admit lies at the core of Christianity and about which many notable individuals have made some poignant comments. H. L. Mencken said it's "an illogical belief in the occurrence of the improbable." On page 244 in Science and Christian Tradition Thomas Huxley said, "...the profound psychological truth, that men constantly feel certain about things for which they strongly hope, but have no evidence, in the legal or logical sense of the word; he calls this feeling 'faith.'" Ben Franklin said that "the way to see by Faith is to shut the Eye to Reason" and one writer defined faith as "belief without evidence in what is told by a preacher without knowledge." Ambrose Bierce probably encapsulated the concept as well as anyone when he defined faith as "belief without evidence in what is told by one who speaks without knowledge, of things without parallel."

Be that as it may, there are some biblical verses which all freethought advocates should have at their disposal for those occasions when biblicists in general and Christians in particular refuse to discuss the Bible's dilemmas. Prime examples are ISAIAH 1:18 ("Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord"), 2 COR. 10:5 ("We destroy arguments and every proud obstacle to the knowledge of God..."), 2 TIM. 4:2 ("...preach the word, be urgent in season and out of season, convince, rebuke, and exhort, be unfailing in patience and teaching"), JAMES 3:17 ("But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, open to reason..."), ACTS 17:17 ("Therefore disputed Paul in the synagogue with the Jews and with the devout persons and in the market daily with them that met with him"), ACTS 19:9 ("...Paul departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school..."), and 2 TIM. 2:24-25 RSV ("And the Lord's servant must not be quarrelsome but...correcting his opponents with gentleness"). In fact, I would even recommend memorizing JUDE 3 ("...ye should earnestly contend for the faith"), 1 PETER 3:15 ("Always be prepared to make a defense to any one who calls you to account for the hope that is in you..."), and 1 THESS. 5:21 ("Prove all things; hold fast that which is good") for those instances in which biblicists, especially those of a more fundamentalist variety, seek to flee to more comfortable terrain.

Other relevant verses which also tend to foster dialogue and debate are ACTS 18:4 ("And Paul reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks"), ACTS 18:19 ("And Paul...entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews"), ACTS 17:2 ("And Paul, as was his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days, reasoned with them out of the scriptures..."), 1 TIM. 6:12 ("Fight the good fight of faith..."), TITUS 1:9 ("...a bishop must hold firm to the sure word as taught, so that he may be able to give instruction in sound doctrine and also to confute those who contradict it"), TITUS 1:13 ("...Therefore rebuke them sharply that they may be sound in the faith..."), 2 TIM. 1:7 ("...for God did not give us a spirit of timidity but a spirit of power and love and self-control"), ECCLE. 7:25 RSV, ACTS 15:39, 1 COR. 4:13 RSV, COL. 4:6, 2 TIM. 4:5, TITUS 2:15 RSV, and ACTS 24:25.

And don't forget to quote PROV. 15:10 NIV ("...he who hates correction will die"), PROV. 12:1 ("Whoever loves discipline loves knowledge, But he who hates correction is stupid"), and PROV. 14:15 ("The simple believeth every word: but the prudent man looketh well to his going") to those who don't like being told they have been victimized.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #322 from PD of Mesick, Michigan

A biblicist I know is using as proof for the Resurrection the claim that the writers of the Gospels suffered terrible deaths for not renouncing their message. If their story was a jointly concocted lie, surely one of them, at least, would have renounced it to save his life. Since they were separated by great distances from each other, the other disciples would never have known about any member's defection from the cause. Sounds persuasive, but I suspect a shell game!

What historical evidence do you know of that tells about the tortuous deaths of Jesus' disciples? For that matter, what reliable information is there about any part of the life of any disciple?

Editor's Response to Letter #322

Dear PD. Biblicists constantly allege that the willingness of the apostles and other prominent adherents of Jesus to die for the cause substantiates Christianity because who would die for something they knew was a lie. Two major flaws are immediately obvious in this attitude. First, where is the evidence that the apostles and other prominent disciples of Jesus died for the cause. A lot is said about the martyred deaths of Paul and Peter, for example, but no proof is provided. Certainly the Bible is silent in this regard. In fact, the only NT believers that could even be considered martyrs for the cause are Stephen and John the Baptist. The Bible says nothing about the deaths of Peter, Paul, Mark, John, Matthew, James, etc. From whence Christians derive this mythology one can only speculate. Secondly, millions of people have perished for what they erroneously believed was a just cause. Hitler's troops died believing God was on their side. The fact that people are willing to die for a cause has nothing to do with its validity. True, most people would probably not die for what they knew was a lie, but many would be willing to die for what they erroneously thought was true.

Several years ago while participating in a seminar sponsored by the Seventh-Day Adventist Church, I challenged a group of members on this very point. They repeatedly referred to the martyrdom of Peter and Paul as if it was biblically-based. When pressed for chapter and verse, a silence, liberally sprinkled with consternation and disbelief, permeated the room. They couldn't imagine anyone challenging a belief so long accepted by them without question. Despite a period of argumentation, they were unable to provide textual support for their position.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #323 from Paul Keller of Grand Forks, North Dakota

Dear Dennis....I spoke to another "Bible as Literature" class on May 25. One of the questions asked (and there were many thanks to your leaflets) in a sarcastic manner was, "What do atheists have to look forward to? My reply was, "What do Christians have to look forward to?" Either they will be burnt alive forever or they will spend an eternity in the company of an infinite torturer who could turn on them at any time." No humane person would want either alternative, even if they were themselves never tortured. They would rather be dead. The fact that this is the only life there is makes it more precious, not less. All the more important is to be in control of your own life, rather than living imprisoned in a maze of illusion and misdirection called religion.....

Letter #324 from GN of Phoenix, Arizona

Gentlemen: A friend of mine sent me "Jesus Christ is the Answer? and "The Bible Is God's Word?" I found both pamphlets extremely interesting. I, too, have found many mistakes and immoral passages in the Bible. Do you have a complete work of more inconsistencies?....

The following are a few things that I discovered when doing Bible research. (1) Abraham was asked by God to murder his innocent son, Isaac. Those hearing such a "voice" today would not consider the "voice" to be coming from God but from the Devil and persons such as Abraham would be put in the mental ward, not held up as examples of religious piety.... (2) 1 Thess. 4:15 says "WE who are ALIVE, and remain until the coming of the Lord, shall not precede those who have fallen asleep." "We" meaning Paul and his listeners, who were to remain ALIVE until the coming of Jesus. Paul is gone, his listeners are gone, and Jesus didn't arrive. (3) Christians say that God does not change. How can it be that Yahweh of the OT commanded "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," and yet Jesus negated this simple law of retribution with "but I say to you, turn the other cheek." How could Jesus contradict an earlier commandment of God?.... (4) Was it just for God to harden the heart of Pharaoh so that he could punish the entire community of Egypt even down to the lowest slave girl? What ego-maniac god has to "prove his power" by the suffering of the innocent? (5) Where did Pharaoh get the horses to pursue Israel when all the "livestock" was destroyed in one of the plagues?....

Letter #325 from DT of Queensland, Australia

Dear Dennis. Many thanks for sending me your June issue of Biblical Errancy. Sometime in the past I noticed advertisements for your periodical, but for one reason or another have never got around to writing to you. Firstly, I would like to congratulate you on your publication. As it is the only one of this kind in the States, I would be very interested to know how much involvement you have been able to attract from Bible believers and also from non-believers...

I was born into a very religious family who belonged to the Exclusive Brethren sect. You may be familiar with this sect; it is basically Christian, fundamentalist, Protestant, and very fanatical. In my late teens I separated from the sect and was ostracized by my family. After a year or two of flirting with Presbyterianism, I became an atheist--almost overnight. However, I have always retained an interest in the Bible and Bible criticism and have written a short book called "The Bible Examined and Found Wanting." I have also compiled a list of 1,000 contradictions in the Bible. If you are interested, I will send you a copy of it.... I am sending you a copy of my book "The Bible Examined and Found Wanting" with another article or two which you should find interesting.....Keep up the good work and please let me know if there is anything I can do to help you. I hope to hear from you again before too long.

Editor's Response to Letter #325

Dear DT. We appreciate your compliments. As far as our readership is concerned we, too, would like to know how many proponents and opponents of the Bible are subscribers to BE. But there is really no effective way to tell since our readers are on a wide spectrum encompassing everyone from avid defenders to bitter critics.

Although your booklet, "The Bible Examined and Found Wanting" had a few miscitations and some inadequacies, I found it to be better than most writings of that nature. Although BE focuses on more than just biblical contradictions, I'd be interested in having a copy of the 1,000 contradictions you mentioned. Keep up the good work.

Letter #326 from DW of RoSharon, Texas

Dear Dennis. I must apologize for the delay in writing to thank you for the "Sample Copy" of BE that deals with the alleged Flood. I shared it with some of the Christians I know and they could not come up with answers to the simple questions you asked....

Letter #327 from HM of Lubbock, Texas

Dear Dennis.... Your work and your level of scholarship are absolutely invaluable.... P.S. I know the nature of your work requires a pretty serious image, but I really hope you are able to occasionally sit back, blow the foam off a cold one, and really make fun of them! They make it so eeeeesay! It's so therapeutic!

Editor's Response to Letter #327

Dear HM. You are probably right. I probably should belt out some belly-shakers now and then with intermittent satire, but that's never been my style as you've probably noticed. Our subject is as serious as a heart attack for millions and I've never felt people will think I'm taking it seriously if I try to influence and persuade with humor.

Another problem with humor is that it's usually based on a clash of opposites which, technically speaking, are often exaggerated or inaccurate. Humor usually sacrifices precision for effect. I guess I'm saying I've always chosen to be right rather than popular and that's probably why I'm neither rich nor famous. Everything that's prospering appears to be pandering to the LCD (the Lowest Common Denominator). Is it any wonder television and radio can rightfully be described as a vast desert with an occasional oasis!!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Because of some wonderful assistance by several friends of BE, I spoke on a San Antonio radio station on July 11, 1989. I only mention this appearance because it was a particularly flagrant example of the kind of reception I sometimes receive on-the-air. First, besides the obvious time limitations on my presentation imposed by multiple advertisements, the host was particularly one-sided and obnoxious. He began with a question about our March issue in an obvious attempt to put me on the defensive and sought to dwell on the point until I said "uncle." I shouldn't have to remind the host of any call-in program that BE is not on trial; the Bible is. The Bible is being scrutinized, not BE. The Bible is claiming infallibility, not BE. The Bible is alleging divine inspiration; not BE. Secondly, the host seemed determined that I was not going to present my case with any degree of depth or breadth. In fact, I was rarely able to present more than a fact or two before he would either ask a question to throw me off, switch to another subject, engage a caller, or cut to a commercial. Thirdly, after I left the show I don't doubt that the remainder of the program, if it was open forum, was primarily devoted to a litany of callers teaming with the host to denounce me and everything I said, while fully cognizant of my inability to respond.

The main question in issues of this nature is whether radio talk show hosts want to know what is wrong with the Bible or merely engage a controversial speaker to hype their ratings on what would probably otherwise be a dull afternoon.

What should be done on a program of this kind is similar to that which occurs in a courtroom. Since the Bible is on trial, the prosecutor should be able to present his case without interruption for at least five to ten minutes. Then the defense attorneys can leap on anything said with fangs glaring. Unfortunately, as things now stand, many people are so incapable of hearing anything critical about the Bible that disorder often breaks out after a couple of initial comments and the program deteriorates from there.

COMMENTARY

PETER VERSUS THE OT (Part Two of a Two-Part Series)--Last month's commentary focused on the contradictions between the sayings of Peter and OT verses. This month's analysis will conclude that enumeration by listing instances in which Peter either misquoted or misinterpreted the OT. We'll begin with misquotations. (14) 1 PETER 2:6 ("Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: And he that believeth on him shall not be confounded") versus ISAIAH 28:16 ("...therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste"). Peter twisted Isaiah 28:16 in several respects: (a) Isaiah says, "he that believeth shall not make haste." It never uses the phrase "on him." (b) Isaiah says "make haste" not "be confounded." (c) Isaiah never implies the stone [which Christians think is Jesus] is "elect" or "precious." (d) And Isaiah never implies the stone is "chief" among many. (15) ACTS 1:20 ("For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein....") versus PSALM 69:25 ("Let their habitation be desolate; and let none dwell in their tents"). Psalm 69:25 says "their" habitation and "their" tents. At no time does it refer to one person or "his." The Psalm is actually an appeal by David to God for aid in David's struggle with his enemies. (16) ACTS 2:16-17 ("But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God....") versus JOEL 2:28 ("And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour...."). Joel says nothing about "the last days." (17) ACTS 1:20 ("For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his {Judas--Ed.} habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishopric let another take") versus PSALM 109:8 ("Let his days be few; and let another take his office"). (a) Peter is quoting Psalm 109:8 which says nothing about a bishopric. Office and bishopric are not necessarily the same. (b) While Peter is referring to his habitation being desolate, the Psalmist is referring to his days being few. They are not identical since one could have many days and still conclude with a desolate habitation. (c) The Psalmist, David, is referring to his enemies, not Judas. David is saying he hopes his enemies are punished. The context of Psalm 109:8 shows it is not a Davidic prophecy about Judas. (18) ACTS 2:18-20 ("And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy: And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke: The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come") versus JOEL 2:29-31 ("And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my spirit. And I will shew wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come"). Peter misquoted Joel in several respects. (a) Joel says "the" servants and "the" handmaids rather than "my" servants and "my" handmaids and says nothing about them prophesying. (b) Joel says "the heavens," which is plural, rather than "heaven above." (c) Joel does not have "beneath" or "signs," and he has "pillars" instead of "vapour." (d) And Joel has "terrible day" rather than "notable day" which could hardly be a reference to the wonderful arrival of Jesus. (19) 1 PETER 2:22 ("Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth") versus ISAIAH 53:9 ("...because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth"). Peter misquoted Isaiah 53:9 which says "no violence," instead of "no sin." Sin and violence are not the same. Apparently Peter realized "he hath done no violence" could not be applied to Jesus because of the latter's treatment of the moneychangers at the temple.

And finally, we have instances in which Peter misinterpreted, either intentionally or otherwise, some OT verses. (20) ACTS 1:16 ("Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus"). David never said anything about Judas. Psalm 41:9 ("Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I (Jesus--Ed.) trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me"), which was discussed earlier, does not apply because the speaker in Psalm 41:9 said in Psalm 41:4, "I said, Lord, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee." If Jesus is the speaker in Psalm 41:9 then he is also the sinner in Psalm 41:4. Yet, the Bible states in 1 John 3:5 ("...and in him is no sin...") and 1 Peter 2:22 ("Who did no sin...") that Jesus was sinless. (21) 1 PETER 2:8 ("And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient...") versus ISAIAH 8:14 ("And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence to both houses of Israel..."). (a) Isaiah 8:13 ("Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread"), which precedes Isaiah 8:14, shows that the "he" in Isaiah 8:14 is referring to God not Jesus. (b) Moreover, Isaiah 8:14 says he is a rock of offence to both houses of Israel only, not to all those who are disobedient. (22) ACTS 2:27 ("Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption") versus PSALM 16:10 ("For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption"). Peter correctly quoted Psalm 16:10 but misapplied the statement. His interpretation of the Psalmist is incorrect for several reasons. (a) Holy One was translated from a Hebrew word meaning holy one or saints (plural), not Holy One (singular). The plural shows it refers to the pious generally. (b) "Corruption" comes from a Hebrew word meaning "grave" not corruption. Correctly translated it should have been "wilt not suffer thy saints to see destruction." (23) ACTS 2:30 ("...God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne") versus PSALM 132:11-12 ("The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne. If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore"). (a) The psalmist clearly shows that not one man only but any of David's descendants who keep God's covenant will sit upon David's throne. There is no hint whatsoever that only one man received the promise. (b) The psalmist does not mention Christ or Jesus. (24) Lastly, we have Peter's comments concerning the Suffering Jesus in 1 PETER 1:11 ("...the Spirit of Christ which was in them [the prophets--Ed.] did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow"), 1 PETER 2:21-24 ("...because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps: Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: Who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously: Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed"), and ACTS 3:18 ("But those things, which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he [Jesus--Ed.] hath so fulfilled"). The OT speaks of a suffering servant which Peter interprets as a suffering messiah, i.e. Jesus, but for reasons mentioned in the 30th Issue, the suffering servant mentioned in the 53rd chapter of Isaiah has nothing to do with Jesus.

That completes our two-month exposure of instances in which Peter not only misquoted but misinterpreted the OT. When these infractions are viewed in conjunction with the exposure of Peter's character in Issue #5 and his conflicts with Jesus, Paul and himself found in Issue #44, the credibility of this major NT figure is irreparably damaged. As we discovered earlier with Paul, one can't trust someone who is so loose with the facts and cavalier with the truth.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #328 from Edward McCartney, P.O. Box 770024, Lakewood, Ohio 44107-0011

Dear Dennis Concerning Issue #79, page 1, point 65a, you said, "Jesus could not be that Branch because he was not a physical descendant of David. Joseph was not his physical father..."

You are correct in saying that Joseph was not his physical father. However, concerning Jesus about whom you said that he was not a physical descendant of David, need I remind you of my 9 page letter to you dated Nov. 28, 1988? Did you forget Romans 1:3 which says, "Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh."

Editor's Response to Letter #328

Dear Ed. Could you provide textual support to corroborate Rom. 1:3? I know of nothing in the Bible showing Jesus was the son of David according to the flesh. The genealogies in Matthew and Luke trace the ancestry of Jesus back to David through Joseph, but Joseph was not the physical father of Jesus. Therefore there can be no physical connection between Jesus and David. The chain was broken at Joseph because of the Virgin Birth.

Letter #329 from GN of Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Dennis. Enclosed is my check for a subscription to your newsletter Biblical Errancy. I, too, am interested in exposing the errors and immorality of the Bible. I have obtained a vast amount of biblical knowledge but I lack the courage to debate the fundamentalist fanatics. I would like to help support your work and to contribute some of the things that I have learned over the years.

Your sample issue of Biblical Errancy had a commentary on the Flood. You mentioned the animal sacrifice at the end of the year. Biblical apologists will point to the fact that the clean animals were taken in by SEVENS. Whether that means seven animals or seven pairs I'm not sure. At any rate one of the clean animals would have been sacrificed. Surviving through the flood didn't do them a whole lot of good.

Another point, however, would have been that in our day and age many species are in danger of extinction.... There are many many more of these animals in existence than just one pair or seven pairs and yet they are in danger of being totally wiped off the face of the earth. Yet, we are to believe that all these animals on the ark provided all the animals that are on the earth today even though they were not in a protected environment. I doubt that seven cows and seven sheep would have lasted long around the wolves, lions, tigers, etc. They would have been eaten up far sooner than they could have multiplied.

I certainly enjoyed the point about what the animals would have eaten since the earth was nothing but a muddy mess. How many seeds would have survived under water for a year? Would they have rotted? How did the dove get an olive leaf? Would not the olive leaf have rotted? What land vegetation could have survived a year of water?

....If I understand the Bible correctly, the window was not opened for 40 days. Whew, talk about oxygen!....What did they do with the...excrement for 40 days? What kind of disease would have manifested itself?....What about noise pollution? How would Noah and his family have slept with all those animals mooing, screaming, screeching, quacking, etc.? Where did the thousands of gallons of fresh water come from during those 40 days?....I also agree with your point about only 8 people taking care of all the animals on the ark. There isn't a zoo on earth with all the animals in it, let alone one being manned with only 8 people.....

Editor's Response to Letter #329

Dear GN. I'm sorry to hear you are afraid to debate fundamentalists. We need people who are willing to step into the fray. After all, how else are biblicists going to see the error of their ways. Certainly their clergymen aren't going to expose, much less dwell on, the Bible's inadequacies. If people such as ourselves don't provide the other side, who will? How are millions going to jettison a medieval mentality if we don't provide the other side? How will they advance? And if they don't, we are going to be fighting the church/state issues forever. Their positions on political and social issues are the obvious outcomes of a biblically-based philosophy. Unless you restructure the foundation, the superstructure will never change. Don't be afraid to engage in verbal combat. Sure, you'll lose some battles. I have. But do your research and learn from your mistakes. That's the key. You have to do your homework and you have to engage the other side.

I have had numerous contacts with a wide variety of freethinkers who employ, unfortunately, topics that interest them but are of little use in altering the minds of biblicists. Rather than using field-tested arguments, they resort to those that have been grown in greenhouses isolated and protected from the world of real combat. You have to expose your ideas to the opposition to perfect their effect, an activity shunned by many freethinkers. Not willing to take risks, they often float on ideas that need to be discarded or refined. Many of their concerns have no real value because they are of little or no interest to the other side. Stated bluntly, they don't turn biblicists on. So, even though their contentions may be factual, they aren't useful. Years ago, I learned that just because a point may be of concern to me doesn't mean it's going to be of interest to others. You can only discover where they are and what's effective by direct contact.

Secondly, you said clean beasts went into the ark by sevens and that would have made some available for sacrifice after they left the ark. Apparently you are referring to Gen. 7:2 which says, "Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, the male and his female: and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female." True, apologists use this verse as an escape mechanism. However, biblicists conveniently ignore the fact that this verse flatly contradicts Gen. 7:8-9 which says, "Of clean beasts and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth, There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah." This is a classic example of apologists using a verse that proves their point while ignoring one that doesn't.

Thirdly, you might note that Noah and his relatives were on the ark for more than 40 days.

Letter #330 from KB of Los Angeles, California

Dear Dennis....The only proper response to TF's "challenge" to "Prove that the Bible contains hundreds of problems and contradictions that can't be solved" is a stack of BE's and freethought publications, including Paine's The Age of Reason, and tell him not to bother you until he has shown conclusively that ALL of those problems and contradictions do not exist!

Letter #331 from REA of Norfolk, Virginia

Dear Mr. McKinsey: Don't you think it would be more appropriate for your publication to use the humanist terms BCE and ACE (or CE) instead of BC and AD.

Editor's Response to Letter #331

Dear REA. Not really. I capitalize words such as "God," "Devil," "Heaven," and "Hell," for example, because they are proper nouns, not out of any intended respect. Unlike some freethought advocates, I don't think that failure to capitalize is a sufficiently mature or effective manner in which to combat Christianity in general and the Bible in particular. It not only has little effect on the minds of readers but can be a positive hindrance to correct reading. "God" with a small "g" could lead one to believe that Christians believe in more than one God, a concept which could either include or exclude a supreme God.

A similar problem exists with respect to BCE (Before the Common Era) and ACE (After the Common Era). Most of the world uses the birth of the alleged Christian messiah as the point from which to date everything. That's an unfortunate fact of history based on aggression, suppression, proselytization, and co-optation by Christians. For the present and until the influence of religion diminishes considerably, we are stuck with a religious base from which to operate. At some time in the future a more rational standard will probably be chosen. Until then, more pressing problems are at hand.

If we are going to place struggles of this nature at the top of the agenda, then we will have to expunge a lot of religious influence in dating. Why restrict the conflict to Christianity? Tuesday is named after Tiu, a German god of war and the sky; Wednesday is named after Woden, a Teutonic god of art, culture, war and the dead; Thursday is named after Thor, a Norse god of thunder, war, and strength, and Friday is named after the goddess, Frig. Months fare no better. January is named after Janus, a Roman god; March is named after Mars, the Roman god of war; May is named after the goddess of increase, etc. There is no need to belabor the point; I think you get the idea. The question is how much importance are we going to attach to this and how much time are we going to spend to correct the situation. Is it worth the effort at this stage of the game. I think not. There are much more pressing and winnable battles that can be fought.

Moreover, the humanist switch to "Before the Common Era" and "After the Common Era" is of little value because one need consult any reputable dictionary, such as Webster's Collegiate, to see that the Common Era is the Christian Era. The definition of "Common Era" in my edition is: "Common Era same as Christian Era." And since the Christian Era begins with the birth of Christ, so does the Common Era. Humanists are dating everything from the same point as Christians but only applying another name. If they really expect to abolish the Christian domination of dating, then they must start with another event, not rename the same event. Jews, for instance, start dating events from their date of creation, which is 3761 BC according to Christian dating. So, from the Jewish perspective we are in the year 5750. But how many Jews actually use that date on an everyday basis?

Letter #332 from Dan Barker of the Freedom From Religion Foundation, P.O. Box 750, Madison, Wisconsin 53701

(Dan is probably the most effective anti-religious spokesman on the national scene today. He has appeared on the Donahue, Jessy Raphael, and Morton Downey shows among others--Ed.).

Dear Dennis. I enjoyed your recent B.E. When I get some time I will write to you about my radio dialogue with Jim Buick, CEO of Zondervan, publishers of the New International Version (NIV) of the Bible. Zondervan's press office sent out press releases to hundreds of radio stations regarding our bible complaint (about having Bibles in the rooms of hotels and motels, I think--Ed.). I have done tons of phone hook-up radio shows opposite this guy Buick, who knows very little about the bible. Studying their NIV translation I conclude that it is quite dishonest. Buick didn't like me saying such things on the air, but I was able to support my criticisms. I pointed out that in the preface of the NIV, they admit that the translators are evangelicals -- "the translators were united in their commitment to the authority and infallibility of the Bible as God's Word in written form." This is hardly an objective criteria!

I asked Jim, suppose a group of 100 atheists were to produce a translation of the bible, claiming to be "committed to the unreliability and fallibility of the bible." Wouldn't he take our work with a grain of salt?

Anyway, when I have more time you will enjoy hearing some of our discussions. I think Zondervan's ploy backfired. They were hoping to use the gimmick to sell bibles -- instead, they gave the public an opportunity to hear bible criticism, perhaps for the first time. We have picked up some supporters from those shows....

Editor's Response to Letter #332

Dear Dan. It's always a pleasure to hear from you, especially because you are on the cutting edge. I'd certainly like to hear some of your discussions with Buick. Keep up the good work and let us know about the latest happenings in your area of concern.

Letter #333 from CB of Prescott, Arizona

Dear Dennis. I enjoy your newsletters very much as they are a source of education to me. I am not a student of "the" bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #333

Dear CB. The true rewards involved in writing this newsletter are the compliments we receive and the assistance we provide others. Without both, I'd probably reassess the entire endeavor. Rest assured, financial gain certainly isn't a factor.

Letter #334 from MS of Ames, Iowa

Dear Mr. McKinsey. People have always told me that there are contradictions in the Bible, but no one has been able to provide me with examples until now. I am told that you have all of the errors and contradictions in the Bible documented. I am very interested in getting hold of this information. I feel that all information, good or bad, pertaining to religion should be investigated if I am to decide whether religion is true or false. You offer a very important part to this puzzle. Thank you for your time and I eagerly await your reply.

Editor's Response to Letter #334

Dear MS. We don't have all the contradictions and errors in the Bible, but I think we have all but cornered the market. Your willingness to give the other side a hearing is to be complimented. If only more biblicists were as openminded!

Letter #335 from RAM of Annapolis, Maryland

Dennis. On page 4, line 9 of Issue #79 you said, "You are engaging more in eisogesis than exegesis." Webster's Unabridged does not have "eisogesis"!....

Editor's Response to Letter #335

Dear RAM. You are correct. We have occasionally used the subjective word "eisogesis" (Reading into the text something that isn't there) instead of the objective word "exegesis" (Getting out of the text the meaning that is there). Being unable to find the word "eisogesis" in the dictionary, a couple of readers, including yourself, have questioned it's existence. Don't worry; the word was not my invention and is sometimes used in Christian circles. In order to find it in a dictionary, however, you must consult one of those big, thick tomes such as Webster's 3rd New International Dictionary, Unabridged, Copyright 1976 or the Random House Dictionary of the English Language, 2nd Edition, Unabridged, Copyright 1987.

Letter #336 from EST of Sanford, Maine

Dennis. I enjoy BE as always and am passing on to others what I learn from BE. I'm no debater; I just point out by chapter and verse the contradictions in the Bible and listen to the answers. Sometimes people convince themselves that they (and the Bible) are wrong while trying to defend it....Keep up the good work!

Letter #337 from RH of New York, New York

Hello Dennis....I look forward to BE every month. What a superb job you are doing! You are filling an important need. Best Wishes.

EDITOR'S NOTE: For some reason quite a few subscribers did not receive their July issue of BE. We've experienced this kind of problem before but not to such a degree. Hopefully it was accidental rather than intentional. We only mention the problem because other freethought publications have had similar difficulties. Unfortunately, biblicists not only read BE but deliver it as well, and one can't help but suspect foul play. Then, again, maybe it's only our imagination and the summer vacation postal replacements weren't up to snuff. Let's hope so.

COMMENTARY

JESUS, THE IMPERFECT BEACON (Part 5 of an Eight-Part Series)--In Issues 2, 3, and 9 BE opened with some major failings of Jesus that brought his role as mankind's beacon into serious doubt. That was later followed in Issues 24, 25, 27, and 28 by a much more extensive list that obviated any possibility of his claim to perfection and the messiahship. Despite the fact that the latter issues, alone, contained 96 of his shortcomings, the number of biblical deficiencies that are available was by no means exhausted. This issue, and those to follow, were written to rectify that shortfall by listing all of the remaining examples that are in BE's notebooks. Issue 28 concluded with the 96th example and we will proceed from there. (97) MARK 2:25-26 ("And Jesus said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungered, he, and they that were with him? How he went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the shewbread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?") versus 1 SAM. 21:1, 6, 22:20 ("Then came David to Nob to Ahimelech the priest: and Ahimelech was afraid at the meeting of David, and said unto him, why art thou alone, and no man with thee?... So the priest gave him hallowed bread; for there was no bread there but the shewbread.... And one of the sons of Ahimelech the son of Ahitub, named Abiathar, escaped, and fled after David"). The OT shows that Abithar did not give David the shewbread but was the son of the priest, Ahimelech, who did, and David came alone, not with others. (98) JOHN 5:28-29 ("...for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation"), Matt. 25:46 ("And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal"), Luke 20:37 ("Now that the dead are raised...."), and Dan. 12:2 ("And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting contempt") versus JOB 7:9 ("As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more") and Eccle. 3:19-21 NIV ("Man's fate is like that of the animals; the same fate awaits them both: As one dies, so dies the other. All have the same breath; man has no advantage over the animal....all come from dust, and to dust all return. Who knows if the spirit of man rises upward and if the spirit of the animal goes down into the earth?"). Jesus' assertion that people will be resurrected is denied by the OT. (99) JOHN 7:38 ("He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, 'out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water'"). Contrary to Jesus' assertion, there is no such statement in the OT. Isa. 44:3 ("For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring...."), Isa. 55:1 ("Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters...."), Ezek. 47:1, Isa. 58:11, Zech. 13:1, Zech. 14:8, Prov. 18:4, and Isa. 12:3 just don't apply. (100) MARK 7:27 ("Jesus told her, First I should help my own family--the Jews. It isn't right to take the childrens food and throw it to the dogs"). Imagine! Jesus equated non-Jews with dogs. (101) MATT. 15:28 ("Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour"). Jesus cured the woman's daughter, not out of humaneness towards the child, but as a reward for the mother's faith. The 23rd verse ("But he answered her not a word") and the 25th verse ("Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me") show he didn't even answer her until she begged. (102) MARK 9:23 ("Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe all things are possible to him that believeth"), John 14:12-14 ("He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do.... If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it") and Luke 17:6 ("And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you") versus MARK 9:29 ("And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting"). First we are told only belief is needed to do anything; now it requires prayer and fasting. (103) MATT. 19:26 ("But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible: but with God all things are possible") and Mark 10:27 ("...for with God all things are possible") versus JUDGES 1:19 ("And the Lord was with Judah; and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron"). If all things are possible with God and he was with Judah, then why couldn't Judah drive out the inhabitants of the valley? (104) MATT. 26:56 ("But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled"). No quotation from the OT is provided nor is the name of the biblical author given. (105) MARK 13:32 ("But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father") versus JOHN 10:30 ("I and my Father are one"). If Jesus is one with God as he claims, then he is God's equal; yet, he doesn't know all as God does. (106) LUKE 24:17, 19 ("And Jesus said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one another.... And Jesus said unto them, What things?"). Jesus is deceiving his listeners. Since he knows all, there is no reason to ask questions. (107) LUKE 5:22 ("But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, he answering said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts?") and Matt. 9:4 ("And Jesus knowing their thoughts said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?"). Is Jesus' knowledge of science so poor as to believe people think in their hearts? Perhaps it's allegorical, but not necessarily. (108) LUKE 9:56 ("For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them") versus REV. 19:11-16 RSV ("Then I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse! He who sat upon it is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he judges and makes war.... He is clad in a robe dipped in blood, and the name by which he is called is The Word of God. And the armies of heaven, arrayed in fine linen, white and pure, followed him on white horses. From his mouth issues a sharp sword with which to smite the nations, and he will rule them with a rod of iron;.... On his robe and on his thigh he has a name inscribed, King of Kings and Lord of lords"). (109) MATT. 21:22 ("And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive") versus ISAIAH 1:15 ("And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yet, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear....") and Lam. 3:44 ("Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through"). (110) MARK 4:11-12 ("And Jesus said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God; but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them"). Jesus intentionally wants people to not understand, not convert, and not be forgiven?? (111) MARK 11:2, Luke 19:30 ("And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you: And as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him") versus MATT. 21:2 ("Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her; loose them, and bring them unto me"). Is it "loose him" or "loose them" and which is tied, a colt or an ass? (112) MATT. 9:18 ("While Jesus spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying, my daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live"). Later, in the 24th and 25th verses Jesus said, "Give place: for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn. But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose." If the ruler's daughter was dead, then, Jesus lied. If she was not dead, then he performed no miracle. (113) MATT. 12:40 ("...so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth"). Was Jesus actually put in the earth, especially the heart of the earth? (114) Lastly, we have LUKE 4:17-21 ("And there was delivered unto Jesus the book of the prophet Isaiah. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, 'The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, To preach the acceptable year of the Lord; And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down.... And Jesus began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears") versus ISAIAH 61:1-2 ("The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God to comfort all that mourn...."). Jesus' recitation of Isa. 61:1-2 is inaccurate. (a) Isaiah said nothing about healing the blind. (b) Isaiah says, "opening of the prison to them that bound," not "to set at liberty them that are bruised." (c) The statement in Isaiah was made by Isaiah concerning himself, long before Jesus was born, and can't be twisted into proving Jesus was anointed. (d) Actually what Jesus is quoting is a statement by Isaiah that he had been appointed by God to tell the exiled, broken, downtrodden, afflicted, captive Jews that the day is coming when they shall be saved, eat the riches of the Gentiles, and have eternal joy. (e) Jesus did not finish reading all of Isaiah's comments. If he had read down to Isa. 61:8, he would not have said, "This day is this scripture fulfilled."

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #338 from CF of New York, New York (Part a)

Dennis McKinsey. Re: Issue #80, Letter #317, Response C. What Jesus (allegedly) said was, "...take up his cross....," a concept that was probably a common thought and colloquial expression in the days of Roman crucifixions and was similar to "millstone around the neck," "monkey on the back," and "ball and chain" etc. It may have meant that whoever followed him was in for hardship and for threats of crucifixion by Jews or Romans. Neither Jesus nor the people he spoke to needed to know that he would be crucified and the cross would be the symbol of a religion when he said it.

Editor's Response to Letter #338 (Part a)

CF. First, how can you assert that Jesus "allegedly said take up his cross"? There is nothing "allegedly" about it. The text clearly says, and I'm quoting Mark 8:34 verbatim, "whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." Maybe, on the other hand, you mean to imply that "his cross" refers to the cross each person must bear rather than the Christian Cross in particular. If so, you are basing your argument on supposition and conjecture. Do you have any evidence that "taking up your cross" was a colloquial expression in Roman times? Your comment that "it may have meant" shows you are guessing. Second, would Jesus have urged people to take up any other cross than the very symbol of Christianity? In Matt. 10:38 ("And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me") and Luke 14:27 ("And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple") Jesus made strong statements to the effect that if you didn't take up the cross to which he referred, you didn't merit being saved by him. What cross can that be other than the cross of Christianity? Third, the verse immediately after Mark 8:34, which is Mark 8:35 ("For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it"), shows that the cross under discussion is a cross having to do with matters as serious as salvation and damnation. What cross can that be other than the Christian cross? Fourth, in Gal. 6:24 Paul said, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ...." For Paul there is only one cross, but your supposition implies there are others of comparable importance that should be taken up.

Letter #338 Concludes (Part b)

Since you never give-in or compromise or retract regarding your assertions, I've wondered if there is a conscious pragmatism at work to equal Biblicists/Apologetists' characteristic refusal to admit error and to avoid having rare errors on your part used against you in an attempt to discredit the preponderance of correct information you present. As long as there's no real proof that you were incorrect, it's probably better not to admit doubts and then to avoid the specific topic when possible. Right?

Editor's Response to Letter 338 (Part b)

No, wrong! Apparently you missed what I said in the Editor's Note on page 6 of Issue #79 so I'll repeat my earlier comment: "Perhaps I've erred: it's happened before. So I'll not pursue the issue." Those aren't the words of someone who never gives in or retracts statements. Secondly, could you provide instances in which I hid among statements for which "there's no real proof" that I'm incorrect or that I avoided topics because of my own doubts? You have impugned my integrity without providing a shred of evidence. Do you often indict people based on speculation and conjecture? A wise maxim to follow when dealing with topics of this nature is that "If you can't prove it, don't say it." To even imply without evidence that someone is less than forthright, as you did with your "I've wondered" comment, reflects adversely on your integrity. However, I would like to thank you for referring to "rare errors on my part."

Letter #339 from DT of Queensland, Australia (Part a)

(Several months ago DT sent us a copy of The Bible Examined and Found Wanting, a 41 page biblical critique of his own creation. After reading it I made the following comment on page 5 of Issue #81: "Although your booklet, 'The Bible Examined and Found Wanting' had a few miscitations and some inadequacies, I found it to be better than most writings of that nature. Although BE focuses on more than just biblical contradictions, I'd be interested in having a copy of the 1,000 contradictions you mentioned. Keep up the good work." DT quickly sent me a letter wanting to know where the problems were and left the impression he doubted their existence. I responded with a note attached to his copy of BE stating that there weren't very many and he need not be concerned. Most people are not going to be that critical. DT sent the following letter in reply.--ED.).

Dear Dennis. Many thanks for your note. In view of the fact that you are such a stickler for facts, as is evidenced even in the latest issue of Biblical Errancy, Issue No. 82, where you write "one can't trust someone who is so loose with the facts and cavalier with the truth," I am very surprised that after claiming that my book contained a number of miscitations, you now tell me they are not worth worrying about. I am not satisfied with this, however; and request that you either provide me with a list of the miscitations, or retract your previous assertion in the next issue of your magazine. Whether I send you my list of 1000 contradictions in the Bible depends on your response to my request.

Editor's Response to Letter #339 (Part a)

Dear DT. I thought I was quite complimentary toward your booklet. I clearly stated it was "better than most writings of that nature" and only had a "few miscitations and some inadequacies." I concluded my compliments by recommending that you "keep up the good work." The note which I sent you even suggested that you not worry about the mistakes contained therein since they weren't very numerous. And how am I rewarded? By receiving a challenging letter that is downright unpleasant. Your put-up or shut-up approach is certainly not conducive to cooperation between those exposing the Bible. I'm tempted to say, "Would you be willing to pay me $100 for every error I find therein," but, instead, I'll simply enumerate the mistakes I found after a rather cursory reading. If I had gotten out my magnifying glass I probably would have found more. (1) On page 13 you state, "Isaiah 37:8 tells us of a case where the sun is actually supposed to have gone backwards!" That verse says nothing about the sun doing anything. (2) On page 40 you state, Eph. 2:12 says that one is saved by grace through faith given by God." It says nothing of the sort. (3) On page 27 you state, "But 2 Chron. 36:6 says that Jehoiakim reigned 11 years in Jerusalem." The verse says nothing about him reigning 11 years anywhere. (4) On page 30 you state, "Hebrews 1:2 and 9:26 say that Jesus had come 'at the end of the ages' to put away sin." One need only read these two verses to see that Hebrews 1:2, unlike Hebrews 9:26, says nothing about Jesus putting away sin. (5) On page 21 you state, "John 19:25 says that Jesus spoke to his mother who was standing by the cross with Mary Magdalene." In truth, Jesus said nothing whatever in that verse. (6) And on page 16 you state, "Luke 1:26 says that the angel came to Mary" when a more accurate citation would have been verses 27 and 28. I also stated there were some inadequacies in your booklet. On page 32 you state, "Circumcision, which is an essential element of this covenant, with its neglect being punishable by death (Gen. 17:14)...." Your exegesis should exhibit greater precision because apologists criticize whenever possible and this instance will provide them a good opportunity. Gen. 17:14 RSV actually says, "Any uncircumcised male who is not circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin shall be cut off from his people; he has broken my covenant." Why do you assume "cut off" means killed, when apologists could easily claim it only means banishment or expulsion from the group? You read more into the verse than is warranted. The same kind of laxity is also evident on page 35. You say, "1 Sam. 18 says that king Saul had two daughters, Merab and Michal. Verse 19 says that Merab married Adriel the Meholathite, and 1 Sam. 25:44 says that Michal married Palt: the son of Laish. However, 2 Sam. 21:8 says that Michal married Adriel the Meholathite." True, 1 Sam. 18:19 says Merab married Adriel, but where does 1 Sam. 25:44 say that Michal married Palt and where does 2 Sam. 21:8 say that Michal married Adriel. First Sam. 25:44 ("Saul had given Michal his daughter, David's wife, to Phalti the son of Laish....") and 2 Sam. 21:8 ("...and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she brought up for Adriel....") say nothing about marriage. Remember, Lot gave his daughters away, too, and that had nothing to do with marriage. Why would Saul give his daughter, Michal, to Phalti for marriage when he knew she was already married to David? And although 2 Sam. 21:8 says Michal brought up her five sons for Adriel, it does not say they were married. Don't assume more than the verse warrants or insert unjustified interpretations. That's eisegesis, not exegesis.

(At the top of DT's letter was a big cross giving the letter a distinctively Christian aura. I not only asked DT why he would put a cross at the top of his letter if he was as opposed to the Bible as his writings implied, but also if he was merely a Christian opposing the Bible--ED.).

Regarding your query as to why I should have put a Cross at the top of my letter, and as to whether I am really just a Christian who is opposed to the Bible. I can see that you have a wonderful sense of humour. Seeing that you also have a Holy Bible at the head of your magazine, I was wondering the same about you. Actually, I am a pagan, and the Cross is the phallic symbol of my religion. Because I no longer regard the Bible as sacred, I am no more anti-Bible than I am anti-pornography. I actually enjoy studying the Bible now that it no longer has any power over me....Hoping to hear from you again soon.

Editor's Response to Letter #339 (Part b)

I was unaware that humor would emanate from my question, DT. You mean you see no difference between your heading with the Cross and mine with the Bible? Since my Bible is torn in half, one would hardly assume that it arose from one who holds the Book in awe. Moreover, the words "Biblical Errancy" are found inbetween and project precisely the opposite impression of that which the Book's proponents claim is contained therein. Your cross, on the other hand, is in the normal position, has a prominent place in your heading, is rather large, and is not upside down, tilted, broken, enflamed or otherwise demeaned. If that doesn't warrant the questions I posed, I don't know what does. You call yourself a "pagan," a term normally applied by Christians to their opponents. I would never call myself a "pagan," or its synonym "heathen," not only because Webster defines the latter as "unenlightened" or "uncivilized" but also because adoption of the opponent's terminology concedes half the struggle and is tactically unwise. When you say "my religion," I assume you are still religious or accept some kind of religion. That makes my original question with reference to your cross on the letterhead all the more relevant.

Letter #340 from BWF of Richmond, Indiana

Dear Dennis. Nice to get Issue #81 direct to my present address. Excellent as usual. Good to see your page 3 where you...show fundamentalist hardshells that their own scriptures urge them to argue and confute, not to pooh-pooh. I note the old bugaboo sp. Pharaoh creeping in again, Dennis, and some typos: p. 2--prophesied; p. 3--occurrence; p. 5--ostracized; and it may have been PD's fault, p. 4--Stephen, not Steven. Just nitpicking--needn't advert to this in your next BE, of course. Keller needed quote marks at the end of his quote on the top of page 5.

Editor's Response to Letter #340

Dear BWF. What can I say? I compared my spellings with Webster's and discovered you are correct on every point. I'm a stickler for accuracy and corrected my originals after hearing from you. Corrections of this nature keep me on my toes and aren't nitpicks. I could use a proof-reader with your talents. Come what may, I'm going to get "pharaoh" correct. It is a simple word to spell but I repeatedly type the "a" and "o" in reverse order.

Letter #341 from EB of Canton, Michigan

Dear Dennis. At last I can pass out a pamphlet that gets to the foundation of the problem--the Bible. Your pamphlet is a great "eye opener" at work. Since a lot of people take on faith that the Bible is a "good book," they really listen when I'm discussing the problems the pamphlet raises. I can tell they have never heard these questions raised in church. Please send 100 more of THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD. Keep up the good work!

Letter #342 from JF of Decatur, Illinois

Hello Dennis. You got a plug in the July issue of the newsletter of the Religion and Ethics Institute. I have enclosed a copy for you. I've also enclosed another item of possible interest. I'm surprised you aren't burned out! You keep fighting the fight and hanging tough. Keep up the good work.

(The other item of possible interest is the following letter to Dear Abby--Ed.). Dear Abby: A member of my family keeps telling me that it is written in the Bible that the Lord approves of giving a person intoxicating drink to drown his sorrow and lessen his pain. This person is a very heavy drinker, and I think he just made it up as an excuse for his own drinking. If there is such a passage in the Holy Bible, please tell me and I will apologize, because I called him a liar to his face. Thank you.--Can't Believe It.

(Abby answered with--Ed.). Dear Can't: You should apologize. Proverbs 31:6-7 says, "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more."

Letter #343 from MD of Sacramento, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I was very happy to have reached you by phone the other night and to have had a brief chat....I really hate to see superstition spread like it does, and having attended Sunday School since the impressionable age of 2, I do love your statement in my sample issue that you're teaching "a kind of Sunday-School-In-Reverse." I do not look fondly on my days spent in church....I'm looking forward to reading your forthcoming issues of BE.

COMMENTARY

JESUS, THE IMPERFECT BEACON (Part 6 of an Eight-Part Series)--This month's commentary will continue the enumeration of Jesus' failings begun in last month's issue: (115) JOHN 5:37 ("And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape"). Yet, many verses show that God has been seen and heard on numerous occasions. Obvious examples are: Gen. 3:8-10 ("And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden.... And the Lord God called unto Adam, and said unto him. Where art thou? And Adam said, I heard thy voice in the garden...."), Ex. 19:19 ("...Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice"), Deut. 4:36 ("Out of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might instruct thee...."), Ex. 20:22, Deut. 4:12, 33, 5:23-26, and Job 38:1. (116) JOHN 18:36 ("Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my Kingdom were of this world....") versus ZECH. 9:10, Psalm 72:8 ("...and he shall speak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth"), Zech. 14:9 ("And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one"), Luke 1:32-33 ("He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever: and of his Kingdom there shall be no end"), Dan. 7:14, 27, and Isa. 60:12. (117) MATT. 10:9-10 ("Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves....") versus MARK 6:8-9 ("And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no money in their purse"). Jesus can't seem to decide whether or not his followers should take staves on their journeys. (118) JOHN 5:46 ("For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me"). Moses never wrote of Jesus and numerous discussions of the Mosaic prophecies in earlier issues of BE prove as much. (119) MARK 12:26 ("And as touching the dead, that they rise: have ye not read in the book of Moses how in the bush God spake unto him, saying...."). It may be called the "Book of Moses" but the commentaries entitled Moses and the Pentateuch in Issues 19 and 20 clearly show Moses was not the author. (120) MATT. 22:19-21 ("Show me {Jesus--Ed.} the tribute money. And they brought unto him a penny. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? They say unto him, Caesar's. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesars....") versus MATT. 17:24-26 RSV ("When they came to Capernaum, the collectors of the half shekel tax went up to Peter and said, Does not your teacher pay the tax? Peter said, 'Yes' And when Peter came home, Jesus spoke to him first, saying, What do you think, Simon? From whom do kings of the earth take toll or tribute? From their sons or from others? And when Peter said, From others, Jesus said to him, Then the sons are free"). In other words, if you are not a foreigner but are one of the Kings sons, i.e. subjects, it is not really necessary to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. (121) JOHN 3:18 ("He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God") versus MATT. 7:21 ("Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven...."). (122)

LUKE 14:8-10 NEB ("When you are asked by someone to a wedding-feast, do not sit down in the place of honour. It may be that some person more distinguished than yourself has been invited; and the host will come and say to you, 'Give this man your seat.' Then you will look foolish as you begin to take the lowest place. No, when you receive an invitation, go and sit down in the lowest place...."). Jesus is teaching classism more than humility. (123) JOHN 4:24 ("God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth") versus GEN. 18:1-3 ("And the Lord appeared unto Abraham in the plains of Mamre: and Abraham sat in the tent door in the heat of the day; and he lift up his eyes and looked, and lo, three men stood by him; and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent door, and bowed himself toward the ground, And said, My Lord..."). We are told God is spirit; yet, he appeared to Abraham in a purely physical form. (124) MATT. 5:34-36 ("But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head....") versus DEUT. 10:20 ("Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God; him shalt thou serve, and to him shalt thou cleave, and swear by his name"), Deut. 6:13 ("Thou shalt fear the Lord God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name"), Num. 30:2 ("If a man vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth"), Isa. 45:23 ("I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear"), Isa. 65:16 ("...and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth...."), Jer. 4:2, and Psalm 63:11. Either we have a contradiction or Jesus has repealed that part of the old law which promotes swearing. (125) MATT. 11:27 ("...And no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him"). If this is true, then how could the prophets have known about God. Since they lived before Jesus and God could not have been revealed to them except through Jesus, they could not have known God or spoken to him. Moreover, since the authors of the gospels, as well as Peter and Paul, based their claims about Jesus on the prophecies of prophets who could not have known God, the entire structure collapses. (126) JOHN 8:7 ("Jesus lifted himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her"). If this principle were adopted as a general rule, mankind might as well abolish all courts and punishments. Following this approach would require the liberation of every one who is imprisoned, because we are all fallible. Moreover, if we can't punish anyone because we are not free from sin ourselves, then how can God justly punish man for sinning. After all, Lam. 3:38 ("Is it not from the Most High that good and evil come?") shows God is not immaculate either. (127) MARK 10:29-30 ("There is no man that hath left house...for my sake...But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses...and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life"). Jesus promised vast riches to those who would follow him. Yet, in verses such as Luke 14:33, 18:22, 12:33, 11:41, 3:11, 9:3, Matt. 19:21, and Matt. 6:19 he repeatedly admonished his followers to surrender all of their worldly possessions. (128) MARK 10:30 ("But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers...."). How one person can have "mothers," and have them retrospectively as Jesus promised, is rather hard to imagine also. (129) MICAH 7:18 ("...he retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy") versus MATT. 25:46 ("And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal"), Matt. 3:12 ("...but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire"), and Matt. 18:8 ("...it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire"). Since one can spend an eternity in hell, obviously God can retain his anger forever. (130) JOHN 14:12-14 ("Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do.... If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it"), John 15:7 ("If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you"), John 15:16, 16:23 ("whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you"), and Matt. 21:22 ("And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive") contend prayers will provide everything requested. Yet, millions of believers have prayed to Jesus millions of times and met only failure. His promise of the universal efficacy of prayer has proven as miserable a sham as his promise of all power to those with faith. (131) LUKE 22:31-33 ("Simon, Simon [Peter--Ed.], behold, Satan demanded to have you that he might sift you like wheat, but I have prayed for you that your faith may not fail; and when you have turned again, strengthen your brethren. And Peter said to him, Lord I am ready to go with you to prison and to death") versus MATT. 26:69-70 ("Now Peter sat without in the palace; and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee. But he denied before them all saying, I know not what thou sayest"), Matt. 26:74 ("Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man"), Matt. 14:31 ("And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught Peter, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, why didst thou doubt?"), Matt. 16:23 ("But Jesus turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offence unto me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men"). How can praying be useful when even the prayers of Jesus failed? Even though he prayed for Peter's faith to endure, Peter denied him in the end.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #344 from TF, Editor of Bible Answers Newsletter of Pasadena, Maryland (Part a)

(In Parts a through i of Letter #310 in Issues 77, 78, 79, and 80 TF and I clashed on some biblical assertions and he now seeks to resume the encounter--Ed.). In the December 1988 issue, I responded to some assertions made by Dennis McKinsey, editor of "Biblical Errancy." Speaking of "the billions of beings that die as fetuses, infants, mental deficient, etc.," McKinsey asserts, "For them to accept Jesus would be impossible...."

I answered, "Suppose each person has a conscious, competent, soul at conception? I don't advocate that doctrine, but I see that you haven't proved yours." Since McKinsey had made an assertion, he needed reasoning or evidence to support it. I merely pointed out that the consciousness or competence of a fetus is a possibility which is not subject to proof or disproof by empirical study. McKinsey must remain silent (open-minded) on the subject or take a dogmatic position. If he chooses dogma, he ought to be honest about it.

The (epistemological) problem is that we cannot presume that the currently available memories of children and adults are complete. It may be that people have clear, vivid, and very sophisticated experiences as fetuses, and that some fundamental value judgments occur even with a single cell, but that the resources for long-term memory are undeveloped. Such a doctrine has some very interesting arguments on its behalf. Furthermore, the epistemological method of Phenomenology allows for the possibility that a fetus experiences the essential intuitive recognition of interpersonal relations, the reality of God, sin, love, forgiveness, atonement, contract/covenant, etc.

McKinsey writes, "I am under no obligation to prove something does not exist which you claim does. The burden of proof lies on he (sic) who alleges; that's axiomatic. You are obligated to prove that an embryo is 'conscious and competent' at conception sufficient to make a...decision to accept Jesus."

Wrong again, McKinsey. You have asserted the existence of people who were not "conscious and competent" at conception. That assertion requires support. To assert the existence of some who were "conscious and competent" at conception would likewise call for support. I have not asserted either doctrine, because I am open-minded on that question. I asked you to consider the fact that your assumption might be false, since it cannot be proven. I asked you to "suppose" the hypothetical contrary doctrine merely as an aid to your understanding, and clearly stated that "I don't advocate that doctrine." Now I challenge you again to support your assertion or admit that it is dogma.

Editor's Response to Letter #344 (Part a)

Dear TF. The first point I made to you during our initial exchange last May was that, "With all due respect, I think you would do well to consult notable apologists before engaging in apologetics. I'd suggest Josh McDowell and Gleason Archer for openers. Their grasp of the imbrolios our pamphlets expose is much more perceptive and their rationalizations are more relevant. Your explanations, on the other hand, are often without substance, disjointed, and not germane." Obviously, you ignored my advice as your current infatuation vividly demonstrates. If it wasn't for the fact that your publication may influence the unwary, I'd be inclined to ignore such an inane defense. If that is the best you can do, I'd say desperation has set in. First, if you don't believe "each person has a conscious, competent soul at conception," then why do you keep bringing it up? Why don't you admit you are surreptitiously trying to give a vacuous idea some degree of credibility? Second, do you have so much as a scintilla of scientific evidence that "some fundamental value judgments occur even with a single cell" or that a fetus "experiences the essential intuitive recognition of interpersonal relations, the reality of God, sin, love, forgiveness, atonement, contracts etc.?" Your assertion that my assumption...cannot be proven is false because competent neurologists can show that the brain and nervous system of a fetus is not capable of conceiving ideas such as God, sin, atonement, and covenant. One of your readers criticized you on the same point in the same issue of your periodical. On page 6 he said, "If you seriously believe that a human zygote might be fully conscious, then you must either be lost in some metaphysical muddle or out of touch with the science of biology. Science has demonstrated a relationship between consciousness and neural development. A zygote only has a blueprint for a mind -- not the real thing. You've demonstrated a profound failure to understand what is meant by 'scientific proof.'" Third, you say "the epistemological method of Phenomenology allows for the possibility that a fetus experiences...." which is typical of the epistemological metaphysical doubletalk I occasionally experienced in philosophy classes. Until you provide some concrete proof to validate your theoretical concoction, your answer remains senseless. A major problem, if not the major problem, with all people of a religious, metaphysical, superstitious orientation is that they assume any statement by anyone is true or has serious plausibility unless it can be disproven. Wrong! It's not to be accepted until it can be proven true. That's fundamental to rational thought and, yet, it's ignored by millions. The burden of proof rests with you my friend. Your comment that "I don't advocate that doctrine, but I see that you haven't proved yours" is fallacious because I have no doctrine to prove in this regard. But you do. As I've said so often, "The burden of proof lies on he who alleges." Otherwise, rational minds are required to disprove every ludicrous idea that ever came down the pike and they are to be accepted as true or seriously plausible until disproven. If I told you I physically fought the devil this morning, had lunch with a real angel on Mars, shook hands with Jesus one hour ago, and threw a rock to the moon, my assertions would all be true or seriously plausible under your line of reasoning until they were disproven. Evidence is not required. I need only assert as much. By the same token your claim that a fetus may have a consciousness of God, sin, etc. becomes a distinct possibility until I provide evidence to the contrary. If you are going to hold to that position, then I'm going to claim I threw a rock to the moon. Prove me wrong! I challenge you to prove I didn't throw a rock to the moon or wrestle the devil. If you ask me to repeat the deed, I'll either say it was a unique event or I don't like being tested. Sound familiar! Fourth, if there is any dogma involved, it's yours. You repeatedly talk about something for which no evidence is provided and then denounce others because they won't accept your imaginings until evidence is forthcoming. Dogma lies not in my refusal to accept the possibility of your hypothesis but in your adherence to an idea for which you feel no obligation to provide some corroboration. I have no problem with accepting your hypothesis, or any other for that matter, as long as some substantiation is provided. But what you want is for me to accept the possibility without any support. According to you, I'm dogmatic when I refuse to accept your hypothesis without valid evidence, but, in truth, I'd be foolish if I accepted your hypothesis without some corroboration. You work on the assumption that any idea has credibility until disproven, which leaves your mind vulnerable to a world of unsubstantiated concepts of the most insane variety. The sky is the limit. You say that "McKinsey must remain silent (open-minded) on the subject or take a dogmatic position." On the contrary, I'm quite open-minded but I'm certainly not silent. And until evidence is produced from your side, silence is something you might want to consider. Fifth, you claim "such a doctrine has some very interesting arguments on its behalf." Can you name one? Sixth, you claimed that I "have asserted the existence of people who were not 'conscious and competent' at conception" without providing support. Apparently, you are having trouble reading, TF. I said that you are obligated to prove that an embryo is "conscious and competent" at conception..., "not merely assert there is the possibility. I never said it wasn't; I said you are required to prove it was, since you are the one who concocted the idea. Lastly, even if your incredible hypothesis were valid, you haven't solved the original problem. Even if fetuses and infants could comprehend abstract concepts such as God, sin and the atonement, they would have two additional hurdles to surmount. Prior to their death they would have to hear or read the Bible in some way in order to know about Jesus, and they would have to accept Jesus as their savior according to the dictates of John 14:6. Both are too ridiculous to discuss.

Letter #344 Continues (Part b)

McKinsey continues, "...you say that John 14:6 ('I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me') does not say that anyone goes to hell or that anyone goes to heaven. But it most assuredly does. If you aren't saved, where else can you go except to hell? If being saved means attaining heaven, then being lost means condemnation to hell."

McKinsey's first error is his assumption that "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me" must refer to admission into heaven (rather than submission to the Father as a result of Christ's transforming power in the individual).

The second error was his assumption that the verse said that some would go to hell or that some would go to heaven. Even if we accept the verse as saying, in effect, "Believers are going to heaven, unbelievers to hell, and there is no third alternative," there is no existential quantifier in the statement. One possible outcome is that nobody has true faith. Another possible outcome is that everybody will have true faith. The third possible outcome is that some go to heaven and some to hell. I simply pointed out that the verse, by itself, does not rule out the first or the second of the three possible outcomes. My wording was clear enough: John 14:6 "does not say that anyone goes to hell or that anyone goes to heaven."

Editor's Response to the Letter #344 (Part b)

Again, your commentary is vacuous, TF. First, you say that, "McKinsey's first error is his assumption...." You are trying to make a distinction without a biblically-based difference. The ultimate goal of all Christians is to be with God in heaven. Being with God is equivalent to being in heaven, for how can one be with God and not be in heaven. If you are not with God ultimately, where else can you be but in hell. If you go to the Father by accepting Jesus, you automatically enter heaven. They are synonymous. You are trying to say you can accept Jesus as your savior and go to the Father as a result without entering heaven. This would not only be non-biblical but pointless. Why go to the Father through Jesus, if heaven is not attained thereby? Moreover, where and what is this third place you feel people can ultimately attain, and could you provide textual support for your belief? Second, you say, "One possible outcome is that nobody has true faith. Another possible outcome is that everybody will have true faith. The third possible outcome is that some go to heaven and some to hell. I simply pointed out that the verse, by itself, does not rule out the first or the second of the three possible outcomes." Now you are not only being petty but deceptive. I never said it did. You'd do a lot better if you spent less time trying to devise deceitful defenses and more time trying to honestly confront your difficulties, TF. I never said your first, second, or third possibilities were ruled out. Each is nothing but an obvious possibility based on John 14:6. In fact, what else could occur. According to John 14:6 all will be saved, none will be saved or a split decision will occur. How does that conflict with my assertion that according to John 14:6 you must accept Jesus as your savior in order to attain heaven or face damnation? Third, your "existential quantifier" comment is little more than an attempt to appear profound when profundity is noticeably absent from most of your writings. Again, in all seriousness, I'd suggest you consult notable apologists. (To Be Continued Next Month)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #345 from DEM of Pasadena, California

(After reading the earlier exchange between TF and myself, one of BE's subscribers sent TF the following letter--Ed.).

Dear Mr. TF. ...many of your replies to Dennis McKinsey (as well as to myself) are wholly misguided and inappropriate. Mere possibility is no badge of respectability in the world of inductive reasoning. It may be that the earth is under the control of a band of green spiders living in San Diego, but that hypothesis will impress no one of sound mind and rudimentary reasoning ability. It lacks supportive evidence and a believable mechanism, and a great mountain of evidence suggests otherwise. Needless to say, the flat-earth "theories" and the hollow-earth "theories" are in the same bucket. Philosophically speaking, none of these ideas can be disproven with absolute certainty, but that fact does not confer the slightest respectability on any of them.

TF, under the paradigm which you seem to be functioning, at least to some degree, we ought to take the Green Spider conspiracy seriously! After all, can anyone really disprove that "theory"? We have to consider the possibility that it might be true! Or do we?

Mr. McKinsey is quite correct in dismissing the cells-for-Jesus scenario. The word "impossible" is often understood to mean "very, very unlikely." The flat-earth "theories," the Green Spider conspiracy, and the zygotes-for-Jesus idea can safely be dropped into the same trash bin. None of these ideas currently generate enough voltage to be taken seriously. If any of them ever show signs of coming to life, then we can always pluck them out of the trash. But, until then, that's exactly where they belong.

It is neither dogmatic nor closed-minded to reject a claim which is totally devoid of evidential support; rejection should not be confused with denial, the latter being a positive claim which requires evidence.

The burden of proof is on the shoulders of those who allege. All the critic has to do is ask, "Where's the beef?" The critic is not obliged to entertain a claim which lacks evidence, which has no discernible mechanism, and which runs contrary to established findings. Effective thinking requires that such claims be rejected as baseless, as unworthy of consideration. The alternative is to spend time worrying about the Green Spider conspiracy!

In your joust with Dennis McKinsey you did score a clean point in the mathematical arena (a point to be discussed next month--ED). But, even there it looks like you won the battle only to lose the war. Surely, the mere fact of being in hell must be considered as a form of punishment. If nothing else, one is deprived of being in heaven. Since one day in hell (without flames) would presumably be like any other day in hell (without flames) we must assign a constant punishment value--however small--to the mere fact of being in hell for a day. As the days go by without limit the accumulated punishment exceeds all bounds. That is, an infinite punishment is awarded even with the "flames" turn off! Thus, it appears that McKinsey is right after all, at least in spirit if not in mathematical detail!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Appearances on the media are undoubtedly one of our most effective methods by which to spread the word. COMMENTARY

JESUS, THE IMPERFECT BEACON (Part 7 of an Eight-Part Series)--This month's commentary will continue the listing of Jesus' shortcomings that was brought to new heights in last month's commentary: (132) JOHN 10:27-28 ("My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand") and John 18:9 ("That the saying might be fulfilled, which he spake, Of them which thou gavest me have I lost none") versus JOHN 17:12 ("While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled"), Matt. 26:56 ("But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook him and fled"), and John 13:21, 25-27. Jesus said none of his sheep would be plucked out of his hand; yet, we are later told that he not only lost the son of perdition but all his disciples forsook him and fled. (133) DEUT. 10:17 ("For the Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, mighty and terrible, which regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward") and 2 Chron. 19:7 ("...for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts"). The OT says God does not play favorites, yet Jesus' comments in Matt. 10:5-6 ("...Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel"), Matt. 15:24 ("...I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel"), and John 4:22 ("...we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews") show he does. (134) First CHRON. 28:9 ("...for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts; if thou seek him, he will be found of thee...") and Matt. 7:8 versus JOHN 7:34 ("Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come"). Chronicles says the Lord can be found whenever you seek him, but Jesus said he would be sought and not found. (135) LUKE 10:30-34 ("And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him. And went to him, and bound up his wounds...and took care of him"). Jesus says a priest and a Levite passed up the man who was aided by a Samaritan--a member of a tribe that had been enemies of the Jews for centuries. Priests, Levites, and the Israelites are three classes of Jews called to the Torah. Yet, Jesus relates a story in which two of the groups ignore an injured man. This is teaching brotherhood?? How could intentionally downgrading Jewish priests and Levites while complimenting their enemies create camaraderie? (136) MARK 14:62 ("And Jesus said, ...ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven") versus DAN. 7:13 ("I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days (God--ED), and they brought him near before him"). Jesus misquoted and misrepresented Daniel. Daniel 7:13 is referring to a vision of the night, not an actual event. Even more important, Daniel 7:13 says one "like" the Son of man; it does not say he "is" the son of man. (137) LUKE 19:27 ("...mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me"). This statement comes from a ruler who is referring to some rebellious servants. By relating this incident Jesus is implicitly condoning executions which is contrary to the spirit of Luke 23:34 ("Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do"). (138) JOHN 10:8 ("All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them"). Since "all" would encompass the prophets who came before Jesus, the conclusion is inescapable. (139) MALACHI 4:5-6 ("Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet [whom Jesus said was John the Baptist--ED.] before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers...."). (a) If John the Baptist is Elijah as Jesus said in Matt. 17:11-13, then John's preaching should have brought fathers and children together, which didn't occur? (b) John the Baptist was a contemporary of Jesus. If he had attempted to bring fathers and children together, he would have been in direct opposition to Jesus who said, "Suppose that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division: For from thenceforth there shall be fire in one house divided, three against two, and two against three. The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother...." (140) LUKE 11:29 ("And when the people were gathered together, he began to say, This is an evil generation: they seek a sign; and there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet"), Matt. 12:39 ("But he answered and said unto them, an evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, and there shall no sign be given to it, but the...."), and Mark 8:12 ("And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation") versus JOHN 20:30 ("And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book....") and Mark 16:20 ("And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following"). Jesus said NO sign but one would be given to his generation; yet, he gave them many signs. (141) MATT. 6:5-6 ("And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret....") versus 1 KINGS 8:22-23 ("And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven: And he said, Lord God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in heaven above...."). Jesus said one should pray in secret; yet, Solomon, one of God's favorites, did the opposite. (142) JOHN 3:18 ("...because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God") versus GEN. 6:2 ("That the sons of God saw the daughters of men....") and Gen. 6:4 ("...when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men...."). Contrary to the Book of John, the Book of Genesis says God had several sons. One could say the word "begotten" creates the difference, but its meaning is vague. (143) MATT. 24:27-34 ("For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.... Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other...when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled"). Although Jesus strongly stated this prophecy would be fulfilled in the lifetime of his generation, nearly 2,000 years have passed and its yet to be fulfilled. Although formerly used to frighten people into compliance, this prophecy now exposes a gigantic falsehood. The Son of man has not come as predicted. It is more specific than most predictions and so provides a good test of the reality of Christ's pretenses. Generation after generation has passed away and the prophet of Nazareth stands convicted as a imposter. Apologetic attempts to apply the word "generation" to the Jewish people, specifically, are futile.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #344 from TF of Pasadena, Maryland Continues from Last Month (Part c)

In the December issue, I said, "God never took away anything that Adam (or you) had a right to possess." In response, McKinsey said, "I beg to differ. When I'm denied something which I would have received except for another's misbehavior, that's losing something I had a right to possess. I did nothing to lose it and would have received it but for another's bad deeds. That's injustice."

Wrong again, McKinsey. Gifts are completely undeserved. If I freely give a gold bar to each person I meet, and choose to stop as a result of being mugged by one of the recipients, I have not done you an injustice. You cannot complain that I have deprived you of something that you had a "right" to receive. My gold is my own. My purposes are my own.

Editor's Response to Letter #344 (Part c)

How many errors can one make in such a short paragraph, TF! First, Christians of the "faith alone" variety, which includes much of protestantism and nearly all of fundamentalism, need to jettison forever the idea that salvation is a "gift" given without strings attached. IT IS NOT A GIFT. Let me repeat that, again, because we receive letters and constantly read fundamentalist literature to the contrary. SALVATION IS NOT A FREE GIFT, FREELY GIVEN. Quite the contrary, it must be earned. How is it earned? It is earned by accepting Jesus as one's savior according to John 14:6 and other verses. If you don't accept Jesus, you are doomed and that's that. You must act; you must obtain your own salvation by taking an affirmative, positive act. Salvation is not freely bestowed as a gift from God but something that's earned. You did what is required and if you hadn't you would have been doomed. In fact, since you did what is required, you not only earned but can't be denied salvation. So let's dispense with all of this talk about free gifts, freely given by a magnanimous God. Second, you say, "If I freely give a gold bar to each person I meet, and choose to stop as a result of being mugged by one of the recipients, I have not done you an injustice." But, of course you have!. If I had five life preservers to throw to 5 drowning people and refused to throw out the remaining four because the first person rejected his, am I being just? Years ago I taught school. Are you saying I would have been just if I had punished the entire class because one student threw a paper wad? Adam ate the forbidden fruit, it's his problem not ours and he alone should pay the penalty. Even the Bible asserts you don't punish the children for the sins of their fathers (Deut. 24:16). Yet, you would have us believe that billions are being justly denied a heaven on earth because of the sins of one. Third, if salvation is a free gift bestowed without any strings attached, as you and your compatriots assert, then God alone chooses who will be saved and its entirely out of our hands. In effect, salvation is based on God's whim and he plays favorites; for what other criteria can there be when nothing is required on our part. If we do nothing; he does it all. That's predestination. Injustice reigns supreme under your scenario. God's whim, entirely independent of human behavior, morality, or deeds, determines who is saved and who isn't. God's discretion alone is the sole determinant. Yet, the Bible says God is no respecter of persons; he doesn't play favorites. If it's purely a gift as you say, then the recipient is chosen on a purely arbitrary basis and that's the essence of favoritism and injustice. That's Salvation by Whim which was discussed many commentaries ago. Fourth, you say that God can freely bestow or withdraw it at any time of his choosing. But that's not the issue. We are talking about what originally occurred as a result of Adam's act and that involves punishment, not a gift. We are talking about a "gift" that involves punishment if it is not received, which is not true of most presents. We are being punished for what Adam did; that's the point in dispute. I didn't eat the forbidden fruit, did you? We are not going to race ahead to discuss how mankind extracts itself from the predicament Adam created. Christians love to talk about how Jesus provided an escape mechanism but rarely want to discuss the injustice associated with how we got into the mess in the first place. We are not talking about how Jesus provided a means to extrapolate ourselves from the problem after the event but how we got into the problem initially.

In his June issue, McKinsey says, "You say 'those who are perfect are complete...are exemplary in their "relative" moral development.' What does that mean? If it means they are perfect, then they are morally perfect, period, and that contradicts Rom. 3:23.... If Noah was not morally perfect, then he had no more right to be saved on the Ark than anyone else.... If Jesus, alone, was perfect and sinless, then Noah and Job were morally imperfect and Gen. 6:9 and Job 1:1 are false. You can't have it both ways."

The Bible is quite clear McKinsey. Rom. 3:23 tells us, "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Since God himself is not included in the "all" who have sinned, Jesus is not included either. Jesus was and is sinless. Everyone else has "come short of the glory of God." King James English does not simply mean "absolutely flawless" when it says "perfect" (or "just," "righteous," etc.). Yet Jesus was specifically described as being without sin.

You are correct that Noah, as a sinner, "had no more right to be saved on the Ark than anyone else." Creatures have no claim of "rights" to be demanded of God. God has the right to give relatively greater rewards and honor to those who are relatively more righteous, if he so chooses. If he chooses to save the most righteous man (and his family) from a devastating flood, he clearly has the right to call that relatively righteous man "perfect."

Noah, Job, and Jesus were "perfect." Jesus alone was both perfect and sinless. I can "have it both ways" because these are not mutually contradictory propositions. The "sinful" and the "perfect" are in overlapping classes. In fact, if it were not for the absolute sinlessness of Jesus Christ, "perfect" would be simply a subset of "sinful," when classifying human beings.

Editor's Response to Letter #344 (Part d)

The dictionary defines "doublespeak" as "obscure or ambiguous language, especially if meant to deceive." The term is often applicable to your explanations and this instance is a prime example, TF. First, elementary logic tells you that everything is either A or not A; everything is either perfect or not perfect. Gen. 6:9 says Noah was "perfect." Webster defines "perfect" as "without defect," "in a condition of complete excellence," "faultless," "completely correct or accurate," "pure," and "complete in all respects." If Noah was without defect and pure, then he was sinless, just like Jesus, and that's that. Why do you keep disputing the obvious? Second, could you provide evidence that the "King James English does not simply mean 'absolutely flawless' when it says 'perfect'...?" Or are you just pulling it out of thin air? Third, modern versions, such as the ASV, which don't use King James English, also use "perfect" in Gen. 6:9. Are you saying the creators of the ASV, for example, can't translate, that they don't know the best word to choose and you know Hebrew better than they? How much Hebrew have you had? They chose the word "perfect" and know its dictionary definition as well as anyone. Fourth, as I've said before, it's the same "perfect" that is applied to God in Deut. 32:4 ("He is the Rock, his work is perfect") and Psalm 18:30 ("As for God, his way is perfect"). Both come from the same Hebrew word. Using your logic, I could argue that those verses are not saying God is morally perfect either. Fifth, you say that "God has the right to give relatively greater rewards and honor to those who are relatively more righteous, if he so chooses." There is nothing "relative" about this issue. You either drowned during the Flood or you didn't. Death is absolute, not relative. There is no inbetween, no degree of relativity. Noah didn't drown, so there must be a qualitative difference between his morality and that of all others. Since the behaviors differed in quality, justice could not have prevailed unless the treatments dispensed by God differed in quality also. The behavior of everyone except Noah was less than morally perfect; therefore, for God to have been just, Noah must have exhibited moral behavior that was different in quality from that of everyone else, i.e., it must have been perfect. Sixth, you say that God "clearly has the right to call that relatively righteous man 'perfect.'" Let's go back to my original point. Noah was either perfect or he wasn't. You admit he wasn't; so that settles the matter. Gen. 6:9 is false. Again you're trying to make a distinction where none exists. Perfect is equivalent to sinless. You, on the other hand, are trying to create a distinction by saying Noah was perfect but sinful which makes no sense. (a) If he was perfect he had to be sinless; otherwise, he wasn't perfect. (b) If he was a sinner, how could he have been perfect? If Noah was sinful then he obviously wasn't perfect. If he was perfect, then he was sinless too. In essence, all you are saying is that God has a right to call a man morally perfect who isn't; you admit he isn't. Or, to be even more candid, all you are saying is that God has a right to call black white if he so chooses. That's an argument born out of desperation, not logic, TF. And lastly, you say that "Noah, Job, and Jesus were 'perfect.' Jesus alone was both perfect and sinless. I can 'have it both ways' because these are not mutually contradictory propositions." Of course they are mutually contradictory and you can't have it both ways. You said that "if it were not for the absolute sinlessness of Jesus Christ, 'perfect' would be simply a subset of 'sinful.'" How could moral perfection ever be a subset of "sinful?" Most apologists at least try to put a veneer of rationality on their meanderings.

On the question of the duration and intensity of a sinner's experience in hell, I pointed out that the duration could be infinite and yet the total penalty could still be finite: "It is easy to define an infinite series which has a finite total. Nevertheless, hell is clearly something to avoid."

McKinsey responded, "I'm not even sure that you understand simple math. How can an infinite series have a finite total?...."

The answer can be given in terms of simple math, McKinsey. A person might pay half of his penalty in the first minute, half of the remaining penalty in the second minute, half of the remaining penalty in the third minute, etc. When one minute had passed, he would have one half of the total still remaining. When two minutes had passed, he would have one fourth of the total to go. Then one eighth, one sixteenth, etc. ad infinitum.

In his July issue, McKinsey had the following "EDITOR'S NOTE": "Several subscribers took exception to my final comment to TF... In reference to the length of Hell's punishment I said, 'How can an infinite series have a finite total? The number of finites within an infinite series is infinite, not finite.' Apparently several people feel that the number of finites within an infinity (sic) can be finite (sic)... When I entered college decades ago, math was my major and calculus my nemesis. Perhaps I missed something by switching to philosophy, but after reading the explanations provided I still don't see how a restricted number of finite numbers can total an infinity. Perhaps I've erred; it's happened before. So I'll not pursue the issue."

Well, McKinsey, I have a degree in math, and have seen no evidence that you finished the introductory courses in either math or philosophy. Competence in either field would prevent you from thinking that the (clearly false) claim that "a restricted number of finite numbers can total an infinity" is logically equivalent to the (true) claim that "an infinite series can have a finite total."

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #344 (Part e)

Because of the large number of letters generated by my editorial note and the subtle misguidance of your critique, TF, I've decided to pursue this issue after all. My original question was: How can an infinite series have a finite total?" Perhaps I should have been more technical and asked:

How can an infinite series of whole numbers have a finite total. I would have thought that it would have been obvious we were dealing with whole numbers. Instead, I was met by a group of letters with an authoritative aura and decided not to defend my original statement. But after reviewing the issue with a more critical eye, I see I was correct to start with. Why? Because we aren't dealing with an infinite series of fractions whose sum is approaching the number one. We are dealing with sins and evil deeds that cause punishment in Hell. And they come in whole numbers, not fractions. The number of your sins totals one, two, three, four, etc., not one-eighth, one-fourth or one-sixteenth of a sin. You either sinned or you didn't. Consequently, your comment that "a person might pay half of his penalty in the first minute, half of the remaining penalty in the second minute...." is wholly deceptive. It is deceptive not only because of the reasons stated but also because you switched the punishment from the infinity of Hell to the number ONE which certainly is not infinite. In effect, you changed the penalty from infinity to finite and you changed the composition from sins to fractions of sins.

If you are going to play this juvenile game of Zeno's paradox, then I'm going to say that there is no punishment in Hell whatsoever, either eternally or otherwise. The reasoning in this regard is quite simple. Before a person can serve "half of his penalty in the first minute" which you mentioned, he must first serve one-fourth of the penalty. And before he can serve one-fourth, he must first serve one-eighth. And before he can serve one-eighth, he must serve one-sixteenth. So, in effect, we are involved in an infinite regression back toward zero. How, then, can a person even start serving his penalty?

Second, if you had been more forthright you would have conceded that my original question in issue #78 ("How can an infinite series have a finite total?") was changed to the more correct formulation ("I still don't see how a restricted number of finite numbers can total an infinity?") in the Editor's Note of Issue #79. The altered wording makes all the difference. In simple terms, my original question was: How can an infinity, i.e. an infinite series, have a finite total; while the later corrected alteration was: How can a finite series of numbers total an infinity? Notice! The latter alteration specifically referred to a "restricted number." In fact, if you will note carefully the change is implicit in the second part of my original statement ("The number of finites within an infinite series is infinite, not finite") in Issue #78. My only imprecision in this entire matter, which I quickly corrected, was in asking, "How can an infinite series have a finite total" rather than, "How can a finite series of whole numbers have an infinite total." While answering a letter to your publication, TF, you made the following comment regarding militant atheists. "Their emotional reaction against God is too intense to allow calm, careful analysis of the evidence and reasoning." Interestingly enough, that's an apt description of the attitude you display when confronted with criticisms of the Bible.

Letter #346 from TF of Webster, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. McKinsey... I am a former Fundamentalist who "studied his way out of Christianity" while in a Christian college training to be a minister. Today I am a Deist. Like you, I have studied the Bible and read books by McDowell, Morris, Archer, Arndt, and Haley on one side and Wheless, Remsburg, and Paine on the other. Until I encountered your newsletter, I thought I was the only person in the world who thought the way I did. I had met a few people who disbelieved in the Bible, but most of them had never even read the book, and none of them was capable of answering any of the simplest arguments of your typical apologist. As you probably know, I have collected every single back issue of BE and intend to keep subscribing to it as long as you keep publishing it. You have a friend and ally here in Wisconsin. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #346

Dear TF. Your comment with respect to critics of the Bible is all too true. In fact, the tendency of biblical critics to avoid rather than oppose has been one of the greatest weaknesses of the freethought movement. Is it any wonder that religious nonsense is so prominent on the media and rational analyses of same are all but nonexistent!

EDITOR'S NOTE In last's month's editorial note we requested assistance with respect to three books listing radio talk shows in the United States. Unfortunately, no one has contacted us by either phone or letter in regard to any of the three.

JESUS, THE IMPERFECT BEACON (Part 8 of an Eight-Part Series)--This month's commentary is the final installment on an exhaustive study of Jesus' inadequacies. Those who have read all of BE's comments on Jesus are to be complimented for demonstrating the kind of self-discipline and dedication that gives rise to winners. (144) JOHN 5:25 ("I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live...."). Another false prophecy by Jesus! "And now is" shows that this was to occur at that time. Three verses later, John 5:28 ("Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice....") refutes a common apologetic defense by showing that "the dead" refers to those who were physically dead in graves, not spiritually dead. (145) JOHN 10:33-36 ("The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and because thou, being a man, makest thyself God. Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, 'ye are gods'? If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the scripture cannot be broken; say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God?"). Psalm 82:1, which Jesus is relating, shows God made this statement while in the divine council holding judgment in the midst of the Gods (RSV). He called them gods because they were gods, not because they had received the word of God. If these beings had actually become gods by having the word of God come to them, then any divinely inspired prophet of the OT could claim to be God. If Jesus could claim to be God by merely receiving the word of God, then many others could follow suit. (146) LUKE 24:46 ("And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day...."). Where is it written in the OT that Jesus, Christ, or the Messiah was to rise on the 3rd day? Hosea 6:2 ("After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight") does not apply for several reasons. (a) The prior verse, Hosea 6:1 ("Come, let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up") uses the word "us," several times and shows it is referring to several beings. (b) The first verse also refers to tearing and smiting. When did the Lord tear and smite Jesus? (c) The second verse says, "after two days will he revive us." Nowhere does the NT say Jesus was revived after two days. (d) And verse 3 says, "let us press on to know the Lord." How could Jesus learn anything additional about the Lord when he allegedly is the Lord? (147) JOHN 5:16-18 ("And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done those things on the sabbath day. But Jesus answered them, 'My Father worketh hitherto, and I work'. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he had not only broken the sabbath....") versus EX. 20:8 ("Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: But the 7th day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work...."). Jesus admitted that he worked on the sabbath contrary to OT law and his only defense was that God did so, too. (148) MATT. 4:10 ("Then Jesus saith unto him, "Get thee hence Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve"). Jesus took this statement from Deut. 6:13 which says, "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name." Nowhere does Deut. 6:13 say thou shalt serve God only. (149) MATT. 10:8 ("Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils....") and Matt. 17:18 ("And Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour"). By believing in devils, fostering belief in them, and casting them out in order to cure illness, Jesus undoubtedly retarded the development of effective methods by which to deal with infirmities. (150) JOHN 20:17 ("Jesus saith unto Mary Magdalene, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father...."). Mary Magdalene was the one true disciple of Jesus. In the darkness of the Crucifixion she lingered near and was the first at the sepulchre. Defeat, disaster, and disgrace, could not conquer her love. Yet, when she met the risen Christ, he said: "Touch me not." This was the reward given for her total devotion. (151) MATT. 19:17-19 ("...but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"). Jesus omitted 5 of the 10 commandments. Possibly he doesn't know the entire 10 or he doesn't consider 5 of them to be commandment material. In any event, he created one of his own ("Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself") out of whole cloth. (152) MATT. 16:18 ("Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom"), Matt. 10:23 ("Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come"), Mark 9:1 ("Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power"), Mark 13:30, and Luke 9:27 versus MARK 13:32 ("But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father"). Jesus repeatedly put a definite time limitation on the moment of his reappearance. Yet, in Mark 13:32 he said he did not know when it would occur. (153) MATT. 12:11 ("...What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out?"). How could Jesus be telling the truth? All people know that Jews are not permitted to raise any animals on the sabbath, from a pit or otherwise. (154) LUKE 9:59-60 ("And Jesus said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead: but go thou and preach the kingdom of God"). Even if interpreted allegorically, Jesus would not allow a man to attend the funeral of his own father who was about to be buried. He demanded the totally unnecessary sacrifice of foregoing the highly important privilege of joining friends and relatives in according a man's father the last honors. The message conveyed is that following Jesus has precedence over everything. (155) LUKE 9:61-62 ("And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house. And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God"). Jesus is denying a person the privilege of bidding farewell to his parents and other relatives before he starts out on a tour intended to further the spreading of the Kingdom of God. Again, the message is that following Jesus is to supercede everything, no matter how insensitive. (156) And finally, in several instances Jesus clearly said that the Old Law was to be upheld: MATT. 5:17-19 ("Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am come not to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven...."), Matt. 23:1-3 ("Then spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples, Saying, The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do...."), and Luke 16:17 ("...And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail"). Yet, he violated and ignored so many Old Laws that they can only be cited rather than written out. In Matt. 15:11 and Mark 7:15, 18-19 he denied the OT dietary laws; in Matt. 15:2-3, 20 and Luke 11:37-38 he denied the OT laws requiring the washing of hands; in Matt. 12:1-6, 8, 10-13, Luke 13:10-16, John 5:8-11, and Mark 2:23-28 he ignored the restrictions as to what can be done on the sabbath. And in Matt. 9:14-15, Mark 2:18-20, and John 8:4-11 he denied the OT law requiring fasting. Jesus also stiffened the Old Law in some instances. In Matt. 5:32 ("...and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery") he forbid a divorced woman to remarry which repeals the OT law found in Deut. 24:1-2 that allows a divorced woman to remarry. In Matt. 5:39 ("...but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also") he abolished the OT requirement in Ex. 21:23-24 of an eye for an eye. In Matt. 5:34-35 ("But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool....") Jesus prohibited swearing oaths which the Old Law allowed in Deut. 6:13 ("Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name"). The most egregious aspect in all this, aside from the fact that Jesus broke his own maxim, lies in the fact that he repeatedly ignored Deut. 4:2 ("Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you") which clearly prohibits additions or subtractions being made to the Old Law.

As far as the shortcomings, errors, and mistakes of Jesus are concerned, that completes our lengthy presentation and all but exhausts our notebooks. Nearly 200 examples of instances in which Jesus failed to fulfill the expectations of his followers are more than sufficient to persuade all but the irrational and indoctrinated that he could not be the savior of mankind. Indeed, one would be hardpressed to find another biblical figure, including Paul, who so belies his billing. The Bible says Jesus was not only sinless (1 John 3:5, 2 Cor. 5:21, Heb. 4:15, 9:28, 7:26), truthful (1 Peter 2:22, Isa. 53:9, Eph. 4:21, John 1:14, 8:40), and pure (1 John 3:3, 1 Peter 1:19) but the Messiah (Matt. 16:6, John 4:26, 4:42, 6:69, 11:27, 12:47, Mark 8:29) as well. Few assertions are more in opposition to the facts. More than enough biblical evidence is available to disprove these beliefs beyond any reasonable doubt. The amount of biblical proof available can only be described as overwhelming.

BAPTISM--Although the role of baptism in the attainment of salvation is of little concern to those outside Christianity, it's of great importance to those within. As the apologists Morris and Clark said, "There is no doubt that the doctrine of baptism is one of the most divisive elements among the various sects and denominations in Christendom and, in fact, one of the chief factors in the establishment of the different denominations in the first place. For example, Baptists and many similar groups believe baptism consists solely of the full immersion of one who has already been saved through personal faith in Christ. (With the name "baptists" one would think they would be the ones who contend that baptism is obligatory; but the opposite is true--Ed.). A number of other denominations, such as the various groups that developed from the ministry of Alexander Campbell and others in the early nineteenth century, believe that such immersion is itself a prerequisite to salvation" (The Bible Has the Answer, page 173). From BE's perspective, the importance of baptism, whether by water, fire, the Holy Ghost, the Spirit, repentance or otherwise, lies in the fact that the biblical text is contradictory with respect to whether or not it is required. Consequently, even if one wanted to comply with whatever the Bible enjoined, no definite direction could be provided. Verses such as John 3:5 ("Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God"), John 3:3 ("I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God"), John 3:7 ("Ye must be born again"), Mark 16:16 ("He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned"), Acts 2:38 ("...Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost"), 1 Peter 3:21 ("The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us"), Acts 11:16 ("For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost"), Gal. 3:27, Eph. 4:4-5, and Titus 3:5 either say or imply that a baptismal rebirth is mandatory. Additional corroboration is provided by the Great Commission of Matt 28:19 ("Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost").

On the other hand, we have Paul's comment in 1 Cor. 1:17 ("For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel....") which strongly implies baptism is not required and directly opposes the Great Commission. Moreover, if baptism is an absolute requirement for salvation, why would Paul say, "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius," and why did Jesus baptize no one according to John 4:2 ("although Jesus Himself was not baptizing, but His disciples were"). Other verses could be used by both sides in this debate, but that would only muddy the waters further. The fact remains that the biblical position on baptism, as with many other major topics, is inconsistent and leads to no definitive resolution of the conflict.

In addition, verses conflict with respect to which name is to be involved in the baptism. In which name is one to be baptized? According to the Great Commission of Matt. 28:19, one should be baptized "in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost." On the other hand, Acts 2:38 ("baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ"), Acts 8:16 ("...only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus"), Acts 19:5 ("When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus"), and Acts 10:48 ("And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord"), say that one should be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord Jesus, or the Lord, respectively. So, in which name are people to be baptized?

The metaphysical nature of baptism accounts for the fact that it has not been discussed until now. BE generally relegates topics of a nebulous or non-demonstrable composition to the back-burner because pinning down its proponents is like nailing jello to the wall. The strategy of its adherents ebbs and flows according to the winds of adversity and the dictates of expediency.

Letter #347 from GN of Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I received the 20 issues of B.E. that I ordered and have devoured them already. I consider myself a Bible critic, but I must say your issues taught me a lot. I only discovered what I believe to be one error on your part, and it may have been a slip. The only reason I would be so bold as to mention it is not to criticize, as I consider you to be a scholar. I want your credibility to be impeccable because fundamentalists are nit-pickers. The error, at least I think it is an error, is in issue #6 where it states that Joseph was from "the house of David, while Mary appears to have been from the house of Judah since her cousin Elizabeth was a daughter of Aaron, i.e., from the house of Judah." I think you will find that David was of the line of Judah, which is the line that the Messiah was supposed to come from, and Mary (if it can be construed as Mary's line which I can't see to be true) is from the line of Aaron. Thus, Mary's line is from the house of LEVI which has nothing to do with the line of the Messiah.

Editor's Response to Letter #347 (Part a)

Dear GN. We extend a sincere thanks for your compliments and acknowledge the accuracy of your criticism. While going over my notes nearly a year ago I caught the same mistake. A correction should probably have been mentioned in BE. On page 2 of Issue #6 I said, "Mary appears to have been from the house of Judah since her cousin Elizabeth (Luke 1:36) was a daughter of Aaron, i.e. from the house of Judah (Luke 1:5). I should have said that, "Mary appears to have been from the house of Levi since her cousin Elizabeth was the daughter of Aaron, i.e., from the house of Levi." This correction strengthens my prior argument, of course, since David is in the messianic line while the house of Levi is not. If Mary had been from the house of Judah as I stated in Issue #6, Luke's genealogy could have been that of Mary and the common apologetic defense could be valid. Joseph would be descended from the house of David (Matt. 1); Mary could be descended from Judah (Luke 3), and both would be in the messianic lineage.

Letter #347 Continues (Part b)

I think another thing you will find interesting is that if you will count the generations in Matthew and the generations in Luke, you will see they are not the same in number. If one genealogy is of Joseph and the other of Mary it would mean that one of them was several hundred years older than the other one. If both are of Joseph, then we have a tremendous difficulty with the actual age of Joseph and where he came from. I agree with you. They are supposed to be the genealogy of Joseph, as it clearly says so, and yet they are in contradiction to one another.

I never tire of looking for ammunition against the fundamentalists. I was a Jehovah's Witness for 20 years and they ruined a major part of my life. I'm still separated from my daughter and three grandchildren because they cannot speak to an "apostate" such as myself....

Do you have plans of publishing your newsletter into a book? It is very much needed. I find your comments to be the best I've found in print. I would love to find someone who would be willing to publish a Bible with B.E.'s comments in the footnotes. I was horrified by the comments of (name omitted--Ed.). I think that the agnostic and the atheist had better get biblically educated or we don't stand a chance against the militant fundamentalist movement that is fast taking over the government of the United States. I've been asked to speak at our local atheist group. I'm not sure what I would say, but one of the members thought that my knowledge of biblical errors would be very interesting to his group. I guess all atheists don't think alike either, as this group certainly doesn't sound like the (name omitted again-Ed.) kind. Keep up the good work. Your knowledge of the Bible is fantastic.

Editor's Response to Letter #347 (Part b)

As of now we have undertaken no program to put BE into a book; however, that could very well become a future undertaking. In reality, anyone who has read all 86 issues of BE has, in effect, read a book. We hope your speech will be a resounding success and offer you all the contents of BE as a resource. We'd appreciate knowing the outcome.

Dear Dennis....it is our unwritten practice to capitalize "Bible" when it is a specific bible, like the King James Bible, NIV Bible, etc., just as we do with word "dictionary." We say Webster's Dictionary, but generically we say "look it up in the dictionary." The word "Christian," of course, is a different matter. It is originally a title/name, so we would also capitalize the adjective as well as the noun. "He is a Christian," and "Is that what you call a Christian act?" (Hope you don't mind me rewriting the latter a little, Dan--Ed.). But we don't normally capitalize the adjective "biblical," so we feel that the generic "bible" should be left alone. It is not a title or name--it just means "book," which we would not capitalize either. The reason believers capitalize Bible is for reverence. It is like calling a priest "Father." He is not my father, but if he can get me to call him that he is halfway home to credibility and respect. (I usually call them "Mister)." It's not that I would never respect a priest, but he should have to earn the respect before I will automatically assign it.

It is not freethinkers who are guilty of un-capitalizing the word "bible." It is believers who are guilty of capitalizing it. Just like when they capitalize the pronouns of deity: The Lord, He is great.

Anyway, this is no matter to fight about. We have FFRF members who agree with you that we should stay with "Bible." Let's just say that this is a matter of Personal Style.

When people say, "The Bible says..." I want to ask, "Which bible?" There are so many versions in so many languages. Even the "originals" boast of varying versions in Greek and Hebrew. However, if we have established that we are referring, for example, to the Revised Standard Version, then we can capitalize the word "Bible," since it is a specific title of a published (and possibly copyrighted) book.

Editor's Response to Letter #348

Dear Dan. Your comments are well-taken. First, let me say that I can't conceive of a situation in which I would ever call a priest "father." You are correct. He isn't my father and use of the term provides an aura of respect that must be earned. Moreover, it is patently patronizing and self-demeaning. Second, I agree with your comments concerning the word "biblical." It shouldn't be capitalized and I only do so in the subcaption of BE to emphasize the subject under discussion. It is capitalized purely for dramatic effect and is not meant to be grammatically accurate. Third, but I do have a bit of a problem with the word "bible." Let me first say that I certainly don't capitalize it out of any respect. That's the furthest thing from my mind. But, as I mentioned before, I do capitalize proper nouns and that's the only reason I capitalize "bible." Proper nouns are defined in my English Handbook as "the name of a particular person, place, or thing" and the narrative goes on to say "that it should be capitalized." God, Heaven, Hell, Lord, Devil, and Satan are proper nouns because they are the names of particular persons and places, be they mythical or otherwise, and for that reason, alone, I capitalize them. The question then becomes whether or not one should capitalize the word "bible." Is the word "bible" generic like the words "almanac," "dictionary," "thesaurus," or is it a proper noun. I'm having some difficulty with your phrase, "which bible." I have worked on the principle that there is only one bible but many versions. And because there are many versions, it's difficult to know what it says. I can understand one asking, "which version" but "which bible" is another matter. "Dictionary" is not a title but a generic term because there is no one book claiming to be "the dictionary" or an accurate copy of "the original dictionary." One dictionary is considered to be as valid as another even though they are drastically different. As is true with the word "dictionary," you feel the word "bible" is not a title or a name. I have never thought of it that way. Perhaps you are correct. If so, I stand corrected.

I'd be interested in knowing, however, what you would do with such words as "the pope," "the trinity," "the atonement," "the resurrection," "the crucifixion," "the ascension," "the koran," "the catholic church," "hell," "heaven," "satan," "the devil," "jesus," "paul," "mohammed," "luther," "calvin," and so on ad infinitum. They are all proper nouns. As you probably know, some freethinkers refuse to capitalize any of them because they are religious in nature. Yet, Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny, the Tooth Fairy, and Little Red Riding Hood are as mythical as most religious concepts and are capitalized. My question then becomes: How are we going to avoid the appearance of being prejudiced and answer our critics when they say, "You capitalized this proper noun; why didn't you capitalize that one? Is it because of your anti-religious bias?"

In any event, I agree with you; capitalization of nouns is not worth creating dissension among friends and personal style will probably prevail.

Letter #349 from PK of Grand Forks, North Dakota

Hi Dennis. Your analysis of letter #344 Part e, the "How can an infinite series of whole numbers have a finite total?" question was excellent! I'm a math major and I loved the part about Zeno's paradox! That was an excellent move too. I've studied these paradoxes too....

Letter #350 in Freethought News and Views of Freethought Forum in San Antonio, Texas

(We would like to thank the Freethought Forum for putting the following advertisement in their newsletter gratis--ED.).

Biblical Errancy should be the "Bible" for those who are interested in debunking the Bible. This monthly consists of six jam-packed pages of biblical criticism and debate with actual believers. For this latter feature alone (in which the editor addresses the counter-arguments of literal Bible believers), the periodical is worth the paltry $9.00 subscription rate....

IMPORTANT NOTE: We are not only tired of watching religious nonsense dominate radio and TV stations but weary from requesting media appearances which are rarely granted or repeated. Consequently, we have decided to start creating our own programs for public access television. However, before investing the requisite funds, we'd like to have the names of everyone who would be willing to donate their time to circulate tapes, schedule and play them on a regular basis on their local public access channel, and pay postage. If enough people contact us to say they are willing to donate their services for an extended period, this could be our next major project. For your aid we have a list of every public access channel in the U.S., especially those in your area. Incidentally, we now have an answering machine for those wish to call at any time.

COMMENTARY

Throughout the history of this publication we have often quoted many well-known individuals to buttress points made in BE. And, although many quotations have been provided, our reservoir has by no means been exhausted. For that reason we have decided to periodically digress from our normal format and provide a topical arrangement of the most poignant comments we have gleaned from years of extensive research. So many piercing comments have been culled that we would be remiss if the best available were not listed. What follows are those in our repertoire which have never appeared in BE but certainly should be presented to all concerned. Topics will be discussed alphabetically and will occasionally refer not only to material outside the Bible but humorous observations by shrewd satirists. Although the following quotations are cited, that does not necessarily mean we concur with every detail of that which is presented.

QUOTATIONS

ADAM--"Adam blamed Eve, Eve blamed the serpent and the serpent didn't have a leg to stand on." Anonymous

AGNOSTIC--"I am an agnostic; I do not pretend to know what many ignorant men are sure of."
Clarence Darrow

ATONEMENT--This doctrine is the consummation of two outrages--forgiving one crime and committing another." Heresies and Heretics, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 235

BIBLE--"The real oppressor, enslaver, and corrupter of the people is the Bible." Some Mistakes of Moses, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 43

"Theology is not what we know about God, but what we do not know about Nature. In order to increase our respect for the Bible, it became necessary for the priests to exalt and extol that book, and at the same time to decry and belittle the reasoning powers of man. The whole power of the pulpit has been used for hundreds of years to destroy the confidence of man in himself--to induce him to distrust his own powers of thought, to believe that he was wholly unable to decide any question for himself, and that all human virtue consists in faith and obedience. The church has said, 'Believe and obey!' If you reason you will become an unbeliever, and unbelievers will be lost. If you disobey, you will do so through vain pride and curiosity, and will, like Adam and Eve, be thrust from Paradise forever! For my part, I care nothing for what the church says, except in so far as it accords with my reason; and the Bible is nothing to me, only in so far as it agrees with what I think or know." Ibid., Vol. 2, p. 53

"It is said that from Mount Sinai God gave, amid thunderings and lightnings, ten commandments for the guidance of mankind; and yet among them is not found--"THOU SHALT BELIEVE THE BIBLE" Ibid., p. 120.

"It has lost power in the proportion that man has gained knowledge." Ibid., p. 242.

"The OT describes the hell of the past, and the New the hell of the future." Some Reasons Why, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 334.

"The inspired Bible has been and is the greatest curse of Christendom, and will so remain as long as it is held to be inspired." Superstition, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 4, p. 335.

"...but the Bible is such a book of lies and contradictions there is no knowing which part to believe or whether any...." The Age of Reason, T. Paine, p. 104.

"...and this manner of speaking of the Almighty, as one would speak of a man, is consistent with nothing but the stupidity of the Bible." Ibid., p. 134.

"...the Bible and the Testament are impositions upon the world;...the fall of man, the account of Jesus Christ being the Son of God, and of his dying to appease the wrath of God, and of salvation by that strange means, are all fabulous inventions, dishonorable to the wisdom and power of the Almighty;...." Ibid., p. 167.

"Whenever we read the obscene stories, the voluptuous debaucheries, the cruel and torturous executions, the unrelenting vindictiveness, with which more than half the Bible is filled, it would be more consistent that we called it the word of a demon, than the Word of God. It is a history of wickedness, that has served to corrupt and brutalize mankind...." Ibid., p. 34.

"But when I see throughout the greatest part of this book, the Bible, scarcely anything but a history of the grossest vices, and a collection of the most paltry and contemptible tales, I cannot dishonor my Creator by calling it by his name." Ibid., p. 38.

"They will now find that I have furnished myself with a Bible and Testament; and I can say also that I have found them to be much worse books than I had conceived. If I have erred in any thing, in the former part of the Age of Reason, it has been by speaking better of some parts than they deserved." Ibid., p. 88.

"Great objects inspire great thoughts; great munificence excites great gratitude; but the grovelling tales and doctrines of the Bible...are fit only to excite contempt.... the stupid Bible of the church, that teaches man nothing...." Ibid., p. 192.

"...the stupid texts of the Bible...from which, be the talents of the preacher what they may, only stupid sermons can be preached." Ibid., p. 194.

"I...am satisfied that the Bible is fabulous." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 8, p. 328.

"For my own part, my belief in the perfection of the Deity will not permit me to believe that a book so manifestly obscure, disorderly, and contradictory can be His work." Ibid., p. 330

"The obscene and vulgar stories in the Bible are as repugnant to our ideas of the purity of a Divine Being, as the horrid cruelties and murders it ascribes to Him are repugnant to our ideas of His justice." Ibid., Vol. 9, p. 84.

"That God cannot lie, is no advantage to your argument, because it is no proof that priests can not, or that the Bible does not." Ibid., p. 134.

"...therefore we say that a lying Spirit has been in the mouth of the writers of the books of the Bible." Ibid., p. 158.

"One would think that a system loaded with such gross and vulgar absurdities as Scripture religion is could never have obtained credit; yet we have seen what priestcraft and fanaticism can do, and credulity believe." Ibid., p. 200.

"On the other hand, the Bible contains much that is relevant today, like Noah taking 40 days to find a place to park." Curtis McDougall

"If we found in any other book pretending to give a system of religion, the falsehoods, falsifications, contradictions, and absurdities, which are to be met with in almost every page of the Old and New Testament, all the priests of the present day, who supposed themselves capable, would triumphantly show their skill in criticism, and cry it down as a most glaring imposition. But since the books in question belong to their own trade and profession, they, or at least many of them, seek to stifle every inquiry into them and abuse those who have the honesty and the courage to do it." Ibid., p. 271-272.

"...we must be compelled to hold this doctrine to be false, and the old and new law called the Old and the New Testament, to be impositions, fables and forgeries." Ibid., p. 282.

"Compare all this ribaldry, blasphemously called the Word of God, with the Almighty power that created the universe, and whose eternal wisdom directs and governs all its mighty movements, and we shall be at a loss to find a name sufficiently contemptible for it." Ibid., p. 285.

"Nonsense ought to be treated as nonsense wherever it be found, and had this been done in the rational manner it ought to have been done, instead of intimating and mincing the matter as has been too much the case, the nonsense and false doctrine of the Bible, with all the aid that priestcraft can give, could never have stood their ground against the divine reason that God has given to man." Ibid., p. 312.

"As to the book called the Bible, it is blasphemy to call it the word of God. It is a book of lies and contradictions, and a history of bad times and bad men. There are but a few good characters in the whole book." Ibid., p. 296.

"...the indiscriminate judgments upon men, women, and children, with which this lying book, the Bible, is crowded...." Age of Reason, Paine, p. 150.

"The NT, compared with the Old, is like a farce of one act...." Ibid., p. 153.

"It is not a God, just and good, but a devil, under the name of God, that the Bible describes." Theological Works of Paine, p. 163.

"The best cure for admiring the Bible is to read it." Anonymous

"The hardest thing to believe about the Bible is that there were only two jackasses in the ark." Anonymous

"When I think of all the harm the Bible has done, I despair of ever writing anything to equal it." Oscar Wilde

"The dogma of the infallibility of the Bible is no more self-evident than is that of the infallibility of the popes. Thomas Huxley

"The Christian Bible is a drug store. It's contents remain the same but the medical practice changes. For 1,800 years these changes were slight--scarcely noticeable.... The dull and ignorant physician day and night, and all the days and all the nights, drenched his patient with vast and hideous doses of the most repulsive drugs to be found in the store's stock.... He kept him religion sick for eighteen centuries, and allowed him not a well day during all that time." Mark Twain and the Three R's, Ed. by Maxwell Geismar, p. 107.

And lastly, "Historical investigations have revealed to us the origin and growth of the Bible. We know that by this name we designate a collection of writings as radically unlike in origin, character and contents, as if the Nibelungen Lied, Mirabeau's speeches, Heine's love poems and a manual of zoology had been printed and mixed up promiscuously, and then bound into one volume. We find collected in this book the superstitious beliefs of the ancient inhabitants of Palestine, with indistinct echoes of Indian and Persian fables, mistaken imitations of Egyptian theories, and customs, historical chronicles as dry as they are unreliable, and miscellaneous poems, amatory, human and Jewish-national which are rarely distinguished by beauties of the highest order, but frequently by superfluity of expression, coarseness, bad taste, and genuine Oriental sensuality. As a literary monument the Bible is of much later origin than the Vedas; as a work of literary value it is surpassed by everything written in the last two thousand years by authors even of the second rank, and to compare it seriously with the productions of Homer, Sophocles, Dante, Shakespeare or Goethe would require a fanaticized mind that had entirely lost its power of judgment. Its conception of the universe is childish, and its morality revolting, as revealed in the malicious vengeance attributed to God in the OT and in the New, the parable of the laborers of the eleventh hour and the episodes of Mary Magdalene and the woman taken in adultery." Max Nordau

Letter #351 from PK of Grand Forks, North Dakota

Dear Dennis. In Issue #82 you responded to letter #331 and said that "God" with a small "g" could lead one to believe that Christians believe in more than one God, a concept which could either include or exclude a supreme God. A "god" or "God" is a supernatural being. Christians believe in a trinity, Satan, angels, devils, demons, witches, warlocks, etc., all of which are supernatural beings. Some brands of Christianity teach that everyone has a guardian angel. That would add tens of billions of Gods to the list. There is no question that Christianity is polytheistic. A blend of older polytheisms evolved into Christianity. Only the names have been changed to protect the guilty. Christians do not capitalize the "gods" of other religions, "supreme" or not. I suggest that the most fair thing to do is to not capitalize any of them. It is also the most accurate.

Editor's Response to Letter #351

Dear PK. I don't see how belief in angels, devils, demons, witches, and Satan would "add billions of Gods to the list." Perhaps I just missed your point. Are you saying all of these beings are gods? We agree that Christianity is polytheistic, but that arises primarily because of belief in the Trinity rather than a belief in a multitude of supernatural beings.

If you do not wish to capitalize words such as god, devil, satan, etc., I have no objection. You have many compatriots in this regard who have a poignant argument. By capitalizing a word, you not only give it a degree of respectability that might be unwarranted but give the implicit impression that the word has some degree of credibility. I, however, have always believed that one should capitalize proper nouns not only because it is grammatically correct but also because it fosters easier reading. At least it does for me. But I'm not going to go out of my way to criticize those who contend god, heaven, hell, and satan, for example, should not be capitalized.

Letter #352 from Kenneth Bonnell, Box 65706, Los Angeles, California 90065 (Part a)

Dear Dennis. You will probably be flacked about Item 115 in Issue #84. [BE stated that John 5:37's contention that "Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape" is shown to be false by many biblical verses--ED.]. John 5:37 is in the context of a long discourse addressed to "the Jews who sought to kill him" (5:18-19) because he did work on the Sabbath. It is not one of those "no one has seen God" (John 1:18) statements that appear elsewhere....

Editor's Response to Letter #352 (Part a)

Dear Ken. I understand your concern and took note of that fact when that issue was written. But, how do you know his comments were only intended for the people being directly addressed at that time? This kind of problem is very common throughout the Bible because of nonexistent biblical guidelines. If I followed your train of thought, I could say that the Sermon on the Mount or the Sermon on the Plain only applied to the people being addressed at that time. Many commandments, rules, moralisms, and statutes are laid down in the Bible. How do you know when they apply only to the person or people being addressed as opposed to mankind in general? When Jesus said "Ye" in John 5:37 I felt this applied to all of humanity since most of his comprehensive statements beginning with "Ye" apply to mankind in general. If I erred, then large parts of the Bible become nebulous and open to interpretation as expediency dictates. When rules, laws, and moral precepts are laid down, how do you know to whom they are directed?

Letter #352 Continues (Part b)

[In Item 117 of the same issue we stated that in Matt 10:9-10 Jesus told his followers not to take many things for their journey, including staffs, while the parallel account in Mark 6:8-9 says they were to take nothing on their journey except a staff. I said "Jesus can't seem to decide whether or not his followers should take staffs on their journeys--ED].

Your evaluation in item 117 is wrong in attributing the inconsistency between parallel passages of Mark 6:8-9 and Matthew 10:9-10 to a fault in Jesus. It is the fault rather of the writer of Matthew who grew sloppy in his adapting of Mark to tell his own story. Not just no staff, but also no shoes/sandals!....Luke's parallel (9:3) shows dependence on both Matthew, first, and then on Mark, for he deprives the disciples also of staff, bag, bread, and money, with no mention of shoes/sandals, but not two tunics. Luke's omission of shoes/sandals probably indicates he recognized the contradiction between his two sources!

Editor's Response to Letter #352 (Part b)

Your analysis shows why BE avoids lower or textual criticism, Ken. First, you are making the common assumption that Matthew and Luke took their material from Mark. How do you know that Mark was the original source? That's never been proven. It's a common speculation that is disputed by some scholars. Second, how do you know the writer of Matthew erred? Perhaps the writer of Matthew was correct and the writer of Mark erred? If they wrote independently and neither copied from the other, that is quite possible. Third, how do you know that Luke used Matthew and Mark as sources? As I said many issues ago, when you start debating history and how the Canon evolved historically, you invariably come down to a matter of which sources you want to believe. Neither of us was there, so we have to take some one's word for what occurred. The question then becomes, whose word are you going to take.

[In item 119 of the same issue BE quoted Mark 12:26 and criticised Jesus for referring to the Book of Moses. BE said, "It may be called the 'Book of Moses' but the commentaries entitled Moses and the Pentateuch in Issues 19 and 20 clearly show Moses was not the author--ED].

Jesus can be faulted for accepting uncritically the tradition that Moses had written the Pentateuch, but it seems to have been generally accepted among both Jews and Christians up until the last couple of centuries and is still accepted by fundamentalists even now. He wasn't into scriptural criticism!....

Those compilations of radio talk show opportunities seem awfully damn expensive. I'll keep an eye open.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #352 (Part c)

Now Ken! Remember, Jesus is God and God knows everything! He knows Moses did not write the Torah. Yet, he clearly called it the "Book of Moses." Even though it was accepted as the book of Moses by Christians and Jews, as well as fundamentalists today, the fact remains that he knows better. Since when does God follow something he knows is false because it is "generally accepted" by human beings? He does not have to be "into scriptural criticism" to know that he is making a false statement.

Even though we may disagree occasionally, Ken, you have always been a loyal reader of BE and I'm confident you will try to assist me in finding the books I requested several months ago.

Letter #353 from Ed McCartney, P.O. Box 770024, Lakewood, Ohio 44107-0011 (Part a)

Dear Dennis. A while ago I sent you a letter dated July 23, 1989 A.D. I see that some of that appeared as letter #328 in BE issue number 82 on page 3. [In letter #328 in Issue #82 Ed said, "You are correct in saying that Joseph was not Jesus' physical father. However,...did you forget Romans 1:3 which says, 'Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh'"--ED.] There were some inaccuracies in your reprint of what I said compared to what I wrote. Did you notice the punctuation in my letter after I wrote "...Romans 1:3..."? My sentence ended with a question mark (?). Please look now at your publication. If you are going to edit something you ought to show it for what it is. In your publication it appears as though what follows "...Romans 1:3..." has been attributed to me. The punctuation at the end of the third verse of Romans chapter one is not a period. Now please notice your publication.

Other than your errors I appreciate what was accurately printed of my letter.

Editor's Response to Letter #353 (Part a)

Dear Ed. You say there are "inaccuracies" and "errors" in my publication while listing only one, allegedly. Please be specific and don't engage in unsupported generalizations. Second, your assertion that Rom. 1:3 was unjustifiably attributed to you is inaccurate. One need only read your comments on page 3 of Issue 82 to see that you are using Rom. 1:3 as a defense. You are employing the same kind of tactic that is so prominent in apologetic literature. Third, if you will read Rom. 1:3 in the KJV, you will notice it does not end either in a period or a question mark but a semicolon.

Letter #353 Concludes (Part b)

'...need I remind you of my nine page letter to you dated Nov. 28, 1988'? Did you receive that letter? If not, you may request a copy from me. If you did, did you read it?

Editor's Response to Letter #353 (Part b)

Yes, I read your letter, Ed, and it was not put in BE for several reasons. First, unfortunately, your explanations tend to ramble. You use 30 words to say what can be said in 10. Second, readers do not want to read a lot of petty details that tend to repeat and overlap. Third, your sentences often require too much grammatical and syntactical alteration for the sake of coherency and if I engage in such activities I'll open myself up to the kind of criticism you made in (Part a). Fourth, your writing just doesn't flow smoothly enough to retain the reader's attention. I often feel like I am translating more than reading. You asked if I read your 9-page letter. I'd be interested in asking you the same question. Did you proofread it? Incidentally, anytime you cite a biblical verse you should quote the verse verbatim. We have always done so fully cognizant of the fact that most people are simply not going to look them up and it's unrealistic to expect otherwise. An obvious example is your insertion of Prov. 20:12 at the bottom of your current letter.

If my answer seems rather direct, it's because you implied I avoided your letter because I had no response. In truth, it's because our readership would have fallen asleep or yawned too much. A good standard to follow for those wishing to have their letters published is that the latter should be brief, non-repetitive, coherent, poignant, and substantiated. In all modesty, I must say that our general adherence to this policy accounts for the fact that there is more useful information packed into 6 pages of BE than is 16 pages of others. But we cooperate with nearly all.

Letter #354 from RB of Grand Junction, Colorado

Dear Dennis. Here's my check for a 2-year renewal to BE, the finest, most scholarly publication of its kind I know about. A couple of questions: (1) How large is BE's circulation? (2) Are most of your readers, as I suspect, nonbelievers such as I? It might be interesting to find out by including a simple survey form in a forthcoming issue asking readers to classify themselves as atheist, Christian, uncommitted, etc., and return the form to you for tally and report (as if you didn't have enough to do). Just a thought. Keep up the excellent (and hard) work.

Editor's Response to Letter #354

Dear RB. The circulation of BE is in the hundreds and I would say, off hand, that most of BE's readers lie in the arena of those who critically examine the Bible. I'm not sure what category that would put them in and many would probably have difficulty classifying themselves. BE's readers are on such a wide spectrum that labels are almost useless. Those calling themselves Christian/humanists are anti-Christian to many, while those calling themselves Christian/fundamentalists are non-Christian bigots to others. How's that for a political answer!

Letter #355 from JM of San Diego, California

Dear Dennis. I just received your shipment of the pamphlets and back issues of BE I ordered. They are all excellent, especially the "tracts." Just the right size, too!....I look forward to promoting your pamphlets as part of my college freethought group's literature. I wish you well in your continuing efforts. Yours for sanity.

COMMENTARY

This month's commentary will continue the alphabetical listing of pertinent quotations from prominent individuals begun in the prior issue.

QUOTATIONS

(Part 2)

BLASPHEMY--"Blasphemy is an epithet bestowed by superstition upon common sense."
Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 49.

"There is this strange thing about the history of theology--nobody has ever been charged with blasphemy who thought God bad. For instance, it never would have excited any theologian if a man had insisted that God would finally damn everybody. Nearly all heresy has consisted in making God better than the majority in the churches thought him to be." Ibid., Vol. 7, p. 468-69.

"The book called the Bible has been voted by men, and decreed by human laws to be the word of God; and the disbelief of this is called blasphemy." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine.

"...if the prosecution cannot prove the Bible to be the word of God, the charge of blasphemy is visionary and groundless." Ibid., p. 184.

CALVINISM--Calvin founded a little theocracy, modeled after the Old Testament, and succeeded in erecting the most detestable government that ever existed, except the one from which it was copied." Heretics and Heresies, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 226.

"In other words, Calvin was as near like the God of the OT as his health permitted." Ibid., p. 227.

Calvinism is the belief "(1) That there are three Gods (2) That good works, or the love of our neighbor are nothing (3) That faith is every thing, and the more incomprehensible the proposition, the more merit in its faith (4) That reason in religion is of unlawful use (5) That God, from the beginning, elected certain individuals to be saved, and certain others to be damned; and that no crimes of the former can damn them; no virtues of the latter save." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. IX.

CANON'S FORMATION--"The Bible has been received by the protestants on the authority of the church of Rome, and on no other authority. It is she that has said it is the word of God." Ibid., p. 364.

"None of those books have the appearance of being written by the persons whose names they bear, neither do we know who the authors were. They come to us on no other authority than the church of Rome, which the Protestant Priests...call the Whore of Babylon." Ibid., p. 365.

"...the bishop who has answered me has been obliged to acknowledge the fact, that the Books that compose the NT, were voted by yeas and nays to be the word of God, as you now vote a law, by the Popish councils of Nicea and Laodocia, about 1,450 years ago." Ibid. p. 325.

"I admit that books were voted in and out, and that the Bible was finally formed in accordance with a vote...." Interviews, Ingersoll's Works, Vol 5, p. 300.

CATHOLICISM--"At the bottom of the ladder is Catholicism, and at the top is Science." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 203

"But the Roman Catholic Church is the enemy of intellectual liberty. It is the enemy of investigation. It is the enemy of free schools. That church always has been, always will be, the enemy of freedom. It works in the dark. When in the minority it is humility itself--when in power it is the impersonation of arrogance. In weakness it crawls--in power it stands erect, and compels its victims to fall upon their faces. The most dangerous institution in this world, so far as the intellectual liberty of man is concerned, is the Roman Catholic Church." Ibid., Vol. 8, p. 441

"That church teaches us that we can make God happy by being miserable ourselves;...." Ibid., Vol. 1, p. 492

"It may be said that Luther and Comte endeavored to reform the Catholic Church. Both were mistaken, because the only reformation of which that church is capable is destruction. It is a mass of superstition." Ibid., Vol. 11, p. 277

"...if all the bones of all the victims of the Catholic Church could be gathered together, a monument higher than all the pyramids would rise...." Ibid. Vol. 1, p. 497

"Thousands of volumes could not contain the crimes of the Catholic Church. They could not contain even the names of her victims." Ibid. p. 497

"You will notice that in all disputes between Christians since the birth of the Church, Rome has always favored the doctrine which most completely subjugated the human mind and annihilated reason." Voltaire CHRISTIANITY--"Of all the systems of religion that ever were invented, there is none more derogatory to the Almighty, more unedifying to man, more repugnant to reason, and more contradictory in itself, than this thing called Christianity. Too absurd for belief, too impossible to convince, and too inconsistent for practice,... As an engine of power, it serves the purpose of despotism; and as a means of wealth, the avarice of priests;...." Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 190.

"The Christian religion is derogatory to the Creator in all its articles. It puts the Creator in an inferior point of view, and places the Christian Devil above him." The Theological Works of T. Paine, p. 330

"But there are times when men have serious thoughts, and it is at such times, when they begin to think, that they begin to doubt the truth of the Christian religion; and well they may, for it is too fanciful and too full of conjecture, inconsistency, improbability and irrationality to afford consolation to the thoughtful man. His reason revolts against his creed." The Life and Works of T. Paine, Vol. 9, p. 109.

"It is impossible to reason upon things not comprehensible by reason; and therefore, if you keep to your text, which priests seldom do,...you must admit a religion to which reason can apply, and this certainly is not the Christian religion. There is not an article in the Christian religion that is cognizable by reason." Ibid., p. 131-132

"Christianity has made the rape of the human body a crime, but not the rape of the human mind."
Anonymous

"Christianity cannot live in peace with any other form of faith. If that religion be true, there is but one savior, one inspired book, and but one little narrow grassgrown path that leads to heaven. Such a religion is necessarily uncompromising, unreasoning, aggressive and insolent." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. VII

"My objection to Christianity is that it is infinitely cruel, infinitely selfish, and I might add infinitely absurd." Ibid., Vol. 7, p. 201

"The memory of my own suffering has prevented me from ever shadowing one young soul with the superstition of the Christian religion." Elizabeth Cady Stanton

"A Christian is a man who feels repentance on Sunday for what he did on Saturday and is going to do on Monday." Thomas Ybarra

CHURCH--"Take from the church the miraculous, the supernatural, the incomprehensible, the unreasonable, the impossible, the unknowable, and the absurd, and nothing but a vacuum remains." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 285

"What church is an asylum for a persecuted truth?" Ibid., p. 320

"Lighthouses are more helpful than churches." Ben Franklin

"The observances of the church concerning feasts and fasts are tolerably well kept, since the rich keep the feasts and the poor the fasts." Sidney Smith

CHURCH FATHERS--"Nothing can exceed the credulity of the early fathers, unless it may be their ignorance. They believed everything that was miraculous. They believed everything except the truth.... They revelled in the mishapen and the repulsive. They did not think it wrong to swear falsely in a good cause. They interpolated, forged, and changed the records to suit themselves, for the sake of Christ. They quoted from persons who never wrote. They misrepresented those who had written, and their evidence is absolutely worthless. They were ignorant, credulous, mendacious, fanatical, pious, unreasonable, bigoted, hypocritical, and for the most part insane." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 273

"The great religious historian, Eusebius, ingenuously remarks that in his history he carefully omitted whatever tended to discredit the church, and that he piously magnified all that conduced to her glory." Ibid., Vol. 1, p. 293

CHURCH/STATE--"Give the church a place in the Constitution, let her touch once more the sword of power, and the priceless fruit of all ages will turn to ashes on the lips of men." Ibid., p. 203

"The pious denounce the secular schools as godless. They should be. The sciences are all secular, all godless." Ibid., Vol. 2, p. 477

"Nothing could be more dangerous to the existence of this Republic than to introduce religion into politics." Ibid., Vol. 5, p. 305

"Let there be no property untaxed. When you fail to tax any species of property, you increase the tax of other people owning the rest. To that extent, you unite church and state. You compel the Infidel to support the Catholic. I do not want to support the Catholic Church." Ibid., Vol. 12, p. 243

"The government of the United States is not in any sense founded upon the Christian religion." John Adams

"I do not believe than any type of religion should ever be introduced into the public schools of the United States." Thomas Edison

"By the efforts of these infidels, the name of God was left out of the Constitution of the United States. They knew that if an infinite being was put in, no room would be left for the people. They knew that if any church was made the mistress of the state, that mistress, like all others, would corrupt, weaken and destroy." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 3, p. 382

"But I am mistaken in speaking of a Christian republic; the terms are mutually exclusive. Christianity preaches only servitude and dependence. Its spirit is so favorable to tyranny that it always profits by such a regime. True Christians are made to be slaves, and they know it and do not mind: this short life counts for too little in their eyes." Rousseau

"The day that this country ceases to be free for irreligion it will cease to be free for religion--except for the sect that can win political power." Supreme Court Justice, Robert Jackson

"The moment the colonies began to deny the rights of the king they suspected the power of the priest. In digging down to find an excuse for fighting George the Third, they unwittingly undermined the church." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 3, p. 381

"All national institutions of churches, whether Jewish, Christian or Turkish, appear to me no other than human inventions set up to terrify and enslave mankind, and monopolize power and profit." The Age of Reason by T. Paine, p. 22

"All religions are founded on the fears of the many and the craftiness of the few." Anonymous

"Every national church or religion has established itself by pretending some special mission from God,...as if the way to God was not open to every man alike." Ibid., p. 23

"We ought therefore to suspect that a great mass of information respecting the Bible, and the introduction of it into the world, has been suppressed by the united tyranny of Church and State, for the purpose of keeping people in ignorance, and which ought to be known." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 143-144

"Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the church and state forever separate." Ulysses S. Grant

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #356 from TF of Webster, Wisconsin (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I wish to comment on your comparison in Issue 83 of Mark 2:25-26 and 1 Sam. 21:1,6; 22:20 in which you state, "The OT shows that Abiathar did not give David the shewbread but it was the son of the priest, Ahimelech, who did, and David came alone, not with others." Firstly, although 1 Sam. 21:1,6 does indicate Ahimelech gave David the shewbread, Mark 2:25-26 does not contradict this by stating that it was Abiathar, nor does it implicate anybody else. It merely states that David "...went into the house of God...and did eat the shewbread..."

Editor's Response to Letter #356 (Part a)

Dear TF. One need only read the narrative from 1 Sam. 21:1 through 21:6 to see that only one priest is mentioned, and that priest is Ahimelech. Nowhere does the narrative imply, much less state, that Abiathar was a priest, high or otherwise, as Mark says. Second, verses 21:1 and 21:2 show David approaching and talking with "Ahimelech the priest." Verses 4 and 5 show David talking with that same priest and verse 6 shows that priest giving David the shewbread. So it was Ahimelech who fed David, not Abiathar. Third, perhaps you wish to say that Mark 2:25-26 only states that David went into the house of Abiathar the high priest but was fed by Ahimelech, i.e., he was not fed by Abiathar? But Mark 2:26 NASB says, "...and he gave it also to those who were with him." Why are you applying the pronoun "he" to Ahimelech rather than Abiathar, since Abiathar is mentioned in verse 26 while Ahimelech is not?

Letter #356 Continues (Part b)

Secondly, although Mark 2:25-26 does indicate that there were traveling companions with David, it does not state that they approached the high priest with David. This does not contradict the OT writer who also indicates that there were men traveling with David (1 Sam. 21:4-5; 22:6), since he explains that David "directed the young men to a certain place" (1 Sam. 21:2) while he approached the high priest alone (1 Sam. 21:1).

Editor's Response to Letter #356 (Part b)

You might want to reread Mark 2:25-26, TF. It says, "Have you never read what David did...and they that were with him? How he went into the house of God...and did eat the shewbread..." By using the word "and," the text shows that whatever David did those that were with him did also. The OT, on the other hand, says that David came alone which contradicts Mark 2:25-26.

Letter #356 Continues (Part c)

Thirdly, 1 Sam. 21:1,6; 22:20 does not state that the son of the priest gave David the shewbread, nor that Abiathar was the father of Ahimelech. The OT writer indicates that Ahimelech was the high priest (1 Sam. 21:1), he gave David the shewbread (1 Sam. 21:6), and his son was Abiathar (1 Sam. 22:20).

Editor's Response to Letter #356 (Part c)

On this point you are correct, TF. I should have said, "it was the father of the priest, Ahimelech, who did" since Ahimelech was Abiathar's father, not his son.

Letter #356 Concludes (Part d)

It should be noted that a valid contradiction does exist between these passages. The "infallible" writer of Mark is obviously confused as to whether it was Ahimelech or Abiathar who was high priest when David ate the shewbread. His transposition of these two men is understandable in light of the fact that the "infallible" OT writers were equally as confused on this matter. They could not agree if Ahimelech was the father and Abiathar was the son (1 Sam. 22:20; 23:6, 30:7) or if, conversely, Abiathar was the father and Ahimelech was the son (2 Sam. 8:17; 1 Chron. 18:16; 24:6). Incidentally, at one point they even misspelled Ahimelech as Abimelech (1 Chron. 18:16). So please don't feel too bad about your misspelled words which were innumerable by BWF (Letter #340), since apparently the biblical God who inspired these "infallible" writers also has occasional trouble with spelling.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #356 (Part d)

We are in agreement, TF. Biblical translators and copyists certainly weren't models of perfection.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #357 from FT of Canton, Illinois

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Your November issue of Biblical Errancy arrived yesterday....I noticed that you referred to John 7:38 ("He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water") as a "scripture quotation" that no one has ever been able to find in the OT. Being a new subscriber, I don't know what other examples like this you may have pointed out in back issues. I'm sure you must be familiar with Matthew 2:23 where it was alleged that Joseph took his family to Nazareth in Galilee in order to fulfill what had been "spoken through the prophets," that Jesus "should be called a Nazarene." Of course, there is no such statement in the Old Testament; it never even mentions Nazareth or Nazarenes. One of my favorite non-existent quotations is Luke 24:46 where Jesus said it had been written that "the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day. The Apostle Paul also said in 1 Cor. 15:4 that the scriptures had predicted the Messiah's resurrection on "the third day." Inerrancy believers have tried to twist the story of the "suffering servant of Yahweh" in Isaiah 53 into a prophecy of Jesus' crucifixion, but of course they are hard pressed to find prophecies of his resurrection, since a Hebrew concept of even an afterlife didn't develop until late in its history. By all means, there is nothing in the Old Testament that can be construed into a prophecy as specific as Jesus' claim that it had been predicted he would be raised on the third day. I have found these references a quick way to silence an inerrancy believer who tries to defend his belief with, "What about the amazing prophecy fulfillments?"

Another passage that will back them into a corner is Acts 13:29 where Paul in his speech in Antioch of Pisidia said of those who crucified Jesus, "And when they had fulfilled all things that were written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a tomb." But if all things that were written of him had been fulfilled when they took him down from the tree (cross), then nothing that happened after that could have been something that had been written of him. His resurrection, of course, allegedly occurred after he had been taken down from the tree. Hence, his resurrection could not have been written about. I look forward to receiving future issues of Biblical Errancy....

Letter #358 from Dan Barker of the FFRF, P.O. Box 750, Madison, Wisconsin 53701

Dear Dennis. Happy December! I thought you would enjoy seeing this revealing bit of bias on the part of Jim White, President of Alpha and Omega Ministries with whom you have corresponded in BE. On page 7 in the October 1989 issue of his publication he says, "...we must never interpret Scripture so as to make the Word contradictory to itself." Imagine! Here is a bald-faced admission that the possibility of errancy is rejected a priori. We rationalists are constantly accused of a built-in bias against revelation, against the supernatural, etc. Yet who is it that has the closed mind? A truly open-minded person would be open to both possibilities: inerrancy and errancy.

Suppose I were to write: "We must never interpret Scripture so as to make it agree with itself." Wouldn't the fundamentalists howl?

I debated John Warwick Montgomery (a prominent Christian apologetic author--ED.) on Birmingham radio this month. He was mean. Rather than sticking to the point, he kept trying to attack me. "Do you have a doctorate in history, like I do?" And so on. He does the old hat trick of interpreting literally where it pleases him, and interpreting metaphorically where it pleases, without any real criteria for telling the difference. I pointed out that we may as well interpret the WHOLE THING metaphorically, for that matter, including the concept of "God." The radio talkshow was on a Christian station, so most of the phone calls were hostile to my position. Still, I think the show went a long way towards educating the general public. I got a couple of letters from freethinking listeners. (One fellow stood in a phone booth for 70 minutes waiting to get on the show, but somehow they never got around to him.)

Letter #359 from CWT of Van Nuys, California

Dear Dennis. I just received 25 back issues and just couldn't stop reading them. It's really amazing how apologists can continue to claim the inerrancy of the Bible in spite of the overwhelming evidence which contradicts their claim. I want to order more back copies but I must tell you how I found out about your publication.

Like many of your followers, I, too, was convinced that the Christian god was real. However, there were always questions which my logic and reason could not simply dismiss with "blind faith." I began to seriously doubt the authenticity of the Bible so I started to read various books on the subject of religion. It seemed the more I read, the harder it was to believe in the Bible. I had to admit that I was mainly seeking books which dealt with disproving the Bible. One reason for this was the books I usually found in libraries that were pro-Christianity were generally under the rationale of "we are right because the Bible says we are right." I felt I needed to get a good apologetic book in order to give the other side a fair hearing. I went to a Christian bookstore called The Living Room. I purchased three of their better apologetic books. One of the books, Answers to Tough Questions, was the biggest insult to logic and reason I ever read. However, in one of the books was a little flyer of yours representing a page marker. I originally thought your letter would deal with attempting to prove the accuracy of the Bible, seeing as I obtained it in a Christian bookstore. I sent away for the sample copy in order to see if your logic was any better than what I had read. When I received your sample letter, I was pleasantly surprised to find such a logical, rational, detailed attack on the Bible. How ironic that I would find out about your letter from the Christian world!....

Editor's Response to Letter #359

Dear CWT. I always enjoy hearing stories of this nature and whoever placed the marker in the book deserves our gratitude. That's the kind of commitment we love to see in BE's supporters. Because that person placed one of our leaflets in a Christian book, your attitude toward the Bible has been correctly and materially effected.

COMMENTARY

Before returning to the Bible, per se, one more listing of relevant quotations is in order. We'll provide additional observations from notable figures later.

QUOTATIONS

(Part 3)

CLERGY--"Priests should first prove facts, and deduce doctrines from them afterwards. But instead of this they assume everything and prove nothing." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 86

"As priestcraft was always the enemy of knowledge, because priestcraft supports itself by keeping people in delusion and ignorance,...." Ibid., p. 106

"Nothing can be more contrary to religion and the clergy than reason and common sense."
Voltaire

"A clergyman is a man who undertakes the management of our spiritual affairs as a method of bettering his temporal ones." Anonymous

"Most of the clergy are, or seem to be, utterly incapable of discussing anything in a fair and catholic spirit. They appeal, not to reason, but to prejudice; not to facts, but to passages of Scripture. They can conceive of no goodness, of no spiritual exaltation beyond the horizon of their creed." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 259

"I found that the clergy did not understand their own book." Ibid., p. 459

"It is from the influence of this vice, hypocrisy, that we see so many church-and-meeting-going professors and pretenders to religion so full of trick and deceit in their dealings, and so loose in the performance of their engagements that they are not to be trusted further than the laws of the country will bind them. Morality has no hold on their minds, no restraint on their actions." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 207

"There is no opinion so absurd that a preacher would not express it." Anonymous

"Some clergymen are so heavenly-minded that they are of no earthly use." Anonymous

"These orthodox ministers do not add to the sum of knowledge. They produce nothing. They live upon alms. They hate laughter and joy. They officiate at weddings, sprinkle water upon babes, and utter meaningless words and barren promises above the dead. They laugh at the agony of unbelievers, mock at their tears, and of their sorrows make a jest. There are some notable exceptions.... The congregations will finally get tired of hearing about the patriarchs and saints, the miracles and wonders, and will insist upon knowing something about the men and women of our day, and the accomplishments and discoveries of our time. They will finally insist upon knowing how to escape the evils of this world instead of the next." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 23

"A tack points heavenward when it causes the most mischief. It has many human imitations."
Texas Siftings

"I abuse the priests, indeed, who have so much abused the pure and holy doctrines of their master, and who have laid me under no obligation of reticence as to the tricks of their trade. ...the artificial structures they have erected, to make them the instruments of wealth, power, and preeminence to themselves...." Jefferson's Works by H.A. Washington, Vol. 6, p. 412-413

COMMUNION--"A man who believes that he eats his God we do not call mad; yet, a man who says he is Jesus Christ, we call mad." Helvetius

CONTRADICTIONS--"The case, however, is that the Bible will not bear examination in any part of it, which it would do if it was the Word of God. Those who most believe it are those who know least about it, and priests always take care to keep the inconsistent and contradictory parts out of sight." The Theological Works of T. Paine, p. 340

"For my own part, my belief in the perfection of the Deity will not permit me to believe, that a book so manifestly obscure, disorderly, and contradictory, can be his work. I can write a better book myself." Ibid., p. 180

"Is it not a species of blasphemy to call the NT revealed religion, when we see in it such contradictions and absurdities." Ibid., p. 249

"There is not in all the pulpits ingenuity enough to harmonize these ignorant and stupid contradictions." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 4, p. 276

"These contradictions are gross and palpable and demonstrate that the NT is not inspired, and that many of its statements must be false." Ibid., p. 276

CREATION--"...these two chapters (Gen. 1 and 2--ED.), instead of containing, as has been believed, one continuous account of the creation, written by Moses, contain two different and contradictory stories of a creation, made by two different persons, and written in two different styles of expression." The Theological Works of T. Paine, p. 171-172

"That there are two stories is as visible to the eye, when attended to, as that there are two chapters, and that they have been written by different persons, nobody knows by whom. If this then is the strange condition the beginning of the Bible is in, it leads to a just suspicion, that the other parts are no better, and consequently, it becomes every man's duty to examine the case." Ibid., p. 174

"If the Bible is mistaken in telling us where we came from, how can we trust it to tell us where we are going?" Anonymous

CRUCIFIXION--"Why then do you talk of reason, or refer to it, since your religion has nothing to do with reason, nor reason with that? You tell people...that they must have faith! Faith in what? You ought to know that before the mind can have faith in anything, it must either know it as a fact, or see cause to believe it on the probability of that kind of evidence that is cognizable by reason. But your religion is not within either of these cases; for, in the first place, you cannot support it by reason, not only because it is not cognizable by reason, but because it is contrary to reason. What reason can there be in supposing or believing that God put Himself to death to satisfy Himself...." The Life and Works of T. Paine, Vol. 9, p. 132.

"Suppose, however, that God did give this law to the Jews, and did tell them that whenever a man preached a heresy, or proposed to worship any other God that they should kill him; and suppose that afterward this same God took upon himself flesh, and came to this very chosen people and taught a different religion, and that thereupon the Jews crucified him; I ask you, did he not reap exactly what he had sown? What right would this God have to complain of a crucifixion suffered in accordance with his own command?" Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 259

DEVIL--"If the Bible is true the Devil exists. There is no escape from this. If the Devil does not exist the Bible is not true. There is no escape from this." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 4, p. 399

"To deny the existence of these evil spirits, to deny the existence of the Devil, is to deny the truth of the NT. To deny the existence of these imps of darkness is to contradict the words of Jesus Christ.... If we give up the belief in devils, we must give up the inspiration of the Old and New Testament. We must give up the divinity of Christ. To deny the existence of evil spirits is to utterly destroy the foundation of Christianity.... If all the accounts in the NT of casting out devils are false, what part of the Blessed Book is true?.... If the Devil does not exist, the Christian creeds all crumble,...." Ibid., Vol. 4, p. 313 "...why should this Devil, in another world, torment sinners, who are his friends, to please God, his enemy?" Ibid., p. 399-400

"In nearly all the theologies, mythologies and religions, the devils have been much more humane and merciful than the gods. No devil ever gave one of his generals an order to kill children and to rip open the bodies of pregnant women." Ibid., Vol. 1, p. 17-18

"There is nothing in this planet's history, biblical or otherwise, or knowledge from any source, that remotely alludes to the possibility that the poor devil ever stole a pin or killed a living soul. In fact, he never killed a fly, or hurt a single individual, man or beast. He never lost his temper, told a lie, or even cursed a teeny little curse. Who in all history can lay claim to such a pious and noble existence." Anonymous

EVIL--"...Karl Barth has called the fall of man an impossible possibility.... Barth's clever statement of impossible possibility is not the remark of a stupid man.... Barth uses startling language to underline the rational difficulty, in explaining the fall.... It is not my intent to be the devil's advocate or to lend assistance to those who reject Christianity.... I am not trying to give the skeptic more ammunition than he may already have. I am trying to make it clear that the problem is a severe one and one for which I have no adequate solution. I do not know how evil could originate with a good God. I am baffled by it, and it remains a troublesome mystery to me.... I cannot solve the dilemma of evil...." Reason to Believe, by Apologist R.C. Sproul, p. 125-126

EZEKIEL--"With Voltaire, I say that any one who admires Ezekiel should be compelled to dine with him." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 3, p. 482

FAITH--"Nothing is so firmly believed as that which is least known." Montaigne

"How many things served us yesterday for articles of faith, which today are fables for us!" Montaigne

"It is certain because it is impossible." Anonymous

FALL--"...there is not a book, chapter, or verse of the Bible, from the time Moses is said to have written the book of Genesis, to the book of Malachi, the last book in the Bible, including a space of more than a thousand years, in which there is any mention made of this thing, nor is it so much as alluded to." The Theological Works of T. Paine, p. 277

FLOOD--"Volumes might be written upon the infinite absurdity of this most incredible, wicked and foolish of all fables contained in that repository of the impossible, called the Bible. To me it is a matter of amazement, that it ever was for a moment believed by any intelligent human being. Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 155

FUNDAMENTALIST--"A fundamentalist seems to know everything about religion, and nothing about anything else." Anonymous

GOD--"It is impossible for me to conceive of a character more utterly detestable than that of the Hebrew god." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 237

"It is impossible to conceive of a more thoroughly despicable, hateful, and arrogant being, than the Jewish god." Ibid., p. 239

"These people's God has shown them by a million acts that he respects none of the Bible's statutes. He breaks every one of them himself, adultery and all." Mark Twain and the Three R's by Maxwell Geismar, p. 124

"The Beatitudes and the chapters from Numbers and Deuteronomy ought always to be read from the pulpit together; then the congregation would get an all-round view of Our Father in Heaven. Yet not in a single instance have I ever known a clergyman to do this." Ibid., p. 153

"If you want to see man at his worst, observe what he does to his fellow men in the name of God." Anonymous

"Those who have loved God most have loved men least." Ingersoll

"The idea that writers of the OT had of a God was boisterous, contemptible, and vulgar. They make Him the Mars of the Jews, the fighting God of Israel, the conjuring God of their priests and prophets. They tell us as many fables of Him as the Greeks told of Hercules." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 201

"In fact there are many things God cannot do. Reason tells us He cannot be God and not be God at the same time and in the same relationship. God cannot make a square circle or a two-sided triangle. Triangles by definition have three sides." Reason to Believe by Apologist R.C. Sproul, p. 122

Letter #360 from SL of Kansas City, Kansas

I saw your address and wanted to tell you that you are dead wrong about the Bible. You obviously haven't read the Bible and are unaware of the teachings and TRUTHS held within. I have not seen your literature, but if you want me to be more specific in my criticism, send something to me.

Editor's Response to Letter #360

This letter doesn't really merit a response, SL. The only true statement you made is that "I have not seen your literature." That's abundantly evident and I have probably read the Bible more than you. This is the kind of mentality that is so widespread in the superstitious community. Is it any wonder that millions find religion so repugnant? Yes, I would like for you to be more specific and would be willing to send any materials you wish to purchase.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #361 from Terry Fisk, Vice-President of For Accountability in Religion (FAIR), 5105 Indianola Ave., Minneapolis, Minnesota 55424

Dear Mr. McKinsey. FAIR is a non-profit organization which contends that Americans have the constitutional right to believe or not to believe whatever they choose, but no religion has the right to deliberately deceive its members or the general public.

In recent years, the Fundamentalists have been very successful in persuading people to believe that the Bible is inerrant. It is unfortunate that people have not been able to make rational, informed decisions in this matter, and this is because Fundamentalists have withheld from them the fact that the Bible contains numerous contradictions and errors.

FAIR wishes to compliment you on the fine job you are doing of exposing the errancy of the Bible, and we would like to work together with you, since we share this common goal.

Editor's Response to Letter #361

Dear Terry. We are always open to offers of assistance and your's is most welcome. However, our policy has always been that until we see some of your literature or learn more about your activities, entry of your letter into BE can't be interpreted as an endorsement. There are too many individuals, organizations, and publications running around that are in a world of their own. We have learned from past experience, unfortunately, that fundamentalists don't have a corner on unreality. Just because someone has rejected Christianity in general and the Bible in particular does not mean they haven't adopted something equally ridiculous.

Letter #362 from FG of East Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis. Enclosed is my renewal for Biblical Errancy. James White (the founder and president of Alpha and Omega Ministries), whose motto is "Love demands truth, truth demands love," is still calling you an atheist in his catalogue although you've never said so. I'm sure a lawyer could help you sue him to oblivion. He deserves it. In the interest of sanity you should consider it.

P.S. White's motto is ironic because he understands neither truth nor love. What he has is medieval intolerance and fanaticism.

Editor's Response to Letter #362

Dear FG. Lawsuits are not my style and contribute little to an intelligent dialogue. James is one of those misguided individuals who has a good mind but, unfortunately, has been indoctrinated from birth. The Christians got to him first; that's the real tragedy that I see played out so often, even among my own acquaintances. Good minds gone awry because of childhood inculcations that are hard to expunge, even by those seeking to do so themselves. All of which proves that getting there first is 90% of the battle. People rarely use conscious processes to abandon what they have been taught from childhood. Most individuals just don't think that critically or deeply but merely accept what they have been told. Let me control all aspects of a person's environment from birth to death and I will make the most intelligent mind believe that people can rise from the dead, sticks can turn into snakes, donkeys can talk, and the sun can stand still. I contact several people on a regular basis who have reasonably good minds that can usually sort through the kinds of problems we all encounter on a daily basis. But when it comes to religion in general and the Bible in particular, they are wholly unable to critically examine even their most rudimentary beliefs. Yes, it's truly tragic!

Letter #363 from RA of Norfolk, Virginia

Dear Dennis. About the word "pagan" in Letter #339 and your response to it in the November, 1989 issue of BE. In my teaching of the Greek and Roman writers and other creative artists before the Christian era (and even with Milton), I stress to my students that the word "pagan" has no pejorative connotations. This "neutrality" for the word is especially important in handling Greek and Roman myth.... I do not use pagan as synonymous with heathen and infidel, though of course religionists often do. I am always amused that commentators on Dante usually refer to Vergil as a "righteous pagan" as though it were an oxymoron.

Editor's Response to Letter #363

Dear RA. Although what you say is technically true, I'm still inclined to believe that it would be tactically unwise to allow words such as pagan, infidel, unbeliever, heretic, nonbeliever, skeptic, and heathen to be applied to yourself without correction. Religionists are the unbelievers, the nonbelievers, the skeptics, because they do not believe in science and rationality but in faith, hope, and superstition. Having turned their backs on reason and proof, they are the heretics and infidels. They have displayed little fidelity to reason, logic, evidence and common sense. For most people, words such as "heathen" and "pagan" apply to those of a lower order of education and advancement. In effect, they apply words to their opponents that rightfully adhere to themselves.

Letter #364 from Anonymous of Florida

Dear Dennis. Your August, 1989 issue #80 brings to light an interesting situation. You quoted, on page 4, Luke 18:22, which says that a Christian, to be saved, must distribute all his wealth to the poor and become poor himself. Likewise, later on in Luke 18:25 is the familiar statement that it would be easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven.

These quotes make it very obvious that Christianity is a socialist religion. To be a good Christian, and not be a hypocrite, a Christian must believe in socialism or communism. Yet many Christians in non-red countries, such as the USA, are right-wing in their political and economic beliefs! The Moral Majority, for example has always supported the most right-wing of Republicans, including Reagan!

If you show these conservative Christians that they're following an ultra-liberal God and a socialist religion, that may make them realize that Christianity isn't the true religion after all. They may realize that atheism, not Christianity, is the right way for them to go. There is no way for the majority of Christians to reconcile their political and economic beliefs with their Christian religion, without double-think and hypocrisy. Maybe Jesus did return a second time after all -- as Karl Marx.

Letter #365 from JCP of Meriden, Conn.

Dear Dennis. I enjoy your little newsletter very much. You are doing what no one has done since Ingersoll.

Letter #366 from Dan Barker of the Freedom From Religion Foundation, P. O. Box 750, Madison, Wisconsin 53701

Dear Dennis. ...I am going to be on Sally Jessy Raphael again. The taping is Tuesday. I thought about you, but the topic is the psychology of deconversion, and she doesn't want anything intellectual. (I suppose that is a sort of backward compliment to me? I thought I was intellectual.)

I do know that the producer is considering doing a show in the future on atheist/agnostic families raising children in a world dominated by religion. Does that topic relate to you at all? I remember you have at least one child--does he have any difficulties at school or with friends regarding religion?

I think BE is just great. I hope it can be arranged for all your work to be preserved properly.

P.S. Our next annual convention will be in October in Ann Arbor, Michigan. We have not made all the plans, but I am thinking about doing something on the bible, maybe a panel like the last time you were here. In any event, you might want to consider setting up a B.E. table again.

Editor's Response to Letter #366

Dear Dan. It's always a pleasure to hear from you. So Sally doesn't want anything intellectual! I guess you realize you have only confirmed a sad fact of life. Talk shows are geared to the Lowest Common Denominator and maximum ratings. You have no doubt hit upon a major cause for our limited exposure in the media. People don't want to hear the truth; they want to hear what makes them feel good. They don't want to think or be informed; they want to be entertained. They don't want their beliefs questioned; they want them confirmed. A crucial aspect of this publication is that it doesn't tell people what they want to hear; it tells them what they ought to hear.

As far as my children are concerned, I did have a conflict with my son's day-care center. They were having all the children say grace at lunch. When I heard him quoting the words in our car, I talked to the manager the next day. She consulted with her superiors in another city and the practice was dropped several days later.

Ann Arbor is much closer to us and I'd be glad to set up a table or appear on a panel again. Thanks for the invitation and your compliment of BE!

EDITOR'S NOTE: We have occasionally been accused of being overzealous and vituperative in our criticisms of the Bible. By now it's apparent to all concerned that our comments are considerably more restrained than those of men such as Paine, Ingersoll, and Voltaire. And you thought BE was rough!! We're just pussy cats.

For the first time in the history of BE we will offer audio tapes for sale if there is enough demand. So, would you please let us know if you'd be interested in buying them. Don't send money, yet. We will send out a list of what is available when the time is ripe. They will include speeches by myself as well as my appearances and debates on the radio. Tapes will be approximately an hour long each and cost $5 each. We will pay the postage. Unless stated otherwise, tapes will not be edited; so you will hear exactly what the radio audience heard, including the commercials which might consume 10 minutes or more. They'd be good to send to others, since many people don't read much any more. The audio/visual medium has become the prime method by which to spread our ideas.

COMMENTARY

CHRONOLOGICAL CONTRADICTIONS--One of the more interesting variety of contradictions is highlighted in the gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. When first introduced to the Bible years ago, we were immediately struck not only by the terribly repetitious nature of the gospels but the number of obvious contradictions with respect to their sequence of events. In The Life of Jesus the biblical scholar, Marcello Craveri, provided a thoroughly researched exposition of these inconsistencies by using a chart entitled Correlation of the Gospels. Although the number available are considerably in excess of what can be published in BE, the following examples are particularly flagrant and easily verified. (1) In Matthew 4:5-8 the Devil took Jesus to the pinnacle and then to the mountain, while in Luke 4:5-9 he took him to the mountain and then the pinnacle. (2) In Matt. 21:12-19 Jesus cleansed the temple and later cursed the fig tree, while in Mark 11:13-15 he cursed the fig tree and later cleansed the temple. (3) In Matt. 8:28-32 Jesus caused devils to enter swine and later called Levi (Matt. 9:9), while in Luke 5:27-28 Jesus called Levi and later caused devils to enter swine (Luke 8:26-33). (4) In Mark 1:12-13 Jesus was tempted in the wilderness and later John was arrested (Mark 6:17-18), while in Luke 3:19-20 John was arrested and later Jesus was tempted in the wilderness (Luke 4:1-13). (5) In Mark 2:13-17 Matthew was called by Jesus and later the tempest was calmed (Mark 4:35-40), while in Matt. 8:18, 23-27 the tempest was calmed and later Matthew was called (Matt. 9:9-17). (6) In Matt. 8:1-4 Jesus cleansed the leper and later healed Peter's mother-in-law (Matt. 8:14-15), while in Mark 1:29-31 Jesus healed Peter's mother-in-law and later cleansed the leper (Mark 1:40-44). (7) In Matt. 8:28-32 Jesus caused devils to enter swine and later appointed the 12 apostles (Matt. 10:1-4), while in Mark 3:13-19 Jesus appointed the 12 apostles and later caused the devils to enter the swine (Mark 5:1-13). (8) In Luke 3:19-20 John the Baptist was arrested and later Jesus healed Peter's mother-in-law (Luke 4:38-39), while in Mark 1:29-31 Jesus healed Peter's mother-in-law and later John was arrested (Mark 6:17-18). (9) In Luke 3:19-20 John was arrested and later the storm was calmed (Luke 8:22-25), while in Mark 4:35-40 the storm was calmed and later John the Baptist was arrested (Mark 6:17-18). (10) In Luke 5:27-32 Levi (Matthew) was called and later the storm was calmed (Luke 8:22-25), while in Matt. 8:18-27 the storm was calmed and later Levi was called (Matt. 9:9-17). (11) In Matt. 8:14-15 Jesus cured Simon's mother-in-law and later John the Baptist was arrested (Matt. 14:3-5), while in Luke 3:19-20 John was arrested and later Jesus cured Simon's mother-in-law (Luke 4:38-39). (12) In Luke 21:1-11 Jesus entered Jerusalem and later purified the Temple (Luke 21:12-16), while in John 2:13-25 and 3:1-12 he purified the Temple and later entered Jerusalem (John 12:12-16). (13) In Matt. 8:28-32 Jesus caused devils to enter swine and later paid tribute to John the Baptist (Matt. 11:11-14), while in Luke 7:24-28 Jesus paid tribute to John the Baptist and later caused devils to enter swine (Luke 8:26-33). (14) In Luke 22:14-21 Jesus said after supper that the hand of his betrayer was with him on the table, while in Matt. 26:21 and Mark 14:18 Jesus made this statement during supper. (15) And lastly, in Matt. 8:23-27 Jesus calmed the storm and later appointed the 12 apostles (Matt. 10:1-4), while in Mark 3:13-19 Jesus appointed the 12 apostles and later calmed the storm (Mark 4:35-41). Although only 15 examples of chronological contradictions were given, literally scores are available. Their very existence accounts for the fact that no one has ever been able to write one long continuous narrative encompassing all four gospels. It can't be done without taking liberties with the text by adding and subtracting as expediency dictates in direct defiance of Rev. 22. The common defense that these events occurred more than once is without merit since many of them are unique.

IMMINENCE--One of the most important commitments made by Jesus during his earthly ministry was his promise to return during the lifetime of his contemporaries. That pledge was clearly enunciated in Point 152 on page 2 of our 86th Issue and is further corroborated by Luke 21:31-32 ("So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled"). Paul, himself, showed in 1 Thess. 4:15 ("For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep") that he was among those who awaited the imminent return of Christ. Yet, as the history of that era clearly shows, all was for nought. No messiah appeared. To explain the obviously inaccurate nature of the predictions referred to earlier, many of the Bible's current defenders rationalize the situation by alleging his return was to actually occur at some indeterminate time in the future. But they conveniently ignore the fact that a sizable number of verses clearly show the return of the messiah was imminent. Even if not in the era of Paul and the Apostles, it was certainly just around the corner. Matt. 4:17 ("Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand"), Matt. 10:7 ("The kingdom of heaven is at hand"), Mark 1:15 ("The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand"), 1 Cor. 7:29 ("But this I say, brethren, the time is short"), Heb. 10:37 ("For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry"), James 5:8 ("Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh"), 1 Peter 4:7 ("But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer"), Rev. 1:1 ("The Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave to him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass"), Rev. 3:11, 22:7 ("Behold, I come quickly"), Rev. 22:12 ("Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be"), and Rev. 22:20 ("Surely I come quickly") make that point crystal clear. The NT repeatedly says the messiah was to return in a very short time. Yet, mankind has waited for nearly 2,000 years and nothing has occurred. By no stretch of the imagination can that be considered "coming quickly." The most common apologetic defense to this rather embarrassing disappointment is a quick resort to 2 Peter 3:8 ("But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day"). Of course, they subtly ignore the fact that the promise was made to mankind and would only have made sense to them if it were made in terms they understood. If verses are to be interpreted in "God's terms," then most of the Bible's chronology becomes incomprehensible and open to allegorical imaginings. If every statement in which the word "day" appears can be interpreted as 1,000 years and every "1,000 years" can be interpreted as one day, chaos is a foregone conclusion. One can't help but note that biblicists constantly resort to allegorical interpretations when no other exit is available. The major difference between a fundamentalist and a religious liberal with respect to the Bible is the degree to which allegory is employed. It's used by all and only expediency and politics determine the degree of utilization. It is, indeed, unfortunate that millions of people still cling to the forlorn hope that somehow a messiah will arise to extract them from their predicament. How many years (2,000, 10,000, 100,000) will it take for them to finally say, "We can only conclude that we are the victims of a cruel hoax"?

MIRACLES--Biblicists rely upon miracles, such as the Resurrection, to prove the Bible in general and Jesus in particular are God's instruments on earth. The ability to do miracles lends divinity not only to the Book but certain individuals. But they conveniently avoid mentioning the fact that miracles are not to be used to prove anything of that nature for two major reasons. First, the Bible repeatedly says that false christs, false prophets and Satan, himself, can perform miracles. This is clearly shown by Matt. 24:23-24 ("Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect"), 2 Thess. 2:8-9 NIV ("And then the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus will overthrow with the breath of his mouth and destroy by the splendor of his coming. The coming of the lawless one will be in accordance with the work of Satan displayed in all kinds of counterfeit miracles, signs and wonders...."), Rev. 13:11, 13-14 RSV ("Then I saw another beast which rose out of the earth.... It works great signs, even making fire come down from heaven to earth in the sight of men; and by the signs which it is allowed to work in the presence of the beast, it deceives those who dwell on earth...."), Rev. 16:14 ("For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles...."), and Rev. 19:20 ("And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast...."). So, if a miracle were to occur (sic), one would have no way to test the credentials of the perpetrator. In fact, the Bible warns believers to be wary of precisely those who can perform miracles. In Deut. 13:1-3 ("If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, And the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; Thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul") believers may be tested by being introduced to someone who performs miracles, while expounding heretical doctrines such as beliefs in other gods. Second, many biblical figures performed miracles. In Ex. 7:10-11 Aaron cast down his rod before the Pharaoh and his servants and it became a serpent. But the Pharaoh called his wise men, the sorcerers and the magicians of Egypt, and they did likewise with their enchantments. Although Aaron covered Egypt with frogs (Ex. 8:6-7) and turned the Nile River into blood (Ex. 7:21-22), the magicians again followed suit. Joshua successfully ordered the sun and moon to stand still (Joshua 10:12-13); Stephen performed miracles (Acts 6:8); the apostles performed miracles (Acts 5:12); Isaiah brought the shadow of the sun 10 degrees backward (2 Kings 20:11); Peter healed a lame man (Acts 3:6-7), cured the sick (Acts 5:15-16 RSV) and raised Tabitha from the dead (Acts 9:36-37, 40-41), and Paul raised Eutychus from the dead (Acts 20:9-10). In essence, since many people performed miracles on a routine basis, the ability to do miraculous acts certainly could not be used to substantiate the credentials of anyone, let alone a messiah.

EXCLUSIVISM--Christianity in general and the Bible in particular clearly state that there is only one door to salvation and that door is Jesus Christ. Jesus, and Jesus alone, provides the only path to heaven. He, himself, implied as much in John 10:9 ("I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved") and John 10:7 ("I am the door of the sheep"). Because exclusivity is such a crucial aspect in Christian theology and accounts for so much intolerance being directed toward those denying the divinity of Jesus, one should be fully cognizant of those verses upon which Christians rely to substantiate their supposition. Undoubtedly the most important are: JOHN 14:6 ("I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me"), JOHN 3:36 ("He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him"), JOHN 3:18 ("He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already"), ACTS 16:30-31 ("What must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house"), JOHN 8:24 ("...ye shall die in your sins: for if you believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins"), ACTS 4:12 ("Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved"), 1 JOHN 5:12 ("He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life"), and 1 COR. 3:11 ("For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ"). JOHN 6:28-29 ("What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered.... This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent"). With verses like these is it any wonder that Christianity is intolerant, close-minded, and discriminatory. When you have the only answer, you certainly aren't going to be inclined to listen to those in disagreement.

Letter #367 from CT of Van Nuys, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I just received your sample letter and was both surprised and delighted. My surprise came because your flyer was in a book I purchased at a Christian bookstore. In fact, I thought your letter was an apologetic letter. Like you, I find it hard to believe some of the arguments Christians use to justify the Bible and their faith....I am delighted to see a publication devoted to confronting the ridiculous Christian claims for faith....

Editor's Response to Letter #367

Dear CT. Your comments are most appreciated and I am quite delighted. Delighted to see that one of my supporters was putting our pamphlets in the "literature" of the opposition. Incidentally, I find it hard to believe not just "some of the arguments Christians use to justify the Bible" but nearly all of them.

Letter #368 from SHF of York, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis. This is primarily to let you know that I subscribe to every free-thought publication that I know exists--but yours is the only one that arrives regularly and on time! All the others are late or published erratically. One thing I would like to see in B.E. is some criticism of the Bible based on rational and/or scientific facts in addition to or instead of the Bible contradictions alone. Many Bible pounders don't recognize these errors and contradictions. How about some modern 20th century criticisms?

Editor's Response to Letter #368

Dear SHF. Others have made the same observation with respect to our punctuality; you are by no means alone. In large measure, our nearly flawless record in meeting deadlines can be attributed to my wife's efficiency and precision. She is a senior accountant who's contribution to the nuts and bolts daily operation of this undertaking is of crucial importance. The amount of paperwork and record keeping involved in issuing a periodical on a regular basis is more than I originally envisioned. It's certainly beyond what I would want to do on my own.

As far as 20th century criticisms are concerned, I think that if you were to go on the radio to confront biblicists with your approach, you would discover that we are quite up-to-date. You might want to try your technique and see what happens. Your tactic of bringing facts to the Bible to disprove the Bible was addressed many issues ago in a speech we gave before the American Rationalist Convention.

Letter #369 from GD of Portland, Oregon

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Regarding your recent request for interested parties to assist in the distribution of tapes for your proposed video project, I would be more than glad to help out. I was involved in the production of a local atheist show, The Tom and Lanny Show. I was the sound man.... Portland Cable Access was thrilled to have us, since they were inundated with various religious shows and welcomed anything different.... I'd be more than willing to run the tapes over. With any luck I can get it on the Public Access Network, which interconnects all the local cable systems, although there's probably a waiting list for a decent time. There's a lot of work involved in producing one of these shows. I hope you know what you're letting yourself in for! Anyway, let me know what you decide and keep up the good work. P.S. If you get the chance, can you give me any information about the Freethought Forum you mentioned last February?

Editor's Response to Letter 369

Dear GD. Thanks for volunteering and we will put your name on our list. Others have volunteered, also, but we still need more if the project is going to get-off-the-ground. We mainly need people who will take the tapes to their local public access channel on a regular basis. We'll do the rest. We are used to work; that's no problem. But we have to have people who are willing to make arrangements with their local public access stations. That we can't do and assistance is mandatory. As far as the Freethought Forum is concerned, we don't know any more than what was published in the February issue.

Letter #370 from SO of Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Dennis. As it is now six or seven years that I have been enjoying Biblical Errancy, it occurred to me that there might be considerable interest in holding a national convention or conference of some sort through which the readers of BE could get to know one another and relate experiences, exchange ideas, and plan strategies. The tone of many of the letters you publish suggests a degree of enthusiasm among your readers such that attendance at a convention would be seriously considered by many. Such a meeting might serve as a springboard for those of us who are interested in spreading the ideas of BE to a wider audience but lack some of the practical experience that you and others have. By coordinating our efforts we might have a greater impact on society at large than by acting solely as individual messengers. In a future issue of BE you might canvass the readership as to their interest in holding such a convention. If the interest seems to be there, things could then move to the planning stage.

Editor's Response to Letter #370

Dear SO. You have come up with a good suggestion that we have been considering for some time. At the present time, however, we are still trying to create a series of programs for public access cablevision. That's our current concern. As soon as we have a sufficient number of volunteers willing to play and circulate our programs in their areas [more volunteers are still needed], we can move on to other ambitious projects. But for now, we are preoccupied with getting the message out. We don't want to spread ourselves too thin. Conducting a survey at this stage of the game would be premature.

Letter #371 from JW of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. I want to take this opportunity to tell you what an influence you have been in a way not relating to the Bible. From reading your monthly missives, I have observed that you are about the most thorough person I have ever seen. You continue to go deeper into the woods than anyone else. I am retired from the FBI, and in my life, I have had occasions to delve into matters as deeply as I thought was necessary. However, I never knew what deep was until I discovered you. You have been an inspiration to me for thoroughness. Last year, I was conducting an investigation for a lawyer who had sued a city and some of its police officers for illegally arresting and detaining an individual in jail for several weeks without proper cause. After taking my lessons from you, I dug into this case with a fury. The result was that when I was finished, I knew more than anybody on earth about the case, and I was able to dig up enough information to prove one of the police officers was lying through her teeth. Needless to say, I destroyed this officer by exposing her lies. From seeing your scholarly research, applied with your total thoroughness, I am now a better investigator. Thanks Dennis! I now put this thoroughness into my other endeavors. For example, I am studying French, and I am driving everyone crazy with my knowledge of grammar. It has helped me make straight "A's." One other thing in which I was almost as good as you, is that words have meaning, and you pay exact attention to what has been said or written. You do not let a "play on words" confound you, and neither do I. People should say exactly what they mean, and mean exactly what they say. However, too many people are just repeating the words of others and have very little independent thought of their own. You have changed my life, and I am the better for it.

Editor's Response to Letter #371

Dear JW. To say your letter is gratifying is an understatement. Of all the complimentary correspondence we have received over the years, your's is certainly among the most heartwarming. If there is any reward in this endeavor, it's in knowing we have influenced someone for the better.

Letter #372 from Steven Overholt, Editor of THE FRONTLINE, Box 154, San Juan Capistrano, California 92693

Dear Mr. McKinsey. With the assistance of an honest Christian who believes that the truth should be told, I am sending you the following correspondence from April, 1989. I hope you milk this letter for all that it is worth. The letter is from David R. Andersen, a research assistant at the Christian Research Institute in Southern California, to an inquirer. The inquirer asked: "Dear Sir. I noticed in a humanist publication called "Biblical Errancy" that CRI has debated Dennis McKinsey. I noticed that there was communication in July, 1986 and Sept. 1987. What was the result of this debate? What questions were exchanged? What is CRI's assessment of "Biblical Errancy"? What information do you have about this humanist publication? How would it compare to Madalyn O'Hair's or Paul Kurtz's groups? Thank you for your courtesy and I hope to hear from you soon."

and CRI's Anderson responded:

Dear JR. Thank you for your letter to the Christian Research Institute. We appreciate your interest in this ministry and your taking time to write. Regarding your question about Dennis McKinsey; he is not in the same camp as Madalyn O'Hair or Paul Kurtz. We did carry on correspondence with him at one time concerning his views of the Bible. He simply would not listen to the answers that scholars, such as Gleason Archer, have given for the supposed contradictions of the Bible. Thus, because he would not even consider a scholarly approach to the issues, we discontinued our correspondence. I do hope that this information is of some help. If we can be of any further assistance, please feel free to contact us again.

The "He simply would not listen" fiction can only impress readers who are kept, in my view, at a "safe" distance from your periodical. It would seem to me that, since CRI would have a reputation to uphold as a watchdog group (NOT as an agency for disinformation), they might want to apologize both to your readers and to those proponents of Christian beliefs who uphold higher standards. Indeed, a promise from CRI to cease and desist from similar misrepresentation seems to me in order.

Editor's Response to Letter #372

Dear Steven. I'm certainly glad you sent me this letter, since its author obviously did not intend for it to fall into my hands. I've often wondered what nonsense CRI is peddling to justify their abrupt termination of our correspondence. The above explanation is a classic example of Christian duplicity and has absolutely nothing to do with the truth. CRI and I both know that one of their spokesmen, Robert Bowman Jr., not only subscribed to BE several years ago but engaged me in critical dialogue over several months. Since it was becoming increasingly evident to any objective observer that he was coming out on the short end of the stick, he allowed his subscription to lapse. I suspect that Walter Martin, the Director of CRI, read our correspondence, decided that Bowman was in over his head, and directed him to bow out, unless he ceased using stationery with the CRI letterhead.

In any event, I can assure you I have never run from an apologist in my entire life and certainly don't intend to start. Not only would I listen to their answers but I am still patiently waiting for a response to mine. I not only considered a scholarly approach, but I am still waiting for one from them. If my memory serves me correctly, I can't think of any reference in their writings to what Gleason Archer said about biblical contradictions. If there is anything I have learned over the years, it is that apologists for superstition are some of the most deceptive, hypocritical, elusive, unctuous critters that ever walked. Penning them down is often like nailing jello to the wall. As is true with all confidence men, being up-front with people is not their trademark. A con game is just that, a con game.

SABBATH (Part 1)--Except for Jesus Christ, probably no topic in the entire Bible receives more attention than the Ten Commandments. From one end of Christendom to the other, they are constantly projected as basic maxims for Christian behavior. Yet, one of the commandments, the fourth, is violated on a regular basis by the overwhelming majority of those adhering to the Christian faith. In Exodus 20:8-11 the fourth commandment clearly says, "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days you shall labor, and do all your work; but the seventh day is a sabbath to the Lord your God; in it you shall not do any work, you, or your son, or your daughter,...therefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day and hallowed it." The important point to note is that the 7th day, Saturday, is the sabbath not Sunday, and no valid biblical reason exists for shifting the sabbath from Saturday to Sunday, as occurred sometime during the post-Apostolic period. Why the switch was made remains a subject of speculation and is of little concern to BE. The fact is that it was a direct violation of the 4th Commandment and cannot be biblically substantiated.

Arguments to the effect that Saturday rather than Sunday should be honored as the sabbath are clearly persuasive. Among the most potent are the following. First, and most obvious, is the fact that many verses clearly state that God made the 7th day, not the first or just any day, the sabbath: Ex. 31:15 ("Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord"), Ex. 20:9-10 ("Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the 7th day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God..."), Ex. 16:26 ("...Six days ye shall gather it; but on the 7th day, which is the sabbath..."), Deut. 5:14 ("But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God..."), Lev. 23:3 ("Six days shall work be done: but the 7th day is the sabbath of rest..."). And verses such as Gen. 2:2-3 ("And on the 7th day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the 7th day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the 7th day...."), Ex. 20:11 ("For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that is in them, and rested the 7th day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it"), Ex. 31:17 ("...for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the 7th day he rested..."), Heb. 4:4 Mod. Lang. ("For somewhere he says this about the 7th day, 'And God rested on the 7th day from all His works") Ex. 34:21, Lev. 23:8, and Deut. 16:8 show that God rested from creating on the 7th day, not the first. The sabbath was created as a memorial to God resting on the 7th day of creation and couldn't be changed to the 1st day unless creation was gone through again. In the 4th Commandment God specifically said the 7th day was to be kept holy. Why would He place it in the 10 Commandments if it wasn't as important as the others and could be changed? How many biblical laws were actually written in stone and meant to be permanent? The 10 Commandments were written in two tables of stone (Deut. 5:22) by the finger of God (Ex. 31:18). Second, along with the 4th Commandment, many verses clearly show that God specifically decreed the sabbath was to be honored. Ezek. 20:20 ("And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you"), Isa. 56:2 ("Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it...."), Isa. 58:13-14 ("If you do not tramp upon the Sabbath by doing your business on My holy day, but call the Sabbath an enjoyment, in order that the Lord might be sacredly honored...then you shall find your delight in the Lord, and I will nourish you...."), and Ex. 31:14 ("Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death....") show as much. Third, Matt. 24:20 ("But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath day") and Luke 4:16 ("...and, as was his custom, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read") show that Jesus honored the sabbath. Fourth, Acts 13:44, 16:12-13, 17:1-4, and 18:4, 11 show that Paul also honored the sabbath. In fact, the Book of Acts records 84 sabbaths on which Paul and his associates held religious services. On the other hand, there is not one word in the entire Bible authorizing Sunday-keeping. In Acts 13:14-16 ("And on the sabbath they [Paul and his company--ED.] went into the synagogue and sat down. After reading of the law and the prophets...Paul stood up, and said....") Paul preached on the sabbath and in Acts 13:42-46 the gentiles asked that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath. If the sabbath had been changed, why did Paul wait a week and pass up Sunday to preach? Fifth, Jews and Christians never argued over the sabbath in the first century because they all agreed on the day. In all the charges against Paul, the Jews never accused him of violating the sabbath. Sixth, Acts 13:42 ("...the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath") shows that gentile converts asked Paul to preach to them on the sabbath. Seventh, in Isa. 56:6-7 RSV ("And the foreigners who join themselves to the Lord...every one who keeps the sabbath, and does not profane it,... these will I bring to my holy mountain and make them joyful....") God promised a special blessing on all Gentiles who would keep the sabbath, but he never promised a blessing on anyone who kept the first day holy. Eighth, Luke 23:53-56 ("And he took the (body of Jesus--ED.) down....And that day was the preparation; and the sabbath drew on. And the women...followed after.... And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments: and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment") shows that Christ's followers kept the sabbath even after he died because of the biblical Commandment. Ninth, in Jer. 17:24-25 ("...if ye diligently harken unto me saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath day, but hallow the sabbath day, to do no work therein; then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes...and Jerusalem shall remain for ever....") and Jer. 17:17 ("But if ye will not harken unto me to hallow the sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem....") God promised that Jerusalem would stand forever if the Jews would keep the sabbath. Tenth, Isa. 66:23 RSV ("From new moon to new moon, and from sabbath to sabbath, all flesh shall come to worship before me, says the Lord") says the sabbath will remain as a day of worship for a long time to come.

And lastly, a substantial amount of evidence exists to prove that no valid reason exists for honoring Sunday, the first day of the week. (a) Sunday was never called sacred, the sabbath, the Lord's Day, or holy anywhere in the Bible. (b) All that exists in the OT about the 1st day is in Gen. 1:5 ("And the evening and the morning were the 1st day"). (c) There is no record in all the Scriptures that God ever removed His blessing from the sabbath and placed it upon another day of the week. Nowhere in all the Bible do we find a command to keep any other day in place of the 7th day sabbath or that the sacredness God gave to the 7th day was transferred to the 1st. (d) Sunday was never given as a memorial of anything. Nowhere in Scripture did God ever say the 1st day was in honor of anything or that it was ever a part of God's law. There is not one occurrence where He ever pronounced anything on the 1st day of the week. The 1st day was always called just that--the 1st day--and nothing else. (e) Gen. 1:4-5 ("...And God divided the light from the darkness, and God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day") shows that the first work done in the Bible by God was done on the first day of the week. (f) In Ex. 20:8-10 ("Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the 7th day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work...."), Ex. 23:12 ("Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the 7th day thou shalt rest...."), and Ex. 34:21 God specifically commanded us to work upon the 1st day of the week. (g) Jesus never honored the 1st day. Instead, he rested on the sabbath by lying in the tomb and not rising until Sunday, the first work day, and he never had anything to say about the 1st day of the week. Like God, he never gave one instance in which he kept the 1st day as a day of rest or said anything about sanctifying the 1st day. (h) Paul never made any attempt to meet with the Gentiles on the 1st day of the week and he never said he kept Sunday holy or tried to do so. (i) The apostles never rested on the 1st day and never said that it was sacred. (j) And none of the patriarchs of the OT ever kept the 1st day of the week or mentioned it.

In fact, as was noted on the 2nd page of the 18th Issue of BE, the 1st day of the week is mentioned only 8 times in the entire NT and none of them justifies transferring the sabbath from Saturday to Sunday. Only one of the 8 verses involves any sort of religious gathering and the word "Sunday" never appears once. The sabbath is mentioned 59 times in the NT and always with respect; whereas, Sunday is mentioned in the NT only 8 times and never is it referred to with sacredness or sanctity. Because the first day of the week is mentioned only 8 times in the NT, each reference deserves a detailed analysis. (1) All Matt. 28:1 ("In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the 1st day of the week....") says is that the sabbath ends before the first day begins. No sanctity is attached to Sunday in this verse and nothing is changed. The verse clearly states the sabbath has ended before the 1st day begins. In other words, the first day couldn't be the sabbath. (2) Mark 16:1-2 ("And when the sabbath was past....And very early in the morning the 1st day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun") is just another reference to when the women arrived at the tomb. Nothing is changed. This verse as well as Matt. 28:1 clearly states the sabbath is past before the 1st day begins. Therefore, the first day couldn't be the sabbath. (3) Nothing is said in Mark 16:9 ("Now when Jesus was risen early the 1st day of the week....") about changing the sabbath. Moreover, the two oldest Greek manuscripts (Alpha and Beta), along with many other manuscripts and patristic witnesses, do not contain Mark 16:9-20. Many scholars have concluded that these verses were not part of the original gospels. Nothing in the verse in question hallows Sunday or says God made it holy. Nothing here commands us to observe it. Nothing here sets it apart as a memorial of the Resurrection, or for any other purpose. There is no command or example of rest on this day. (4) Luke 24:1 ("Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre....") changes nothing and places no religious significance upon the 1st day of the week. (5) There is nothing in John 20:1 ("The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark....") but the simple record of an early morning experience. No religious significance is given to the 1st day of the week and nothing is changed. (6) The gathering of the disciples in the upper room on the Sunday of Christ's resurrection as recorded in John 20:19 ("Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst,....") was "for fear of the Jews." It was to hide and had no worship purpose. They weren't gathered in honor of the Resurrection because Mark 16:11-14 and Luke 24:37, 39, 41 show they did not yet believe in it. Moreover, there is nothing in the facts to do away with the obligation of keeping the 7th day holy. There is no scriptural basis for concluding this event was of such significance that Sunday should be made the sabbath. Nothing in the text calls this day "the sabbath" or the "Lord's Day" or gives it any sacred title. Nothing sets it apart or makes it holy. There is no authority for changing a command of God. (7) Acts 20:7 ("And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them,...and continued his speech until midnight") is of no force because it says Paul and his missionary company held a gathering on the 1st day of the week at night. Under Hebraic law the first day of the week begins on our Saturday night at sundown and ends Sunday night at sundown. Since the meeting was on the 1st day at night, it must have been held on our Saturday night. Moreover, even if they had held the actual communion services that night, this would in no way have made it a holy day. A meeting does not make a day sacred. The breaking of bread in Acts 20:11 ("When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day....") did not make a day sacred. In Luke 22 Jesus broke bread during the Last Supper on Thursday night and in Acts 2:43, 46 ("...and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles,...And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house....") his disciples continued doing it every day of the week. In addition, Acts 20:7 does not say the disciples held communion every first day of the week. Although it provides clear proof the disciples heard a sermon on Sunday, there is no proof they did not do the same on Saturdays. If the meeting referred to in Acts 20:7 began during the day on Sunday and continued into the night, the next morning was on the 2nd day of the week or Monday. If the meeting began at the start of the 1st day of the week (our Saturday night), it continued until Sunday morning. In either case, nothing is said about a sacred day. (8) And finally, in 1 Cor. 16:2 ("Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come") there is no suggestion of a day of worship or religious service. Neither is this verse a command to hold religious meetings on the 1st day of the week. To conclude that this verse indicates the apostolic church recognized Sunday as a day of religious worship (complete with plate passing, et. al.) is to assume more than the biblical writer intended. It speaks of a collection--but for whom--for what? Not for the preacher, not for evangelism--but for the saints. It doesn't say drop a coin in the collection plate at a church service. It says, "let every one of you lay by him in store." Lay by! Store up! Store up by oneself at home. Not lay by at church, but at home. This is the only time Paul mentioned the 1st day and it had no connection with a weekly collection at a church service. Paul taught Christians to do their secular business at home on the 1st day of the week.

We have now completed a comprehensive, biblically-based exposition of why the sabbath was never changed from Saturday to Sunday. Next month's commentary will focus on the major Christian apologetic responses to those denying the sabbath was shifted. As one might expect, Christians have a rather lengthy list of rationalizations.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #373 from RH of New York, New York

Hi, Dennis. Thanks for the "Imperfect Beacon" series on Jesus. It was excellent. Could you amplify your comment #143 in Issue #85 ("Although Jesus strongly stated this prophecy ['Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled'] would be fulfilled in the lifetime of his generation, nearly 2,000 years have passed and it's yet to be fulfilled.... Apologetic attempts to apply the word 'generation' to the Jewish people, specifically, are futile"--ED.). It has always seemed to me a perfect refutation of Jesus' infallibility. But you allude to the ploy of apologists to apply "generation" to the Jewish people specifically. You have in other instances shown that an original text word translates only in one fashion; can you do so for the origin of "generation"; that is, can you show elsewhere in the book where it applies unambiguously to mean "a group of contemporaneous individuals"?

Editor's Response to Letter #373

Dear RH. Fair question! There are several reasons "this generation" does not apply to the Jews specifically. First, and most obvious, is the fact that it does not say "the Jews," "the Hebrew people," "the chosen people," "the Jewish nation," "God's chosen people," etc. Every version of the Bible in my possession uses the word "generation." None uses a word that would apply to a particular group. The most apparent deduction one can make from this is that translators of the various versions of the Bible that are on the market contend the original Greek word, "genera," from which the word "generation" is derived, does not even imply, much less state in this instance, the name of a particular group or race of people. Second, the word "generation" in Matt. 24:34 has the same meaning as the word "generation" today. It comes from "genera" which means generation, age, or time. Every translation of "genera" in the plural in the NT, including Matt. 1:17 ("So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations...."), Luke 1:48 ("...for behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed"), and Col. 1:26 ("Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations,...."), uses the word "generations" as we would use it today. In no instance does it refer to a particular group or several nations, races, or groups. Third, the word "Jews" is used 169 times in the NT. In every single instance but 2 the word "Jews" is derived from the Greek word "Ioudaios," not "genera." The 2 exceptions aren't derived from "genera" either. Fourth, the word "Hebrew" or "Hebrews" is used 15 times in the NT and in every instance is derived from "Hebraikos," "Hebraios," "Hebrais," or "Hebraisti," but never "genera." In short, does anyone know of one biblical instance in which the Greek word "genera" refers to the Jewish people or is so translated? No, it's just another case in which a biblical prophecy by the christian icon failed to materialize and his followers are desperately seeking an escape. If those who wrote the NT had been referring to the Jewish people, specifically, there are several perfectly appropriate Greek words that could have been chosen. Clearly, they were not referring to the Jews.

Letter #374 from ES of the Rationalist Society of St. Louis, Missouri

Dear Dennis. Move to St. Louis.... We have a full crew operating community access cable television programs with about 30 made at present. We use new, latest equipment, lacking only a teleprompter which the studio will get someday. We have our own background with name: FREETHINKING 101. We use an American Cablevision studio that is only for access use. It is located in a former school and the studio is in room 101. We have two members who operate the equipment and one taking lessons. We have two camera persons plus two to four extra members to take turns when some cannot make the movable dates to do taping. Number two camera is usually locked in place; number one and three are operative.... Our programs are 28 minutes long and we are taping two to a cassette. We have a telephone number and our post office address is on our latest programs. We also hope to exchange tapes with others but are having delays on that. We can send you a sample on VHS tape made from 3/4" TV tapes. Send us a sample of your programs, or better yet, a 3/4" tape and we will make one from it using our Introduction and ending. We use another studio for editing.... But we do not have an expert on the Bible, so visit St. Louis when we have a taping session scheduled (sometimes we know weeks in advance) this summer on vacation time and get to know our fine crew, and make two or three programs in one evening. We can exchange tapes with you. Do you have a crew to operate the equipment? I believe in all cases the only way it can be done by one person is with a single camera at the equipment itself.... Can we also exchange our Secular Subjects for your Biblical Errancy?

Editor's Response to Letter #374

Dear ES. Your facilities almost make my mouth water. What I couldn't do with that set up! Do I have a crew? I don't even have the equipment, let alone a crew or studio. Your offer is most generous and I might try to put something together and travel to St. Louis. Exchanging publications is possible. Could you send me a copy of yours?

Letter #375 from JW of Richmond, Virginia

Dear Mr. McKinsey. You are the best! WRVA AM station has an open topic radio phone-in program Monday thru Friday (7 PM until 10 PM) and they discuss most everything. The usual host is Jerry Lund. WRVA is 100,000 watts.

There is a toll free number for out-of-state calls. It is 1-800-345-WRVA or 1-800-345-9782. People phone from Ohio, N.Y., Michigan, West Virginia, Pa., N.C., etc. They usually get best reception after 8:30 PM, depending on the weather, etc. You were a guest on the program some years ago, and I wish you could be again. But, if not, maybe you would like to phone some night and introduce a topic. I am not expert enough to discuss biblical errancy, but I believe you could do a lot of good by phoning.

Editor's Response to Letter #375

Dear JW. I remember my appearance well and have tried to arrange a return engagement but to no avail. Perhaps you or some friends of yours could call on our behalf.

Letter 376 from TK of Dallas, Texas

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I just got your sample issue that had the commentary on the Flood. Thank you. I have already made a hundred copies and passed them out. I plan on calling a christian station tonight that has an "ask the pastor" format. I will use your material as well as science to show the flood to be a myth. They teach the Bible is inerrant and the flood really happened. I don't expect the pastor to be converted, but my aim is to "prick the ears" of the thousands of people who listen to that show and hopefully get some of them to "think."

I plan to make a couple of hundred copies of your publications and pass them out. As you might know Dallas is the "Belt" in the "Bible Belt." We have more churches per person than any other city in the nation. We also have half of the major evangelical organizations headquartered here. So you can guess how many right-wing religious fanatics we have running around this city.

I am an atheist. I was a very devout, sincere christian. I believed in the inerrancy of the Bible. My mistake was that I actually read the Bible. As any reasonable person knows, the Bible has more holes in it than Swiss cheese. Also the great scientific evidence supporting evolution showed Genesis to be a complete myth.

I have no hatred toward christians and that is not why I am running a one man "truth squad." It is just that I want people to "think for themselves" and not believe everything they're told. Also, the fundamentalists here are forcing their beliefs onto everybody else. The Last Temptation of Christ can not be rented in most video stores because of their pressure and it was only showed in one theatre for one week here....

Editor's Response to Letter #376

Dear TK. Your assistance is most appreciated and I am always glad to find another person who is carrying the message to the other side. Keep up the good work!

Letter #377 from AS of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Dennis. I am happy to send you this check for $17 to renew my subscription to Biblical Errancy. I am happy to receive each new issue because it means I am bound to learn something new. I am especially delighted when you and I "cross paths." By that I mean when you talk about something in your newsletter that I have already discovered in my research. It tells me I am on the right road, to keep going the way I am. In this regard, when the time comes a little later this year, I will have finished my basic research and will have completed all the Bible files I will need for a while to help me when from time to time I encounter Christians. I will send you a copy of all those files. You can do with them as you wish.

Three points I wanted to touch on quickly. (1) I intend to continue subscribing to "B.E." for as long as you are willing and able to put it out. I figure when I do encounter Christians, I can show them what I have found in my research and if that either doesn't work or they want to see more, I can go to "B.E." So, don't worry about sending renewal reminders; I will gladly reply. I am happy to see them. (2) You mentioned in a recent issue that you were not convinced that "cut off" means killed in the Bible. I therefore point you to Exodus 31:14-15 and Lev. 20:2-6, both of which make it clear that "cut off" means killed. (3) Did you receive my article on "How long was Jesus in the grave"? In it I show that even on apologists own terms, their argument fails. (I did read it, AS--ED.). If you did not, notify me and I will happily send you another, because I do want your opinion as to whether this will work with apologists. That's it for now. KEEP UP THE GOOD WORK!!

EDITOR'S NOTE: FINALLY IT'S ARRIVED. Our third major project is underway. We began BE in late 1982, moved to pamphlets several years later and are now offering audio tapes of media appearances, speeches, and discussions. Although none were created to be sold and arguments are often repeated, popular demand and the rising educational power of A-V materials have caused us to conclude they are sorely needed.

SABBATH (Part 2)--Last month's commentary provided a comprehensive listing of reasons nearly all Christians are violating one of the 10 Commandments on a regular weekly basis. As was clearly shown by numerous citations, the 7th day of the week, Saturday, is the Sabbath, not Sunday, and there is no valid reason for paying homage to Sunday rather than Saturday. But, as is to be expected, Christians have concocted a wide array of excuses to justify what can only be described as a blatant violation of a cardinal biblical teaching. If one can violate one of the 10 Commandments on a regular basis with impunity, the sky is the limit as far as ignoring biblical teachings in general is concerned. Because Christians heatedly deny any transgression of the 4th Commandment, the following in-depth listing of their rationalizations is presented. (1) The Sabbath was for the Jews only. That's disproven by the following points. (a) Mark 2:27 ("And he said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath") shows that the sabbath was made for "man," i.e., all mankind. It was not made for one group such as the Hebrews. The sabbath is not Jewish. (b) The 7th day sabbath was given as a sacred legacy to mankind 2,000 years before the first Jew existed. It was given to us on the 7th day of Creation Week by God, long before Jews existed as a separate group. (c) The 4th Commandment ("Remember the sabbath....") begins with the word "remember" showing that the sabbath already existed when God wrote the law on stone at Sinai. (d) The Bible never calls the Scriptural sabbath "Jewish" but always the "Sabbath of the Lord thy God." (e) God calls the "sabbath," "my sabbaths." They are his and do not belong to others. They are not Jewish sabbaths or Gentile sabbaths as Ezek. 20:20-21 ("and hallow my sabbaths...they polluted my sabbaths....") shows. (f) If the sabbath was given only to the Jews, then why isn't this true of all the other OT laws as well, since they all came through Hebrew writers and the Jewish leadership. If the sabbath commandment only applies to the Jews, then the other 9 commandments would only apply to the Jews as well. (g) Acts 7:38 ("This is he [Moses--Ed.], that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spoke to him in the mount Sinai, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us") proves the sabbath was not given to the Jews only. (h) And Gen. 26:5 ("Abraham obeyed my voice and my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws") shows that Abraham was keeping God's commandments long before his descendants reached Mt. Sinai. (2) The law was nailed to the cross so we don't need to keep the sabbath according to Col. 2:14 ("Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross"), Eph. 2:15 ("Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances...."), and Col. 2:16-17 ("Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days: which are the shadow of things to come...."). Several problems accompany this theory. (a) If the law was nailed to the cross, then the 10 Commandments go with it. Moreover, Jesus repeatedly said he kept his father's commandments as is shown by John 5:3, 15:10, and 1 Peter 2:21. (b) If an individual can pick any day of the week as the sabbath, then how is that honoring the sabbath? All one is doing is honoring a sabbath or a day he chooses to call the sabbath. (c) In Matt. 5:17 ("Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill") Jesus said he did not come to destroy the law. In order to evade the obvious implication of this verse, some theology schools allege that "fulfill" means to abolish which is foolish. They would have us believe that the verse should read, "Jesus came not to destroy the law but to destroy the law" which makes no sense whatever. Obviously "fulfill" does not mean destroy. (3) The first day is to be kept as the sabbath because it honors the Resurrection. (a) Jesus never told others to change the day in honor of his resurrection. (b) There is no scriptural support for this. (c) The Crucifixion is as important as the Resurrection, so why isn't Friday honored as the sabbath? After all, Jesus came to sacrifice himself for humanity and that occurred on Friday, not Sunday. Those who wish to abandon a clear command to keep the 7th Day for another day would do well to keep Friday holy, not Saturday or Sunday, in honor of Calvary. (d) If the Resurrection of Jesus on Sunday caused the sabbath to be changed to Sunday, then why did Paul and the disciples continue to honor the sabbath after the Resurrection? (4) The first sabbath lasted many ages; so we can't keep it today. (a) If each day of Creation Week was thousands or millions of years long, then the 6th day upon which Adam was created was thousands or millions of years in length. The 6th day was followed by the the 7th day (Gen. 2:1-3) which was also thousands or millions of years in length. Following the 7th day Adam fell into sin and was driven from the Garden (Gen. 3), which would mean Adam lived throughout the entire 7th day and lived for thousands or millions of years. This couldn't be true since we know he lived to be only 930 years old (Gen. 5:3-5). (b) If days were thousands or millions of years in length, why would God command us to keep a day holy when that would have been impossible? (c) There is no scriptural support for the assertion that the first sabbath lasted many ages. (5) Jesus changed the sabbath from Saturday to Sunday. John 1:3 ("All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made"), Col. 1:16 ("For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible...."), and Heb. 1:2 ("Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds....") show that Jesus created everything, including the sabbath. Are we to believe he changed his mind? (6) The disciples changed the sabbath to Sunday. (a) There is no scriptural support for this. (b) The disciples would have had no more right to change the sabbath than anyone else. (c) Luke 23:56 ("And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments: and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment") and Acts 13:14-16, 42-46 16:12-15, and 17:1-4 show that Paul and the disciples faithfully kept the sabbath. (7) The Bible sabbath is the 7th Day, but Sunday is the real Lord's Day. Rev. 1:10 ("I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day,....") changed the sabbath from Saturday to Sunday. (a) We are told about the "Lord's Day" in Rev. 1:10 but are not told what day it is. No specific day is mentioned. (b) Nowhere in Scripture is the 1st Day of the week called the Lord's Day. (c) Rev. 1:10 does not mention the first day of the week or Sunday (d) Rev. 1:10 says nothing about changing from Saturday to Sunday. There is no clear-cut rule here for changing the day. (e) The Lord's Day is the day the Lord is Lord of and in Mark 2:28 Jesus Christ said he was Lord of the sabbath--not Sunday. (f) The 7th day sabbath was called the sabbath of the Lord in Ex. 20:10 ("But the 7th day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God"), Lev. 23:3 ("...but the 7th day is...the sabbath of the Lord...."), and Deut. 5:14 ("But the 7th day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God"). It was called the day "unto the Lord" in Ex. 16:23 ("Tomorrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord"), Ex. 16:25 ("...for today is a sabbath unto the Lord"), Ex. 31:15 and 35:2. And it was called "His own day" in Isa. 58:13 ("If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord...."). (g) Actually the "Lord's Day" could very easily be the final day of the Lord, the day of his manifest judgment of the world. Rev. 1:10 is not referring to any day of the week but to the general period of prophecy mentioned in more than 30 prophecies as the "day of the Lord." It's speaking of the coming plagues climaxing in the coming of Christ and the millennium. (8) The sabbath can be kept on any day of the week as long as we keep one day a week. (a) There is no scriptural support for this contention. Ex. 20:8-10 ("...Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: But the 7th day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work....") is obviously speaking of the 7th day, not any one day out of seven. (b) Christian reliance on Rom. 14:5-6 ("One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks") is misguided. Their belief that Rom. 14:5-6 shows it really doesn't matter which day of the week a person observes as his weekly "day of worship" as long as he does it "to the Lord," does not hold up. Even a casual reading of Rom. 14 reveals that the subject being dealt with is not which day to worship upon. Rather, the subject is human opinions about food and drink which are matters to be decided between an individual and God. The verses say nothing about which day Christians should worship on. If one can consider any day as the sabbath, then there isn't really a sabbath day to begin with. (9) Some Christians contend every day is holy. There is no scriptural support for this. If all days are holy then no days are holy or more holy than other days and the principle of sabbath observance disappears. (10) The sabbath can't be kept because we don't know what day it is. It's been lost in history. (a) There is no scriptural support for this. (b) The Jews have been keeping the sabbath for thousands of years and know when it occurs. (11) Sunday is the Christian sabbath, not the Jewish sabbath. (a) There is no scriptural support for this. Indeed, the very idea of two different sabbaths verges on blasphemy. (b) Sunday was never the sabbath of the Christians in the Bible or the early Christians afterwards. Sunday was not called the sabbath until the 1600's. (12) And finally, Christians often argue that the sabbath was made for God and not for man and cite Ex. 20:10 ("But the 7th day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God....") as proof. They ignore the fact that this assertion is directly contrary to Jesus' teaching in Mark 2:27 ("The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath") that the sabbath was made for man.

Several years ago a sabbatarian Christian offered a substantial reward to "any person who could supply ONE BIBLE TEXT to prove any one of the following statements." (1) Sunday, or the first day, is the Lord's Day. (2) Sunday, or the first day, has been blessed and sanctified. (3) Christ observed Sunday, or the first day, as the Sabbath day. (4) The apostles kept Sunday, or the first day, as the Sabbath day. (5) Sunday, or the first day, commemorates the Resurrection. (6) We should not work on Sunday, or the first day. (7) Sunday is the Christian sabbath. (8) Sunday is the new day of worship. (9) Christ declared Sunday to be holy. (10) And lastly, the 7th day Sabbath was made for the Jews only. He prefaced his remarks with the correct observation that the Catholic Church is responsible for the change. Changing the sabbath "is a law of the holy Catholic Church alone. The Bible says, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' The Catholic Church says: 'No. By my divine power I abolish the Sabbath day and command you to keep holy the first day of the week.' As a result, the Christian world bows down in reverent obedience to the command of the Catholic Church."

The only rational conclusion to be drawn from our extended analysis of the sabbath is that most Christians are violating the 4th Commandment on a regular basis. For them to condemn others for violating one of the 10 Commandments seems rather ridiculous when they do so as a matter of routine.

REVIEWS

(PART 1)--In THE KINGDOM OF THE CULTS fundamentalist Walter Martin, founder of the Christian Research Institute, sought to defend the orthodox Christian position on the Sabbatarian controversy by invoking 4 major sources of documentation: (a) the 7th day sabbath isn't shown to be the Lord's Day, (b) the testimony of the church Fathers, (c) authoritative quotations, and (d) primary anti-sabbatarian texts. Each deserves an indepth analysis since they highlight the kind of sophisticated contortionistic reasoning so evident in much of apologetic literature.

First, many sabbatarians reasonably conclude that since Rev. 1:10 ("I was in the spirit on the Lord's Day") refers to a Lord's Day and Mark 2:28 ("Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath") says Jesus is Lord of the sabbath, the Lord's Day must be the sabbath. Martin attempted to divorce the sabbath in Mark 2:28 from the Lord's Day in Rev. 1:10 by going through a "back to the Greek" argument on page 460, which allegedly proves that possession was not involved. "John did not mean that the Lord's Day was the Lord's possession, but rather that it was the day dedicated to Him by the early church, not in accordance with Mosaic law, but in obedience to our Lord's commandment of love." How this addresses the question one can only surmise since Martin admits "it was the day dedicated to Him by the early church." Notice! Martin said "the" day, not "a" day. The only day dedicated to the Lord was the sabbath. Moreover, there is no textual basis for saying the day was dedicated in obedience to "our Lord's commandment of love" rather than the "Mosaic law." Where is the textual support for making such an arbitrary distinction? Where does the Bible say that the Lord's Day was dedicated to him "in obedience to our Lord's commandment of love"?

Martin closed out this rather vacuous argument with the following deceptive comment. "We may certainly assume that if the Sabbath had meant so much to the writers of the NT; and if...it was so widely observed during the early centuries of the Christian Church, John and the other writers of Scripture would have equated it with the Lord's Day, the first day of the week. Scripture and history testify that they did not...." But why does Martin assume they did not? Just because they never wrote words stating they considered them to be equal does not mean they did not consider them equal. The key word is "assume." Martin admits to making an assumption. Just because they did not scripturally equate the two, he is assuming they held them to be different. Can Martin produce any writings where they specifically stated they were not equal? In addition,

Martin subtly slipped in an unproven assertion. Upon what biblical basis does he call "the Lord's Day the first day of the week."

Martin's second major argument on page 460 is that "The Church Fathers provide a mass of evidence that the first day of the week, not the seventh, is the Lord's Day...We have yet to see any systematic answer to what the Christian Church always believed." Although his comment implies that all the Church Fathers support his position, he relates the writings of only ten. For so dramatic a change in the Ten Commandments, each should be quoted verbatim. (1) "If, then, those who walk in the ancient practices attain to newness of hope, no longer observing the Sabbath, but fashioning their lives after the Lord's Day on which our life also arose through Him...."--Ignatius. In no way does this quote say the first day of the week is the Lord's Day. The first day isn't even mentioned. At best, it only implies a distinction between the sabbath and the Lord's Day. (2) "And on the day called Sunday, all who live in cities or in the country gather together in one place and memoirs of the apostles or the writings of the prophets are read, as long as time permits.... Sunday is the day on which we all hold our common assembly because it is the first day on which God, having wrought a change in the darkness in matter, made the world; and Jesus...rose from the dead"--Justin Martyr and "Wherever we be, all of us are called by the one name of the Messiah, namely Christians and upon one day which is the first day of the week we assemble ourselves together and on the appointed days we abstain from food"--Bardaisan provide two additional quotations. The argument used in last month's issue on page 3 against Acts 20:7 ("And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them....") could also be used in opposition to these two quotes of Justin Martyr and Bardaisan. As was said earlier, "even if they had held actual communion services that night, this would in no way have made it a holy day. A meeting (or meetings) do not make a day sacred." (3) "'Your new moons and your sabbaths I cannot endure' (Isaiah 1:13). You perceive how He speaks: Your present sabbaths are not acceptable to me but that which I had made in giving rest to all things, I shall make a beginning of the eighth day, that is a beginning of another world. Wherefore also, we keep the eighth day with joyfulness, a day also in which Jesus rose from the dead"--Epistle of Barnabas. One should immediately notice how apologists don't hesitate to quote from a writing which is not considered canonical when it suits their interests. If Barnabas is to be trusted, then why isn't his epistle in the Canon? Moreover, is Barnabas saying that the Jewish writer, Isaiah, is actually changing the sabbath from the 7th day to the first? One could just as easily understand it as Isaiah saying to the Christians, "Your new sabbaths I cannot endure, i.e., your act of changing the sabbath from Saturday to Sunday I cannot endure." By saying, "You perceive how He speaks: Your present sabbaths are not acceptable to me," Barnabas could very well have interpreted Isaiah incorrectly. The latter said, "Your NEW sabbaths," which could easily refer to the Christian alteration, if one wants to view this as prophetic as Christians do. And lastly, just because Barnabas said "we keep the eighth day with joyfulness" because Jesus rose from the dead does not mean the sabbath has been changed. (4) "On the Lord's own day, gather yourselves together and break bread and give thanks"--Didache of the Apostles. Where does this quote say that the first day of the week is the Lord's Day? (5) "They [the Christians] affirmed...that the whole of their crime or error was that they had been wont to meet together on a fixed day before daylight and to repeat among themselves in turn a hymn to Christ as to a god...."--The Epistle of Pliny. Where does this quote say that the first day is the Lord's Day? (6) Because "The mystery of the Lord's resurrection may not be celebrated on any other day than the Lord's Day"--Irenaeus, "We keep the Lord's Day as a day of joy because of Him who arose thereon"--Peter, Bishop of Alexandria, and "...the mystery of the Lord's resurrection should be celebrated on no other than the Lord's day"--Eusebius are three quotations that say the Lord's Day is the day of the resurrection. Mark 16:9 RSV ("Now when he rose early on the first day of the week") says Jesus arose on the first day. These comments, along with "The Lord's Day is both the first and the eighth day"--Cyprian, do seem to prove that a few of the Church Fathers considered Sunday to be the Lord's Day. It should be quickly noted, however, that: (a) Martin cited only 4 men to this effect, (b) none of these men wrote a word of the Bible, (c) nowhere does the Bible, itself, say that the first day or the day of the Resurrection is the Lord's Day, (d) none of these men specifically stated the 7th day (the sabbath) was no longer to be honored but, instead, replaced by honoring the first day, and (e) one of the men cited, Eusebius, had a history of intellectual dishonesty. Indeed, his citation is a verbatim duplication of that of Irenaeus. But, let's assume for the sake of argument that the Lord's Day is different from the sabbath, although the Bible does not say so. The Bible says we are to "Honor the sabbath." Nowhere does it say we are to "Honor the Lord's Day". Are we going to go by the Bible or a few of its revisers? Upon what biblical basis are we going to assume the Lord's Day takes precedence over the sabbath?

Martin's third major tactic, although blunder would be a far more appropriate term, arises on pages 461-62 and involved listing the following quotations which contend the sabbath is not the Lord's Day: "The Lord's Day did not succeed in the place of the Sabbath....The Lord's Day was merely an ecclesiastical institution....The primitive Christians did all manner of work upon the Lord's Day"--Bishop Taylor, "The observance of the Lord's Day (Sunday) is founded not on any command of God, but on the authority of the church"--Augsburg Confession of Faith, "But they err in teaching that Sunday has taken the place of the OT Sabbath and therefore must be kept as the Seventh day had to be kept by the children of Israel"--T.J. Mueller in Sabbath or Sunday, "Although Sunday was in primitive times and differently called the Lord's day or Sunday, yet it was never denominated the Sabbath; a name constantly appropriate to Saturday, or the Seventh day both by sacred and ecclesiastical writers"--in A Theological Dictionary by Charles Buck, and "The notion of a formal substitution by apostolic authority of the Lord's Day (meaning Sunday) for the Jewish Sabbath (or the first for the seventh day)...the transference to it perhaps in spiritualized form of the Sabbath obligation established by promulgation of the fourth commandment has no basis whatever, either in Holy Scripture or in Christian antiquity"--in A Dictionary of Christian Antiquities by Smith and Cheetham. Martin concludes his listing by saying, "Thus the Adventists (the sabbatarians) have in effect destroyed their argument by appealing to (these same--Ed.) authorities (which I just quoted who--Ed.) state unequivocally that the first day of the week is the Lord's Day and that it was observed by the early Christian Church from the time of the Apostles." Apparently Martin failed to realize that he not only "proved" that Sunday is the Lord's Day but that the Lord's Day is: "merely an ecclesiastical institution," "not founded upon any command of God, but on the authority of the Church," "has not taken the place of the OT sabbath," and "was never denominated the sabbath." He also "proved" that "the transference to Sunday in a spiritualized form of the Sabbath obligation established by promulgation of the fourth commandment has no basis whatever, either in Scripture or Christian antiquity." In effect, he destroyed his own argument by stripping Sunday-observance of any importance. Martin let everything ride on three words--The Lord's Day. He did everything possible, he was so determined to prove Sunday was the Lord's Day at all costs that he stripped it of any biblical legitimacy in the process. His own sources, sources which he cited, contend that the Lord's Day (a) is merely an ecclesiastical institution not founded upon any command of God, (b) was never called the sabbath, and (c) was never instituted as a replacement for the sabbath. Why on earth, then, would one worship on Sunday rather than Saturday?

Martin's concluding argument in the "Authoritative Quotations" section on page 463 involved citing the following quotation by a sabbatarian source in the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge by Schaff-Herzog and registering a strong objection to the omission of the capitalized words. "Sunday...day of the sun because it was dedicated to the sun, was adopted by the early Christians as a day of worship. The sun of Latin adoration they interpreted as 'the sun of righteousness.' SUNDAY WAS EMPHATICALLY THE WEEKLY FEAST OF THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST, AS THE JEWISH SABBATH WAS THE FEAST OF THE CREATION. IT WAS CALLED THE 'LORD'S DAY,' AND UPON IT THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH ASSEMBLED TO BREAK BREAD (Acts 20:7, 1 Cor. 16:2). No regulations for its observance are laid down in the NT, nor, indeed, is its observance even enjoined; YET CHRISTIAN FEELING LED TO THE UNIVERSAL ADOPTION OF THE DAY, IN IMITATION OF APOSTOLIC PRECEDENCE. IN THE SECOND CENTURY ITS OBSERVANCE WAS UNIVERSAL." Martin's protestation is without substance, since we have already shown by Martin's own quotations that even if Sunday is the Lord's Day, that's of little import. Even if Christians did assemble on Sunday to break bread, that did not relieve them of the sabbath obligation. No biblical requirement was ever instituted that Christians were to honor Sunday or that the sabbath had been shifted from Saturday to Sunday. Just because some Christians met on Sunday to break bread as in Acts 20:7 and 1 Cor. 16:2 does not mean that the Bible intended for that day to be honored by all subsequent Christians or that a day other than Saturday is to be honored.

Martin also objected to the omission of the part referring to "CHRISTIAN FEELING" leading "TO THE UNIVERSAL ADOPTION OF THE DAY." Are we going to follow "Christian feeling" or biblical injunction? Just because Acts 20:7 and 1 Cor. 16:2 show the apostles had some meetings on Sunday and subsequent Christians "felt" they should follow suit, does not mean: (a) Sunday had become the new sabbath, (b) the Lord's Day rather than the sabbath was to be honored every week, (c) the Lord's Day took precedence over the sabbath, or (d) that honoring Sunday has been instituted for all time by God. As was quoted earlier, Martin's own sources say "The Lord's Day was merely an ecclesiastical institution" and its observance "is founded not on any command of God, but on the authority of the church. If you are a bible-believing Christian who believes the Bible created the Church rather than the Church created the Bible (the Roman Catholic position), if your primary source is the Bible rather than the Church, then you have no choice but to honor Saturday rather than Sunday. There is no solid biblical basis for doing otherwise. (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

EDITOR'S NOTE: TAPE #22 is now complete. It consists of PART 2 of TAPE #8 (40 Minutes) WO/Comm. and an appearance on John Otto's "Night Call" in 1987 (40 Minutes W/Comm.).

TAPE #29 is now available. It is a May 19, 1990 debate on a Christian station in Los Angeles with apologist, Dr. Robert Morey, Executive Director of the Research and Education Foundation. The Host was Greg Koukl. 85 Minutes WO/Comm.

Many of our radio appearances over the years were not recorded for various reasons. If anyone recorded an appearance that did not appear on our recent list of 29 tapes, would you please let us know. We would like to add it to the list.

We have never criticized bulk mail delivery before but an exception is in order. Last month's performance can only be described as appalling. As usual we mailed the issue on the last day of the month (June 30); yet, some subscribers only 200 miles away didn't receive the July issue until the 22nd or 23rd day of the month.

COMMENTARY

This month's Issue will conclude our itemized critique of Walter Martin's assault on sabbatarianism--the belief that Saturday rather than Sunday is the sabbath and the day to be honored.

REVIEWS

(PART 2)--The fourth and final source employed by Walter Martin in THE KINGDOM OF THE CULTS to prove Christians are honoring the correct day, Sunday, is the biblical text itself. Four passages from the writings of Paul (Col. 2:16-17, Gal. 4:9-11, Rom. 13:8-10 and Rom. 14:4-6, 10, 12-13), which he refers to as the primary anti-sabbatarian texts, are used to "reflect the position of the historic Christian Church from the times of the Fathers and the reformers to the leading exegetical commentators of our day...and contain the comprehensive NT teaching on Sabbatarianism" (p. 471). For so important an alteration of the 10 Commandments to ride upon 4 biblical passages, an in-depth discussion of each is in order. Martin began his analysis by stating that "from the ascension of Christ on, the NT and early church observed the first day of the week or the Lord's Day (Rev. 1:10) as we have endeavored to show." He may have "endeavored to show" but he endeavored in vain. On page 471-72 Martin says, "...historic evidence establishes that the first day of the week was the Lord's Day." Notice the apologetic duplicity in this comment. He said "historic evidence establishes." But he didn't say the Bible establishes. That was carefully avoided and quietly tiptoed past for obvious reasons. Some members of the early church may have observed the first day of the week as the Lord's Day but there is no textual support for their efforts and Rev. 1:10 ("I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day") says nothing of the sort. That's the only time the Lord's Day is even mentioned in the Bible and it certainly doesn't say it is Sunday. Martin refers to "the passages which contrast the Lord's Day with the Sabbath," when there are no passages of this nature. All he quoted were passages from a few Church Fathers who wrote no part of the Bible. Are we going to heed their teachings absent textual support? Who's in charge, them or Scripture? Martin concluded his opening comments by saying, "To narrow the issue down to simple analysis, we shall review the major NT texts, which in context and in the light of syntactical analysis refute the Sabbatarian concept, and substantiate the historic position of the Christian Church since the days of the Apostles and the Fathers." Having said all of the above, let us turn to his four passages and critique them in sequence.

First is COL. 2:16-17 ("Therefore let no one pass judgment on you in questions of food and drink or with regard to a festival or a new moon or a sabbath. These are only a shadow of what is to come; but the substance belongs to Christ"). After quoting this verse and providing an elaborate explanation of why the sabbath referred to is the weekly sabbath, Martin said, "...how can the seventh-day Sabbath be retained? In light of this Scripture alone, I contend that the argument for Sabbath observance collapses...." The entire commentary in Issue #51 was devoted to biblical verses related to the use of alcoholic drink. If Martin's analysis of Col. 2:16 were correct, people could imbibe to excess with impunity. But even more importantly, Martin has again thrown out the baby with the bathwater. Under his interpretation, people not only don't have to honor the 7th day sabbath, but they don't have to honor any sabbath or any day of any kind. In effect, he has thrown out the 4th commandment and made the 10 commandments the 9 commandments. After all, he has removed any obligation to the sabbath and there is no biblical command to honor the Lord's Day or any other day.

The second passage, GAL. 9-11 RSV ("...how can you turn back again to the weak and beggarly elemental spirits, whose slaves you want to be once more? You observe days, and months, and seasons, and years! I am afraid I have labored over you in vain"), has the same weaknesses as the first. Martin spent so much time developing an argument against the 7th Day Adventists that he didn't realize the inadequacy of his approach when directed toward someone who has no allegiance to any part of the Book.

After quoting the third passage, ROM. 13:8-10 ("Owe no one anything, except to love one another; for he who loves his neighbor has fulfilled the law. The commandments...are summed up in this sentence, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' ...therefore love is the fulfilling of the law"), on page 469, Martin says, "It is really unnecessary to comment extensively upon the foregoing verses since they speak so plainly for themselves." How these verses speak plainly for themselves is a mystery. Although he decrys "the false teaching that love of one's neighbor does not fulfill all the law of God," he never explains how loving your neighbor as yourself fulfills the 4th Commandment. What has loving thy neighbor as thyself have to do with the 1st ("You shall have no other gods before me"), the 2nd ("You shall not make for yourself a graven image"), the 3rd ("You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain"), and the 4th ("Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy") commandments? It can be related to those having to do with honoring parents (5th), killing (6th), adultery (7th), stealing (8th), bearing false witness (9th), and coveting (10th), but it certainly doesn't cover the first four. Those require specific provisions. He incorrectly says that "the Holy Spirit twice declares that love fulfills the law. The Sabbatarians cannot exempt the Sabbath from this context without destroying the unity of the 'Eternal Ten'" (p. 469). Yet, they can if they are willing to admit that the author of Romans erroneously classified 4 of the Ten Commandments under the general heading of "loving thy neighbor as thyself" when they cannot be so categorized. For Martin to bewail those destroying the unity of the "Eternal Ten" is truly ridiculous, when he is as guilty as any.

The fourth passage, ROM. 14:5-6, 13 ("One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it.... Let us not therefore judge one another any more....") is the weakest of the lot. All it is saying is that anyone can make any day of his choosing the sabbath or honor no sabbath at all. Martin asserts on page 470 that "It is a matter of liberty and conscience." If that is true, then "the sabbath" no longer exists. The 4th Commandment becomes null and void and we now have the Nine Commandments. To say "Let every one be fully convinced in his own mind" is to say "let anarchy reign supreme." How could one honor "The Sabbath" or "The Lord's Day" when any day could be so designated by anyone and all would be equally valid? When Martin says on page 471 in regard to sabbatarians that "their 'special truths' have, to say the least, questionable theological origins," he'd do well to take stock of his own imaginings.

In wrapping up the entire sabbath controversy, we would only ask Walter Martin four simple questions. First, can you provide any textual support whatever that the first day of the week is the Lord's Day? Second, can you provide any textual support that the day to be honored has been shifted from Saturday to Sunday? Third, can you provide any textual support that the Lord's Day is to be honored in any manner different from that of all other days? And fourth, what are you doing to honor the 4th Commandment or do you feel the Ten Commandments are now Nine?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #378 from JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries of Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I am in receipt of the May, 1990 edition of Biblical Errancy. I noted with interest the letter from "FG of East Pittsburg, Pennsylvania." I know of no "FG" from East Pittsburg (there is one person with those initials on our mailing list), so how this person could presume to know that I know nothing of "truth or love" but instead practice "intolerance and fanaticism" is beyond me. The person seemingly is referring to the description of the little Letters to an Anti-theist booklet that we made available. It is interesting to note that you have kept your own personal world-view from being a matter of discussion in BE hence this letter and the attendant issue. That is a wise move, of course, for attempting to defend your own world-view would certainly take up space that you would rather use in your campaign against the Bible and Christianity in general. Most people who would be willing to accept your reading of the Bible, incredibly faulty as it consistently is, would not be asking themselves too many questions about what you have to suggest as being true in its place.

Given the fact that you have mentioned in past issues of BE attending such functions as the Freedom From Religion Foundation Convention (Dan Barker's letter was in that edition) or the meetings of American Atheists, and given the fact that your materials ridicule the Biblical presentation of theism (and this would, then, include the historical Jewish view of theism), it is hard to escape the logical conclusion that if you do not personally claim to be an atheist, you show great sympathy (and support) for that world-view. To print a letter suggesting that I should be "sued" for calling you an "anti-theist" is reprehensible.

Editor's Response to Letter #378 (Part a)

Dear James. James, James, what are we going to do with you? Your virtually uncontrollable urge to defend a dead-end cause drives you to ever more untenable comments. Just step back and take an objective look at your utterances. First, any reasonably intelligent person knows that you don't need to subscribe to a periodical or purchase literature in order to read it. FG could very easily have received all of your material from friends, relatives, acquaintances or libraries. Just because he is not a subscriber does not mean he is not reading everything you publish. Consequently, he could very well be in as good a position as anyone who reads your material to make judgments with respect to your adherence to truth, love, intolerance and fanaticism. Second, you have not only attempted to put me on the defensive by challenging me to reveal my world-view, but implied there is something insidious about my reluctance to discuss my own philosophy. Do you have something you believe should be aired or is your observation merely based on a feeling that something sinister is involved. Perhaps you failed to note that the title of this publication is not MCKINSEY'S INERRANCY OR PHILOSOPHY. I have no objection to discussing my views, but BE is not the proper forum. Anyone who has read every issue of BE already has a pretty good conception of my outlook on Christianity in particular and religion in general. Third, you refer to my reading of the Bible as being incredibly and consistently faulty. I would be most appreciative if you would not engage in grandiose generalizations of this nature. Unless and until evidence is forthcoming, please keep your unsubstantiated prejudices to yourself. So far in this letter you have provided nothing of real merit. Unless and until you provide cold data and hard facts, please don't summarize to the jury. If there is one fact I have learned after numerous appearances on the radio, it is that biblicists love to summarize to the audience before the evidence is in. The overwhelming majority of callers don't deal with facts but expound opinions. They will call in to a program that has aired for only a few minutes and begin with: "The general error you are making is" or "Your whole problem is" or "All your examples show" or "Where you are making your mistake is," etc. In fact, many begin their conversation with "I think that," "It seems to me," "I feel that," "I would say," "In my opinion," "I have always believed," "I have been taught," or "My gut reaction is"--all of which is irrelevant and immaterial. Who cares? What difference does it make what people think or feel? The question is not what one feels but what the Book says. Before criticizing the writings of others you would do well to note that in your own literature you not only often spend too much time on petty details of a secondary, if not tertiary character, but also seek to rewrite or reinterpret biblical verses of a troublesome nature in the many versions available, while carefully avoiding the creation of your own version, because you don't want to stick your neck out. After all, we both know it would be much harder to say "that's what it says but that's not what it means" when you wrote it yourself. If you were the author and repeatedly used that approach, one could reasonably conclude that your writing skills are nil. Fourth, upon what basis do you conclude that "people who would be willing to accept" my reading of the Bible would not be willing to ask themselves too many questions about what I have to put in its place. Why do you feel qualified to make a psychological evaluation of our readership, few of whom you have ever met? How do you know what they are thinking? Based on past experience, the readers of BE ask questions in abundance. Indeed, unlike NT Christians who don't mind being referred to as sheep with a shepherd, our readers are quite inquisitive and independent and have asked us many personal questions. Fifth, when did I say I attended a meeting of the American Atheists? I tried to set up a booth several years ago at one of their meetings in Kentucky, but that never materialized for reasons mentioned in the 16th Issue. Sixth, you object to the fact that I printed FG's letter suggesting that you should be 'sued' for calling me an 'anti-theist'. I fail to see how this was "reprehensible." Are you saying FG is not entitled to his opinion? He made a suggestion which I have no intention of implimenting. What's wrong with that? And lastly, only one of your comments has much credibility. You say that "it is hard to escape the logical conclusion that if you do not personally claim to be an atheist, you show great sympathy for that world-view." With that I have little disagreement, James.

Even if you claim some kind of theistic belief, whether pantheistic, deistic, panentheistic, or whatever, the fact remains that from my perspective it is perfectly logical to label your work, and yourself, as an anti-theist. If God has truly revealed Himself in Jesus Christ (and this is a basic belief of Christianity), then to be opposed to that revelation is to be opposed to God Himself. The apostle John put it this way, "Whoever denies the Son does not have the Father" (1 John 2:23). In that case, all who oppose the testimony and message of Jesus Christ are, by Biblical definition, "atheists," for they do not have God.

You have given a great deal of evidence in the pages of BE of holding views that are fully in line with atheistic concepts. If you do not wish to be called an atheist, then state your world-view clearly and openly so that it can be evaluated and accurately reviewed.

Editor's Response to Letter #378 (Part b)

With each passing minute you are digging your hole deeper, James. Now the narrowness of your perspective steps out of the shadows with an ominous appearance second to none. You say that "if God has truly revealed Himself in Jesus Christ..., then to be opposed to that revelation is to be opposed to God Himself....'Whoever denies the Son does not have the Father' (1 John 2:23)....all who oppose the testimony and message of Jesus Christ are, by Biblical definition, 'atheists,' for they do not have God." According to you, not only is every Moslem, Jew, and Hindu an atheist but so are many organizations you refer to as cults. They are all atheists because they all deny the divinity of Jesus and much of his message. To oppose that revelation is to oppose God Himself? That's about as restricted a view as one can have and you are only corroborating the commentary we had on EXCLUSIVISM several months ago. Under your definition almost the entire world is composed of atheists.

My world view, with which you seem obsessed, would probably be that of agnosticism, although I have stated I have no firm views in this regard. I didn't realize my world-view had been closely guarded rather reasonably open for all to evaluate.

I am enclosing my renewal for BE. When my new book The Truth on Trial comes out later this year, I'll need to make sure that "Biblical Errancy" is spelled properly, n'est-ce pas? I also find BE to be useful in teaching classes on the Bible, and modern attacks upon it. Most students are not only amazed at the leaps of illogic presented in each issue, but they are most surprised by your dogmatic insistence of not recognizing the different kinds of literature and language in the Bible. You often mix up various kinds of literature, not following the only logical path of interpretation which would keep you from contrasting your literal view of a passage of poetry or parable with your literal view of a passage of apocalyptic literature. And your consistent (I will give you that) inability to understand the language of the text within any context other than your own very limited one is often noted as well.

A recent example from the September, 1989 issue, under "Peter versus the OT," number 1, demonstrates this. You cite Peter's statement that "God is no respecter of persons" and then contrast this with many statements in regards to God's election of a people for Himself. Of course, you have badly misunderstood what "respecter of persons" means, and, on the basis of that error, have gone on to create a non-existent contradiction. Being a "respecter of persons" would mean that God is influenced by the actions or status of individuals; that He would be "impressed" by one person who might claim to have some kind of "special position" before God, some kind of "merit" in His sight. The fact that God, outside of any action of man, but solely on the basis of His own will, has chosen to elect a people to Himself (Deuteronomy 7:6-8 for the people of Israel; Ephesians 1:3-11 under the new covenant) demonstrates the truth that Peter announced: God's election is not based upon any action of man (for then He would indeed be a "respecter of persons") but is based solely on His will and purpose. The contradiction exists only in your misunderstanding.

Editor's Response to Letter #378 (Part c)

"Leaps in illogic," "dogmatic insistence," "inability to understand the language of the text within any context other than your own!" There you go again, James, throwing glittering generalities around with reckless abandon, using phrases that are most applicable to yourself. Only after moving 2/3's of the way through your letter do you actually get down to a specific piece of evidence. And what an example it is! One thing I have always noticed about your logic, James, is that it is always off-center. For some reason you can't seem to arrange a mass of facts into a meaningful hierarchy. You gather data but don't seem to know what to do with it or how to prioritize. You don't seem to have a feel for what is important and what isn't. You get so involved in that which is of lesser importance that you lose the big picture. You also don't seem to realize that your "resolutions" of biblical contradictions often create more problems than are resolved. In this instance, for example, you conclude your defense by saying, "God's election is not based upon any action of man...but is based solely on His will and purpose." If that isn't playing favorites, what is? People should be chosen on the basis of merit, effort, and behavior. According to you it's based on God's whim or capriciousness, and has nothing to do with their actions. In that case, what other criteria could there be except "playing favorites?" Remember my Commentary entitled Works or Whim in the Nov. 1988 Issue? You stepped off the bank into the quicksand.

But equally important, upon what basis do you conclude that being a "respector of persons" would mean God is influenced by the status or "special position" of "one person?" You are engaging in "eisegesis" not "exegesis." Acts 10:34 in the NASB says, "God is not one to show partiality;" the NIV says, "Does not show favoritism;" the NEB says, "God has no favourites;" and the Good News says, "God treats everyone on the same basis." None of these versions as well as others I could cite are referring in any sense to particular individuals with a higher status or position. They are all referring to humanity in general and saying God will consider no one above another. They are not saying God is looking upon people with a higher status in the eyes of men and considering them equal to all others. All you have done is concoct an arbitrary definition of "no respector of persons" for purposes of expediency. The only one who has badly misunderstood the text is yourself. You are the one who displays an "inability to understand the language of the text within any context other than your own." You have a preconceived notion of what the Book should say and the text is going to be bent accordingly, regardless. Also worthy of note in your writings is that you, like all fundamentalists, jettison the literal interpretation of scripture when it no longer suits your ends. When the literal interpretation exposes an obvious contradiction, you quickly resort to figurative, allegorical and symbolic meanings. Contrary to fundamentalist propaganda, little of the Bible is composed of poetry or prose. Vague and obscure verses abound, but there is little reason to believe they are not to be taken literally. Even more important, those are not the ones upon which we focus. Nebulous books such as Revelation and Daniel are the last to fall under our ax.

The same is to be said of your supposed contradiction cited in an even more recent issue, that being #115 of December, 1989. Ignoring the Biblical teaching that Jesus is identified as Jehovah God in the NT, you assert that Jesus' statement that no one had seen the Father is contradicted by the visions of Jehovah God in the OT. Of course, if one were to logically think about this, one would see your error. If Jesus Christ, the Son, is identified with the Father as Jehovah God, and if John wrote, "No man has seen God at any time, the unique God, who is in the bosom of the Father, He has made Him known" (John 1:18), then the one who was seen in the OT and who is identified as Jehovah (as when Jehovah walked with Abraham by the oaks of Mamre, or when Isaiah saw Jehovah in Isaiah 6:1/John 12:40-41), then the individual that they saw was the Son, not the Father. No man has seen the Father at any time. The passages you cite from the OT do not say that it was the Father who was seen. Again, your "contradiction" is found to rest solely on your own ignorance of the whole Biblical teaching.

Editor's Response to Letter #378 (Part d)

Remember the old cliché, "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander?" I can't resist it this time, James. If you can use the Trinity at will, so can I. God and Jesus are identical, remember! So the text is guilty of a blatant lie when it says, "Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape." Jesus was heard and seen by many on numerous occasions; therefore, by your own definition, God has been seen and heard also. And that's that.

But your argument is also flawed in other respects. Your comment that "if one were to logically think about this, one would see your error" describes your position exactly. The only ignorance involved comes from your almost total inability to critically analyze a book that has more holes in it than a backdoor screen. You have been so indoctrinated from birth that you are incapable of viewing the Bible with any real degree of objectivity. Indeed, the very idea of the Book being flawed is so far outside your realm of possibility that you will employ any rationalization, justification, prevarication, or obfuscation to put the best face on a hopeless mess. Case in point! In the present instance, you cite John 1:18 which refers to seeing God when that was never mentioned in the 115th example. That wasn't even a part of the contradiction. You subtly tried to shift the focus from hearing to seeing. The 115th example referred to the contradiction between John 5:37 which says God was never heard and numerous examples to the contrary. Gen. 3:8-10 says the Lord God called unto Adam; Ex. 19:19 says Moses spoke and God answered him by a voice, and Job 38:1 says the Lord answered Job out of a whirlwind. What more do you want? How could the text be any clearer? The Lord God is talking in the OT and Jesus is completely wrong when he said in John 5:37 that no one has heard God at any time. Moreover, John 5:37 says God's shape was not seen, but you admit yourself that God was seen by Isaiah (Isa. 6:1) and walked with Abraham by the Oaks of Mamre. So He was not only heard but seen.

Incidentally, you quoted John 1:18 as saying, "No man has seen God at any time, the unique God, who is in the bosom of the Father, He has made Him known" when many versions (the KJV, JB, NIV, ASV, BBE, LB, and NEB) say the underlined part should be "the only begotten son." The latter would make more sense since putting God, rather than the son, in the bosom of the Father would make the Bible even more absurd than it already is.

COMMENTARY

SALVATION BY GRACE--Few biblical topics are more confusing or contradictory than that of salvation. Is it obtained by works, by faith, by predestination, by grace or by some other mechanism. Texts are wholly inconsistent in this regard. Although the fundamentalist wing of Christianity contends that faith alone is the sole means by which to obtain salvation, many verses show that it is obtained by grace, a euphemism for "whim." God simply looks down and chooses who he wishes to save based on no criterion other than capriciousness. Verses in support of this position are: PSALM 65:4 ("Blessed is the man whom thou chooseth and causeth to be near unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts"), JOHN 6:44 ("No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him"), 1 COR. 12:18 ("But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him"), JOHN 6:65 ("And he said, Therefore said I unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father"), ROM. 9:18 ("Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth"), ROM. 9:16 ("So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy"), JOHN 3:27 ("A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven"), EPH. 2:8-9 ("For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God not of works, lest any man should boast"), 2 TIM. 1:9 ("Who [God--Ed.] hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began"), TITUS 3:5 ("Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost"), ISAIAH 43:25 ("I, even I [God--Ed.], am he who blotteth out the transgressions for my own sake, and thy sins I will not remember"), ACTS 22:14, JER. 30:21, ROM. 3:24, ROM. 11:5, ACTS 15:11, EPH. 2:5, and PSALM 86:13. Is it any wonder many Christians throw themselves on fate and allow the elements to direct their destiny? Why be concerned when salvation is out of one's hands anyway.

Other verses say we are saved by "calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 2:21, Joel 2:32, Rom. 10:13), "hope" (Rom. 8:24), "fearing the Lord" (Acts 10:34), and "eating Jesus" (John 6:50-51, 53-54, 57-58). With verses such as these, is it any wonder the issue is so terribly muddled.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #379 from RS of Richmond, Virginia (Part a)

Dear Dennis. In your Jesus Christ Is the Answer? pamphlet on #8 ["How could Jesus, whom the NT repeatedly refers to as the son of man, be our savior when this is clearly forestalled by Psalm 146:3 ('Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help') and Job 25:6 ('How much less man, that is a worm? and the son of man, which is a worm')"?] you cite Psalm 146:3 and Job 25:6 but couldn't the phrase "son of man" have been identified with Jesus later? Perhaps by himself about himself? OT verses shown might only apply to earthly men and their sons.

Editor's Response to Letter #379 (Part a)

Dear RS. What difference would it make when the phrase was applied to Jesus or if it was applied to himself by himself later? The fact remains that we have an OT verse that can be related to Jesus far more easily than most of the OT verses that apologists apply to him. As long as he is called "the son of man" in the NT, that is all that is necessary. When the phrase was first applied to him and by whom is irrelevant. That makes no difference. We still have an OT verse that can be applied to him because of identical words in the NT.

Letter #379 Concludes (Part b)

Also in the same tract is #17 which states ["Jesus told a man in Mark 8:34 that 'whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me.' What cross? He hadn't died on the cross yet. There was nothing to take up. That man would have had no idea what he was talking about"]. Didn't the Romans execute people by crucifixion throughout the ancient world during NT times?

Editor's Response to Letter #379 (Part b)

I fail to see how your comment addresses the issue, RS. Yes, the Romans used crucifixion but the text is referring to the Christian cross in particular. Are you saying Jesus meant that one should take up just any cross? If so, then Jesus would be saying that one could follow him by just taking up any cross and there need be no reference to Christianity whatever. But that ignores the context because the next verse ("For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it") shows Jesus is dealing with salvation itself and that could only refer to the Christian cross.

Letter #380 from KEH of Sacramento, California

Dear Dennis. I received issue #90 of BE. Congratulations on one of your best issues -- most of the chronological contradictions were brief, pithy and compelling, the kind that are easy to communicate and difficult to refute. Lots of great ammunition here for debates. I believed I noticed an error, however. Please double check item (14) on the first page. According to your entry, in the Luke passage Jesus said during supper that the hand of his betrayer was with him on the table, while in the Matthew and Mark passages Jesus made the announcement after supper. But this is what I found when I looked up the passages in the King James Version, the NIV and the NAB: {At this point KEH quoted Luke 22:14-21, Matthew 26:21, and Mark 14:18--ED.}. It seems that every version of each passage implies that the announcement took place during the supper. If you made an error, you should correct it as soon as possible, before the fundamentalists pounce on it and use it against you.

Editor's Response to Letter #380

Dear KEH. I did make a mistake in this instance but not the one you suggest. My 14th point in the 90th issue's Commentary was as follows: ("In Luke 22:14-21 Jesus said during supper that the hand of his betrayer was with him on the table, while in Matt. 26:21 and Mark 14:18 Jesus made this statement after supper"). "During" and "after" should have been reversed. The comment was made after supper in Luke and during supper in Matthew and Mark--not the other way around. I stand corrected.

However, your concluding comment that "every version of each passage implies that the announcement took place during the supper" is inaccurate. Because you have been a long-time supporter of BE, I am inclined to believe you are making a sincere attempt to be of assistance. Otherwise, I would view this as a subtle apologetic maneuver to create a defense where none exists. Although you correctly quoted Matthew 26:21 and Mark 14:18, you failed to quote all of Luke 22:14-21. Instead you omitted verses 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, which are critical to what occurred. Verses 17 and 18 clearly show them eating supper and verses 19 and 20 are even more important. Notice what they say in the RSV: "And he took bread, and when he had given thanks he broke it and gave it to them, saying, 'This is my body which is given for you. Do this in remembrance of me'. And likewise the cup after supper, saying, 'This cup which is poured out for you is the new covenant in my blood'." It says "after supper" and then verse 21 refers to the hand of the betrayer being on the table. Clearly, then, the comment with respect to the hand being on the table was made after supper in Luke and the contradiction remains.

Letter #381 from TF of Pasadena, Maryland (Part a)

(TF is editor of the Bible Answers Newsletter. In Issues 77, 78, 79, 80, 84, and 85 we debated many of the points made in the two pamphlets issued by BE. TF again seeks to resume the encounter by debating other material--ED.).

Dennis McKinsey...in his Feb. 1990 issue writes...["MATT. 19:17-19 ('...but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He said unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother: and Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself'). Jesus omitted 5 of the 10 commandments. Possibly he doesn't know the entire 10 or he doesn't consider 5 of them to be commandment material. In any event, he created one of his own ('Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself') out of whole cloth."]

There you go again, Dennis. As I have already pointed out in two previous issues of BAN (Jan. 89, p. 7 and Sept 89, p. 3) you are incorrect in assuming that there are only ten commandments. Specifically, I wrote in the Sept. 89 issue: "Matt. 19:16-22 has Jesus quoting another commandment which isn't among the Big 10, namely Lev. 19:18.: In the King James version the following command is found in that OT verse: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Furthermore, none of the gospel accounts claims to present the entire dialogue, so you are speculating when you assert that "Jesus omitted 5 of the 10 commandments." It appears that your sarcastic tone is totally unjustified.

Editor's Response to Letter #381 (Part a)

Dear TF. I really wish you would read the Bible more and theorize less. You make so many mistakes so rapidly it is hard to stay abreast. First, virtually every Christian scholar I know of claims there are 10 commandments. I have never heard of anyone saying there are eleven, twelve or thirteen. Who in the world is supporting your position? Are you quoting someone? Second, the 10 commandments are listed in Exodus 20:3-17 and Deut. 5 and are specifically labeled as such in the Revised Standard Version, the Today's English Version, the New American Bible, the American Standard Version, the New International Version, the Jerusalem Bible and the Living Bible. Are you saying you are more knowledgeable in this regard than all the scholars who translated all of these versions? I am not "assuming that there are only 10;" I'm stating a fact that is conceded by virtually everyone I know of except yourself. You embark upon some of the most untenable arguments I have ever heard, TF. They border on the inane. Third, if you are not going to limit the 10 commandments to the 10 rules specifically laid down by God in Ex. 20:3-17 and Deut. 5:7-21, you are going to blend them into the hundreds of other rules and regulations God laid down in the OT. Upon what biblical basis, then, are you going to make a distinction? And if you don't make a distinction, then Jesus should have added not only Lev. 19:18 but hundreds of other requirements. Fourth, nothing in the OT says Lev. 19:18 is one of the commandments. In fact, it isn't even listed in the same book with the 10 commandments. So obviously Jesus created one of his own, since there are literally hundreds of other maxims he could have drawn from the OT. Fifth, he certainly did omit five of the ten, which virtually every scholar I know of would admit. Moreover, according to you there are 11 commandments in which case I could have said he omitted 5 of the eleven. Sixth, you claim that "none of the gospel accounts claims to present the entire dialogue" so I am speculating when I assert that "Jesus omitted 5 of the 10 commandments." Your scholarship is going from bad to worse, TF. I am not speculating, you are. You are guessing there was additional dialogue for which there is not a shred of biblical evidence. Following your logic, everyone on this planet could revamp the Bible dramatically by simply inserting, in a wholly gratuitous manner, any kind of dialogue they deemed appropriate at any point of his or her choosing. Talk about utter chaos! The Bible is chaotic enough as it is. It doesn't need your assistance; it's doing quite well on its own. Many months ago I suggested that you consult more competent apologists, TF. Apparently you ignored my advice and struck out on your own again.

Letter #381 Continues (Part b)

McKinsey continues: "And in Matt. 9:14-15, Mark 2:18-20, and John 8:4-11 he denied the OT law requiring fasting." Wrong again, McKinsey. First John 8:4-11 does not refer to fasting. Perhaps you meant Luke 5:33-35, the parallel passage to the other two you cite. Secondly, Jesus neither forbids nor commands fasting, so you cannot conclude that "he denied" a law which requires fasting. Finally, contrary to your claim, there is no "OT law requiring fasting."

Editor's Response to Letter #381 (Part b)

Again, let's take them one at a time. First, you said there is no OT law requiring fasting. Let me recommend The New Compact Bible Dictionary of 1967 by Zondervan Publishing House. You'll find the following observation on page 173: "The only fast required was that of the Day of Atonement. Before the Babylonian Captivity it was the one regular fast (Lev. 16:29, 31; 23:27-32; Num. 29:7; Jer. 36:6)." Jer. 36:6 even says "in the Lord's house upon the fasting day." Second, whether Jesus forbid or commanded fasting is irrelevant to the point at issue. We are discussing what he said when asked by the disciples of John and the Pharisees why his disciples did not fast. He said it was not necessary while he was with them. In other words, as I said, he ignored the OT law requiring fasting. Third, your only correct comment was that Luke 5:33-35 should have been substituted for John 8:4-11. With as many verses as I employ, it's a wonder there aren't more miscitations.

...McKinsey continues: [On the other hand, we have Paul's comment in 1 Cor. 1:17 ("For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel...") which strongly implies baptism is not required and directly opposes the Great Commission. Moreover, if baptism is an absolute requirement for salvation, why would Paul say, "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius," and why did Jesus baptize no one according to John 4:2 ("although Jesus Himself was not baptizing, but His disciples were"). Other verses could be used by both sides in this debate, but that would only muddy the waters further. The fact remains that the biblical position on baptism, as with many other major topics, is inconclusive and leads to no definitive resolution of the conflict].

Dennis, let me quote again from the Jan 89 issue (p. 5) of Bible Answers Newsletter, where I answered you on the same subject: "You are absolutely incorrect. Paul never spoke against baptism. First, Jesus sent the eleven to teach and baptize (Matt. 28:19-20). Then, he sent Paul to preach to the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel (Acts 9:15). Paul did not contradict the assignments Jesus had given the eleven. Instead, Paul taught that it is God's wise choice to assign different work to different people (1 Cor. 12). Paul did baptize (1 Cor. 1:14-17), but it was not the essence of his ministry to do so (verse 17)."

You now ask why Paul would say, "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius..." Paul himself answers you in the second half of that sentence, "...lest any should say that I had baptized in my own name...."

Editor's Response to Letter #381 (Part c)

You don't read as closely as you should, TF. In 1 Cor. Paul said Christ sent him not to baptize but to preach the gospel and I said that "strongly implies baptism is not required and directly opposes the Great Commission." Your response is that "Paul did baptize (1 Cor. 1:14-17) but it was not the essence of his ministry to do so (verse 17)." What difference does it make whether or not it is the essence of his ministry when the 17th verse says he was not to baptize at all? He didn't say, "I'm not to baptize if I'm going to consider it within the essence of my ministry." The fact is that Paul did baptize according to the Great Commission of Matt. 28:19 ("Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of...") and, yet, he said "Christ sent me not to baptize....", period. The Great Commission did not say "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing...them without considering it within the essence of your mission." Why is he baptizing at all when he said "Christ sent me not to baptize?"

Paul's comment about Crispus and Gaius is without strength also. He said, "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius Lest any should say that I baptized in my own name." Then why did he baptize them either, because people could say he did so in his own name? Moreover, following this logic, the Great Commission should be totally ignored by everyone because anyone who baptizes anybody could be accused of doing so in his own name? My original comment on page 3 that "the biblical position on baptism, as with many other major topics, is inconsistent" remains intact.

Letter #382 from SS of Winter Haven, Florida (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I wouldn't call you overzealous and vituperative. You do a good job. But Ingersoll and Twain...as quoted in Issue #89 certainly are vituperative and overzealous. They should have abided by the leading quote, page 1, "...first prove facts and deduce doctrines from them afterwards." Don't "assume everything and prove nothing." I'm in reference to the quotes under the heading "God," bottom of page 3, in which Ingersoll calls the Hebrew God "utterly detestable," and then Geismar claims Twain said the Jewish God breaks all of His own laws, including adultery. And Ingersoll calls the Jewish God despicable, hateful and arrogant." These claims are left unsupported by quotes and examples from the OT. (Anything in the NT of course refers to the Christian God, not the Jewish God, and the Christian God can be said to have committed adultery with Mary, naturally.)

Editor's Response to Letter #382 (Part a)

Dear SS. One might contend that Ingersoll and Twain were vituperative, but they wouldn't have much trouble proving that the Bible's presentation of God was anything but complimentary. BE's third issue showed that God's behavior in the Bible is little short of appalling. Surely you don't wish to dispute that point? Secondly, how do you distinguish a Jewish God from a Christian God? There is only one God according to the Bible. There may be two different presentations of God but there is only one God. Judging from your statement, one could easily conclude you believe in two gods and are bitheistic.

Letter #382 Continues (Part b)

The demonstrable fact is that chapter and verse quotes exist in the OT that prove the exact opposite of Ingersoll's and Twain's claims. For example, Ex. 34:6-7 describes the Jewish God as follows: "And the Lord passed by before Moses, and proclaimed, 'The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and who will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation'."

Editor's Response to Letter #382 (Part b)

It's hard to believe that you used this quotation to prove your point, SS. You concentrated so much on words such as merciful, gracious, longsuffering, goodness, mercy, forgiving, and truth that you ignored the second part which virtually nullifies the first. It clearly states he will punish the children for the sins of the fathers for many generations to come. That's precisely the opposite of merciful, gracious, good, and forgiving.

Letter #382 Continues (Part c)

It only makes your otherwise excellent newsletter lose credibility if you put in quotes that have no supporting proof or quotes, and that in fact can be proven untrue with chapter and verse quotes. It seems to me the quotes of Ingersoll and Twain are typical anti-Semitic diatribes that aren't aimed against religion or the truth of the Bible, but only aimed against Jews and the Jewish religion. Such quotes don't help the cause of atheism. It has become a "scholarly" thing, even, for anti-Semites to say that the Jewish God was an angry, vengeful God, while the Christian God is a loving and forgiving God.... It is the Christian God, through the NT, that says the whole world has to be converted to Christianity and non-Christians are damned to eternal hell. It is the Christian God that is the angry and vengeful one. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son so that anyone who doesn't fall on his knees and worship Jesus will burn in eternal hell. Some "love"!....

Editor's Response to Letter #382 (Part c)

Anti-semitism has nothing to do with the writings of Ingersoll and Twain, SS. One need only read all of Ingersoll's religious commentaries to see that he has little use for the God of the OT, the NT, the Koran, or any other testament. He doesn't make the kind of distinction you offer. In fact, your criticism of the Christian belief that one must accept Jesus or burn in hell is a point with which he is in full agreement and often expressed. Christians often distinguish God's behavior in the OT from that of the NT for the reasons you suggest, but that cannot be validly attributed to Exposers of the Bible such as Ingersoll and Twain.

Letter #383 from JB of Annapolis, Maryland

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I was pleasantly surprised to receive your sample issue of Biblical Errancy. Immediately, I ripped open the envelope and quickly read the contents, savoring each syllable. Needless to say, I found it to be enormously engaging. In fact, I got quite a kick from it. A finer little newsletter was never published for less than two dollars.

Alas, you have tempted my darker, fiendishly non-religious self. Consequently, you must send more without delay! I am particularly interested in arguments against the divinity of Jesus and the existence of miracles; the more esoteric the better. If you happen to have anything that screams out to be read, send that too....

Dear Dennis.... I did a fun show in Seattle last week. I was teamed up with a Baptist (fundamentalist) preacher, RC priest, and a Sephardim Rabbi. I got more than my fair share of time, this time. The audience was fairly well distributed. It was mostly state/church separation, but the bible did come up now and then. They conducted a (non-scientific) phone-in poll of viewers on the question, "Do you believe in a god?" The response was 69% YES and 31% NO. I thought that was a mistake because the national polls normally show atheists between 5% and 10% but I was told that the Pacific Northwest is pretty individualistic--lots of frontier-type people. There are many more freethinkers in this country than people realize. It's just that most of us are not overly eager to proselytize or advertize our unbelief so the impression is that everyone is religious....

Would you like an analysis I did on the contradiction between Acts 9:7 and Acts 22:9?....

Editor's Response to Letter #384

Dear Dan. Your experience in Seattle tends to show that the results of polls are often dependent on those who take them. Pollsters have attitudes, too, and no doubt many go to church. I read your analysis on the contradiction between Acts 9:7 and 22:9 some time ago. Perhaps you don't remember sending me a copy. But thanks for the offer.

Letter #385 from JK of New York, New York

Dear Dennis. I'm very pleased with your listing of pertinent quotations, many of which I had never encountered. They will be valuable ammunition in the on-going battle with superstitious believers. You're a valuable resource and I greatly admire your dedication to the cause of free thought.

COMMENTARY

Before returning to the Bible directly, this month's commentary as well as that which follows will continue the alphabetical listing of notable quotes which last appeared in the May, 1990 issue.

QUOTATIONS

(PART 4)

GOSPELS--"To prove the Gospels by a miracle is to prove an absurdity by something contrary to nature." Diderot

"We are distressed because our churches are half empty; and many of them would be emptier if the Gospel were preached in them." William Inge {This quote has contradictory interpretations--Ed.}

HEBREWS--"In the first place, the fact that Hebrews is not an epistle of St. Paul, or of any other apostle, is proved by what it says in chapter 2...." Luther's Works, Vol. 35, p. 304

"Another great difficulty occurs in chapters 6 and 10 (of Hebrews--ED.) where the epistle flatly denies and refuses to recognize a sinner's repentance for sin after baptism; and in chapter 12, it says that Esau sought repentance and did not find it. This contradicts (Note Well--ED.) all the gospels and St. Paul's epistles. Although one might attempt to explain it away by a gloss, the words are so clear that I do not know whether it could be done. My opinion is that this is an epistle put together of many pieces, which does not deal systematically with any one subject." Luther's Works, Vol. 35, p. 394-95

HISTORY--"For my own part, I do not believe there is one word of historical truth in the whole book (the Bible--Ed.). I look upon it at best to be a romance: the principal personage of which is an imaginary or allegorical character founded upon some tale...." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine, p. 244-45

"It is safe to say that every truth in the histories of those times is the result of accident or mistake." "Ghosts" in Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 294

HUMAN SACRIFICE--"Christian authors exclaim against the practise of offering up human sacrifices, which, they say, is done in some countries; and those authors make those exclamations without ever reflecting that their own doctrine of salvation is founded on a human sacrifice. They are saved, they say, by the blood of Christ. The Christian religion begins with a dream and ends with a murder." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 295

INCARNATION--"And the day will come, when the mystical generation of Jesus, by the Supreme Being as his father, in the womb of a virgin, will be classed with the fable of the generation of Minerva in the brain of Jupiter...." Jefferson's Works, by H.A. Washington, Vol. 7, p. 284

INERRANCY--"Few intelligent Christians can still hold to the idea that the Bible is an infallible Book, that it contains no linguistic errors, no historical discrepancies, no antiquated scientific assumptions, not even bad ethical standards. Historical investigation and literary criticism have taken the magic out of the Bible and have made it a composite human book, written by many hands in different ages. The existence of thousands of variations of texts makes it impossible to hold the doctrine of a book verbally infallible. Some might claim for the original copies of the Bible an infallible character, but this view only begs the question and makes such Christian apologetics more ridiculous in the eyes of sincere men." Christianity in America, by Elmer Homrighausen, former Dean of Princeton Theological Seminary, p. 121

INFIDELITY--"Infidelity does not consist in believing, or in disbelieving; it consists in professing to believe what he does not believe." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 22

"'Infidel' is a term of reproach, which Christians and Mohammedans, in their modesty, agree to apply to those who differ from them." Science and Christian Tradition, Thomas Huxley, p. 233

INSPIRATION--"...if the Bible is true, it needs no inspiration, and...if not true, inspiration can do it no good." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 11, p. 233

"The inspiration of the Bible depends upon the ignorance of the gentleman who reads it." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 11, p. 387

"...but if the witnesses are inspired of God then there is no reason for their disagreeing on anything, and if they do disagree it is a demonstration that they were not inspired...." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 11, p. 295

"No matter how many people regard the Bible as inspired--that fact furnishes no evidence that it is inspired. Just as many people have regarded other books as inspired; just as millions have been deluded about the inspiration of books ages and ages before Christianity was born." "Interviews" in Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 298

INTERPRETATION--"No public man believes that the Bible means what it says: he is always convinced it says what he means." George Bernard Shaw

"A good rule for interpretation is: 'If the literal sense makes good sense, seek no other sense lest you come up with nonsense'." Anonymous

"It must be remembered that a deviation from the literal sense is not justified unless the Scriptures themselves prescribe such a course." Bible Difficulties, by Apologist W. Arndt, p. 133

"There are no witches. The witch text remains; only the practice has changed. Hell fire is gone, but the text remains. Infant damnation is gone, but the text remains. More than two hundred death penalties are gone from the law books, but the texts that authorized them remain." Mark Twain and the Three R's, Ed. by Maxwell Geismar, p. 110

INTOLERANCE--"He who begins by loving Christianity better than Truth, will proceed by loving his sect or church better than Christianity, and end in loving himself better than all." Samuel Taylor Coleridge

ISAIAH--"Whoever will take the trouble of reading the book ascribed to Isaiah, will find it one of the most wild and disorderly compositions ever put together; it has neither beginning, middle, nor end; and, except for a short historical part, and a few sketches of history in the first two or three chapters, is one continued, incoherent, bombastical rant, full of extravagant metaphor, without application, and destitute of meaning; a school-boy would scarcely have been excusable for writing such stuff; it is...prose run mad." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 129-130

"Isaiah is, upon the whole, a wild, disorderly writer, preserving in general no clear chain of perception in the arrangement of his ideas, and consequently producing no defined conclusions from them. It is the wildness of his style, the confusion of his ideas, and the ranting metaphors he employs, that have afforded so many opportunities to priestcraft in some cases, and to superstition in others, to impose those defects upon the world as prophecies of Jesus Christ. Finding no direct meaning in them, and not knowing what to make of them, and supposing at the same time they were intended to have a meaning, they supplied the defect by inventing a meaning of their own, and called it his (Isaiah's--ED)." The Life and Works of Paine, Vol. 9, p. 229-30

JAMES, THE BOOK OF--"Many sweat to reconcile St. Paul and St. James.... but in vain. 'Faith justifies' and 'faith does not justify' contradict each other flatly. [Isn't it refreshing to hear an avowed apologist, especially one as knowledgeable as Luther, dispense with all the doubletalk and rationalizing by admitting the obvious--ED.). If any one can harmonize them I will give him my doctor's hood and let him call me a fool." The Life and Letters of Martin Luther, by Preserved Smith, p. 269

"This enables one to observe that the Epistle of James is no truly apostolic epistle...." Luther's Works, Vol. 30, p. 12

"We should throw the Epistle of James out of this school (the University of Wittenberg--ED.) for it doesn't amount to much. It contains not a syllable about Christ. Not once does it mention Christ, except at the beginning. I maintain that some Jew wrote it who probably heard about Christian people but never encountered any. Since he heard that Christians place great weight on faith in Christ, he thought, 'wait a moment. I'll oppose them and urge works alone.' This he did.... Besides, there is no order or method in the epistle. Now he discusses clothing and then he writes about wrath and is constantly shifting from one to the other. He presents a comparison: 'As the body apart from the spirit is dead, so faith apart from works is dead.' O Mary, mother of God! What a terrible comparison that is! James compares faith with the body when he should rather have compared faith with the soul! The ancients recognized this, too, and therefore they didn't acknowledge the Book of James as one of the catholic epistles." "Table Talk" in Luther's Works, Vol. 54, p. 424-25

"...to be sure, we cannot put it (the Epistle of James--ED.) on the same level with the apostolic epistles." Luther's Works, Vol. 35, p. 395

"However, to state my own opinion about it (the Epistle of James--ED.), though without prejudice to anyone I do not regard it as the writing of an apostle, and my reasons follow. In the first place it is flatly against St. Paul and all the rest of Scripture in ascribing justification to works (2:24). It says that Abraham was justified by his works when he offered his son Isaac (2:21), though in Romans 4:2-22 Paul teaches to the contrary that Abraham was justified apart from works, by his faith alone, before he had offered his son....this epistle is not the work of any apostle. ...(the author of James--ED) throws things together so chaotically that it seems to me he must have been some good, pious man, who took a few sayings from the disciples of the apostles and thus tossed them off on paper." Luther's Works, Vol. 35, p. 396-97

"Therefore, St. James' epistle is really an epistle of straw, compared to these others, for it has nothing of the nature of the gospel about it." Luther's Works, Vol. 35, p. 362

"I almost feel like throwing Jimmy into the stove, as the priest in Kulenberg did." Luther's Works, Vol. 34, p. 317

JESUS--"I believe Christ was a man like ourselves; to look upon him as God would seem to me the greatest of sacrileges." Leo Tolstoy

"The careful reader of the NT will find three Christs described:--One who wished to preserve Judaism--one who wished to reform it, and one who built a system of his own." "What Must I Do To Be Saved," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 443

"There are some of his sayings which show him to have been a devout Jew, others that he wished to destroy Judaism, others showing that he held all people except the Jews in contempt and that the wished to save no others, others showing that he wished to convert the world, still others showing that he was forgiving, self-denying and loving, others that he was revengeful and malicious, others, that he was ascetic, holding all human ties in utter contempt." "The Foundations of Faith," in Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 4, p. 270

"The Son of God was crucified; I am not ashamed because men must needs be ashamed of it. And the Son of God died; it is by all means to be believed, because it is absurd. And He was buried, and rose again; the fact is certain, because it is impossible." Tertullian in The Ante-Nicene Fathers, by Roberts & Donaldson, Chapter 5, p. 525

JONAH--"It required effort once for the whale to swallow Jonah, and now it requires effort to swallow the story." Anonymous

"Jonah proved that you can't keep a good man down." Anonymous

JUDE--"...although I value the book, yet it is not essential to reckon it among the canonical books that lay the foundation of faith." Luther's Works, Vol. 35., p. 398

LIBRARIES--"Every library is an arsenal...." "The Ghosts," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 313

MESSIAH--"The central problem of Christianity is: if the Messiah has come, why is the world so evil? For Judaism, the problem is: if the world is so evil, why does the Messiah not come." Seymour Siegel

Dear Dennis. I think your June B.E. is just wonderful, especially Imminence and Miracles. Regarding the so-called Exclusivism of salvation through Jesus, a theologically significant contradiction appears in Isaiah 43:11--"I, even I, am the Lord [Yahweh]; and beside me there is no savior." According to this, Jesus is superfluous.

I also agree with letter #368 from SHF of PA that B.E. does a fantastic job of getting the periodical out regularly and on time. However, SHF must not be a subscriber to Freethought Today when s/he says of every freethought publication {that s/he knows exists} that "All the others are late or published erratically." Freethought Today has never been published late. Since 1983 its 10 issues a year have been regularly published and mailed during or before the month of publication. Our aim is to have it mailed the week preceding the month of issue, but occasionally it is 1 - 3 weeks behind schedule, such as when editor Annie Laurie was hospitalized last September. Still, it has never been mailed after the month of issue. However, bulk mail can travel slowly. We sometimes hear from subscribers on the east and west coasts that it takes 2 - 3 weeks for delivery. B.E. probably hears the same thing. All this is to say that we appreciate the effort and dedication it takes for you to continue to publish an excellent and professional periodical. Please be encouraged.

Editor's Response to Letter #386

Dear Dan. We appreciate your kind words and hasten to add that your scholarship and professional demeanor on the media and in your writings show you are qualified to be the leading atheist spokesman in the Nation. As far as the Isa. 43:11 quote is concerned, apologists will probably pull out the Trinity and say Jesus is God, allegedly, so he is needed as much as God. That's why I have always referred to the Trinity as the Great Back-Door. When hopelessly mired in so many of the obvious contradictions in the Gospels, what else can they do but resort to a "mystery."

With respect to promptness of mailings, SHF might not be acquainted with your publication. Incidentally, we also have had mailings that didn't reach subscribers for 2 or 3 weeks. That can be quite aggravating, especially when subscribers call to register an understandable complaint about a problem over which we have no control.

Letter #387 from John Sikos, P.O. Box 4179, Romeo, Michigan 48015-4179

Hi Dennis. Regarding your July issue on the "SABBATH," is there any biblical way to deal with the argument, often made by Christians, that what we now think of as Sunday (the first day of the week) is actually what early Christians knew as Saturday, THE SABBATH, or seventh day of the week?

Editor's Response to Letter #387

Dear John. Yes there is. Jews have been honoring the sabbath far longer than Christians and are in an excellent position to know which day is the seventh. For them, the sabbath is from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday. In essence, for them our present Saturday is the 7th day, the Sabbath, and Sunday could not qualify.

Letter #388 from RN of Moscow, Idaho (Part a)

Dear Dennis. After I sent off my renewal the other day I remembered a couple of things I forgot to mention. One: on p. 4 of your latest BE (#91) in your response to Letter #373 you--absentmindedly?--used the term Hebrew words when you meant Greek words. I found 4 of them. Since you were talking about the Hebrew people, I can understand how your error occurred. I'm sure the fundies will jump on you, though.

Editor's Response to Letter #388 (Part a)

Dear RN. You are correct on both counts. I should have used the word "Greek" instead of "Hebrew" and the mistake was made because I was talking about the Hebrew people. You are quite observant and at this stage of the game I am finding I don't have very many subscribers who aren't. My originals have been corrected since your letter arrived.

Letter #388 Concludes (Part b)

Two: on p. 6 of #88, in a letter from CWT, he (?) refers to a bookmark that you issue which can be inserted in books in Xian bookstores for missionary purposes. If you can send me some, I will spread the Gospel, i.e., the Good News!

I...fight the good fight against the enemy, both local and students....

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #388

We don't distribute bookmarks, RN. I think CWT was referring to the 10 cent pamphlets we distribute that several people are inserting into Christian books.

Letter #389 from NS of Richmond, Indiana

Dear Dennis. Keep up the good work! Every issue is informative and enlightening and the last three have been especially enjoyable. It still escapes my reasonably intelligent and rational mind how a large part of the population can continue to believe in the myths, fairy tales and fables of the Bible. And what is even more amazing is how they can be shown the Bible is nothing more than this and still believe it is the truth. I guess you summed it up in your last issue by saying if you are fed these untruths from childhood on, you are hooked. Witness Hitler. Thank goodness I wasn't raised in a religious household and was able to make a choice.

There is a glimmer of hope (small though it may be) for while scanning television channels the other evening, I heard Pat Robertson bemoaning the fact that there are those out there who are putting down the Christian religion. He stated that people like this would be fought with every means for "they" were gaining a foothold. I hope it is more than a foothold....

Science is proving more and more every day that creationism just cannot possibly be true yet the argument goes on, ridiculous though it may be. It must be tough shedding beliefs you have had all your life, but to maintain a closed mind creates the vacuum you are fighting. To continue, the main reason I am writing is your mention of perhaps offering audio tapes for sale in the future. What a wonderful idea! I will be among the first to order if you decide to do so. Thanks for the great publication.

(From another letter--ED.) I am rather relieved that you made the comments at the end of your August issue concerning the lateness of mail delivery. In July I seriously considered calling to see if you were still among the living! In fact, my copies (and I'm sure everyone else's) have been arriving erratically for the past few months. The thought has occurred to me that perhaps it would be wise for you to leave all form of identification off the area you use for mailing! Or just use your name and leave off Biblical Errancy. I know the P.O. has no right to discriminate, but I would bet some of our Christian friends "accidentally" leave your mail (1) out of sight (2) on a back table with junk mail (3) or throw it in a corner somewhere with the "I'll do it later" things. In other words, I feel all this must be deliberate and I highly resent it. Which, I'm sure, is nothing compared to what it does for you.

In my work as a typesetter for a weekly newspaper, it galls and angers me to no end to have to set the church news with the ridiculous sermons, and whatever tripe they have to offer. But I would NEVER consider not doing it, even though it goes against all my beliefs. I put this in the same category as the mail service ignoring your publication! Incidentally, I DID receive your August issue on the 10th, which is somewhat of an improvement. No matter when it is received, it is always a welcome breeze amidst Christian chaos.

Editor's Response to Letter #389

Dear NS. Maybe it's a case of vacation subs. I'm not sure what's causing the problem but only hope it ends and our suspicions are unjustified. However, I do know from personal experience that we are up against an unscrupulous bunch who mouthe platitudes about ethics and morality but act as they please when they feel conditions warrant. Anybody who believes otherwise simply hasn't opposed them on any serious basis.

Letter #390 from FG of East Pittsburg, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis. Great B.E! I would not be surprised if Christians in favor of a Saturday Sabbath use #92 to justify it....

There is a portion of Biblical Errancy #91 that I wish to comment on. The failure of Christ to return in His generation as promised is not the only Biblical prophecy missed.

Jeremiah 25:12, 51:26 and 51:63-64 pertain to the nonfuture of Babylon. Surprise! The Iraqi government has rebuilt Babylon as a tourist attraction. There is even a Babylon Hotel there and people are living there in Babylon full-time year-round, even as I pen this....

Letter #391 from TG of Arlington, Texas

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Letter #378 from JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries and your four-part response to it was an excellent, if an unequal exchange. Not that JW can't sling the rhetoric, but, as you pointed out to him, the facts are simply against the bibliolaters.

But I'm surprised you missed the most telling answer to the matter of Jesus' claim that no one has ever seen the Father, blatantly contradicted by accounts of such events in the OT, which JW then has to say are sightings of the Son. That is, in John 14:9 Jesus himself says, "...he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father?" The contradiction is apparent and undeniable.

A little suggestion: could you make the left hand margins of BE wider to facilitate its being kept in a ring binder of some sort?

Editor's Response to Letter #391

Dear TG. Good point about Letter #378! It should have been mentioned. As far as widening the margin is concerned, I measured this before we began to use the computer several years ago and except for an occasional L or E being punched out, sheets fit in our three-ring binders quite well. Maybe you have different size binders.

EDITOR'S NOTE--I recently relistened to some of my audio tapes and came to the agonizing conclusion that I overdid the "Mr. Nice Guy" approach. Although my arguments were sound, I was so concerned with not alienating the host, the audience, the sponsors, and the station management that I occasionally came across as defensive, if not obsequious. I was so focused on receiving a return engagement that I overemphasized style, tact, and appearance at the expense of assertiveness and command. Consequently, I've decided to enroll in the Sam Donaldson/Mike Wallace school of charm and jettison any urge to win a popularity contest. Come what may, from now on I'm going to tell it like it is and employ a style which is more in keeping with my real inner urges. Comments are welcome!

COMMENTARY

This month's commentary will continue the alphabetical listing of notable quotes resumed last month and next month's commentary will return to the Bible per se.

QUOTATIONS

(PART 5)

MIRACLES--"An unseen event described by those to whom it was told by someone who did not see it." Anonymous

"All the biblical miracles will at last disappear with the progress of science." Matthew Arnold

"...all the tales of miracles, with which the Old and New Testament are filled, are fit only for impostors to preach and fools to believe." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 81

"The happy do not believe in miracles." Goethe

"The Christian religion not only was at first attended with miracles, but even at this day cannot be believed by any reasonable person without one." David Hume

"Miracles happened every day. The supernatural was expected. Gods were continually interfering with the affairs of this world. Everything was told except the truth, everything believed except the facts." "Myth and Miracle," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 453

"Do away with the miracles, and the superhuman character of Christ is destroyed. He becomes what he really was--a man. Do away with wonders and the teachings of Christ cease to be authoritative." "Orthodoxy," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 399

"In those parts of the world where learning and science have prevailed, miracles have ceased; but in those parts of it as are barbarous and ignorant, miracles are still in vogue." Ethan Allen

"The credulity of the church is decreasing, and the most marvelous miracles are not either 'explained,' or allowed to take refuge behind the mistakes of the translators, or hide in the drapery of allegory." "Some Mistakes of Moses," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 146

"Again gentlemen (biblical apologists--ED.), let me warn you of the danger of trying to explain a miracle. Let it alone. Say that you do not understand it, and do not expect to until taught in the schools of the New Jerusalem. The more reasons you give, the more unreasonable the miracle will appear. Through what you say in defence, people are led to think, and as soon as they really think, the miracle is thrown away. Among the most ignorant nations you will find the most wonders, among the most enlightened, the least. It is with individuals, the same as with nations. Ignorance believes, intelligence examines and explains." Ibid. Vol. 2, p.

MORALITY--"...the Bible was written by barbarians in a barbarous, coarse and vulgar age." "Some Mistakes of Moses," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 179

"It has been contended for many years that the Ten Commandments are the foundation of all ideas of justice and law. Eminent jurists have bowed to popular prejudice, and deformed their works by statements to the effect that the Mosaic laws are the fountains from which sprang all ideas of right and wrong. Nothing can be more stupidly false than such assertions. Thousands of years before Moses was born, the Egyptians had a code of laws.... The Egyptian code was far better than the Mosaic." "Some Mistakes of Moses," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 234

MYSTERIES--"When men, whether from policy or pious fraud, set up systems of religion incompatible with the word or works of God in the creation, and...repugnant to human comprehension, they were under the necessity of inventing or adopting a word that should serve as a bar to all questions, inquiries, and speculations. The word mystery answered this purpose...." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 77

NEW TESTAMENT--"Now, Sir, it is impossible for serious men, to whom God has given the divine gift of reason, and who employs that reason to reverence and adore the God that gave it, it is I say, impossible for such a man to put confidence in a book that abounds with fable and falsehood as the New Testament does." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 128

OLD TESTAMENT--"But the Old Testament, beside the numberless absurd and bagatelle stories it tells of God, represents Him as a God of deceit, a God not to be confided in.... This, so far from being the Word of God, is horrid blasphemy against him. ...put thy confidence in thy God, and put no trust in the Bible." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 283-84

ORIGINAL SIN--"It is said that Adam ate of the forbidden fruit, commonly called an apple, and thereby subjected himself and all his posterity for ever to eternal damnation. This is worse than visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. 333

ORTHODOXY--"An ox wearing the popular religious yoke." Anonymous

PAINE, THOMAS--"Paine struck the first grand blow. The Age of Reason did more to undermine the power of the Protestant Church than all other books then known." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 152

"He saw oppression on every hand; injustice everywhere; hypocrisy at the altar; venality on the bench, tyranny on the throne; and with a splendid courage he espoused the cause of the weak against the strong...." Ibid. p. 122

PAUL--"The conversion of Paul was no conversion at all; it was Paul who converted the religion that has raised one man above sin and death...." George Bernard Shaw

"There is not one word of Pauline Christianity in the characteristic utterances of Jesus." Androcles and the Lion, George Bernard Shaw

"Of this band of dupes and impostors, Paul was the great Coryphaeus, and first corruptor of the doctrines of Jesus." Jefferson's Works, H.A. Washington, Vol. 7, p. 156

"Paul asserted that he was a law unto himself.... 'For if thy truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his Glory; why am I also judged a sinner' (Rom. 3:7). It would seem from this statement that, although he knew he was lying, Paul felt that the means justifies the ends; but it is not understood how truth would abound through a lie." Jesus, A Prophet of Islam, Muhammed Rahim, p. 71

"All this (Paul's writing--Ed.) is nothing better than the jargon of a conjurer who picks up phrases he does not understand to confound the credulous people who come to have their fortune told. Priests and conjurers are of the same trade." The Age of Reason, Paine, p. 180

"...but this grain does not, and shews Paul to have been what he says of others, a fool." Ibid.

PRAYER--"To ask that the laws of the universe be annulled in behalf of a single petitioner confessedly unworthy." Ambrose Bierce

"What men usually ask of God when they pray is that two and two do not make four."

"A man does not serve God when he prays, for it is himself he is trying to serve...." The Age of Reason, T. Paine, p. 208

"He (mankind--Ed.) finds fault with everything. His selfishness is never satisfied; his ingratitude is never at an end. He takes on himself to direct the Almighty what to do, even in the government of the universe. He prays dictatorially. When it is sunshine, he prays for rain, and when it is rain, he prays for sunshine. He follows the same idea in everything that he prays for; for what is the amount of all his prayers, but an attempt to make the Almighty change his mind, and act otherwise than he does? It is as if he were to say--thou knowest not so well as I." The Age of Reason, T. Paine, p. 44

Letter #392 from Jeff Frankel of Decatur, Illinois

Hello Dennis. I recently read the September issue of B.E. and your exchange with James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries. I had my own dealings with White recently as a result of my recent article on the inerrancy doctrine in FRONTLINE. (A copy of my correspondence from White is enclosed along with a letter critical of White from the noted Bible scholar Howard Teeple.)

I find it a regrettable necessity that you had to devote 2/3's of an issue to dealing with White's rantings. It was a necessity because, as head of a well-funded ministry, White has significant influence and must be answered. It was regrettable because some readers may mistakenly see White's behavior as being representative of apologists or fundamentalist Christians in general.

In my experiences with fundamentalists I have never dealt with anyone as arrogant, unreasonable and mean-spirited as White. The only individual I've dealt with whose abrasiveness rivals White's is the infamous atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair. It is important to make the distinction between a person using poor reasoning and an unreasonable person. Many atheists resent having O'Hair looked upon as representative of that position, and rightfully so. I hope in the spirit of fairness we can all avoid the temptation to view White and his ilk as representative of the fundamentalist Christian position. His arguments are representative, but he, personally, isn't.

You are to be commended for dealing with White's abrasive argumentation as reasonably as you did. That is hard to do when dealing with someone so unreasonable, and it appeared that you were pushed to your level of tolerance. Yet you did not sink to his level. You stayed cool and let the evidence speak instead of your feelings.

Editor's Response to Letter #392

Dear Jeff. I think White is representative of the fundamentalist position but less concerned with appearances than most apologists. If he wants to turn the biblical debate into a war, that is fine with me. Incidentally, you said you have never dealt with anyone as arrogant and mean-spirited as White. You might want to debate Dr. Robert Morey sometime. He never lets truth and accuracy supercede his efforts to project Christianity as something it isn't. If you have to pervert, slander, malign, misrepresent, and prevaricate to spread the Christian message; so be it. That's his stock and trade. His completely inaccurate radio comments to White about my analysis of his book are egregious examples of prevarication in action.

Letter #393 from John Sikos, P.O. Box 4179, Center Line, Michigan 48015-4179

Dear Dennis. BE arrived only today. As usual, I read it all immediately. Letter #378 from James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries was the most ridiculous bunch of drivel I've seen in a long time. My girlfriend, who is a social worker, says James should go for some therapy. He is obviously too closed-minded to look at his own arguments objectively. This was obvious from his self-defeating "booklet" entitled

"Letters From An Anti-Theist" in which he tries to argue against Biblical Errancy. In this little publication, he argues with something like one or two percent of BE's content, none of which he does convincingly, and pretends he has thereby defeated Dennis McKinsey. As far as I'm concerned, James White has admitted to BE being fully correct in 98 to 99% of its arguments!

I think you should start a new rule in BE. Do not print letters from anyone who does not agree to let the evidence lead him to the truth. Do not waste your time with closed-minded basket cases who are not man enough to admit defeat when defeat strikes them in the face. James W obviously has decided to rant and bitch till he drops, without regard to the scoreboard or the referee's clock. Your dialogue with James W is over. Dump him. Keep up the excellent work, Dennis.

Editor's Response to Letter #393

Dear John. Although your rule is worthy of consideration, I'm afraid that if it were adopted other letters would enter the circular file of outgoing mail. When it comes to addictions, and that's the essence of religion, White has no corner on the market. Did you ever try to reason with a drunk or someone on drugs. They will resort to any method available to maintain their habit and justify its presence. Religionists suffer from the same affliction. If they have to rationalize, distort, deceive, and lie to maintain their addiction, many will. It's a blanket that provides a feeling of security and woe be to anyone who tries to remove it. To get people off of drugs and into religion is to get them off one drug and onto another. Many aren't really that concerned about accuracy. Like drugs, it provides the desired emotional security and that's what really matters. Reality is quite secondary. It provides a much desired escape from everyday reality, a kind of pollyanna that keeps one going and uplifts the spirit in hopes for something better.

Letter #394 from DL of Ipswich, Massachusetts

Dear Dennis. I certainly enjoy listening to your audio tapes over and over again because they are so very interesting, educational, lively, and another way of delivering your vital message to the uninformed Christians.

Letter #395 from LR of Belmont, North Carolina

Dear Dennis. I thoroughly enjoyed your last two issues' devastating refutation of the Sunday sabbath. The total lack of any biblical foundation for a Sunday sabbath clearly demonstrates the degree of divergence between the early church and its Jewish origin. Apparently ecclesiastical priorities outweigh biblical injunction--so much for the Torah!

Letter #396 from RC of Placentia, California

Dennis. I really look forward to receiving your pamphlets. It's so refreshing to hear somebody who dares criticize the Bible and Jesus Christ--intelligently and rationally. I'm beginning to share BE with some Christian relatives and friends and it is disturbing them no end. But truth should disturb those who believe lies.

Letter #397 from MD of Sacramento, California

Dear Dennis. Biblical Errancy is a pleasure to read and is always welcome in my mailbox.

Letter #398 from RH of Hubbard, Ohio

Dear Mr. McKinsey. For many reasons I am still active in the Trumbull Baptist Association of the Ohio Baptist Convention and the American Baptist Churches in the U.S.A. I have given up so many times, but have been drawn back into active service because of the cultural, social, and religious pressures. My name is anathema in many of our churches. For example, at a church in Ashtabula I was asked if I believed Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead. I responded that I didn't know, but that I do believe there are certain laws of nature which are inexorable. Of course, the next question was do I believe in miracles. Again, breaking the laws of physics is catastrophe. But I am experiencing emotional and mental conflict. Yet, I believe I can do something to bring about sane thinking on Latin America, Prisons, Poor, Peace; so I continue for a spell at least to try to get our churches to strive for a better life for all people. However, I am in constant controversy with some of the ministers I have to work with....

Sometimes I don't think too much, but my actions do speak. I admire your ability to debate, to see through questions and to use reason. That is why I read your material. You are honest and very competent and, I might add, patient. I fly off the handle when someone is illogical and unreasonable and ignorant. So keep up the good work. I am going to send a brochure I received from the Layman's National Bible Association, Inc. One word came to my mind immediately after reading it: Power. I hope your little magazine BE continues to have influence, and that you keep healthy and happy in your pursuit of truth.

Letter #399 from RA of Boca Raton, Florida

(In the 2nd Issue of BE many years ago, we discussed the Resurrection at length. RA recently sent us the following encapsulated material from JEWS FOR JUDAISM which supports BE's position--ED.).

Since the claim of the resurrection is the foundation of the Christian faith, we should certainly examine the credibility of this story. What is the evidence for the belief that Jesus rose from the grave? Aside from the accounts in the NT, there is no independent supportive documentation, nor is there any circumstantial evidence. The entire claim hangs exclusively on the NT texts. Is this testimony reliable? As a seeker of truth, you are the judge. Obviously, a judge must be impartial, and objectively weigh all of the relevant evidence. Realize this is not a routine case.... As a Jew examining the case for the resurrection, you should not be swayed by conjecture or hearsay, but demand clear proof. If you were the judge presiding over a murder case, you would want to be absolutely certain before convicting the defendant. If the prosecutor calls his key witnesses, but each tells a different story, his case would be shaky. The defense attorney will argue for the acquittal of his client by demonstrating the weakness of the prosecutor's case. He will impeach the state's witnesses by showing how their accounts are contradictory. The resurrection narratives in the Gospels may be convincing testimony for people who have not read them very carefully. As a responsible judge, though, you can't be satisfied with just a casual examination of the evidence. The stories told in the NT are so inconsistent, that the resurrection story collapses under careful scrutiny. The conflicting testimony of the evangelists is so unreliable, it would not stand up to critical cross-examination in any court of law. Yet, the entire Christian faith is based upon this story. The following study has been prepared to help you critically evaluate the case of the alleged resurrection of Jesus...examine the evidence--this is one of the most important decisions of your life.

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE RESURRECTION: (1) How is it possible to reconcile the conflicting accounts of the resurrection story found in the Gospels? Many Christian apologists have argued that it is similar to a traffic accident that is viewed by four different witnesses - each will see it from a different perspective. This might be a tenable idea if the evangelists were actually on the scene, and watched the story unfold as the women approached the tomb. Yet this was not the case. Not only were the Gospel writers not eyewitnesses, they didn't even write their accounts of the story until at least 40 years after it allegedly took place. Moreover, most of the inconsistencies in the resurrection narratives (i.e., date, time, place) can't be explained away as differences in perspective. There is, however, a more significant issue here: according to 2 Tim. 3:16, the Gospels are the revealed word of G-d, and not the product of human agents. G-d doesn't suffer from human fallibility and certainly wouldn't present such a garbled account of what Christians consider the most crucial event in world history. (2) Why would the compilers of the NT allow contradictory accounts to remain if they were responsible for the story? Could they have been so careless? Perhaps - it is certainly possible. We'd certainly be naive to accept testimony as reliable in spite of the fact that it is riddled with inconsistencies. (3) A solid case can only be built on the testimony of witnesses who provide very clear testimony. If they can with 100% certainty pick a suspect out of a lineup, their testimony inspires confidence. If they view the suspects and don't recognize any of them, and later change their minds, the defense counsel will certainly bring this up at the trial. One would think that the witnesses to history's greatest event would have no doubts about what they saw. However, in the Gospel accounts, the post-resurrection Jesus is not even recognized by his closest disciples (Luke 24:16, 37; John 20:14, 21:4). (4) If, as Paul claims, the resurrection of the Messiah is the most important concept in the Bible, isn't it strange that in the entire Tanach, there isn't one clear reference to it? An indication of this conspicuous absence is that none of Jesus' disciples were aware that he was supposed to be resurrected. Not only were they not expecting Jesus to be resurrected (Matt. 16:21-22, 17:23; Mark 8:31-32, 9:31-32, Luke 18:33-34), but when they find the empty tomb, they assume that someone moved the body (John 20:2). Subsequently, they refuse to believe early rumors about the resurrection (Mark 16:11-13, Matt. 28:17, Luke 24:11, and John 20:3, 13). Is it possible that the predictions of the crucifixion and resurrection were put into Jesus' mouth by the Gospel writers to give more credibility to their belief that he rose from the dead? (5) Matt. 27:52-53 claims that at the time of Jesus' passion, the graves in Jerusalem were opened and the bodies of many righteous Jews were resurrected, appearing to many people. If this actually happened, it would have been one of the greatest news stories of its day. If Matthew's story took place as reported, it's strange that Josephus, who wrote a detailed history of that time, failed to mention it. Not only does it not appear in any contemporary Jewish sources, but this fantastic occurrence isn't mentioned by the other Gospels. Is it possible that Matthew fabricated the entire story? (6) In Matt. 12:38-40, the scribes and Pharisees are said to have asked Jesus for a sign. He said that the only sign they would receive would be the sign of Jonah: he would rise after being in the grave for three days. If the resurrection was supposed to be a sign for the Jewish religious leaders, why didn't Jesus appear to them? Isn't it convenient that he only appeared to people who were his followers. Joseph Smith also claimed that there were witnesses who saw the golden plates used to write the Book of Mormon. Of course his story would be more credible if he would have showed the plates to people other than his best friends. (7) What should our reaction be to the reports that Jesus appeared to 500 people after his resurrection? What is our reaction to the thousands of Catholics who yearly claim to see the Virgin Mary? People claim many things; that in itself doesn't mean it is true. (Just as importantly, 500 people never said they saw anything. Paul says 500 people so testified, the same Paul who admits in Rom. 3:7 that he lies for the glory of God--ED.). (8) Was Jesus resurrected in the flesh (John 20:17, 26-27; Luke 24:39-43; Acts 2:31, 13:35) or was only a spirit resurrected? (1 Cor. 15:44, 50; 1 Tim. 2:5, 1 Peter 3:8). One wonders why there is such a fundamental disagreement over such a critical element of the story. (9) If the guards weren't sent to the tomb until sometime on Saturday (Matt. 27:62-66), how do we know that the body wasn't removed on Friday night or early Saturday morning? (10) Shouldn't a red flag go up when we realize that the idea of a divine savior who suffers a brutal death and ascends to heaven was very common among Pagan and Gnostic religions at the time of Paul? (This was especially true for the regions around Tarsus, his hometown). Roman mythology had a widespread belief that notable mortals returned from the dead. See accounts of Romulus, Apollonius of Tyana, Drusilla, Claudius, Dionysus-Bacchus, Tammuz-Adonis, Mithra, Osiris, Krishna, and Buddha. (11) Why would the disciples willingly die for their belief in the resurrection if it weren't true? Every religion has martyrs who are killed for the beliefs they hold. Scores of Muslims enthusiastically blow themselves up each year in their hope to join their prophet Mohammed, who they believe ascended to heaven in the presence of many witnesses. Willingness to suffer doesn't substantiate a false belief.

ACCOMMODATIONS (Part 1)--One of the most egregious violations of intellectual integrity by the founders of Christianity is shown by their gross distortions of the OT for purposes of indoctrination. In their never-ending quest for religious legitimacy and status, they have not hesitated to twist, distort, pervert, and concoct OT verses as expediency dictated. Here, as much as anywhere else in the Bible, the true colors of the creators of Christianity come through in all their radiant splendor. Examples of their perfidious display of propagandistic propensities are abundantly evident to anyone with a reasonably critical eye. This month's commentary, as well as several to follow, will concentrate on the most prominent cases of biblical duplicity. Generally speaking, they fall into the three broad categories of misquotations, nonquotes, and misinterpretations. A misquotation is defined as deliberately misquoting an OT passage; a nonquote consists of quoting a non-existent OT passage, and a misinterpretation consists of correctly quoting an OT passage while distorting the meaning intended. We'll begin our discussion with an extensive exposure of the prime misquotations.

OT Misquotations -- (1) MATT. 3:3 ("For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias (Isaiah--Ed.), saying, 'The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight'") is an inaccurate translation of Isa. 40:3 RSV ("A voice cries: In the wilderness prepare the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God"). (a) Nothing is said in Isaiah about one crying in the wilderness. (b) The present tense verb "that crieth" shows that Isaiah is not making a prophecy but only speaking of a contemporary. (c) Matthew has "paths," (pl.) while Isaiah has "a highway." (2) MATT. 4:10 ("Then Jesus saith unto him, 'Get thee hence Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve'") is a major distortion of Deut. 6:13 ("Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name"). Nowhere does Deut. 6:13 say thou shalt serve God only. (3) MATT. 4:13-16 ("And leaving Nazareth, he (Jesus--Ed.) came and dwelt in Capernaum.... That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet saying, 'The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up'") is a misquotation of Isa. 9:1-2 ("Nevertheless the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, when at the first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, and afterward did more grievously afflict her by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, in Galilee of the nations. The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined"). (a) Matthew falsified the text. He began his quote where there is not even a comma and thereby cut off everything relating to the first affliction. He then left out all that related to the 2nd affliction. He left out everything making the verse intelligible. He extracted just what he wanted. Matthew left out those words that show Isaiah was speaking of some past events relating to afflictions already suffered. (b) The "great light" which the people saw was the joy they felt in having their burdens lifted and their oppressor broken; it was not Jesus. (c) Isaiah says the people that "walked" in darkness, not "sat" in darkness. (d) "Walked," "have seen," and "hath shined" show that the events have already occurred. Everything in Isaiah relates to two circumstances that had already occurred when Isaiah wrote. One refers to the lands of Zebulun and Naphtali being lightly afflicted. The other refers to the more grievous events that happened afterwards by way of the sea. (4) MATT. 11:10 ("For this is he, of whom it is written, 'Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee'") misquotes Mal. 3:1 ("Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me...."). (a) The OT says "the way before me," not "thy way before thee." (b) Jesus created the phrase "before thy face" which does not exist in Malachi. (c) As is true in much of the Bible, it is unclear as to whom many of the pronouns refer. There is little reason to believe that Malachi is referring to John the Baptist or Jesus. (d) Mal. 3:1 says "will send" (future tense) rather than "send." (e) The coming of the Lord in Malachi 4:1 ("For Behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble....") and Mal. 4:5 ("Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the great and terrible day of the Lord comes") are scenes of fear and terror like the day of judgment. Yet, the coming of Jesus was always spoken of as a time of joy and happiness. How, then, could the scene in Malachi be referring to the birth of Jesus as some allege? (5) The attempt by Matthew in MATT. 12:17-21 ("That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias (Isaiah--Ed.) the prophet, saying, Behold my servant, whom I have chosen; my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased: I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall shew judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not strive nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets. A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory. And in his name shall the Gentiles trust") to apply Isa. 42:1-4 ("Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law") to Jesus is a major distortion for many reasons. (a) Isaiah says "have put" (past tense) rather than "will put." (b) "Not strive" isn't in Isaiah. (c) "Nor lift up" is in Isaiah but not Matthew. (d) "Streets" in Matthew is "street" (singular) in Isaiah. (e) "Victory" in Matthew is "truth" in Isaiah. (f) There is no conditional "till" in Isaiah. (g) "in his name shall the Gentiles trust" is not in Isaiah. (h) And it appears Matthew omitted, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law" because reality set in. (6) MATT. 13:35 ("That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet saying, I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world") is an inaccurate portrayal of Psalm 78:2-3 ("I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old: Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us"). (a) Psalm 78 says nothing about "things which have been kept secret since the world began." It only says they were dark sayings of old. These sayings refer to old sayings, not things which have been kept secret. (b) "Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us" is the opposite of secret. (c) And Psalm 78 says "a parable," while Matthew says "parables." (7) MATT. 21:16 ("Yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise") is not a reproduction of Psalm 8:2 ("Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies..."). What does "perfecting praise" have to do with "ordaining strength because of thine enemies"? (8) In LUKE 4:17-21 ("And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias (Isaiah-Ed.). And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written. 'The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord; and he closed the book, and gave it again to the minister, and sat down.... And he began to say unto them, This day is the scripture fulfilled in your ears") Jesus misquoted Isaiah 61:1-2 ("The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God to comfort all that mourn..."). (a) Isaiah says nothing about healing the blind. (b) Isaiah says "opening of the prison to them that are bound" not "to set at liberty them that are bruised." (c) Jesus left out proclaiming "the day of vengeance of our God" in Isaiah. (d) The statement in Isaiah was made by Isaiah concerning himself, long before Jesus was born. It can't be twisted into proving that Jesus was anointed. (e) Actually, what Jesus is quoting is a statement by Isaiah that he (Isaiah--Ed.) has been appointed by God to tell the exiled, broken, downtrodden, afflicted, captive Jews that the day is coming when they shall be saved and eat the riches of the Gentiles and have eternal joy. (9) JOHN 19:37 ("And again another scripture saith, They shall look on him whom they pierced") is an incorrect representation of Zech. 12:10 ("...and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son...."). (a) The statement in Zechariah has nothing to do with Jesus. Zechariah is saying that God will make Judah and Jerusalem very powerful in the future, such that those nations who attack them will be destroyed. Then the people of Jerusalem will look with compassion and mourning on those they have pierced and killed. The interest in the life of one's fellow man will be deeply felt in the latter days. (b) Why say "as" when Jesus is a son of the house of David? It would make no sense to have the house of David responsible for Jesus' death when that is the house from which Jesus arose. Would his own house kill him? (c) Zech. 12:11 says, "In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem." Actually, there was very little mourning for Jesus on the day he died. (d) If correctly translated "pierced" should be "blasphemed." Both "blasphemed" and "pierced" come from the same Hebrew root. Note" Lev. 24:11. (e) And "Upon me whom they have pierced" is questionable. How could they pierce God (Jehovah) who is the speaker? (10) ACTS 1:20 ("For it is written in the Book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein....") is a distortion of Psalm 69:25 ("Let their habitation be desolate; and let none dwell in their tents"). (a) Psalm 69:25 says "their" habitation and "their" tents. At no time does it refer to one person or "his." (b) Psalm 69:25 is actually an appeal by David to God for aid in David's struggle with his enemies. (11) The last part of ACTS 1:20 ("For it is written in the Book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishopric let another take") is a distortion of Psalm 109:8 ("Let his days be few; and let another take his office"). (a) Psalm 109:8 says nothing about a bishopric. Office and bishopric are not identical. (b) The Psalmist is referring to his enemies, not Judas. David is saying he hopes his enemies are punished. The context of Psalm 109:8 shows it is not a prophecy of David about Judas. (12) ACTS 2:16-17 ("But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God....") is a perversion of Joel 2:28 ("And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour...."). Joel says nothing about "the last days." (13) And finally, ACTS 7:43 ("Yea, ye look up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon") does not correctly reproduce Amos 5:26-27 ("But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves. Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus...."). (a) Amos says, "the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images" not "the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan." (b) Amos says, "which ye made to yourselves," not "which ye made to worship." (c) And Amos says, "I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus," not "I will carry you away beyond Babylon." (To Be Continued)

Letter #400 from RC of Placentia, California

Dear Dennis. ...I really look forward to receiving BE each month, and I hope to hear you on more radio talk shows in Los Angeles. I'm grateful for your pioneering work in opening doors for what I hope will be more and more criticisms of the Bible and of the Naked Emperor, Jesus Christ, and his Motley Crew. I really believe that most of the world has been bedazzled and hypnotized to a false reverence of these mortal and very fallible gods....Thank you for your DARING. It takes guts to go against the GoSPELL.

Letter #401 from RM of Alberta, Canada

To Dennis McKinsey. Please send me information about biblical errors and contradictions. I live in central Alberta, a real "Bible Belt," and feel like I am besieged with every "Christian" kook and cult in the country who have all too many slick "apologists" ready to squish the minds of anyone who dares to doubt. I don't want to be rude to them and yet I am getting a bit tired of being accosted by them, not only on the streets but all over the college campus. If you have a listing or catalog of any other materials and books dealing in this area I would be very grateful.

Editor's Response to Letter #401

Dear RM. People claiming they live in the Bible Belt have sent me letters from virtually every area in North America. You certainly shouldn't feel alone in this regard. In fact, many claim they live on the buckle of the Bible Belt, which only highlights the importance of a publication such as BE. Don't run when they accost you; counterattack! Use the best of what you feel BE has to offer and show them the error of their ways.

Letter #402 from RN of Moscow, Idaho

Dear Dennis. Thanks for the last batch of back issues. They are all fascinating. And thanks, too, for the cassette. I was dismayed that Madalyn would not let you have a table at her convention....Since she publishes THE BIBLE HANDBOOK, I don't see why she shouldn't welcome you. Maybe she thinks you might cut into her sources of revenue.

I keep running into people here who tell me how much they enjoy my letters to the editor, which are usually contra fundies. When I recently pointed out that God had killed every single child and all pregnant mothers by drowning them, a fundie preacher wrote: "How strange to call God's calling a child to be with him in heaven 'murder'." Well, I turned right around and used this quote to ask why Xians should be opposed to abortion. Nobody has replied to that letter yet. Please send me issues 25 through 48.

Letter #403 from TF of Webster, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I'm glad to see that you've made your tapes available. I'll be ordering them all one at a time.... I'm impressed that you've done so much debating with the Church of Christ. As you know, I'm an ex-Fundamentalist, but you probably didn't know that I used to be a member of the Church of Christ. I was attending one of their colleges with the intention of becoming a minister, when I studied my way out of Christianity. I had independently discovered numerous contradictions and errors in the Bible, which their professors, ministers, and scholars could not adequately explain. Privately, I've debated with clergy and laity from several different denominations, and I've never encountered any who were as well-versed in the Bible and prepared to debate as the Church of Christ is. If you can handle those people, you can handle anyone....

I really enjoy your periodical. It's unfortunate that more Fundamentalists don't write to challenge you. Perhaps you have scared them off?

Letter #404 from HA of Seattle, Washington

Good Person. In the years of my reader subscription to BE, no writer identifies himself/herself as CATHOLIC, LDS, MORMON, Et. al in the Letters to the Editor section. Question? Are the 'apologist' corresponders reluctant/embarrassed to state/admit personal affiliation or do they request 'GENERIC' status? Or do you minimize antagonisms by non-identifying? Frankly, we rarely know what denomination they represent.

Editor's Response to Letter #404

Dear HA. We have had some readers identify their denomination in the past but your assertion that that rarely occurs is correct. They rarely ask for their affiliation to be kept anonymous and we certainly don't seek to minimize conflict by non-identification. Actually, we rarely know what religious bent they represent.

Incidentally, someday we intend to have a commentary entitled CATHOLICISM VERSUS PROTESTANTISM. Because of its role in the history of Christianity, Catholicism merits a special critique.

Letter #405 from DM of Pasadena, California

Dear Dennis. Your reasons for sticking to the hard biblical contradictions are, I think, sound. They are the prime target. Yet, I can't help but feel that BIBLICAL ERRANCY could benefit from a column dealing with scientific and philosophical issues central to biblical errancy. Such a column might consist of an additional leaf (two pages) every other month, and it would add an additional element of interest to BE.

I am willing to donate the necessary labor to write such a column, either in the capacity of an occasional guest writer or as a full-time columnist. A degree in mathematics, a broad education in the sciences, written debates with biblicists, and a continuing interest in debunking biblical nonsense will insure an interesting and lively column. I also have access to a deskprinter which will produce xerox-ready copies.... Whether you add this proposed column or not, I'll continue to look forward to each issue of BE....

Editor's Response to Letter #405

Dear DM. I appreciate your suggestion but, in essence, you have asked for an extensive analysis of extrabiblical information and its relationship to the Bible. In prior issues we have noted the weaknesses associated with extrabiblical assaults on religion in general and the Bible in particular. What kind of scientific, historical, or philosophical data are you going to bring to a Book which millions believe is superior to any and every source. Do you intend to use "man-made" data to refute a Book "written by God"? Surely you realize that their answer is going to be: "I don't care what kind of data you have, if it says the Bible is wrong, then it's wrong and that's that." For millions of people the only weapon you can use against the Bible is the Bible. I don't have something outside the Bible telling me the Bible is false; I have the Bible telling me the Bible is false. And that's something that is far harder to evade or combat. The Bible is its own worse enemy. Secondly, an entire publication could be devoted to the kind of analysis you suggest and several already exist. I don't see what can be gained by duplicating the work of others? BE, on the other hand, is unique in its approach. But thanks for the suggestion.

Letter #406 from MO of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Dennis: Greetings. I am so pleased with your work. I really believe it is our moral obligation to confront the bibles' believers and every religion preaches HELL to our fellow man. This is exactly what I am doing at the University of Illinois at Chicago's campus. I am also engaged in deadly debates with the Moody Bible Institute's students. Be assured that they are always the losers....

Editor's Response to Letter #406

Dear MO. Keep up the good work. That's the kind of effort we need in abundance.

Letter #407 from NS of Richmond, Indiana

Dennis. After all these years of reading and enjoying your publication, I am more firmly convinced than ever that religion is a total waste of time. When I think of the energy people put into the reading of the bible, and many going so far as to base their whole life on it, it makes me rather sad that they cannot (or will not) use rationality and good common sense in place of reading myths, fairy tales, and fables. I have even given up getting angry about the religion that is shoved into our faces on TV and radio. One thing that I have always questioned tho, is if religion is all that great and is believed in by so many, why do they have to shout it at you 24 hours a day? Why can't it stand on its own??? It reminds me of the old phrase, "Methinks you do protest too much!"

Letter #408 from AH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis.... I have been following your instructions and confronting Christians with the errors contained in the Bible. When I find that an acquaintance is a Christian, I ask if they are an ordinary Christian or a Bible-believing one. Usually they are Bible-believing. My first question is always, what is the Bible's position on the consumption of alcohol? So far, no one has known the correct answer, that the Bible both promotes and condemns. Usually they suggest moderation. However, I am prepared with a little card with ten verses that absolutely forbid the consumption of alcohol, by anyone, at any time, for any reason, on one side, and on the other side, ten verses that promote wine and hard drink as a reward from God.

After being confronted with the actual verses from that book, and being able to verify for their very own selves the obvious fact that that book contains contradictions, amazing things happen. Immediately they want to know about me as a person, and what my motives are. I ignore this and return to the Bible (Wise move AH--ED.), but they will have no part of that. Something must be wrong with me, or I am unhappy, or I had a rotten childhood. They just cannot accept that some one might read the Bible to find out what it says. Their next ploy is to say, of course, you cannot understand the Bible; you must be saved to understand it. And on and on it goes. What I would like to do is chart out the responses of Christians to objective and impartial observations of the Bible. Then when confronting them with facts, it would be a simple matter to circle a 1 or a 2 or a 3 to record their response.

.....I have asked these Christians that since they are saved, and I am not, what does Ex. 33:20 mean to a saved person? They reply that no one can see God's face and live. But that is exactly what it means to me and I am not saved! Next, (of course) I direct them to Gen. 32:20 where they read that a man saw God's face and lived. Again, how does being saved reconcile this blatant contradiction. The most I usually can get is they repeat that you must be saved to understand, and they will explain no farther. Even though most of these Christians will not give up their comfortable superstitions and replace them with facts, it is still important to continue exposing the stupidities in the Bible, because it really does effect the believer, even if just a little.

Copies of Issue #91 (Sabbath Commentary) were well accepted by these Christians. Amazingly! But they still don't get it; they want me to read the Bible as the word of God, while they ignore the fourth commandment. If they refuse to obey the Bible, they have a lot of nerve asking someone else to accept it as the work of God. Thanks Dennis. You are doing a fabulous job. I just wish I could do more.

Editor's Response to Letter #408

Dear AH. You are doing a good job. Keep it up! The more you engage in this kind of activity, the better you will become. You are learning how to take it to the other side in their arena and that's the essence of the struggle. If only more people were following your example! As far as the defenses you have encountered are concerned, I've confronted the same tactics and have the same feeling.

Letter #409 from SMB of Santa Rosa, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I thought I had collected a lot of Biblical errors and contradictions. But after seeing your Sample Issue and list of back issues, I see that I have only begun. This is fantastic!

...I have compiled a pamphlet entitled "Bible Study Book" which incorporates the errors and inconsistencies that I have found. My plan is to market it in the classified ads of newspapers throughout the country, hoping many "believers" will take it up. Sort of getting even for several thousand years of religious intolerance (and persecution) of free thinkers....

COMMENTARY

This month's commentary will continue the listing of OT Misquotations begun in ACCOMMODATIONS (Part 1) last month.

ACCOMMODATIONS (Part 2)--(14) ACTS 15:17 ("...that the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things") incorrectly reproduces Amos 9:12 ("...that they may possess the remnant of Edom and all the nations who are called by my name, says the LORD who does this"). (a) Amos says nothing about men who "seek after the Lord." It speaks of the remnant of Edom. (b) Amos says nothing about Gentiles seeking after the Lord. It says all those nations who are called by God's name will be possessed by Israel. (15) ROM. 3:4 ("...as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged") perverts Psalm 51:4 ("...that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest"). Psalm 51:4 says "judgest", not "art judged." There is a big difference between judging and being judged. (16) ROM. 9:25-26 ("As he saith also in Osee (Hosea), I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her beloved, which was not beloved. And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there shall they be called the children of the living God") does not correctly represent Hosea 2:23 ("...and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God") and Hosea 1:10 ("...and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God"). (a) Hosea is speaking only of Jews as Hosea 1:11 ("Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together....") shows. It is not referring to Gentiles and does not justify spreading the word to Gentiles. (b) "and her beloved, which was not beloved" is not in Hosea. Paul created these words. (c) Hosea 2:23 says, "and they shall say, Thou art my God." Paul conveniently left this out of his quote since millions of Gentiles have clearly not made such a statement. (17) ROM. 9:33 ("As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion a stumblingstone and rock of offence: and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed") is a false reproduction of Isa. 28:16 ("Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste") and Isa. 8:14

("And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel..."). (a) Isaiah says nothing about "on him" or being "ashamed." (b) Isaiah 8:14 speaks of a stumbling stone and a rock of offence, but it is speaking of God himself. (c) Isa. 28:16 says the stone God will lay is a precious corner stone, a sure foundation, not a stumblingstone or a rock of offence. So which is it? (d) Paul deceptively combined two unrelated verses and altered the text in the process. (18) In ROM. 10:6-8 ("But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, who shall ascend into heaven? [that is, to bring Christ down from above] or, who shall ascend into the deep? [that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.] But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith, which we preach;...") Paul mutilated Deut. 30:12-14 ("It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, And bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it") for several reasons. (a) Deut. is only saying that his (Moses--ED.) commandments are easy to obtain. They are not far off but as close as one's heart or mouth. (b) Deut. says nothing about "faith." (c) Deut. does not even imply Jesus or Christ, let alone mention him. (d) Deut. refers to seeking "it" and doing "it," not seeking "him" or doing "him." (e) The verse in Deut. refers to Penitence. It has nothing to do with believing in or bringing down Jesus from heaven or up from the dead. (f) Deut. is saying that God wills us to repent of sin and that we may know when we have sinned. You have only to look at his law which is very close by. (19) In ROM. 11:9-10 ("Let their table be made a snare, and a trap and a stumblingblock, and a recompense unto them: let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back always") Paul misquoted Psalm 69:22-23 ("Let their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap. Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake"). (a) The Psalm says nothing about a "stumblingblock" a "recompense" or "bowing down their back always." (20) Paul's comments in ROM. 11:26-27 ("And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion a Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins") are a distortion of Isa. 59:20-21 ("And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord..."). (a) Isa. 59:20 says "to Zion," not "out of" Zion. (b) Isaiah says the Redeemer shall come "unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob." It does not say the Deliverer "shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." In other words, he will come to those who turned from transgression on their own volition. It does not say he will turn away ungodliness. (c) Moreover, "when I shall take away their sins" is not in Isaiah 59. Paul created it out of whole cloth. (d) Nowhere does Isaiah use the word "saved" or "salvation" as Paul uses it. Isaiah never used the word "saved." (21) ROM. 15:12 ("And again, Isaiah saith, There shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles; in him shall the Gentiles trust") does not accurately reproduce Isa. 11:10 ("And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek;..."). Isa. 11:10 does not state that he shall reign or rule over the Gentiles. It merely states that the root of Jesse will act as a standard or banner for the people. (22) ROM. 15:21 ("But as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand") does not quote Isa. 52:15 ("...the Kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider") correctly. (a) Isa. 52:15 says nothing about "he was not spoken of"; it says "that which had not been told them." (b) "They that have not heard shall understand" is not the same as saying, "that which they had not heard shall they consider." Because something is considered does not mean it is understood. (23) And lastly, 1 COR. 2:9 ("But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him") misquotes Isa. 64:4 RSV ("From of old no one has heard or perceived by the ear, no eye has seen a God besides thee, who works for those who wait for him"). (a) Nowhere in Isa. 64:4 does it say, "neither have entered into the heart of man." (b) Isa. 64:4 says, "no eye has seen a God besides thee," which Paul omitted entirely. (c) Paul said, "the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Yet, Isa. 64:4 does not imply or state that there will be a future reward for those that love God. It merely states that God will work for those who wait for him.

Misquotes are Concluded Next Month

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #410 from JC of Citrus Heights, California

Dear Dennis. After examining your material I came to the conclusion (sic) that it is rhetoric. Let's get to the heart of the matter. The logical fallacy you commit is circular reasoning. Let me explain. You say:

A. There is no god.

B. There is no evidence of God's existence (sic) (i.e. Bible, Supernatural miracles, ect. {sic}).

C. All theistic evidence is false, and the Bible is a product of men.

D. Since the Bible claims to be from God it is false because there is no God. Therefore the Bible has errors.

You have just reasoned in a circle! Dennis, you have no evidence to say there is no God. Besides, being an atheist defies human reasoning! Have you searched every inch of the entire universe? Do you possess (sic) all knowledge? To say there is no god you must possess (sic) all of these qualities. I find your newsletter seriously lacking in scholarship and objectivity. Some of your difficulties are absurd, and it takes nothing but common sense to remove the difficulties (sic).

Editor's Response to Letter #410

Dear JC. First let me say that before you write someone a letter you should consult a dictionary as to the correct spelling of words. For such a short letter you certainly overshot your quota and no doubt this exposed your general comprehension of the topic. In any event, as far as your letter, itself, is concerned the problem lies not within my circular reasoning but within your failure to reason at all. Let me give you some words of wisdom. Before you set out to attack another's writings, read what they have written and committed themselves to. Clearly you have failed in that regard as far as BE is concerned. Your first premise was that I alleged there was no god. Out of nearly 95 issues of BE could you cite chapter and verse? If you had read what went before you would know that I have repeatedly said on numerous occasions that the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. That is axiomatic in all rational/scientific endeavors. I am under no obligation to prove a god does not exist; you are obligated to prove he does. After all, you are the one who is bringing up the idea. If someone tells me they are visited by angels, I am not required to prove it doesn't occur. They must prove it does. Otherwise, every crackpot theory imaginable is true until someone can prove it's false. How absurd! Prove I did not talk to the Devil this morning if I say I did. After all, you weren't there. If I say I am followed by a green man every day and you say that is ridiculous, under your twisted logic it's true unless you prove otherwise. Secondly, although I've never addressed the issue of miracles and the supernatural directly, can you provide me any tangible evidence to substantiate the existence of either? Can you show me one event that does not have a natural or material cause? As with the efficacy of prayer, few subjects receive more attention with less corroboration than miracles and the supernatural. It is hard to believe so much gab is devoted to so little dab. Thirdly, I can't help but note that apologists who talk the most about logic and reason are often those who practice them the least. If there is any lack of scholarship and objectivity involved, JC, it lies in your inability to jettison your Christian upbringing and view your own inadequacies. You began with a premise which proved you had not read prior issues of BE and quickly followed this up with a weak attempt to shift the burden of proof. Later, you not only promoted the existence of miracles and the supernatural but claimed "being an atheist defies human reasoning" without providing any proof of either. Apparently we are to lend them credence simply because you say so. Don't let your initials get the better of you. You are no more qualified to pontificate than your idol. You ask if I have "searched every inch of the entire universe" and if I "possess all knowledge." A modicum of rationality would tell you that you are obligated to conduct such a search, not I, and come back with the appropriate evidence. You concluded your invective with comments to the effect that "some of your difficulties are absurd, and it takes nothing but common sense to remove the difficulties." To begin with I don't know what difficulties you are talking about. Could you dispense with glittering generalities and be specific. Like many apologists you dodge detail because of what it would entail. As I have told critics of BE in the past, please don't engage in broad generalizations. Relate chapter and verse. And finally, JC, I can think of few people less qualified to cite common sense as their mainstay than yourself. Judging from your letter, you believe in a god, miracles, the supernatural, the divine inspiration and inerrancy of the Bible, and your own objectivity without providing evidence of anything. Your letter was written from the heart, not the head, my friend.

Letter #411 from FA of Santa Rosa, California

Dear Dennis. In your response to letter #381 (Part a) in Issue #94, you wrote about the Ten Commandments. In comment #2 you said the 10 listed in Exodus 20 and Deut. 5 "are specifically labeled as such," that is, "The Ten Commandments." Actually, the only labels are chapter headings or section headings supplied by the translators and not part of the original. I want to point out something most people miss and I am afraid you also missed. The only list of 10 commandments in the Bible which is called "the ten commandments" is found in Exodus 34:10-28. Here is a list not familiar to many, but specifically called "the ten commandments." This is from the J source and dates from 950-850 B.C. The Deut. 5 list with the Sabbath command referring to the Exodus from Egypt is from the D or Deuteronomist of about 620 BC. The list in Exodus 20 with the Sabbath command referring to the six day creation is from P or the Priestly version from about 500 BC.

This may be only a technicality but it does show that the Exodus 34 list could fit into the time of 1200-1400 BC. The later versions had #2 - Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image. Moses had 2 golden cherubs made for the Ark of the Covenant and even made a brazen serpent himself. It would be out of the question for Moses to have known of such a commandment and still make cherubs and the serpent. #10 deals with coveting houses and lands but for a nomadic people who didn't have houses or lands, this would make no sense.

What happened was the Priests wanted to give authority to their ideas of 500 BC so through the device called a "legal fiction," they wrote their laws into an older setting and had Moses receive them from God. I hope I have made it clear enough for you to understand. I have done a great deal of research on the Bible in preparation for a book I have just completed. My book will be published in January 1991. It should be of interest to you and also JB, the writer of letter #383. The title is "Miracles that Never Were." I have explained the 200 Bible miracle stories in natural terms instead of supernatural terms. I will send you a copy as soon as I get them from the printer.

I have been a subscriber from the very first issue and I have only praise for you and your work. If I can be of help in answering any question about miracles, please let me know.

Editor's Response to Letter #411

Dear FA. I appreciate your addendum to our response to Letter #381 (Part a) but have a problem with your interpretation of Ex. 34:10-28. As I understand your position you are alleging that the directions laid down therein by God are the only laws in the Bible that are called the ten commandments. If that is a correct statement of your analysis, then we diverge at verses 27 and 28. If you will notice, rules are laid down in verses 10 through 26. Beginning at verse 27 God says, "Write thou these words for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel." In other words, after listing in verses 10 through 26 all of the rules to be followed, God told Moses to write them down. Then, in verse 34:28 the subject shifts and the text says, "And Moses was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments." In other words, Moses wrote the rules listed in verses 10 through 26 and in the following 40 days he wrote an additional set of laws entitled the Ten Commandments. That is how I interpret the text. If what you say is true, then there should only be 10 laws or commandments listed in Ex. 34:10-26; yet, the text clearly shows there are more than 10. Depending on where you make your divisions, I counted 17. Moreover, the rules in Ex. 34:10-26 just don't have the caliber, potency, and substance that would be attributed to TEN COMMANDMENTS. They are the kind of legalisms with which the Bible is replete--ritualistic matters of a secondary or tertiary nature. Indeed, the Book of Leviticus is a veritable miasma of ritualistic mumbo-jumbo. In addition, I don't think cherubs could be classified as graven images and I have no doubt nomads had houses, even though they might be of a temporary variety. I can understand the point you are trying to make, but I don't think the text will bear you out. You might want to bounce it off some notable apologists and note the kind of response that is engendered before placing it in your book.

Your offer to send me a copy of your book is only too kind. I just hope I can get through the stack of literature I have received from other supporters before yours arrives.

Dear Dennis. It was nice to hear your voice again. I am glad to know all is okay with you.... Even though I agree with you that the most effective strategy is to attack the source (scripture), we have a lot of members who are completely uninterested in biblical criticism. They don't want to change any minds; they just want to ensure that we are all free in this country to believe or disbelieve as we please. FFRF has a pretty broad agenda--I am glad B.E. exists to focus on the crucial specifics of errancy.

Did you receive the copies of contradiction books I mailed you? That was a couple of months ago. If not, I have one extra copy.

Editor's Response to Letter #412

Dear Dan. It was nice to hear from you again on the phone but I'm sorry to say that if what you say is true then FFRF has a lot of naive people living in a world of hopes and dreams. You win by focusing on the changing of minds, not by focusing on the changing, buttressing, or fortifying of laws, regulations or social customs. People run the show; laws don't. Let me repeat: People run the show, laws don't. Laws, and especially the Constitution, say whatever people say they say. Contrary to popular misconception, every government is a government of men not laws. Laws are merely a reflection of which group has the greatest resources, especially numbers and wealth. Justice is quite secondary. In fact, it often has very little to do with what occurs. Judges and legislators are merely a reflection of group strengths. Consequently, the will of the group with the greatest strength is going to prevail, regardless of what the Bill of Rights or any other legal documents say. Nowhere is this more evident than in having "under God" in the pledge of allegiance, "In God We Trust" on the currency, and government-financed chaplains in Congress and the military. If these aren't violations of the First Amendment, there is no such animal. Government support of religion is clear and blatant in every instance and not really subject to rational dispute. Yet, it exists, nevertheless. Why? Mainly because freethought advocates, such as those you mentioned, have focused on law enforcement rather than converting millions of opponents to their point of view. Once we have the numbers and resources the law will be reinterpreted accordingly. But as long as we are terribly outnumbered, we aren't going to prevail regardless of what the law says. In other words, convince people to join your side and the laws will be rewritten and reinterpreted in compliance. As matters now stand, many of your members are engaged in a hopeless, never-ending bucketbrigade of running from one fire to another. While they are abolishing one creche on one court house lawn, or one prayer at a sports event, or one Bible distribution in one school or hotel, or one cross on public property, and so on ad infinitum, others will be emerging in ever greater numbers, if not more rapidly. If that isn't a hopeless quest, I don't know what is. They will not only be engaged in expending resources in futile endeavors but indirectly allowing the religious crowd to maintain their stranglehold indefinitely. A lot of people are going to be consumed, indeed wasted, in an enervating escapade of moving from court case to court case. They will never be able to put out the fires as fast as they arise, not without a substantial change in numbers. First you must show people the errors of their ways by debunking their fundamental beliefs and then demonstrate the correctness of yours before real progress is possible. Changing minds, deprogramming, restructuring what people learned in Sunday School as children is basic, if not axiomatic. As of now we are greatly outnumbered and any substantial movement in our direction can be blocked. Witness current trends in the Supreme Court of the United States. The "live and let live" philosophy is a pipe dream. They aren't going to leave us alone, regardless of what FFRF members do or think. Fortunately, I know from personal experience and our prior discussions on strategy that you are more realistic than some of your membership.

I did receive the books which you were so gracious to send. Thanks ever so much. You are a gentleman and a scholar as usual.

Letter #413 from JP of Hemet, California

Dear Dennis. Thanks for your work. It's great to see in print some of the things I've wondered about over the years.

EDITOR'S NOTE: How would you like to earn $10,000. A Jewish organization in Israel with a philosophy somewhat similar to BE's has offered $1,000 to any Christian for each of the following 10 challenges he/she can surmount. I would think every biblicist, every fundamentalist, every evangelical, indeed, most apologists for Christianity would look upon this as an easy opportunity to get some quick cash. To them I would say: If the book holds together as well as you claim, what are you waiting for. $1,000 will be given to any believer:

(1) who can find in the OT any verse that says Abraham bought a sepulchre for a sum of money from the sons of Emmor as is recorded in Acts 7:16 of the NT.

- (2) who can find in the OT any verse that says Jacob was buried in Shechem as is recorded in Acts 7:15-16 of the NT.
- (3) who can find in the OT any verse that says 75 souls went down with Jacob into Egypt as is recorded in Acts 7:14 of the NT.
- (4) who can find any verse in the OT that says, "a virgin", shall bear a child, as is recorded in Matt. 1:23 of the NT.
- (5) who can find in the OT any prophet who said, "He shall be called a Nazarene" as is recorded in Matt. 2:23 of the NT.
- (6) who can find in the book of the prophet Jeremiah any passage that speaks of a potter's field and 30 pieces of silver as is recorded in Matt. 27:9-10 of the NT.
- (7) who can find in the OT any mention of a "son of perdition" as is recorded in John 17:12 of the NT.
- (8) who can find in the OT any verse that says the Torah (the first 5 books in the Bible-ED.) was given by angels as is recorded in Acts 7:53 and Gal. 3:19 of the NT.
- (9) who can find in the OT any place where it says that when Elijah returns he will have his head chopped off, as is recorded in Mark 6:16 and 9:11-13 of the NT.
- (10) who can find in the OT any place where it says the Jews killed Zacharias, son of Barachias, as is recorded in Matt. 23:35 of the NT.

So there you have it! $10,000 easy dollars, just for the asking! $1,000 for each problem answered! To the Christians I say, "Hurry, don't delay or the money might vanish." Oh, I almost forgot! The organization has a periodical entitled Biblical Polemics and can be reached at P.O. Box 13099, Jerusalem, Israel.

Audio Tape #30 is now available. During an atheist luncheon on January 19, 1991 in Columbus, Ohio the editor of BE employed considerable vitality to focus on strategy and philosophy rather than the Bible's contents. 57 Minutes plus 19 Min. Q & A Session.

COMMENTARY

This month's commentary will conclude the listing of Misquotations that was discussed in the prior two issues. At some time in the future we will address the second category of ACCOMMODATIONS -- Nonquotes.

ACCOMMODATIONS (Part 3)--(24) In 1 COR. 3:20 ("The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain") Paul misquoted Psalm 94:11 ("The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity"). Psalm 94 says "man" not the "wise." Most assuredly, all men are not wise. Wisdom and men are by no means identical. (25) FIRST COR. 15:54-55 ("...then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?") is a perversion of both Isa. 25:8 RSV ("He will swallow up death for ever") and Hosea 13:14 ("...O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction"). (a) Isaiah says death will be swallowed up "for ever" not "in victory." (b) Hosea says "thy plagues" not "thy sting." (c) Hosea says "thy destruction" not "thy victory." (d) And Hosea was not written in interrogatory form. It is difficult to see how the words of 1 Cor. 15 could be accurately derived from Isaiah and Hosea. (26) EPH. 4:8 ("Wherefore he saith, 'When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men'") does not correctly reproduce Psalm 68:18 ("Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive: thou hast received gifts for men...."). (a) Psalm 68:18 says "received gifts" not "gave gifts." (b) Psalm 68:18 also says "thou" not "he." (c) Jesus never led captivity captive or led others to a high mount. (d) What gifts did Jesus give unto men? (e) And lastly, there is a tremendous difference between "giving gifts to men" and "receiving gifts for men." (27) HEB. 4:3 ("For we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest....") could not have come from Psalm 95:11 ("...unto whom I swear in my wrath that they should not enter into my rest"). The "not" in Psalm 95:11 makes them inconsistent if not contradictory. (28) In HEB. 10:7 ("Then said I, Lo, I come [in the volume of the book it is written of me] to do thy will, O God") Paul apparently quoted Psalm 40:7-8 ("Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me. I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart"). Yet, he left out the last phrase which says, "thy law is within my heart." In other words, God's will is the law. If Paul had quoted Psalms correctly he would have been stressing the importance of upholding the old law. Doing God's will, according to Psalms, means upholding the old law. Since Paul never stressed the old law, he understandably left out the last verse. Moreover, the Psalmist said, "my God," which Jesus would not have said to his co-equal, if, in fact, they are co-equal. (29) HEB. 10:16-17 ("This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more") is a distortion of Jer. 31:33-34 ("...but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts;...for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more"). (a) The New Covenant referred to in Jer. 31:31 is not that of Jesus' New Testament but a reaffirmation with Israel of the importance of following the Old Law. Jer. 31:33 clearly states that God's law (my law) will be put in them. (b) "and in their minds will I write them" does not appear in Jer. 31:33-34. (c) Jer. 31:33-34 speaks of the Old Law and the importance of following same. Nowhere is Jesus, the man, even implied. (30) HEB. 10:36-37 ("...ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry") is a misquotation of Hab. 2:3 ("For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry"). (a) Habakkuk says nothing about "he." The "it" in the verse is a vision, not Jesus. Habakkuk is referring to the maturation of a vision he has. The "it" referred to has nothing to do with the arrival of any individual. (b) Where in the OT, especially Habakkuk, did God promise "he will come and not tarry?" (31) 1 PETER 2:6 ("Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded") distorts Isa. 28:16 ("...therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste"). (a) Isaiah says, "he that believeth shall not make haste." It never uses the phrase "he that believeth on him." (b) Isaiah also says "make haste" not "be confounded." (c) Isaiah never implies the stone is "elect" or "chief" among many. (32) 1 PETER 2:22 ("Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth") misquoted Isa. 53:9 ("...because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth"). (a) Isaiah says "no violence" not "no sin." Sin and violence are not identical. Apparently Peter realized "he hath done no violence" could not be applied to Jesus as the moneychangers discovered. (33) And finally, HEB. 12:20 is a misquotation of Ex. 19:12-13 just as 2 PETER 2:15 does not accurately reproduce Num. 22:5.

That concludes our presentation of major misquotations of the OT by the NT. In later commentaries we will address the 2nd and 3rd parts of ACCOMMODATIONS, namely, Nonquotes and Misinterpretations.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #414 from RS of Oak Lawn, Illinois

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I would like to know who you are and what degrees you possess. I would like to know also how long you have been doing what you are doing.... P.S. I have enclosed $9 for a 1st year subscription, and do you repeat the same materials in your issues after you have once degraded the Bible? Is there a limit?

Editor's Response to Letter #414

Dear RS. I included your letter in the D & D section because of your use of the word "degraded." We have spent over 12 years exposing the incredible number of problems associated with the Bible and have created what is probably the most comprehensive refutation of the Bible available in the English-speaking world, if not the entire world. I take exception to the implication that the Bible is worthy of respect and our endeavors are less than honorable. We provide facts, thousands of facts, not degradation. If people conclude from our mountain of data that the Bible has been degraded, that is their own conclusion based upon their evaluation of the evidence. Please don't impugn our motives because of what the evidence leads you to surmise. If any degradation is in evidence, it arises from facts, evidence, proof, and logic, not our predispositions. Then, again, perhaps you just chose a word carrying unintended baggage; in that case just ignore my catcall.

As far as your questions are concerned, I have a bachelor's degree in philosophy and a master's degree in the social sciences. We have been publishing BE for 8 years and try to have as little repetition of material as is possible.

Letter #415 from RC of Placentia, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey. This morning I was reading "Jesus The Magician" by Morton Smith, wherein it says that the gospels were written around 70 to 100 A.D. A question came to my mind which I wonder if you've covered? If the gospels were written by the actual Matthew, Mark, Luke and John who were Jesus' disciples (and there are many questions about that) and if the disciples were around Jesus' age, wouldn't that make them centurians at the time they wrote their gospels?

I've told my Fundamentalist sisters who push the gospel on me that the Book of Revelation is so fantastic and ridiculous that John had to be drunk, senile or out of his head when he wrote it. (They have no answer). If you have any comments or answers on that subject, I shall look for them in B.E.

Editor's Response to Letter #415

Dear RC. The problem with historical critiques of the Bible is that no matter what you say apologists can pull out historians who say the opposite. None of us were there so it mainly becomes a matter of whom you want to believe. They also lack emotional commitment from present-day believers. With respect to your specific question, biblicists will contend that the gospels are entitled "The Gospel According to --?--". It doesn't say they were written by. Or they will say that if Methusaleh can live to be 969 why couldn't they live to be 100. Or they will concoct some other historical legerdemain. That's their standard approach to historical difficulties and that's why BE does not address questions of this nature to any significant degree, although you have posed a logically valid problem.

The Jewish apologist, Gerald Sigal, expressed an attitude in this regard that is almost identical to that of BE. He said, "I do not utilize the works of those Christian scholars (the Higher Critics) who, using the scientific approach to the NT, have, for more than a century, dismissed as unhistorical many of the traditional episodes in Jesus' life. The reasoning behind this approach is that Christian missionaries accept these traditions as literally factual. As a result, it is extremely important that one who wishes to challenge missionary claims be able to effectively counter their arguments through means other than the scientific. Perhaps of even greater value than the scientific approach is the effective use of the very sources considered valid by the missionaries themselves. Therefore, it is not unfamiliarity with modern NT study, but the conscious recognition that the problems engendered by the missionaries must be approached squarely through the very works the movement accepts as authoritative, that makes it necessary to investigate their assertions through these sources. Hence, we will examine the missionary claims on the basis of the Hebrew Scriptures (the OT) and the NT, and these works alone. It would make little sense to approach the problem through the use of what is termed the scientific study of the NT when such scholarship would be simply dismissed as invalid by Christian missionaries and Christian converts...."

While occasional reference has been made to nonbiblical works, the use of the OT and the NT has been overwhelmingly emphasized. These are the fundamental texts upon which all missionary arguments are based.... Refutations of the claims of the missionaries are taken from the very books in which they profess to believe: the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures, often termed the Holy Bible." (The Jew and the Christian Missionary, Page XVIII).

As far as the Book of Revelation is concerned, you might note that your sentiments echo those of Ingersoll, Paine, Martin Luther and others.

Letter #416 from Dan Barker of the Freedom From Religion Foundation, P. O. Box 750, Madison, Wisconsin 53701

Dear Dennis. I'm sorry you were not able to make it to the Ann Arbor convention in October. It would have been great to see you again.... I agree with you and RA that bible criticism is the crux of freethought in America. We should hit them where it counts. Freethought Today is dedicated to a healthy dose of biblical criticism even though we have members who disagree with us. There are some atheists and agnostics...who feel it is a waste of time (or not worth not much time) to dig into the biblical text. The bible, to them, is like the Koran to us. "Who cares?" they say. But I care. Truth is truth. The world should not be allowed to pass a bunch of lies as a "Good Book." Anyway, as an organization that is dedicated primarily to the separation of church and state (which is the main reason we are growing so well), we have to balance biblical criticism with philosophy, state/church, legal, church crimes, etc....

Editor's Response to Letter #416

Dear Dan. It is a pleasure to hear from you again. As far as your comments on biblical criticism are concerned I have experienced the same opinions. Unfortunately, many of those in the freethought persuasion, especially atheists, are engaged in a sizable number of tactical and strategic mistakes which warrant an enumeration. First, religious people, especially Christians, cover a wide spectrum of opinion. If you are going to oppose an extremely numerous opponent, one must focus primarily on those elements representing the greatest threat. Conservative, fundamentalist, evangelical Christians are the most vocal, the most determined, and among the most numerous and richest rivals we have. Naturally, I'm going to assail those most directly opposed to my philosophy. And what better way to attack them than by exposing the absurdity of their most prized possession, the Bible. Second, to attack God or a God's existence is to focus on one issue while minimizing the role of all others; in effect, they are doing precisely what some attribute to BE. BE is occasionally accused of having a very narrow focus by dwelling only on the Bible, while in reality it addresses a wide variety of topics from a biblical/anti-biblical perspective. The Bible is merely the platform from which many topics are observed. Salvation, government, morality, sexism, racism, homosexuality, original sin, abortion, heaven, hell, saviors, Jesus, the Ten Commandments, faith, works, God, and slavery are only a few of the myriad of topics that have been covered in BE. On the other hand, the narrow focus on God's existence, that is so prominent in several atheist publications, relies almost entirely upon one issue to sway people's opinions on hundreds of topics. Third, our supporters need only observe media conflicts in which atheists, agnostics and/or humanists are pitted against religionists to note the number of times the latter resort to the Bible as their ultimate weapon in any serious encounter. Even more importantly, they need to note the number of times the spokespersons for rationality are unable to respond effectively, because of a noticeable absence of biblical knowledge, in order to realize why we should be aware of the Bible's shortcomings. If "God's Word" is going to be constantly relied upon by the religionists as their ace in the hole, then we need to put a hole through the ace. Fourth, proving or disproving the existence of some sort of supreme being is far more nebulous and imprecise than focusing on biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies. The former is just too hard to pin down with any degree of precision and finality. It's too hard to get your opponent to say "Uncle." There are too many loop-holes and vagaries through which religionists can escape. The Bible, on the other hand, has many direct, obvious, and blatant contradictions that even the least intelligent can understand and relate to. Fifth, about the only belief which all religionists hold in common is belief in a god. Consequently, any assault upon such a concept will be opposed by the largest number of religionists possible. Unfortunately, this will include millions of people who not only agree with your assessment of fundamentalism in general and the basic book of Christianity in particular but also would be willing to join us in our opposition to the most determined elements of the religious crowd. In effect, atheist organizations are spreading themselves so thin that they are all but innocuous. And they are simultaneously alienating those elements that can be of some assistance in our ongoing struggle with the most determined opponents we have. Sixth, fundamentalists and other biblicists are the ones who promote church/state violations the most vociferously and effectively; whereas, Christians of a liberal persuasion are much more prone to support church/state separation, abortion rights, the peace movement, an active social agenda, etc. Seventh, since the fundamentalist/evangelical wing of Christianity is composed of those most inclined to proselytization, evangelization and indoctrination, the more one can reduce their numbers the better. They are: the ones who show up at your door or accost you on a college campus; the ones who recruit with the greatest enthusiasm; the ones most likely to produce fanatics; the ones most likely to destroy your organization and beliefs; and the ones whose numbers are growing the most rapidly. Eighth, those who most strongly believe in the Bible, not those who believe in a God, are those most opposed to equality of rights, least focused on the improvement of the world's conditions, least opposed to war, and most supportive of prayer and other debilitating activities. Virtually their entire spectrum of beliefs are reactionary and inimical to the improvement of man's condition. Ninth, like anyone believing they are following that which is inerrant and infallible, they will not be open to discussion, compromise, or opposing data. They will be most inclined to censor our appearances, our access to the media, our educational endeavors, and our efforts to hinder or prevent religious encroachment in our community and schools. Tenth, the fundamentalist/evangelical approach to life in general and the Bible in particular has a relatively coherent and consistent body of theology. Stated bluntly, it is much easier to pin down. It is far easier to cope with someone who considers the Bible to be infallible and inerrant than someone who says, for instance, that crucial biblical concepts such as Adam and Eve, miracles, the Flood, and the Resurrection are mythological. Those who have left the inerrant/infallible biblical position have gone in all directions and for us to try to chase down every one of them and highlight the error of their ways would require hundreds of BE's. Like branches of a trellis, the scores of biblical/theological positions that have emerged from the fundamentalist/evangelical perspective are quite numerous and not one represents a sufficient number of people to supercede the Bible-above-all-else position. By critiquing the Bible we are not only opposing the entire basis of Christianity and influencing everyone afflicted with a religious perspective, because they all rely on the Bible in varying degrees, but shifting everyone toward a more rational approach to life. If, on the other hand, we concentrated on the innumerable liberal positions that are available, we'd be chasing hundreds of positions, each of which represents a far smaller number of adherents, and leaving untouched millions of died-in-the-wool biblicists. Eleventh, jettisoning a belief in god is the last and most difficult step for most people. Initially, it is far easier to shake their faith in the Bible in general and Jesus in particular than it is to create an army of atheists. Most people have to crawl before they can walk and weakening attitudes in their strongest order of adherence is important. People are more inclined to jettison belief in a book or even a god/man than in some kind of supreme being concerned with their welfare. As a practical matter, you are going to have more success initially in convincing people that the Bible, Jesus, Paul and Moses are not to be trusted than a god doesn't exist. Above all else people are insecure and want to believe that somehow the elements have a heart. Twelfth, with a reasonable degree of biblical knowledge and a repertoire of poignant questions, a freethinker can shake the beliefs of most biblicists, since most expounders of the Bible don't know the Book very well and an even smaller number are aware of its shortcomings. Thirteenth, many atheists erroneously believe that if they destroy people's belief in a god they will simultaneously eradicate their adherence to the Bible. They fail to realize that for many people belief in a god is based upon biblical teachings, not vice versa. As far as millions of people are concerned, God must exist because the Bible says He does. The favorite Christian refrain--How do I know; because the Bible tells me so and The Bible said it; I believe it, and that settles it--come readily to mind. And how do we know the Bible is telling the truth? Because only a divinely inspired book could have so many accurate prophecies, especially those pertaining to Jesus. What other book has such an incredible batting average. What other book is so internally consistent and flawless. In what other book does a savior die for mankind and rise from the dead to prove his credibility, etc. It must be the product of a perfect being, at least that is how the "reasoning" goes. Many people use the Bible to prove God exists, not vice versa. They don't use God's existence to prove the Bible is true; they use the Bible's "truth" to prove God is real. Consequently, disproving the Bible must be of primary concern for atheists and other freethought advocates. If many atheists read Christian apologetic literature more, they would see how the Bible is used to prove God's existence. Focusing on teleological, cosmological, ontological and other kinds of arguments, ignores or minimizes the biblical proof for the existence of God and Jesus's divinity. Once one accepts the Bible as inerrant, then everything it says is true. Among other things, the Bible says there is a God, Jesus rose from the dead, and Jesus is God. Apologist Geisler summarized the situation rather well when he said, "The Bible is the fundamental from which the other fundamentals come. And if the fundamental of the fundamentals is not fundamental, then what is? Fundamentally nothing!" (The Battle for the Resurrection, p. 161). Much more could be said in this regard but the point has been made. Fourteenth, Christian belief in the innate depravity of man, the importance of faith over works, the efficacy of prayer, the punishment of hell and the reward of heaven, the subjugation of women, the legitimacy of slavery, the importance of supporting one's government regardless, and other debilitating concepts arise more from biblical teachings than a belief in God. Even if one could somehow eliminate the belief of people in God and, thus, prove the Bible couldn't be God's Word, millions would still be inclined to follow its teachings. Why would the Bible have to be removed as a guide for one's life just because one stopped believing in God? Fifteenth, it's hard to see how believing in a God is doing as much damage to people as belief in a book that promotes miracles, the supernatural, inequities, prayer, self-effacement, saviors, social indifference, and other debilitating, negative beliefs. One need only read the Age of Reason and his other theological works to see that no one held the Bible in greater contempt or heaped more scorn on its contents than Thomas Paine. Yet, he would have to fall under atheist ridicule as much as Jerry Falwell or Jimmy Swaggart because he was a deist and believed in a god. It is hard to conceive of anyone who strongly believes in the Bible's validity being the kind of citizen we seek to create, while that is much less true of those who merely have a nominal belief in some sort of supreme being. I can live with Paine; but it is all I can do to stomach the others. And lastly, far too many atheist/agnostic/humanist organizations in the United States are little more than support groups in which people of like mind periodically meet over fine cuisine to recharge their batteries and discuss the nonsense of the opposition. I really don't need anybody to hold my hand, assuage my intellectual loneliness, or buttress my wounded psyche. What I do need is an army of energetic fighters willing to do the leg work that's required if we are to effectively combat the avalanche of superstition that dominates this nation. On top of all the religious nonsense that we must endure, even if only for a fleeting moment on a religious channel, we now must cope with an additional layer of New Age mental illness that has flooded the nation in recent years. How was that for a short response!

Fortunately, Dan, you are much more realistic in this regard than many of your colleagues. Your appearances on the media and your recent article in FREETHOUGHT TODAY on your debate with the prominent apologist, Norman Geisler, demonstrate that you have a firmer grasp of the overall situation than most freethought advocates. I am glad to see that you are becoming increasingly viewed as the major national representative for our position.

Letter #417 from JRB of Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Dennis. Thanks for the great work you're doing. The pamphlets I got last year, I put in bus stations and books in Christian Book Stores. Thanks again.

Editor's Response to Letter #417

Dear MM. You deserve a pat, too, for your efforts. I only wish more supporters of BE would distribute our pamphlets in this manner. Several people browsing through the apologetics sections of Christian bookstores have ended up contacting us.

Letter #418 from TF of Webster, Wisconsin

Dear Dennis. One of my favorite sayings, which I'm sure you'll agree with is: "Those who do not know their opponent's arguments do not completely understand their own."

....I've really been enjoying your tapes. In fact, I recently bought a boombox so that I can listen to the tapes wherever I go. My wife and kids think I'm crazy, but I've listened to them over and over and learned a lot. Keep up the good work.

COMMENTARY

Some time ago we instituted a policy of periodically devoting an entire issue of BE to letters from our readers. This month's issue will continue that tradition.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #419 from SS of Winter Haven, Florida (Part a)

(In an earlier letter SS tried to prove that the God of the OT, as opposed to the God of the NT, was just, merciful and good--ED.).

Dear Dennis. Thanks for printing my letter (#382, Issue #94)... I notice that you didn't print, or even make reference to, the OT's Psalm 103, which I enclosed with my letter, and referred to in my letter, which describes God's mercies and doesn't contain any contradiction of this within the Psalm....I take it you didn't mention Psalm 103 because you had no answer to it. That's unfair. Surely you must be secure enough in your beliefs to be able to admit it when the other side is correct about something? Naturally, you can "prove" someone is wrong if you omit references or words. But that's not proof. It's actually an admission on your part that you have no response and have to resort to censorship. By resorting to such tactics, you concede the debate.

Editor's Response to Letter #419 (Part a)

Dear SS. I didn't print Psalm 103 because your point was so weak that it didn't really merit a response. Censorship had nothing to do with it. If BE ever started censoring, I would resign from the staff. When compared to the opposition's, our case is as solid as granite. Apologists don't have a case; they have a feeling, a desire, a hope that is masked in a shroud of rationalizations and obfuscations. If there is one thing I have learned over the years, it is that knowledgeable apologists for religion in general and Christianity in particular are horribly dishonest and deceptive. Instead of being central to their thought processes, truth is of little importance when one is trying to justify an emotional high at all costs. The need for a feeling of security and influence, if not control, over their fate supercedes any adherence to veracity or reality. All religious/superstitious people have one overriding desire--justification for a belief that the elements have a heart, that somehow something out there is looking out for their welfare. An indifferent, impersonal world is just too much for them to handle. That's why religion is so attractive to the weak, the insecure, the infirm, the poor, the oppressed, the exploited, the unintelligent and the uneducated.

Your reference to Psalm 103 is of no import because many of God's actions throughout the OT nullify its assertions that God is righteous, merciful, kind, gracious, and just. Again, I recommend that you read the list of OT deeds committed by God that can be found in Issue #3. Are we going to go by words or deeds? Are we going to go by what God did or what the Bible says, and you believe, he represents?

Letter #419 Continues (Part b)

I'd like to see where in the OT you believe God behaved badly. I do dispute your claim.... The OT God never destroyed or punished anyone who wasn't evil or sinful. The OT God even eventually repealed the sacrifices of animals (Hosea 6:6) and also repealed the death penalties (Ezek. 18:23).... Yes, I dispute your claim that the OT God did appalling things.

Editor's Response to Letter #419 (Part b)

You really have embarked upon a hopeless defense, SS. The evidence that God did "appalling things" is overwhelming. Several examples are as follows. In Ezek. 9:6 ("Slay utterly old and young, both maids and little children, and women....") God ordered the killing of innocent children; in Ex. 12:29 ("...the Lord smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt") he killed innocent children, and in Ex. 22:29-30 ("...the firstborn of thy sons shalt thou give unto me. Likewise, shalt thou do with thine oxen, and thy sheep....") he ordered human sacrifice . Since this list could go on for pages, I again suggest that you read the 3rd Issue.

Letter #419 Concludes (Part c)

I'm not bitheistic. But the OT God and the NT God are two different Gods, even if some theists claim they're the same God. You don't believe their other claims, so why believe that one?....Since all religions teach different things, only one of them can be the true religion, if there is a true religion. And only the God of that one religion is the true God....I wonder if you'll print this letter, and if you have any good answers to it--using factual quotes from the Bible and logical argument and no semantic games, and no omission of references and statements of mine that you can't refute, or which refute your refutations....

Editor's Response to Letter #419 (Part c)

You talk about two different gods while claiming you are not bitheistic. Yet, you claim I am the one who is engaging in semantic games?? When you concede the existence of two gods, you are bitheistic whether you like it or not, SS. Equally important is the fact that you can't seem to realize that people can have different conceptions of the same god. You say, "the OT God and the NT God are two different Gods." Why can't everyone be referring to the same god while having different conceptions of his/her nature? After all, you do claim to be monotheistic, don't you? You say that there can only be one true religion and only the God of that religion can be the true God. That is false. You should have said, "...and only the God of that religion can be the true conception of God." Why couldn't there be several monotheistic religions, as there indeed are (Christianity, Judaism, Islam), while only one has a true conception of God, assuming one exists? Why couldn't they worship the same God while only one has an accurate idea of his nature? You seem to be at a loss as to whether or not the gods of other religions are, in fact, gods.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Dennis. Regarding your comments about the importance of state/church separation vs. bible criticism, I can only respond that they are both of utmost importance. FFRF is quite committed to exposing the bankruptcy of the bible (and other religious writings). Our continual best-seller is The Born Again Skeptic's Guide to the Bible by Ruth Green, a powerful indictment of scripture which exposes the contradictions, cruelties, and absurdities of the so-called Holy Bible--published by FFRF. Our first film, "A Second Look at Religion," concentrates primarily on bible criticism. Almost every issue of Freethought Today has at least one article on the bible or related aspects of Christianity. Most of our noncontracts deal with the bible. Most of the public debates I have done deal directly with the bible. (In Atlanta, for example, I debated "Is the Bible an acceptable guide for morality?"). Our second most popular book is Annie Laurie's Woe to the Women: The Bible Tells Me So, which goes through the entire bible, documenting its treatment of women. We do dozens of radio shows each year, and most of them end up with some form of bible criticism. The same is true with TV, regional and local. Just because FFRF also deals with state/church separation does not mean we have discounted criticism of the bible or of religion. We agree with you that it is of utmost importance to give the lie to mythology. But most of our 4,000 members feel that state/church separation is at least of equal importance. We are a democratic national group, so different members will have different emphases. A few of them tolerate bible criticism while preferring legal activism, and a few feel the opposite. But generally, most FFRF members agree that both areas are vital.

In the late 1940's Vasti McCollum's kids were forced to participate in religious instruction in their public school (prayer, worship, bible readings, etc.). She took it to court and, at first, she lost her case. She lost again on appeal. But when she appealed to the Supreme Court she won the case in an historic decision. Since 1949 there has been no religious instruction in the public schools (except for a few outlaw teachers). Are you suggesting that Vashti should not have taken her case? Should we have allowed the evangelists into the public schools to teach religion during normal hours? Aren't you glad that someone like Vashti had the courage to enforce the First Amendment? Today, the entire law of the land is based, to a large degree, on the precedent set in the McCollum case.

In 1961 Roy Torcaso wanted to become a notary public. He refused to sign the oath that said he believed in God. Should he have lied? Should he have backed off from becoming a notary public? He took his case clear to the Supreme Court and effectively stopped most of the discrimination that countered the constitutional guarantee against a "religious test for public office."

You know I could cite many more examples. It is hard to think of anything more important than defending the First Amendment to the US Constitution. Sure, maybe in time we could educate the world and retire the bible to the mythology section of the library; but that will take a very long time. In the meantime, do we let those who still believe disregard religious freedom and discriminate against those of us who are critical of the bible? Do we sit back and take it? What would you do if the state of Ohio told you to stop publishing Biblical Errancy? The freedoms that B.E. and FFRF share are due to the First Amendment. Would you not use the Constitution to fight back? If you lived in Iran or Iraq you could not publish B.E. If we lived in a Christian theocracy (which many right-wing believers desire) neither of us could engage in religious criticism. We owe an awful lot to our First Amendment, and any efforts to preserve its principles are important. They are what makes America a free country.

If FFRF were not working for state/church separation, we would probably be only 20% of our current size. Legal issues garner publicity. Most of the radio and newspaper publicity about FFRF is due to state/church complaints. I can't tell you how many times I have been invited to do a radio interview because of state/church issues only to have the interview turn into a discussion of the bible. If FFRF were simply a bible criticism newsletter, we would get much less airtime. We would have much less prestige. For example, we are going to sue the governor of Indiana for exclusively placing Gideon bibles in state-owned hotel rooms, denying our request that they also place our material which criticizes the bible alongside the bible. The fact that we are suing a Governor makes this a hot PR issue, and the resultant publicity gives us a chance to tell why we disapprove of the bible. Without the First Amendment and the principle of state/church separation, we could not take this action, and we would lose an opportunity to educate a lot of people. As a matter of fact, Harper's Magazine picked up on the story and they reprinted our noncontract, "Dear Believer," which is a hard-hitting critique of the bible. Otherwise, could we have landed our material in Harper's? Could you?

I think it is wonderful that B.E. focuses on bible contradictions. You have been a valuable resource. I don't see any problem at all with your staying out of the state/church arena. I hope you don't feel that because FFRF deals with more than one issue we are necessarily less committed to either.

Editor's Response to Letter #420

Dear Dan. It's always good to hear from you but I have a difference of opinion on strategy with some of your members. You say that both church/state separation and biblical criticism are of utmost importance but every issue of Freethought Today places far greater emphasis on the former than the latter. You are realistic and competent enough to tackle the Bible but that is not the general tenor of your paper or the letters and articles to the editor from your membership. Indeed, except for your critiques and an occasional article by Michael Hakeem the Bible is virtually untouched. I think that anyone who reads Freethought Today would agree that its focus is certainly not on the Bible. For the most part Scripture occupies a rather minor role and were it not for your efforts and those of Michael it would not have even that. Your Noncontract "Dear Believer" is very good. But as far as substantive and reasonably comprehensive critiques of the Bible are concerned, The Born Again Skeptic's Guide to the Bible, which I bought and read years ago, appears to be the only book available. Annie Laurie's book covers the Bible but only from the perspective of one topic--women's subjugation and liberation. You said that most of the public debates you have had deal with the Bible and most of your media appearances end up with some form of Bible criticism. Although you are carrying a torch in this regard, are others in FFRF doing the same? You say that "a few of them tolerate bible criticism. That's just the problem. They "tolerate" it. They don't promote or propound it. In fact, they generally avoid the Bible as much as possible. And when these members of your organization appear before the religious and "end up with some form of bible criticism" or discussion, is it because they consciously and intentionally went to that topic or were they pulled there by the opposition. The overwhelming number of religious/freethought confrontations I have seen or heard on the media have ultimately dwelled on the Bible because of the benighted's efforts. They want to talk about the Bible; freethought advocates don't. You say that "FFRF also deals with state/church separation...." It doesn't "also" deal with it, Dan; that is the primary area of focus. You say that "we agree with you that it is of utmost importance." You may, Dan, but that is by no means the sentiment of your membership. You say that "most of our 4,000 members feel that state/church separation is at least of equal importance" when the majority feel that it is of far greater importance.

You mentioned the McCollum and Torcaso cases and asked if we should "let those who still believe disregard religious freedom and discriminate against those of us who are critical of the bible." A terrible thought, indeed! But how to win more cases of this nature is of crucial importance. Members of your organization who believe that McCollum and Torcaso won these cases by themselves have been watching too many "John Wayne" movies. Heroes don't make history. I can remember when I taught history decades ago, the text-book ran from one central figure to another as if they were the guiding and motivating force in mankind's evolution. We went from Caesar to Jesus, to Charlemagne, to King John, to Luther, to Washington, to Jefferson, to Napoleon, to Lincoln, to Roosevelt, and to Kennedy with a lot of other well-known individuals inbetween. The focus was always on the individual hero as if he were the spark of history. In truth, history has always been made by large groups, bodies, and classes of people butting heads. Lincoln and his Emancipation Proclamation didn't free the slaves; the result of two clashing armies did. And the assassination of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand didn't cause World War I; competition between the world's industrial powers was the culprit. You mentioned a belief that is very common among most freethought advocates when you said that "the freedoms that B.E. and FFRF share are due to the First Amendment." Actually, we owe very little to the First Amendment or any other laws for that matter. Laws and their interpretation are merely a codification of prevailing attitudes. McCollum and Torcaso won their cases because mass sentiment had sufficiently shifted in their direction. In former days public opinion was definitely against what they were trying to do and other people who had brought similar or identical suits in former years had lost. One hundred years ago McCollum and Torcaso could never have won their cases anymore than a black could have effectively fought Jim Crow laws in the South. But by 1949 and 1961 millions of people had sufficiently changed their minds that victory was possible. Millions of people shifted to the religious "left" so to speak. Millions had joined the freethought persuasion; other millions became less religiously militant, millions more became neutral, and other millions of a decidedly religious outlook became more tolerant. The latter may not have had the same ideas on religion as McCollum or Torcaso but they, nevertheless, felt that their cause was just. When opinion had sufficiently shifted, the long line of people in the McCollum/Torcaso tradition finally became victorious. The crucial point to note in all of this was that the law never changed. The First Amendment has been on the books from the beginning, since 1791. If "the freedoms that B.E. and FFRF share are due to the First Amendment," then why did it fail to act? Where was it when we needed it most? You say that "we owe an awful lot to our First Amendment." No, we owe a lot to the people and events that worked to change the opinions and theological attitudes of millions of our citizens, who, in turn, caused the First Amendment to become something other than a bunch of words on paper which it had been for hundreds of years in the Jim Crow South and the theological areas of concern to McCollum and Torcaso. Prior to 1949 many people had tried to do what McCollum and Torcaso accomplished. They failed because they didn't have the numbers. They had the law and the Bill of Rights but they lacked what really matters--numbers and money. You probably remember what I said in the February Issue--People Run the Show, Laws Don't. I think you are honestly expressing the attitude of your membership when you say that "It is hard to think of anything more important than defending the First Amendment to the US Constitution." From BE's perspective, however, exposing the nonsense of religion in general and the Bible in particular is more important. The more people you can convert to your side or at least neutralize the greater your chances of seeing your philosophy prevail. Change attitudes and the laws will be reinterpreted and enforced accordingly. If we don't have the numbers, we aren't going to succeed regardless of what the First Amendment says or how hard we fight for its implementation. Having "Under God" in the pledge of allegiance and "In God We Trust" on the currency are classic examples of First Amendment violations. Yet, they remain the law of the land. You say that "maybe in time we could educate the world and retire the bible to the mythology section of the library (Under the Dewey Decimal System, religion and the Bible are classified next to the mythology section); but that will take a very long time." Yet, that is exactly what has been going on behind the scenes. People are becoming increasingly educated and that's why McCollum and Torcaso were victorious. If it were, in fact, to take a very long time that could very well be attributed in large measure to the failure of freethought advocates to do their homework and take it to the other side. Certainly, ministers, priests, and rabbis aren't going to reveal the inadequacies of religion in general and the Bible in particular. That's not what they are paid for. You and I both know that used-car salesmen don't go out of their way to expose defects in their products. Truth-in-advertising has never been a hallmark of Christianity.

Fighting court battles is fine as long as they are put in proper perspective. If they become the primary area of focus, in effect, we are trying to take-on the other side in a dollar-for-dollar, man-for-man encounter. And with their resources and political clout, the outcome is a foregone conclusion in over 90% of the cases. Legal issues garner publicity, but a 30-second spot or sound-bite on local TV is not sufficient to alter views people have held for a lifetime. Moreover, the media are only going to air material relevant to the legal issues per se. They aren't going to provide us an extended forum in which to assail religion or the Bible. In fact, the only reason we are appearing on TV at all is that a sizable number of people are in sympathy with our purely legal argument. That doesn't mean they are freethought advocates or sympathetic to our views on religion in general. It only means that they are in sympathy with our views on the particular point in dispute. The leader of Ohio Atheists, Frank Zindler, has appeared on TV several times because he has led a movement to restrict the freedom of Christian Scientists to engage in what Frank refers to as "Child Sacrifice." Parents have been committing manslaughter (So determined by the courts) by allowing their children to die through prayer overdose rather than being required to provide responsible medical care. Frank has been allowed media exposure because many people, even those of religious denominations, agree with his position on this issue. He has not been allowed, however, to express his views on religion in general or the Bible in particular. That would not be supported by his community-wide backers or the station upon which he is appearing. After all, reporters and editors have views, too. I realize that FFRF's membership strongly believes that legal issues garner publicity. But, unfortunately, when we win court battles without changing or at least influencing the ideas of our opponents, we often create a backlash that is as bad or worse than the initial problem. A friend of mine recently noted that because a legal suit resulted in a nativity scene being removed from a court house lawn in his town, scores of nativity scenes sprung up all over to express defiance. I have seen similar repercussions in other instances. Like so many towns in America, that community is probably riddled with people who have never heard an indepth presentation of the Bible's inadequacies. If freethought advocates had prepared the ground better, a plethora of nativity scenes might well never have appeared. And although the case should have been fought, primary emphasis should have been on changing beliefs. Unless attitudes are changed, what is to prevent a mere temporary victory? As I noted in a prior issue, with the decidedly anti-intellectual drift of the Nation during the past decade, a reversal of earlier victories is by no means impossible. We both have shuddered at the recent Supreme Court nominations. Some members of the clergy can be expected to take reprisals, and only because there has been a "liberal/left" drift of the clergy in general is there a greater chance of permanent victory. You said that "If FFRF were simply a bible criticism newsletter, we would get much less airtime." That's true because the issues you are addressing are immediate, physical, and emotional. People who plant bombs or engage in other kinds of physically-dramatic acts such as striking, marching, or blocking entrances also get air-time, often more than they desire, but how many minds are influenced, persuaded, or changed. We aren't going to be allowed appropriate air-time under this kind of approach to present any kind of indepth critique of religion in general and the Bible in particular. At best it's going to be superficial and fleeting. After all, we are not being brought-on to critique religion in general or the Bible in particular. We are being brought-on to address a specific issue and any ancillary information will have to be something we manage to slip in.

In any event, I'm glad your organization is having legal successes and hope many more will follow. You come across on the media quite well, Dan, and, as I mentioned in a prior issue, the vast bulk of my comments are directed far more to the membership of FFRF and other freethoughters throughout the country than yourself. I look upon our exchange of letters as a healthy and productive dialogue. Both of us seek to minimize the influence of religious superstition in this Nation as well as all of its attendant negative ramifications. Both of us work with a fine group of sincere, rational, dedicated, hardworking individuals trying to make the world a better place in which to live. We seek the same goal and our only main point of discussion lies in how best to proceed. If you or others feel that greater success can be obtained by the approach currently followed by FFRF, then by all means continue. I'm for anything that works. No doubt there are people who are more easily influenced by state/church issues as well as extrabiblical topics such as God's existence, creation/evolution and the Canon's formation (which I have often been urged to address more extensively) than the biblical approach. In the final analysis, it comes down to which will influence the greater numbers; so ultimately every approach is needed to some degree.

EDITOR'S NOTE: As you have probably already realized, BE has reached a true milestone in its on-going presentation of biblical realities. This month marks our 100th issue; one-hundred issues and still going strong. It is hard to believe that we have lasted this long with little chance of going under. We would like to salute all of our subscribers and other supporters who have done so much to make BE a greater success than we originally expected. There is undoubtedly a market for the kind of material we present and our only obstacle is widespread publicity and financial backing. Thanks, and stay tuned; baring any unforeseen difficulties, more is yet to come.

COMMENTARY

Because of the large volume of mail in recent months we have decided to devote an additional issue to letters from our readership.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #421 from Robert Bowman of the Christian Research Institute in San Juan Capistrano, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Recently a copy of Issue #90 of Biblical Errancy (June 1990) was sent to me and attention drawn to Steven Overholt's letter and your response. Since I am prominently featured in your response, I would like to answer your allegations.

First, you assert, "Because it was becoming increasingly evident to any objective observer that he (Bowman) was coming out on the short end of the stick, he allowed his subscription to BE to lapse." Apparently anyone who agrees with you is objective, while anyone who agrees with me is not. All I can tell you is that no one here at CRI thought anything of the kind. I did not feel at all that I was coming out looking the loser intellectually. Actually, I felt that I was wasting my time. More on that shortly. By the way, CRI's subscription to BE, which was in my name, lapsed while I was on a two-year leave from CRI to attend school in Philadelphia. I had nothing to do with the subscription lapsing. This illustrates a point which is very relevant in dealing with apparent biblical errors, namely, that lack of information can lead the unwary to draw erroneous conclusions, such as you did about my supposedly letting my subscription lapse. Second, you write, "I suspect that Walter Martin, the Director of CRI, read our correspondence, decided that Bowman was in over his head, and directed him to bow out...." Hardly! No one told me to stop writing to you. At the time I headed the Correspondence Division at CRI and had complete freedom to write to you or not as I saw fit.

Editor's Response to Letter #421 (Part a)

Dear Robert. You picked October 1990 to respond to a June 1990 letter in BE that came about because of an on-going debate between us that was originally aired in the July 1986 and Sept 1987 issues. Surely you must realize that we have all slept since then. In any event, how you felt about how you were looking is quite irrelevant. The fact is that you were coming out on the short end of the stick. Secondly, please note that I said "I suspect" that Walter Martin read our correspondence and told you to bow out. I never stated it as a proven fact since there is no way I could have known for sure. Thirdly, you said, "I felt I was wasting my time." That's correct; you were. Anyone who attempts to "prove" the validity of religion in general and the Bible in particular to those relying upon logic, reason, and rational thought is wasting his time. One might just as well try to prove the validity of alchemy to a chemist or astrology to an astronomer. Anyone who projects faith, and that is what religion boils down to, upon those who require proof and expects success is living in a world of fantasy. Remember! It isn't the Christian Reason or the Jewish Reason. It's the Christian Faith, the Jewish Faith. Christians want people to believe in something, be it a Book, a Church, or a Messiah, merely because some authority says so. That's not how rational thought, the scientific mind, operates my friend. With any rational mind, proof, evidence, and experimentation always have precedence over belief and authority figures. With religion/superstition precisely the opposite is true.

Letter #421 Continues (Part b)

Third, I strongly object to your characterizing me and other apologists as deceptive and hypocritical "confidence men" pushing a "con game." Religious charlatans do exist, but it is just not true that all Christian apologists are con men. I know, whatever you may think, that my motives are love of truth and concern for other human beings.

Editor's Response to Letter #421 (Part b)

Although not always legally indictable, anyone who presents something to other people in a manner that is dramatically different from its real character is a confidence man engaged in deception. When apologists not only claim the Bible is God's Word but inerrant as well, that is a fraud and those so engaged are confidence men. If you sell someone something that is portrayed as flawless that is, in fact, a lemon, you have defrauded that individual even though you honestly believe in your product. And unlike all other frauds, there is no way to rectify your misrepresentation because people could only become aware of their victimization when it is too late. Motives and intentions are secondary in this kind of situation. Whether biblicists deceive by intent or by accident the result is the same--a tremendous injustice that can't be rectified. You gained their confidence and deceived them in the process. That's what I mean by a "con game" and why I call biblicists "confidence men." Webster's Dictionary defines a "swindle" as a trick, a cheat, a fraud and a confidence game is defined as a swindle, i.e., a fraud, effected by gaining the confidence of the victim. You may not have intended to deceive your victim, but that, in fact, is the outcome. Just because you believed in your product and did not intend to deceive the buyer doesn't mean you did him any less harm. If I fire a gun at a rabbit and kill a human being, instead, the person is just as dead as if I had intended to kill him. You are still selling a bogus item, even if you don't know it or honestly believe it's genuine. Your motives are of less importance than the genuineness of the item you are advertising. [TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH]

Letter #422 from GS of Cranston, Rhode Island

Dear Dennis. I feel I have to respond to your answer to Dan Barker in the #99 issue of BE, since I am one of the people being criticized for concentrating my attack on areas other than the Bible. I specialize in attacking the existence of God, and have done so in books, articles, debates, and radio/TV shows.

While I do not consider it a waste of time to have someone dig into the Biblical texts (in fact I consider it very useful), I do think that you have been far too quick to dismiss the work of other non-believers as less useful than your own. In fact, it is quite easy to turn a number of your own arguments right back upon you. First, the Bible is but one element used by theists to support their belief. You can eliminate Bible-belief and still have a theist. To my way of thinking, the fundamental problem is caused by belief in and reliance upon, the supernatural (i.e., God). If you can destroy the logicalness of that belief, the belief in the Bible and all other tenets of all religions that are God-based will disappear. I am always clear in my debates and media appearances that the Bible cannot logically be used to defend a belief in God. God's existence must be established first in an independent way, then we can see if the Bible is God's Word. Almost all believers can see that this is so, and will abandon their reliance on the Bible to "prove" God's existence. Once they do this, they are left to use strictly logical proofs (which they foolishly feel they can do). When I destroy each so-called proof, they are left with no defense for their theism except "faith." I can destroy that concept's validity with a single "coup-de-grace," leaving them totally defenseless. I bet you can't do that with the Bible, no matter how many inconsistencies, errors, omissions, etc. you provide. The "out" is always there that perhaps the language used was mistranslated, or that you have to read the text while you are yourself "inspired" in order to properly understand it. Second, it is far easier to use logic on the relatively simple arguments that have been offered as "proofs" of God's existence. They are readily susceptible to logical analysis and logical refutation. That this is so can be seen from the haste with which theists beat a path to the "faith argument" when cornered. They know that they have been bested logically. With Bible arguments, they rarely do.

Third, the fact that belief in God is the most widely held religious position is, contrary to what you said, the great strength in attacking that position. Sure, you will meet more opposition, but your arguments are cleaner and stronger, being strictly logical. I find your comment that those who believe most strongly in the Bible, and not those who believe in God to be the ones most opposed to equal rights and to the improvement of the world's conditions, to be false. Anyone who relies upon a God to improve the world, rather than taking action himself/herself, is the real problem. The Bible has little to do with it, except as a justification for "letting God do it."

Next, although it may be more difficult psychologically for people to get rid of their belief in God, it is also much more beneficial to them and to the rest of humanity when they do. I have met many thousands of people who have been able to get rid of their theism and live healthy and productive lives. On the other hand, although I have also met many thousands who have gotten rid of their belief in the Bible, they do not have the same responsible outlook that the non-theist has about world problems.

Finally, I find your statement that destroying a person's belief in God will not simultaneously eradicate their belief in the Bible, to be false and illogical. I have not seen anyone who could successfully maintain this position, even for a minute. If the Bible is not the word of God because there is no God, then it becomes a mere repository of folktales and primitive superstitions. Who would want to believe in that?

In short, while I feel that those who attack the Bible on its contents have useful work to perform, the work of those of us non-theists who have chosen to concentrate on other areas of the problem, cannot be dismissed or downplayed as you have chosen to do. I think that the best solution is for each to contribute to the best of his or her abilities, while respecting and not denegrating the work of others who have chosen to concentrate upon a different aspect of the same problem.

Dear GS. I would hope that you would in no way view my response to Dan as a personal criticism of anyone in particular, since that was not the intent. We have more than enough involvement dealing with apologists and other religionists without alienating friends and allies such as yourself. I look upon Dan's letters and my responses as healthy and productive dialogues that allow everyone to have a good view of current thought in the anti-superstitious struggle. No doubt the best approach lies somewhere inbetween and that's what we all seek. I wasn't referring so much to someone who focuses on areas other than the Bible but on someone who concentrates on "one" area exclusively, namely God-belief.

A few of your points need to be addressed, however. When you say that the Bible cannot logically be used to defend a belief in God, many apologists are going to disagree. For a book to be so internally consistent, so correct about world conditions, so prophetically perfect, so moral in its maxims, so concerned about the salvation of mankind through God's willingness to die for humanity, and so beautifully written, it would have to be the product of a divine being. Who else could have written such a masterpiece that tells, and has told, mankind what will happen hundreds of years before the event? At least that's how their "reasoning" goes. In addition, before you ever contact people, millions will have already been biblically indoctrinated and be convinced the Bible is the word of a perfect being. Even if you cause them to admit God's existence can't be effectively demonstrated, they will still rely on faith in his existence. That faith, along with the Bible's cohesion is sufficient. Don't forget. It's the Christian faith, the Jewish faith, not the Christian Reason, the Jewish Reason. As was mentioned in a prior issue of BE, belief in God is the hardest concept for people to jettison, since millions of terribly-insecure people want the elements to have a heart and tend to see patterns and purpose in everything. You are using a rational approach to combat a desire, a hope, a yearning relevant to one issue. I don't think one issue is sufficient to sway our opposition, no matter what the topic or how strong our arguments. Thirdly, I think your approach would work best with people who already have questions, if not doubts, about the existence of a divine being. Unfortunately, that is primarily limited to the intellectual community many of whose members can be found on the campuses of higher education.

You say that your arguments are cleaner and stronger and I can't do that with the Bible, no matter how many inconsistencies, errors, etc. I provide. You feel that with you they know they have been bested logically, but with Bible arguments they rarely do. Perhaps our experiences are different, GS, but I have had two fundamentalist ministers say "Uncle" to me before audiences in recent months over contradictions I've noted in the Bible. Maybe you are more skilled than I, but I have never gotten that kind of admission from anyone while debating God's existence. One of the ministers had debated an atheist just before meeting me and frankly admitted that my approach was much more difficult to handle. I firmly believe that if you keep problems simple, direct, blatant, crucial and focused on that which is actually written down, escape hatches are kept to a minimum. Chasing apologists is like pursuing greased pigs or nailing jello to boards. Virtually any lawyer will tell his client to, "Get it in writing, if you want to prove your case." When apologists commit themselves to paper, they simultaneously put themselves in a real bind and dramatically cramp their style. Teleological, cosmological, and ontological arguments, on the other hand, just don't lend themselves to that kind of precision and specificity.

Perhaps I am mistaken but I don't think theological arguments are cleaner or stronger. But even more importantly, they just aren't going to influence biblically-indoctrinated people who have been taught to relate and correlate an incredible number of life experiences on nearly every subject imaginable to biblical teachings. When they have been repeatedly shown how the Bible is "right-on," their belief in a God can be easily justified in their minds by faith. Trying to change their beliefs on one topic while hundreds, if not thousands, of biblical comments tend to prove the opposite is just not practical. In the first sentence of the Bible believers are called upon to accept God's existence through faith alone. The Bible does not start by proving the existence of God. Quite the contrary, from the beginning faith and acceptance take precedence over proof and evidence. Knowledgeable theologians will concede as much. That's why they are called the Christian and Jewish faiths. One Jewish apologist aptly stated in this regard, "Christianity is nothing if not a religion of faith. Faith is a virgin giving birth to a child. Faith is that child sharing a trinity with the God of creation. Faith is a resurrection that no one saw. Faith is a 'coming soon' which has never happened after 2,000 years of waiting" (The Light of Reason, Shmuel Golding, Vol. 1, p. 20).

You note that theists beat a path to the "faith argument" when cornered. Yes, but from their perspective that is a more defensible position than reconciling blatant contradictions in which both sides can't possibly be true simultaneously. The Bible provides thousands of examples of the latter while a debate on God's existence is limited to one issue. Moreover, astute theists can always employ the inductive argument that science is ultimately based on faith since you assume a pencil will fall to the floor when dropped based on hundreds of past experiences. They will allege that you can't be positive it's going to drop the next time. Of course, you and I both know that one would have taken leave of his senses if he assumed otherwise.

You feel that anyone who relies upon a God to improve the world's condition is the real problem rather than those who believe most strongly in the Bible. But I don't think you are allowing for gradations of opposition, GS. It just isn't realistic to throw all Christians, indeed all religionists or all theists, into the same basket. There are significant differences between Robertson and Bultman, Falwell and Fosdick, Swaggart and Briggs, Paine and W. J. Bryan, fundamentalists and the United Church of Christ that can't be ignored. Theists believe in God, while biblicists believe in God and the Bible. That's what makes the latter so anathema. They not only believe in God but an absurd and dangerous book as well. At least many theists have managed to jettison in varying degrees much of the Bible and its preposterous nonsense. Your comment that "anyone who relies upon a God to improve the world's condition is the real problem" seems to imply that only atheists fight for abortion rights, civil rights, and civil liberties. In other words, all who rely upon a God are to be equally attacked and condemned. As much as I am opposed religion in general and the Bible in particular, I tend to see significant gradations of opinion in the religious community and have real problems with a black versus white approach. You say that people have a more responsible outlook when they not only shed their belief in the Bible but God as well. I have no problem with that, but getting rid of a strong reliance on the Bible is a way-station on the way to non-theism. Millions have to walk before they can run.

You say that if the Bible is not the word of God because there is no God, then it becomes a mere repository of folktales and primitive superstitions. You are concentrating on aspects which are of most interest to you, GS, while for millions in that situation it merely becomes a repository of moral teachings and wise philosophical maxims, many of which come from the only "perfect" man who ever lived. It becomes a guide to life. For millions the ethical code found in the gospels, Paul's Epistles, and Proverbs as well as biblical history and the conduct of Jesus Christ in the NT, become central. The book is no longer viewed as perfect or even God's word, but as the most nearly perfect book. People don't have to look upon the Bible as a product of a divine being to accept nearly all of its teachings as an excellent guide by which to conduct one's life. At least, that's how the "reasoning" goes.

In closing, I certainly wouldn't dismiss your work as of no importance GS. Indeed, for some it undoubtedly rings a bell. For some people, especially those who have had little or no biblical indoctrination, God's existence rather than the Bible's validity is the major consideration. Indeed, for some people the scientific inaccuracies in books such as Genesis are sufficient alone to cause rejection of the Bible. The whole question of effectively combating religion is a lot like fitting shoes. No size is right for all but those within a certain range certainly fit far more people than the rest. If you feel comfortable and productive in what you are doing, by all means proceed as usual. I'd certainly prefer that you continue on your normal course than do nothing whatever. We have enough freethought advocates doing that as it is. Please don't feel that I'm denegrating your efforts. If more people were following in your footsteps, we'd be having a greater influence on the kind of people who are most affected by your approach. Hopefully, I conveyed the same message to Dan. More work is needed across the board and you and Dan are of great importance in that effort.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #423 from PD of Mesick, Michigan

Dennis. The first four tapes I ordered were excellent. As you see, I'm back for four more. I wish that I had had them before I started debating with bible-thumpers. Assuming that these individuals would think and argue in a logical and rational manner, as normal people do, led to several unnecessary "at a loss for words" episodes....

Letter #424 from SS of Winter Haven, Florida

Dear Dennis. You asked for comments on your planned, new "no more Mr. Nice Guy" approach; so here's a comment. You might make yourself feel good that way, but "you catch more flies with honey than with vinegar." Also, if you resort to insults and ridicule, it looks like you ran out of good arguments and have nothing left but insults and ridicule. It's the same as conceding the debate. If someone sent you insults and ridicule and nasty remarks, would that convince you he was correct? Of course not. So why believe others react differently than you to such tactics? On the other hand, no need to be wishy-washy, either. Try to find a happy median.

Editor's Response to Letter #424

Dear SS. Either you misunderstood what I said earlier or I failed to clarify my position. All I meant was that apologists would find me more assertive less deferential, more forceful less reserved, more in-charge less ingratiating than was true before. Insults, pejoratives, and nasty remarks would never become central to our approach.

Letter #425 from RC of Placentia, California

Dear Dennis. May I make a suggestion? If you know ahead of time when you will appear on a radio show, would you please print it in the BE Newsletter? I would have liked to have heard the KBRT debate LIVE and I would have called several friends to ask them to listen too.... I really like your "Editor's Note" in the last issue. Sock it to'em, Dennis.

Editor's Response to Letter #425

Dear RC. You have made an intelligent request and I do try to comply when practical. There are a couple of major problems with publishing my planned appearances in BE. Either the dates are changed by the station at the last minute (I don't like readers to feel they have been misled by me) or the appearance will occur before the next issue of BE is sent. I don't like to jeopardize my integrity because of the fickleness of radio stations. They aren't reliable enough to suit my taste. But I'll do what I can.

Letter #426 from JS of Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis.... I am 17, and began reading your newsletter a year ago. It was instrumental in changing the way I look at the Bible. I am now an agnostic, changed from a full fledged Christian. Although I feel that some of the points you bring up are open to rationalization by Christians, the majority of your facts are hard-hitting, unassailable truths that even the most ardent Bible-thumpers have difficulty in explaining away.

In many of your issues, you have printed letters from a Mark Potts. The man who got him started in his trek towards free-thinking and debate is the same man who helped me along and gave me your newsletters.... I was planning on taking your 60 issues and either copying or scanning them to a large text file or a sequence of files to be distributed around the Tulsa community as messages directed at people and/or files to be freely given out. I felt I should ask your permission first.... Good luck with your publication, and write soon.... I'm eager to get all the issues I've missed!

Editor's Response to Letter #426

Dear JS. For your sake, I am glad you crossed over the bridge to rationality and please feel free to distribute copies of BE around the Tulsa area as you desire.

Letter #427 from VS of Lake Worth, Florida

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... I found out about your newsletter at a recent meeting of the South Florida Secular Humanist Society. I met ---....who had a copy of BE; I found it absolutely fascinating! One of the letters in the issue I saw was by someone who has been fighting the Moody Bible Institute. I have been involved in an ongoing battle with the Campus Crusade for Christ group at the public college I attend, especially after they planted a false news release in the college newspaper (of which I am news editor). I am interested in knowing about anyone else who has successfully dealt with this group which seems bent on closing young minds before they have a chance to open.

Editor's Response to Letter #427

Dear VS. It is always a pleasure to hear of someone who is fighting the campus battle, especially when an organization such as the one you named is under scrutiny. Keep up the good work!

Letter #428 from RS of Glendale, Arizona

Mr. McKinsey....I like my first issue of BIBLICAL ERRANCY. Our country suffers because of the general public's incorrect knowledge of the Bible's origins. The public needs accurate information about the Bible, uncolored by ancient traditions and superstition. Unfortunately they will not learn the facts from most media or churches, and certainly not from the televangelists. You and your publication provide a valuable public service.... While fundamentalist beliefs are interesting, they are also potentially dangerous. Among other things, fundamentalists are far too willing to subjugate themselves to authoritarian rule because of their interpretation of a 2,000 year old book. Even worse, of course, is their willingness to impose their beliefs on others, and so doing, abrogate freedoms provided by the Constitution.... By the way, I can confirm one statement you made. It is futile to use outside means like reason, logic, or scientific fact when debating the accuracy of the Bible. I learned that the hard way while discussing things like the Genesis version of creation, and whether the sun (the earth, actually) stopped as described in Joshua 10. The only acceptable proof for a fundamentalist is the Bible itself. Luckily there is plenty of ammunition therein. Keep up the good work, and I hope to hear or see you in a debate soon.

Letter #429 from JW of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Concerning the challenge by the Israeli publication, BIBLICAL POLEMICS, let's split the money. I submit the following on No. 4 which asks who can find any verse in the OT that says, "a virgin," shall bear a child, as is recorded in Matt. 1:23 of the NT? I submit Isaiah 7:14 (KJV), which states: Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." The NT says "child" while the OT says "son," but the emphasis in the question was on "a virgin." If the Israelis are saying it is not in the OT because of the difference between "son" and "child," then they are really nitpicking.

Editor's Response to Letter #429 (Part a)

Dear JW. I would imagine the response from Israel will not involve a distinction between "son" and "child," but between "almah" and "bethulah." Perhaps you are not acquainted with the controversy that has surrounded this issue for centuries. The Hebraic word used in Isaiah 7:14 is "almah" which Christians have interpreted as "virgin." Jewish scholars and many liberal Christians, on the other hand, repeatedly assert that "almah" means "a young woman" not a virgin. They note that there is a perfectly good Hebraic word for "virgin" and that is "bethulah." If the OT author had been referring to a virgin he would have used "bethulah" not "almah." I don't think you can collect any money on this one, but you are welcome to try.

Letter #429 Concludes (Part b)

Also, as usual, your work is remarkable. Keep it up! I would like to share a small story. I work with a nice fellow, who is a Christian. We get along fine, but lately, he believes God has sent him to "save" me. I am generally very tolerant of them, because, I know they believe only they have the truth, and have a command of God to convert the world. So far, I have put up with his proselytizing, but one of these days, I am going to bite back. He already admits that I know the bible better than he does. I do not try to destroy his beliefs, because it would make our working relationship harder. I can just listen to it, or I can button his lip forever. When I get angry enough, I am like a heat-seeking missile. I once took a Jehovah's Witnesses apart with a 45 minute lecture. When I got through, he had nothing to say, no response at all. I guess I am saying to you that I still have trouble with those who want to convert you, because I would rather just along than be contentious. What do you think?

Editor's Response to Letter #429 (Part b)

If you don't show this man the error of his ways, JW, who will? You have been brought a poor lost soul whose only contact with a rational analysis of the Bible could very well be yours. He might never again hear the kind of critique you could provide. Ministers, priests, and rabbis aren't paid to expose the inadequacies of the Bible, even though they may be fully cognizant of same. So to expect objectivity from them is just not reasonable. Don't you feel an obligation not only to illuminate but foster a more rational environment for all concerned?

Letter #430 from JW of Richmond, Virginia

Dear Dennis. One method one can use to wake us the brainwashed is to inform them that the Bible says Jesus is a killer! a killer of children! Then refer them to Rev. 2:18-23. Also refer them to Luke 10:29-37 wherein Jesus teaches that the priest and the Levite are not "thy neighbor." Jesus commands the "certain lawyer" to so judge. (That also takes care of some of that judging trumpery--"judge not" etc.). The irrationals really get giddy and addle-headed when one suggests that Jesus discriminated against the priest and the Levites (you don't have to love them like "neighbor").

Good medical authority informs me that one should not argue with irrational people--just state the cold facts. Apparently they don't remember the facts, and later some finally admit to themselves that they are indeed irrational. That frightening thought scares them and breaks down a lot of conditional reflexes and hypnotic trances. But it takes time. You are probably doing more than anybody to stop mind crippling lies. The wackos are promoting mental illness and destroying lives. Keep up your excellent work! You are the best!

Editor's Response to Letter #430

Dear JW. I think they not only remember some of the facts to which you allude in a biblical discussion but are changed in the process, even if only to a minor degree. It takes many swings of an ax to fell a tree. You have to return to the engagement repeatedly for meaningful results to become evident.

Letter #431 from LD of St. Louis, Missouri

Dear Dennis.... How do you respond to someone who draws a circle and tells you that all of the knowledge of the univers is represented inside this circle. Then they tell you to slice off the part that represents what you know. Then they tell you that God could exist in the part that you have admitted not knowing about. I have to admit I got stung on this one. I know you don't go outside the Bible much, but how can we answer this one. I have been searching all the great freethinkers, so far I haven't an answer.

Editor's Response to Letter #431

Dear LD. You say you searched all the great freethinkers? This is not a particularly difficult problem. The key words are "could exist." God could exist in the unknown void, but, then again, so could a million other things. I am not saying a God is not in the void, but your interrogator is saying He is. He is the one who is claiming superior knowledge, knowledge beyond that of everyday experience. My permanent response to that kind of question has always involved a request for proof. As I have said on numerous occasions, the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. He is obligated to provide some evidence beyond intuition, while I am not required to prove anything in this regard. After, all he is the one who brought up the idea.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (A) Every month's issue of BE has always been mailed on the last day of the prior month. Yet, over the years some people have been gradually receiving it later and later. We attribute this to postal inefficiency rather than Christian conspiracy. The rates go up while the service goes down. I don't know what can be done and we apologize when it arrives more than 3 weeks after being mailed.

(B) The Editor's Note in the Feb. Issue (#98) gave the name and address of an organization in Israel that offered $10,000 to anyone who could provide an effective response to 10 questions. Although that organization's critique of Christianity resembles our approach, our inclusion of their challenge should not be taken as an endorsement of their general philosophy. They not only promote Judaism but Zionism as well; we only travel the same road when it comes to Christianity.

(C) We haven't altered the subscription rates to BE in over four years but an increase in printing costs and the the recent increase in postal rates leave us no choice. To offset the added costs we hope to give BE a more professional appearance that will begin with this month's issue.

COMMENTARY

This month's commentary will continue the alphabetical listing of notable quotes that last appeared in the December, 1990 issue (#96).

QUOTATIONS

(PART 6)

PROPHECIES--"I have now, reader, gone through and examined all the passages which the four books of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, quote from the OT and call them prophecies of Jesus Christ. When I first sat down to this examination, I expected to find cause for some censure, but little did I expect to find them so utterly destitute of truth, and of all pretensions to it, as I have shown them to be." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. 258

"But there is not a passage in the OT that speaks of a person, who, after being crucified, dead, and buried, should rise from the dead, and ascend into heaven." Ibid., p. 261

"These repeated forgeries and falsifications create a well-founded suspicion that all the cases spoken of concerning the person called Jesus Christ are made cases, on purpose to lug in, and that very clumsily, some broken sentences from the OT, and apply them as prophecies of those cases...." The Life and Works of Paine, Vol. 9, p. 269

"...it is immaterial to us, at this distance of time, to know who the person was: it is sufficient to the purpose I am upon, that of detecting fraud and falsehood, to know who it was not, and to show it was not the person called Jesus Christ." Ibid., p. 239

"Were the NT now to appear for the first time every priest of the present day would examine it line by line, and compare the detached sentences it calls prophecies with the whole passages in the OT from whence they are taken. Why then do they not make the same examination at this time, as they would make had the NT never appeared before? If it be proper and right to make it in one case, it is equally proper and right to do it in the other case. Length of time can make no difference in the right to do it at any time. But, instead of doing this, they go on as their predecessors went on before them, to tell the people these are prophecies of Jesus Christ, when the truth is, there are none." The Life and Works of Paine, Vol. 9, p. 273.

"The prophecies of the OT can be made to fit anything that may happen, or that may not happen. They will apply to the death of a king, or to the destruction of a people,--to the loss of commerce, or the discovery of a continent. Each prophecy is a jugglery of words, of figures, of symbols, so put together, so used, so interpreted, that they can mean anything, everything, or nothing." Ingersoll's Works, "Interviews," Vol. 5, p. 285.

"The prophecies are rarely read. It is difficult to sustain reader interest in their long and tedious nonsense. Cultured people who have read Gulliver and Atlantis know neither Hosea nor Ezekiel." Voltaire on Religion by Kenneth Applegate, p. 120

"Someone has said that the first soothsayer, the first prophet, was the first rascal who encountered a fool...." Ibid. p. 117

"The NT rests itself for credulity and testimony on what are called prophecies in the OT, of the person called Jesus Christ; and if there are no such things as prophecies of any such person in the OT, the NT is a forgery of the councils of Nice and Laodocia, and the faith founded thereon, delusion and falsehood." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. 216.

"But if Jesus Christ was the person the church represents him to be, that which would exclusively apply to him, must be something that could not apply to any other person; something beyond the line of nature; something beyond the lot of mortal man; and there are no such expressions in this chapter, nor in any other chapter in the OT." Ibid. p. 239-40

[On Isa. 7:14] "This passage is in Isa. 7:14 and the writer of the book of Matthew endeavors to make his readers believe that this passage is a prophecy of the person Jesus Christ. It is no such thing." Ibid. p. 229

[On Matt. 2:23] "Here is good circumstantial evidence that Matthew dreamed, for there is no such passage in all the OT; and I invite the bishop and all the priests of Christendom, including those of America, to produce it." Ibid. p. 235

[On Hosea 11:1] "To make it apply to Jesus Christ, he must then be the person who sacrificed unto Baalam and burnt incense to graven images, for the person called out of Egypt by the collective name, Israel, and the persons committing this idolatry, are the same persons, or the descendants of them. This, then, can be no prophecy of Jesus Christ, unless they are willing to make an idolater of him." Ibid. p. 233.

[On Isa. 53] "This may be said of thousands of persons who have suffered oppressions and unjust death with patience, silence, and perfect resignation." Ibid. p. 240

PUNISHMENT--"They (the clergy--Ed.) must show that misery fits the good for heaven, while happiness prepares the bad for hell; that the wicked get all their good things in this life, and the good all their evil; that in this world God punishes the people he loves and in the next, the ones he hates; that happiness makes us bad here, but not in heaven; that pain makes us good here, but not in hell. No matter how absurd these things may appear....they must be preached and they must be believed." Ingersoll's Works, "Some Mistakes of Moses," Vol. 2, p. 18

Letter #421 from Robert Bowman of CRI Continues from Last Month (Part c)

Now, why did I stop writing to you? As I said earlier, it is because I felt that I was wasting my time. As evidence, consider the following points. (1) You never did respond to the second half of my letter of September 5, 1986, concerning the alleged circularity of McDowell and Stewart's argument from inspiration to inerrancy. I feel quite confident that you erred on this subject, and I suspect you know it. If you don't know it, then I have little confidence that you could benefit from any further attempts on my part to reason with you.

Editor's Response to Letter #421 (Part c)

I don't avoid any biblical subjects or theological discussions, Robert. Why on earth would a rational philosophy avoid discussing any subject with an irrational ideology? I have nothing to fear, while the opposition most assuredly does. If you honestly thought I was being equivocal, why didn't you write years ago and tell me you thought I was being evasive? As far as your specific question is concerned, if my memory serves me correctly because you a bringing up a topic that was discussed over 4 years ago, your point was so vacuous that it didn't really merit a reply. However, if you still feel slighted, please make your point again. I don't want to omit any "devastating" criticisms. I hope you realize that BE devoted more than 4 1/2 pages to your letters in Issues 50, 56 and 57. Few writers to BE have ever received as much air-time.

In issue #56, your reply to my points about the authorship of the NT writings was condescending and largely irrelevant. I asked you for a list of "authorities" who question the Pauline authorship of the seven undisputed Pauline letters (Rom., 1 Cor., 2 Cor., Gal., Phil., 1 Thess., Philem.). You gave me one scholar who questioned "the full authenticity" of four of these--Alfred Loisy. It should be noted that Loisy (who died in 1940) was writing mostly in the 1910's and 1920's, and that most of his extreme views (e.g., that Acts was written in the second century) have been completely abandoned by even the most liberal scholarship. (The scholar you quoted as endorsing Loisy, F.C. Conybeare, died in 1924!). In the postwar scholarship it is widely regarded as certain that these seven letters were written by Paul, and their authorship is not even debated. I can supply you with a list of scholarly references several pages long if necessary; but if it is necessary, then, frankly, you don't know anything about contemporary Pauline studies.

Editor's Response to Letter #421 (Part d)

To begin with Robert, my answers were neither irrelevant nor condescending. Yours, however, are quite irrelevant. The fact that you don't like the sources I cited and don't consider them reliable is as irrelevant as your recitation of the dates upon which they died. I have no doubt they consider most of your scholars to be of questionable integrity. As I have said before, when it comes to arguments over history, every man picks the sources he prefers. You asked for some scholars and I quoted two well-known men who are scholars whether you like them or not. For you to say that "these seven letters were written by Paul, and their authorship is not even debated" is absurd. I don't know of any book in the Bible whose authorship is not debated by knowledgeable scholars. You really should stop talking as if biblical conclusions were air-tight and fixed in granite.

Letter #421 Continues (Part e)

I also stated that Donald Guthrie's book New Testament Introduction thoroughly answers the arguments of liberal scholars (such as Loisy) whereas they continue to ignore most of Guthrie's arguments. In response you told me that I should devote more study to various scholars that you named. This is no answer. I am familiar with many of those scholars (especially Loisy, Renan, Briggs, Wellhausen, and Conybeare), and my point is that their arguments are answered by Guthrie (and others), but not the other way around. I am not interested in authorities as such but in the reasons they give for their views.

Editor's Response to Letter #421 (Part e)

You quote Guthrie as if he were the fountain of all truth, my friend. Just because you are enraptured with him, carries no weight with others, including myself. I have scholars who say something quite different. And I happen to feel that mine know more about the issue than yours. Even more importantly, you shifted your strategy. Earlier you said I could produce no authorities in support of my position. Now you are admitting there are such beings but contend they are wrong. "I am not interested in authorities as such but in the reasons they give for their views." That's a different issue entirely and a virtual concession that my original contention is valid.

Letter #421 Continues (Part f)

Your comments on the sanity of the author of Revelation show that it is you who are as difficult to pin down as it is to "nail jello to the wall" (as you said about Christian apologists). If you disagree with Ingersoll, Jefferson, and Paine, why did you quote them without qualification and with at least apparent approval? Of course you disavow having absolute certainty about the mental state of the author of Revelation, but so what? You did call into question his sanity, whether or not you "flatly said the author was insane," and you did so on flimsy grounds. That was my point. You say that you don't know anything about the mental state of the biblical writers, but you feel free to offer the speculations of others. In my opinion, you are not interested in promoting truth, but in sowing doubt.

Editor's Response to Letter #421 (Part f)

Now you are really getting desperate! I said then, and will repeat now, that I don't know the mental state of the author of Revelation. But, that certainly does not prevent me from leaning toward those who have definite positions. And where did I say I disagreed with the individuals you mentioned? "Flimsy grounds" are more applicable to your attempt to push me into a definitive position and abolish my freedom to quote the "speculations," as you call them, of others. You mean I can't quote these people unless I wholeheartedly agree with their analysis? You mean I am like jello unless I endorse them 100%? You are exposing a major problem with religious people in general and Christians in particular. They view everything in terms of black and white and don't allow shades of gray to enter their purview. The "doubt" that is sown lies in your attempt to impugn my integrity. I said I didn't know his/her mental state; that does not prevent me from leaning one way or the other, while quoting those who have definite positions.

Letter #421 Continues (Part g)

In my last letter to you I stated, "I do not believe Jesus ever contradicted Himself," emphasizing "not" because I wanted to make sure the argument of my previous letter was not misunderstood as implying that He did. By failing to underline "not" when quoting me you obscured my point. Thus, your comment, "Again, what you or I believe is irrelevant, Robert," was itself irrelevant and inappropriate.

Editor's Response to Letter #421 (Part g)

Don't you think this is rather petty? Failure to underline the word "not" doesn't change the meaning of your sentence and you know it.

Letter #421 Concludes (Part h)

These are just some of the reasons why I chose not to take the time to continue writing to you. I am extremely busy and have to make hard choices about what I will and will not do. I think three carefully-written letters (and now four) to someone who slanders all Christian apologists as con men, offers speculations as fact and then plays agnostic, and refuses to admit it when he has erred, is quite enough. If I never write to you again (which remains to be seen), it will not be because there is anything to your slanderous accusations and speculative remarks, but because I don't consider answering worth my time.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #421 (Part h)

To begin with, Robert, don't try to kid us. These aren't "some of the reasons," but the only ones you could dig up after considerable thought. Secondly, you are quite free with the word "slander," which normally pertains to pejoratives and ad hominem arguments. Could you relate some I have employed, especially in regard to you in particular? Thirdly, when have I ever "played" agnostic. My position on the existence of God has been clear from the beginning. The burden of proof lies on he who alleges. How is that "playing agnostic"? Fourthly, in so far as errors are concerned, I'd be glad to concede one's existence when you find one in our debate. And lastly, if your comments in your next letter are no better than those in this, you would, indeed, find answering not worth your time.

Letter #432 from James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries of Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I had decided that your response in the September, 1990 issue of BE could be left to speak for itself, but in light of your willingness to print any and all ad hominem letters you could find in your mail-bag in the December, 1990 issue, I felt that some of your comments should be addressed.

The main thing to be noted in your response of September, 1990 was your continued misunderstanding of the Christian doctrine of the Trinity. It is one thing to disagree with the Trinity; but it is obvious that you do not even have a basic understanding of the doctrine itself. You had alleged in the December, 1989 issue of BE that Jesus' statement in John 5:37 ("And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape") is contradicted by visions of Jehovah God in the OT. I pointed out that this is not so; that Jesus is speaking of the Father in John 5:37, and the One who is seen in the OT is the Son, Jesus Christ. Your response was typical of those who refuse to listen to what their opposition is saying. You wrote, "If you can use the Trinity at will, so can I. God and Jesus are identical, remember!" Please feel free to "use" the Trinity if you would like, but might I suggest that you learn what the doctrine is before you commit yourself to print? God and Jesus are identical? What does that mean? The doctrine of the Trinity states that there is one eternal being of God that is shared fully by three eternal persons, the Father, the Son, and the Spirit. Any person who would even glance at (for example) the Athanasian creed would know that the doctrine differentiates between the terms "being" and "person." One being, three persons. The Father is not the Son, Mr. McKinsey. So, your statement, "God and Jesus are identical, remember" is a meaningless one, only showing an abysmal lack of understanding of the doctrine itself. When you say the "text is guilty of a blatant lie" you are only showing how blatant is your ignorance of that which you seem only overjoyed to attack. When Jesus (the Son) said that no one had seen God's form or heard His voice, He was referring to the Father, and since it was the Son who was seen and heard in the OT, no contradiction exists, since the Son is not the Father.... I don't expect you to admit an error--you seemingly view yourself as being as inerrant as I believe the Scriptures to be--but others read your materials, and for their benefit I point out your error.

Editor's Response to Letter #432 (Part a)

Dear Mr. White. You began your monologue on the Trinity with the comment that I "do not even have a basic understanding of the doctrine itself." That is relatively easy to understand since neither you nor anyone else does either. The only human being who could understand the Trinity would be someone who could also visualize a square circle or a two-sided triangle. There is nothing to understand since the entire concept is preposterous on its face. Yes, Jesus is God; no he is man. Since that makes no sense, it is immediately changed to: No, he is the god/man, man and god simultaneously. And since that makes no sense either, many Christians are candid enough to admit it's a "mystery" that can't be understood by anybody. It has to be taken on faith. You claim that within the Godhead or "being" are three persons, each of which is God, but there is only one God. You have three distinct entities all of whom are God. That's three gods and the word "persons" can't be used to hide that fact. Moreover, you play a shell-game with the word "God," "being," or "Godhead." On the one hand, it represents a general term encompassing the persons within the Trinity and when expediency dictates it is immediately switched to represent an actual being whom you call God. Christians are often accused of being tritheists, believers in three gods--the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. When they try to turn the "Godhead" into a being, they could just as well be called quartheists. The Father is God; Jesus is God; the Holy Ghost is God, and the Godhead, or "being" as you call it, is God. What an absurdity! To make matters worse, you ignore all the biblical verses that clearly say God is one and indivisible. There is none like him nor is there any beside him. He is a unity.

You say, "learn what the doctrine is before you commit yourself to print," while I suggest you learn what the doctrine is not before you commit yourself to print. The doctrine is not rational in any sense of the term. It is a hopeless muddle that must be taken on pure faith. There is nothing rational or logical involved. And for you to imply there is, only exposes the duplicity to which Christian apologists will go to foster an image at odds with reality. You say that "the doctrine of the Trinity states that there is one eternal being of God that is shared fully by three eternal persons, the Father, the Son, and the Spirit." Stop and think about what you just said, James. What does the metaphysical concept "shared fully" mean? You mean you have a being within a being? How could a being be within another being? Parasites live within other beings but they are still separate and distinct. They are in no sense the same being as you say God and Jesus are. You say that "any person who would even glance at (for example) the Athanasian creed would know that the doctrine differentiates between the terms 'being' and 'person'." No it doesn't. It merely says there is a difference. It doesn't prove it or even attempt to do so. It doesn't define it. It doesn't even quote scripture to prove it or show where scripture makes such a distinction. Even if the Bible made such an assertion, logic is clearly to the contrary. It merely says as much and you are supposed to believe. The Catholic Church wrote that creed and you have swallowed it completely. That's pure, blind faith, my friend. Incidentally, according to your rendition of John 1:18 ("No man has seen God at any time, the unique God, who is in the bosom of the Father...") the Father encompasses God, not the other way around. Consequently, if either one is greater than the other, then the Father must be greater than God.

You say, "The Father is not the son, Mr. McKinsey." There you go again, off into the wild blue yonder. Is Jesus God? According to you, yes. Is the Father God? According to you, yes. Therefore, James, if you will consult a basic logic book you will learn the simplicity of your error. Two things equal to a third are equal to each other. If Jesus is God and the Father is God, then, it logically follows that Jesus is identical to the Father. You say, "The Father is not the Son." Oh, yes he is! Under your line of reasoning, he has to be. I can remember debating several fundamentalists many years ago on this point. They said Jesus is God and the Father is God, but that does not mean Jesus and the Father are the same. An analogous situation according to them is that a cat is an animal and a dog is an animal, but that doesn't mean a cat is a dog. The error of their ways lies in the fact that they failed to realize that "cat" is not equal to "animal." Neither is "dog." Jesus, however, is identical to God and so is the Father. Therefore, Jesus and the Father must be identical to each other. Moreover, the word "animal" does not represent a "being" or "person." Like the word "Godhead" it's nothing more than a general term, a rubric, a category like the words "mankind" or "humanity." It does not refer to a specific, living being or person of some sort. You can talk to the latter; you can't converse with an abstraction. You can talk to a beautiful lady; but you can't converse with beauty.

To put it another way, either Jesus is God or he isn't. If he is God as you claim, then God and Jesus are identical. Otherwise they differ in some respect, in which case he couldn't be God. If they differ in any respect, be it ever so minute, then he lacks a quality possessed by God or vice versa. What you want is for two things to be the same but not be identical. Here, again, your muddle is exposed. If two things are the same, then they are identical. If they differ in any respect, whatever, then they are neither the same nor identical. Plainly put, if Jesus is not the same as God, then he isn't God.

As far as your specific problem is concerned, I thought this was cleared up earlier. Apparently not; so let's go over it again. You say I erred by alleging "in the December, 1989 issue of BE that Jesus' statement in John 5:37 ('And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape") is contradicted by visions of Jehovah God in the OT. I (James--Ed.) pointed out that this is not so; that Jesus is speaking of the Father in John 5:37, and the One who is seen in the OT is the Son, Jesus Christ." In the first place, why do you have this mind-fix on visions. As I said on page 6 of the 93rd Issue, which was a repeat of what I said in the Dec. 1989 Issue, Jesus said in John 5:37 that nobody had heard the Father at any time. Secondly, there is nothing in the OT text that says that was Jesus with whom they conversed in Gen. 3:8-10, Ex. 19:19 and Job 38:1. That is merely an assumption you are making to escape the dilemma. Thirdly, and most importantly, Jesus, God, and the Father are all identical. So, if he talked to God, and the text clearly says he did, then he talked to the Father in direct contradiction to John 5:37. And fourthly, on page 6 of the Sept. 1990 Issue you referred to John 1:18 when that wasn't even part of the original contradiction.

If there is any "abysmal lack of understanding," James, it lies in your failure to recognize the subtle indoctrination by which you have been victimized. You are living proof of why religion in general and the Bible in particular should be kept away from people in general and children in particular. Metaphysics warps the brain and twists the thoughts. After all, why wouldn't people who believe that persons can rise from the dead, sticks can turn into snakes, individuals can turn into pillars of salt, and donkeys can talk also believe in square circles and two-sided triangles? It doesn't take a great deal of wisdom to see that anyone who would believe in the former would also accept the latter. For them nothing would be too absurd, including the Trinity. [TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH]

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #433 from JG of Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Dennis.... Would you please send references of bible verses and/or your issue numbers which list data concerning Jesus' brothers. I have all 100 issues. I spend some nights in motels. Is it all right to leave your pamphlet, "The bible is god's word?" in the gideon bible? Keep up the good work. You are unique in your approach and I hope the future gives you your well deserved recognition for a job well done.

Editor's Response to Letter #433

Dear JG. The verses with respect to Jesus having brothers are Mark 6:3 and Matt. 12:46. A chain reference Bible will give you more. If the Gideon's can leave their Bible's lying around public accommodations, I don't see why you can't leave your literature.

Letter #434 from ET of Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Hello.... Thank you for being out there! I am a volunteer women's health clinic defender and am nose-to-nose with these guys Daily. I'm glad to have some ammo for the offensive for once.

Letter #435 from TS of Edgewood, New Mexico

Dear Dennis. Just a short letter to order back issues 37-48 and to comment on the Adam-as-a-perfect-man theme which surfaced in your pamphlet and in back issues of BE.

Item # 3 in your pamphlet, The Bible is God's Word? states, God created Adam so he must have been perfect. How, then, could he have sinned? Regardless of how much free will he had, if he chose to sin, he wasn't perfect." Your logic has proved devastating to most believers I confront; however, for the few holdouts I continue in the following vein.

The question I ask biblicists is, "How could Adam have been created 'perfect' in the first place if he did not know good and evil?" One might concede, for the sake of argument, that Adam, as originally created, did receive a "perfect" body, that he was "perfectly" obedient (temporarily, at least!), or "perfect" in any number of other ways. However, in terms of knowledge, and more importantly, in terms of Adam's moral nature, he was quite deficient, hence imperfect. The scriptures state as much.

Adam's original ignorant state is strongly implied in Genesis 2:17 ("But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it....") and 3:5 ("For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil"), but blatantly confirmed later in Genesis 3:22 ("And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil...."). In 3:22 we learn that after Adam eats the forbidden fruit, God says, "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil. My point is that in his previous condition, Adam could not have been perfect since he was oblivious to good and evil. To accept the notion of a "perfect" being not knowing good and evil or right and wrong is much like acknowledging as "perfect" a physician who is oblivious to health and disease! Furthermore, if the scriptures are true and Adam was unaware of the concept of good and evil, or oblivious to the inherent moral polarity of his actions, then biblicists are stuck with a new dilemma. God's perfect creation could not have had a conscience! Like a child, he could not be held accountable. Yet, look at the punishment that followed. Did the punishment fit the crime? Even our mere human courts take into account an accused person's inability to comprehend right and wrong. Young children and mentally defective defendants are granted special consideration so that justice might be tempered by mercy. Not so in the case of Adam.

....I am learning, since reading BE, to be more self-critical in presenting arguments against the biblicists. Your arguments are concise and well reasoned and are a model to emulate. I am deeply appreciative of your efforts and reassured with every issue that not everyone "out there" is plunging into ignorance and darkness. Thanks.

Letter #436 from JG of Ridgecrest, California

Dear Dennis. A note on the "FFRF vs. BE" controversy. Freethought Today is how I found out about you. I discovered FFRF from the media publicity over the Gideon bibles. Their Bible warning label appeared in an illustration in Playboy. I had to use a magnifying glass, but I got the address. I would have joined both BE and FFRF years ago if I had been aware of their existence. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #436

Dear JG. It's good that you found both of us. However, "controversy" is not an appropriate term for one to use in describing the conversations between Dan and myself. I would say "Dialogue" is more applicable and that's why it was included in that section. Dan and I have none of the ill will that is normally associated with the word "controversy."

Letter #437 from RL of Burnaby, British Columbia

Dear Dennis.... my donation comes to ----. It's not a lot but if it helps to defray the cost of your most important publication, then please accept it with my thanks to you for your very, very important work, i.e., trying to bring logic and sanity into a terribly illogical and insane society! I think if there is, or ever was, a supreme being, he or it must be aghast and appalled at the almost total lunacy that goes on here!

God's green earth? No, not if he exists; he must be disgusted!!! Peace on earth; love thy neighbor; love thine enemy! Oh (expletive deleted)!! So continue your work Dennis, and thanks a million.

Letter #438 from BW of Shreveport, Louisiana

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I have received and read your sample issue of Biblical Errancy, and enjoyed it immensely. I've long understood that one can't shake the religious person from his intellectual stupor without first knocking the prop out from under his beliefs. And that prop is the idea of an "inerrant Bible." Until recently, I wasn't aware of any publications devoted to this theme. Luckily, I spotted your advertisement in Freethought Today Your research and effort is appreciated.

Letter #439 from JP of Seattle, Washington

Dennis. I think your new print format is excellent! Good job on B.E. I think your newsletter is the most valuable current resource exposing the errors of the Bible available today.

Regarding letter #431 from LD in Issue #101. The argument he was "stumped" with is a general argument used by apolgists who are ignorant of the consequences of their own position. Little do they know that while they argue that God could exist in a part of reality unknown to a person, it is possible, given their own lack of knowledge, that there is no God and that they are mistaken for believing there is! Simply put, if they admit to not knowing all there is to know, then perhaps there is some unknown aspect of knowledge that undermines their belief that a god is real; for that matter there could be some unknown aspect of knowledge which would undermine their belief in Inerrancy! Of course, if LD were to argue in this way, then the apologists would scream obscenities at him.

LD should not be dismayed by arguments like the one he was presented: Christians are in the habit of believing in those things which they trust can't be known, but their habit is not intelligible since if one can't understand what one believes in, then one hasn't knowledge or truth.

In brief, LD could simply retort to the apologist's "argument from ignorance" that if a god inhabits an aspect of reality not knowable in principle, then no one can know there is a god: including the apologist asserting such absurdities!

COMMENTARY

This month's commentary will continue the alphabetical listing of notable quotes that was resumed last month.

QUOTATIONS

(PART 7)

REDEMPTION--"Is it a fact that Jesus Christ died for the sins of the world, and how is it proved? If a God, he could not die, and as a man he could not redeem." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 85

"If a God, he could not suffer death, for immortality cannot die, and as a man his death could be no more than the death of any other person." Ibid. p. 108

"The Christian religion is derogatory to the Creator in all its articles. It puts the Creator in an inferior point of view, and places the Christian devil above him. It is he, according to the absurd story in Genesis, that outwits the Creator in the Garden of Eden, and steals from Him His favorite creature, man, and at last obliges Him to beget a son, and put that son to death, to get man back again; and this the priests of the Christian religion call redemption." Ibid. p. 295

"The story of the redemption will not stand examination. That man should redeem himself from the sin of eating an apple by committing a murder on Jesus Christ, is the strangest system of religion ever set up." Ibid. p. 86

When men are taught to ascribe all their crimes and vices to the temptations of the devil, and to believe that Jesus, by his death rubs all off, and pays their passage to heaven gratis, they become as careless in morals as a spendthrift would be of money were he told his father had engaged to pay off all his scores. It is a doctrine not only dangerous to morals in this world but to our happiness in the next world, because it holds out such a cheap, easy and lazy way of getting to heaven." Ibid. p. 108-109

"...for if what is called the fall of man, in Genesis, be fabulous or allegorical, that which is called the redemption in the NT, cannot be a fact." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. 277

RELIGION--"Religion is superstition running away from truth, and afraid of being overtaken"
Anonymous

"Religion is as helpful as throwing a drowning man both ends of a rope." Anonymous

As a rule, religion is a sanctified mistake, and heresy a slandered fool." Anonymous

"So far as religion of the day is concerned, it is a damned fake.... Religion is all bunk." Thomas Edison

"Truth in matters of religion, is simply the opinion that has survived." Oscar Wilde

"Religion is regarded by the common people as true, by the wise as false and by the rulers as useful." Seneca

"The world is my country, and to do good my religion." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 131

"The church is, and always has been, incapable of a forward movement. Religion always looks back." Ibid. p. 151

"...religion is one of the phases of thought through which the world is passing." "The Ghosts," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 322

"No man of any humor ever founded a religion--never. Humor sees both sides." "What Must I Do To Be Saved," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 518

"What has religion to do with facts? Nothing." "Some Mistakes of Moses," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 27

"If the people were a little more ignorant, astrology would flourish--if a little more enlightened, religion would perish." Ibid., p. 25

"The most detestable wickedness, the most horrid cruelties, and the greatest miseries, that have afflicted the human race, have had their origin in this thing called revelation, or revealed religion. It has been the most dishonorable belief against the character of the divinity, the most destructive to morality, and the peace and happiness of man, that ever was propagated since man began to exist." The Age of Reason, Paine, p. 184

"Of all the tyrannies that afflict mankind, tyranny in religion is the worst. Every other species of tyranny is limited to the world we live in, but this attempts to stride beyond the grave and seeks to pursue us into eternity." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 8, p. 311

"Long ago, someone said that fools found religions, but the prudent govern them." Voltaire on Religion by Kenneth Applegate, p. 131

"My principal objections to orthodox religion are two--slavery here and hell hereafter." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 8, p. 41

"Man has never been at a loss for gods. He has worshipped almost everything, including the vilest and most disgusting beasts." Ingersoll's Works, "The Gods," Vol. 1, p. 25

"Man is the religious animal. He is the only religious animal. He is the only animal that has the True Religion--several of them." Letters from the Earth, Mark Twain

"Some people think that all the equipment you need to discuss religion is a mouth." Herman Wouk

"The absurdity of a religious practice may be clearly demonstrated without lessening the number of persons who indulge in it." Anatole France

"This would be the best of all possible worlds, if there were no religion in it." John Adams as quoted by Thomas Jefferson in The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. IV

RELIGIOUS PROFESSORS--"They are all about the same. The professors, for the most part, are ministers who failed in the pulpit and were retired to the seminary on account of their deficiency in reason and their excess of faith. As a rule, they know nothing of this world, and far less of the next; but they have the power of stating the most absurd propositions with faces solemn as stupidity touched by fear." "Some Mistakes of Moses, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 21

REVELATION--"It is often said in the Bible that God spoke unto Moses, but how do you know that God spake unto Moses? Because, you will say, the Bible says so. The Koran says, 'that God spake unto Mahomet, do you believe that too? No. Why not? Because, you will say, you do not believe it; and so because you do, and because you don't is all the reason you can give for believing or disbelieving, except you will say that Mahomet was an imposter. And how do you know Moses was not an imposter? The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. 162

"As to the people called Christians, they have no evidence that their religion is true. There is no more proof that the Bible is the Word of God, than the Koran of Mohammed is the Word of God." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 294

"...you do not see that when you tell people to believe in revelation, you must first prove that what you call revelation, is revelation; and as you cannot do this, you put the word, which is easily spoken, in the place of the thing you cannot prove. You have no more evidence that your Gospel is revelation than the Turks have that their Koran is revelation,...." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 133

"It is a contradiction in terms and ideas to call anything a revelation that comes to us at second hand, either verbally or in writing. Revelation is necessarily limited to the first communication. After this, it is only an account of something which that person says was a revelation made to him; and though he may find himself obliged to believe it, it cannot be incumbent on me to believe it in the same manner, for it was not a revelation made to me, and I have only his word for it that it was made to him." DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #432 from James White of A & O Ministries Continues from Last Month (Part b)

You printed a letter from Mr. Jeff Frankel (#393) in which he writes such things as, "I have never dealt with anyone so arrogant, unreasonable and mean-spirited as White," and this is followed by a comparison between myself and Madalyn Murray O'Hair! What is fascinating about this is that Mr. Frankel has never spoken to me, nor has he ever written to me. We have never had any contact whatsoever. He wrote a horridly flawed article for Steven Overholt's Frontline. I wrote to Mr. Overholt, pointed out the many, many errors in Frankel's article, and asked if I could use the article as a further example of the flawed arguments of critics of the Bible. I assume this is the letter Mr. Frankel mentions in letter #392. How Mr. Frankel could presume to make these character judgments without ever having spoken to me, or even corresponded with me, is beyond comprehension. Christian theists cannot respond to Mr. Frankel in the same way he treats us, but the unreasonableness of his position should be pointed out. Also, Mr. Frankel has not bothered to provide this information to me! Possibly you would be kind enough to provide me with this letter, since Mr. Frankel does not seem willing to actually talk and discuss the issues?

Editor's Response to Letter #432 (Part b)

You say that Jeff has not only never written or spoken to you but you have never had any contact whatsoever. You say, "How Mr. Frankel could presume to make these character judgments without ever having spoken to me, or even corresponded with me, is beyond comprehension." But you admit you criticized an article he wrote for Frontline. Couldn't that be classified as a contact and wouldn't he be justified in making some observations about your accuracy and integrity based upon your three-page critique? As far as the Howard Teeple letter is concerned, I understand that a copy is now in your hands. Since you and Jeff are both subscribers to BE and I am neither directly involved in your dispute nor privy to all that has transpired, I'll withdraw at this point and assume both of you will proceed as you see fit.

Letter #432 Concludes (Part c)

As far as Mr. Sikos' letter (#393) is concerned, which was again little more than character assassination, I will only mention that I attempted to converse civilly with Mr. Sikos, but, upon demonstration that he could not maintain a conversation on any kind of logical, rational or civil basis, I informed him that further time would not be spent responding to his endless ad hominem. Are you going to dedicate further space in BE to this kind of writing? Is BE's purpose to do nothing but engage in name-calling and insults of Christian apologists? Mr. Sikos' letter is a tremendous example of the level of thought and behavior of the common anti-Christian. Is this the future direction of Biblical Errancy?

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #432 (Part c)

For you to talk about character assassination is rather incongruous, James, when your letters are nearly always liberally sprinkled with pejoratives and disparaging personal attacks. You repeatedly denounce ad hominem comments while remaining one of their staunchest proponents. In this letter, alone, you slandered my competency at least six times, and in every instance were wide of the mark. As far as John Sikos is concerned, I'll let him speak for himself. He knows better than I what has transpired between both of you and is quite able to defend his actions. You ask if BE's purpose is "to do nothing but engage in name-calling and insults of Christian apologists." A comment of this subterranean level isn't worthy of a response and only highlights the lack of integrity in your entire defense of the Bible. I challenge you to find another publication of comparable scope and content that exhibits less name-calling and ad hominem argumentation. Indeed, BE has always prided itself on almost rigid adherence to direct quotations, facts, specifics, details, evidence, and proof. We can say without fear of exaggeration that BE has always relegated theories, beliefs, attitudes, suppositions, and conclusions to a secondary status. As in a court of law, we have always sought to let the facts speak for themselves. Unlike apologetic literature, the future direction of BE will always be towards the creation of a more rational and correctly-informed populace.

Letter #440 from Jerry MacDonald, Editor of CHALLENGE, in Sullivan, Missouri (Part a) [Fundamentalist Christian Apologist Jerry MacDonald inserted the following in his Spring 1991 Issue of CHALLENGE--ED.].

In this editorial we will be addressing objections to the harmony of the Bible which appeared in the Autumn 1990 issue of The Skeptical Review, edited by Farrell Till, and in the February 1983 issue of Biblical Errancy, edited by Dennis McKinsey. We will look at Mr. Till's objections first....

Now to deal with some of the objections raised by Mr. McKinsey in his publication Biblical Errancy.

(1) The Resurrection: On page one Mr. McKinsey points out that many people were raised from the dead, both before and after Christ was. He wanted to know why Christ's resurrection meant more than these other resurrections. One answer is that Jesus was the only one who was raised to die no more. All of these others died again after they were raised.

Editor's Response to Letter #440 (Part a)

I've heard that response on the radio several times, JM. Two major flaws are immediately evident to anyone who is acquainted with the text. First, how do you know they died again? That's an assumption on your part. Where does the Bible say as much? You are writing your own script, my friend. Elijah (2 Kings 2:11) and apparently Enoch (Gen. 5:22-24) never died at all; they just went straight to heaven. How do you know that the individuals Jesus raised from the dead didn't follow in their predecessor's footsteps? You are making an allegation for which there is not a shred of biblical testimony. Secondly, Paul doesn't rely upon your argumentation. In 1 Cor. 15:14 RSV ("if Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is in vain and your faith is in vain") and 1 Cor. 15:17 ("But if Christ has not been raised, your faith is futile and you are still in your sins") Paul says it is the Resurrection that matters, not the fact that these people died again. Where are you getting your "biblically-based" theology? It's the Resurrection that counts, not what happened afterwards. This point was made by me in the second paragraph of the first page of the second Issue.

Letter #440 Continues (Part b)

Jesus the Imperfect Beacon: On page three Mr. McKinsey tries to show that Jesus was not perfect because of (what Mr. McKinsey calls) false statements and inaccurate prophecies he made.

(a) John 7:8-10 KJV says, "Go ye up to this feast: I go not up yet (emp. added) unto this feast; for my time is not yet full come." Mr. McKinsey used the RSV which left the word yet out of the phrase: "...I am not going up to this feast..." However, even the RSV has the phrase: "...for my time is not yet come" to show that he was not going at that time, but that he would go later.

Editor's Response to Letter #440 (Part b)

You are having trouble reading the text, JM. What does Jesus say in the RSV. He says, and I quote, "Go to the feast yourselves; I am not going up to this feast, for my time has not yet fully come." And what did he do? He immediately went. In other words, he lied. He said he was not going and immediately broke his word. For you to use the phrase in the RSV that 'my time is not yet come' to show he was not going at that time, but later, is no defense at all. He said he wasn't going until his time came, which was later; yet, he went immediately. The text even says he sneaked up; he went up secretly or "in private."

Letter #440 Continues (Part c)

In [E] on page three Mr. McKinsey refers to the fact that Jesus instructed men not to call others "fools" (Matt. 5:22) only to turn around and call the Pharisees "fools" (Matt. 23:17, 19, Luke 11:40). Matthew 5:22 is dealing with anger which leads to murder in the heart. In Matthew 23 and Luke 11:20 he was merely showing them how foolish they were for following their traditions and practices.

Editor's Response to Letter #440 (Part c)

Where are you getting this, JM? There is nothing in the text that justifies such an arbitrary distinction. By creating a rationalization of this nature out of whole cloth, you have only demonstrated your continuing adherence to eisegesis. The fact is that Jesus said don't call other people "fools," period. No provisos, limitations, or restrictions are attached. Yet, later he ignored his own maxim.

Letter #440 Continues (Part d)

In part H on page 3 Mr. McKinsey quoted Matt. 27:46 ("...My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me") and asked how Jesus could be our savior when he couldn't even save himself. This is the same charge the Jews threw at him (Matt. 27:42). Did it ever occur to Mr. McKinsey that Jesus' purpose was not to save himself but to die?

Editor's Response to Letter #440 (Part d)

Did it ever occur to you, JM, that if that were his purpose he never would have made such an inane statement? Why would anyone complain about being forsaken, when they were dying willingly? If that were his purpose, he would have made a statement such as, "I am glad you have not seen fit to save me."

Letter #440 Continues (Part e)

On page four Mr. McKinsey wanted to know how the ark could have rested on more than one mountain at the same time. The mountains of Ararat are a range of mountains like the Rocky mountains. If a person drives up one of the Rocky mountains, that person is said to have driven up the Rocky mountains.

Editor's Response to Letter #440 (Part e)

To begin with, I know of nothing on page 4 of the second Issue that pertains to the mountains of Ararat, JW. In one of our issues, however, I did quote Gen. 8:4 ("And the ark rested in the 7th month, on the 17th day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat") and asked how one ship could have rested on several mountains at once. I am always amused when fundamentalists resort to the very tactic they decry in liberal Christians. When the going gets tough they, too, shift from literal to figurative interpretations of scripture. This instance is no exception. The Bible is suppose to be precise. Indeed, it is suppose to be the most precise, the most accurate book ever written. It would have to be if it were the word of a perfect being. And what does the Bible say? It says "mountains" plural, not a mountain.

As far as your Rocky Mountain analogy is concerned, when someone says they have driven up the Rocky Mountains they are in error, if one is to be precise. One may have said he drove up the Rocky Mountains but, in fact, he didn't. Are we to expect no more precision from the perfect book, God's word, than one would find in daily slang?

Moreover, when someone says he has driven up the Rocky Mountains, he may very well have driven on more than one mountain as I have done on several occasions. It is rather hard to drive up the Rockies while staying on one mountain alone, while landing a ship on more than one mountain simultaneously is virtually impossible and further demonstrates that your Rocky Mountain analogy is specious.

Letter #440 Concludes (Part f)

Neither Mr. Till, nor Mr. McKinsey have brought up anything that poses any real problem to the Bible inerrancy doctrine. If they care to defend their arguments, Challenge is now open for them to do so.... Mr. McKinsey is now invited to defend his arguments which were answered in the editorial of this issue....

Editor's Response to Letter #440 (Part f)

With all due respect, JM, you addressed my arguments while failing to answer them. I'm not sure you realize how frivolous some of your answers are. Nor do I think you fully realize the magnitude of the tarbabies into which you so amateurishly leaped with glee. As I have often advised new kids on the block in past issues, you should have first consulted more knowledgeable defenders of the Bible who are more aware of the Bible's inadequacies. McDowell, Haley, and Archer are three that come to mind. One can tell from their writings that they have really wrestled with the kinds of problems presented in BE.

Letter #441 from GN of Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Dennis. Always enjoy Biblical Errancy. The December issue was no exception. It was mentioned that Christians often put faith in the Bible because it is inconceivable that those who were supposed to have been eyewitnesses to the resurrection wouldn't have suffered death for something that didn't happen. Is there any evidence that proves that the writers were who they said they were? Was the author of Matthew really an eyewitness to the resurrection? Can we prove that? Can we prove that the Bible writers actually DID suffer death for what they believed or is the method of their death only a tradition of the Catholic Church. The Bible does not mention how the Apostles died. Since the Bible is the source of all Christian truth, the supposed manner of the death of the Apostles is irrelevant. Most of the beliefs about the deaths of the Apostles are simply Catholic tradition and have nothing to do with historical accuracy and truth. It is true that very few if any people would die for a fraud that they themselves had perpetuated, but the truth of the matter is that we cannot prove who actually wrote the gospels, much less how they died. Others, of course, who believed the lie would be very inclined to die for their beliefs, the same as they are willing to do so today, some 2,000 years later. Keep up the good work. I love each and every issue and all the back issues too.

Letter #442 from EB of Wayne, Michigan

Dear Dennis.... I gave one of your "The Bible is God's Word?" pamphlets to a preacher at work in Dec. 1990, and still haven't gotten back an answer. I like to tell them to "correct" it and give me an answer. They really get stumped! Keep up the good work!

Letter #443 from Farrell Till, P.O. Box 617, Canton, Illinois 61520 (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Among other things, the material you quoted from JEWS FOR JUDAISM in the December 1990 issue of BE pointed out that the disciples didn't expect Jesus to be resurrected. If they really didn't expect his resurrection, they must have been incredibly dense, because Jesus presumably told them on various occasions that he would rise again. Matt. 16:21 says, "From that time began Jesus to show unto his disciples that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and on the third day be raised up."

He told them this again in Matthew 17:22-23 and then again in Matt. 20:17-19. Parallel statements are recorded in Mark 9:31; 10:34 and Luke 9:22; 18:33. Luke's account of the resurrection even had one of the angels reminding the women at the tomb that Jesus had told them of his impending resurrection: "Remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying that the Son of man must be delivered up unto the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again" (24:6-7). Upon hearing this, Luke said that "they (the women) remembered his words" (v. 8). Well, they may have remembered, but the apostles apparently didn't remember, because John claimed that even while they were viewing the empty tomb "as yet they knew not the scripture that he must rise again from the dead" (20:9). Luke said that Peter stooped, looked into the empty tomb, and then "departed to his home, wondering at that which was come to pass" (24:12).

Editor's Response to Letter #443 (Part a)

Dear Farrell. As I read your letter you began by proving that the JEWS FOR JUDAISM erred when they contended that the disciples of Jesus did not expect the latter's resurrection. But because your last two sentences reveal a textual conflict with verses you quoted earlier, I can only conclude that you started out to expose an error by JEWS FOR JUDAISM and ended up revealing a biblical contradiction instead. I trust I am reading you correctly.

Letter #443 Concludes (Part b)

We have to wonder why the people who had been with Jesus and had been warned to expect his resurrection would not have remembered those warnings, because certainly his enemies did. On the day after Jesus was buried, the chief priests and the Pharisees went to Pilate and said, "Sir, we remember what that deceiver said while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again" (Matt. 27:63). They then requested that the sepulcher be made sure until the third day so that his disciples could not steal the body and then claim a resurrection. Isn't it strange that the enemies of Jesus remembered nothing at all about it? Inconsistencies like these render the Bible text completely unbelievable except to gullible people who will believe anything.

Letter #444 from JW of Richmond, Virginia

Mr. McKinsey. Thank you for your excellent work. You are the best. I have never objected to people believing as they chose--as long as they let me believe as I choose. But recently I found there is more. Several people close to me have been adversely affected in their lives by the beliefs of the apologists. I am distressed. And I am ashamed that I have been relatively passive. You are my champion....

Editor's Response to Letter #444

Dear JW. You are correct. There is more, and that is why we have always stressed an active "missionary" agenda for freethought by people of our persuasion. The live and let live approach just won't suffice. Even if we were not adversely affected to a major degree, which is false, loved ones often are.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) Have you ever wondered where a certain piece of information was located in BE; I have. Over the years we have had many people ask us where a topic was covered or mentioned and, frankly, I've been at a loss for words. Unfortunately, I don't have BE memorized. But some help has finally arrived. An enterprising subscriber in Texas decided to create an index to nearly all of the topics we mentioned in our first 8 years of publication. The result is a 13 page, single-spaced, summation with nearly 1,000 entries that can now be purchased for whatever you deem appropriate. We'll let your conscience be your guide. How is that for an offer you can't refuse!

(b) Please let us know if you move to a new mailing address. The post office does not forward bulk mailings. Several subscribers have moved recently and failed to receive several of our latest issues.

(c) The recent change in the format of BE has not only given it a more professional appearance but generated two additional improvements. Several readers have noted that it is considerably easier to read. In addition, we have increased the amount of information contained therein approximately 10 to 30% depending on the font and spacing used, even though the amount of white-space has also increased.

August 1991

This month's commentary will resume the exposure of Accommodations that was last discussed in the March 1991 issue. As was noted in March, Accommodations can be divided into three major categories: Misquotations, Nonquotes, and Misinterpretations. All of our misquotations were aired in Parts 1, 2, and 3 in the January, February, and March issues, respectively. This month's Part 4 will cover our Nonquotes, which are defined as NT quotes of non-existent OT passages.

ACCOMMODATIONS

Nonquotes--(34) MATT. 2:23 ("...that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene") does not refer to any OT passage. Judges 13:5 ("...for the child shall be a Nazarite") is not relevant because: (a) Judges 13:5-7, 16-17 clearly show that Samson is the Nazarite referred to; (b) A Nazarite was not an inhabitant of Nazareth, and (c) Nazarenes are a sect as Acts 24:5 ("...a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes...") shows. They are not residents of Nazareth. (35) MATT. 12:5 says, "...have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?" Yet, nowhere does it state in the OT that the priests in the temple profaned the sabbath and were considered blameless. Numbers 28:9-10 says nothing that is relevant. (36) MATT. 23:35 says, "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar"). Yet, the name, Barachias, is not in the OT. Zacharias is actually the son of Jehoida as is shown in 2 Chron. 24:20-22 ("And the spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoida the priest, which stood above the people...."). (37) MATT. 26:56 says, "But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled." But no quotation from the OT is provided nor is the name of the biblical author given. (38) MARK 1:2 says, "As it is written in Isaiah the prophet, 'Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, who shall prepare thy way.'" But there is no such statement in Isaiah. (39) MARK 9:13 says, "But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him." But there are no prophecies in the OT of things that were to happen to Elias. (40) LUKE 13:4 says, "...or those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them...." It should be noted that there is nothing in the OT about a tower in Siloam falling on anyone. (41) LUKE 24:46 says, "And said unto them, Thus it is written, And thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day...." Nothing is written in the OT about Christ rising from the dead. Hosea 6:1-2 ("Come, and let us return unto the Lord; for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up. After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight") does not apply for several reasons. (a) It is referring to several beings as is shown by verse one ("and let us return unto the Lord"). (b) The Lord never tore and smote Jesus as is stated in verse 1. (c) Verse 2 says, "After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up." Nowhere does the NT say Jesus was revived after two days. (d) Verse 3 says, "let us press on to know the Lord." How could Jesus learn anything additional about the Lord when he allegedly is the Lord? (e) "He will raise us up" shows that the resurrection of several beings is being referred to. (42) JOHN 1:45 says, "...We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." To begin with, Moses did not write the law or the Torah (See: Moses and the Pentateuch in Issues #19 & #20). Therefore, he could not have written about Jesus of Nazareth. In fact, none of the OT prophets wrote of Jesus, which would include Moses, who supposedly wrote the Pentateuch. (See: Messianic Prophecies in Issues #76-80). (43) JOHN 7:38 ("He that believeth in me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water") is not in the OT. None of the following verses is applicable: Isa. 44:3 ("For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon thy dry ground: I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring...."), Isa. 55:1 ("every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters...."), Ezek. 47:1 ("...And, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward...."), Isa. 58:11 ("And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose water fail not"), Zech. 13:3, 14:8, Prov. 18:4, or Isa. 12:3. (44) JOHN 20:9 says, "For as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead." Two problems showing the inapplicability of this verse are: (a) There is no OT statement that he (Jesus) must rise from the dead nor is there a suggestion anywhere in the OT of a 2nd Coming or a rising again from the dead. (b) "Again" means that he rose from the dead more than once and since Jesus allegedly rose only once, it could not be applied to him regardless. (45) ACTS 20:35 says, "...ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive'." At no time did Jesus ever say, "It is more blessed to give than receive." Matt. 10:8 ("...freely ye have received, freely give") has no relevance since neither giving nor receiving is considered to be more blessed than the other. (46) ROM. 2:24 says, "For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written." But, nowhere in the OT, including Isa. 52:5 and 2 Sam. 12:14 does it say that the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you. The former says it is God's people who are doing the blaspheming while the latter attributes it to David. (47) ROM. 10:11 says, "For the scripture saith, 'Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed'," even though there is no such statement in the OT. Isa. 28:16 ("...he that believeth shall not make haste"), Jer. 17:7 ("Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is"), and Joel 2:32 ("...whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered...") just don't apply. (48) FIRST COR. 15:4-6 says, "...that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures: and that he was seen of Cephas (Peter), then of the twelve: After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once...." Yet, no gospel says that Peter saw Jesus before the twelve. Moreover, nowhere in the gospels does it state that 500 people saw Jesus at one time after the Resurrection. Five hundred people never, at any time, stated that they saw Jesus alive after the Crucifixion. Paul said 500 people saw as much. We only have his word for this. (49) FIRST COR. 15:7 says, "After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles." No gospel says James saw Jesus. (50) EPH. 5:14 says, "Therefore it is said, Awake, O sleeper, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give you light." This statement is not to be found in Scripture and neither Isa. 26:19 nor Isa. 60:1 apply. (51) FIRST TIM. 1:18 says, "This charge I commit unto thee son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee...." There are no OT prophecies pertaining to Timothy. (52) In 2 TIM. 3:8 ("Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses...") Paul refers to two individuals who are never mentioned in the OT and there is no evidence that they are the Pharaoh's sojerers in Ex. 7:11 as some have alleged. (53) Contrary to HEB. 9:3-4 ("And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all; Which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant...."), verses such as Ex. 25:16, Deut. 10:2,5, 2nd Chron. 5:10, & 1 Kings 8:9 show there was nothing in the OT about a golden pot or Aaron's rod being put in the ark. (54) In HEB. 10:5-6 ("Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me: In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure") Paul distorted Psalm 40:6 ("Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou opened: burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required"). To begin with, "but a body hast thou prepared me" is not in Psalm 40:6. It is a product of Paul's imagination. Secondly, "mine ears hast thou opened" is in Psalm 40:6 but Paul omitted it. It should also be noted that Psalm 40:12 ("For innumerable evils have compassed me about: mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head...") was written by the same person who wrote Psalm 40:6 which Paul says was Jesus. How could the author of Psalm 40:12 be Jesus when he admits to having committed many sins? And finally, nowhere in the Gospels did Jesus say what Paul attributed to him in Heb. 10:5-6. (55) While listing the injustices suffered in the OT by his ancestors Paul said in HEB. 11:35 (RSV) that, "Some were tortured, refusing to accept release, that they might rise again to a better life." Yet, nowhere does the OT say that people suffered torture in order to expect a resurrection. (56) And lastly, JAMES 4:5 says, "Do you think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" Yet, no such statement can be found in the OT, although apologists occasionally allude to Gen. 6:5, 11, 8:21, Prov. 21:10, & Eccle. 4:4.

That concludes our listing of Nonquotes and clearly demonstrates that NT writers often let their imaginations do their walking through OT pages.

REVIEWS

Several months ago a kind Floridian sent us a copy of When Skeptics Ask, A Handbook of Christian Evidences by apologists Geisler and Brooks. The work appears to be 333 pages put together to justify one's continued presence on the faculty and is replete with points so vapid as to invite critical commentary. This month's REVIEW, as well as that which will follow in September, will be devoted to an examination of some of the more glaring examples.

(1) On page 60 the authors address the nature of evil and state rhetorically, "if God made all things, then that makes God responsible for evil. The argument looks like this (a) God is the author of everything; (b) Evil is something; (c) Therefore, God is the author of evil. The first premise is true. So it appears that in order to deny the conclusion we have to deny the reality of evil. But we can deny that evil is a thing, or substance, without saying that it isn't real. It is a lack in things. When good that should be there is missing from something, that is evil.... Evil is a lack of something that should be there in the relationship between good things."

To begin with, the authors fail to note that the question is whether or not evil is real, not whether or not it is a substance or thing. It either exists or it doesn't. Mental legerdemain of this nature is typical of Christian apologists. That's what they get paid for. Holes and vacuums indicate the absence of things and substance, too, but they exist, nevertheless. In effect, Geisler and Brooks are trying to refute the second premise (Evil is something) of their own syllogism. They are trying to prove it doesn't exist in any form, be it material or the absence of something material. Actually, how it exists or in what form is entirely secondary to the fact that it does exist. They have tried to shift the focus of attention from "does it exist" to "how does it exist."

(2) On page 61 they inadvertently addressed the problem of evil presented by the 3rd question in our pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? Geisler and Brooks opened up by stating that, "In the beginning, there was God and He was perfect. Then the perfect God made a perfect world. So how did evil come into the picture? Let's summarize the problem this way [Geisler is a philosophy professor of logic and inclined toward syllogisms]: (a) Every creature God made is perfect; (b) But perfect creatures cannot do what is imperfect; (c) So, every creature God made cannot do what is imperfect. But if Adam and Eve were perfect, how did they fall? Don't blame it on the snake because that just backs the question up one step; didn't God make the snake perfect too?... One of the things that makes men morally perfect is freedom. We have a real choice about what we do.... But in making us that way, He also allowed for the possibility of evil.... He created the fact of freedom; we perform the acts of freedom. He made evil possible; men made evil actual. Imperfection came through the abuse of our moral perfection as free creatures."

Geisler and Brooks conveniently ignore the fact that they strangled themselves with their own syllogism. The 2nd premise states that "perfect creatures CANNOT do what is imperfect. Now they are saying they can do what is imperfect because they have freedom of choice. So which is it? Are they free or aren't they? When they used the word "cannot" in the 2nd premise, they slammed the door shut on any escape and entangled themselves in an airtight syllogism. I don't care how much freedom they have; the 2nd premise says they can't do it.

(3) One of the common propensities of nearly all apologists for the Bible and Jesus in particular is to embellish the story. For example, we constantly hear about the apostles and disciples dying for the cause in pangs of martyrdom. Yet, except for the stoning of Stephen and possibly the killing of John the Baptist, there is no record in the Bible of anyone dying for Jesus or willingly giving their life for Christendom. Following in the martyrdom tradition, on page 120 Brooks and Geisler say of Jesus that, "He had been beaten and whipped repeatedly the night before His crucifixion with a Roman scourge (a three-lash whip with pieces of bone or metal on the ends) which tore the flesh of the skeletal muscles and set the stage for circulatory shock.... Then He suffered five major wounds between nine in the morning and just before sunset. Four of these were caused by nails used to fix Him to the cross.... When His side was pierced with a spear...the spear entered through the rib cage and pierced His right lung, the sack around the heart, and the heart itself, releasing both blood and pleural fluids.... The wounds in both His wrists and feet would have severed the major nerves."

To such elaboration one can only say, where on earth are you getting all this stuff? Certainly not from the Bible. Where, for instance, does the NT say his feet were pierced?

(4) On page 124 while answering those who claim that the disciples of Jesus stole his body and there was no resurrection, Geisler and Brooks state, "This does not fit with what we know about the lives of these men. These were not dishonest men. They all taught that honesty was a great virtue." To this one can only say, "Oh Brother!" Nixon, Agnew, Swaggart, Bakker, North, a well-known singer, and thousands of other people portray themselves as paragons of virtue. But that is certainly no reason they are to be believed. Now who is being naive! The authors continue, "If this hypothesis (of deception--Ed.) were true, then we must also believe that the apostles persisted in this hoax and died for what they knew to be false." Again, where does the Bible say they died for the cause? Moreover, only one thief would be required to remove a body. Why would all the Apostles have to be involved in the plot? Eleven of the 12 could very well have continued living under a delusion.

(5) On page 125 the authors make one of the most common errors committed by those in support of the Resurrection. They state, "The most outstanding proof that Jesus rose from the dead is that He was seen by more than 500 people on twelve different occasions." They are relying on Paul's statement in 1 Cor. 15:5-6 ("And that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: After that he was seen of above 500 brethren at once...."). This ruse needs to be put to rest once and for all. At no time did 500 people ever say that they saw Jesus after the Resurrection Paul says 500 people saw Jesus, the same Paul who says in Rom. 3:7, "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner?" Five hundred people never so testified.

(6) After discussing other world-famous religious leaders, such as Moses (p. 128-130), Mohammed (p. 130-132), Hindu Gurus (p. 132-134), Buddha (p. 134-135), Socrates (p. 136-137), and Lao-tzu (p. 137-138), Geisler and Brooks state, "So Jesus can be found to be superior to other teachers for many reasons. (a) No other teacher has made the claims to be God that Jesus has. (b) Even when the followers of some prophet deified their teacher, there is no proof given for that claim that can be compared to the fulfillment of prophecy, the sinless and miraculous life, and the Resurrection. (c) No other teacher offered salvation by faith, apart from works, based on what they had already done for us. (d) Most notably though, no religious or philosophical leader has displayed the love for people that Jesus did in dying for the sins of the world."

As far as (a) is concerned, biblical apologists need to realize that "claims" prove nothing. Many people have claimed many things throughout history. Charles Manson "claimed" he was Christ reincarnated. Are we to believe him? In fact, a claim of this nature could easily be read in reverse. People could easily come to the conclusion that he had taken leave of his senses. With respect to (b), that has been covered at length throughout BE. Messianic prophecy simply won't withstand critical analysis as was shown in Issues #76-80; Jesus' character was by no means immaculate as we clearly demonstrated in Issues #2, 3, 24, 25, 27, & 28; miracles are not to be used to prove anything as we showed in Issue #90, and the occurrence of many resurrections prior to that of Jesus removes any importance that can be attached to His comeback. In regard to (c), one could easily conclude that Christianity condones rather than condemns bad behavior by claiming one is saved by faith rather than works. No matter how rotten your behavior, you are going to Heaven if you accept Jesus as your savior, and no matter how good your behavior you are going to Hell if you don't accept him. A concept of this nature can't help but give Christianity a negative image, since it conflicts with common sense. Religions teaching that one's behavior determines one's status in the next world are going to have a decided advantage. Moreover, to say that no other teacher offered salvation by faith runs counter to many biblical verses which say the opposite (See Issue #3). And lastly, point (d) proves nothing not only because millions of people have willingly died for others but, even more importantly, because we only have the Bible's word for the fact that he was dying for the sins of the world. How do you know he died for the sins of humanity? Because the Bible says so? How do you know the Bible is telling you the truth in view of its track record? The answer is, You Don't.

Letter #445 from LC of Fairfax, Virginia

Dennis. I love your publication and would like to get some of your pamphlets. Please send me 20 of each. I can't wait to pass them out! Even better--put them on cars with fundamentalist bumperstickers!! [A good idea, LC--Editor]

Letter #446 from DL of Ipswich, Mass.

Dear Dennis. I placed an ad for BE in the Ipswich Chronicle. It is a weekly newspaper with a circulation of over 5,000.... The paper also carries the news from the small town of Rowley.... There is a total of 17 churches within the two towns and many of them offer Bible study classes for adults. I should think there would be at least a few people with inquiring minds who will write in to you for a free sample of BE.... I made a copy of your wonderful sample issue and left it with the advertising department of the North Shore Weeklies along with the lists of prior issues and audio tapes.

Editor's Response to Letter #446

Dear DL. Once, again, I'd like to extend my sincerest thanks to you for your continuing assistance to our cause. You have been a diligent worker on our behalf from the beginning and this marks an additional contribution. Too bad you are not cloneable.

Letter #447 from HT of Mt. Vernon, New York

Hi Dennis. I received my copy of Biblical Errancy and it was great. I am subscribing to it. I have been an atheist since I was eighteen and this is the best publication I have seen so far that really shows up the bible for what it is, a fraud, a joke and an insult to humanity. I would also like some back issues and I enclose a list below.

Editor's Response to Letter #447

Dear HT. Thanks for the compliments. We need everyone's support.

Letter #448 from RL of Burnaby, British Columbia in Canada (Part a)

Dennis.... I have been "debating" a minister of an evangelical protestant persuasion and he's a "nice guy" and very bright. But Oh! so devastatingly dogma-bound. And through it all he wants to maintain that god is holy, just, and supreme.... I think we have been thru this 3 or 4 times and I have even called god a dictator for promising people "free will" and then making a complete farce of "free will" by making it conform to his version of "free" which doesn't make you "free" at all. We have "debated" the illusion of god's "justice" within the context of god choosing his "chosen people" from several different groups, thus making "justice" a mockery since the "others" automatically assume second or third class status--or worse.

What I would like from you Dennis is for you to list the issues of BE that outline this problem and also the problem of god's general "justice" in the context of taking sides in conflicts, etc. I seem to remember reading this all in BE but I haven't been able to locate it again.

Editor's Response to Letter #448 (Part a)

Dear RL. First let me congratulate you on your urge to "take it to the other side." Even if you aren't as successful as you would like, it still has an effect. As far as God's inadequacies are concerned, that was covered rather extensively in Issue #3.

Letter #448 Continues (Part b)

You suggested a "study plan" for going right through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. I am starting to acquire the necessary equipment. I have Strong's Exhaustive Concordance and Westminster's Historical Maps of Bible Lands. I also have the RSV and a large-print KJV. And I have ordered the Layman's Parallel Bible in the Version that you recommended. When I have acquired all of the necessary tools I am going to seriously embark on a program of study and analysis in an attempt to learn the Bible well enough to find verses and additional data so that perhaps I can begin to write intelligently and comprehensively in an attempt to do something to combat religion and the mess it has gotten us into.

Editor's Response to Letter #448 (Part b)

I'm tempted to say, "Go get'em tiger," although I think the current vernacular is, "Go for it." You will find the outline of my suggested study plan in a speech that is contained in Issues #58 and #59. You will need to make far more than a week-end effort to succeed, however; so be prepared to put in a lot of time and energy.

Letter #449 from JW of Richmond, Virginia

Dennis. Regarding my letter (#430) in the May issue (#101). I intended to write: "Apparently they REMEMBER the facts, and later some finally admit to themselves that they are indeed irrational." I did not mean to say, "Apparently they don't remember the facts...."

Editor's Response to Letter #449

Dear JW. Having made a few grammatical errors in the past, I know the feeling. Incidentally, we would like to thank you and others who have passed out scores of BE's pamphlets.

Letter #450 from Dan Barker of the Freedom From Religion Foundation, P.O. Box 750, Madison, Wisconsin 53701

Dear Dennis.... I have noticed that some readers of B.E. have been using the phrase "ad Hominem" incorrectly. It is an ad hominem to notice that someone has a bad attitude. It is not ad hominem to point out that someone is using bad logic. It is not ad hominem to mention that someone has bad character traits. It is not ad hominem to warn others that a certain person habitually bases arguments on faulty premises, or on a lack of evidence. It is not ad hominem to say that "so-and-so is a jerk." It is only ad hominem when you base an argument on another person's character. To say, "Mr. Smith's conclusions are wrong because Mr. Smith is an alcoholic (wife beater, drug addict, bad attitude, stupid person, etc.)" would be a true ad hominem argument, and therefore illogical. To accuse a person of using "ad hominem character attacks" is only valid if those attacks take the place of logical premises. There is nothing illogical about complaining about a person. The only time character attacks become irrelevant is if the whole question of "character attacks" is being debated. For example, if a Christian claims that following Jesus causes one to become more peaceful and tolerant, then that person's use of character attacks can be introduced as evidence to the contrary. The same is true of any other trait which believers claim to possess. If Christians say that they are more loving, then it is not ad hominem to attack their character where it is vulnerable. Christians should deal with the perceived "ad hominem attacks" by either 1) becoming more loving or 2) giving up the claim that belief leads to morality. They can't skirt the issue by simply claiming that we are engaging in the despicable practice of "ad hominem." Robert Ingersoll dealt with the same issue in his day when he said, "And here, it may be proper for me to say, that arguments cannot be answered by personal abuse; that there is no logic in slander, and that falsehood, in the long run, defeats itself. People who love their enemies should, at least, tell the truth about their friends. Should it turn out that I am the worst man in the whole world, the story of the flood will remain just as improbable as before, and the contradictions of the Pentateuch will still demand an explanation." (Some Mistakes of Moses, 1979)

Letter #451 from BJ of Douglasville, Georgia

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Thank you for the back issues of BE. I had very little religious indoctrination in my life and never wanted it. The religious fundamental type I've come in contact with are always ready to change that. Your work has given me the ammunition that I needed to do combat on their own turf. With your permission I would like to excerpt some of your work and have packets made up for Bible toters to study. Your name, address, and telephone number will be shown on all the excerpts in hopes of generating interest to read all of your work. I think that your approach to education on the Bible is an excellent one. Considering the recent shift on the U.S. Supreme Court--education on the errors and mis-information on the Bible seems the way to go. Every public school Bible Club should have your material and study it....

Editor's Response to Letter #451

Dear BJ. Please feel free to make up any packets you deem desirable as long as the recipients are made aware of the source. We are more than glad to provide you with needed information when you advertise BE. It's interesting that you mentioned your contacts with the fundamentalists since we were visited recently by some Jehovah's Witnesses. We invited them in but were unable to maintain their presence longer than half an hour. Clearly my questions were disturbing and they yearned to exit. Their leading spokesman didn't know the Bible very well since he cited Isaiah as a source for a messianic prophecy that actually is to be found in Micah. When this was brought to his attention, he seemed rather perturbed. They were wholly unreceptive when I suggested additional meetings and further discussions. Near the end of our encounter, their leading spokesman said he didn't feel like he was getting anywhere and his time could be better spent elsewhere. Translated, that means, although I'm not influencing you, you are shaking my own beliefs; so I had better get out of here while the getting is good. These people feed on the ignorance and depression of others like leaches. That becomes all too evident when they are confronted by someone who knows their material better than they. As the JW's were going out the door their leading spokesman turned to me and said, "You know, everyone at our Kingdom Hall knows about you." I asked how he knew that and he said others had been here before, including himself. Perhaps he was, but I certainly don't remember him. I suspected something was afoot several days earlier when one of their scouts, who are usually less knowledgeable, came to my door and said, "We are willing to come here and tell you why the Bible is the word of god but we are not going to come here to discuss any contradictions." How she knew I was interested in biblical contradictions was rather puzzling to say the least. Apparently those people keep track of their visitations, compare notes, discuss encounters, and retain mental images of houses to avoid. Talk about snake oil salesmen! As they were leaving I told them that if I had a book that I was sure was the perfect word of God, I would be willing to discuss it with anyone at anytime of their choosing and answer any questions for as long as they desired--5 hours if necessary. In any event, they weren't going to endure any anti-biblical data no matter how correct or logical it may be. With reference to his refutation of the Trinity, their main spokesman must have said it was important to be logical at least 10 times. Yet, he carefully avoided the very logic which he claimed to practice. Every time he was stumped on a biblical imbroglio, he would fall back on faith in the Bible as the ultimate truth. In essence, their position was quite clear: Our minds are made up, don't confuse us with any facts. They bear out a truth that was stated in BE many months ago; namely, it is vital to get people indoctrinated when they are young, vulnerable, and incapable of critical thought. Years ago I was told that the Catholic Church says, "Give me a child until he is 8 and you can have him for the rest of his life because he is now mine." Makes one shudder!

As far as your comments on the Supreme Court are concerned, we noted some time ago that numbers are what count, and there is nothing to prevent a regression of progressive decisions except numbers. Regardless of what the Constitution or the Bill of Rights say, numbers, wealth, influence, and power are going to determine the outcome. And for more than a decade the trend has been in a regressive direction.

You said, "every public school Bible Club should have your material and study it." Correction! There should not be any public school Bible Clubs to begin with. Atheists, agnostics, humanists and others of a freethought persuasion are required to pay taxes. It is not voluntary; it is mandatory. Much of this money is spent on public schools. When the school is used by a religious/superstitious group to propagate their ideas, the money of freethinkers is being used to spread religion. It is bad enough being forced to pay money to the government in the first place, but it becomes abominable when that money is used to pay for a building that is being used by superstitious people to expound their ideas at no financial cost to themselves. If taxes were voluntary and you could stop paying anytime you desired or religious people were forced to pay taxes to schools in which material exposing the fallacies of religion in general and the Bible in particular were actively propagated, I might be more sanguine about the whole matter. But there is very little chance of that happening. Imagine what would occur if material such as that found in BE were actively disseminated in the schools! What would occur if atheists, agnostics, or BE supporters were allowed to distribute material exposing religion or the Bible to elementary or Jr/Sr. high school students? Were this to occur to any meaningful degree, the uproar would be tremendous. The fact that it is an after-school club is irrelevant. The meetings are still occurring on property paid for by freethoughters as much as anyone. I don't send my children to school to be religiously indoctrinated or made available for those who seek prey on them because attendance is mandatory, and I don't send my taxes to the government to pay for buildings that are used gratis by religious groups to spread superstition, especially when ideas such as those found in BE would never be allowed an equal hearing.

Although BE does not normally go outside the Bible to critique other writings which are alleged to be divinely inspired, exceptions are made. Having analyzed the book of Mormon in the 23rd and 54th issues, we now feel equal treatment should be accorded the Koran or Quran as Moslems call their primary source. Having studied the Book from cover to cover, one can't help but note that it is even more boring than the Bible. The book is a veritable miasma of imprecise allusions, vague generalizations, and constant repetitions. It is a good antidote for insomnia and would be a prime candidate for those with masochistic tendencies. The constant use of pronouns (e.g., we, us and they) with indeterminate antecedents, for instance, is not worthy of any writing claiming to be "God's Word." Indeed, the constant use of "us" and "we" when referring to God, himself, could easily lead one to believe that Muslims are trinitarians. The Book has fewer contradictions than the Bible, but that arises more out of propensity for less specificity, more generalities and symbolism, fewer topics, less prophecy and more repetition than any adherence to consistency.

In his voluminous translation and commentary entitled, The Holy Koran, Muslim A. Yusuf Ali concedes that, "the same things are repeated over and over again in the Quran" (p. xxx). Because Ali is acutely aware of the fact that the Koran is much more chaotic and dissonant than Muslims would like to admit or others to know, he also concludes that, "a stranger to the Quran, on his first approach to it is baffled when he does not find the enunciation of its theme or its division into chapters and sections or treatment of different topics and separate instructions for different aspects of life arranged in a serial order. On the contrary, there is something with which he has not been familiar before and which does not conform to his conception of a book" (p. xxi). Yes, there is. And that something is a tremendous amount of disorganization and metaphysical meanderings. Ali's confession goes even further when he states that, "The same subject is repeated in different ways and one topic follows the other without any apparent connection. Sometimes a new topic crops up in the middle of another without any apparent reason. The speaker and the addressees, and the direction of the address change without any notice. There is no sign of chapters and divisions anywhere. That is why the unwary reader is baffled and puzzled when he finds all these things contrary to his pre-conceived conception of a book. He begins to feel that the Quran is a book without any order or inter-connection between its continuity of its subject, or that it deal with miscellaneous topics in an incoherent manner." (p. xxi & xxii). Of course, all of the above is pure rationalization, reminiscent of that employed by biblical apologists. The real reason objective readers feel that the Quran is a book without any order or systematic connection is that it is, and that's pretty good reason.

Our analysis will be confined to the Koran specifically rather than a comprehensive discussion of the Muslim religion in general and will only focus on that which is of interest or concern primarily to those of a freethought persuasion.

For purposes of categorization and easy future reference, topics will be addressed in alphabetical order. While the Bible is divided into book, chapter and verse, the Koran is divided into Sura and Ayat. There are 114 Suras and thousands of Ayats. If one saw 3:67 he would know he was dealing with Sura 3, Ayat 67 or the 67th Ayat of the 3rd Sura. The Suras have considerably less Ayats as one moves through the book.

KORAN

ABRAHAM-- "Abraham was not a Jew nor yet a Christian...." [3:67]

ADULTERY-- "The woman and the man guilty of adultery or fornication,--flog each of them with a hundred stripes: let not compassion move you in their case, in a matter prescribed by God.... Let no man guilty of adultery or fornication marry any but a woman similarly guilty, or an unbeliever...." [24:2-4]

Unlike Christians, Muslims can't claim this is only under the Old Law--Ed.

ARABS--"The Arabs of the dessert are the worst in unbelief and hypocrisy, and most fitted to be in ignorance of the command which God hath sent down to His Apostle...."[9:97]

CHRISTIANS-- " From those, too, who call themselves Christians, we did take a covenant, But they forgot a good part of the message that was sent them.... And soon will God show them what it is they have done." [5:14].

Muslims view their message as superior to that of the Christians--Ed.

"Strongest among men in enmity to the Believers (read:Muslims--Ed.) wilt thou find Jews and Pagans; and nearest among them in love to the Believers wilt thou find those who say, 'We are Christians'." [5:82]

DAY--"Verily a Day in the sight of thy Lord is like a thousand years of your reckoning." [22:47]

"...in the end will (all affairs) go up to Him, on a Day, the space whereof will be (as) a thousand years of your reckoning." [32:5]

Sounds familiar!--Ed.

DEBATE-- "Invite (all) to the Way of thy Lord with wisdom and beautiful preaching; and argue with them in ways that are best and most gracious for thy Lord knoweth best...." [16:25] (also see: 18:56)

DIVORCE-- "A divorce is only permissible twice...." [2:229] "If a wife fears cruelty or desertion on her husband's part, there is no blame on them if they arrange an amicable settlement between themselves; and such a settlement is best...." [4:128] "O ye who believe! When you marry believing women, and then divorce them...so give them a present, and set them free in a handsome manner." [33:49] How could they be set free if they weren't in some kind of bondage. Yet, Muslims claim that men and women are treated equitably under Islam--Ed.

"Oh Prophet. When ye do divorce women, divorce them at their prescribed periods...and turn them not out of their houses, nor shall they (themselves) leave, except in case they are guilty of some open lewdness...." [65:1] What kind of divorce exists when both parties nearly always must continue to live together?--Ed.

EXCLUSIVISM-- "And they (Jews and Christians--Ed.) say: 'None shall enter Paradise unless he be a Jew or a Christian.' Those are their (vain) desires. Say: 'Produce your proof if ye are truthful.' Nay,--whoever submits his whole self to God and is a doer of good, --he will get his reward with his Lord.... The Jews say: 'Christians have naught (to stand) upon; and the Christians say: 'The Jew have naught (to stand) upon.' Yet they (profess to) study the same book.... But God will judge between them in their quarrel on the Day of Judgement." [2:111-113] Muslims need a course in biblical theology, since Jews give no credence to the NT. By no means do they study the same book--Ed. "Never will the Jews or Christians be satisfied with thee unless thou follow their form of religion. Say: 'The Guidance of God,--that is the only Guidance.' Were thou to follow their desires after the knowledge which hath reached thee, then wouldest thou find neither Protector nor Helper against God." [2:120] "And they say: Be Jews or Christians, then ye will be rightly guided. Say: Nay, but (we follow) the religion of Abraham the upright, and he was not of the idolaters." [2:135] Muslims are not only failing to note Abraham also holds a position of great importance in Judaism but implying that Judaism and Christianity are attached to idolatry--Ed. "This day have I perfected your religion...and have chosen for you Islam as your religion." [5:3] "Both the Jews and the Christians say: 'We are sons of God, and His beloved.' Say: "Why then doth He punish you for your sins?" [5:18] For Muslims to allege others are being punished for their sins is not worthy of serious consideration in light of conditions in Muslim areas of the world today. They are among those most steeped in agony, ignorance, superstition, and deprivation--Ed. "Take not the Jews and Christians for your friends and protectors: They are but friends and protectors to each other." [5:51] If this verse does not contradict 54:82 which was mentioned earlier, then it displays an insolent ingratitude on the part of Muslims towards Christians. Moreover, for Muslims to assert that Jews and Christians are friends and protectors of one another is to reveal an appalling ignorance of historical events. All too often they have been barely able to stomach one another's presence--Ed. To those who reject our Signs and treat them with arrogance, no opening will there be of the gates of heaven, nor will they enter the Garden, until the camel pass through the eye of the needle," [7:40] There is no salvation outside of Islam. This, too, sounds familiar--Ed.

FAVORITISM-- "God has bestowed His gifts of sustenance more freely on some of you than on others...." [16:71] The Koran, like the Bible, degrades their supreme being, God by alleging he plays favorites--Ed.

FIGHTING-- "They ask thee concerning fighting in the prohibited Month. Say: 'Fighting therein is a grave (offence.). [2:217] "Those who believe, fight in the cause of God, and those who reject Faith fight in the cause of Evil." [4:76] "The punishment of those who wage war against God and His Apostle, and strive with might and main for mischief through the land is: execution, or crucifixion, or the cutting off of hands and feet from opposite sides....and heavy punishment is theirs in the Hereafter." [5:33] Intolerance of this magnitude that of the NT. Unlike the NT, the Quran openly advocates the execution of all those who oppose the key figure--Ed. "Those who believe, and adopt exile, and fight for the Faith...for them is the forgiveness of sins and a provision most generous." [8:74] "...then fight and slay the Pagans wherever ye find them and seize them, beleaguer them, and lie in wait for them in every strategem (of war)...." [9:5]. This is clearly a call for an unrelenting slaughter of non-Muslims and demonstrates an intolerance reminiscent of the OT in such books as Joshua and Judges--Ed. "Fight those who believe not in God nor the Last Day...nor acknowledge the Religion of Truth..." [9:29] "...fight the Pagans..." [9:36] "...wherever they are found, they shall be seized and slain (without mercy)." [33:61]. Believers in the Koran are urged to be no more open-minded than OT Hebrews. A clear and present danger to non-Muslims would arise in the United States if strict adherents to the Quran were to assume positive of national importance. The Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini is more representative of Quranic Islam than liberal Muslims and PR agents who appear in the media--Ed. {Also note: 4:74, 4:95, 8:15-17, 8:59-60, 9:111, & 9:123}

HEAVEN-- "...those who obey god and his Apostle will be admitted to Gardens with rivers flowing beneath, to abide therein (for ever) and that will be the Supreme achievement." [4:13] "We shall soon admit to Gardens, with rivers flowing beneath--their eternal home." [4:57] "Who will inherit Paradise: they will dwell therein (for ever)." [23:11] "For those who believe and do righteous deeds, will be Gardens, beneath which Rivers will flow: That is the great Salvation..." [85:11] (See also: 4:77,127, 5:12, 85, 119, 6:32, 7:42, 44, 9:38, 72, 89, 100, 10:9, 26, 11:23, 108, 12:57, 109, 13:22-23, 14:23, 15:45, 16:30-32, 41, 18:2-3, 20:76, 22:9, 23, 23:11, 25:75, 35:33, 40:8, 47:12, 54:54, 68:8, 98:8). Muslims clearly believe in an idyllic Heaven akin to that of the Christian Paradise in which eternal gardens of perpetual bliss and beautiful mansions have rivers flowing beneath--Ed..

HELL--"But those who reject Faith and belie Our signs,--They shall be companions of Hell-fire." [5:86] "The fire be your dwelling-place: You will dwell therein for ever." [6:128] "The Companions of the Fire will call to the Companions of the Garden...." [7:50] "Taste the Penalty of the Blazing Fire." [8:50] "...for those who oppose God and his Apostle, is the Fire of Hell?" [9:63] "...and caused their people to descend to the House of Perdition?--into Hell? They will burn therein...." [14:28-29] The Muslim concept of Hell is almost the same as that of Christians--Ed. (See also: 4:14, 37, 115, 121, 145, 6:27, 7:18, 36, 47, 8:14, 9:17, 35, 49, 68, 81, 109, 113, 10:27, 11:16, 17, 106-107, 113, 119, 13:5, & 55 additional citations)

HEREAFTER--"But best is the Home in the Hereafter." [6:32] "This life of the present is nothing but (temporary convenience: it is the Hereafter that is Home that will last." [40:39] (See also 6:135 and 29:64)

Reviews

This month's Review will continue last month's enumeration of the failings of a book entitled, When Skeptic's Ask by Geisler and Brooks.

(7) On page 142 they state, "We know that the Bible came from God for one very simple reason Jesus told us so. It is on His authority, as the god of the universe, that we are sure that the Bible is the Word of God."

And how do we know about Jesus; from the Bible, of course. How's that for circular reasoning! The Bible is the Word of God because Jesus says so: Jesus existed and was God because the Bible says so. Talk about a self-contained system! The validity of the Bible rests on Jesus; the validity of Jesus rests on the Bible.

(8) More circular reasoning is evident on page 153 when the authors address the question of how the Bible was put together by saying, "was it written by a prophet of God? Deut. 18:18 tells us that only a prophet of God will speak the word of God. This is the way that God reveals Himself (Heb. 1:1). Second Peter 1:20-21 assures us that Scripture is only written by men of God."

In other words, only a prophet of God speaks the word of God. And how do we know he is a prophet of God? Because the word of God says he is. More self-containment in action! How do we know he is a prophet? Because scripture says he is. And how do you know Scripture is the truth? Because the Prophet says it is.

(9) In regard to the formation of the canon the authors say on page 154, "But what about the books that were left out? This question has the wrong perspective on this issue. No other books were ever accepted and there is no reason to believe that most of them were ever in the running. For both the Old and New Testaments there are certain books that were accepted by everyone, some books that were later disputed, and some that were rejected by all. There is no category of books initially accepted and later thrown out."

How the authors presume to know that there were no books that were accepted and later thrown out one can only surmise. Moreover, upon what possible basis could they conclude that most of them were not even in the running. Indeed, evidence would tend not only to lead one to the conclusion that a great deal of horse-trading occurred at such councils as Nicea, Laodicea, Hippo, and Carthage but that nearly everything was scrutinized. (10) In regard to the different renderings by manuscripts of the alleged original manuscripts which no longer exist, the authors state on page 160, "In fact, there are only 10,000 places where variants occur and most of them those are matters of spelling and word order. There are less than 40 places in the NT where we are really not certain which reading is original, but not one of these has any effect on a central doctrine of faith. Note the problem is not that we don't know what the text is, but that we are not certain which text has the right reading."

To begin with, the authors admit that there are at least 10,000 places in which manuscripts supposedly duplicating the alleged originals contradict one another. That's a lot of conflict for what is supposed to be God's perfect word. Secondly, since the alleged originals no longer exist and with so much disagreement among the allegedly accurate copies, there is no way scholars can ever know for sure what the originals actually said. Any version on the market must be a product of educated guesses, consensus, and weighing the validity of manuscripts. Thirdly, apologists repeatedly contend that although there may be many "variants" among manuscripts none effects a central doctrine of faith. Wrong! Undoubtedly one of the most important of all Christian doctrines is that the Bible is the Word of God. And if one were asked to show where the Bible says as much, nearly every apologists would turn to 2 Tim. 3:16 KJV ("All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine...."). But the ASV says, "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching...." The ASV does not say all scripture is inspired; it says "all scripture that is inspired" which clearly implies some scripture is not inspired. Thus, the manuscript or manuscripts from which the ASV was derived either contradict the manuscripts from which the KJV was derived on a major doctrinal point or there is no consensus on the correct translation which has the same effect. Lastly, for authors to say that, "the problem is not that we don't know what the text is, but that we are not certain which text has the right reading" is a masterpiece of obfuscation. That's like standing in front of the state lottery numbers and saying, "it's not that I don't know what the correct numbers are or I don't have them in front of me, it's just that I am not certain which combination provides the right reading." If you don't know which is the right text, if you don't know the right combination, then you don't know which is the right reading. You are guessing! And that is the basis upon which every version on the market has been put together. (11) As far as resolving contradictions and accepting what the Bible says, the authors state on page 163 that, "the burden of proof rests on the critics. As long as we show that there is a possible solution--that their objection ain't necessarily so--then the conflict has been resolved. Like any American citizen, the Bible should be presumed innocent until proven guilty. Like a reliable friend, it should be given the benefit of the doubt."

There is no failure to presume the Bible is innocent. The problem is that conviction is so easy because the evidence is so overwhelming. Creating "possible solutions" by ignoring, rewriting, or perverting the script is by no means sufficient. Critics are no more obligated to accept "solutions" based on ignoring, rewriting or perverting the text than they are required to disprove the existence of miracles, god angels, and the supernatural. As we have said so often: The burden of proof lies on he who alleges.

Geisler and Brooks continue by saying, "A scientist always assumes that there is an explanation when faced with some unexpected and unexplored anomaly. In the same way, a Bible student assumes that there is harmony in the Bible in light of what appears to be contradictions." True. A scientist assumes there is an explanation for the unexpected, but he is operating on the track record of past scientific involvements and is required to prove whatever explanation he provides. A Bible student, on the other hand, should not assume the very point in dispute, namely, that he has a book in his hand that is just as reliable and predictable as the sciences. Apologists must first prove the Book's validity before they are justified in assuming harmony is always present. A proven track record must first be created; otherwise, every statement in every book in the library is true until critics demonstrate otherwise. Any Bible student who "assumes that there is harmony in the Bible" is making a grave mistake and proceeding in the face of numerous facts. Instead of making assumptions, one should go where the evidence leads.(12) On page 165 under the heading Don't Confuse Error with Imprecision the authors state, "First Kings 7:23 says that the laver, a huge basin for washing was ten cubits in diameter with a circumference of 30 cubits. Now any schoolboy who's taken geometry knows a circle with a diameter of 10 cubits has a circumference of 31.4159 cubits (circumference is diameter times pi). So some critics have mentioned this as a possible problem, but round numbers are not the same thing as error. Pi rounds off to three quite nicely and that would give an answer of 30 cubits."

There is no "possible problem" here but a blatant mathematical error in a supposedly inerrant book. Error is error and this is one of the most obvious. Trying to hide it under the subterfuge of "imprecision" is intellectual duplicity. (13) With respect to God's OT slaughters the authors say on page 170, "Is it possible that God could have commanded these massacres. First, we must recognize that the reason for asserting that there is an error here is a subjective one--personal moral sentiment. Second, it is misplaced sentiment. True, it is wrong for men to kill innocent people, but it is not necessary wrong for God. As the Giver of life, he has the right to take it as He wills. If the above critic's thinking were carried out consistently, wouldn't one have to repudiate the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the flood in Noah's time too? It is presumptuous to think that our own moral standards should judge God and tell Him what is right and wrong."

This is pure rationalization. All Geisler and Brooks are saying is that God is above morality and can do anything he wants. He is answerable to no one or any standard. If he lies, kills, steals, rapes, pillages, murders, and tortures, that's OK; he is God. Anyone with a reasonable degree of decency knows that the issue is not one of moral sentiment; it's a question of justice and injustice. For God's supposed defenders to say that it is not necessarily wrong for him to kill innocent people is to stand morality on its head. Proponents of this position would no doubt contend that if Jesus had murdered his parents and raped Mary Magdaline that would be OK also. After all, he is God and all of his deeds are above reproach. Those who contend that he would never commit acts of that nature should have their attention directed toward the OT and see what God, I.e., Jesus, did. Perhaps they might wish to read the 3rd Issue of BE? For Geisler and Brooks to say, "True, it is wrong for man to kill innocent people, but it is not necessarily wrong for God" is folly. God is supposed to be the example that man is to live by. Your explanation will never be accepted by the rational mind.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #452 from JW of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis you are doing a great job. However, you should put out a book on what you have done before you take on the Book of Mormon. I would buy a bunch of your books.

I am now working as a staff writer for the (name withheld) newspaper. I am on a investigative team and one of my fellow reporters is an avid Christian. I've been tolerant, which Christians never are. The other day at lunch, he started in and I said, "Why does not God just give us all the faith and make us into believers, and stop this guessing game?" He replied on cue, "Because God gave us a choice." I said, "What's the choice? Live in heaven, walk on gold streets, float on clouds, play the harp and listen to cherubins, seraphims and angels sing or burn in a lake of fire and brimstone for all eternity. Is that a choice?" I then said, "Sounds like the Mafia to me. Sounds like God is giving you an offer you can't refuse." Of course, it stopped him dead in his tracks. I am preparing to have a stopper every time he opens his mouth from now on. I believe it will soon shut him up permanently.

Letter from Ken Bonnell, Box 65706, Los Angeles, California 90065

Dear Dennis. #103 was in the mail today. Concerning the Rev. James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries: In his A & O newsletter he reprinted and commented on my article "THE RESURRECTION of JESUS: FACT or FICTION?" which was in THE FRONTLINE, (May 1989) as an "example of atheist writing" on the Bible. He made detailed comments on it, much of which were distortions, misquotes, and misinterpretations of what I had written. I responded, answering most of White's points. I appealed to White's readers to compare what I had written to what he had written. Since I did not receive any acknowledgment of my response nor a complimentary copy of its appearance in his newsletter, I must conclude that he decided to ignore it completely, to give the impression to his readers that I was completely squashed, and to avoid being made to look foolish. So much for James White's integrity!...

Editor's response to Letter #453

Dear Ken. I have no way of knowing what has transpired between you and White so I'll confine myself to merely registering your protest about his behavior. Several people lately have sought to use BE to express complaints that they felt were being excluded from other publications. We have no problem with that as long as we are not drawn into the fray. Without knowing the background, we can't take a stance.

Letter # 454 from VS of Lake Worth, Florida

Dear Dennis.... I've listened twice to the tapes I ordered from you and have found them interesting and instructive. It's a shame that so few people really want to debate your arguments; they'd rather try to find fault with you as a person. But, as I've learned over time, that's the typical fundamentalist tactic when engaging in "soul-winning."

Since I'm a relative newcomer to Biblical Errancy, I don't know if you have ever covered this specific problem with the Flood. I'll tell you about it anyway. We are aware that there is a contradiction over how many animals took on the ark. Genesis 6:19-20 says that he should take all beasts by twos while Genesis 7:2 says he should take clean beasts by sevens and unclean beasts by two.

Now, after the earth dried (Gen. 8:14), Noah and the crew leave the ark. The first thing Noah does is to build an altar and sacrifice of every clean beast and every clean fowl (Gen. 8:20). Would this be a wise thing to do? I would limit the gene pool if he had taken the clean beasts from reproducing if he took them by twos.

I told this co-worker who is a born-again Christian and he promised to look it up and read it over the weekend. I also gave this fellow your little tracts, which he admitted he found interesting. He also admitted that what I had told him disturbed him a little.

Keep up the good work with your newsletter and I'll keep you posted on my adventures with Campus Crusader for Christ....

Letter #455 from DM of Pasadena, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey. The trinity doctrine can be summed up in two lines. To the extent that the words "father" and "son" have intelligent meaning, the doctrine is absurd. To the extent that the doctrine is not absurd, it says nothing intelligible. The rest is commentary, useful extension of the above.

Letter #448 Concludes from last month (part C) was inadvertently omitted.

...I am also sending you a donation of $20.00 in American money and I am very relieved to see that you have raised your rates--not enough I would say but at last you are trying to carry the load all alone--very, very good!!

In closing, let me say, thank you ever so much for the work you are doing!! It is through the efforts of you, your staff, and the people like you that "freedom"--whatever that glorious word will one day mean--will someday, long after "religion" has vanished from the earth and "politics" has changed significantly, emerge.... If ever you think that I could help in your important work, please DO NOT hesitate to ask. I'll do my best!!....

Letter #456 from Culver City, California

Dear Dennis. A member of my local group (Atheist United) introduced me to BE. In your answers to letters in issues #98 & 99 I found more plain common sense than I've seen in volumes of other literature. What hit me the hardest was the point most of us, including myself, have overlooked: the Bible is the main problem and should be attacked first. It has my been my observation also that we non-believers are too splintered, not well organized to make the best use of our meager resources. After years of doubt and uncertainty, I recently realized I could not continue living a lie. So I began reading what atheists really had to say, not the lies I had always heard. I started reading the Bible but stopped after the first 10 chapters because I had already found all of our major evils sanctified by the Christian God I had been admonished to worship. I was appalled to learn how well the brainwashing had done its job; I now have trouble containing myself when people start talking religion.

Our President tells us that the non-religious should not be considered citizens. Our chief justice says the separation of state and church should be abolished. Unless we get our act together and stop spinning our wheels, there may not be much liberty in our future. Thank you for your efforts to get the message out....

Editors Response to Letter #456

Dear JB. Your comments are most appreciated; however, I do have trouble with one point. You admit that the Bible is the main problem and should be attacked first, but later stopped reading it after the first 10 chapters because of the material contained therein. How are you going to adequately critique and expose a book you can't stand to read? If I had followed that philosophy, Be would never have gotten off the ground. I am probably more repelled by its contents than you, but that is no reason to be deterred. The stakes are too high. Personal contentment must be curbed to some extent for the good of others.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) If you want to be contacted by people associated with BE, let us know and we will insert your name, address, and phone number in a coming issue. We won't give you the names of others but we are willing to give your name and address to our readership. You might have some compatriots nearby and be able to organize something.

(b) Several people have wanted to contact the individuals who graciously compiled our 13 page index. Ernie Brennaman told me he would be glad to talk to anyone and can be reached at 6810 Heaven's Gate Drive, Corpus Christi, Texas, 78413-4517. Phone (512)991-2180.

October 1991

This month's commentary will continue our alphabetical analysis of Koranic topics that was begun last month.

KORAN

(Part 2)

JESUS--"That they said (in boast), 'We killed Christ Jesus the son of Mary, the Apostle of God';-
-But they killed him not, nor crucified him, but so it was made to appear to them...for of a surety they killed him not." [4:157]

Muslims do not believe Jesus died on the Cross.--Ed.

"Christ Jesus the son of Mary was (no more than) an apostle of God, and His Word, which he bestowed on Mary...." [4:171]

"And behold! I (God--Ed.) did restrain the Children of Israel from (violence to) thee (Jesus--Ed.)when thou didst show them the Clear Signs, and the unbelievers among them said: 'This is nothing but evident magic'." [5:110]

In light of the fact that God did not protect Jesus from the Jews, this statement is false--Ed.

"But she pointed to the babe. They said: 'How can we talk to one who is a child in the cradle?' He said: 'I am indeed a servant of God: He hath given me revelation and made me a prophet.... Such (was) Jesus the son of Mary: (it is) a statement of truth....' [19:29-30].

Christian miracles are matched by Koranic miracles. Imagine a baby speaking in the cradle right after birth!--Ed.

"When (Jesus) the son of Mary is quoted as an example, behold! the folk laugh out,...he is nothing but a slave on whom We bestowed favour...." (The Glorious Quran by Marmaduke Pickthall [43:57, 59]

"We sent after them Jesus the son of Mary, and bestowed on him the Gospel...." [57:27]

"And remember, Jesus, the son of Mary, said, 'O Children of Israel! I am the apostle of God (sent) to you, confirming the Law (which came) before me, and giving Glad Tidings of an Apostle to come after me, whose name shall be Ahmad.'" [61:6].

(See Also: 2:253, 23:50, 33:7)

It would be interesting to know where one could find a statement by Jesus that he would be followed by Ahmad, whom Muslims consider to be Mohammed--Ed.

JEWS--"But God hath cursed them for their Unbelief; and but few of them will believe." [4:46]

"To the Jews We prohibited such things as We have mentioned to thee before...." [16:118]

"These (Israelites) are but a small band.... So we expelled them from gardens, springs, treasures, and every kind of honourable position...." [26:55, 58-59]

"Say: O ye that stand on Judaism! If ye think that ye are friends to God, to the exclusion of (other) men, then express your desire for Death, if ye are truthful." [62:6]

JUDGMENT DAY--"He will gather you together against the Day of Judgment, about which there is no doubt." [4:87]

"That He will gather you together for the Day of Judgment, there is no doubt whatever." [6:12]

"On the Day of Judgment we shall bring out for him a scroll, which he will see spread open." [17:13]

"...there can be no doubt about the Hour of Judgment." [18:21] "Fear your Lord! For the convulsion of the Hour (of Judgment) will be a thing terrible." [22:1] "Those who believe (in the Quran), those who follow the Jewish (scriptures), and the Sabians, Christians, Magians, and Polytheists,--God will judge between them on the Day of Judgment...." [22:17] "He will gather you together for the Day of Judgment about which there is no doubt...." [45:26] {See Also: 4:109, 10:60, 14:41, 44, 15:35, 16:25, 27, 16:124, 17:34, 36, 58, 61, 18:105, 38:53, 78, 70:26} Muslims, like Christians, believe in a Day of Judgment--Ed.

KORAN or QURAN--"It is He Who sent down to thee (step by step), in truth, the Book, confirming what went before it; and He sent down the Law (of Moses) and the Gospel (of Jesus) before this, as a guide to mankind...." [3:3] "He it is Who has sent down to thee the Book: in it are verses basic or fundamental (of established meaning); they are the foundation of the Book: others are allegorical.... We believe in the Book; the whole of it is from our Lord: and none will grasp the Message except men of understanding." [3:7] "Do they not consider the Quran (with care)? Had it been from other than God, they would surely have found therein much discrepancy." [4:82]

"Those who believe (in the Quran), those who follow the Jewish (scriptures), and the Sabians and the Christians,--any who believe in God and the Last Day, and work righteousness,--on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve." [5:69] "This Quran hath been revealed to me by inspiration." [6:19] "Those who believe in the Hereafter believe in this (Book)." [6:92] "Shall I seek for judge other than God?--When He it is who hath sent unto you the Book, explained in detail. They know full well, to whom We have given the Book, that it hath been sent down from thy Lord in truth." [6:114].

Notice how so many of these comments resemble those made by biblical apologists!--Ed. "This Quran is not such as can be produced by other than God; on the contrary it is a confirmation of (revelations) that went before it, and a fuller explanation of the Book...." [10:37] "in the life of the Present and in the Hereafter: no change can there be in the Words of God." [10:64] "They said: 'O Shu'aib! Much of what thou sayest we do not understand!" [11:91]. No doubt that describes much of the Koran for many people--Ed. "If there were a Quran with which mountains were moved, or the earth were cloven asunder, or the dead were made to speak. (This would be the one!)." [13:31] "Say, the Holy Spirit has brought the revelation from thy God in Truth, in order to strengthen those who believe, and as a Guide and Glad Tidings to Muslims." [16:102]

"We sent down the (Quran) in Truth, and in Truth has it descended...." [17:105]. Notice it says "We" not "I." Sounds like trinitarianism!--Ed. "Praise be to God, who hath sent to His Servant the Book, and hath allowed therein no Crookedness. (He hath made it) straight (and clear)...." [18:1-2] "So have We made the (Quran) easy in thine own tongue...." [19:97]. How can one statement be so utterly false! And there is that "We" again--Ed. "We have not sent down the Quran to thee to be (an occasion) for thy distress, but only as an admonition to those who fear (God),--A revelation from Him Who created the earth and the heavens on high." [20:2-4]

"That the (Quran) is the Truth from thy Lord, and that they may believe therein...." [22:54] "...talking nonsense about the (Quran), like one telling fables by night. Do they not ponder over the Word (of God)...." [23:67-68] "The (Quran) was sent down by Him Who knows the Mystery (that is) in the heavens...." [25:6] "Truly my people took this Quran for just foolish nonsense." [25:30]. Now why would anybody do that!--Ed. "Verily this is a Revelation from the Lord of the Worlds: with it came down the Spirit of Faith and Truth...." [26:192-193] "As to thee, the Quran is bestowed upon thee from the presence of One Who is Wise and All-knowing." [27:6] "These are Verses of the Book that makes (things) clear." [28:2]. If there is anything the Koran does not do it is make things clear--Ed. "We believe in the Revelation which has come down to us.... And thus (it is) that We have sent down the Book to thee." [29:46-47]. There is that "We" again. If it is not God, why is it capitalized every time?--ED. "(This is) the revelation of the Book in which there is no doubt,--from the Lord of the Worlds." [32:2] "By the Quran, full of Wisdom.... It is a Revelation sent down by (Him), the Exalted in Might...." [36:2, 5]. "The revelation of this Book is from God, the Exalted in Power, full of Wisdom." [39:1] "God has revealed (from time to time) the most beautiful Message in the form of a Book, consistent with itself, (Yet) repeating (its teaching in various aspects...." [39:23]. To say the book engages in repetition is the understatement of the month.--Ed. "The revelation of this Book is from God, exalted in Power, full of Knowledge." [40:2]. Christians claim to have the Word of God and Muslims claim to have it. Either there are two Words of God or somebody is lying and living a lie--Ed. "...And indeed it is a Book of exalted power. No falsehood can approach it from before or behind it. It is sent down by one Full of Wisdom, worthy of all Praise.... Had We sent this as a Quran (in a language) other than Arabic, they would have said: 'Why are not its verses explained in detail? What! (a Book) not in Arabic and (a Messenger) an Arab?' [41:41-42]. Muslims can no more claim that falsehood is absent from their holy book than can Christians. They have to believe in an inerrant Book--Ed. "I believe in the Book which God has sent down." [42:15] "It is God Who has sent down the Book in truth...." [42:17] "By the Book that makes things clear." [43:2].

Surely, not that ridiculous comment again--Ed. "We have made this (Quran) easy, in thy tongue, in order that they may give heed." [44:58]. Easy?? Perhaps I'm using the wrong tongue--Ed. "The revelation of the Book is from God the Exalted in Power...." [45:2, 46:2] "those who believe and work deeds of righteousness, and believe in the (Revelation) sent down to Muhammad...." [47:2] "Only those are Believers who have believed in God and His Apostle...." [49:15] "And We have indeed made the Quran easy to understand and remember...." [54:17, 22, 32, 40]. In fact, it is neither--Ed. "(God) most gracious! It is He Who taught the Quran." [55:1-2] "...read ye, therefore, of the Quran as much as may be easy for you...." [73:20]. Which for many isn't much--Ed. (Also Note: 2:177, 212, 4:136, 6:155, 7:2-3, 10:90, 11:1, 14, 14:1, 27, 15:2, 17:9-10, 20:113, 21:106, 22:9, 25:52, 27:1-2, 31:2, 20, 34:6, 31, 37:170, 38:1, 39:18, 39:28, 39:41, 41:2-4, 42:7, 52, 43:43-44, 46:30, 56:77-80, 61:8-10, 64:10, 69:50-51, 76:23

MARRIAGE--"Do not marry unbelieving women (idolaters), until they believe." [2:221] "...Marry women of your choice, two, three, or four...." [4:3]. Islam allows you to have up to 4 wives simultaneously.--ED.

MARTYRS--"Those who have left their homes, or been driven out therefrom or suffered harm in My Cause, or fought or been slain--verily, I will blot out from them their iniquities, and admit them into Gardens with rivers flowing beneath...." [3:195]

MUHAMMAD--"Muhammad is no more than an Apostle: many were the Apostles that passed away before him." [3:144] "Those who annoy God and His Apostle--God has cursed them in this world and in the Hereafter, and has prepared for them a humiliating Punishment." [33:57] "Muhammad is the Apostle of God...." [48:29]

NOAH'S SON--"So the Ark floated...and Noah called out to his son, who had separated himself (from the rest).... The son replied: 'I will betake myself to some mountain; it will save from the water'.... and the son was among those overwhelmed in the Flood." [11:42-43]. One would certainly be hardpressed to find this in Genesis--Ed.

PREDESTINATION--"To every People is a term appointed: when their term is reached, not an hour can they delay, nor (an hour) can they advance (it in anticipation)." [7:34, 10:49].

PUNISHMENT--"As to the thief, male or female, cut off his or her hands...." [5:38].

Sounds like the Old Law--Ed. "If Allah took mankind to task by that which they deserve, he would not leave a living creature on the surface of the earth...." [35:45] "I will instill terror into the hearts of the Unbelievers: smite ye above their necks and smite all their finger-tips off them." [8:12]. Tolerance has never been one of Islam's strong points.--Ed.

RESURRECTION--"As to the dead, God will raise them up; then will they be turned unto Him." [6:36] "From the (earth) did We create you, and into it shall We return you, and from it shall We bring you out once again." [20:55]. Once again we have the use of "We" in reference to Allah--Ed. "And verily the Hour will come: There can be no doubt about it, or about (the fact) that God will raise up all who are in the graves." [22:7] "It is He Who gave you life, will cause you to die, and will again give you Life...." [22:66] "One Day will God raise them all up (for Judgment)...." [58:18] (Also note: 2:174, 15:36, 23:16, 100, 26:87, 30:8, 56, 37:144, 38:79, 43:11, 53:47, 58:6, 71:18, 80:21-22)

[To BE Concluded Next Month]REVIEWS

This month's Review will conclude our enumeration of the failings to be found in When Skeptics Ask by Geisler and Brooks that absorbed the commentaries in the last two issues.

(14) On page 173 the authors provide one of the most, if not the most, common defense for the existence of biblical contradictions, namely, "...there is nothing to prove that the discrepancy existed in the original manuscripts (and inerrancy only refers to these).... Suffice it to say that transmissional errors seem to be the cause of these problems" This is analogous to their proof for the existence of God in which the burden of proof is deceptively shifted from their shoulders to ours. The fact that the existing manuscripts, which are supposedly exact copies of the non-existent originals, contradict one another creates two immediate problems for biblical apologists. First, when two manuscripts contradict one another on a particular point, how can you ever know which is an accurate reproduction of the original when the original has been lost forever. Second, how do you know that one or the other is an accurate reproduction. Perhaps neither is correct. Perhaps a third is correct. Or then, again, perhaps no manuscript in existence is correct and an accurate reproduction of an original verse has been lost in antiquity. In any event, the burden of proof lies with the biblicalists. The contradiction remains until they provide a resolution of substance. In light of the thousands of contradictions to be found in their alleged copies, one just doesn't assume willy-nilly, without proof, that the original manuscripts don't conflict with one another. Terminology in this matter also needs to be more precise. There are no original "manuscripts," unless there are separate manuscripts for each book of the Bible or parts of same. There can be only one original. All others can only be reproductions of the original which all apologists admit no longer exists. Because it no longer exists and because there is no way of knowing for sure which existing manuscripts, from which today's versions are derived, are accurate reproductions, the contradictions remain in tact. If a biblicist admits there is a contradiction but denies it exists in the original, he is required to prove its absence in the original, while freethinkers are under no obligation to prove its presence. We have reproductions which say there is a contradiction, and that contradiction will remain until apologists can prove otherwise. For one to say that "Transmissional errors seem to be the cause of these problems" is to base one's argument on pure guess and guessing is not proving. In addition, apologists are obligated to prove an original manuscript really existed at one time. Afterall, as in the case of God, we only have their word for the existence of this alleged original. As a word of advice, biblical apologists would be wise to avoid discussing the non-existent "original manuscripts" because the inability of anyone to examine them unavoidably brings into question the accuracy of every existing manuscript and every derivative version on the market. Because there is simply no way to definitively compare what we have with what no longer exists, biblicists can never be positive they have the "real Bible."(15) On page 202 the authors state that, "One of the popular misconceptions about Jesus is that there is no mention of Him in any ancient sources outside of the Bible. On the contrary, there are numerous references to Him as a historical figure who died at the hand of Pontius Pilate." Adequate refutation of this assertion can be found in the commentaries of Issues 32 & 33 and need not be repeated here.(16) While attempting to distinguish the Resurrection of Jesus from that of all prior resurrections, the authors state on page 247 that, "The differences show that the raisings of Lazarus (John 11:1-44) and the widow's son (Luke 7:11-17) were not resurrections, but only revivification of their mortal bodies (since they both died again)." Explanations of this nature are little more than a manipulation of words. Both Lazarus and the widow's son died and they both came back to life. That constitutes a resurrection. If the authors choose to view this as a revivification rather than a resurrection, then so be it; Jesus was revivified too. There is no difference. And where does the Bible say that Lazarus and the widow's son died again? That is an extrabiblical assumption. Elijah went straight to heaven without dying. They could have followed suit. Moreover, Paul says it is the Resurrection that counts, not the fact that Jesus never died again.(17) On pages 246 and 247 the authors state, "...resurrection is the belief that after death the same physical body is made incorruptible.... resurrection makes alive forever the same body that died.... It surprises a lot of Christians to learn that we will have a real physical body in the afterlife, but why shouldn't we? Jesus did!... The body is perfected, not by doing away with it, but by removing its imperfections." The authors have not thought through their theology very well because the physical bodies of millions are nothing short of appalling. For them to be kept in the same body in the next world would turn Heaven into Hell. Many bodies are grossly deformed, often without extremities, even grotesque. What text are they citing to prove that bodies will be emptied of imperfections prior to entry into the next world, especially when they themselves used the phrase "the same physical body." Adding arms, legs and reconfigurations would not keep it the same. Moreover, one can only speculate how you would rise in a body that has been cremated or how one would rise in a body that was eaten by cannibals who now have the molecules and atoms of the consumed body in their structures.

(18) On page 248 Geisler and Brooks state that, "The Bible speaks of two resurrections: one to life and the other to judgment. ...the first resurrection occurs when Jesus returns at the Second Coming and involves only those who will be resurrected to eternal life; but the second resurrection occurs later and involves those who will be judged."

Why fundamentalists constantly talk about a judgment is a mystery when their theology obviates any reason for its existence? According to fundamentalists, you are saved by accepting Jesus and that is that. Behavior and deeds are irrelevant. Consequently there is no need for a Judgment Day since there is nothing to judge. Sentence is pronounced the day you die. If you accepted Jesus, you are in; if you didn't you are out. So there is no need to weigh, quantify, and judge the number of good and bad deeds one has accumulated. Incidentally, this theology flies in the face of numerous biblical statements that say you are going to be rewarded according to your deeds.(19) On page 250 the authors say that, "The NT teaches that Jesus was punished for the sins of the whole world in His death. Our sins were not simply ignored or swept under the rug. Jesus 'satisfied' God's demand for justice by bearing our guilt as our substitute."

Point #21 on our pamphlet, Jesus Christ is the Answer?, states that, "For Jesus to be executed for our sins makes about as much sense as my son telling a judge that he would accept execution for my crimes. Although a nice gesture it has nothing to do with justice. What judge would agree to such an absurd arrangement?" Yet, we are to believe that God found it acceptable. This is not indicative of a God demanding justice, but denotes a being who simply wants blood, who wants vengeance. He doesn't really care who pays as long as someone hangs.

(20) And finally, while discussing various philosophies on page 266 the authors state, "The big problem with rationalism is that it is a castle built in the air that has no link with reality. It assumes--but does not prove--that the rationally inescapable is the real. In fact, in all of its logical rationalizing, it never proves that anything real even exists.... There is nothing in my existence that even suggests that I, or anything else, must exist...."

Why on earth would one need to prove something that is real exists? By definition, if it is real it exists. And when I can see, hear, feel, smell, and taste a cow that's pretty good evidence cows exist. If the authors feel cows do not exist, then they are obligated to prove as much. Again, the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. When they say that "nothing in my existence" even suggests that I or anything else must exist, they are conceding the very point in dispute. By saying "in my existence," they are admitting they exist. One can't help but be amused when he sees people of an essentially superstitious/supernatural philosophy trying to use rationality to disprove the validity of rational thought. This really came home to me when I read a thick volume several years ago by arch-fundamentalist Peter Ruckman entitled Science and Philosophy. He used every rational argument he could think of to prove faith in the Bible was superior to rational thought. He used rationality to prove faith was superior. When push came to shove, he relied upon reason, not faith, to prove his arguments. If he really believed faith were superior, why didn't he rely upon that and discard rational argumentation? It was not because he was writing for those of a rationalistic persuasion but because, he too, subconsciously recognized its superiority.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #457 from Professor John George, University of Central Oklahoma, 100 North University Drive, Edmond, Oklahoma 73034-0182

(John, a longtime supporter and subscriber to BE, wrote a book entitled, They Never Said It which was published in 1989 by Oxford Univ. Press and was reviewed in "The Living Arts" section of the New York Times on Thursday, August 31, 1989. He called us by phone and later sent the following excerpt from his book regarding a quote we used from President John Adams. We quoted Adams as saying, "This would be the best of all possible worlds if there were no religion in it." To this Professor George says the following--Ed.).

Although atheistic organizations like to make use of this no-religion remark in order to portray the second President of the United States as a freethinker, they are quoting out of context. Adams did indeed make the statement, but only to repudiate it. In a letter to Thomas Jefferson about religion on April 19, 1817, he mentioned reading some polemical books that reminded him of the way his boyhood minister, Lemuel Bryant, and his Latin schoolmaster, Joseph Cleverly, used to argue ad nauseam about religion, and he told Jefferson: "Twenty times, in the course of my late reading, have I been on the point of breaking out, 'this would be the best of all possible worlds, if there were no religion in it!!!' But in this exclamation, I should have been as fanatical as Bryant and Cleverly. Without religion, this world would be something not fit to be mentioned.... (The Works of John Adams, 10 Vols., X, p. 254, Boston, 1856).

Editor's Response to Letter #457

Dear John. If what you say is true, I stand corrected. That's the risk you take when you rely on someone else's research. Now we can understand why Adams was one of our more nondescript presidents. Incidentally, I noticed in the San Diego Union of 7/17/89 which you sent me that you said, "Fundamentalists try to make Abraham Lincoln look like he believed in fundamentalism." I have encountered the same distortion on several occasions.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Dennis: In his recent letter #432, "Reverend" James White of A&O Ministries claims that my letter #393 about him was nothing more than character assassination. He also says that when we corresponded back in 1988 I was unable to "maintain a conversation on any kind of logical, rational or civil basis." As usual, White has his facts backward, and I am willing to prove it with photocopies of our exchanges to anyone who sends me one dollar for postage/duplicating costs. I strongly urge committed BE readers to write to me.

In May 1988 White sent me a small booklet titled "Letters to an Anti-Theist" which purported to expose Dennis McKinsey as some sort of lost soul who's not educated enough to comment on the Bible. I read it through and chuckled because all the little tract proved is how naive, cocky and grandiose James White actually is. Incidentally, I never requested White's two-cents worth; he sent it to me for no apparent reason.

About a month later I read in the June 1988 issue of BE (#66) that White did not send you a copy of his tirade until you had seen it in White's catalogue and requested it yourself! This implies that you would never have seen the thing had you not chanced upon it in the A&O catalogue. Given that I, a mere mortal, had been blessed with an unsolicited copy, the truth is obvious: James White would have preferred that Dennis McKinsey never see the alleged "refutation" of Dennis McKinsey.

Since I thought this was extremely disgusting behavior, even by the lower standards of most Christians, I wrote White my first letter on June 2, 1988 and stated, "I think it is unethical behavior on your part to claim that Mr. Dennis McKinsey did not receive a copy...simply because he hadn't requested one. I think it would only have been professional courtesy to send him one of the first copies off the press. I hope your antics are not representative of all Christian apologists."

So what do you think James White did next? He wrote me a letter dated June 7, 1988, in which he said: "(Y)our letter was missing some very important facts, sir. First, we have yet to 'publish'

[those are White's quotation marks--JS] the little booklet 'Letters to an Anti-Theist'. The copy you received, and the copy Mr. McKinsey received, are simply photocopies of the master material....Hence, may I suggest, sir, that 'unethical' is the wrong term to utilize..." White was actually conceding that photocopies were available to the public; the booklet had already been listed in the A&O catalogue; John Sikos had been sent an unsolicited photocopy but Dennis McKinsey had not; yet all this is perfectly "ethical" because the material had not yet been "published"! Ha ha ha ha. Why Dennis McKinsey had not been sent an advance "photocopy" too, just like I had been (the central issue here), is something White conveniently ignores; not one shred of remorse can be detected for this unethical unscholarly behavior. (By the way, the "photocopy" of "Letters to an Anti-Theist" had a green cover and looked like standard, published Christian material to me. Obviously, White invented this published/not-published dichotomy only after I caught him with his hands in the cookie jar, much like apologists invent explanations to Bible "difficulties" only after thinking people bring them to the attention of the public.)

So, on June 22 I responded to White: "Your assertion that the booklet was never 'published' in no way defeats my above statement that your antics are unethical....If your booklet was not published, why did you send me a copy unsolicited? Why did you list it on your order form, and then fill the order when a request (i.e. Dennis McKinsey's) was sent to you? If the booklet is, as you claim, a photocopy of the master material, why did you choose to copy the cover page on green paper?...I suppose in all honesty, that a person [like you] might really be deluded into thinking that the tract in question was 'not published'--but instead was placed on an order form and sent to those who requested it....in a form that resembled a published booklet...Wow, the devil is tricky, isn't she?"

So what did White do then? Did this Christian apologize or at least repent for having been so unethical? No! His June 29, 1988, response simply wails "One could search this letter [John Sikos] for eternity to find so much as one modicum of objectivity or scholarly respect." (Scholarly respect!!!) Since he could find none of that, he opines that the "expenditure of time [on me, John Sikos] would not be wise." Ha ha. The guy is deserving of no respect whatsoever, yet thinks he has the right to demand it because he puts a "Rev." in front of his name. And rather than try to earn some respect (perhaps by making a few good, logical arguments, or simply admitting that he had been wrong and saying he's sorry), he condescendingly wimps out and stops corresponding with me. Some apologist.

And after all that, three years later, James White has the nerve to tell Biblical Errancy readers (letter #432) that I, John Sikos, was the one unable to maintain a logical, rational or civil conversation! Give me a break. Unlike some Christian apologists, who deserve at least a small amount of credit for the Herculean effort to fight their uphill battle, James White deserves none. He refuses to say Uncle even when everyone except his mother can see he has been defeated, and for this he demands "scholarly respect." I think Biblical Errancy should ignore White and concentrate on those Christians who at least appear to want to let the evidence determine the truth. White has wasted way too much space in Biblical Errancy over the years.

For those subscribers who wish to experience for themselves White's cocky attitude, his grandiose "I cannot lose this debate so I'll ignore the scoreboard" mentality, I've compiled this index (issue/pages): #44/3-6, #46/2-6, #47/3-5, #52/2-5, #63/1-3, #64/1-3, #65/2-6 (including my Letter #262); #66/4-6, #67/3-4, #68/2-6, #69/5-6, #70/4, #88/5-6, #89/4-5, #93/2-6, #96/3-4 (Letters #392 and #393), #102/3-5, and #103/3. See also the tangentially-related #43/2-3. And I highly recommend White's own "Letters to an Anti-Theist"; it pounds itself into the ground!

Editor's Response to Letter #458

"Verily Satan is an enemy to you: so treat him as an enemy. He only invites his adherents, that they may become Companions of the Blazing Fire." [35:6]

Muslims as well as Christians believe in satan or a devil--Ed.

SCIENCE--"Your guardian-Lord is God, Who created the heavens and the earth in six Days...." [7:54]

"He it is Who created the heavens and the earth in six Days...." [11:7]

"We made from water every living thing." [21:30]

There is that "We" again--Ed.

"The flimsiest of houses is the Spider's house." [29:41]

This is accurate science? Pound for pound a spider's home is a powerhouse--Ed.

"And God did create you from dust; then from a sperm-drop...." [35:11, 40:67]

"Doth not man see that it is We Who created him from sperm?" [35:77]

"We created the heavens and the earth and all between them in Six Days...." [50:38]

SEXISM--"And women shall have rights similar to the rights against them, according to what is equitable; But men have a degree (of advantage) over them." [2:228] "God directs you as regards your children's (inheritance): to the male, a portion equal to that of two females...." [4:11] One can't help but notice the degree to which Islam and Christianity are in agreement on the importance of keeping women subordinate--Ed.

"Men are in charge of women, because Allah hath made the one of them to excel the other, and because they spend of their property (for the support of women). So good women are the obedient.... As for those from whom ye fear rebellion, admonish them and banish them to beds apart, and scourge (beat--Ed.) them. Then if they obey you, seek not a way against them." in The Glorious Koran by Marmaduke Pickthall [4:34] Talk about male chauvinism! You can beat women when you merely fear rebellion. It doesn't have to occur--Ed. "...if there are brothers and sisters, (they share), the male having twice the share of the female." [4:176] (See also: 33:50)

Clearly Muslims put no stock whatever in equality between the sexes--Ed.

SINNERS--"But never will prosper those who sin." [10:17] This is the same ridiculous statement the Bible has. If only it were true!--Ed. "And thou wilt see the Sinners that day bound together in fetters.... their garments of liquid pitch, and their faces covered with Fire." [14:49-50]

"The Sinners will be in the Punishment of Hell, to dwell therein (for aye): Nowise will the (punishment) be lightened for them...." [43:74-75] "And the wicked--they will be in the Fire, which they enter on the Day of Judgment...." [82:14-15] (See Also: 55:43, 59:17)

SLAVERY--"...If one kills a Believer, it is ordained that he should free a believing slave...." [4:92] "Who abstain from sex, except with those joined to them in the marriage bond, or (the captives) whom their right hands possess...." [23:5-6] "Marry those among you who are single, or the virtuous ones among your slaves, male or female...." [24:32] "And if any of your slaves ask for a deed in writing (to enable them to earn their freedom for a certain sum), give them such a deed...." [24:33] (See also: 58:3) The Koran supports slavery as much as the Bible--Ed.

TRINITY--"...to set up partners with God is to devise a sin most heinous indeed." [4:48]

"God forgiveth not (the sin of) joining other gods with Him." [4:116] "Say not 'Trinity': desist: It will be better for you: for God is one God...." [4:171] "In blasphemy indeed are those that say that God is Christ the son of Mary." [5:17]

"They do blaspheme who say: 'God is Christ the son of Mary'...Whoever joins other gods with God,--God will forbid him the Garden, and the Fire will be his abode.... They do blaspheme who say God is one of three in a Trinity: for there is no god except One God. If they desist not from their word (of blasphemy), verily a grievous penalty will befall the blasphemers among them.... Christ the son of Mary was no more than an Apostle." [5:72-75]

"And behold! God will say: 'O Jesus the son of Mary! Didst thou say unto men, Worship me and my mother as gods in derogation of God'? He (Jesus--Ed.) will say: 'Glory to Thee! Never could I say what I had no right (to say).'" [5:116] "And be not thou of the company of those who join gods with God." [6:14] "How can He have a son when He hath no consort?" [6:101] "There is no god but He: turn aside from those who join gods with God." [6:106] "...the Christians call Christ the son of God. That is a saying from their mouth; (In this) they but imitate what the Unbelievers of old used to say. God's curse be on them: how they are deluded away from the Truth!... And (they take as their Lord) Christ the son of Mary; Yet they were commanded to worship but One God: There is no god but He." [9:30-31]

"What do they follow who worship as His 'partners' other than God? They follow nothing but fancy, and they do nothing but lie." [10:66] "Praise be to God, who begets no son, and has no partner in (His) dominion...." [17:111]

"Further, that He may warn those (also) who say, 'God hath begotten a son'. No knowledge have they of such a thing, nor had their fathers. It is a grievous thing that issues from their mouths as a saying. What they say is nothing but falsehood." [18:4-5] "It is not befitting to (the majesty of) God that he should beget a son." [19:35] "They say: (God) had begotten a son! Indeed ye have put forth a thing most monstrous! At it the skies are ready to burst, the earth to split asunder,...for it is not consonant with the majesty of (God)...that He should beget a son." [19:88-92] "Is it not that they say, from their own invention, 'God has begotten children'? But they are liars!" [27:151-152, 37:151] "He is God, the One and Only;...And there is none like unto Him." [112:1, 4] (See also: 6:100, 163, 10:68-69, 16:2, 22, 51, 20:14, 98, 21:98, 108, 23:91-92, 25:2, 28:70, 88, 38:65, 39:4, 6, 40:3, 62, 64-64, 47:19, 50:24-26, 73:9)

Muslims repeatedly assert their allegiance to monotheism and promise damnation for those who believe in a Trinity. Yet, "we," "us," and "our," are repeatedly used in the Koran with respect to God--2:50, 57, 59, 60, 5:44, 46, 48, 7:138, 10:23-24, 73, 11:69, 19:21, 19:38, 40, 51:47. The implication that Muslims are something other than monotheists, if not trinitarians, is very strong--ED.

UNBELIEVERS--"As to those who reject faith, I will punish them with terrible agony in this world and the Hereafter, nor will they have anyone to help." [3:56]

"They but wish that ye should reject Faith, as they do, and thus be on the same footing as they.... But if they turn renegades, seize them and slay them wherever ye find them...." [4:89]

"Seize them and slay them wherever ye get them...." [4:91]

Again we see that tolerance is not one of Islam's strong points. If the Muslims ever gain control of this country and abide by the Koran, one can only shudder at the prospect of what will occur--Ed.

"For the Unbelievers are unto you open enemies.... The unbelievers wish...to assault you in a single rush...." [4:101]

I would say this comes under the heading of paranoia--Ed.

"For God will collect the Hypocrites and those who defy Faith--all in Hell...." [4:140]

"We have prepared for those among them who reject Faith a grievous punishment." [4:161]

"Those who reject Faith and do wrong,--God will not forgive them nor guide them to any way--except the way of Hell, to dwell therein for ever." [4:168-169]

"Those who reject faith and deny Our Signs will be Companions of Hell-fire." [5:10]

It is important to note that this includes all Christians and Jews--Ed.

(See Also: 4:93, 137, 144, 151, 5:5, 6:70, 116, 150, 7:51, 8:36, 37, 9:73, 74, 95, 10:4, 8, 13:35, 14:2, 17:8, 19:37, 21:98, 33:8, 64-65, 38:27, 39:71, 57:15, 19, 64:7, 66:9, 84:21-24)

VIRGIN BIRTH--"She said: 'Oh my Lord! How shall I have a son when no man hath touched me? He said:...When He hath decreed a Plan, He but saith to it, 'Be,' and it is!" [3:47]

"She said: 'How shall I have a son, seeing that no man has touched me, and I am not unchaste?'" [19:20]

ZODIAC--"It is We Who have set out the zodiacal Signs in the Heavens...." [15:16]

Muslims believe in signs of the Zodiac but contend their Book is scientifically precise. How's that for turning logic on its head--Ed.

In conclusion, the last three commentaries have shown quite well that Islam in general and the Koran in particular deserve no more respect than Christianity or the Bible. Both are composed of superstitions, contradictions, hypocrisy, deception, intolerance, and inaccuracies.

REVIEWS

Although we do not normally become involved in the "Does God Exist" debate, an exception is in order. A couple of months ago we received one of the most vacuous pamphlets imaginable from Alpha and Omega Ministries. Entitled A Few Thoughts on Atheism and written by A & O's director, the tiny tome ignores the very point that has been made so often in BE; namely, the Burden of Proof Lies on He Who Alleges. Theists keep bringing up the idea of God and don't want to admit that it is up to them to provide evidence for His existence which the author failed to do. Freethought advocates are under no obligation to disprove the existence of anything. Theists are the ones who keep coming up with the idea, so it is up to them to prove their case. And, as was said many issues ago, that's the Achilles Heel of religionists. They can't! And that's primarily why religions are called "Faiths." Many of the pamphlet's comments are jewels of disinformation.

For instance, White states, "I cannot join you on your foundation, on your starting point, because it automatically, from the very beginning, denies the existence of God ." When will the religionists ever learn that the scientific, rational mind doesn't ipso facto deny the existence of anything, period. All we have is one simple request: Please provide evidence, provide proof, provide something beyond hope and intuition for your creations. That's all we ask, nothing more, nothing less. Is that too much to ask? Don't ask us to believe something simply because you or a book say it's valid or you would like it to be true. The problem lies not in the fact that we deny the existence of God but that you have failed to prove his, her, or its existence.

In the first paragraph the author says, "I believe that there is not only sufficient evidence to demonstrate the existence of God, but there is an over-abundance of such evidence. I do not believe in God without evidence. I do not live in a dream world, disconnected from reality." Yet, not one shred of evidence for God's existence is provided in the pamphlet. As an excuse for this obvious oversight, the author states near the end, "that if you (the freethought advocates--Ed.) were to allow into evidence anything that would demonstrate the existence of God, you would, by default, be letting go of the thing you hold most dearly--your autonomy, your independence from God. You would have to step down from the judgment seat and take your proper position as the created being rather than the independent judge. So, to avoid this plight, you simply dismiss any and all evidence that could in any way cause you to have to recognize the existence of God. Despite my providing you a lengthy list of evidences for God, my efforts would be in vain. 'Case dismissed for lack of evidence' would be your verdict."

How's that for convoluted thinking! In essence, White is saying he believes God exists and has more than enough evidence to prove as much, but will not furnish the requisite data because our autonomy and independence from God would cause us to ignore it. He assumes something exists, refuses to provide any kind of real proof because our alleged ego can't stand the strain and, then, criticizes us for not believing it. If we were to give credence to "logic" of that variety, a Greek believer in Zeus would be well within his rights to say that he has mountains of evidence for the existence of Zeus, but will not make them available to critics because the latter will not surrender their skepticism and feelings of superiority and accept the information. In fact, anyone with any kind of crackpot, off-the-wall, screwball concept could say he could furnish more than enough data to prove his belief but will not comply because of the ego of others. It's little more than a cop-out by another name, a disingenuous subterfuge.

White states, "But this is all circular!" you might say. 'You (White--Ed.) begin with the existence of God!' Yes, that's right. And I'm up front about it. I admit it. But my friend, you too are in the same boat! I have my particular set of unprovable presuppositions. But so do you! I assume my createdness. You assume your non-createdness! I assume my dependence upon God. You assume your independence from God! Any system of thought has to have, at its foundation, a set of unproven and unprovable assumptions, presuppositions if you like that give form and substance to all that follows." In the first place James, rational people don't assume their non-createdness; they go where the evidence leads them and that is toward non-createdness. Religionists are the ones who assume; they assume despite the evidence. They assume their createdness despite mountains of data to the contrary, not because of it. Evidence should be primary, assumptions or beliefs secondary. With religionists precisely the opposite is true. The scientific mind collects data, notices regularity, formulates concepts and laws accordingly, and then operates upon those concepts as long as they are reliable. Religionists, on the other hand, formulate the theory and either gather no evidence for substantiation or gather only that which tends to substantiate while ignoring all that doesn't. Both philosophies make assumptions but there is a tremendous qualitative difference in how their assumptions come into being. The scientist's assumption that he will have an explosion when he drops sodium into water is not even in the same category as a religionist's assumption that he will rise from the dead or alter reality by prayer. One learns from experience, while the other experience is either irrelevant or viewed tendentiously. One factors in all of his known experience, while the other only factors in that which buttresses his preconceived notions. Which is primary, material conditions or ideas, is the most fundamental concept in all of philosophy. All philosophers, all thinkers, are fundamentally in one of two camps, either the materialists or the idealists. Do ideas have to conform to the material conditions of the outside world or does the outside world have to conform to ideas. Which is primary; which is secondary? How you answer that question dominates your view of every question in life and puts you into one of the two major camps.

White states, "May I suggest that if what I believe is right--if you really are the creation of God--Then you might do well to consider the wisdom of your demand for evidence of the existence of God, as well as your disbelief therein? What I mean is this: if you owe your very existence to God, then it becomes obvious that the creature is not wise to reject the existence of its creator." This kind of argument is nothing more than a variation on Pascal's Wager; namely, you had better believe it; you never know, it might be true. Don't take a chance. Of course, virtually anyone who has been exposed to more than just one religious philosophy, anyone who has had his horizons broadened beyond just the narrow confines of his limited locale and not lived his entire life in a religious myopia, knows that the major problem with a ruse of this nature is that it suffers from ethno/religiocentrism. Working on this logic, I had better believe in every religion and every god imaginable because, you never know, they might be the real McCoy. And, of course, that is impossible since many beliefs are in direct conflict. White compares critics of Christianity to computers that see only their "own little universe of chips, disks, and programs," when that describes his narrow universe precisely. He accuses freethinkers of taking a chance when that describes his position exactly. According to Sura 5:73 in the Koran ("They do blaspheme who say: God is one of three in a Trinity: for there is no god except One God. If they desist not from their word (of blasphemy), verily a grievous penalty will befall the blasphemers among them") he is going to Hell because of his belief in the Trinity. You had better "desist" James, and do so promptly, or don't you put any credence in the Koran. Apparently you put as much stock in the Koran as I do the Bible.

White states, "I believe the answer lies in the starting point of our thinking. You and I don't start at the same place. If God exists, then I simply cannot begin with myself as the starting place of my thinking. And why not? Does one start with the created.... If God exists, then any system of thinking must be predicated upon Him, not on something less. On the other hand, you do consider yourself as a sufficient starting place. In fact, you assert that there cannot possibly be any other foundation of thought outside of yourself." How many false steps can one take in so few words? First, he says, "If," if God exists. But that assumes the very point in dispute and puts us back to point zero and proves nothing. Second, he says that nontheists view themselves as a sufficient starting place, which is utterly false. The outside world is the real starting point. We must conform to its dictates and learn its rules and laws if we are to survive and prosper, and not the other way around. White, on the other hand, like all superstitious people, concocts or accepts a theory and then tries to force the outside world to fit his mold. That's a recipe for disaster. One can only ignore the external world to his or her own peril. It's not going to fit you; you have to fit it. It's not going to adapt; you have to. White, however, has chosen to ignore the real world in large measure and make himself the supreme arbiter. In effect, he deems himself to be the starting place. Christians talk about heaven, hell, salvation, resurrection, eternal life, the devil, angels, spirits, god, and untold numbers of other supernatural entities without providing a shred of tangible evidence for anything. That's why it is called the Christian Faith: faith, not proof.

And finally, one can't help but note that White used the phrase "I believe" at least 10 times at major intersections in his rather short pamphlet. After completing the pamphlet, you can't help but wonder why you bothered to read it at all in view of the amount of hope, speculation and guesswork dominating the scene.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #459 from Anonymous of Santa Anna, California

Dear Biblical Errancy. I was so thrilled to find your bookmark entitled "Alleged Problem Verses of the Bible," in a Christian book I purchased in a bookstore. It is such a shame that you have to draw at such straws to try to prove that the Bible is false.... My church and I are committed to finding all of your Bible errancy bookmarks and replace them with one of our own, in all the New Age books. Thank you for your wonderful idea!

Editor's Response to Letter #459

Dear Anonymous. You not only don't have enough courage to print your name on your letter but enough integrity to address even one point made on the pamphlet. Your addiction to escapism, delusion, and superstition, along with a liberal sprinkling of censorship, is your only real commitment my friend. No wonder you are a Christian.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #460 from A & E W, Fort Myers, Florida

Dear Dennis.... We're wondering why you don't ask for "donations," as the preachers do, for your audio tapes, pamphlets, and other items you offer, rather than state that they can be "purchased." Anyhow, we're looking forward to the new index since we have all the back issues of BIBLICAL ERRANCY, everyone of which is a GEM!

Editor's Response to Letter #460

Dear A and E. Asking for money is hard for me to do. I can't help but feel I am petitioning. When people give me something I feel obligated to return the favor. However, in order for some of the projects I have in mind to come to fruition, I am willing to bite the bullet. Fortunately, many people have already been kind and generous and for this I am most grateful.

Letter #461 from JS of Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. Recently I was invited to a Baptist youth camp in southwestern Oklahoma called Falls Creek. Perhaps you've heard of it. It is reputed to be one of the largest youth camps in the world, with an attendance the week I was there at well over 6,000. I have seen first-hand the programming that goes on at these things. Thrice a day everyone gathered under a large open-air "tabernacle" and listened to the various preachers propound their version of the truth. Usually the sermons were rather tame, but a few of the sermons were directed at the "atheists, agnostics, pagans and infidels," and they blasted everything from Thomas Paine to the Big Bang theory. I was quite troubled that the youths there have no alternate information to refer to, and so I stood helplessly as hundreds marched down each night to be saved, simply on the word of a preacher and the Bible. I did manage to talk some sense into a few witnesses who tried to convert me once they found out my agnosticism, but I am afraid that many of them will never get to hear the other side of the coin. Because of this, I would ask that, whenever possible, BE readers should attempt to at least explain alternatives of the infallible Bible concept and Christianity to youths or adults who attempt to witness to them. Otherwise many will never see what is wrong with their theology....

Editor's Response to Letter #461

Dear JS. Your point is well taken. As you probably know, BE has always advocated a strong program of "taking it to the other side." That is a major reason why letters in which people are relating encounters they have had with biblicists have always received priority in BE. Proselytization is of utmost importance. You either grow or bow.

Letter #462 from BJ of Douglasville, Georgia

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I've been contacting Christian Bulletin Boards by computer (modem) and posting some of the Bible contradictions listed in Biblical Errancy. The response I usually get is: "You are taking the verses out of context" or "you must have faith to understand the Bible" then go on to tell me what the verses mean. One SYSOP (Computer Systems Operator) told me that it makes him uncomfortable having a nonbeliever on a Christian BBS, asking questions and quoting Bible text. I think he wanted me off his BBS. My response was - what is a better place for me to ask questions about the contradictions and errors within the Bible, than to take them to Christians for answers. I'm still on that bulletin board, and still active....

Editor's Response to Letter #462

Dear BJ. Fantastic! You are right in among them and scoring where it hurts. You can be pretty sure you are striking home when they want you off the air. Keep it up, develop your style, improve your tactics and learn what works. We need hundreds of people following your lead.

Letter #463 from JC of South River, New Jersey

Dear Dennis. ...Your publication continues to be a valuable educational research source, as well as highly entertaining. Just reading the letters by apologists and fanatics is worth the price of admission, and your logical, precise responses to them is added bread and butter. (Cliche's are great).

I may have asked you this before but once again I would like to know if you have a list of projected radio appearances, especially in the Northeast. If you do I would appreciate a schedule of them. Keep up your very important work. The world needs more like you.

Editor's Response to Letter #463

Thanks for the encouragement. We don't have a schedule of our appearances, since, unfortunately, they are too erratic.

Letter #464 from AH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis. ...Your publication is showing people how to be objective and impartial about many more things than all the contradictions and stupidities with the bible. In fact, I recall a letter in BE where someone said exactly this same thing, that they were more observant, objective and impartial in many other areas as a result of your publication. This is also true of myself. The benefits I have received from reading BE help me in more areas than the bible....

Dennis, you are doing a fabulous job! I just wish that I could write better letters, and get more of them published....you are doing a wonderful job, and I look forward to BE more than any other mail that I receive. Best wishes and continued success.

Letter #465 from GM of Delta, Utah

Dear Dennis. I received the June issue of BE, and as usual I enjoyed it immensely. I cannot understand why people won't renounce the horrible Bible, when you are trying to enlighten them on the many errors of that book of drivel. I believe it would be easier to thread a needle with boxing gloves on while riding a bucking horse in an 80 mph sand storm than to get the utterly pigheaded Christians to understand that the Bible lunacy is nothing but erroneous nonsense. If the Bible said that a ravenous micro-plankton swallowed five full grown blue whales in 15 seconds, some Bible-carrying individuals would believe it without question.

Editor's Response to Letter #465

Dear GM. When it comes to the Bible, you are correct. There is nothing so preposterous that Christians won't believe it if the Bible says it occurred. Talking donkeys, sticks turning into snakes, floating ax-heads, people rising from the dead. How much more absurd can you get! Anybody who will believe in these will believe in anything.

Letter #466 from TD of Morgantown, West Virginia

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... Hope you will get back to more details regarding biblical errors in future issues of BE. We out here in the trenches are always in need of ammunition.

Letter #467 from PG of Gadsden, Alabama

Dear Dennis.... I have thoroughly enjoyed your publication. Please don't stray too far from chapter and verse examples of Biblical errancy. (I enjoy quotations and letter answering but there is nothing quite like the proof positive!). Thanks again, I truly appreciate your efforts.

Editor's Response to Letter #467

Dear PG. Valid point! TD, whose letter precedes yours, seems to agree with you. But then, KN, who wrote the letter preceding TD's, says his favorite parts are the letters. Hopefully, I can maintain the right balance.

Letter #468 from RN of Moscow, Idaho

Dear Dennis. ...I tried a new tactic recently. I sent a local columnist who had attacked the ACLU on school prayer a photocopy of Matt. 6 with verses 5-6 ("...But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly") highlighted. On the verses I wrote: "On the other side is something you obviously have never seen before. I ask only two things of you: 1. Please read it, 2. Please don't spit on it. Yours truly... A few days later, on a Sunday evening, he phoned me and apologized! He had obviously discussed it with his fundie pastors the same day. Idaho's congressional delegation has also received it....

Editor's Response to Letter # 468

weeping,...and they shall come again from the land of the enemy....thy children shall come again to their own border'." The quote in Matthew does not come from Jeremiah for several reasons. (a) Jeremiah's statement has nothing to do with Jesus. Jeremiah is referring to some Israelites who are crying because they have been taken captive out of Israel and their children are dying. (b) There is nothing in the verse that would justify its application to the children killed by Herod. (c) "Was heard" shows that Jeremiah was speaking of an event that had already occurred. He quotes Yahweh as speaking in the past tense. (d) How were the children Herod killed going to return from the land of the enemy? (e) Why wasn't Leah rather than Rachel represented as the grieving mother, since it was from her that Herod's victims were descended? Leah was the female ancestor of the inhabitants of Bethlehem. The actual prediction of this entire prophecy is that the Israelite children taken captive to Babylon will return to Israel. (60) MATT. 8:17 says, "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Isaiah the prophet, saying, 'Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses'" and is supposedly a reproduction of Isaiah 53:4 which says, "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." The obvious dissimilarities to be noted are: (a) When did Jesus bare the diseases he cured. (b) When was Jesus smitten by God. (c) And "hath borne" and "smitten" are past tense verbs which shows that an event prior to the time of Isaiah is under discussion. (61) MATT. 27:5-10 says, "And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself. And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, 'It is not lawful to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood'. And they took counsel, and brought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, 'And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value; And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me'." Although supposedly taken from the Book of Jeremiah, the quote from Matthew is nowhere to be found therein. Some apologists have conceded as much and alleged it is actually to be found in the Book of Zechariah. Zechariah 11:12-13 says, "And I said unto them, If ye think good, give me my price; And if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. And the Lord said unto me, Cast it unto the potter: A goodly price that I was prised at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord." But Zechariah is wholly inappropriate for several reasons. (a) In Zechariah the 30 pieces of silver were called a goodly price; yet in Matthew the 30 pieces were the price of blood. (b) In Zechariah the deal was approved by the Lord; while in Matthew it was condemned by Him. (c) In Zechariah the money was given to the potter in the house of the Lord; while in Matthew the money was refused admittance to the treasury, and the priests used it to buy a potter's field. (d) In Zechariah "I," one man, gave the 30 pieces to a potter; while, in Matthew "they," a group, took the 30 pieces of silver and gave them for a potter's field. Moreover, Zechariah nowhere mentions a field. (e) And lastly, "to the potter" in the KJV in Zechariah should have been translated "into the treasury" as was done in the RSV. Thus, it would have no relation to the potter mentioned in Matthew. (62) MATT. 27:35 says, "...that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots" and was supposedly taken from Psalm 22:18 which says, "They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." Apologists conveniently ignore the fact that: (a) Psalm 22 uses present tense verbs and is referring to events contemporaneous with Isaiah. (b) The writer of Psalm 22 is speaking of himself, not Jesus or anyone else, and (c) The writer of Psalm 22 is not prophesying anything. (63) ACTS 1:16 says, "Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus." In the first place, David never said anything about Judas. Psalm 41:9 to which the author of Acts is referring says, "Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me." It is decidedly inapplicable because the same speaker says the following five verses earlier in Psalm 41:4, "I said, Lord, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee." If Jesus is the speaker in Psalm 41:9 then he is also the sinner in Psalm 41:4. But the Bible repeatedly states in such verses as 1 John 3:5 ("...and in him is no sin") and 1 Peter 2:22 ("Who did not sin...") that Jesus is sinless. (64) ACTS 2:30 says, "...God had sworn with an oath to him (David--Ed.), that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." It is supposedly taken from Psalm 132:11-12 which says, "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne. If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore." Apologists fail to note that all of David's descendants who keep God's covenant will sit upon David's throne not just one man. There is no hint whatsoever that only one man received the promise. Moreover, Psalms does not mention Christ. Why assume he is the specific person under discussion? (65) ACTS 13:30-33 says, "But God raised him from the dead and for many days he appeared to those who came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the Second Psalm (2:7): 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee'." Where does Psalm 2:7 say that in some distant day I will raise Jesus of Nazareth, Joseph's son, from the dead? Nowhere does the 2nd Psalm contend that: (a) anyone will rise from the dead, (b) he who is the Son of God must rise from the dead, (c) Jesus of Nazareth is the son of God, (d) or anyone risen from the dead shall be the son of God. (66) Lastly, ROM. 4:5-8 says, "But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, Saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." This was supposedly a recreation of Psalm 32:1-2 which says, "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile." The quote from Psalms is irrelevant to Paul's arguments for several reasons. (a) Just because God forgave iniquities does not mean one is saved by faith. (b) There is no mention in Psalms of believing "on him." (c) Psalms says nothing about "belief." (d) And in no sense does Psalms imply that a man's sins are forgiven because he believed or accepted something. (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #469 from JP of Seattle, Washington

Dear Dennis. I enjoyed your review of When Skeptics Ask by Geisler and Brooks and wish to add one comment to your fine review found in issue #105. On page 4 you quoted Geisler and Brooks concerning the assumptions of science as they relate to the critics fairness to the doctrine of inerrancy. For the scientist, all knowledge of matters of fact, as distinct from purely logical relations, is based upon experience. Geisler and Brooks would be hard pressed to demonstrate how we know the Bible is inerrant based upon experience; especially, since no original inerrant biblical documents exist for us to test! Their association of the doctrine of inerrancy with the empirical methods of research is misleading. The assumption that anomalies concerning matters of fact have an explanation can be justified based upon the coherence of the assumption within the particular theory in question. Considerable weight can be given to such assumptions because they are not "empty," i.e., they agree with (cohere) a broad number of matters of fact.

On the other hand, the doctrine of inerrancy is laden with assumptions which cannot agree with a broad number of matters of fact. What physical evidence can the apologist present which would support the assumption that the original documents were inerrant? The claim of inerrancy is extraordinary and no amount of fallible-errant biblical texts will justify the assumption that we can know the original biblical documents were inerrant.

In sum, Geisler and Brooks mislead their readers into thinking it is unfair to require the inerrantist to provide an inerrant Bible when in fact, no one requires an inerrant science. The absurdity in their thinking is understood when it is realized that the scientific method does not include an assumption of inerrancy for theories constructed from matters of fact. In fact, the scientific method requires that a theory be such that it is open to being disproven. Could you imagine the inerrantist setting out to disprove their doctrine? No. Geisler and Brooks are clearly misleading in asking us to assume the truth of the claim of inerrancy, an extraordinary claim, as if it were identical to an assumption based upon claims grounded in matters of fact.

Editor's Response to Letter #469

Dear JP. In essence, I think your argument is that biblicists can't prove with any kind of empirical or tangible evidence that the "originals" are inerrant and until they do so we would be foolish to take their word for it. No number of errant copies or secondary issues can demonstrate or substantiate the existence or textual composition of an inerrant original. I would agree.

Letter #470 from DC of Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Dennis. I'm including some papers I gave to a Bible believing Christian. He works as the book manager at one of the largest Christian bookstores in the Phoenix area. He's also associated with one of the largest fundamentalist churches in the Phoenix area. In August 1991 his church sent him out of state to attend an evangelism conference. In his office at his church we discussed the prophecy of Ezekiel 26. The main point he brought out was his theory that most of the original island (upon which Tyre was built) is now underwater. He had absolutely nothing to support his theory except statements by Gleason Archer in the Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties. He also made the careless statement that the word "they" in Ezek. 26:12 refers to Alexander the Great and his soldiers. The papers I'm sending you are my response to his claims. I thought you might enjoy reading them.

After our discussion, he suggested we should discuss the resurrection of Jesus in our next meeting. I took the time to write a short paper on that subject. I also gave him some information on the subject of "faith"....

I'm also debating two Jehovah's Witness members on a regular basis (about once every two weeks). One is in his early 30's and the other in his late 20's. They're both very interested in discussing the Bible.

Dear Dennis, your hard work, careful research, and clear thinking shines through brightly in your newsletter. Your goal "towards the creation of a more rational and correctly-informed populace" is to be applauded and encouraged. You have greatly motivated me to do my part in helping to achieve the same goal. Thank you!

Editor's Response to Letter #470

Dear DC. Your eagerness to confront them on their own turf is tremendous! Your efforts are to be congratulated and your kind sentiments are much appreciated. Letters of this kind in which freethinkers are engaging the other side in verbal repartee' have always had the highest priority in BE. After all, if we don't enlighten Christians in regard to the errors of their ways, who will. We must go to them because there is little chance of them coming to us. Why would they seek out our views when they are convinced they already have the truth. Only when they are convinced their mountain is not worth the climb, will they be willing to give ours a hearing.

Letter #471 from RM of St. Charles, Missouri

Dennis.... I just recently passed out a lot of your pamphlets at a KSIV picnic here in St. Louis. KSIV is a national "Christian information radio station" headquartered in California. I had dozens of people surrounding me asking me questions. I was also asking them questions, showing them scriptures, answering their questions, showing them biblical errors, etc. I had 5 people pray for me, and I ended up giving my phone number to 3 people. These people can really come up with some interesting/superficial/dumb answers to your biblical errors. For example, with Lev. 11:6 they said there used to be a hare that chewed its cud and it is now extinct. As far as Jer. 19:9 is concerned "God caused them to be in a situation where they were forced to be cannibals. He didn't actually cause them to be cannibals." What difference does that make? And finally, one guy told me the answer to Ex. 32:14 vs. Num. 23:19 is that it depends on what the word "repent" means. I told him, no it doesn't. The fact that the Book says that God does not do something and then he turns around and says he does is sufficient for a contradiction. It doesn't matter what that something is. I just hope I got some of them to think. There were also a lot of children around listening to me. Maybe they got something out of it.

Editor's Response to Letter #471

Dear RM. Your's is the kind of activity in which far more people in the freethought movement should be engaged. Don't underestimate your influence. Your willingness to go in among them definitely has an effect, even though it may not be immediately apparent. Those who heard you will spend time later thinking about what you said, even though they may not want to admit as much. And with children present, that makes your efforts all the more worthwhile.

Letter #472 from EB of Wayne, Michigan

Dear Dennis.... I went on a two week vacation and left your pamphlets all the way from Michigan to Massachusetts. At Gettysburg, Pennsylvania a fundie handed me a Jesus pamphlet and I handed him one of yours. I always carry 3 or 4 for that purpose.

Reading your periodical has done the one thing that has made me a "completed" atheist at last! You have done something that no other freethought group or freethinker has done. You have taken away the preachers and apologists' "MAGIC". They are nothing but PURE CONMEN. Your reasoning, logic, and style are PURE SUNSHINE. Please! Keep up the GREAT WORK.

Editor's Response to Letter #472

Dear EB. You have not only been one of BE's staunchest supporters but a model to be followed. Your eagerness to take it to the opposition, distribute scores of pamphlets, and confront them on their own grounds with their own material is exemplary. When we met at a convention in Detroit, you presented a good program for proselytization. Isn't it nice to have something to give the other side when they distribute their wares. But, remember, no pamphlet or written material can replace personal contact. Questions will invariably arise that can only be addressed by someone on the scene.

Letter #473 from Stephen M. Barr, 6425 Old Redwood Highway, Santa Rosa, California 95403

Dear Dennis. I first read the Bible when I was between the ages of 10 and 12. My first reaction after reading it then was that it was ridiculous--and since then I have been anti-Bible and anti-religious. I suffered the epithet of "heathen" in the Navy, especially in boot camp when all were required to attend church services Sunday morning.

My father even disliked and complained about my "irreligiousness." Nevertheless, in college, I quickly became a member of Madalyn O'Hair's "Society of Separationists" that she had just organized. We wrote letters to the Supreme Court and various senators and representatives to have the (property and income) tax exemption of churches and clergy rescinded. Church taxation is a subject I still heartily support - it is long overdue.

My fervor against religion and the Bible has not abated. In the 40 years since first reading the Bible, I have collected many contradictions and inconsistencies. These I have assembled into a book that I was just about to publish when Biblical Errancy was introduced to me. Needless to say, the book has been put on hold as additions and refinements due to your excellent scholarship are being made. In reading through all of the back issues that I have collected, I notice an increasing desire by your correspondents for a book such as the one I am assembling. I detect, also, a need for some method of indexing this information - a project I plan soon to begin. I hope to have this "Bible Study Book" ready to publish next year.

If any of your readers have any suggestions on what form the index should take, I would like to hear from them.... Keep up the good work! I look forward to BE every month!

Editor's Response to Letter #473

Dear Stephen. I think one of our subscribers in Texas has already assembled the kind of index you feel is needed. We started distributing it in the July 1991 Issue. But, then, perhaps you are referring to an index of your own book?

Letter #474 from John Sikos of Center Line, Michigan

Dear Dennis. Just wanted to let you know that the November issue (#107) arrived today, November 12. I do not know if you mailed it out earlier than usual, or if the postal service is merely being inconsistent (I doubt it's that they're actually improving!), but I definitely like receiving BE earlier than the last day of the month.

About a dozen people have requested copies of the James White material. Most also stated that they enjoyed my letter to you as published in Issue #106. Only a few requested the material without any supportive comment.

Your review of A Few Thoughts on Atheism is right on the mark, although I would have been a bit more scathing if I'd been you. My personal opinion is that James White knows damn well his arguments (on the burden of proof and everything else) ain't cuttin' it, but that neither he nor his followers care. His job and income depend on his continuing on -- and he will. This is why we must work at reaching a bigger share of the public directly -- not through other people's television and radio shows, but our own. Only then will the charlatans effectively be exposed. As always, I love BE. Keep up the good work.

P.S. Letter #468 was an absolute inspiration.

Editor's Response to Letter #474

Dear John. I mailed the November issue, like all issues, on the last day of the prior month. You are no more perturbed about the erratic mail delivery than I. It can only be described as ridiculous and there is nothing I can do. Your comments with respect to the media reflect my views quite well and that is why I am planning to develop some comprehensive audio tapes and public-access video programs. Unfortunately, diversions that sidetrack my central thrust keep arising, but I'll get there eventually.

Letter #475 from BW of Shreveport, Louisiana

Dear Dennis.... I must express my appreciation for your efforts in scuttling the "inerrancy" doctrine: Once Christians realize that they can't really trust the Bible as "God's Holy Word", the way opens to talk some sense to them. Facts and evidence don't matter, if they believe that every word in the Bible is literally true!

I will try to build up a collection of back issues and even some tapes, as resources permit. Already, the few issues I have come in handy in debates on computer bulletin boards. With Farrell Till's Skeptical Review, I've got an arsenal to back me up.... Looking forward to every issue.

Letter #476 from RN of Moscow, Idaho

(On pages 17 and 18 of the Sept./Oct. 1991 issue of the magazine, Free Mind, can be found the following comments by RN under the title "Toss the Book at 'Em." RN sent BE a copy--Ed.)

I started writing letters to the editor against creationists six years ago and soon found out that telling them what scientists say is like pouring water on a duck's back. The only way to reach them is to tell them what the Bible says. Or, in other words, throw "The Book" at them!

I have found the biblical approach extremely effective. I have knocked out several dozen fundamentalists, including two preachers and a local columnist. Whenever possible, I try to make my letters funny, so that the general public will laugh at the fundies. Recently, an evangelical acquaintance informed me that the better known of the preachers no longer has any credibility in Christian circles. And I keep bumping into businesspersons and professors who appreciate my efforts. And, best of all, only newcomers dare to write letters to the editor about school prayer or creationism. The rest of them are silent except, no doubt, for daily prayers for my demise.

Make no mistake about it: the worst enemy of the fundamentalists is the Bible. For us Humanists, however, it is indeed a "good book." Let us use it more often....

Editor's Response to Letter #476

Dear RN. You are asserting what we have been saying for years. The Bible is its own worst enemy and the most effective means by which to combat the largest number of religionists in this nation is to expose the Bible for the fraud that it is. If you bring any kind of outside data to the Bible to prove its inaccuracy, such as scientific information, biblicists are simply going to say, "I don't care what kind of data you have; if it disagrees with the Bible, then it is wrong and that is that." So, I don't go outside the Bible to find information saying the Bible is false; I use internal information that says so. I don't have outside evidence saying the Bible is false; I have the Bible saying the Bible is false. And that is far more difficult to counteract. When something in Mark contradicts something in Luke or something in Proverbs conflicts with something in Exodus, in effect, I have one part of the Bible saying another part is a lie. Of course, an approach of this nature requires a tremendous amount of homework in a book that is often monotonous, inconsistent, vague, petty, silly, superstitious, inaccurate, repetitious, and boring. Because these traits are quite prominent, it is generally eschewed by those of a more rational frame of mind. Unfortunately, the latter often fail to realize that because it is the people's placebo avoidance is

With this month's commentary we will conclude our analysis of ACCOMMODATIONS and the large number of Misquotes, Nonquotes, and Misinterpretations that permeate the NT. This, our final installment of Misinterpretations, will continue the numbering of prior issues.

ACCOMMODATIONS

Misinterpretations--(67) ROM. 15:3 says, "For even Christ pleased not himself: but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me." Paul misinterpreted Psalm 69:9 which says, "For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up; and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me." The "me" referred to in Psalm 69:9 is David. He is the person who is speaking, not Jesus. (68) GAL. 3:6-9 says, "Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." Yet, Gal. 3:10 which follows says, "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is everyone one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." One should note that verse 10 does not logically follow verses 6-9. Verses 6-9 stress faith while verse 10 stresses the importance of following the law. Verse 10 was taken from Deut. 27:26 which says, "Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them...." and is a strong statement to follow, not ignore, the law. The curse is on those who do not follow the law. Paul twisted Deut. 27:26 in such a manner as to imply that those who follow the law are cursed. The reverse is true. (69) GAL. 3:13 says, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." It was taken from Deut. 21:22-23 which says, "And if a man commits a sin worthy of death, and he be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree: his body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God)...." Paul used Deut. 21:22-23 to serve his own ends. (a) Deut. 21:22 is talking about a sinful man which would exclude Jesus because he is sinless according to 1 Peter 2:22. (b) Jesus was not hanged nor did he die on a tree. (c) Paul would actually be calling the alleged "Savior" cursed, if this verse were applicable. (70) GAL. 3:16 says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." Paul tried to make it appear that the seed referred to and the one who received the promise was Christ. This is a blatant distortion of the OT for many reasons. (a) The word "seed" in the OT always refers to many people, not one person. One need only read Gen. 13:15-16, 15:5, 13, 26:4, and 32:12 to see that seed always refers to one's descendants. (b) Gen. 12:7 which says, "And the Lord appeared unto Abraham, and said, unto thy seed will I give this land: and there he built an altar unto the Lord...." would mean God gave Jesus, the creator of heaven and earth, the land of Canaan as an inheritance. How absurd! Moreover, Jesus never received the land. (c) The following verses would make Jesus as numberless as the dust of the earth. Gen. 13:16 says, "And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered" and Gen. 22:17 says, "...I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore." (d) Gen. 15:13 which says, "And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them for four hundred years...." would mean Jesus would serve Egypt 400 years and be afflicted for 400 years. Yet, he lived only 33 years and was never afflicted in Egypt. "Theirs" and "They" clearly show that many persons, not one, are being referred to. (e) Gen. 17:9-10 says "And God said unto Abraham,... This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee; Every man child among you shall be circumcised." If Jesus were the "seed" referred to in this case, it would mean the covenant of circumcision was established with Jesus. Are we to believe God established a covenant with Jesus? Why would God make a promise to Christ, since Jesus is co-existent and co-equal with God; he is one of a triumvirate. (71) HEB. 1:5 which says, "...I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son." is in opposition to apologetic beliefs and, contrary to apologetic propaganda, was not taken from 2 Sam. 7:14 which says, "I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men and with the stripes of the children of men." Several factors show the verses are not related. (a) In 2 Sam. 7:14 God is saying he will call Solomon, not Jesus, his son. (b) Because Jesus could not commit iniquity, it must be referring to a mortal like Solomon. (c) And certainly God would not beat Jesus with a rod and cause stripes to be put on him. Would God even threaten to chasten Jesus with stripes? (72) HEB. 1:9 says, "Thou has loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy god, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows" and is supposedly taken from Psalm 45:7 which says, "Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness: therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee...." If Jesus is God or co-equal with God, would the Psalmist address him with "thy God." How could Jesus, who is God, have a God? Psalm 45:8 and 9 which follow 45:7 say in reference to the same person, "All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes and cassia, out of the ivory palaces, whereby they have made thee glad. King's daughters were among thy honorable women: upon thy right hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir." Yet, Jesus' garments never smelled of myrrh, aloes, or cassia and King's daughters were never among his "honorable" women. Or, perhaps Christian apologists know something of which others are not aware. (73) According to the Living Bible Paul says in HEB. 2:6-9, "...in the book of Psalms David says to God. 'What is mere man that you are so concerned about him? And who is this Son of Man you honor so highly? For though you made him lower than the angels for a little while, now you have crowned him with glory and honor. And you have put him in complete charge of everything there is. Nothing is left out. We have not yet seen all of this take place, but we do see Jesus--who for awhile was a little lower than the angels--crowned now by God with glory and honor because he suffered death for us. Yes, because of God's great kindness, Jesus tasted death for everyone in all the world.'" Paul took this from Psalm 8:4-6 which says in the Living Bible, "I cannot understand how you can bother with mere puny man, to pay any attention to him! And yet you have made him only a little lower than the angels, and placed a crown of glory and honor upon his head. You have put him in charge of everything you made; everything is put under his authority...." Paul misused the Psalms quote in several respects. (a) The Psalmist stated that God made man, not Jesus, to have rule over all God made and God made man, not Jesus, a little lower than the angels. What the Psalmist stated has no relation to Jesus as Paul implies in Hebrews 2:9. (b) Why would Jesus have been worshipped by the angels if he was made a little lower than them? (c) And a crown of glory and honor was never put on the head of Jesus. (74) HEB. 5:6 and 6:20 say, "...even Jesus, made a high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec" and are mistakenly taken from Psalm 110:4 which says, "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." The quote in Psalms is not referring to Jesus. The "thou" in Psalms 110:4 is referring to David who is the Lord of the Psalmist. Paul has wrongfully applied Psalm 110:4 to Jesus when it actually refers to David. (75) HEB. 10:30 says, "For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord." This was taken from Deut. 32:35 which says, "Vengeance is mine, and recompense...." The comment in Deut. was made by someone who felt he was God's agent; it was not said by God and should not be deceptively attributed to God. (76) HEB. 12:21 says, "...and so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake...." and is taken from Deut. 9:19 which says, "For I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure, wherewith the Lord was wroth against you to destroy you." Deuteronomy 9:19 is actually referring to Moses' fear of the Lord's anger at the time he found them worshipping the Golden Calf. Heb. 12:21, on the other hand, is referring to the fear Moses felt when he stood at the base of an untouchable mountain and witnessed blazing fire, gloom, darkness, trumpets sounding and audible words. (77) And lastly, 1 PETER 2:8 says, "And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient...." and is unjustifiably taken from Isaiah 8:14 which says, "And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence to both houses of Israel...." (a) The verse prior to Isaiah 8:14 says, "Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread" and shows that the "he" in Isaiah 8:14 is not referring to Jesus but to God. (b) Isaiah 8:14 says he is only a rock of offence to both houses of Israel, not to all those who are disobedient.

In sum and substance, the commentaries in six issues of BE have provided more than enough evidence to prove that NT writers have misquoted, misinterpreted, twisted, distorted, perverted, misapplied and misunderstood a sizable number of OT verses. They have even gone so far as to manufacture OT verses that don't even exist. Anyone who looks for objective scholarship in the field of biblical apologetics has embarked upon a journey into the realm of myth and fantasy in which people search for the nonexistent. Nothing is so biased as someone whose heart precedes his head, whose desire precedes his discretion, whose wish precedes his wisdom.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #477 from James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries in Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... The majority of your attempted response to my discussion of the Trinity takes the form of nothing but ridicule. You claim that no one understands the Trinity (seemingly, since you don't understand it, then no one else does, either). You state, "The only human being who could understand the Trinity would be someone who could also visualize a square circle or a two-sided triangle." This, of course, assumes your conclusion: that the Trinity is self-contradictory. But asserting what you wish to prove accomplishes nothing (though it will certainly impress some).

Editor's Response to Letter #477 (Part a)

Dear James. You are at it again. When will you ever learn? In the first place, your comment that my discussion of the Trinity takes the form of nothing but ridicule is utterly without merit and completely specious. The fact of the matter is that I deal in logic and you think of that as ridicule. I can't help but paraphrase Harry Truman who said, "I don't give them hell; I just tell them the truth and they think it is hell." Secondly, your comment that "this, of course, assumes your conclusion: that the Trinity is self-contradictory" is completely without standing. There is no assumption involved. It is contradictory and that is a fact. Thirdly, you fancy yourself well-read in apologetic literature but are apparently unaware of the fact that most of your own compatriots don't deny that the Trinity is a concept that defies logic and must be taken on faith alone. One can only assume that you are suffering under the laughable delusion that you are superior to those who have gone before. Many apologists not only admit there are no proof texts for the doctrine but freely admit the entire concept is incomprehensible. Support for this assertion is not hard to find. On page 168 in 508 Answers to Bible Questions apologist M.R. DeHaan states that, "The Trinity, that is, three persons in one is a mystery which is revealed in the Bible but cannot be understood by the human mind. Since man is finite, and God is infinite, this is one of those things which must be accepted by faith, even though it cannot be reasoned out. The Trinity cannot be explained but it must be believed because the Bible teaches it throughout." On page 55 of Basic Theology professor Ryrie of Dallas Theological Seminary alleges that, "Even with all the discussion and delineation that we attempt in relation to the Trinity, we must acknowledge that it is in the final analysis a mystery. We accept all the data as truth even though they go beyond our understanding." On page 25 in Essential Christianity apologist Walter Martin says, "No man can fully explain the Trinity, though in every age scholars have propounded theories and advanced hypotheses to explore this mysterious Biblical teaching. But despite the worthy efforts of these scholars, the Trinity is still largely incomprehensible to the mind of man." On page 19 in The Bible Has the Answer apologists Morris and Clark state that, "the mystery of the Trinity is beyond the capacity of our finite and limited minds to comprehend." Later, on page 41 in the same book Morris and Clark state that, "the mystery of the divine-human nature of Christ is beyond our finite understanding.... The Bible simply presents as fact the great truth that Jesus Christ was both God and man. It does not try to explain how this could be, because it is inexplicable. It must be apprehended on faith alone,...." If you'll note, James, your fellow fundamentalists make no attempt to defend the concept rationally. Believers are told to believe it without understanding simply because the Bible says so. On pages 112 and 113 in Almah or Young Woman apologist Lawlor says, "All the difficulties and problems surrounding the mystery of the person of Christ will never be solved. The great difficulty is that of understanding how the Lord could have but one personality when he possessed two real natures, divine and human. How can these natures be united in the one Person? This is the "mystery of godliness.... There are some matters that are beyond us, which we shall never totally comprehend." "Totally comprehend"! Any Christian would be happy to be able to comprehend even a minute part thereof. Lawlor concludes, "we must finally fall upon our faces before the mystery of the eternal, almighty god in Christ, having come in flesh, and confess that we cannot explain Him." "Explain him"! Any Christian would be happy to even understand the Trinity, much less explain it. Talk about blind, unquestioning faith! The concept makes no sense; they admit it makes no sense, but we are to believe it, regardless. The problem lies not in the fact that it can't be understood by me but that it can't be understood by anyone, period. In the thick tome entitled Catholic Dogma, the catholic apologist Ludwig Ott says on page 75, "The dogma of the Trinity is, in fact, beyond reason.... Human reason cannot fathom the mystery of the Blessed Trinity even after the dogma has been revealed by God." So, you see James your incessant argument that I deny the Trinity because I can't understand it is pure Christian propagandistic rubbish and I wish to hear it no longer. You have prated that prattle long enough. If you can't come up with anything better, I suggest that you come up with nothing at all. Enough is enough. My patience in teetering on the edge of incivility. You'd do well to remember what Abe Lincoln said about keeping your mouth closed?

Letter #477 Continues (Part b)

Then, you engage in a campaign of misrepresentation of the doctrine you wish to attack.... You write, "Yes Jesus is God; no he is man. Since that makes no sense, it is immediately changed to: No, he is the god/man, man and god simultaneously. And since that makes no sense either, many Christians are candid enough to admit it's a "mystery" that can't be understood by anybody." Of course, this is all smoke and mirrors with no substance. In Christ, God and man are not contradictory terms, so saying He is the "God-Man" is not nonsensical. Furthermore, anyone familiar with the use of the term "mystery" both in the NT as well as in historical theological usage is aware of the fact that "mystery" does not equal "not understandable." This is another example, Mr. McKinsey, of your unfamiliarity with the issues you attempt to discuss. You will later accuse me of attacking you by pointing out the many instances where you show ignorance of the issues. This is not a personal attack, sir, it is simply a statement of fact.

Editor's Response to Letter #477 (Part b)

Being factual has never been one of your strong points, James, and if there is any misrepresentation or smoke with mirrors, my prior quotes from your own compatriots have shown from whence it emanates. The only smoke and mirrors involved is that in which you enwrap your followers. You allege that for one to say that "He is the 'God-Man' is not nonsensical." Don't be absurd. Of course it is. God is perfect and man is not. Man errs; God does not. How could you have a being who is perfect and not perfect simultaneously? How could a being be infinite and finite at the same time. How could a being be both ignorant of some facts and omniscient? How could a being be morally corrupt and the personification of moral rectitude at the same time? Unless you are able to repeal the law of contradiction, James, you are entangled in a hopeless quest for a phantasy.

You say, "anyone familiar with the use of the term 'mystery' both in the NT as well as in historical theological usage is aware of the fact that 'mystery' does not equal 'not understandable'." It's not that I'm so unfamiliar with biblical and historical usage of the word "mystery" as it is your unfamiliarity with Webster's Dictionary. According to the latter, the theological definition of mystery is "any religious truth known to man only through divine revelation and to be accepted on faith." That is rather definitive, don't you think? Notice it says that it is known only through divine revelation, not logic, reason, or science, and it is to be accepted on faith, not as the result of discovery, experimentation or rationality. Secondly, you say that a "mystery" does not equal "not understandable" according to the Bible and historical usage. You need to reread your own book, my friend. Col. 2:2 and Rev. 10:7 refer to the "mystery of God." And 1 Cor. 4:1 refers to the mysteries of God. You mean God is understandable, that you know the mystery of God? First Tim. 3:16 says, "...great is the mystery of godliness." You mean you understand this mystery? First Cor. 14:2 says, "For one who speaks in a tongue speaks not to men but to God; for no one understands him, but he utters mysteries in the Spirit." You mean you, unlike all others, understand him and his mysteries? If so, then you are calling the Bible a liar, because it just said no one understands him. (TO BE CONTINUED)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #478 from GK of Minneapolis, Minnesota

(GK sent the following article to the Minnesota Daily Newspaper--Ed.)

The Opinion piece "Reflections on Rushdie and Images of the Moslem World" attempts to present Islam as a just, fair, and humanitarian religion. Opinions aside, one need only scan the Koran to reveal its cruel, punitive, undemocratic, puritanical, anti-intellectual, intolerant, and arbitrary nature. It is surely one of the world's most oppressive religions. Examples can be taken directly from the Koran (The A. Yusuf Ali version which I will use) itself and include the following: Sura 2:178--The only penalty for murder is to make compensation to the victims relatives. Sura 2:216--Fighting is prescribed and good for men. Sura 2:223--Wives are the property of their husbands. Sura 2:228--Men are a degree above women. Sura 4:15--Women are to be immured for the rest of their lives for "lewdness." Sura 4:16--Homosexuals must be punished unless they repent and mend their ways. Sura 4:25--Women can be bought and sold. Sura 4:34--Women can be beaten by their husbands. Sura 5:36--Crucifixion is required for anyone making war against Allah and his messengers. Sura 5:41--Both hands of thieves are to be amputated. Sura 5:76--The belief that Jesus is the Son of God is blasphemous. Anyone believing that will go to Hell. Sura 8:41--A "revelation" from Allah permits Mohammed to keep one-fifth of all spoils from towns or caravans that are raided. Sura 9:28--Pagans are unclean. Sura 9:29--Fight those who disbelieve in Allah. Sura 9:5--Fight and slay the pagans wherever you find them. Sura 9:51--All things are predestined. Sura 24:2--One hundred lashes are to be given for adultery or fornication. Sura 24:31--Women are required to wear the veil. Sura 33:50--Men may use captive women for their sexual amusement. And Sura 47:4--Those who won't accept Islam are to be killed. And on and on.

After tallying the above, it struck me how similar these absurd "revealed" words are to the Old and New Testament of the Bible. For that matter, all Holy Books, whatever their origin are really nothing more than the imaginative writings of their founders. None stand up to any kind of critical or scientific scholastic analysis, much less provide any kind of reasonable guide to arranging our lives in any kind of ethical or moral fashion. The world would be a better place if all "Holy Books" were simply trash-canned once and for all.

Letter #479 from KN of Sacramento, California

I enjoyed issue #102 of Biblical Errancy. Astonishing that you have lasted through so many issues--and you are still going strong! The new format is a great improvement.

It was good fun to watch Mr. James White twisting on your tines (pp.4-5), but why spend over a full page on the poor fellow? You should have just told him to read John 10:30 ("I and the Father are one"). That single verse blows his whole argument out of the water. In this context, John 14:7 ("If you had known me, you should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him") is almost as devastating. My favorite part of BE is the letters, debate and dialogue. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #479

Dear KN. You should write a letter to us and explain to James how these verses destroy his whole argument. I don't think he is going to get your point by only reading them.

Letter #480 from KB of Dallas, Texas

Dear Dennis. I am a subscriber and a freethinker. I monitor Fundy programs for contradictions. I don't have much time to study the subject of End Time Prophecy. This subject is begging to be debunked. Could you put me in touch with literature that points out the falseness of this prophecy. For instance, The Beast, A world dictator is allegedly going to make everyone worship him. That flies in the face of Christians and Jews and Muslims. None of these will worship the beast. Yet, it says in a sweeping motion that everyone will worship the beast. It honestly causes me some stomach upsets. It is a topic that is begging for your rationalist debunking. If I can break away from work, I'll check it out and send you some results. P.S. Please answer. I'm serious. This prophecy (End Time) scares me.

Editor's Response to Letter #480

Dear KB. I'm not sure what you mean by putting you "in touch with literature that points out the falseness of this prophecy." How could I provide you with literature to prove that something is not going to happen? That is not how you approach this kind of material. Instead, you look at the Bible's prophetic track record. Anyone who does will notice that it is not prophetic; it's pathetic. Several of BE's commentaries have been totally devoted to a comprehensive exposure of the Bible's prophetic failures. Why would you think that it would be any more accurate in the future than it has been in the past. As one man wisely said in reference to a discussion of Adam and Eve, "If the Bible can't correctly tell you where you came from, why would it be able to tell you where you are going." If, judging by its own record, it could not reliably predict events in the past why would it be any more accurate in the future. No, my friend I certainly wouldn't worry about the Beast or any of that other nonsense in Revelations or Daniel. However, I would definitely be concerned about a whole host of social, environmental and economic problems that are currently expanding throughout the world.

"There is scarcely any part of science or any thing in nature, which those impostors and blasphemers of science, called priests, as well as Christians and Jews, have not, at some time or other, perverted, or sought to pervert to the purpose of superstition and falsehood." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine, p. 295.

"If the Bible is true, man is a special creation, and if man is a special creation, millions of facts must have conspired, millions of ages ago, to deceive the scientific world of today. If the Bible is true, slavery is right, and the world should go back to the barbarism of the lash and chain, If the Bible is true, polygamy is the highest virtue. If the Bible is true, nature has a master and the miraculous is independent of and superior to cause and effect. If the Bible is true, most of the children of men are destined to suffer eternal pain. If the Bible is true, the science known as astronomy is a collection of mistakes--the telescope is a false witness, and light is a luminous liar. If the Bible is true, the science known as geology is false and every fossil is a petrified perjurer." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 11, p. 233.

"At present, a good many men engaged in scientific pursuits and those who have signally failed in gaining recognition among their fellows, are endeavoring to make reputations among the churches by delivering weak and vapid lectures upon the 'harmony of Genesis and geology'." "Some Mistakes of Moses", Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 29

"The Bible is no longer the standard. Science has dethroned the inspired volume. Even theologians are taking facts into consideration. Only ignorant bigots now believe in the plenary inspiration of the Bible. The intelligent ministers know that the Holy Scriptures are filled with mistakes, contradictions, and interpolations." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 11. p. 552

"For thousands of years the diseased were treated with incantations, with hideous noises, with drums and gongs. Everything was done to make the visit of the ghost as unpleasant as possible, and they generally succeeded in making things so disagreeable that if the ghost did not leave, the patient did." "The Ghosts," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 286

"He (Comas--Ed.) also declared that the earth was flat. This he proved by many passages from the Bible. Among other reasons for believing the earth to be flat, he brought forward the following: We are told in the NT that Christ shall come again in glory and power, and all the world shall see him. Now if the world is round, how are the people on the other side going to see Christ when he comes?" "The Ghosts," Ingersoll's Works, Vol 1, p. 301

"The church says the earth is flat, but I know that it is round, for I have seen the shadow on the moon, and I have more faith in a shadow than in the church. Ferdinand Magellan

SIN--"Accustom a people to believe that priests, or any other class of men can forgive sins, and you will have sins in abundance." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine, p. 207

SLAVERY--"...it was established by decree of Almighty God,...it is sanctioned in the Bible, in both Testaments, from Genesis to Revelation;...it has existed in all ages; has been found among the people of the highest civilization, and in nations of the highest proficiency in the arts."
Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederacy

"There was no place in the land where the seeker could not find some small budding sign of pity for the slave. No place in all the land but one--the pulpit. It yielded at last; it always does. It fought a strong and stubborn fight, and then did what it always does, joined the procession--at the tail end. Slavery fell. The slavery texts (in the Bible--Ed.) remained; the practice changed; that was all." Mark Twain and the Three R's by Maxwell Geismar, p. 109

SUMMARIES--"I have now gone through the Bible, as a man would go through a wood with an ax on his shoulder, and fell trees. Here they lie; and the priests, if they can, may replant them. They may, perhaps, stick them in the ground, but they will never make them grow." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 151

"I here close the subject on the OT and the New. The evidence I have produced to prove them forgeries, is extracted from the books themselves, and acts, like a two-edged sword, either way. If the evidence be denied, the authenticity of the Scriptures is denied with it, for it is Scripture evidence: and if the evidence be admitted, the authenticity of the books is disproved. The contradictory impossibilities, contained in the OT and the New, put them in the case of a man who swears for and against. Either evidence convicts him of perjury, and equally destroys reputation. Should the Bible and the Testament hereafter fall; it is not that I have done it. I have done no more than extracted the evidence from the confused mass of matters with which it is mixed, and arranged that evidence in a point of light to be clearly seen and easily comprehended; and, having done this, I leave the reader to judge for himself, as I have judged for myself." The Age of Reason, Paine, p. 182

"I here close the subject. I have shown in all the foregoing parts of this work that the Bible...(is an imposition and a forgery--Ed.); and I leave the evidence I have produced in proof of it to be refuted, if any one can do it; and I leave the ideas that are suggested in the conclusion of the work to rest on the mind of the reader (or listener--Ed.); certain as I am that when opinions are free, either in matters of government or religion, truth will finally and powerfully prevail." The Age of Reason, Paine, p. 195

"The old faiths light their candles all about, but burly Truth comes by and puts them out." Lizette Reese (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

LOVE THE SINNER, HATE THE SIN--One of the most common responses Christians make in defense of wayward behavior, especially that exhibited by their own adherents, is that although they hate the sin, they still love the sinner. Unfortunately they fail to note, either intentionally or otherwise, that a significant number of verses clearly show all true Christians are under a biblical mandate to hate both. FIRST, 2 Chron. 19:2 says, "And Jehu, the son of Hanani the seer, went to King Jehoshaphat and said to him, Is it right for you to go to the help of evil-doers, loving the haters of the Lord? because of this, the wrath of the Lord has come on you" (The Bible in Basic English--Ed.). The same verse in the NIV says, "Jehu the seer, the son of Hanani, went out to meet him and said to the king, 'Should you help the sick and love those who hate the Lord? Because of this, the wrath of the Lord is upon you'." SECOND, Psalms 5:5-6 RSV says, "The boastful may not stand before thy eyes, thou hatest all evildoers. Thou destroyest those who speak lies; the Lord abhors bloodthirsty and deceitful men." Notice it says that evildoers, not evil per se, and deceitful men, not deceit, are hated and abhorred by the Lord. People are to be hated, not deeds. THIRD, Psalms 139:21-22 is especially powerful. It says, "Do not I hate them, O

Lord, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee? I hate them with perfect hatred: I count them mine enemies." Again, we see that sinners are to be hated, not just the sin. FOURTH, Hosea 9:15 RSV says, "Every evil of theirs is in Gilgal; there I began to hate them. Because of the wickedness of their deeds I will drive them out of my house. I will love them no more; all their princes are rebels. AND LASTLY, even Jesus says in Luke 14:26, "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." So it is rather difficult to see how Christians are being taught to love the sinner while hating the sin. The evidence would suggest that they are being taught to hate both. We are indebted to Dan Barker of FFRF for bringing these verses to light.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #477 from James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries Continues from Last Month (Part c)

First, let us not lose sight of the original issue that was presented by you. You alleged that John 5:37 ("And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape") is contradictory with the appearances of Jehovah in the OT. I pointed out that within a Trinitarian structure, this is untrue. I demonstrated that the NT writers identified the Lord Jesus as Jehovah God, and provided you with references demonstrating this (that you didn't seem to understand), such as John 12:39-41 in comparison with Isaiah 6:1-10, and Hebrews 1:10-12 in comparison with Psalm 102:25-27. Given that the Father is clearly differentiated from the Son in Scripture, yet both bear one divine name Yahweh (Jehovah), we can see why the early Church understood God in a trinitarian fashion. We can also see why the Son could say that the Jews had never heard the Father's voice nor seen his form, since it was the Son who had appeared and who was seen by the OT believers, not the Father. Therefore, your alleged contradiction was shown to be incorrect.

Editor's Response to Letter #477 (Part c)

You are just not with it my friend. Even your shell game can't save you on this one. What did Jesus say in John 14:9--"he that hath seen me hath seen the Father." So even if it was the Son who appeared in the OT, the Father was still seen. In fact, one of Christianity's beloved messianic prophecies is Isa. 9:6 which says, "...and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. If you will note, Jesus is called "The Father." So if he was seen, the Father was seen. Secondly, upon what basis do you conclude that the OT appearances were those of Jesus and not God the Father? Could you provide chapter and verse for such an unsupportable assertion? Thirdly, John 14:10 says, "I am in the Father, and the Father is in me." So, if Jesus was seen in the OT, then the Father must have been seen simultaneously. Fourthly, in literally scores of instances the NT uses phrases such as "God our Father," "God the Father," "God and Father," "God and Our Father," "God and the Father," and "God, even the Father." Where are we to find such phrases as "God the Son," "the Son is God," or "the Son our God"? Consequently, when the OT says that God is seen, the evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of this referring to the Father rather than the Son. It must have been God the Father who was seen and heard. Fifthly, you fail to note that Jesus prayed to the Father. That means the Father is God, not just one within a Trinity of equals, and Jesus is not God. Otherwise, he could have prayed to himself and there would have been no need for him to pray at all. So, if God were seen and heard in the OT, it had to have been the Father they saw, not Jesus.

You said, "I demonstrated that the NT writers identified the Lord Jesus as Jehovah God, and provided you with references demonstrating this...such as John 12:39-41...Isa. 6:1-10, and Hebrews 1:10-12...Psalm 102:25-27." In the first place, I fail to see how these verses prove anything of the sort. In fact, I have difficulty even seeing how they are relevant to the issue. Secondly, even if they did prove that Jesus were Jehovah God, that would not mean that Jesus was the one seen and heard in the OT. It could have been God the Father. You conveniently ignore the fact that the OT says it was God who was seen and heard; it does not say Jesus. Again, why do you assume it was God the Son rather than God the Father? You state that "the Father is clearly differentiated from the Son in Scripture" but ignore the fact that the OT says it was God who was seen without reference to the Father or the Son.

Letter #477 Continues (Part d)

Your defense of your error was to attack the doctrine of the Trinity, which in and of itself should be viewed as a "delaying tactic" rather than an actual answer for your failure to prove a contradiction. In your recent attempt to continue this attack, your main point has been to say that logically the Trinity cannot affirm the existence of three persons within one being. You do not make any attempt to deal with the definitions of being and person, though seemingly rejecting the differences between the two that would be familiar to anyone who has studied the doctrine to any depth. Your argument goes like this: If A is B, and C is B, then A is C. If the Son is God, and the Father is God, then the Father is the Son. You seem to recognize that your argument cannot be maintained if the basic teaching of the Trinity--that is, that being and person are not synonymous--must be done away with. Obviously, if the distinction between being and person is maintained, your argument becomes false on the face of it. "Robert is human. John is human. Therefore, Robert is John." The argument is obviously false, but it is your argument.

Editor's Response to Letter #477 (Part d)

What a muddle! You say that I don't deal with the definitions of being and person and seemingly reject the differences between the two. To begin with, you are the one who keeps using these terms, so you are obligated to provide definitions of "being" and "person" and a distinction between the two. So far, I have seen neither. Without a maze of metaphysical doubletalk, what are the differences? You say that they would be familiar to anyone who has studied the doctrine to any depth when, in fact, there are no differences and the doctrine has no depth, only obfuscation. "Being" and "person" have no distinction and are merely elements of a ruse employed by apologists. Because they can come up with two different words, they, therefore, claim they have two different entities. Secondly, your syllogism has no relevance to my argument, so don't build a strawman. My argument is that if Robert is a human and John is a human, then how could human be a third being. Human is a quality; it is not a being per se. If Jesus is God and the Father is God, then how can God be a being. It must be a quality such as Godhood or Godhead. But it is not a separate being per se. As I have said before, Christians are not tritheists as Muslims and Jews allege. They are quartheists. The Father is God and a separate being with its own identity. Jesus is God and a separate being with his own identity. The Holy Ghost is God and a separate being with his own identity. And God is a separate being with his own identity. Christians call this three persons within one being but fail to admit that one of the beings is separate from the other three beings. Thus, there are not 3 persons within one being but 3 separate beings distinct from a fourth being which has a separate and distinct identity. On the other hand, whenever expediency dictates, Christians dissolve the beingness or personhood of God and turn him into nothing more than a general term, a rubric, into which the other 3 beings are absorbed, much like the words "mankind" or "dogkind" and use words like "Godhead" or "Godhood." Your argument is that Robert is a separate and distinct human; John is a separate and distinct human; therefore, "human" is a separate and distinct being.

Letter #477 Continues (Part e)

Your attempt to deny the difference of being and person falls far short of accomplishing its goal. I had said, "Any person who would even glance at (for example) the Athanasian Creed would know that the doctrine differentiates between the terms "being" and "person." You responded, "No it doesn't. It merely says there is a difference. It doesn't prove it or even attempt to do so. It doesn't define it. It doesn't even quote scripture to prove it or show where scripture makes such a distinction." I hope you just forgot to proof read this section, because responding to my statement that the creed differentiates between being and person by saying, "no it doesn't it just says there is a difference" is rather humorous. Be that as it may, the doctrine does teach a difference between being and person, and you need to admit that your sole defense against the doctrine is to deny this distinction. Furthermore, you must admit that the doctrine, as it is stated historically by the Christian faith, does answer your supposed objection to John 5:37, since the differentiation of the Father and the Son is a part of the doctrine, no matter how much you may object against it.

Editor's Response to Letter #477 (Part e)

James, your position continues to deteriorate apace. If there is anyone who needs to read something ahead of time it is yourself. Having reread after many years the copy of the Athanasian Creed which lies in front of me, I am yet to find anything that supports your comments or diminishes mine. First, would you please tell me where the Creed differentiates between the words "being" and "person." Where does it specifically define the difference or prove one exists and where does it cite scripture for corroboration? You say, "the doctrine does teach a difference between being and person" without so much as quoting any part of it. Quotes from the Creed are noticeably absent from your diatribe for reasons that are obvious to anyone who takes the time to read the Creed. The word "Being" is nowhere to be found therein. I have read my copy of the Creed several times and am yet to see the word "Being." You say that, "Any person who would even glance at (for example) the Athanasian creed would know that the doctrine differentiates between the terms "being" and "person." One can only conclude that you did not even glance at it. Or do you have another version? Your predecessors conjured up these two words in order to escape the inevitable conclusion and have promulgated them ever since. The only humorous aspect relative to this topic lies in the dismal explanation you managed to throw together. Second, you say that my "sole defense against the doctrine is to deny this distinction." Correction! Your sole support of this absurd concept lies in maintenance of a distinction which has been formulated for defensive purposes only. Third, how the doctrine has been presented historically by the Christian faith is of no importance when compared to the fact that it will not withstand rational analysis and is biblically unsupportable. Moreover, your defense to the problem presented by John 5:37 is inadequate for the reasons mentioned earlier. (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #481 from JS of York, Pennsylvania

Dear Sir: Reading a letter in my local newspaper, aroused my curiosity about your publication. I was wondering if you could send me information on your publication and possibly a free copy. I am constantly bombarded by religious dogma, none of which I believe. Perhaps your publication could arm me with some highly intelligent arguments opposed to the trash I receive on a weekly basis. There is no consideration by them of any other culture's myths and religions. I am told that Christianity is the "true" religion and that the Bible is the true "word of God." What Nonsense!!

Editor's Response to Letter #481

Dear JS. We'd be glad to send you a complimentary copy of BE and we are quite confident that if you were to purchase all of the back issues of BE you would be well equipped to deal with Christian bombardments, providing you are able to employ the most effective piece of information at the appropriate time and are well-versed in the Bible itself.

Letter #482 from Louise Baskett, 9000 Wood Sorrel Ct. Richmond, Virginia 23229

Dear Dennis. As a delegate to the First Amendment Congress I made a motion: Be it resolved that evolution be taught in all public schools in their science classes. I was shouted down by resounding NO's throughout the entire auditorium. I was particularly surprised by this reaction because these delegates were well educated, intelligent people. I am frankly discouraged these days because I feel that people are retreating from scientific facts back to the comfort of believing a literal interpretation of the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #482

Dear Louise. Your analysis is not without merit. For many years the United States has been experiencing a steady drift toward superstition and anti-intellectualism. The recent avalanche of New Age phantasia is only one manifestation of our downhill slide. Even colleges and universities appear to be turning out far more narrowly-focused technicians and finely tuned specialists for the productive wheels than broadly-based intellectuals.

Letter #483 from HB of Alexandria, Virginia

[HB is responding to Letter #459--ED.]. Don't let the Christians get you down Anonymous. They are more to be pitied because they need: (1) A church to tell them what is right and wrong. (2) A book of fable to support their faith. (3) Belief in miracles and magic. (4) And prayer and Bible reading in school because these are not provided at home....

Letter #484 from KH of Sacramento, California

Dear Dennis. Just a quick note to congratulate you on Issue #106--one of the best ever! The new format is a great improvement, and I truly enjoyed the excellent, incisive letters from John George and John Sikos. I am waiting to see how Rev. James White is going to wiggle out from under the Sikos criticism. Should be fun.... Also, just a bit of constructive carping, if you don't mind. You still have a small problem with punctuation. For example, in the "Reviews" section, Issue #106, page 3, Col. 2, the 2nd and 3rd full sentences (beginning with the words "First" and "Second")--both sentences are interrogatives, so they should have ended with question marks. On the other hand, see page 4, Col. 2, paragraph 4, the first sentence. This one is a flat statement, and the question mark is unwarranted. As a rule, if a state-of-being verb or auxiliary verb precedes the subject in a formal sentence, put a question mark at the end. (But there are exceptions, English is really an infuriating language). This is a quibble, of course. But such little glitches can leave you open to ridicule from small-minded fundamentalists. You already know how they clutch at straws. Be careful Dennis!....

Editor's Response to Letter #484

Dear KN. I reread the issue and your punctuation alterations are accurate. Proofreading your own material is not one of the easiest tasks in the world.

QUOTATIONS

TEXTUAL PERVERSION--"The purpose for which the passage is quoted, and the passage itself, are as remote from each other, as nothing from something. But the case is, that people have been so long in the habit of reading the books, called the Bible and the Testament, with their eyes shut, and their senses locked up, that the most stupid inconsistencies have passed on them for truth, and imposition for prophecy. The all-wise Creator has been dishonoured by being made the author of fable, and the human mind degraded by believing it... the name of the person of whom the passage speaks is not given, and we are left in the dark respecting him. It is this defect in the history that bigotry and imposition have laid hold of, to call it prophecy." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. 241

"Hundreds and hundreds of commentators have obscured and darkened the meaning of the plainest texts, spiritualized dates, names, numbers and even genealogies. They have degraded the poetic, changed parables to history, and imagery to stupid and impossible facts. They have wrestled with rhapsody and prophecy, with visions and dreams, with illusions and delusions, with myths and miracles, with the blunders of ignorance, the ravings of insanity and the ecstasy of hysterics. Millions of priests and preachers have added to the mysteries of the inspired book by explanation, by showing the wisdom of foolishness, the foolishness of wisdom, the mercy of cruelty and the probability of the impossible." "Superstition," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 4, p. 334-35

"Not versions, but perversions" St. Jerome

"The Bible is a book that has been read more and examined less than any book that ever existed." The Theological Works of Thomas Paine. 179

"Every phrase and circumstance are marked with the barbarous hand of superstitious torture, and forced into meanings it was impossible they could have. The head of every chapter, and the top of every page, are blazoned with the names of Christ and the Church, that the unwary reader might suck in the error before he began to read." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 131

"...to argue with a man who has renounced his reason is like giving medicine to the dead." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 127

"Nearly all of the mistranslations have been made to help out the text. It would be much worse, much more contradictory had it been correctly translated. Nearly all of the mistakes...have been made for the purpose of harmony." Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 7, p. 459

"Nothing can exceed the mendacity of the religious press. I have had some little experience with political editors, and am forced to say, that until I read the religious papers, I did not know what malicious and slimy falsehoods could be constricted from ordinary words. The ingenuity with which the real and apparent meaning can be tortured out of language, is simply amazing. The average religious editor is intolerant and insolent...and always accounts for the brave and generous actions of unbelievers, by low, base and unworthy motives." "The Ghosts," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1, p. 260

THEOLOGY--"The study of theology as it stands in Christian churches, is the study of nothing; it is founded on nothing; it rests on no principles; it proceeds by no authorities; it has no data; it can demonstrate nothing; and admits of no conclusion." The Age of Reason, Paine, p. 191

"Follow theological 'reasons' far enough and it always leads to conclusions that are contrary to reason." Anonymous

TRINITY--"...the Pythagorean, as well as the Platonic philosophers, probably concurred in the fabrication of the Christian Trinity." The Life and Works of John Adams, by Charles Francis Adams, Vol. 10, p. 84

"This revelation (human understanding as given to us by God--Ed.) has made it certain that two and one make three, and that one is not three nor can three be one.... Miracles or prophecies might frighten us out of our wits; might scare us to death; might induce us to lie, to say that we believe that two and two make five. But we should not believe it. We should know the contrary.

Had you and I been forty days with Moses on Mount Sinai, and been admitted to behold the divine..., and there told that one was three and three one, we might not have had courage to deny it, but we could not have believed it.

The thunders, and lightnings, and earthquakes, and the transcendent splendors and glories might have overwhelmed us with terror and amazement, but we could not have believed the doctrine." The Life and Works of John Adams By Charles Adams, Vol. 10, p. 66-67

"...Jesus' doctrine of the cosmogony of the world is very clearly laid down in the first three verses of the 1st chapter of John, in these words. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. He was in the beginning with God. All things came into being by Him, and apart from Him nothing came into being...." Which truly translated means, 'In the beginning God existed, and reason (or mind) was with God, and that mind was God. This was in the beginning with God. All things were created by it, and without it was made not one thing which was made.' Yet this text, so plainly declaring the doctrine of Jesus, that the world was created by the supreme, intelligence being, has been perverted by modern Christians to build up a second person of their tritheism, by a mistranslation of the word.... One of its legitimate meanings, indeed, is 'a word.' But in that sense it makes an unmeaning jargon; while the other meaning, 'reason,' equally legitimate, explains rationally the eternal pre-existence of God, and his creation of the world. Knowing how incomprehensible it was that 'a word,' the mere action or articulation of the organs of speech could create a world, they undertook to make of this articulation a second pre-existing being, and ascribe to him, and not to God, the creation of the universe....the greatest enemies to the doctrines of Jesus are those, calling themselves the expositors of them, who have perverted them for the structure of a system of fancy absolutely incomprehensible, and without any foundation in his genuine words." Jefferson's Works, by H.A. Washington, Vol. 7, p. 283-84

WOMEN--"The religious superstitions of women perpetuate their bondage more than all other adverse influences." Elizabeth Cady Stanton

"The Bible and the Church have been the greatest stumbling-blocks in the way of women's emancipation." Free Thought Magazine, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Vol 14, p. 1, (Sept. 1896)

"The whole tone of Church teaching in regard to women is, to the last degree, contemptuous and degrading." Elizabeth Cady Stanton

"It will yet be the proud boast of women that they never contributed a line to the Bible." George W. Foote World's End--"Christ never wrote a solitary word of the NT--not one word.... He never told anybody to write a word.... Is it not strange that he gave no orders to have his words preserved--words upon which hung the salvation of a world?.... Why was nothing written? I will tell you. In my judgment they expected the end of the world in a few days." "What Must We Do To Be Saved?" Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 1. p. 455

That concludes 9 commentaries that were wholly devoted to notable quotes from notable people which have been gleaned by BE from a myriad of sources over the last 15 years. Many others are in our repertoire but were not included because they are all contained somewhere within past issues.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #477 from James White Continues from Last Month (Part f)

So, all that is left for me to do is demonstrate that the distinction of being and person is one that is fundamental and logically coherent. We utilize this very distinction every day. We recognize that all things that exist have being. A rock has the being of a rock. A dog has the being of a dog. A human we call a "human being." Yet, we do not think of a rock as personal--we know it has no feelings, no will, no ability to view itself as one of a community of rocks. In the same way, while we may think our dog has "personality," we know that it is not personal in the way that we are (certainly a few radical animal-rights activists might disagree). A dog does not view itself, for example, as but one of the community of "dog-kind" nor do we find any dogs working for the betterment of "dog-kind." Human beings, however, are personal. We have wills, emotion, and recognize our existence within mankind.

Editor's Response to Letter #477 (Part f)

In the first place, James, you have made a distinction based on variances in intellect. Because animals are not capable of higher thought, are we to believe they are beings without personalities? If that were true, then everyone with very low IQ's would rank no higher than the animals because they, too, would not recognize their "existence within mankind" and would not be working for the betterment of mankind. By your definition they would be beings without personalities. Secondly, you constantly talk about the words, "Being" and "Person," without ever defining them. For you to say that dogs don't have wills or emotions is ridiculous. I had a couple of emotional dogs that had wills varying greatly in intensity and whose different reactions to the same situation were predictable. Some dogs are very friendly while others are anything but. People with pet cats and chimpanzees can provide similar testimony. What do you mean by person, personal, or having a personality? Moreover, in a prior issue I asked you for a distinction between biblical "beings" and "persons," both of which are alive, and you gave me a distinction between animals and rocks which have no life whatever.

Letter #477 Continues (Part g)

The Bible teaches that man is created in the image and likeness of God. God has being, of course, and God is personal, for He speaks, wills, acts, and reveals Himself to His creature, man. God has being, and the Bible clearly teaches us that there are three Persons, the Father, the Son, and the Spirit, who share that being. The Bible differentiates between the Father and the Son and the Spirit--they are never said to be the same person. We see the Father speaking to the Son and the Son speaking to the Father, as well as the Father and the Son sending the Spirit. Yet, the Bible describes each as God, attributing to them the activities, names, titles, and prerogatives of deity. Therefore we have the Bible teaching that there is but one God (Isaiah 43:10), yet three Persons who are described as God. Here is the distinction you deny exists, Mr. McKinsey.

So, in closing, you may deny the distinction all you wish, and on that basis deny the Trinity. Oneness Pentecostals do the same. But the fact remains that your original attack upon John 5:37 is based upon your own rejection of the Biblical doctrine of the Trinity. You assume what you wish to prove, and this is clearly a circular argument.

Editor's Response to Letter #477 (Part g)

James, you have come full circle. All you are doing now is rehashing the tired old Christian refrain as if you never heard a thing I have said about the Trinity over the years. First, you say that, "the Bible clearly teaches us that there are three Persons, the Father, the Son, and the Spirit." There is nothing clear about it. Would you please cite chapter and verse to show me where the Bible ever calls the Father or the Spirit a "person" by name. Where are you getting this? You say they are "never said to be the same person" when they are never called a person, period. Anytime you send me a letter from now on, I want to see documentation, not pontification. Otherwise, don't bother. Second, like most apologists, you surreptitiously slip in metaphysical comments like "God has being, and the Bible clearly teaches us that there are three Persons...who share that being." Is this the God that "is personal, for He speaks, wills, acts, and reveals Himself" or is this the God known as the Godhead, the Godhood, the general term encompassing the Trinity? If it is the former, then how on earth do three beings exist within a fourth being all of whom are separate from one another? If it is the latter, then how could it speak, act, and have a will to begin with? Third, you say, "we have the Bible teaching that there is but one God, yet three Persons who are described as God." If each of these persons is God, then you have 3 gods within God and that means you have 4 gods. Fourth, failure lies not in my denial of your distinctions but in your failure, which is encompassed in a distinct aura of intentional avoidance, to adequately define what you are even talking about. Fifth, if there is anyone who assumes what they wish to prove, you are that person. You assume a lot, prove little, preach to excess, and don't even cite the Bible or one of the most well-known creeds in Christendom, the Athanasian, for support. As is true with nearly all Christian apologists, precision, clear-cut distinctions, and conciseness are not your forte. Like typical politicians, you and other Christian spokesmen have learned over the centuries that if you keep it nebulous, avoid specifics, employ a lot of grandiloquent rhetoric, and rely on glittering generalities and metaphysical doubletalk at crucial moments, you attract more and alienate less. As greater precision is employed, more conceptions and theories are removed as options and more people drift away dissatisfied.

Incidentally, I can't help but notice that you cited the Athanasian creed as your source when the very first sentence says, "Whosoever earnestly desires to be saved must above all hold the Catholic Faith. Which Faith unless every one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish in eternity" And approximately 30% of the way through we find a reference to the Catholic Religion. As a protestant, aren't you worried if not panicked? And since you no doubt believe in the Nicene Creed as do nearly all Christians, how do you reconcile your protestantism with the line near the end that says, "And I believe one Catholic and Apostolic Church." And while we are at it, you might confront the line in the Apostles creed, which you no doubt accept, that says, "I believe in the Holy Ghost; the holy catholic church...." Apparently it is not just the Bible that is ensnared in contradictions.

Letter #477 Concludes (Part h)

Now, in the July, 1991 issue of BE, you addressed my comments regarding the inclusion of letters from Jeff Frankel and John Sikos in the December, 1990 issue. Both of these letters contained nothing but personal ad hominem attacks upon me--they did not have anything to do with "proving" anything about the Bible's supposed fallibility. In responding to my questions about why you included these letters, you wrote, "For you to talk about character assassination is rather incongruous, James, when your letters are nearly always liberally sprinkled with pejoratives and disparaging personal attacks. You repeatedly denounce ad hominem comments while remaining one of their staunchest proponents." While I claim no perfection for myself, Mr. McKinsey, I would like to challenge you publicly to provide from any of my letters to you anything even remotely similar to the following comments culled from Mr. Frankel's and Mr. Sikos' letters as they appear in the 12/90 issue of BE: (a listing follows--ED.). You see, Mr. McKinsey, you allege that my letters contain "pejoratives" and "personal attacks." You seem to confuse direct rebuttals of error on your part, including the exposure of ignorance, with pejoratives and personal attacks, as we see in the quotations from Frankel and Sikos. Quite simply, Mr. McKinsey, the letters were published for no purpose other than to give vent to their hatred with reference to myself. The letters served no purpose for BE. I believe this is plain for anyone to see.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #477 (Part h)

Don't try to shift the focus to the letters from others, James. We are talking about correspondence between you and me. And, as far as that correspondence is concerned, anyone who has read what has transpired between us over the years knows that you have leveled far more pejoratives and personal attacks against me than vice versa. In this letter, alone, you accuse me of being unfamiliar with the issues and showing ignorance. In an accompanying letter, which you do not want published in BE, you said I was not well suited to review one of your pamphlets, that I was unfamiliar with basic presuppositional apologetics, that I show a lack of understanding of the Trinity, and that I am unfamiliar with the issues. To me those are personal attacks on my knowledge and capabilities, the kinds of attacks that I have tried to avoid over the years. Lately, however, I've begun to reevaluate that position. I am not responsible for what others say nor do I intend to speak for those who are quite capable of answering your charges. My original comments referred to what you had to say about me compared to what I said about you. What others say about you is between you and them.

Letter #485 from BK of Victoria, British Columbia in Canada (Part a)

(Apparently someone gave BK copies of our pamphlets and he decided to send us the following extensive amateurish refutation--ED.)

Dear Atheists. I write this to reprove and correct and to answer your questions under the title of a pamphlet entitled: "JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER?" The Bible states: "The natural man does not understand the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them." You write as a natural man.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part a)

Dear BK. After having read your letter which is to follow, I can only repeat what I told one of our critics many moons ago. Before you embark upon a program to "correct" BE, read what knowledgeable apologists in the field of biblical contradictions have to say. Instead of putting your toe into the water to test the temperature, you jumped headfirst into a boiling kettle with some of the most inane defenses I have ever encountered. Secondly, your final comment should have been, "You write naturally as a rational man." Preceded by a presentation of the problem and followed by our critique, each of your points will now be stated.

Letter #485 Continues (Part b)

[Point #1 on BE's Pamphlet -- While on the Cross Jesus said, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me" (Mark 15:34). How could Jesus be our savior when he couldn't even save himself--ED.]

You ask: "How could Jesus be our Savior when He couldn't even save Himself?" Jesus could have saved Himself, but if He did there would be no hope for you or I... He was forsaken so that we might be accepted.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part b)

My friend, you completely ignored the question posed and what the man said. You have an image of someone dying for your salvation and nothing he says seems to affect your predetermined notions. Those aren't the words of someone dying for you or anyone else. Those are the words of someone who can think of a hundred places he would rather be. Are we going to go by what he actually said or what you "believe" he is doing? What would he have to do to convince you he intensely dislikes the chain of events in which he is currently embroiled? What do you want him to say, "Get me out of here for Christ's sake!" What are you looking for?

Letter #485 Continues (Part c)

[Point #2 on BE's Pamphlet -- Jesus said, "whoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire" (Matt. 5:22). Yet, he himself did so repeatedly as Matt. 23:17, 19 and Luke 11:40 and 12:20 show. Shouldn't he be in danger of hell too?--ED.]

The context of Matt. 5:22 indicates it is calling a brother a fool which is wrong. Jesus was calling the self-righteous, the hypocrites and the wicked, fools; such as: "The fool has said in his heart there is no God (Psalm 14:1) also (Matt. 15:15-17). The believer (brother) is no fool....

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part c)

Jesus said, "whoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire." He did not say, "whoever shall say, Thou fool, to his brother is in danger of hell fire." Your attempt to prove that it was permissible for Jesus to call people fools who were not brothers isn't scripturally sound. Where is that in Matt. 5:22? Moreover, where does the Bible say that those who are self-righteous, hypocritical, and wicked are not your brothers? You need to restudy Christian theology, my friend. If those who are self-righteous, hypocritical, and wicked are not your brothers, then you don't have any brothers, because everyone exhibits these qualities according to verses such as Romans 3:23 which says, "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." And where does it say that only believers are your brothers? Upon what textual basis are you making a distinction between the two? (TO BE CONTINUED)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #486 from AWL of Terre Haute, Indiana

Dear Dennis. When I read the Bible a long time ago, I recall reading a verse or verses which, in effect, say, "You can lie and cheat if it further's the Lord's work." Have you written on this? If so, in which 'Errancy'?

Editor's Response to Letter #486

Dear AWL. I think you are referring to Paul's comment in Rom. 3:7 RSV in which he says, "But if through my falsehood God's truthfulness abounds to his glory, why am I still being condemned as a sinner?" I have read this verse scores of times and after consulting many apologetic rationalizations I keep returning to the same conclusion. It means what it says and it says what it means. Or perhaps you are referring to Paul's comment in 1 Cor. 10:23 to the effect that, "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not."

Letter #487 from LFB of Richmond, Virginia

Dear Dennis. The advice you gave to one of your readers I realized also applied to me. Although it is important to read criticisms of the Bible by freethinking biblical scholars, it is particularly important for us to read and know the Bible first hand. So, I have acquired THE REVISED STANDARD VERSION OF THE OXFORD ANNOTATED BIBLE WITH THE APOCRYPHA--AN ECUMENICAL STUDY BIBLE COMPLETELY REVISED AND ENLARGED.... Appearing in the annotation before Genesis 1, I found this amazing statement: "The primeval history reflects a 'prehistorical' or mythical view of the movement from creation to the return of chaos in the catastrophic flood and the new beginning afterwards...." The mythical view also included the Adam and Eve story and the fall into sin. The Judeo-Christian religion is premised upon sin, redemption and salvation. Doesn't that alone cause both the OT and the NT to fall apart? I am anxious to know your reaction to this surprising statement found in the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #487

Dear LFB. Ecumenical Bibles are generally produced by the liberal wing of Christianity and reflect a more pragmatic approach to the clash between Christianity and the Bible on one side and science and reason on the other. Liberals will often admit that many biblical miracles and stories are little more than myth and folklore which is not surprising. What is surprising is their belief in such equally ridiculous myths as the Resurrection, the Ascension, and Heaven. Their theology is as inconsistent as the fundamentalists, although they are often incapable of realizing that fact. They reject sticks turning into snakes and a woman springing from a man's rib, but they accept a man rising from the dead and some of the miracles performed by Jesus. They reject creationism and accept evolution, while contending that man has a soul and his ancient ancestors do not. They don't believe the earth ever stood still or Lot's wife turned into a pillar of salt but they believe in a Day of Judgment and eternal happiness in Heaven. They firmly believe that the Bible is the word of a perfect being, but they admit that it has many contradictions, errors, and falsehoods. While accepting Jesus as the perfect and divine savior, who said in John 14:4 that only those who accept him can be saved, they contend that people in other religions can be saved too. Liberals are a hard group to corral because they are so diverse in their biblical views and so vague and inconsistent in their theology. They try very hard to reconcile the findings of science and rationality with the superstition of religion in general and the Bible in particular. To the very marrow of their being they want so much to keep the false sense of security provided by religion, while adopting the obvious findings of science and logic. But as one would expect, they only end up with a schizoid philosophy that is little more than a mish-mash of inconsistencies, vagueries, generalities, and metaphysical ambiguities. They have their feet firmly planted in the quicksand of both camps, while astride the vertical razor blade of trying to serve two masters at once, two masters that detest one another. The National Council of Churches is a prime example of an organization composed of liberal Christian denominations. BE does not usually discuss this wing of Christianity because the number of roads down which people can travel once having rejected the inerrancy of the Bible are too numerous to count, too vague to define, too vacillating to anchor and too individualized to warrant attention. Talk about trying to nail jello to the wall! There are almost as many theologies as there are proponents.

FORGERIES--One of the more intriguing extrabiblical subjects has to do with the number of forgeries that are attributed by noted scholars to various translations of the Bible. Clearly there has been a clash among scholars throughout the ages over the correct translations of various verses which many deem to be forgeries. Some of the most notable examples are the following. FIRST, Ex. 6:3 says, "And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them." As several scholars have noted, this translation is flawed. Every time the word "Lord" or "Lord God" appears in the first 14 chapters of Genesis, it came from the word "Jehovah." Translators changed Yahweh (Jehovah) into "the Lord" or "the Lord God" 6,000 times in order to harmonize the entire Hebrew Bible with verse 3. God is referred to as Jehovah by Abraham in Gen. 13:4, by Isaac in Gen. 26:22, by Jacob in Gen. 28:46, by Moses in Ex. 3:15, Gen. 12:1 and Gen. 15:7. Using "the Lord" or "the Lord God" is wrong because it is not a name at all but a form of address. SECOND, Ex. 19:3 says, "Moses went up unto God and the Lord called unto him...." According to some scholars the text clearly says "the gods," not god, and exhibits a distinct affinity to polytheism. THIRD, Second Sam. 21:19 says, "there was again a battle in Gob with the Philistines, where Elhanan the son of Jaare-oregim, a Bethlehemite, slew the brother of Goliath the Gittite...." "The brother of" is not in the original Hebrew. It was artificially created to coincide with 1 Chronicles 20:5 which says, "Elhanan the son of Jair slew Lahmi the brother of Goliath the Gittite...." If "the brother of" had not been inserted it would say Goliath was killed by Elhanan, not David. Second Samuel 21:19 in the RSV is much more honest and says, "...Elhanan the son of Jaare-oregim, the Bethlehemite, slew Goliath the Gittite...." FOURTH, Jer. 23:6 is supposedly a reference to Jesus and says, "In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." This is a dishonest translation of the original Hebrew. As the RSV shows, this should have been translated as: "The Lord is our righteousness." Four points need to be made in this regard. (a) Leaving out the "is" imputes both lordship and righteousness to Jesus rather than God. It imputes divinity to the Messiah. (b) There are no indications of Jesus being called "The Lord our Righteousness" except by those seeking to fulfill the prophecy. (c) The passage does not present an argument for the divinity of Jesus. The Messiah was never called "Jehovah" in the OT. (d) One scholar, English, says this should have been translated from the Hebrew as, "the Eternal shall call him, Our Righteousness." In other words, he is not the Lord, the Eternal. FIFTH, Acts 13:33 says, "...he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." The Septuagint and the Hebrew both say this should be the first psalm." SIXTH, Matt. 28:16-20 says, "...Jesus came and spoke to them, saying, All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world, amen." The Catholic Encyclopedia states the Matthew formula for baptism is a forgery. The last 5 verses of Matthew are forgeries. Most church leaders admit as much. Why, because, after Matthew has Christ declare "I am not sent except to the lost sheep of the House of Israel" would he make a fool of Christ by having him say, "Go ye and teach all nations." Would he have Christ say the world would come to an end before his disciples could reach the cities of Israel and then have him contradict himself by saying, "I am with you always even to the end of the world." Also, if Jesus had broadened his mission to include Gentiles, all would have known. It would not have been necessary for Peter to have a vision to find it out in Acts 10:34-35 which says, "Then Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that fears him, and works righteousness, is accepted with him." SEVENTH, one of the most important of all alleged forgeries pertains to the last 12 verses of the Book of Mark. There is no record in any of the early manuscripts of these verses. They simply "appeared" later. They are pure forgeries according to many and were made to bolster Paul's preaching that Christ was for the heathen instead of the Jews. EIGHTH, Luke 2:33 says, "And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him." This verse is a forgery because the original says, "his father and his mother." The RSV which says, "his father" has translated the verse correctly. This verse had to be forged; otherwise, Joseph would be the real father of Jesus and not God. NINTH, Luke 2:43 says, "...and Joseph and his mother knew not of it." This is forged because the original says, "his parents" did not know it. The RSV also says "his parents" and is correct. Jesus had a real human father. TENTH, Luke 22:43-44 says, "And there appeared an angel to him from heaven strengthening him. And being in agony he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." Nearly all scholars admit these two verses are forgeries. They are in the KJV but were left out of the RSV. Whatever the character of this so-called bloody sweat, it should be noted that Matthew who was an apostle; Mark, who claimed to be an interpreter of Peter's who was with Jesus at this time; and John who was an apostle and was present, do not refer to the bloody sweat. Luke, who was neither an eyewitness nor an apostle, is the only gospel writer who mentions it. ELEVENTH, John 8:1-11 refers to the woman who was caught in adultery and was excused by Jesus who wrote on the ground and suggested those who are sinless cast the first stone. These verses are forgeries according to many. They are late interpolations and do not appear in the oldest and most reliable manuscripts. Yet, this is popularly regarded as one of the most admirable acts in Jesus' ministry. Verse 11, "Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more" is doubted by nearly all scholars. TWELFTH, Mark 3:21 says, "And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He is beside himself." Many scholars consider this verse to be a forgery. The RSV shows "his friends" should have been translated as "his family." It is of the greatest significance that his own family considered him to be out of his mind. THIRTEENTH, 1 John 5:7-8 says, "For these are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one." Prior to the 15th century these verses were not in any of the copies of 1 John and in none of the Greek copies. Gibbon notes that this verse is not found in any of the extant authentic manuscripts which number over 80. Verse 7 is found in only 2 Greek manuscripts, one of the 15th and the other of the 16th century. About 400 other Greek codices from the 4th century down to the 14th ignore it. All manuscripts before Jerome that are of the old Latin version lack it. In the oldest copies of the Vulgate it is also absent. Gibbon said there is universal silence about it by orthodox fathers, ancient versions and authentic manuscripts. Remove these verses and the forged verse in Matt. 28:19 and there is not one direct word of the Trinity in the Bible. Nowhere does it say Jesus and God are to be held as One and the same Being. Many other examples of verses that are alleged to be forgeries are available but too much technical detail is required for our purposes.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #485 Continues from Last Month (Part d)

[Point #4 on BE's Pamphlet -- Isn't Jesus a false prophet since he wrongly predicted in Matt. 12:40 that he would be buried 3 days and 3 nights as Jonah was in the whale 3 days and 3 nights? Friday afternoon to early Sunday morning is only 1 1/2 days--ED.]

No! Jesus wasn't a false prophet because the religious world chose what is called good Friday as the crucifixion day. He was three days and three nights in the grave; being crucified on the wednesday.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part d)

You need to reread your book, BK. The religious world did not choose Good Friday; the Bible did. Mark 15:42 clearly states that Jesus was killed on the day before the sabbath and that is Friday, the day of preparation. Where are you getting this Wednesday crucifixion nonsense? I think you have been reading too much literature from the World Wide Church of God. Many biblicists, such as Armstrong, admit that this problem is insurmountable unless the Crucifixion can somehow be shifted from Friday to Wednesday. They are correct in conceding a problem; they are incorrect in providing a solution.

[Point #5 on BE's Pamphlet -- Another prophecy by Jesus in John 13:38 ("The cock shall not crow, till thou, Peter, have denied me 3 times") is false because Mark 14:66-68 shows the cock actually crowed after the first denial, not the third--ED.]

If you read Mark 14:67-72 you will get the proper understanding of what Jesus said regarding the cock crowing: "And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the words that Jesus said unto him, before the cock crows twice you will deny me thrice." The cock therefore crowed after Peter's first denial and a second time after his third denial thus proving the word of Jesus to be true.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part e)

Don't try to change the prophecy, my friend. Operating on the basis of expediency, you conveniently chose the prophecy in Mark 14:30 that the cock would not crow twice until Peter had denied Jesus 3 times. But that is not the prophecy that is to be found in the Book of John which says that there would be no crowing of the cock whatever until after the third denial. Just compare what is supposed to occur according to John 13:38 and what actually occurs in Mark 14:66-72 and you'll see the mess.

Letter #485 Continues (Part f)

[Point #6 in BE's Pamphlet -- How could Jesus be our model of sinless perfection when he denies his moral perfection in Matt. 19:17 where he says, "Why call thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God"--ED.] Jesus did not deny He was sinless in Matt. 19:17. By his statement He was affirming that He was God come in the flesh.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part f)

In all candor, BK, your answer is a muddle. What are you trying to say? Perhaps you meant to say "a sinner" instead of "sinless, which would run directly contrary to numerous biblical verses affirming the moral rectitude of Jesus. Or perhaps you meant to say that he was reasserting his moral rectitude which would prove he was god. But what did he say? He said, "why call thou me good? there is none good but one." How does that prove he is God? If anything, it proves the opposite. I must say, your logic is anything but coherent. By saying he is not good, he is proving he is not God. You need to revisit the drawing board on this one.

Letter #485 Continues (Part g)

[Point #7 in BE's Pamphlet -- In 1 Cor. 1:17 ("For christ sent me {Paul--ED.} not to baptize, but to preach the gospel") Paul said Jesus was wrong when he said in Matt. 28:19, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them...." So how could Jesus be the fountain of wisdom?]

Paul's God given mission was to preach the gospel, others with him baptized those that believed. Paul chose this way so that the people could not say, "I was baptized in the name of Paul" (1 Cor. 1:15).

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part g)

Would you be so kind as to cite chapter and verse for your assertion that Paul, unlike others, was given a specific mission by Jesus that did not include baptizing people? Paul may have given himself that mission but Jesus did not. In Matt. 28:19 Jesus told all of his followers to go into all the world and baptize. Where did he ever say that Paul was to be an exception? Again, I return to my original question. In 1 Cor. 1:17 Paul said that Jesus sent him not to baptize but to preach. Where did Jesus say this? Please cite chapter and verse. If you cannot provide chapter and verse, then Paul is a liar. If you can provide chapter and verse, then Jesus contradicted his Great Commission, because that would mean he did not tell all of his followers after all.

Letter #485 Continues (Part h)

[Point #8 in BE's Pamphlet -- How could Jesus, whom the NT repeatedly refers to as the son of man, be our savior when this is clearly forestalled by Psalm 146:3 ("Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help") and Job 25:6 ("How much less man, that is a worm? and the son of man, which is a worm")?]

In the OT references which you present, it is speaking of the natural man as being the son of man. In the NT, after the birth of Jesus the words 'Son of man' has reference to Jesus being born a man of David's lineage. He is also called the son of David with reference to His humanity. As to His divinity Jesus is referred to as the Son of God. (You will not understand this until you are born again, of God's Spirit).

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part h)

Correction! You mean I won't be able to believe it until I am as indoctrinated as you are. To begin with, you assume the very point in dispute. How do you know the OT text is referring to the "natural man"? Where does it say that? Second, the lineage to which the phrase applies is irrelevant. How does that bear on the issue? The fact is that Jesus was called the "son of man" in the NT and the OT denounces the son of man. Third, we are not talking about the phrases "son of David" or "Son of God." They, too, are irrelevant. What do they have to do with the issue?

Fourth, although it is not relevant to the issue either, how do you know that the phrase "Son of man" has reference to Jesus being born a man of David's lineage and that he is called the son of David with reference to His humanity? For "crime out loud" where are you getting all of this pap? When I listen to people like you, BK, I thank fate that I was not raised in a home in which religious propaganda was polluting the air and choking the thought processes.

Letter #485 Continues (Part i)

[Point #11 in BE's Pamphlet -- Jesus told us to "honor thy father and mother" (Matt. 15:4) but contradicted his own teaching in Luke 14:26 where he said, "If any man come to me and hate not his father and mother...he cannot be my disciple."]

Jesus is teaching His followers that our natural relationships are to be as hatred in comparison to our love and devotion to Him and His will. He is not advocating hate as you suppose.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part i)

You know, I really wish you and your other apologetic cohorts would take the Bible as is and operate on the logical premise that it says what it means and it means what it says. That old hackneyed defense: "that's what it says but that is not what it means" gets quite stale after awhile. There is nothing whatever in the verse that would lead one to believe that Jesus is making a "comparison." There is nothing about comparing anything to anything. Why don't you just be honest enough to admit that you don't have an answer and are rationalizing, pure and simple. Moreover, if the attitude we are to show our parents is as hatred when compared to the love we are to show God, then our attitude to everyone except our parents should be that of real hatred or something akin to despising or loathing. How is that for teaching brotherly love!

Letter #485 Continues (Part j)

[Point #12 in BE's Pamphlet -- In John 3:13 ("And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man....") Jesus erred because 2 Kings 2:11 ("...and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven") shows Elijah went earlier.]

Jesus is the only who ascended up into heaven. Elijah was carried there by special transport. While they watched, Jesus ascended unattended.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part j)

We are going to have to give you the Award for Irrelevancy medal, BK. You bring in more irrelevant junk in an attempt to shift the focus than any apologist I've encountered in the past year. What difference does it make how Elijah and Jesus got to heaven. The fact is that they both ascended, period. John 3:13 does not say no man ascended to heaven unaided or without transportation prior to Jesus. If you are going to use an excuse as silly as this one, why don't you say that a strong wind did not accompany the ascent of Jesus as it did that of Elijah. Of course, if you and other apologists are going to increasingly rely on contrived irrelevancies as the bulwark of your defenses, then I am going to reply in kind by saying, for instance, that Jesus ascended in the same manner as Elijah but that simply was not inserted into the text because it was deemed irrelevant. I can write as much between the lines as you can.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #488 from RM of Red Deer, Alberta Canada

[RM went to an open forum in a college near his home in which an audience of 400 was allowed to question several ministers about the Bible and Christianity. RM called us after the program and was clearly excited and delighted about what transpired--ED.]

Dear Dennis. I am preaching again. But, this time it's the GOOD NEWS of BIBLICAL ERRANCY. I unleashed a number of your arguments on a couple of male ministers, one female pastor, a missionary (who set up the whole public confrontation in the first place), and (unbeknownst to me at the time) a religion columnist for our city newspaper. It was five against one, in front of over four hundred college students, and I won! Not Bad eh! (Yah, I am a Canadian).

Anyway, the IVCF (Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship) missionaries set up posters entitled "Christianity on Trial." So that's just what I did: I put it on trial. I played it like a crown prosecutor. Not willing to waste my first big chance to challenge the bible in public I launched into the math errors riddled throughout the book of Joshua; i.e. Joshua 15:21-32, which states there are 29 cities while listing 36; Joshua 15:33-36 which states there are 14 cities while listing 15; chapter 19:2-6 which states there are 13 cities while listing 14 of them. From there I jumped into 1 Kings 9:23 where Solomon is said to have 550 chief officers. I then drew their attention to 2 Chron. 8:10 where the text says Solomon had 250 chief officers. Before they could collect their wits I pointed out that the NIV Narrated Bible, (a chronological bible that places the scriptures in historical order-- an excellent tool for the BE buff), places the two verses together as one, listing only the 550 and ignoring the 250 without any explanation at all. I then quoted W.A. Elwell, an evangelical fundamentalist commentator, who admits that one of these passages is corrupt but doesn't know which one. Then, I pointed to the 2,000 versus 3,000 baths of Solomon's house in 1 Kings 7:26 and 2 Chron. 4:5 respectively. They were stunned for a good while (over a minute, I think) looking at each other until the older male minister began to ramble on about context and deep sincerity as the necessary requirements to understand the bible. "Bush wah" I replied. I then challenged him to answer my questions if he was so sincere, and if he knew how to read in context. He had no real answer that could stand up and the audience knew it.

From there, I went for their jugular vein. I "hit" them with the scientific fallacies from one of your tracts. They told me to quit monopolizing the microphone. I turned to the crowd and asked them if anyone had any questions to ask these "experts." No one seemed too interested in asking anything, but they seemed to like what I was doing. Out of the crowd I heard shouts like: "No! You're doing fine! Keep up the good work! Don't stop now!" Believe me, it was like a rush of adrenalin to hear that. Best of all, the "experts" heard it too. The show was mine.

Eventually, I launched into some of the bigger problems with christianity and the bible such as the problem of hell and a "just God" tolerating eternal quarantine, and the eternal punishment of finite sinners. After some initial squabbling about my questions not being clear (the audience seemed to think they were quite clear), they made their last attempt to down-play my arguments. Each of them, in turn, suggested that I might be biased as if I have not given Jesus a fair chance. It was at this juncture that a guy from the audience, on his way out of the student forum, came up behind me and suggested, in passing, that maybe Allah deserves a fair chance too. (No one else heard it because he stealthily said it under his breath just as he was passing behind me). I seized the opportunity like any good opportunist might have done and shouted that Allah, Brahma, Krishna, Muhammad, and every other god and visionary deserves a fair chance as well. Then I gave them the "clincher." I said, "Hey! I was one of you for 11 years. Yah! I was a born-again, spirit-filled, double doser of the Holy Ghost, bible punching, christian. So don't even try to suggest that I might be biased. I gave Jesus a fair chance. It just didn't work. Don't you dare try to suggest otherwise."

The show was over. They gave their closing speeches. I signalled them to give me a chance to offer a closing speech also. They couldn't really refuse, after all, most of the audience was on my side. Right to the end I hammered away at christianity and the bible. I was pretty damn good too. I never thought it would go so well. As the saying goes, "Nothing ventured, nothing gained." I hope this helps inspire someone to do the same thing.

But, most of all, I want to thank you Dennis for making it possible. It is because you have the "jam" to take these jokers on that others are able to see that it isn't so impossible to do. Your tireless efforts and your BE magazine are simply incomparable. Keep up the great work. Your material has certainly helped me. I hope I can catch up to you in knowing the errors of the bible. You would make a good role model for a lot of independent thinkers. Thanks again.

P.S. Pardon the punctuation and grammatical errors. I was in a hurry to get back to my home work. You may edit, delete, and correct as you see fit, should you desire to print any of my letter in an upcoming issue of BE. Believe me, what I wrote wasn't even the half of what happened. For over half an hour after the "Christianity on Trial" session, people descended upon me, asking if I wanted to start my own society on campus, (I'm not sure that is feasible at the present but it is an interesting proposition); others patted me on the back, shook my hand, and even the christians were giving me their cards and asking me to call them. They thought my questions/contentions were absolutely unique. I told them that they should write to BE. As I told one person and company, "BE is the place to be, and Dennis McKinsey is the man to see." So don't worry, I am quick to advertise where my best information comes from. Whether or not the christians will "check it out" is uncertain. But, if they ever get curious enough, they will know where to write. My best wishes, for you and your magazine. Thanks again.

Editor's Response to Letter #488

Dear RM. We published your entire letter because you have gone to heart of what this publication is all about and employed the strategy we have been stressing for nearly 10 years. You took it to the other side, on their turf, in their book and before a large audience. And judging from the phone conversation which we had around midnight after you returned home from your encounter, you performed magnificently. You did precisely what we have repeatedly claimed must be done if real inroads are to be made into religious domination of North America. If only I had been there to give you a good pat on the back. I have continually said it can be done; I know it can be done, and I know it is by far the most realistic way to do it. But until far more people realize that it is the only practical way, until they realize it can be done and do it, it won't be done. I keep going back to the basics. You have to reeducate people from the beginning. You have to return to the fundamentals and begin anew, patiently, methodically, systematically, logically, accurately, and knowledgeably straightening out everything they learned in Sunday School as a child, everything they were erroneously told about the Bible and Christianity, everything they unjustifiably assumed from what they have been told about the Bible. That's a tall order but that is what it takes. Throwing rocks from a distance and fighting court battles will never get the job done. I have often seen people debating abortion, homosexuality, sexism, anti-semitism, racism, crime, morality, nuclear disarmament and many other issues on television with biblicists, and if ever there was a conversation going nowhere that is it. Talk about a waste of time! Tens of millions of people view every issue from the perspective of what the Bible teaches and until you convince them the Book is fallacious, until they are convinced it is not the inerrant word of an infallible God, from their perspective you will be on a journey to perdition doing little more than propounding anti-God material from the Devil's cauldron that by definition must be false.

You should have added one very important point, however. You did your homework over a long period of time and went to the forum well prepared. You knew what you wanted to hit and had your ducks carefully lined up; that's what is required of anyone challenging someone in their own book. A week before the meeting you called me and we discussed the questions that should be at the forefront of your attack. You chose well and did so alone. Can you imagine what we could do with a battery of people of like mind and similar knowledge going to many meetings and making many media appearances? Creation of an organization of this nature is what we have been advocating for years. The commentaries in issues 58-60 were devoted to a speech focused almost entirely on proving this very point. But, remember, don't become over-confident, do your research, prepare for even greater challenges, and return to the fray soon and often.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Last summer we began distributing an index of the first 8 years of BE compiled by Ernie Brennaman of Corpus Christi, Texas. We recently received from him the 1991 update which is now available. You can receive the 1991 two-page update by itself or as an addendum to the entire 8 year index. Again, those who seek to have a copy can submit whatever funds they feel are appropriate.

This issue will continue a tradition that was begun many years ago of occasionally devoting an entire issue to letters from our readers.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #485 Continues from Last Month (Part k)

[Point #13 in BE's Pamphlet -- In Matt. 16:28 Jesus said, "There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." Yet, they all died and he never came.]

Three days after the statement by Jesus, Peter, James and John watched as Jesus was glorified before them thus revealing His glory and that of His kingdom.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part k)

I wish you would cite chapter and verse when you come out with these weak defenses. That is probably why you don't. Down deep inside you know they can't stand the strain. I assume you are referring to the next verse which is Matt. 17:1. I think you need to reread the script, my friend. First, Matt. 17:1 says 6 days later, not 3. Second, Matt. 17:1 says, "Jesus took Peter, James, and John to a high mountain." Nowhere does it say he appeared to them or came to them. He was already there. Third, it says Jesus was transfigured; nowhere does it say his kingdom appeared or arrived. How does Jesus being transfigured equal the arrival of the kingdom? Fourth, if you will read Matt. 17:3 you will see that the only thing that did appear was Moses and Elias. And lastly, if his kingdom had arrived, then why didn't all the events that were supposed to follow the kingdom's arrival according to biblical predictions actually occur?

Letter #485 Continues (Part l)

[Point #15 in BE's pamphlet -- Even many of the staunchest defenders of Jesus admit that his comment in Matt. 10:34 ("I came not to send peace but a sword") contradicts verses such as Matt. 26:52 ("Put up again thy sword into its place: for all that take the sword shall perish with the sword").]

If you read the verses that follow the words of Jesus in Matthew 10 which you have given, you will find the meaning of Jesus' statement. The message which He had given to His disciples to proclaim would bring opposition and even death to the messenger by those who reject the message. He knew this would be the result. He came as the Prince of peace but rejecting the Prince of peace has brought the sword to families and nations.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part l)

I have read the verses after Matt. 10:34 many times, BK, and others need only read them to see why biblical apologetics is one of the most deceptive activities in existence. The central thrust of the verses that follow Matt. 10:34 do not show that the message "would bring violence, opposition and even death to the messenger by those who reject the message." The central thrust is that the followers of Jesus must jettison all in the fight for Christ and oppose all who fail to support or oppose Christ. All of the verses following Matt. 10:34 show that he clearly intended for his followers to employ the sword and he did not come as a prince of peace. He did not come as the messenger of peace causing the sword to be employed by his opponents as you would have us believe.

Letter #485 Continues (Part m)

[Point #16 in BE's pamphlet -- The Messiah must be a physical descendant of David (Rom. 1:3, Acts 2:30). Yet, how could Jesus meet this requirement since his genealogies in Matt. 1 and Luke 3 show he descended from David through Joseph who was not his natural father (The Virgin Birth).]

It is the woman's seed that was to bruise Satan's head (Gen. 3:15), not the man's seed. Mary fulfilled this in the birth of Jesus. It is evident therefore that Mary was a direct descendant of David after the flesh. In Luke is given the genealogy of Mary which goes back to David.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part m)

You say that "it is evident therefore that Mary was direct descendant of David" when there is nothing evident about it. Could you cite chapter and verse for this assumption. Moreover, upon what possible basis do you conclude that the genealogy in Luke 3 is that of Mary? I strongly recommend you read our refutation of this commonly held apologetic ploy which can be found on page 4 of Issue #71.

Letter #485 Continues (Part n)

[Point #17 in BE's pamphlet -- Jesus told a man in Mark 8:34 that "whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." What cross? He hadn't died on the cross yet. There was nothing to take up. That man would have had no idea what he was talking about.]

If you deny yourself you will have a cross to bear. Jesus wasn't asking the man to take up the cross that He would die on. The cross speaks of suffering, loneliness and denial of one's earthly desires. This will be the lot of one who wholly and completely denies himself the things that this world cherishes so that He may serve the Lord.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part n)

Why are you and your Christians brothers so incapable of understanding the problem this question poses? There was no Christian cross at the time this statement was made. So there was no Christian cross to take up. You say, "The cross speaks of suffering, loneliness and denial of one's earthly desires." Where are you getting this? Please provide chapter and verse in support of what is otherwise an unsupportable comment. I have heard this defense several times and it makes no more sense now than the first time I heard it. There is nothing in the Bible about a cross other than the one upon which Jesus died. Christians are so indoctrinated to associate the cross with suffering and bearing one's burdens that they are incapable of realizing that there was a time when the cross had no such baggage. Or perhaps you have extrabiblical evidence that the cross was so viewed prior to the Crucifixion. If so, I'd very much like to hear it and an explanation of its applicability to the eastern end of the Mediterranean.

Letter #485 Continues (Part o)

[Point #18 in BE's pamphlet -- In Mark 10:19 Jesus told a man to follow the commandments. Yet, one of those listed by Jesus was "defraud not" which isn't even an OT commandment.]

Defraud means to take from, or cheat another. It can include being sexually unfaithful, dishonest or deceitful. All are certainly included in the commandments even if another name is used to express them.]

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part o)

Sometimes I don't know why I even bother responding to the duplicity of biblicists and this is one of those times. If you will take the time to read Mark 10:19, BK, you will notice it lists 5 of the 10 commandments. Five are omitted and a new one--Defraud not--is added. It is clearly a separate commandment. If it only meant "cheating," "being sexually unfaithful," or "dishonest as you contend," then there would have been no need to have listed it at all, since it would be included within those original commandments that were already listed. No, it is a separate commandment; Jesus is adding to the script, and you are creating your own.

Letter #485 Continues (Part p)

[Point #19 in BE's pamphlet -- In Luke 12:4 Jesus told his followers to "Be not afraid of them that kill the body," but Matt. 12:14-16, John 7:1, 8:59, 10:39, 11:53-54, and Mark 1:45 show that he hid, escaped, and slinked around on numerous occasions.]

To avoid or escape from someone you know is out to get you is not a sign of fear but rather a sign of wisdom and good judgment.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (Part p)

No, it is a sign of both. Because of fear he exercised good judgment and fled. Fear is certainly present. Otherwise, why did he flee? And because fear is present, his actions contradicted his teaching in Luke 12:4 that one should not be afraid. You stealthily tried to shift attention away from the word "fear" and toward the words you prefer, "wisdom" and "good judgment." Whether he exercised good or bad judgment is irrelevant. The fact is that he hid out until the heat blew over.

Letter #485 Continues (Part q)

[And lastly, point #21 in BE's pamphlet -- For Jesus to be executed for our sins makes about as much sense as my son telling a judge that he would accept execution for my crimes. Although a nice gesture it has nothing to do with justice. What judge would agree?]

...God Himself is the one who has been sinned against; He is also the judge and can set the rules. He was willing to come in the person of Jesus Christ to die for the sins of those whom He had created in order that we may be delivered from all sin. Death, God cannot twice demand; first of His Son and then of me if I receive Christ's death as my death. Even in this life, if someone is put to death for a crime he did not commit, if the one who committed the crime is discovered he cannot be put to death for the crime another died for.

Editor's Response to Letter #485 (part q)

You haven't answered the question. Even if God is "willing to come in the person of Jesus Christ to die for the sins of those whom He had created," the fact remains that it is a nice gesture that has nothing to do with justice. Those who do the deed should pay the price. That is fundamental to all systems of jurisprudence. The fact that some are willing to die for others means nothing. You say that God is the judge and can set the rules. That is just another way of saying you have a being who wants somebody to pay for the crime and doesn't really care who is punished. He just wants blood. You say that if someone is put to death for a crime he did not commit, the real culprit cannot be executed even if he is caught. Are you a lawyer? I am not, but I doubt justice would be served by allowing a guilty man to go free because an innocent man paid the price.

Letter #485 Concludes (part r)

All of your questions stem from a lack of understanding of God's plans and purposes that will be fulfilled as He has purposed in spite of the objections of ignorant men....

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #485 (Part r)

It is not so much a matter of my questions as your answers, BK. All of them stem from an intense psychological need to justify and rationalize a chaotic maze of discombobulated superstition intertwined with hopes, prayers, dreams, and yearnings based on nothing more than a contradictory book of folklore, fantasy, mythology, and imaginings concocted by childish adults. Every Christian should heed at least one verse in the Bible, namely, 1 Cor. 13:11 which says, "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things." That about says it all and lays ignorance where it really belongs!

Letter #489 from BB of Cambridge, Massachusetts

My Bible doesn't say that Adam, Noe or Job were perfect in...Gen. 6:9 ("These are the generations of Noe: Noe was a just man and blameless in his generations, he walked with God"), Job 1:1 ("There was a man in the land of Hus, whose name was Job, and that man was simple and upright, fearing God and avoiding evil"--Douay-Challoner Text).

As for your theological conundrum: how can a perfect God create imperfection; the answer can be found in St. Thomas Aquinas' Summa Theologica (paraphrased): God is like a perfect life giving light, out of this light comes creation, since creation is separate from the light it cast shadows and it is in these shadows that doubt and evil dwell, but there are no shadows on the light. God did not make death (Wis. 1:13). God does not will moral evil (Psalms 5:4-6) but merely permits it (Amos 3:6; Job 2:10). The reason for this is that God created man with free will, so that He can bring good out of evil (Gen. 3:15).

Editor's Response to Letter #489

Dear BB. My King James and American Standard refer to Noah as "perfect;" the Good News says he "had no faults," and the Bible in Basic English says he was "without sin." That is about as clear as you can be. If that doesn't mean he is perfect, what do you want? In addition, how does your "blameless" differ from my "perfect." If he is blameless then he is perfect. Either he is blameless or he isn't. There is no inbetween. A major problem with Christians, such as yourself, is that they love to deal in absolutes but attempt to retreat when their hand is called. If Noah committed even one small sin he was not blameless, and if he committed no sins whatever, then he was perfect. Christians are always trying to straddle fences that are not straddleable.

As far as your explanation for the existence of evil is concerned, it's nothing more than a nebulous, fabricated muddle. First, you begin by saying that God is perfect and that he creates a light which gives rise to creation. If God is perfect then the light he created must be perfect. If creation came from that light then that creation must be perfect also. Then you say that this creation casts shadows and in these shadows evil dwells. Evil created by what? Are you saying that it was created by the creation? But how could that be when the creation itself must be perfect, since it is the creation of a perfectly moral being. Secondly, where on earth are you getting all of this doubletalk. Where does the Bible say that God created a light that gave rise to a creation that had shadows in which evil arose? It sounds like something a theologian would concoct in his spare time or on a sleepless night. Thirdly, regardless of how many stages the formation of evil is removed from the original creation, you still have evil ultimately emerging from a perfect being. All of these intermediaries aren't going to bail you out. That's why several biblicists I quoted in past issues were candid enough to admit they had no explanation for the emergence of evil. Fourthly, the old canard about God not creating evil but just allowing it to exist will not withstand critical analysis. What does Lam. 3:38 say in the RSV. "Is it not from the mouth of the Most High that good and evil come?" What does Jer. 26:3 have God say? "...that I may repent of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings." Also note Jer. 36:3, Isa. 45:7, and several other verses. They all say that God creates evil. So God doesn't just allow evil; he generates it. And lastly, the "man has free will" deception won't fly either. As I have said on many occasions, according to the Bible God created man and God is perfect. Therefore, man had to have been perfect because he was a product of a perfect God. If God created him, he had to have been perfect and couldn't have sinned. Regardless of how much free will he had, if he chose to sin he wasn't perfect. In essence, because God created him he couldn't have sinned; it would have been impossible. So evil could not have arisen from man exercising his free will. You would do well to avoid theologians, especially the likes of Aquinas.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #490 from FA of Santa Rosa, California

Dear Dennis. In Issue #110, letter #477, James White wrote about "the Son who had appeared and was seen by the OT believers." This could not have happened because there was no "Son" in the OT times. Did you ever wonder why God never told anyone he had a son during the 4,000 years from Adam to Jesus? Why would a kind and loving God conceal such vital information in the light of Acts 4:12 which says, "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Nobody in the OT ever heard of God's son, Jesus--Noah, Moses, David, Isaiah--not even Solomon, the wisest man who ever lived.

In your discussion of the trinity, only the Father and Son are considered. James White says it was the Son who appeared in the OT. You say if anyone was seen it was the Father who appeared in the OT. There is a possibility you are both wrong. Maybe it was the Holy Ghost who appeared in the OT; after all, they are identical triplets aren't they?

Editor's Response to Letter #490

Dear FA. As far as the Son not appearing the OT is concerned, you are employing a line of argumentation that is often used by freethinkers but we have always avoided. Just because nobody discussed the Son in the OT does not mean he could not have been there. This is known as arguing from silence and has often been used by freethinkers in regard to all of the events surrounding the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The argument from silence is just too weak for our taste and has never been given a role in BE. You just can't say something did not occur because nobody in ancient history mentions it, no matter how incredible the event.

That is a weak reed to lean on. I would rather call White's hand and ask for biblical proof in support of his position.

Letter #491 from LA of Hollywood, California

Dear B.E.... I've run into far too many un-informed and/or mis-informed people and I need your help. I'm also changing my policy of avoiding these mis-informed people, standing my ground and start shining some long overdue light on the darkness of their misconceptions. I do realize many will never listen but perhaps a few might and start to question themselves. Finding information of this nature in the library is far from easy. The truth is easily hidden. This is where I need your help. Where can I find records or information on the many re-writings, additions, and deletions the church or individuals saw fit to make in the NT and in the OT if you're got some.... Would you agree with my observation that if not for the efforts of people like yourself and other "Freethinkers" most everyone would still be living in the dark ages?.... I'll feel better knowing I've made an effort to keep up the pace of change if not speed it up.... I'm living in Hollywood and I run into so many of these poor blind fools, I truly feel sad and sorry for them. And perhaps somewhere along the way we can turn enough blindness into sight....

Editor's Response to Letter #491

Dear LA. I have as much trouble as you in discovering the degree to which the church and key individuals made alterations in the Bible. It is an extrabiblical subject that is not easy to research and in which we do not specialize, although some prior commentaries were devoted to textual conflicts between the various translations on the market. You might consult the writings of people such as Doane, McCabe, and Graham. That is about as good as I can do. Writings such as those you seek are generally kept hush-hush and, no doubt, many have been destroyed throughout the centuries. As far as reasoning and intelligence is concerned I would say that most people are far closer to the dark ages than the Enlightenment. From religion to folklore, New Age to old myths, horoscopes to metaphysics, superstition is alive, well, and growing in "modern" America.

Letter #492 from EG of El Toro, California

Dear Dennis. I have a friend who is a Christian and we are in a long-standing debate with each other. I, of course, do not think much of his evidences, etc. This time we are debating the flood and prophecy in general. I think he must have been impressed by your last issue of BE (it talks about prophecy). I recently brought a subscription to BE for him, and now I want to discuss BE material concerning the flood and prophecy in general, and see how he tries to deal with the information. Therefore, I ask you to send 2 copies of the following back issues. One to me, and one to him.... P.S. Thanks for your great advice. I'm taking Christians on! Send back issues A.S.A.P.

Letter #493 from RK of Ruston, Louisiana

Dear Dennis.... Allow me to add my periodic encouragement to you. I believe your work will be the seminal reference for future books which will transform western civilization's thinking about the bible. BE's philosophy of avoiding opinion and addressing only errors and inconsistencies avoids mountains of time wasted on responding to specious rebuttals. And BE's logic is a thing of beauty. Do allow me a word of caution: continue to resist the temptation to interject politics, government, economics, etc. Some may find a failure to do so an excuse to sully BE's true worth....

Letter #494 from NS of Richmond, Indiana

Dear Dennis. Being a typesetter for a small-town weekly newspaper does have its advantages. Every week I must set what I call the church garbage, but recently I was incensed at a couple of articles and decided to write a "Letter to the Editor." (Borrowing from B.E.). Thankfully my editor feels much the same way I do, but does not dare reveal his views. I seriously doubt I changed any minds, but what a catharsis for me! It's sad I couldn't use my own name for fear of losing subscribers, which we can ill afford. The one I used is on my birth certificate, but I was adopted and my name changed. I certainly am not ashamed of my religious views, and do not hesitate to state exactly how I feel, but to jeopardize the paper wouldn't be fair. The editor received several irate calls with one demanding to know my address or phone number, which, of course, he didn't give. Makes me wonder what this good Christian would have done to me??.... Thanks again for B.E., which is an inspiration every month. That is, whenever it gets here, last month it was the 22nd, but the P.O. was really on the ball this month, and got it here today, the 10th. You'll never convince me that this isn't deliberate, but being good Christians, I'm sure they would explain it all away!

Letter #495 from LR of Baker, Oregon

Dennis. I thought I was the only person in this world who felt from age 13 onward that this collection of absurdities called the Bible was written by cruel scribes bent on enslaving mankind, keeping their females mute and obedient, ensuring a continuing profit and income for themselves, and establishing an authority to commit a collection of...deceits and other assorted stupidities against weaker men. Apparently many others feel frustrated with this book that is often so ugly in its pronouncements that it is unsuitable for reading by children. I am astonished that such a publication as "Biblical Errancy" is available!! Pretty naive, Huh?... If you are a short-wave listener, a few of us "hams" have started an "atheist" group, and meet on the short-wave frequency of 14.323 Mhz on Sundays at 1800 hours GMT. Also on 3.850 Mhz on Monday at 0300 hours GMT. You wouldn't believe the heckling and name-calling from the religionists!! It's time the rest of us come out of the closet.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) We now have available for purchase a 31-page, single-spaced, computer-generated, 3-column index with the location of every biblical verse in the first 108 Issues (9 years) of BE. Bound in an inexpensive folder and with more than 10,000 entries, it will be distributed at a minimum cost of $10. Thanks to Thomas Gould Jr. of 107 William Shy Drive in Hendersonville, Tennessee 37075 (615) 824-0496, we now have a verse index to supplement our word index created by Ernie Brennaman of Corpus Christi, Texas.

(b) We have decided to periodically recommend books and other materials in regard to the whole subject of biblical errancy. Frankly, there is not much really good material available but that which does exist should be brought to the attention of all concerned. For openers I would recommend that great classic, The Age of Reason, by Thomas Paine which focuses on many aspects of the Bible, especially prophetic inaccuracies. The Bible Handbook by Foote and Ball is a very good book if you want a short synopsis of many direct biblical contradictions, although they occasionally fail to interpret objectively. John Remsburg wrote two exceptional books entitled The Bible and The Christ which focus on the OT and the New, respectively. I read them nearly 15 years ago and was impressed by the number of biblical contradictions and other problems that Remsburg was able to bring to the fore. A real eye-opener for the novice is a work by Joseph Wheless entitled Is It God's Word? This was one of the writings upon which I broke my biblical teeth ages ago. Two excellent Jewish writings devoted to exposing the distortion of the OT by Christian scholars, especially in regard to messianic prophecy, are The Jew and the Christian Missionary by Gerald Sigal and The Real Messiah by Rabbi Aryeh Kaplan.

believe in the Bible will tend to rely upon saviors rather than their own wisdom and capabilities. Instead of seeing groups and organizations as the motive force in history, they will look for figures in the tradition of John Wayne, Moses, and heroes on white horses to make the right decisions. (6) They will tend to rely upon supposed experts to interpret the Bible for them, fail to view events objectively, be subservient rather than independent, and see the world through the eyes of those who find them easy to persuade. (7) They won't oppose wars with real conviction and might even welcome them for several reasons. (a) To most Christians when you are dead you are merely sleeping and waiting for the day you arise; so there is no real loss. (b) Since you are going to a better world, why be concerned about your fate in this one. (c) Since you can't really be destroyed regardless of what happens on the battlefield, why be concerned with the nuclear threat or be engaged in anti-nuclear or anti-war activity. (d) Why fight the tide of history since Armageddon is inevitable, regardless. (8) They will oppose sexual equality and support the subordination of women. Many biblically influenced women argue that they have equal status with men, despite the fact that a multitude of verses clearly show the opposite. According to the Bible women are less clean than men, are to be subservient to men, and are the prime cause of original sin. Paul's position on women is utterly degrading. Teachings of this nature can't help but retard the maturation of females and damage the image they have of themselves. (9) Of great importance is the fact that religious people are going to believe that giving to "God's representatives," i.e. Falwell, Swaggart, Graham, etc., is equivalent to giving to God. Buying their way into heaven is the unspoken motive and accounts in large measure for the fact that many clergymen and denominations are very affluent. (10) Believers are going to feel their anti-social behavior can be exonerated by bequeathing wealth to the church, repenting, confessing, accepting Jesus, fasting, abstaining, and fulfilling rituals. Church-going will be viewed by many as a cleansing of their record and conscience on Sunday for all their bad deeds committed during the week which will allow them to resume their old ways the following week. People will seriously feel that confession or something akin to same will purify their account and provide a fresh start. Such concepts could foster anti-social behavior as easily as could the belief propounded by fundamentalists that good deeds are irrelevant to salvation. (11) As outlined in Matthew, they will view anti-social behavior as the result of things from within rather than without. Internal makeup rather than external conditions will be seen as responsible for bad behavior. They will fail to realize that if this were true, then most criminal activity would not occur in the poorer sections of society and social stability would not be touted by more affluent areas. Unbeknownst to them they are really saying that those who live in higher crime areas are inherently bad; something is wrong with them rather than their environment. Most anti-social behavior has far more to do with the conditions in which people are raised than something innate. Prosperous people have far more at stake and are less inclined to engage in anti-social behavior out of pure self-interest if for no other reason. (12) Because of their belief in original sin, they will view all people as inherently corrupt and associate with others on a basis of hypocrisy. While outwardly smiling and exhibiting all of the expected social graces, inwardly, they will look upon people as pieces of dung, to quote Martin Luther, fit only to be altered and remolded as deemed preferable. (13) Believing themselves to possess constant, eternal truths, they won't be open to change and new ideas, even though any qualified scientist knows there is nothing so permanent as change. (14) As is often discussed in freethought literature, adherents to Jesus will feel they have the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. The inevitable by-product of their philosophy will be intolerance with all of the accompanying war and conflict. (15) Those caught up in the Judeo-Christian tradition will tend to view themselves as superior to others because they view themselves as chosen by God to carry his message. The OT clearly shows Jews exhibiting a kind of national myopia. Because of the importance God laid on the Jews at the expense of all others, biblicists will strongly believe in nationalism and national superiority. (16) They will not be inclined to marry outside their religion, ethnic group, or nationality. Their narrow, provincial outlook will be the source of endless isolation and mistrust of those in other groups and close their minds to foreign ideas whether right or wrong.

Competition and conflict are an understandable outcome. (17) Those well schooled in scripture will look upon genealogies, family ancestry, and family relationships as being more important than personal accomplishment and social relationships with the community at large. The narrow, clannish, ethnic mentality that will arise can only lead to conflict and judgments based on regressive concepts such as bad blood and good stock. (18) Because of rewards promised in the next world, they will be far more prone to accept and endure mistreatment and injustice than fight back. (19) Those who take Scripture seriously and believe miracles and supernatural intervention will deliver them from their problems will also be more inclined to accept and endure than act and alter. (20) Because of verses such as those found in Psalms, Christians will believe that corrupt people will ultimately get theirs. The outcome has been written on the wind by God and one need not act or be concerned. God will do it all. (21) Because of many scriptural passages, they will not be inclined to plan and labor but accept whatever fate has to offer, which can only act to the detriment of all concerned. What could be more enervating than Matt. 6:25-33 which says, "I tell you therefore, do not worry about your living--what you are to eat or drink, or about your body, what you are to wear. Is not the life more important than its nourishment and the body than its clothing? Look at the birds of the air, how they neither sow nor reap nor gather into barns, but your heavenly Father feeds them. Are not you more valuable than they?" Anyone who takes advice of this kind seriously is headed for catastrophe. Imagine a farmer who neither sows nor reaps but expects the harvest to fall into his lap out of God's good graces. Matthew continues by saying, "Furthermore, who of you is able through worrying to add one moment to his life's course? And why worry about clothes? Observe carefully how the field lilies grow. They neither toil nor spin, but I tell you that even Solomon in all his splendor was never dressed like one of these. But if God so clothes the grass of the field that exists today and is thrown into the furnace tomorrow, will He not more surely clothe you of little faith?" This teaching clashes with the very work ethic we try so hard to instill into our youth and which so many of today's youngsters lack. Matthew concludes by saying, "Do not, then, be anxious, saying, 'What shall we eat?' or 'What shall we drink?' or 'What are we to wear?' For on all these things pagans center their interest while your heavenly Father knows that you need them all. But seek first His kingdom and His righteousness and all these things will be added to you." Millions of people have spent their entire lives seeking his kingdom and righteousness and are yet to receive adequate food, drink, and clothing. What a massive deception! (22) Because of statements in the Book of John and the Book of Acts, as well as comments by Paul and Peter, anti-semitism will be hard to avoid. (23) Anyone taking the Bible seriously will have superstitious, mythological views on many subjects which can only act as a terrible retardant on scientific advancement. The antibiblical concept of evolution is basic to every branch of the physical sciences. (24) And lastly, because of the importance placed on the Old Law, especially the Ten Commandments, the mechanical application of stringent laws with little or no consideration for mitigating circumstances, reminiscent of the Ayatollah, will be carried over into modern society.

These are only some of the reasons one could give for opposing all efforts to propagate the Bible. No doubt nearly every member of the freethought community can think of more. We intend to create an expanded audio tape on this topic heavily focused on the classism and iniquities the Bible fosters.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #496 from JB of Dayton, Ohio (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I am a Christian who very much enjoys reading your monthly publication, "Biblical Errancy." Several of my friends and I find it refreshing to finally come across an unbeliever, like yourself, who can articulate his unbelief and give reasons for it. Quite frankly, we are tired of the same dry arguments that most lazy nonbelievers throw at us. I say lazy because they will not read the Bible for themselves, but instead rely on someone else to provide reasons for their unbelief and to find biblical "contradictions" for them.

Recently, I have encountered several nonbelievers who struggle to make their point, hoping that there are justifiable reasons for their unbelief. Your paper has finally given their spineless unbelief a backbone. One clear example is Letter #472 in which writer EB (of Wayne, Michigan) announced that your publication had made him a "completed" atheist. Yes, Mr. McKinsey you have succeeded in giving nonbelievers that which they have so desperately needed.

However, before you get the wrong idea, let me emphatically state that I do not hate you. In fact, I personally look forward to your paper and have often used it in my Sunday School classes. I utilize "Biblical Errancy" by reading to my class one of the "contradictions" you raise and then employ them to respond to your objection. A great deal of interest is always generated. The class appreciates the opportunity to think and reason about the many issues raised in "Biblical Errancy." Your articles allow them to see that analytical people do exist, and they see things differently than Christians. Bible believers need to do their "homework" and be prepared to reason with people who reject the Christian faith. We should never be afraid of tough questions. We should face them and face them fearlessly and honestly.

Hence, I find your paper extremely helpful. I am able to study your objections, formulate answers, and be prepared to respond to your "missionaries." Several of whom continue to fail miserably in presenting the freethinker's message. I continue to observe that many of your readers cling to you for their answers. After all why should nonbelievers invest time in reading a useless book?

Editor's Response to Letter #496 (Part a)

Dear JB. Although your bouquets are most appreciated and it is nice to know that there are Christians open-minded enough to read material of another conviction, your brickbats merit a response. First, like some who have gone before, your attempt to drive a wedge between BE and its readers is doomed to failure. Subscribers to this publication are among some the most intelligent and analytical individuals you will ever encounter and I know from experience that many don't cling to much of anything ideologically. As far as freethinkers being too lazy to read the Bible, even critically, unfortunately I would agree with you, although that is far less true of BE's readers than those of other materials. Second, I don't hate you either, JB, although I most assuredly feel sorry for anyone who has succumbed to a book, a philosophy, that provides more tease than truth, more deceit than deliverance. Third, you say that you find BE helpful and are able to formulate answers to our queries. But, you are yet to submit one to this publication. Is that because you are still cogitating or is it because you are not sure they will withstand scrutiny? Fourth, you say that our missionaries fail to present our message adequately. Well, then, as a seeker of truth you should be more than willing to have me visit your Sunday School classes and try my hand or have several freeflowing debates on the Bible's validity? Let me know who these incompetent missionaries are. I could even contact them and yourself, and see if we could arrange something more suitable. Perhaps they would like an opportunity to redeem themselves in your eyes. Since the postmark on your letter says Dayton, Ohio, I could drive down rather easily. Although you signed your letter, you did not provide any address or telephone number. Why not? Why do you seek so much anonymity? Is there something you fear or do you have something to hide? Incidentally, I assume in the interest of fairness that you don't hesitate to focus on the strongest arguments presented in BE. After all you wouldn't want to be like most apologists who love to take the only weak argument out of 100 and build their entire case around it while ignoring the other 99. That is unquestionably one of the most common tricks in all of propaganda. Indoctrinators love to focus on something that is very much the exception, overemphasize its importance, and ignore all cases that follow the rule. It is used in politics everyday, especially via testimonies, stories, pictures, statistics and accounts with political implications.

Letter #496 Continues (Part b)

Along this line of thought, the approach adopted by Madalyn Murray O'Hair seems to be more consistent with freethought. She states, in essence, that it is best to throw the Bible in the trash. She simply does not want her constituency to be dragged to a book that will thwart their atheistic agenda. And this is for good reason. Recall what happened to her son, Bill, when he read the Bible. Would you care to give your opinion as to what happened to him?

Editor's Response to Letter #496 (Part b)

You certainly would like for us to adopt the policy you just enunciated wouldn't you. Practically speaking, all that would mean, after all the rhetoric and pejoratives were cleared away, is that freethinkers would refrain from all criticisms of the Bible and give its proponents free reign. It certainly is not consistent with freethought as was shown in the exchange which occurred between O'Hair and myself in the 16th Issue of BE years ago. I have said it many times before and I will say it again and again. PEOPLE ARE NOT GOING TO COME TO WHAT WE HAVE UNTIL THEY ARE FIRST CONVINCED THAT WHAT THEY HAVE IS ERRONEOUS. Why would people listen to freethinkers when they are already convinced they have the truth. We have nothing to offer as long as they mistakenly believe they are wallowing in veracity. First you must show them the massive error of their ways before they will begin to realize that they have embarked on a journey to nowhere and will be open to alternatives. And that takes time, effort, study, and money. Unfortunately, there is some truth in your broad criticism of freethinkers in general. We, too, have encountered a sizable amount of laziness, indifference, and apathy and that is why we have so often criticized the "throwing rocks at a distance" approach. Far too many freethinkers have never realized that having the truth by no means assures victory. Money and numbers can overcome reality almost indefinitely. Give propagandists enough money and diligent workers and they can prove anything is true to large numbers of people no matter how absurd. After all, if people will believe that individuals can rise from the dead, sticks can turn into serpents, donkey's can talk, women can turn into pillars of salt and the sun can stop moving, what could possibly be beyond the realm of feasibility? People will believe anything as long as it is dressed up in rationalizations, obfuscations, and justifications. Given enough resources, there is nothing so preposterous that a sizable body of people can't be convinced of its validity.

Letter #496 Continues (Part c)

By now you may be wondering how I can read your publication and not throw my Bible into the abyss of the inane? Well, quite frankly, I have not as yet found any compelling reason to. Upon hearing my statement, you may be inclined to accuse me of a faith devoid of reality and desperately wanting to believe old superstitions. Yet, while I am sure that this reasoning may be applied to some Christians, it can not be applied to all.

Editor's Response to Letter #496 (Part c)

If you have read all 113 issues of BE, which I doubt JB, and haven't found any compelling reason to abandon the Bible, then you have not only corroborated the importance of early indoctrination, if not brainwashing, but exposed a desperate need for something to cling to despite all information, logic, evidence and common sense to the contrary. You don't believe the Bible because of the evidence; you believe it despite the evidence. Your willingness to abandon reason in favor of faith shows vividly why religion in general and the Bible in particular are inimical to man's welfare and no amount of intellectualizing can prove otherwise. Your lot in life is so distasteful that you desperately cling to that which is most alluring, consoling, and comforting out of a personal feeling of inadequacy, regardless of what reality says to the contrary.

And finally, I can't help but wonder how you obtain BE at all since you are not on our mailing list. Don't you feel an obligation to pay for what you receive or do you feel that freeloading is a natural and understandable Christian trait. Or perhaps you are subscribing under another name?

Similarly, I suppose you could be painted with the same broad brush. Rationalizing is a two way street. Nonbelievers have just as much to gain from their unbelief as they say Christians do from their belief. Our indictment could be summarized: "Nonbelievers do not want to believe, therefore they refuse to bend their knee to the Lord Jesus Christ. Thus disallowing any possible way of reconciling difficult passages of Scripture. For unbelievers there is no path around the way they misinterpret the Scriptures." We love it when someone says to us, "Here is a problem that no Christian can answer." It gives us the opportunity to show that the issues you bring up in your newsletter can, in fact, be answered.

Editor's Response to Letter #496 (Part d)

A cardinal mistake made by all religious people such as yourself, JB, is that you start with your own desires and then project them on to reality. You want salvation; you want a savior, you want a better "next world;" you want a book with all the answers, so you make reality conform to your wishes. Rational, scientific people operate in reverse. They go where the evidence leads, although it may be uncomfortable at times, and then formulate their conclusions. You say that "nonbelievers do not want to believe" which has nothing to do with reality. I have no problem with believing anything, but first I look at all relevant data which you all but ignore. Does the evidence bear out what the Bible says about Jesus and is it in accord with what we know about everyday life? Do people rise from the dead? Do sticks turn into snakes? Of course not. And above all, would somebody be utterly devoid of logic if they ignored the Law of Contradiction? Would they have taken leave of their senses? Of course! Can two contradictory statements both be true simultaneously and in the same sense. Definitely not! And, yet, you are asking us to accept contradictory comments when you ask us to look upon the Bible as the infallible, inerrant word of a perfect being. We debated this very issue with James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries several issues ago. The problem lies not with our ego but your credo. (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

Letter #497 from JF of Decatur, Illinois

Hello Dennis. A point made in your April Commentary requires a correction. Your usage of Jehovah implies that it is synonymous with YAHWEH as the biblical name of god. In actuality the name JEHOVAH was unknown in antiquity. Ancient Hebrews would not speak the name of god out of fear and reverence, resulting in the placement of the word "ADONAI" (Lord) into the texts to be read wherever "YHVH" appeared. Fourteenth century Christian translators, unaware of the Hebrew custom, somehow derived "JEHOVAH" from a combination of "ADONAI" and "YHVH." Scholars have long known that "JEHOVAH" is an incorrect rendering, which is interesting when one considers the implications for the Jehovah's Witnesses sect.

Regarding Jesus' (mis) use of O.T verses? Scholars have found that the knowledge of the OT which the NT attributes to Jesus more often than not is from the Greek Septuagint and not the Hebrew scriptures. This gets interesting when you have a Jewish Jesus arguing against other Jews with a Greek mistranslation of the Jewish scriptures. A prime example of this is in Mark 7:1-8, where Jesus argued against the Pharisees by quoting Isaiah 29:13 from the Greek. This translation is at odds with the Hebrew, which would not have served Jesus' argument.... Keep up the good work!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #498 from KB of Los Angeles, California

Dear Dennis.... Inerrantists claim that the Bible is one self-consistent whole, while in reality it is a bunch of inconsistent holes. Your impatience with these apologists shows more and more in BE. Again I advise you to use their arguments only as examples and not address them back directly. I tried to get on a local talk show to talk about this stuff, but to no avail.

Letter #499 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California

Dear Dennis.... I couldn't help but be impressed by the letter of the Canadian gentleman you published in #112. It seems to me that he epitomizes the thrust of B.E. and is an inspiration to free thinkers everywhere. His is a model for free thinkers everywhere. His is a model well worth aspiring to and I deem it necessary for us all to lean in the direction of taking it to the Christians. It seems to me that once we are armed with the tools of B.E., the fallacy of the Christian position becomes apparent. Thanks to B.E. I am now at a place where I feel ready to challenge any Christian on their doctrine, and I hope the opportunity comes my way. As a method of preparation I would highly recommend to others your two taped speeches to the Humanists, as well as the commentaries in issues 58-60.

Editor's Response to Letter #499

Dear RS. You might be interested in knowing that no letter in the history of this publication ever generated as many phone calls, comments, and letters to the editor as the last letter in the April 1992 Issue (#488) from RM of Red Deer, Canada. The response was exceptional and clearly shows that RM struck a nerve by going to the very heart of what this publication is all about and what many freethinkers are either doing, planning to do, or would like to do. I am glad I encouraged him to write a letter to us after his debate with some Christians in a college auditorium; otherwise, his activities would have never been known by our readership. Apparently he has been an inspiration for many people who would like to engage Christians in their own territory.

Letter #500 from RN of Moscow, Idaho

Dear Dennis. Thank you for the latest issue of BE. I can't tell you how absolutely delighted I was to read the letter from RM of Red Deer, Alta. I was born and raised in the East Kootenay region, in the upper Columbia Valley, in British Columbia, just over the mountains from Alberta. So I know all about Canada's Bible Belt....

Letter #501 from MJ of Wenatchee, Washington

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... I think you are doing an excellent job. Please continue with this valuable work.

July 1992

In recent months a couple of letters expressing dismay that we would attribute anything less than perfect behavior to the biblical god were sent to this office. For years we have assumed this issue was laid to rest by pages 5 and 6 in the 3rd Issue. But apparently many biblicists remain either unaware of, or unconvinced by, what appeared long ago. Because our prior discussion was contained within a response to a letter and probably should have appeared in a Commentary, and because the earlier approach provided citations rather than quotations, and because the amount of relevant data has expanded since 1983, we are going to provide a much more comprehensive and detailed analysis of God's deeds in the Bible. This supposedly perfect being committed all of the following acts in "Holy" Scripture and textual evidence will be provided for corroboration.

GOD

HE CREATES EVIL: "I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things" (Isa. 45:7). "Is it not from the mouth of the Most High that good and evil come?" (Lam. 3:38). "...that I may repent of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings" (Jer. 26:3). "...all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin" (Jer. 36:3). "I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live. And I polluted them in their own gifts...." (Ezek. 20:25-26). "For thus saith the Lord; as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them" (Jer. 32:42). "...shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?" (Amos 3:6). See also: Jer. 11:11, 14:16, 18:11, 19:3, 19:15, 23:12, 26:13, 26:19, 35:17, 36:31, 40:2, 42:10, 42:17, 44:2, 45:5, 49:37, 51:64, Ezek. 6:10, Micah 2:3, 1 Kings 21:29, 2 Chron. 34:24, and 2 Chron. 34:28

EVIL COMES FROM THE LORD: "it came to pass, when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: so Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him" (1 Sam. 16:23). "it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul...." (1 Sam. 18:10). "the evil spirit from the Lord was upon Saul...." (1 Sam. 19:9). "Saul's servants said unto him, Behold now, an evil spirit from God troubles thee" (1 Sam. 16:15). "the spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubles him" (1 Sam. 16:14). "...evil came down from the Lord unto the gate of Jerusalem" (Micah 1:12). "Thus saith the Lord, Behold I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun. For thou did it secretly: but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun" (2 Sam. 12:11-12). "God sent an evil spirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem...." (Judges 9:23). See also: 1 Kings 14:10, 2 Kings 21:12, and Isa. 31:2.

HE DECEIVES: "O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived...." (Jer. 20:7). "if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel" (Ezek. 14:9). "Ah, Lord God! Surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reaches unto the soul" (Jer. 4:10). "...God sends upon them a strong delusion, to make them believe what is false, so that all may be condemned who did not believe the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness" (2 Thess. 2:9-12). See also: 2 Chron. 18:18-22, 1 Kings 22:20-23 and Jer. 15:18.

HE TELLS PEOPLE TO LIE: "...and thou (Moses--Ed.) shalt come, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt, and you shall say unto him, The Lord God of the Hebrews hath met with us: and now let us go, we beseech thee, three days journey into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to the Lord our God" (Ex. 3:18) and "afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness." God is telling Moses to lie because the real reason is to escape.

"Samuel said, How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the Lord said, Take a heifer with thee, and say, I am come to sacrifice to the Lord" (1 Sam. 16:2). The Lord told Samuel to lie also, since he is actually going out to meet a son of Jesse to anoint him king. Yet, we are told in Prov. 12:22 that, "Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord."

HE LIES: Joshua 7:1 says, "The people of Israel broke faith in regard to the devoted things; for Achan...took some of the devoted things; and the anger of the Lord burned against the people of Israel" and God responds by saying in the 11th verse, "Israel has sinned, and they have also transgressed my covenant...." Yet, God did not tell the truth. Only Achan sinned, not all Israel, and Achan admits as much in the 20th verse by saying, "Indeed I have sinned against the Lord God of Israel...."

"He (David--Ed.) shall build a house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever" (2 Sam. 7:13) and to David God says, "thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever: thy throne shall be established for ever" (2 Sam. 7:16). God's prophecy failed. He didn't tell the truth. The Davidic line ended with Zedekiah and there was no Davidic king for 450 years when the Maccabeans established a dynasty, the first king being Aristobulus. Since the end of the Maccabean dynasty there has never been a king of the Jews. Second Kings 24:14 proves as much by saying, "He carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths. None remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land."

If viewed together the following verses also show God engaged in prevarication. "...of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eat thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17), "God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die" (Gen. 3:3), "the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die" (Gen. 3:4), and "all the days that Adam lived were 930 years and he died" (Gen. 5:5). God said Adam and Eve would die on the day they ate of the tree and the devil said they would not. They ate of it and Adam lived to be 930 years old. In other words, God lied and the devil told the truth. Yet, according to Titus 1:2 "God never lies."

And finally, in Gen. 3:14 God said to the serpent, "...upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life...." Serpents do not now and never have eaten dust. If the serpent represents the Devil, he does not eat dust either; so, in either case God did not tell the truth.

HE REWARDS LIARS: Ex. 1:15-20 says, "The king of Egypt said to the Hebrew midwives, whose names were Shiphrah and Puah, 'When you help the Hebrew women in childbirth and observe them on the delivery stool, if it is a boy, kill him; but if it is a girl, let her live.' The midwives, however, feared God and did not do what the king of Egypt had told them to do; they let the boys live. Then the king of Egypt summoned the midwives and asked them, 'Why have you done this? Why have you let the boys live?' The midwives answered Pharaoh, 'Hebrew women are not like Egyptian women; they are vigorous and give birth before the midwives arrive.' So God was kind to the midwives and the people increased and became even more numerous." The midwives lied and God rewarded them by being kind to them.

Joshua 2:3-6 says, "So the king of Jericho sent this message to Rahab, 'Bring out the men who came to you and entered your house, because they have come to spy out the whole land.' But the woman had taken the two men and hidden them. She said, 'Yes, the men came to me, but I did not know where they had come from. At dusk, when it was time to close the city gate, the men left. I don't know which way they went. Go after them quickly. You may catch up with them.'" (But she had taken them up to the roof and hidden them under the stalks of flax she had laid out on the roof.) Rahab lied about where the men were and yet James 2:25 says, "...was not Rahab the prostitute considered righteous for what she did when she gave lodging to the spies and sent them off in a different direction?"

And 2 Kings 10:18-21 says, "Jehu brought all the people together and said to them, 'Ahab served Baal a little; Jehu will serve him much. Now summon all the prophets of Baal, all his ministers and all his priests. See that no one is missing, because I am going to hold a great sacrifice for Baal. Anyone who fails to come will no longer live. But Jehu was acting deceptively in order to destroy the ministers of Baal.... all the ministers of Baal came; not one stayed away. They crowded into the temple of Baal until it was full from one end to the other.'" And as verses 25 to 30 show Jehu ordered his guards to go in and kill all those who worshipped Baal. After the bloodshed and killing had concluded the Lord said to Jehu in verse 30, "Because you have done well in accomplishing what is right in my eyes and have done to the house of Ahab all I had in mind to do, your descendants will sit on the throne of Israel to the 4th generation." How is that for a God of mercy! (TO BE CONTINUED)

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #496 from an Anonymous Dayton Observer Continues from Last Month (Part e)

For some time my colleagues and I entertained the possibility of engaging you in an open debate through your publication. However, it has become evident that he who controls the format, and has the last word, looks the best. Since you are the editor and are able to select and edit what appears in your paper, you will always have the betterment of our exchange.

Editor's Response to Letter #496 (Part e)

What a cop out! If you don't like the way you appear in an exchange, then write another letter telling why. I can provide an unqualified guarantee to you and all your associates that I will give you a far more open and fair hearing in this publication than I would ever be accorded in any Christian publication. I know that for a fact. I have seen Christian censorship in action and believe me it is both thorough and ugly. Anyone who doubts this has never tried to oppose Christianity in general and the Bible in particular. They need to leave their ivory towers and enter the trenches to find out what the world is really like. When Christians don't like your message, they seek to make sure it is either distorted on future occasions or no future occasions occur. I have come to the conclusion that if you really want to be heard on any regular basis, then you had better get your own station or your own program. Guest appearances and calling in to register your views on various programs is little more than anemic.

Letter #496 Continues (Part f)

There is no telling how much material you have carefully eliminated from the correspondence that appears in the editions of your publication in order to suppress from your readership any validity of the Christian faith.

For example, I have in my possession a copy of a letter that was sent to you several months ago. This correspondence appeared in your newsletter; however, it was edited nearly beyond all recognition to the original. Thus your bias prohibited you from utilizing the letter in its entirety. Had you not meticulously dismembered the correspondence, several statements would have presented the fact that there are Christians who are open minded and intelligent. The letter was not lengthy, so it cannot be reasoned that it had to be abbreviated because of space requirements.

If you had utilized this technique once, there is no way of telling just how many other times material that did not suit your objections has been edited from the published copies of "Biblical Errancy." Since you publish the names and addresses of some of your readers, I am considering forwarding copies of the original letter and the "Biblical Errancy" abridged version. I feel in all honesty they have the right to know that they are only getting part of the exchange.

Editor's Response to Letter #496 (Part f)

There is no telling how much I edited, JB, because there is not much to tell. A conservative estimate would be that over 90% of the letters that have been sent to BE over the years have been published. Those that were not put in were either poorly written, incoherent, not germane, trivial, personal, excluded by request, too abstract, too voluminous, or too repetitious. None were kept out because their arguments were too effective, if that is what you mean to imply. In fact, on a couple of occasions I have become worried because not enough letters were arriving to provide sufficient material for the Dialogue and Debate section.

As far as your censored letter is concerned, I not only challenge but dare you to produce it. You have made a direct assault on the integrity of this publication and are obliged to either put up or slither away. Wasn't there a serpent somewhere in history that engaged in the same kind of beguilement? You say, "there is no way of telling how many other times material...has been edited." Do you have evidence that material of a substantive nature has been edited? If so, let's see it. By threatening to send letters to the subscribers of BE, you are not only revealing the lengths to which you will go to divide BE from its readers but the unscrupulous nature of your Christian strategy and philosophy. With millions of Christians exhibiting behavior similar to your own, no wonder they have an overwhelming psychological need for confession and repentance. Their conscience must be driving them up a wall.

Letter #496 Continues (Part g)

In closing, it continues to be my observation that much of your readership is lazy; merely looking for easy questions to stump the believer. Further, most are not interested in seeing Christians set free from their "superstitious mind sets." Their only desire is to humiliate them by bashing them over the head with apparent Bible "contradictions." Nonetheless, they are no match for anyone who diligently studies the Bible and knows its content. Yes, I admit you could ask me more questions than I could answer. But that would only prove the adage that, "A fool can ask more questions in three minutes than a wise man can answer in a lifetime." While it is not my desire to address you as a fool, I desire only to make the point that it is easier to ask a question than it is to answer one.

Editor's Response to Letter #496 (Part g)

My goodness! You are something of a mind-reader aren't you. You know the philosophies, the attitudes, and motivation of our readership without having met even a small fraction of our subscribers. Granted, there are freethinkers whose only goal seems to be bashing Christians, but they are not the kind of people who are attracted to BE or concentrate on the Bible's inconsistencies. They generally prefer the "throwing rocks from a distance" approach. You may not have called me a fool but you certainly compared me to one and I'm having some difficulty making a distinction. If there is any group that should not be calling others fools, it is believers in religion in general and the Bible in particular. Afterall, didn't Paul concede in 1 Cor. 4:10 that, "We are fools for Christ's sake." And that is by no means the only denigratory remark one could accurately employ. If I can ask more biblical questions in three minutes than you can answer in a lifetime, that would seem to be pretty good evidence there are no answers. After all, isn't the Bible supposed to be the book with the answers and isn't a lifetime rather long to seek answers from a book that has them readily available? Christian theologians have never been known for taking anywhere near a lifetime to formulate an answer to anything no matter how complex.

Letter #496 Concludes (Part h)

Finally, may I make a suggestion? Consider sending complimentary copies of your newsletter to several of the major apologists of the Christian faith. Challenge them to meet you in a live, face-to-face, no holds barred, debate. You are much too passive. You need to look beyond the minor, localized debates you have had thus far on radio and set goals for major debates with leading apologists. You need to go face-to-face with a well-known defender of the Christian faith. Only when you are able to dwarf clearly and unequivocally the likes of Norman Geisler or Josh McDowell will you be taken seriously by the Christian community.

I hope you will have the courage to print this letter uncut in a future issue of "Biblical Errancy." However, I expect at this point that if it is featured, it will be edited to your advantage. But then again it is your paper, isn't it?

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #496 (Part h)

As you can see you expected wrong, didn't you JB. Was anything edited out of your letter? Why would we abbreviate your letter when we have published much more biting criticisms in the past. Do you think you are somehow superior to all those critics of BE who have gone before? It took very little courage to print your letter, believe me.

As far as debates go, I have said many times that I will go anywhere and debate anyone, providing the financial arrangements are satisfactory. Wealth has never been one of my strong points and the absence of same has been the single greatest obstacle to the growth of our cause. I can assure you that Josh McDowell, Norman Geisler, Gleason Archer, John Ankerberg and many other apologists know BE exists and I am available for engagements. BE is by no means a stranger in their midst. I don't need to send them anything. I debated Dr. Peter Ruckman, Founder of the Pensacola Bible Institute, who knows the Bible as well as anyone you could suggest, Dr. Robert Morey, Executive Director of the Research and Education Foundation, and Dr. H. Wayne House of the Dallas Theological Seminary. Somebody from Pennsylvania took out a subscription to BE for Geisler many years ago, so he is by no means a stranger to BE, and the producer of Ankerberg's show and I have clashed on the telephone and by correspondence on more than one occasion. I can vividly remember him telling me that Robert Ingersoll was full of prunes and it was all I could do to keep from telling him what he, his Book, and his religion were full of. I can assure you that passivity and anonymity are not the problem; censorship and selectivity are.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #502 from MA of Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. I've never found any passage in the bible that condemns abortion. But there is a very interesting story in the book of Numbers where the LORD, himself, causes an abortion to punish a woman for adultery. It is found in NUMBER 5:11 to the end of the chapter. The jealous husband takes his wife to the priest who makes her undergo a trial by ordeal, in which she is forced to drink filthy water. The NEW ENGLISH BIBLE says, "If she has let herself become defiled and has been unfaithful to her husband, then when the priest makes her drink the water that brings out the truth and the water has entered her body, she will suffer a miscarriage or untimely birth, and her name will become an example in adjuration among her kin. But if the woman has not let herself become defiled and is pure, then her innocence is established and she will bear her child."

Letter #503 from RS of Denton, Texas (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Last time I wrote you (2/91), I was happy to tell you that I had founded the Student Atheist Organization at the University of North Texas. I am sorry to say that this organization has since folded. Our officers were graduating and nobody else wanted to take the reigns. I am, however, happy to announce that while our organization existed, we achieved many things.

One of the things we did as a group was sponsor several information tables in the Student Union Building. At these tables, we handed out several pamphlets from BE and FFRF. We also handed out scores of sample issues of BE, sold dozens of buttons and bumper stickers, and answered the many hysterical questions and frenzied accusations with calm, logical answers. The most successful tables we hosted were at a series of freshman orientation welcome nights. There were tables from many different student groups at this event, but mine seemed to be the busiest. Not only were we seen, heard, and debated by almost the entire entering freshman class, we were also on display to many of their parents. I have found that it is very practical to have several versions of the Bible with me when manning such a table. When Christians wish to argue the "holey" Bible, I am very responsive and I use their preferred version. However, when Christians wish to argue from an extra-biblical standing, I can respond equally as well on topics of philosophy, science, and ethics. I tend to let the Christian choose the battleground. I never relinquish control of the discussion; I just let them choose the topic. I have found that when they are beaten on biblical grounds, they retreat to extra-biblical grounds. When they are defeated in this area, they revert once again to the Bible. Once they realize that they have been beaten on all fronts, they tell me that they will pray for me, grab a flyer with my mailing address and phone number, and leave. I usually receive several late-night phone calls after such an event and they all sound pretty much the same: "Jesus loves you and so do I!" followed by an immediate hang-up.

I've always been amazed how much the Bible is purchased and how seldom it is read. I personally have read from cover to cover the KJ and NI versions of the Bible as well as the Book of Mormon, the Koran, the Satanic Bible, and the Witch's Bible Complete. I personally prefer using the NIV Study Bible, so all quotes used in this letter are from this version unless otherwise noted. One thing that almost all Christians will claim when first questioned is that they not only have read their Bible from cover to cover but that they have also studied it in great detail. I have discovered that it is very easy to pull passages out of the Koran, the Book of Mormon, or the Satanic Bible and ask from where the quotations came. 100% of the time, the Christians think that it comes from the Christian Bible if it is a "morally correct" statement. I can also read many passages from the Christian Bible and be told that they are from the Satanic Bible. If the passage is ethically "good," the Christians are absolutely positive that they have read it in the Christian Bible, but if the passage is "bad," they figure that it came from somewhere else. Christians seem always to be shocked when I show them the source and have them read it for themselves. I then mention that if the passage is so "good" by their standards, why was it not worth mentioning by their god and their bible, the source of all morals? If the passage is so "bad" why weren't they shocked enough to remember it when they read the Bible? I am yet to receive an intelligent answer. Instead, all I get are excuses and admissions of their not having ever read the book.

I also have been writing responses to the many Christian tracts which I have inevitably received. I always try to figure out from which version of the Bible the tract is quoting and to use only this version for my reply. I also make it a point to return a copy of my response to the person gracious enough to have given me the original tract. I try to keep a few copies of each tract response and a few "non-tracts" from BE and FFRF on hand at all times. This allows me to respond immediately upon receiving "The Four Spiritual Laws" for the 23rd time. (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

Letter #504 from RS of Glendale, Arizona

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... My compliments regarding your recent rebuttals to James White. You did such a good job of exposing the error and irrationality of his positions that I almost felt sorry for him. But after some time analyzing his methods and positions, both in your newsletter and more extensively in what he has written on BBSs in the Phoenix area, I have gradually and reluctantly concluded that he doesn't really believe the Bible to be inerrant.

For instance, in a debate showing that the writer of Lev. 11:5-6 erred by having Yahweh incorrectly identify hares and rock badgers as cud-chewers, Mr. White tried his familiar evasion tactics: like claiming that the particular chewing motions of these animals might have led observers to believe that they were cud-chewers--as if that leaves Yahweh correct for so identifying them. Eventually, after much persistent debate, he was reduced to a defense of claiming that while it is true that these animals are not cud-chewers, it is unreasonable to expect this ancient document to have a greater degree of technical specificity than what would be expected of other documents of that era--though other documents are not claiming to be divinely-inspired by the inerrant being that purportedly created these animals. Then he reverted to claiming inerrancy while also refusing to give his apparently unique definition for that term. So, because of this incident and others, I have come to believe that though he likely once did believe the Bible to be inerrant, he now knows it is not. For one reason or another--for instance, his substantial personal investment of schooling in theology--he continues to argue for the position of inerrancy.... Keep up the good work!

GOD

HE ORDERS MEN TO BECOME DRUNKEN: "Then tell them, 'This is what the Lord Almighty, the God of Israel, says: Drink, get drunk and vomit, and fall to rise no more because of the sword I will send among you' (Jer. 25:27).

HE REWARDS THE FOOL AND THE TRANSGRESSOR: "The great God that formed all things both rewards the fool, and rewards the transgressors" (Prov. 26:10).

HE DELIVERS A MAN (JOB) INTO SATAN'S HANDS: "The Lord said unto Satan, Behold, he is in thine hand; but save his life" (Job 2:6).

HE MINGLES A PERVERSE SPIRIT: "The Lord has mingled a perverse spirit in the midst thereof; and they have caused Egypt to err in every work thereof..." (Isa. 19:14).

HE IS NOT OMNIPOTENT OR ALL POWERFUL: "the Lord was with Judah; And he drove out the inhabitants of the mountains; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron" (Judges 1:19).

HE CAUSES INDECENCY: God orders that the king of Assyria is to "lead away the Egyptian prisoners, and the Ethiopian captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Egypt" (Isaiah 20:4).

HE SPREADS DUNG ON FACES: "Behold I will corrupt your seed, and spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts...." (Mal. 2:3).

HE ORDERS STEALING: "...and ye shall spoil the Egyptians" (Ex. 3:22). "...and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God" (Ezek. 39:10). "As for the women, the children, the livestock and everything else in the city, you may take these as plunder for yourselves. And you may use the plunder the Lord your God gives you from your enemies" (Deut. 20:14).

HE MADE FALSE AND UNFULFILLED PROPHECIES: In Jonah 3:4 God said, "yet 40 days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." But the 10th verse says, "God saw their works, that they turned from their evil ways; and God repented of the evil, that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not." In other words, He who knows the future changed his mind, repented, and Nineveh was not overthrown. His prophecy failed.

In Gen. 15:13 God said to Abraham, "Know for certain that your descendants will be strangers in a country not their own, and they shall be enslaved and mistreated 400 years." Acts 7:6 says the same. But Ex. 12:40 says, "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was 430 years." God's prophecy failed by 30 years.

Another deific prophecy is found in Gen. 15:16 which says, "...in the 4th generation they (Abraham's descendants--Ed.) shall come here again...." God told Abraham that his descendants would return in the 4th generation. Yet, if Abraham is included, it actually occurred during the 6th generation. The generations were: Abraham, Issac, Levi (Ex. 1:2), Kohath (Ex. 6:16), Amram (Ex. 6:18), and Moses (Ex. 6:20).

In Gen. 17:3, 8 and Ex. 32:13 God told Abraham that he would give to him and his descendants all of Canaan for an eternal possession. But Acts 7:5 says, "He gave him (Abraham--Ed.) no inheritance here, not even a foot of ground. But God promised him that he and his descendants after him would possess the land, even though at that time Abraham had no child" and Heb. 11:13 says, "All these people...did not receive the things promised; they only saw them and welcomed them from a distance." The Bible itself admits that God's promise to Abraham failed.

In Gen. 35:10 God said to Jacob, "thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name: and he called his name Israel." Yet, 11 chapters later Gen. 46:2 says, "God spoke to Israel in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob. And he said, Here am I."

Lastly, 1 Sam. 23:12 says, "David asked, 'Will the citizens of Keilah surrender me and my men to Saul?' And the Lord said, 'They will.'" This prophecy never occurred, because the opposite happened. Saul was delivered into David's hands, not once but twice.

HE CHANGES HIS MIND: "The Lord said: I have forgiven them at your request...." (Num. 14:20). "God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil, that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not" (Jonah 3:10). "God said to Balaam, 'Do not go with them. You must not put a curse on those people, because they are blessed.'.... That night God came to Balaam and said, 'Since these men have come to summon you, go with them, but do only what I tell you.' Balaam got up in the morning, saddled his donkey and went with the princes of Moab. But God was very angry when he went, and the angel of the Lord stood in the road to oppose him...." (Num. 22:20-22). God told Balaam not to go, then changed his mind and told him to go and punished him when he did. Talk about indecision!

Finally, in 2 Kings 20:1 Isaiah came to the sick Hezekiah and told him he would die and not recover according to God's word. But according to the 4th and 5th verses God told Isaiah to go back and tell Hezekiah that because God had heard his prayer and seen his tears he would be healed and live 15 more years. Again, God changed his mind.

HE CAUSES ADULTERY: "This is what the Lord says: 'Out of your own household I am going to bring calamity upon you. Before your very eyes I will take your wives and give them to one who is close to you, and he will lie with your wives in broad daylight. You did it in secret, but I will do this thing in broad daylight before all Israel'" (2 Sam. 12:11-12).

HE ORDERS THE TAKING OF A HARLOT: "...the Lord said to Hosea, Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms: for the land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lord" (Hosea 1:2).

HE ORDERS A MAN TO PURCHASE HIS WIFE: "The Lord said to me, 'Go show your love to your wife again, though she is loved by another and is an adultress. Love her as the Lord loves the Israelites, though they turn to other gods.... So I brought her for 15 shekels of silver and about a homer and a half of barley. Then I told her, 'You are to live with me many days....'" (Hosea 3:1-3).

HE KILLS REPEATEDLY: "there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the 250 men that offered incense" (Num. 16:35). "the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died" (Num. 21:6). "See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no god with me: I kill, and I make alive; I wound and I heal...." (Deut. 32:39). "The Lord smote the men of Beth-shemesh, because they had looked into the ark of the Lord, even he smote of the people 50,070 men: and the people lamented, because the Lord had smitten many of the people with a great slaughter" (1 Sam. 6:19). "The Lord kills, and makes alive: he brings down to the grave, and brings up" (1 Sam. 2:6). "the hand of the Lord was heavy upon them of Ashdod, and he destroyed them, and smote them...." (1 Sam. 5:6). "it came to pass about 10 days after, that the Lord smote Nabal, that he died" (1 Sam. 25:38). "Who smote great nations and slew mighty kings...." (Psalms 135:10). "For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many" (Isaiah 66:16). "I will dash them one against another, even the father and the sons together, saith the Lord: I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them" (Jer. 13:14). "I have sent among you the pestilence after the manner of Egypt: your young men have I slain with the sword...." (Amos 4:10). "For our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29). Also note: Gen. 38:7,10, Ex. 22:23-24, Num. 11:1, Deut. 32:41-42, Joshua 10:10-11, 1 Sam. 5:9, Psalms 136:17-18, Hosea 9:16, Amos 2:3, Ex. 4:24, 2 Sam. 6:6-7, and 2 Kings 5:7.

HE ORDERS KILLING: "ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword. And five of you shall chase a hundred, and a hundred of you shall put 10,000 to flight: and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword" (Lev. 26:7-8). "the Lord said to Moses, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel. And Moses said to the judges of Israel. Slay every one his men that were joined to Baal" (Num. 25:4-5). "Vex the Midianites and smite them" (Num. 25:17). "But of the cities of these people, which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breathes. But thou shalt utterly destroy them...as the Lord thy God has commanded thee" (Deut. 20:16-17). "So Joshua smote all the country of the hills...he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the Lord God of Israel commanded" (Joshua 10:40). "As I listened, god said to the others, 'Follow him through the city and kill, without showing pity or compassion. Slaughter old men, young men and maidens, women and children....'" (Ezek. 9:5-6). "And the Lord sent you on a mission, saying 'Go and completely destroy those wicked people, the Amalekites; make war on them until you have wiped them out.'" (1 Sam. 15:18). "Attack the land of Merathaim and those who live in Pekod. Pursue, kill and completely destroy them' declares the Lord. Do everything I have commanded you" (Jer. 50:21). "Now go, attack the Amalekites and totally destroy everything that belongs to them. Do not spare them; put to death men and women, children and infants, cattle and sheep, camels and donkeys" (1 Sam. 15:3). Also note: Ex. 32:27-28, Num. 21:34-35, 31:7-8, 35:19-21, and Jer. 48:10. DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #505 from BCB of Cambridge, Mass.

Dear Dennis. On your tape (PART 1): an Atlanta radio show with host Mike Malloy; you accused Yahweh of being unjust: a murderer, a rapist, a racist, a pornographer and a hypocrite (The numerous misspellings in this letter will not be corrected--Ed.). When you were asked for proof; you cited: DT. 21:2, 2K(3K in my Bible) 18:27, PR. 5:19, EZ. 23:21, Cant. 5:4. None of these passages prove your point. DT. 21:2 expiates a secret murder through a ritual sacrifice of a skate goat. This is similar to an out of court settlement. Where both plaintiff and defendant decide its best not to pursue their grievance any further. Isn't this wise and just? 3K.18:27,40 deals with the weeding out of treacherous false prophets and their execution.... The Jewish state during the time of Elias was a theocracy: ruled by Yahweh. False prophets and religions were a threat to Yahweh's government....The Canticles of Canticles is about the "birds and the bees" between a husband and wife. Are you ashamed of your sexuality? Could you send me the chapter and verse where Yahweh orders a murder, a rape or mass murder, mass rape?....

Editor's Response to Letter #505

Dear BCB. You are referring to a radio program in which I participated that occurred around 1987. If my memory serves me correctly, you have erred in several important respects. First, I never used the word "Yahweh" once and have always used the word God. Second, I never called the biblical god a rapist or a racist; so all your mass rape nonsense is just that, nonsense. Third, your book has 3Kings instead of 2Kings probably because you are using a Catholic version of the Bible. Christians can't even agree on the correct version to use. Canticles is the word used by Roman Catholics in reference to the Song of Solomon. Fourth, Canticles has more to do with bawdy and befouled than the birds and the bees. Fifth, where did you get the idea that Canticles was referring to activities occurring between a husband and wife? Would you care to cite chapter and verse to show that a marriage relationship existed. Sixth, I fail to see how your explanations adequately explain the verses I cited on the radio program. And lastly, if you seek chapter and verse to support my exposure on the radio and elsewhere of God's horrific behavior, I strongly suggest you read the monthly Commentaries on GOD that will appear in BE starting with the June 1992 issue. Proving God ordered people to kill others, for example, is quite easy. I am surprised you would even question the veracity of that assertion, unless, of course, you are far less acquainted with the Bible than you would like to admit. I'll provide you with more proof texts than you ever imagined to demonstrate that the biblical god exhibits numerous traits and characteristics that are little short of demonic. Is it any wonder that Ingersoll said on page 237 of Volume 2 in his Works, "It is impossible for me to conceive of a character more utterly detestable than that of the Hebrew god."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #503 from RS of Denton, Texas, Concludes from Last Month (Part b)

I have recently been re-reading several of my back-issues of BE as well as listening to my BE tapes and I have a few comments, suggestions, and statements of constructive criticism.

I believe it was on tape #27 that talk show host David Gold asked you and Dr. House to give your backgrounds in Greek and Hebrew. You have stated before why you do not feel that knowing these languages is of any importance, but you did not explain this to Mr. Gold and to Dr. House at this time. I agree with your reason that knowledge of Greek and Hebrew is not important when discussing the alleged inerrancy of the Bible. If the scholars who translated the Bible use "incorrect" terms, why is the Bible not re-translated using the "correct" words? One example which the apologists try to use against you is the true meaning of the Hebrew term for "perfect" when discussing Job and Noah. You have stated that, being perfect, Job and Noah could not have sinned thereby contradicting Rom. 3:23 which says that "all have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God." Dr. House explains that the Hebrew term for perfect really means mature. What you failed to state is that if this is true, why isn't the word mature used in the Bible? I feel that this would have greatly strengthened your argument. Next, you mention that if Noah was not perfect and actually had sinned, why was he and his family allowed on the ark? Dr. House stated that God had grace on Noah and his family. This seems to be stating that God shows favoritism. However, according to Romans 2:11 and Acts 10:34, "God does not show favoritism." This seems to be another contradiction.

Another comment I have about part of your tapes has to do with your statements on John 14:6 which states that JC is the "way and the truth and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me." I agree with you that this means that everyone must have accepted JC in order to be saved; there are no exceptions. Apologists tend to use Romans 2:14-15 as an exception to John 14's requirement of needing JC. During my listening to four of your tapes (#8, 27, 28, and 29), I have not heard you mention that the passage in Romans does not claim to constrain or modify the JC requirement; it just contradicts the JC requirement. You seem to come right up to the verge of saying it, but I have not heard you actually come out and say it pointblank. It seems to me that the apologists are doing nothing but pointing out contradictions within their own book. When they are foolish enough to do this, you should point it out.

My next topic is the original manuscripts. The apologists are always claiming that any contradictions in today's copies are not in the non-existent original manuscripts. You do an excellent job of pointing out their fallacies on this point, but I would like to point out a couple of additional problems with their arguments. First of all, it would seem that God would want to keep all copies of the original manuscripts accurate so that the obedient Christians would have the correct set of guidelines to follow. Also, it seems that this argument is defeating the apologists' purpose by pointing out that the current Bible is not an independently reliable source. They are trying to demonstrate that the original manuscripts are the only truly reliable word of God, but that the current copies are only reliable in certain portions which are chosen by the apologists.

In the Review section of the BE #105, you dealt with Brooks and Geisler's rationalization of the OT slaughters. It seems to me that all Geisler and Brooks are saying is that might makes right. Evidently, the only reason God is allowed to do the terrible things mentioned throughout the Bible is because there is nobody more powerful to tell him "NO!" Geisler and Brooks mention that if our "thinking were carried out constantly, would one have to repudiate the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the flood in Noah's time too?" While I do not feel that "repudiate" is the correct term, I do agree that the destruction mentioned would fall under the same heading of egotistic, power-hungry slaughter by an unethical, unloving, merciless God.

Returning to my tapes, I have noticed that there are many instances where the host or the guest apologist mention that your example of a biblical error is not a contradiction in the truest sense of the word. I feel that this would be a good point to mention once again that you do not deal strictly in contradictions but in other errors and problems within the Bible as well.

I realize that many of the points I have brought up are nitpicky, but nitpicking is one of the specialties of apologists. I also realize that this letter is very long and I do not expect that it will be printed in whole. I would be interested to know if you see any problems in my above statements. I would like to encourage you to keep up the good work....

Editor's Response to Letter #503

Dear RS. Recommendations are always welcome and yours are duly noted. I would suggest, however, that you try them out on some biblicists and let me know what happens. No theory is worth its salt until it has been tested in the real world. On one point you are completely correct. BE deals with every problem relevant to the Bible's validity and that includes much more than a mere listing of contradictions. Our focus is much broader.

Letter #506 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California

Dear Dennis. As a student of Biblical Errancy, I have researched other writings in the field of Biblical criticism.... It may be interesting to note that the Christian Doctrine generated incredulity from the very start of its miserable career. I have included some of the contradictions of the Bible that were cited by Porphyry in the 3rd Century A.D., just as the Christian Cult was beginning to take root. Even then, men of learning and perception could sense the veiled fraud that was inherent in Christianity. Porphyry, who had collected ammunition from other thinkers of his time, had communicated many of these contradictions to the likes of Jerome and Augustine. He seems to have stirred up a lot of embarrassment then, and many of his contentions still go unanswered today. I hope you may be able to use some of these as ammunition in your own periodical.

A valuable approach to confronting Christian fraud is to be seen in the way you answer apologists. So far, you have answered quite well the letters of apologists who read your periodical. I have often hoped to see the rebuttal of fallacious arguments generated by the big-name apologists like Josh McDowell and the like. By exposing their fallacious harmonies of Bible difficulties, we can defuse the enthusiasm of persons who are impressed by the apologetic argument. So far, I haven't found a book that deals specifically with their apologia, although you have whittled them down to size on quite a few occasions. I would like to read more....

(We are putting into BE the following material submitted by RS in order to show that BE is continuing a battle that began centuries ago--Ed.).

What follows is a list of questions submitted to Jerome and Augustine by Porphyry in his work entitled, Porphyry's Work Against the Christians: An Interpretation."

"If all of God's works are good, why does the Law distinguish between clean and unclean beasts? Did Saul's evil spirit really come from God? Why is sacrifice, which is commanded in the Law, opposed in Psalm 51 and Jeremiah 7:22? Why does the genealogy of Jesus in Matthew list 27 or 28 generations, while that in Luke lists 43 and why does Matthew omit three kings between David and the Captivity? Where was Jesus called Emmanuel? Mark attributed to the demons (5:7 and elsewhere) the statement that Jesus was stronger than they, yet Paul claims in 1 Cor. 2:8 that the 'princes and powers of the world' did not know of his divinity.... Was the Holy Spirit granted to the Apostles before or after the Ascension? How could Christ's rule be without end according to Isaiah 9:7, since he must surrender it to the Father according to 1 Cor. 15:24.

The sayings of Jesus attract some attention. What agreement is there between: 'Let your light shine before men,' and 'Take heed that ye do not your good works before men, to be seen of them' according to Matthew 5:16 and 6:1?, 'The Father is greater than I' and 'I and the Father are one' found in John 10:29-30, 'We know that God hears not sinners' and 'Every one that asks receives' (John 9:31 vs. Matthew 7:8). Why does he call himself Son of Man, when he was Son of a Woman? Why did he deny his mercy to a Canaanite woman, and not to the centurion and the leper of another race? Jesus said, 'All who came before me were thieves and robbers'; was this said of the Prophets? If Tyre and Sidon would have repented at the sight of his mighty works, why did he not perform them there? We are to agree with our adversary quickly; does this apply to the devil? And is the devil the father of the Jews (John 8:44)? How shall one accommodate Jesus saying, 'I pray not for the world' (John 17:9) to 1 John 2:2 --'And not for our sins, but for those of the whole world?'"

RS continues discussing comments by Porphyry by saying, "Questions of this type are proof of the presence of much Scriptural criticism in ancient times.... Much larger remains the contention of Porphyry regarding the folly of Christianity. He played up the contradictions in Scriptures.... In many examples he prepared the way for the historical criticism of our time.... He found fault with Gen. 2:16-17 for the prohibition of the knowledge of good as well as evil,.... In the NT, he concentrated upon the discordant genealogies of Jesus and the rival accounts of his crucifixion and resurrection. He recalled foolish and contradictory sayings of Jesus.... For example, Jesus brought not peace but a sword; he disowned his parents; he forbade salvation to the rich. If God alone is good, how does the good man bring forth out of his heart that which is good (Mark 10:18; Matt. 12:35)? If his witness of himself is not true, how is he the light of the world (John 5:31 and 8:31)? Which of these sayings is true: 'Me ye have not always' or 'Lo, I am with you always' (Matt. 26:2 and 28:20)? Is Peter Satan or a Rock (Matt. 16:18, 23)?.... The disciples were promised that they would drink deadly poison without harm and move mountains, yet Jesus himself was full of fear when challenged to leap from the Temple. The sayings that his followers should eat his flesh and drink his blood (John 6:53)...places his approval upon cannibalism, now held in disgrace by all men.... Jesus himself was guilty of lack of steadfastness when he broke his promise not to go to Jerusalem (John 7:8-10).... He said that the work of salvation had been accomplished (John 17:4) before the Standard of the Cross had been raised.... Today a Porphyry might challenge the claim of Christianity to be the universal religion."

[We included all of the above from the writings of Porphyry to show that intelligent opposition to Christianity has been around from the beginning and many of BE's points were seen by men nearly 2,000 years ago-Ed.]

Letter #507 from RR of Hooks, Texas

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I always enjoy reading B.E. every month, but I was particularly impressed by the lead article in Issue #114, which addresses the very basic issue of why a person should be concerned with Biblical errancy in the first place, and should be of particular value to many who have given very little thought to the possibility that religious beliefs based on the Bible might possibly be harmful to someone. (There are plenty of such people around who do not hold with church teachings and are also pretty much indifferent to them.) Also of importance is the glimpse I get into your concern with such issues as the improvement of social conditions, concern with the environment and the possibility of nuclear war, concern with women's rights, et. al. I realize that these issues are not primarily what B.E. is all about, but since B.E. has only one editor at present, I'm sure it's gratifying to many of us to know what the editor has to say on matters related to religion.

You mentioned your intention to create a tape on the subject. I would welcome this, but in addition I would like to see something along the lines of a tract to distribute along with the other two tracts you've provided, which might be entitled "Can the study of the Bible be harmful?" or some such.

I wish you well and hope to see more on this topic in future issues.

Editor's Response to Letter #507

Dear RR. Right now I am preoccupied with a major audio project that will be explained to our readers in the not-too-distant future; so, we just don't have time to engage in other concerns. Rest assured many programs are under consideration, but time and resources are a restraint.

Issue No. 117

September 1992

With this month's commentary we will continue the listing of God's shortcomings in the Bible that was begun in the June issue.

GOD

(Part 3)

HE LOSES HIS TEMPER. Even though Job 5:2 says, "For wrath kills the foolish man, and envy slays the silly one" God often loses his composure. The following are good examples:

- "...the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger...." (Deut. 13:17).
- "The anger of the Lord was hot against Israel and he sold them into the hand of Mesopotamia's king...." (Judges 3:8).
- "...the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them" (Psalm 21:9).
- "again the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel...." (2 Sam. 24:1).
- "...he made Israel to sin, to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger with their vanities" (1 Kings 16:26).
- "...the Lord revenges, and is furious; the Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserves wrath for his enemies" (Nahum 1:2).
- "the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel...." (2 Kings 13:3).
- "the anger of the Lord was hot against Israel" (Judges 2:20).
- See also: Ex. 32:10, Num. 11:1, 16:46, 32:13-14, 1 Kings 14:9, 15:30, 16:2, 16:7, 16:13, 2 Chron. 34:25, Psalm 18:7, and Jer. 44:6.

HE IS OFTEN JEALOUS.

- "...I the Lord thy God am a jealous God...." (Deut. 5:9, Ex. 20:5).
- "For the Lord thy God is a jealous God among you...." (Deut. 6:15).
- "How long, O Lord? Will you be angry forever? How long will your jealousy burn like fire?" (Psalm 79:5).
- "For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken...." (Ezek. 38:19).
- "God is jealous, and the Lord revenges...." (Nahum 1:2).
- "Thus says the Lord of hosts; I was jealous of Zion with great jealousy, and I was jealous for her with great fury" (Zech. 8:2).
- See also: Ex. 34:14, Deut. 4:24, 29:20, Psalms 78:58, Ezek. 16:38, 36:5-6 and Joshua 24:19.

HE IS NOT EVERYWHERE or OMNIPRESENT. Even though Jer. 23:24 ("Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth?") and Psalm 139:7-12 say the Lord is everywhere, the following verses say he is not.

- "Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden" (Gen. 4:16).
- "the Lord came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men built" (Gen. 11:5).

- "he said to Balak, Stand here by thy burnt offering, while I meet the LORD yonder" (Num. 23:15).
- "...the Lord was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake: and after the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire...." (1 Kings 19:11-12).
- "I, the Lord, will go down and see if what they have done is as bad as the outcry that has reached me. If not, I will know" (Gen. 18:21).
- "So Satan went forth from the presence of the Lord" (Job 1:12 and 2:7),
- and "Jonah rose up to flee to Tarshish from the presence of the Lord...." (Jonah 1:3).
- Also note: Gen. 17:22, 18:33, Ex. 11:4, 20:24, 25:8, Deut. 33:2, Psalm 9:11, 10:1, 14:2, Jer. 23:39, Hosea 11:9, Joel 3:17, Hab. 3:3.

HE DOESN'T KNOW ALL. Even though Prov. 15:3 ("The eyes of the Lord are in every place, keeping watch on the evil and the good") says god sees everything that goes on, the following verses deny his omniscience.

- "the Lord God called to Adam, and said to him, Where art thou?" (Gen. 3:9).
- "the Lord said to Cain, 'Why are you angry? Why is your face downcast?'" (Gen. 4:6).
- "the Lord said to Cain, Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?" (Gen. 4:9).
- "Then the Lord said,...I will go down and see if what they have done is as bad as the outcry that has reached me. If not, I will know" (Gen. 18:20-21).
- "Remember how the Lord your God led you all the way in the desert these forty years, to humble you and to test you in order to know what was in your heart, whether or not you would keep his commands" (Deut. 8:2).
- "you must not listen to the words of that prophet or dreamer. The Lord your God is testing you to find out whether you love him with all your heart and with all your soul" (Deut. 13:3).
- "The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God" (Psalm 14:2).
- "This is what the Sovereign Lord says: Have you come to inquire of me? As surely as I live, I will not let you inquire of me, declares the Sovereign Lord" (Ezek. 20:3).
- Also note: Gen. 22:12, Num. 22:9, 2 Chron. 32:31, Hosea 8:4, Amos 9:3, and Jer. 32:35.

Yet, God does know all according to Prov. 15:3 which says, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, keeping watch on the evil and the good."

HE REPENTS. Even though 1 Sam. 15:29 ("the Strength of Israel will not lie nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent") says that god never repents, the following verses say the opposite.

- It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart" (Gen. 6:6).
- "...the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people" (Ex. 32:14).
- "...the Lord repented that he had made Saul king over Israel" (1 Sam. 15:35).
- "The Lord said, It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king...." (1 Sam. 15:11).
- "...that I the Lord God may repent of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings" (Jer. 26:3).
- "If that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do to them" (Jer. 18:8),
- and "...for I repent of the evil that I have done to you" (Jer. 42:10).

- Also see: Deut. 32:36, Judges 2:18, 2 Sam. 24:16, 1 Chron. 21:15, Psalm 106:45, Jer. 15:6, 18:10, 26:13, 26:19, Amos 7:3, 7:6, Jonah 3:9-10, Joel 2:13, and Hosea 11:8.

HE PRACTICES INJUSTICE. Even though Deut. 32:4 ("He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he") says God is just and fair, the following verses prove the opposite.

- "Then say to the Pharaoh, This is what the Lord says, : Israel is my firstborn son, and I told you, 'Let my son go, so he may worship me,' But you refused to let him go; so I will kill your firstborn son" (Ex. 4:22-23).
- "The Lord is longsuffering, and of great mercy...visiting the iniquity of the fathers on the children unto the 3rd and 4th generation" (Num. 14:18).
- "A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; even to the 10th generation shall he not enter...." (Deut. 23:2).
- "Thy son and thy daughters shall be given unto another people...." (Deut. 28:32).
- "When Achan son of Zerah acted unfaithfully regarding the devoted things, did not wrath come upon the whole community of Israel? He was not the only one who died for his sin" (Joshua 22:20).
- "because by doing this you have made the enemies of the Lord show utter contempt, the son born to you will die" (2 Sam. 12:14).
- "During the reign of David, there was a famine for 3 successive years; so David sought the face of the Lord. The Lord said, 'It is on account of Saul and his blood-stained house; it is because he put the Gibeonites to death'" (2 Sam. 21:1).
- "if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel" (Ezek. 14:9).
- "Therefore, just as sin entered the world through one man, and death through sin, and in this way death came to all men, because all sinned...." (Rom. 5:12).
- "Nevertheless, death reigned from the time of Adam to the time of Moses, even over those who did not sin by breaking a command, as did Adam...." (Rom. 5:14).
- For additional examples of divine injustice in action see: Gen. 9:25, 12:17, 20:6-7, Ex. 12:12, 12:29, 21:29, Lev. 5:17, 12:2,5, 15:19, 19:20-22, 21:14, Num. 5:27, 20:7-8, 11, 23-24, 28, 21:4-6, 35:15-18, 35:25, Deut. 19:11-12, 21:18-21, 25:11, 28:53-55, 59, 32:25, Joshua 7:11, 1 Sam. 2:33, 6:19, 2 Sam. 6:6-7, 24:15-17, 1 Kings 11:11-12, 13: 17-19, 24, 14:15-17, 16:34, 20:35-36, 20:28, 34, 41-42, 21:21, 21:29, 2 Kings 21:16, 17:21, 1 Chron. 21:1, 7, Ezek. 21:3, Matt. 13:12, and Rom. 9:13-16, 18-20.

HE PLAYS FAVORITES. We are told in Deut. 10:17 and 16:19 that "the Lord your God is God of Gods...which regards not persons" and we are told in 2 Chron. 19:7 that, "...there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts." Yet, that is clearly disproven by the following comments.

- "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God has chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth" (Deut. 7:6, 14:2).
- "the Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake: because it has pleased the Lord to make you his people" (1 Sam. 12:22).
- "For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, Lord, became their God" (1 Chron. 17:22).
- "Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away" (Isaiah 41:9).
- "my people shall know my name...." (Isa. 52:6).

- "I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains; and mine elect shall inherit it...." (Isa. 65:9).
- "You only have I known of all the families of the earth...." (Amos 3:2).
- "But Jesus answered and said, 'I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel'" (Matt. 15:24).
- "...for salvation is of the Jews" (John 4:22).
- Favoritism is also evident in Gen. 4:4-5, 12:1-3, 13:14-15, 35:12, Ex. 2:25, 11:7, 19:5-6, Lev. 26:3-12, Deut. 4:40, 7:14, 28:1-13, Joshua 24:13, 1 Kings 3:12, 8:53, 2 Kings 13:22-23, 2 Chron. 1:1, 12, Psalm 138:6, Isa. 43:1, 5, 45:4, 51:2, 16, 63:8, Haggai 2:23, Mal. 1:2-3, Matt. 10:5-6, Luke 1:13, 6:20, Acts 10:40-41, 13:19, 16:6-7, Rom. 1:16, 2:9-10, 9:4-5, 9:13, 11:5, 7, and 1 Peter 2:9.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from Jerry McDonald of Sullivan, Missouri (Part a)

[Jerry is the fundamentalist Director of Challenge Publications in Sullivan, Missouri. A couple of months ago he sent us a booklet published by him entitled STILL A PERFECT WORK OF HARMONY which is subcaptioned: A Critical Examination of Dennis McKinsey's Tract: "It Is God's Word?" As part of his introduction he says, "It will be our purpose to examine each and every objection that Mr. McKinsey produced in his tract and show that they can be answered." Jerry is going to systematically refute our pamphlet when he can't even get the title correct. It's proper name is: "The Bible Is God's Word?" After reading the booklet one can't help but conclude that he is another one of those Johnny-Come-Latelys who race onto the confrontational scene, thinking they are going to blow us away with an arsenal of pop guns and water pistols. Nearly all of his rationalizations are little short of pathetic, and expose a "defend the book at all costs" mentality, that is so typical of those who have been indoctrinated, usually from birth. Let us now analyze his "defense" of this "perfect work of harmony"--ED.]

(Point #1 in our pamphlet was: If you must accept Jesus as your Savior in order to be saved (John 14:6), what about the billions of beings that die as fetuses, infants, mental deficient, etc.? For them to accept Jesus would be impossible, so they are condemned to hell because of conditions over which they have no control. Deut. 32:4 says God is just, but where is the justice?"--ED.)

Jerry's Defense is: Mr. McKinsey assumes that John 14:6: "...I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me" is saying that every human being must come to him in order to be saved. When one takes into consideration the totality of Biblical teaching on this matter the problem disappears. Jesus was speaking of those who are of age, and mentally capable of sin. The reason for coming to Christ is to have one's sins washed away (Acts 22:16). Since fetuses, infants, and those mentally deficient have no sin in their lives, they do not fall into the category of John 14:6.... Those who are mentally deficient are as innocent as little children because they are incapable of sin. Why? Because sin is transgression of God's law by those who have the capacity to know right from wrong (James 4:17; 1 John 3:4). Therefore, Mr. McKinsey's objection is without merit.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part a)

My advice to any biblicist who sees this problem coming down the road is to flee to the hills in terror. Run for your life and don't look back, unless you don't mind being eaten alive. Your response is dripping with mistakes, Jerry.

First, the verse says "no man", period. It does not say "some men", "most men", or "many men". It says quite clearly "no man", and that includes everybody. No exceptions are allowed. That is what it says; no assumptions are involved. Other verses can be cited for corroboration. John 3:18 says, "He that believes on him is not condemned: but he that believes not is condemned already, because he has not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God"; John 3:36 says, "He that believes on the Son has everlasting life; and he that believes not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abides on him," and 1 John 5:12 says, "He that has the Son has life; and he that has not the Son of God has not life." That is about as clear as one can be and about all that can be said on that matter. There are no extenuating circumstances. What would you have had the man say in order to make that point crystal clear? How would you have had him phrase it?

Where does it say that only those who are of age and mentally capable of sin are included? Are we going to read the verse as is or as you would like it to be? All you are doing is resurrecting the old "Age of Accountability" nonsense, which has no biblical basis whatever. From your perspective it would be nice if the Bible contained this concept, but, alas, your own book drowns you. You talk as if the book were rational and permitted obvious exceptions, when that is by no means the case.

Second, you need to reread your own book, my friend. When you say that, "fetuses, infants, and those mentally deficient have no sin in their lives," you clearly demonstrate an ignorance of Scripture. Rom. 5:12 says, "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Notice it says "have sinned." It does not say people inherited from Adam the capacity, inclination, or propensity to sin; it says they, in fact, sinned. It was a completed event.

Third, in the same vein you completely ignored verses which clearly say that there are no sinless people, even at birth. Psalm 58:3 says, "The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies." Note well! They "go astray as soon as they be born." Job 14:4 says, "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one." Contrary to Scripture, you would have us believe that every baby and fetus is clean. Job 15:14 says, "What is man, that he can be clean? Or he that is born of a woman, that he can be righteous?" Even Jesus said in Mark 10:18, "Why call thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God." According to you, all babies and fetuses are good and yet to be sinners. Sorry, but that is not scriptural.

Fourth, you say that "sin is transgression of God's law by those who have the capacity to know right from wrong" and quote 1 John 3:4 ("Whosoever commits sin transgresses also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law") to prove your point. In truth, it proves nothing of the sort, because no qualifiers are involved. Where is there the slightest reference to "those who have the capacity to know right from wrong"? It simply says that sin is the transgression of the law. Nowhere does the verse imply, much less state, that one must have a capacity to know right from wrong. Transgression alone is sufficient. According to Romans, sin accompanies the very act of being conceived.

And lastly, you cite James 4:17, which says, "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin." This verse does not say you must know right from wrong in order to sin. It does not say only those who know right from wrong can sin. It says those who know right from wrong know when they have sinned. You don't have to know right from wrong in order to sin. Moreover, if it did, Jerry, you would only be exposing a biblical contradiction between this verse and those I cited earlier. One does not take precedence over the other. They are both scripture.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #509 from NS of Richmond, Indiana
(NS is employed at a city newspaper--Ed.)

Dear Dennis.

I finally received your Biblical Errancy yesterday, which is earlier than usual!.... I put another "Letter to the Editor" in our April 15th issue of the paper...and really got a lot of response. Much of it was over the phone inquiring who "Beverly Overman" (my pseudonym--Ed.) was, where she lived etc. Of course, my boss at the paper revealed nothing. I have a feeling every Overman in the phone book has been called, but they must wonder what is going on. I have this terrible urge to call them and ask if there are any messages for Beverly! The letters have been about equally divided. Some are sarcastic and bitter...and others are from people with at least a smattering of intelligence. These will all be answered personally, not via the paper, as I feel it could go on forever, and my boss might get a wee bit upset. I am fortunate he feels much the same as I do, and enjoys this immensely, but probably would be a social outcast if he admitted publicly to these views.... This has been a wonderful opportunity for me to really research the Bible on my own and not depend on you to do my work for me. I must admit, however, that you are a good guide and starting point, and I have quoted you on several occasions. This is the most fun I have had in ages, and is a terrific learning experience. Never let it be said you are too old to learn, for I am learning with your help, to back up the knowledge that the Bible is indeed an errant book....

Letter #510 from RM of Red Deer, Alberta, Canada

Dear Dennis....

I have a couple of Mormon "Elders" on the run right now. I used some of your quick references for the Book of Mormon, and combined it with my materials, i.e. photocopies of their false prophecies and contradictions between their prophets and their scripture books. They are supposed to return soon with their analysis/answers. I'm quite ready for it, so it should prove interesting. I have debated with Mormon elders and bishops before. They always run when Mormon doctrines are pushed to their logical conclusions. I want to keep these "Elders" as long as possible so that the information will "seep in" more and more. It's a kind of "cat and mouse" game. I "nail" the facts down; they run from the fray and come back with their "answers"; I demolish the key arguments and offer a challenge, i.e., "Prove that my material and quotes are false or non-existent and I will join your church. If my research stands and my material is accurate, be honest and admit it. Of course, if you're truly honest, you will leave the church organization you're in when you find that my arguments are undeniably correct. If you disagree with me, prove that I am wrong. Just don't ignore it! I challenge you to follow this course of action through to its final conclusion. Let's shake on it." At this juncture, after I have given them my favorite arguments and materials, they usually leave, never to return again. I know they can't disprove my contentions, which go to the heart of their belief system. Hence, I see them for the frauds they are. Their "truth" can't take the real truth. Still, they often insist that they have the truth. Some come out of their false system. The others, like most christians, ignore reality and continue under their delusion, in spite of the fact that it has been systematically disproven. This is typical of religious professors. This dishonesty never ceases to amaze me. I hope I can keep these "Elders" a little longer. It's always fun watching them squirm over my questions, etc. Is it as much fun for you? I'm sure you get quite a "kick" out of it. As you have told me on the phone a few times, they generally run for the door. It's the same here. I just wish I knew some way to keep them long enough to face the facts and deal with them. Got any suggestions?

Anyway, keep up the great work you are doing with BE. If you feel like using more material against the Book of Mormon or the Koran in BE, please do. There seems to be a growing need for it. Especially where the Koran is concerned. By the way, do you know of any books that expose Islam? It seems to be the most untouched religion around. I can't seem to find even one book that really deals with it. If you have time, please respond. Thanks again.

Editor's Response to Letter #510

Dear RM.

You are doing a great job. Keep it up. I, too, have had some difficulty in finding anti-Koranic material. Perhaps our readers can be of some assistance? Most of what I have found is Christian propaganda, which is often of little use to me.

Letter #511 from TG of Arlington, Texas

Dear Dennis....

A final thought: I find it curious that unbelievers are expected to read and study the bible before rejecting it, while believers are under no similar obligation to read the Koran, the Bhagavad Gita, and the mountain of secular writings that exist, including BE, before they can responsibly reject them. Your anonymous correspondent from Dayton, Ohio, for example, calls unbelievers "lazy" if they don't read the bible. But has this JB individual read Hume's Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion, Russell's Why I Am Not A Christian, Ingersoll's Some Mistakes of Moses, or Huxley's Some Controverted Questions, to name just a few? If he hasn't, then it ought to be clear who's "lazy".

Editor's Response to Letter #511

Dear TG.

Your point is well taken. There is something of a double standard involved, isn't there. I seriously doubt he has ever heard of them, much less read them.

Letter #512 from DV of Government Camp, Oregon

Dear Dennis.

The work you are doing is excellent. You should publish it in book form. I would love to own more examples of your clear thought on biblical idiocy! I want to support your work.... Keep hammering at the ignorance of the Christian masses! (or any masses!).

Letter #513 from JW of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma Dear Dennis.

... you have told your readers for years that the best attack was from within. That is, finding errors in the Bible which is the very foundation of fundamentalist beliefs. A story for you. I have a friend at work who is always trying to win converts over, and since I let it be known that I think the Bible is so much bunk, I am usually a target for the "soul-savers". This friend was recently talking about how Christ rose from the dead to give us salvation for our sins. I immediately said, "Hey, a lot of people rose from the dead in the Bible, so what is the big deal about that?" His reply was, "Well, they rose because Jesus made them rise." I answered, "Not so, and I will look it up for you." I went to Issue #8, and found the list you had prepared of those rising from the dead. I typed it into my computer, and made a printout, which I am enclosing. When I gave it to him, it angered him, so I asked him, "Why do you get angry when I am only telling you what is in the Bible? You profess to believe in the Bible. Do you believe in it or not?" This left him totally frustrated, but he did cool his anger, because I had only quoted to him what he professed to believe--the Bible. It works every time.

Dennis, I am not kidding you, you need to compile all of your BE issues into a well organized book which will totally destroy the Bible as anything more than a bunch of old Jewish stories. I will buy a bunch of them. Do it before someone else does. You are the authority--do it--please!

Editor's Response to Letter #513

Dear JW.

This month's commentary will continue our enumeration of God's reprehensible deeds that was begun in the June issue.

GOD (Part 4)

HE SANCTIONS SLAVERY in direct contradiction to 2 Cor. 3:17, which says, "Where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." Key statements in this regard are the following:

- "Then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his ear unto the door, and he shall be thy servant (Read slave--Ed.) forever. And also unto thy maidservant thou shalt do likewise" (Deut. 15:17).
- "Bid slaves to be submissive to their masters and to give satisfaction in every respect; they are not to be refractory, nor to pilfer, but to show entire and true fidelity, so that in everything they may adorn the doctrine of God" (Titus 2:9).
- "Slaves, obey your earthly masters with respect and fear, and with sincerity of heart, just as you would obey Christ. Obey them not only to win their favor when their eye is on you, but like slaves of Christ, doing the will of God from your heart. Serve wholeheartedly, as if you were serving the Lord, not men, because you know that the Lord will reward everyone for whatever good he does, whether he is slave or free" (Eph. 6:5-7).
- "Slaves, submit yourselves to your masters with all respect, not only to those who are good and considerate, but also to those who are harsh. For it is commendable if a man bears up under the pain of unjust suffering because he is conscious of God. But how is it to your credit if you receive a beating for doing wrong and endure it? But if you suffer for doing good and you endure it, this is commendable before God. To this you were called, because Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you should follow in his steps" (1 Peter 2:18-21).
- "Slaves, obey your earthly masters in everything; and do it, not only when their eye is on you and to win their favor, but with sincerity of heart and reverence of the Lord. Whatever you do, work at it with all your heart, as working for the Lord, not for men, since you know that you will receive an inheritance from the Lord as a reward. It is the Lord Christ you are serving" (Col. 3:22-24).
- "All who are under the yoke of slavery should consider their masters worthy of full respect, so that God's name and our teaching may not be slandered. Those who have believing masters are not to show less respect for them because they are brothers. Instead, they are to serve them even better, because those who benefit from their service are believers, and dear to them. These are the things you are to teach and urge on them" (1 Tim. 6:1-2).

HE DEGRADES DEFORMED PEOPLE: In Lev. 21:16-23 God said to Moses, "Say to Aaron: 'For the generations to come none of your descendants who has a defect may come near to offer the food of his God. No man who has any defect may come near: no man who is blind or lame, disfigured or deformed; no man with a crippled foot or hand, or who is hunchbacked or dwarfed, or who has any eye defect, or who has festering or running sores or damaged testicles. No descendant of Aaron the priest who has any defect is to come near to present the offerings made to the Lord by fire. He has a defect... because of this defect, he must not go near the curtain or approach the altar, and so desecrate my sanctuary....'" (Lev. 21:16:23).

HE PUNISHES BASTARDS FOR BEING ILLEGITIMATE: Deut. 23:2 says, "A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; even to his tenth generation shall he not enter into the congregation of the Lord."

HE PUNISHES MANY FOR THE ACTS OF ONE: "...for the Lord had closed up every womb in Abimelech's household because of Abraham's wife Sarah" (Gen. 20:18). "When David saw the angel who was striking down the people, he said to the Lord, 'I am the one who has sinned and done wrong. These are but sheep. What have they done? Let your hand fall upon me and my family'" (2 Sam. 24:17). "To the woman he said, 'I will greatly increase your pains in childbearing; with pain you will give birth to children'" (Gen. 3:16). Also note Joshua 7:24-26.

HE PUNISHES CHILDREN FOR THEIR FATHERS' SINS: "...visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation" (Ex. 34:7). "...for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the 3rd and 4th generation of them that hate me...." (Ex. 20:5, Deut. 5:9). "It came to pass, that at midnight the Lord smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on his throne unto the firstborn of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the firstborn of cattle" (Ex. 12:29). See also: Deut. 23:2, Num. 14:33, Gen. 17:14, and Gen. 9:22-25.

HE PREVENTS PEOPLE FROM HEARING HIS WORDS: "Make the heart of this people calloused; make their ears dull and close their eyes. Otherwise they might see with their eyes, hear with their ears, understand with their hearts, and turn and be healed" (Isa. 6:10). "So you see God is kind to some just because he wants to be, and he makes some refuse to listen" (Rom. 9:18). "This is why I speak to them in parables: Though seeing, they do not see; though hearing, they do not hear or understand. In them is fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah: You will be ever hearing but never understanding; you will be ever seeing but never perceiving" (Matt. 13:13-14). See also: John 12:39-40, Mark 4:10-12, and Luke 8:9-10.

HE SUPPORTS HUMAN SACRIFICE: Ex. 22:29-30 says, "Do not hold back offerings from your granaries or your vats. You must give me the firstborn of your sons. Do the same with your cattle and your sheep. Let them stay with their mothers for 7 days, but give them to me on the 8th day." And Lev. 27:28-29 says, "Nothing that a man owns and devotes to the Lord--whether man or animal or family land--may be sold or redeemed; everything so devoted is most holy to the Lord. No person devoted to destruction may be ransomed; he must be put to death." He also permitted human sacrifice according to Ezek. 20:26, which says, "I let them become defiled through their gifts--the sacrifice of every firstborn--that I might fill them with horror so they would know that I am the Lord."

HE ORDERS CANNIBALISM: Lev. 26:29 says, "Ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughter shall ye eat." Jer. 19:9 says, "I will make them eat the flesh of their sons and daughters, and they will eat one another's flesh during the stress of the siege imposed on them by the enemies who seek their lives." Ezek. 5:10 says, "In your midst fathers will eat their children, and children will eat their fathers. I will inflict punishment on you and will scatter all your survivors to the winds." Isaiah 49:26 says, "I will make your oppressors eat their own flesh; they will be drunk on their own blood, as with wine...." And in John 6:53-54 Jesus says, "I tell you the truth, unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, you have no life in you. Whoever eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life...."

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from JM of Sullivan, Missouri Continues from Last Month (Part b)

(Point #2 in our pamphlet was: Why are we being punished for Adam's sin? After all, he ate the forbidden fruit, we didn't. It is his problem, not ours, especially in light of Deut. 24:16, which says the children shall not be punished for the sins of their fathers.--ED.)

Jerry's Defense: Mr. McKinsey thinks that the Bible teaches that we are punished because of Adam's sin. There is not one single verse in all of Holy writ that even implies such a thing. 1 Cor. 15:22 says, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ all shall be made alive." This falls into the category of one not reading exactly what the writer actually said. This says that in Adam, all die. It says nothing about being punished because of what Adam did. Adam (and Eve) sinned, thereby allowing sin to come into the world. Two kinds of death came into the world with their act: Spiritual and physical death. However, anyone who is punished will be punished for his own sin. Ezekiel 18:20 says, "The soul that sins, it shall die." One must sin in order to be punished for sin. One thing that most people from every walk of life seem to misunderstand is the difference between the consequences of sin and the punishment for sin.... Man suffers the consequence of what Adam and Eve did, but they are not punished for that sin."

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part b)

Your answer to this query is almost as vacuous as your prior response, JM. You say there is not one single verse in all of Holy writ that teaches we are punished for Adam's sin. You can't be serious. As we noted earlier, Rom. 5:12 says, "...so death passed upon all men, for that ALL HAVE SINNED." We are deemed sinners and die for what Adam did and that isn't punishment? Aren't sinners punished? The 18th verse says, "...as by the offense of one JUDGEMENT came upon all men to condemnation." We are condemned for what Adam did and that isn't punishment? Judgement doesn't entail punishment? The 19th verse says, "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners" and that isn't punishment? You quote 1 Cor. 15:22, which says that we all died because of what Adam did and then allege that we are not being punished as a result. How silly! Of course we are. We are paying the penalty for what he did. If there is anyone who is not reading the script closely, it is you. Adam and Eve didn't just "allow" sin to come into the world; they caused it and they caused it to rain down on everyone. Without them it would never have appeared. Because of them, according to Christian theology, everyone must now take the affirmative act of accepting Jesus as his savior. Those who do not are doomed. If Adam and Eve had not disobeyed God, sin would not even be an option today; the world would be a perfect place, and all men would be saved. Because of them, everyone sinned, not just Adam and Eve, and, thus, everyone is a sinner. And because everyone is a sinner, we are all doomed unless corrective measures are taken. You falsely state that "one must sin in order to be punished for sin" and then allege that "anyone who is punished will be punished for his own sin" when anyone reasonably well acquainted with Christian theology knows that we are sinners condemned to hell at the moment of conception, if not before, and sinful acts are not required. If you never do anything wrong in your entire existence, you are still condemned to hell because of what Adam and Eve did. In fact, no amount of good deeds will save you; your only salvation is through the acceptance of Jesus. As part of your defense, you quote Ezekiel 18:20, which says, "The soul that sins, it shall die" when you had already quoted 1 Cor. 15:22, which said that all died because of what Adam did, and as we have already noted, Rom. 5:12 says, "death passed upon all men." According to the latter verses you die when you first come into existence, not when you later commit a sinful act. By quoting Ezekiel all you did was highlight a biblical contradiction regarding when death occurs. Ezekiel says death appears when you first sin, while other verses say it emerges the moment you are created.

And finally, your attempt to draw a distinction between "consequences" and "punishment" is stillborn because they are two sides of the same coin. They don't oppose but complement one another. As a consequence of what Adam did, mankind is punished. A conscious judgment was made by a supreme being that everyone should be adversely affected because of the deeds of one. That's a judgement in which punishment is being administered, my friend. If what had occurred had been merely the result of blind, impersonal natural forces, such as that dispensed by a hurricane or an earthquake, then your argument might have some merit. People suffer the consequences of natural disasters, but they are not punished. The term is inapplicable. But that is not the Original Sin situation by any means.

Letter #508 Continues (Part c)

(Point #3 in our pamphlet was: God created Adam so he must have been perfect. How, then, could he have sinned? Regardless of how much free will he had, if he chose to sin he wasn't perfect."--ED.)

Jerry's Defense: Again Mr. McKinsey did not consider the totality of Biblical teaching concerning the matter. There are two things wrong with McKinsey's objection: [1] He thinks that if God created something that he could only make it so perfect that it could never be corrupted. [2] He does not understand the "free moral agency" of man.

Why would God have to make a thing so perfect that it could never be corrupted? Does he mean that God could not have made the earth because it has become polluted and corrupted? God made the tobacco leaf, but he did not make it to be smoked and chewed. God made opium, but certainly not so man could abuse it and make illegal drugs out of it.... What rule of logic can he employ to show that if a person sins, that he was never perfect in the first place....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part c)

You don't have a real grasp of the problem, JM. God is perfect by definition. Thus everything God is and does is perfect. God created man; therefore man must be perfect and couldn't sin. Your "free agency" means nothing. If man chose to sin, then that proves he was not perfect. But he had to have been perfect because God created him; so how could he have sinned? How could a perfect being create something less than perfect? According to you, we have a perfect being that is doing something less than perfect, which is contradictory. If I tell you I am perfect and immediately sin, that is excellent proof I lied. What evidence could be more conclusive?

You say, Does that mean God could not have made the earth because it has become polluted and corrupted? No! Under your theology, God could have made the earth perfect. That's no problem. But it was polluted by man and that is a problem. How could man have chosen to do that which is imperfect when he was created perfect by God. So we return to the original problem.

Your question is also beset by another problem. We are primarily dealing with morality and how do you morally corrupt something that is not alive. Morality is not applicable to non-living matter. But even if pollution or corruption did involve morality, they are brought about by man's acts and couldn't occur on their own. So we again return to our original question: How could that which was created perfect--man--sin or corrupt?

You ask what rule of logic I can employ to show that if a person sins, that he was never perfect in the first place? The rule is quite simple. If he was created perfect but chose to sin or corrupt, he was not created perfect to start with. If he was perfect at no time would he choose to be imperfect because that which is perfect could never choose to be imperfect. If it chose to be imperfect, then it proved it wasn't perfect to begin with. Don't you understand that the very act of choosing the imperfect proves the "perfect" is not perfect but imperfect? Why is that so hard to comprehend? By definition everything the perfect does must be perfect. So it can't make an imperfect choice.

McKinsey needs to prove that a perfect man cannot sin. It would be utterly impossible for a man (who is free to choose) not to be able to choose the wrong. If he is allowed to choose, then he must be able to make the wrong choice, otherwise he is not free to choose. If the only choice he has is the right choice, then he has no choice at all. So this argument falls.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part d)

Proving a perfect man cannot sin is quite simple, JM. As I said, by definition he can't sin. If he sinned, then he proved he wasn't perfect. The essence of the argument between us is this: You say man was created perfect but chose to sin and thus became imperfect. I say that is impossible. If he was perfect, he couldn't have chosen to be imperfect, because if he did, that would prove he was not perfect to begin with. No perfect being can choose to do that which is imperfect, i.e., sin. You need to realize that when you bring "perfection" in the door, you throw "free choice" out the window. The only choice he has is the right choice; that is why he has no option at all, and that's why your argument collapses. And that is also why the whole idea of a "perfect man" is ridiculous from the outset.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #517 from GN of Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Dennis.

I'm enclosing a Christian newsletter that came to my house edited and published by John A. Thought you would enjoy the contents along with my reply. Please note its caption: How to Beat the Atheist in a Debate. However, the article does not really tell you how to beat an atheist in debate; all it contains is a character assassination of atheist people. I would sure like to challenge this joker to debate YOU. If this is the best he can do, he wouldn't even be able to go one round. I found his comments to be insulting and humorous all at the same time. It's hard to imagine that an educated person could make such ludicrous statements. Evidently history is not one of his strong points.

What follows is the response GN sent to John A:

Dear Mr. A:

...I must take exception to the article about atheists. My mother and father were both atheists and never could there be found a more moral people. They were not moral because they were afraid of a punishing God; they were moral because it was in their heart to be so. They taught me not to lie, not to steal, to value truth, never to cheat, to be ambitious. My father was a hard worker and a loyal friend. My mother was a saint, and still is.

I think the article was quite misleading when you consider that our prisons are full of professed Christians. Possibly you are not aware of the part that Christians played during the Crusades and the Inquisition, all quite pious and all very immoral.

Insofar as morality is concerned I would pit my dear father against any of the biblical holy men. My father never murdered anyone such as David and Moses did; my Dad was faithful to his one and only wife and did not imitate the adultery and polygamy of both King David and Solomon. My Dad did not shack up with several women such as the patriarch Jacob, nor did he murder innocent men, women and children such as Judah and Levi, not did he sell his brother into slavery such as the sons of Israel. No, my friend, it is not the atheist who is immoral; it is very much the religious fanatics.

You mentioned the killing of 6 million Jews in the article. According to history, Hitler was a devout Catholic and the people of Germany were very much Christian, not atheist. If we look to the Bible for our ethics and morality we will come up short of civilized. What kind of morality and ethics is it when God's so called "chosen people" were commanded to enter Canaan and kill every man, woman, and child (genocide) and rob them of their land because they were not of the religion of the Jews? What kind of morality is it to stone men and women for adultery except when it is David and Bathsheba? What kind of morality is being taught when it is all right to kill and maim others in the name of God and religion? If Jimmy Swaggart had as many wives and concubines as Solomon, he would never have been tempted to immorality. How "righteous" was Lot when he was willing to offer his virgin daughters to be molested and raped by the wicked men of Sodom, and later, supposedly in a drunken stupor had relations with them causing their pregnancy? My atheist father had far higher standards than that. He would have died before handing my sister and me over to such a fate, and certainly, not even in a drunken stupor, would he have behaved indecently toward either one of us.

Yes, you are right, the atheist has his opinion to tell him what is right and wrong, and I'll be truthful with you, their morality far outshines the morality in holy writ.

I can only think of a few scriptures that contain any morality at all and they are in the New Testament. Jesus made some moral statements but they were no more moral than statements made by leaders of various pagan religions. Most religions teach you that it is wrong to steal, to murder, to lie, to cheat. However, among the moral statements of Jesus there are the immoral ones, such as "hating your mother and father," and encouraging his followers not to work but to let God clothe and feed them, not to mention his false prophecies about returning to those people who had put their trust in him. They are dead and gone and did not live to see his return as he promised.

It is quite egotistical to elevate the Christian philosophy. Our Christian nation was involved in two world wars and several immoral wars such as Korea and Vietnam. Our Christian immorality was further evidenced by the dropping of the atom bomb on innocent women and children in Japan. Christians were responsible for the slaughter of 6 million Jews. Our Christian nation is ravaged by AIDS, hungry and homeless children are on the increase daily, the mentally ill are wandering the streets, many of our veterans are homeless, our T.V.'s and movies are filled with filth and immorality, our politicians (most of them Christians) are corrupt and greedy for wealth and power, and our religious leaders are full of hypocrisy and lust after women and money.

Before writing another condemning article about a group of people that you know nothing about, I would suggest that you help get the "Christian" house in order.

Letter #518 from RM of Red Deer Alberta, Canada

Dear Dennis.

A christian couple I spoke to recently are no longer fundamentalists. They now have a more liberal paradigm. I believe that I am starting to get through to them, but they are not fully converted. Obviously, since they have been brainwashed for so many years, "deprogramming" them will take some time. The point is, I really do care for them. While I have a lot of fun disproving the bible's validity, genuine concern for the people I am reaching is, especially to them, an essential requirement. Every christian I have spoken to thus far has never been able to accuse me of insincerity. They have all assented to the integrity with which I present my arguments affirmatively.

At the same time, destroying false hope in the bible is a priority. The couple that is now becoming more liberal in their view, thanks to my personal efforts and some of the BE material, is a fine example. They quoted a host of scriptures to prove that God knew everything and predestined everything accordingly. That everyone has to go either to heaven or to hell, without having a say in the matter, was their sincere conviction.... Since no one can resist God's will (Rom. 9:18-19), man has no choice in the matter...and that's that.

In brief, they said that God is God from eternity to eternity (Ps. 90:2). According to His foreknowledge God Predestined all things according to His will.... No one can resist his will...and since God is omniscient...and is never given to change...there will be no exceptions where eternal salvation and damnation are concerned. Everything has been determined by God.

Well, I could hardly believe my luck. Here was my chance to blast both the bible and Calvinism at the same time. First, I pointed out that people have indeed resisted God in the bible. For example, Acts 7:51 says, "...ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye." Since they were already Trinitarians there was no need to cross-reference the OT to prove that the "Holy Ghost" referred to here is God.... In Luke 7:30, it states that, "...the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God for themselves.".... The point is that God's will is often resisted and He does not always get his way. The fun really begins when Jer. 3:7 is quoted because the will, the prophetic ability, and the omniscience of God all start to fall apart. As this verse states: "I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not.... Thus, Israel resisted God's command to "return" to Him.

Interestingly enough, most translations...reveal here God's ignorance about the future. As the RSV puts it: "I, God, thought after she had done all this she will return to me; but she did not return." Clearly, God thought wrong. This was shocking to the couple I was speaking to and they retreated to the KJV for safety. But I wasn't finished yet. Pointing to Jer. 3:19b-20 I demonstrated that even God admits to not knowing everything.... Horrors! There's more, still! God's omniscience is lacking in Gen. 18:21, 22:12, Deut. 8:2, 13:3, Hosea 6:4 and 2 Chron. 32:31. These verses are pointed out in BE, my favorite magazine.

At this point, all that was needed was an assault on the contradictory resurrection accounts and this couple, although not made into complete skeptics, made a strong turn away from fundamentalism and its inerrancy hogwash. Even if they are still clinging to christianity, I know they will never be quite the same as when they first locked horns with me and BE. While I have always (since leaving christianity) been able to win the argument with christians on my own, BE has made it all the more easy to win it quickly and completely. Thanks for all the support, Dennis. It's only a matter of time before many christians begin to "wake up and smell the Scriptures."

In every debate that I enter there is one verse that I bring up before, during, and after to drive home the point I am trying to make: "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" This is Psalm 11:3, and it is a good argument when one considers that the bible is the foundation of the christian faith. So, "if the bible be destroyed, what can the fundamentalists do?" Only two things: 1. Become a liberal or 2. Drop the subject completely. While (2) is the best option (1) is a good start. I intend, ultimately to push for number (2) where this couple is concerned. I think they're still in shock from the last meeting, but getting to number (1) is still a plus in my book. All the best to you and BE.

Editor's Response to Letter #518

Dear RM.

Good job and keep it up. As I have said so often, we need far more people putting forth the same kind of effort. My only reservation lies in your use of Psalm 11:3 which, by implication, refers to believers as righteous. If there is anything millions of believers are not, it is righteous. Perverts and adulterers such as Jimmy Swaggart and Jim Bakker attest to that.

Issue No. 119

November 1992

This month's commentary will add to the list of reprehensible deeds committed by God that was begun in the June issue.

GOD (Part 5)

- HE DEMANDED 16,000 VIRGINS BE GIVEN TO SOLDIERS AS WAR PLUNDER AND 32 BE SET ASIDE FOR HIMSELF: Num. 31:31-40 says, "Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the Lord commanded Moses. The plunder remaining from the spoils that the soldiers took was 675,000 sheep, 72,000 cattle, 61,000 donkeys and 32,000 women who had never slept with a man.... And the half, the portion of those who had gone out to war, was....16,000 people, of which the tribute for the Lord was 32." Women rank right up there with cattle, donkeys, and sheep. And they have to be virgins, at that! Imagine a righteous and perfect God wanting 32 virgins to be set aside for himself!
- HE ORDERS GAMBLING: Joshua 14:2 says, "Their inheritances were assigned by lot to the nine-and-a-half tribes, as the Lord had commanded through Moses." Num. 26:52-56 says, "The Lord said to Moses, The land is to be allotted to them as an inheritance based on the number of names.... Be sure that the land is distributed by lot.... Each inheritance is to be distributed by lot among the larger and smaller groups."
- HE REQUIRES AN UNBETROTHED VIRGIN TO MARRY HER SEDUCER: Ex. 22:16 says, "If a man seduces a virgin who is not pledged to be married and sleeps with her, he must pay the bride-price, and she shall be his wife."
- HE ORDERS HORSES TO BE HAMSTRUNG: Joshua 11:6 says, "The Lord said to Joshua,...You are to hamstring their horses and burn their chariots."
- HE SANCTIONS THE DEGRADATION OF THE ENEMIES' WOMEN: Deut. 21:10-13 says, "When you go to war against your enemies and the Lord you God delivers them into your hands and you take captives, if you notice among the captives a beautiful woman and are attracted to her, you may take her as your wife.... After she has lived in your house and mourned her father and mother for a full month, then you may go to her and be her husband and she shall be your wife."
- HE SANCTIONS THE BEATING OF SLAVES AS LONG AS THE SLAVE CAN ARISE AT LEAST A DAY OR TWO AFTER THE BEATING: Ex. 21:20-21 says, "If a man beats his male or female slave with a rod and the slave dies as a direct result, he must be punished, but he is not to be punished if the slave gets up after a day or two, since the slave is his property."
- HE REQUIRES A WOMAN TO MARRY HER RAPIST: Deut. 22:28-29 says, "If a man happens to meet a virgin who is not pledged to be married and rapes her and they are discovered, he shall pay the girl's father fifty shekels of silver. He must marry the girl, for he has violated her. He can never divorce her as long as he lives."
- HE TRAINS OTHERS FOR WAR: Psalm 144:1 says, "Praise be to the Lord, my Rock, who trains my hands for war, my fingers for battle."

- HE ORDERED THE COOKING OF FOOD WITH HUMAN FECES: Ezek. 4:12 says, "Eat the food as you would a barley cake; bake it in the sight of the people, using human excrement as fuel."
- HE KILLED THE WICKED AND THE RIGHTEOUS: Ezek. 21:3-4 says, "...This is what the Lord says: I am against you. I will draw my sword from its scabbard and cut off from you both the righteous and the wicked. Because I am going to cut off the righteous and the wicked, my sword will be unsheathed against everyone from south to north."
- HE INTENTIONALLY GAVE OUT BAD LAWS: Ezek. 20:25 says, "I also gave them over to statutes that were not good and laws they could not live by...."
- HE EXCUSED THE SINS OF PROSTITUTES AND ADULTERERS: Hosea 4:14 says, "I will not punish your daughters when they turn to prostitution, nor your daughters-in-law when they commit adultery, because the men themselves consort with harlots and sacrifice with temple prostitutes...."
- HE EXCUSED A MURDERER AND PROMISED HIM PROTECTION: After Cain killed Abel he was banished from the Garden of Eden and the following dialogue occurred within Gen. 4:13-15. "Cain said to the Lord, 'My punishment is more than I can bear. Today you are driving me from the land, and I will be hidden from your presence; I will be a restless wanderer on the earth, and whoever finds me will kill me.' But the Lord said to him, 'Not so; if anyone kills Cain, he will suffer vengeance seven times over.' Then the Lord put a mark on Cain so that no one who found him would kill him."
- HE KILLED A MAN WHO REFUSED TO IMPREGNATE HIS WIDOWED SISTER-IN-LAW: Gen. 38:8-10 says, "Then Judah said to Onan, 'Lie with your brother's wife and fulfill your duty to her as a brother-in-law to produce offspring for your brother.' But Onan knew that the offspring would not be his; so whenever he lay with his brother's wife, he spilled his seed on the ground to keep from producing offspring for his brother. What he did was wicked in the Lord's sight; so he put him to death also."
- HE AIDED RATHER THAN PUNISHED A SWINDLER: In Gen. 28:14-15 God promised Jacob that his descendants would be like the dust of the earth and all the families of the earth would be blessed by him and his descendants. God also said he would watch over Jacob wherever he went and would not leave him. Yet, Jacob was the swindler who stole the birthright of his brother, Esau.
- HE DOESN'T SEE ALL: Gen. 4:14 says, "Today you (God--Ed.) are driving me (Adam--Ed.) from the land, and I will be hidden from your presence."
- HE IS INDECISIVE: In Gen. 18:17 the Lord says, "Shall I hide from Abraham what I am about to do?"

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from JM of Sullivan, Missouri Continues (Part e)

(Point #4 in our pamphlet was: How can Num. 23:19, which says God doesn't repent, be reconciled with Ex. 32:14 which clearly says he does?--ED.)

JM's Defense is: In Exodus 32:14 we have a figure of speech, which Mr. McKinsey ignored, called anthropopatheia which is defined by Bullinger as: "The Ascribing of Human Attributes, etc., to God...REPENTANCE is attributed to God...."

In Num. 23:19 we have the case where it is stated that God cannot repent of wrong doing, because God cannot do wrong. Notice: "God is not a man that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent." This clearly shows that the repentance, here, refers to the same kind of repentance made by man when he sins. In Exodus 32:14 we have the case of God merely taking a different course of action. The figure of speech anthropopatheia is employed so that God can condescend to man's level to allow man to know what is taking place. So there is no problem here at all because the word "repent" is used in two totally different ways.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part e)

Where are you getting this figure of speech nonsense, JM? Your forerunners created a word--anthropopatheia--out of nothing concrete, managed to have it put in the dictionary, and now you would have us believe it is applicable in this instance, when there is nothing in the text that would justify such a construct. Where are you getting the idea that there are different kinds of repentance? What do you mean the text "clearly shows"? It clearly shows nothing of the sort. Scripture says God does not repent, period. It doesn't even imply, much less state, that God does not engage in the kind of repenting man does or that there is a distinction between the two.

Secondly, Ex. 32:14 most assuredly does not prove that "repent" means that God was "merely taking a different course of action." The verse states, "the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people" and clearly shows that evil behavior was involved. Of course, if words no longer have any meaning or mean whatever any Christian propagandist chooses to apply to them, then the sky is the limit as far as the meanings of "repent" and "evil" are concerned. I operate on the principle that the Bible means what it says and says what it means. Apologists, on the other hand, especially those of a fundamentalist variety, operate on the principle that words say whatever expediency requires.

Letter #508 Continues (Part f)

(Point #5 in our pamphlet was: How can 2 Kings 8:26 which says Ahaziah began to rule at age 22, be reconciled with 2 Chron. 22:2 which says he was 42?--ED.)

JM's Defense is: A co-reign would work very nicely in there. In other words, Ahaziah began to co-reign with his father Jehoram when he was 22 and took full control of the reign when he was 42. Things were often done differently then than they are today.

Immediately someone is going to notice where Jehoram (Ahaziah's father) only reigned for 8 years. However, the text does not say that he reigned only eight years. It says he reigned 8 years in Jerusalem. One possible explanation of this would be that Jehoram reigned 8 years in Jerusalem, and then reigned longer elsewhere....

One might point out that every Judean king was said to reign in Jerusalem. True, but not every Judean king was said to have spent part of that reign elsewhere. It is implied that Jehoram did (2 Chron. 21:11) in showing that he caused Israel to move to the mountains of Judea for their worship, which did not last as ours today does. Their periods were probably long periods of time. And it specifically stated that Ahaziah did in 2 Chron. 22:6-9.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part f)

What gobbledygook! Believe me, my friend, you'll never get an award for reading the Bible with a critical eye. You are so obsessed with defending the book at all costs that you don't hesitate to throw caution to the winds. You shot yourself in the foot right off the bat by saying, "A co-reign would work very nicely in there." How do you "co-reign" with a dead man? Second Kings 8:24 says, "So Joram (Jehoram--Ed.) slept with his fathers, and was buried with his father in the city of David; and Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead...." And the 26th verse says, "Ahaziah was 22 years old when he began to reign...." Second Chron. 21:20-21 says, "Jehoram was 32 years old when he began to reign, and he reigned 8 years in Jerusalem; and he departed with no one's regret. They buried him in the city of David, but not in the tombs of the kings." Second Chron.

22:1-2 continues by saying, "the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son their new king.... So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned. Ahaziah was 42 years old when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem...." From these verses we can see that both Kings and Chronicles clearly show that Ahaziah's father was dead when Ahaziah began to reign, whether he was 22 or 42. Obviously there could not have been a "co-reign." Second, where on earth are you getting this "co-reign" nonsense anyway? Nothing whatever in the text says anything about a co-reign. Show me one verse that even implies such an arrangement, let alone states as much. Third, where does the text say that Ahaziah took "full control" when he became 42? You have quite an imagination. Moreover, that isn't even relevant. Any kind of co-ruledship would still mean that he was ruling. If he reigned he ruled, and if he ruled he reigned. The text says he "began to rule" and that is all that counts. The degree of rule doesn't matter; all that matters is that he reigned and the age at which it began. Fourth, since you created this co-reign gimmick out of nothing, can you provide one other instance of a co-reign in the entire Bible? In fact, can you provide one other instance of a co-reign in all of ancient history, be it biblical or otherwise? Please be specific with names, dates, and places. And lastly, I fail to see the relevance of your argument about Jehoram ruling in some other place besides Jerusalem. Moreover, 2 Chron. 21:11, which you cite as proof, says, "He made high places in the hill country of Judah, and led the inhabitants of Jerusalem into unfaithfulness and made Judah go astray" and certainly doesn't prove Jehoram "caused Israel to move to the mountains of Judea for their worship...." It says he made high places in the hill country and led the people into unfaithfulness. It doesn't say he led all of Israel into the hill country or ruled from that region.

Letter #508 Continues (Part g)

(Point #6 in our pamphlet was: How can Ex. 33:20, which says no man can see God's face and live, be squared with Gen. 32:30, which says a man saw his face and his life was preserved?--ED.)

JM's Defense is: This is a case where Mr. McKinsey did not look at how the words were used in the sentences. Leupold said concerning Genesis 32:30: "But this experience centered in a personal encounter with God, a direct meeting with God, a seeing of him, though not with the eye of the body. Does not the whole experience, then, sum itself up as a seeing of God and living to tell about it...." Jacob did not literally see God's face, but the whole experience is called a face to face meeting because he was in close connection with God in this confrontation.

Moses, however, had asked to literally see God's face with his eyes. He could not do that and live because to be able to see God one would have to be as God is, a spirit. (John 4:24, 1 John 4:1-2)

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part g)

Your problem is that since the literal meaning of the words is not what you want to hear, JM, you simply choose to ignore them and concoct an interpretation more to your liking. What do you mean by saying God was seen "not with the eye of the body" and "Jacob did not literally see God's face"? Of course he did. What does the text say? "I HAVE SEEN GOD FACE TO FACE AND MY LIFE IS PRESERVED." What are you looking for? This is by no means the only verse that says God was literally seen. Num. 14:14 says, "thou Lord art seen face to face." In Job 42:5, while talking to God, Job says, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now my eye sees thee." And Isaiah 6:5 says, "...for my eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." How could the text be clearer? You should also read Psalm 63:2, Ex. 33:11, 24:11 and Amos 7:7-8. Are you going to symbolize all of these verses too? Why don't you just allegorize the entire book and be done with it and stop criticizing Christian liberals for practicing the same behavior? You and nearly all of your fundamentalistic compatriots are just like the liberals you decry. You don't hesitate to employ a figurative meaning when boxed into a corner. The only difference between you and they is that you resist more vehemently and have to be dragged kicking and screaming toward the unavoidable. (TO BE CONTINUED)

Letter #519 from JG of Altadena, California

Dennis.

In one of your previous periodicals (June 1990) you gave reference to Jesus saying that the hand of his betrayer was on this table. One reference said Jesus said this during supper and another reference after supper. I checked the KJV to cross-reference these verses; they all seemed to say Jesus made this statement during supper. You were quoting from Craveri who gave a list of NT events chronologically opposite from one book to another.... Matthew, Mark, and Luke all seem to say Jesus made this statement during supper. I debate with Christians over statements in the bible and I like to be accurate. If I am not, then that means I get egg on my face. Anyhow you are doing a Good job.

Editor's Response to Letter #519

Dear JG.

Stated verbatim, the 14th example given in the June 1990 issue is as follows: In Luke 22:14-21 Jesus said during supper that the hand of his betrayer was with him on the table, while in Matt. 26:21 and Mark 14:18 Jesus made this statement after supper. I should have said Jesus made the statement "during" supper in Matt. 26:21 and Mark 14:18 while he made it "after" supper in Luke 22:14-21. Sorry about the mixup but I inadvertently reversed the two key words. Luke 22:20-21 clearly shows that he made the statement after supper in Luke, and the contradiction remains, however.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #520 from HB of Alexandria, Virginia

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

Thank you for filling my order for issues 1 to 46 of Biblical Errancy and for enclosing the index for issues 1 to 115.

The Ten Commandments have apparently been omitted from your publication. This is a surprise because they have been praised and defended loudly, appear in many public places, and are held up by many churches as the finest set of moral principles. But they are terribly deficient.

They do not prohibit anti-Semitism, arson, atomic bombs, bacteriological warfare, beating, bestiality, bigamy, castration, drug addiction, drunkenness, exhibitionism, false advertising, forgery, fornication, fraud, gluttony, incest, pedophilia, poison gas, pollution, prostitution, racial segregation, racism, rape, sexual harassment, sexism, torture, and vagrancy.

The Ten Commandments are appropriate for a primitive group wandering through a wilderness who have no sense of values. They are inadequate for a modern society. You should examine them critically.

Editor's Response to Letter #520

Dear HB.

I can only assume that your final comment arises from the fact that you are not yet thoroughly acquainted with BE. After you complete the first 46 issues we sent, I recommend that you read issues 46 through 118 as well. I think you will then see that we have covered the Ten Commandments rather well. Incidentally, you could add slavery and child abuse to your litany.

Letter #521 from FT of Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Dear Dennis.

I have been ordering 12 prior issues of BE every month for several months and have finally read them all. From now on it's back to one BE per month. I hope the withdrawal symptoms will not be too severe. Thank you for your excellent publication.

I, too, like RS of Denton, Texas (Letter #503 in BE #115), have been writing to the producers of tracts when I receive one. I would never have attempted this without the ammunition from BE.

Letter #522 from NS of Richmond, Indiana

Dear Dennis....

Want you to know I have had an on-going written debate with a "preaching minister" from a town near Richmond. It certainly has caused me to delve deeper into what has become an important subject to me. Thanks to BE, and other publications, plus my own research, I am learning! The fellow is a delightful man, for I stopped and met him, but, as I told him, he is awash in the stormy sea of Christianity with a leaky boat and no oars. We have exchanged two or three letters of considerable length, each one debating the other, and I LOVE it! As you well know, there is nothing he can come up with that there isn't an answer to, and nothing gives me more pleasure than to point this out. We are civil, polite and each very committed to the cause that we believe is the truth. Of course, I KNOW mine is, and I can prove it.

Enjoyed your replies to the "Anonymous Dayton Observer" that I finally got to read in the July issue. He's almost, but not quite, as bad as Jim White, who is totally irrational. Nothing is more amusing than a committed Christian explaining away the obvious inconsistencies in the Bible. Keep going at 'em, Slugger: you've got a lot of fans out here.

Letter #523 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California

Dear Dennis.

B.E. is right on the mark for exposing the hundreds, if not thousands of errors, inconsistencies, fallacies and contradictions of the Bible. We need the honest, direct evaluation that B.E. provides. Unfortunately, most Christians seem to prefer apologetic sophistry over honest, direct examination; not only do they fail to apply common sense when it comes to the Bible's innumerable errors, but they also don't follow its advice to "check ye the spirit."

The recent issues of B.E. give chapter and verse evidence of the "spirit" inhabiting the Bible. As B.E. shows, and has clearly shown in the past, the "Biblical" god is lacking in all areas of common decency. Can this be the god Christians want us to love, follow, and admire?.... The contradictions of the Bible stand as monumental testimony to Biblical error and vindication of B.E.'s brave stance against delusory Christian claims. Thank you again for your sanity-saving publication....

Letter #524 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California

Dear Dennis.

I sent a letter earlier, congratulating you for the pluck of B.E. in standing up to the fallacious doctrines of Christian fundamentalism. I have been posting BE pamphlets at college campuses, right next to fliers that advertise campus Bible Study groups; this action helps to balance the perspective of students who see the Christian advertisements, but are as yet unaware of the many errors, contradictions and fictions in the Bible. I think it is working because I don't see as many Christian fliers posted lately. Just knowing that B.E. exists seems to make people look before they leap.

December 1992

This month's commentary marks the final installment on our enumeration of God's reprehensible deeds that was begun last summer.

GOD (Part 6)

- HE DISCOVERS WOMEN'S SECRET PARTS: Isaiah 3:17 says, "the Lord will smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the Lord will discover their secret parts."
- HE BREAKS UP FAMILIES: Ex. 21:2-4 says, "If you buy a Hebrew servant, he is to serve you for six years. But in the 7th year, he shall go free.... If his master gives him a wife and she bears him sons or daughters, the woman and her children shall belong to her master, and only the man shall go free."
- HE ORDERS THE KILLING OF CHILDREN: Ezek. 9:6 says, "Slay utterly old and young, both maids and little children, and women...." and 1 Sam. 15:3 says, "...slay both man and woman, infant and suckling...."
- HE KILLED OVER 50,000 PEOPLE BECAUSE A FEW LOOKED INTO AN ARK: 1 Sam. 6:19 says, "the Lord smote the men of Beth-shemesh, because they had looked into the Ark of the Lord, even he smote of the people 50,070: and the people lamented, because the Lord had smitten many of the people with a great slaughter."
- HE MANDATED UNLIMITED PUNISHMENT FOR LIMITED SINS: Matt. 25:46 says, "these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." Also note Rev. 14:11 and Mark 9:43-48.
- AND LASTLY, HE VIOLATED HIS OWN LAWS ON NUMEROUS OCCASIONS:
 - (1) In Ex. 20:13 he said thou shalt not kill; yet, in Deut. 32:39 and many other verses he said, "I kill, and I make alive; I wound and I heal...."
 - (2) John 4:8 and 4:16 say God is love and 1 Cor. 13:4 says love is not jealous or boastful. Yet, Deut. 4:24 says God is a consuming fire, even a jealous God. How can God be jealous when several verses say God is love and 1 Cor. says love is not jealous?
 - (3) In the Ten Commandments God says thou shalt not commit adultery; yet, Matt. 1:18 says, "This is how the birth of Jesus Christ came about. His mother Mary was pledged to be married to Joseph, but before they came together, she was found to be with child through the Holy Ghost. Because Joseph her husband was a righteous man and did not want to expose her to public disgrace, he had in mind to divorce her quietly." The Holy Ghost, who is God, impregnated another being's wife. If that is not adultery, what is it?
 - (4) In Lev. 19:18 God says, "you shall not take vengeance or bear any grudge against the sons of your own people...." Yet, in Deut. 32:35 God says, "To me belongs vengeance, and recompense." God rules out taking vengeance by others, but relegates it to himself.
 - (5) In Luke 6:27 God tells us to love our enemies and do good to those who hate you. Yet, in Gen. 19:24 he rained fire and brimstone upon Sodom and Gomorrah because they had rejected him.
 - (6) Prov. 6:16 says, "there are 6 things the Lord hates, seven that are detestable to him" and the 19th verse says one of these is, "...a false witness who pours out lies and a man who stirs up dissension among brothers." Yet, Gen. 11:9 says, "That is why it was called Babel--because there the Lord confused the language of the whole world." The Lord hates those who sow dissension even though he is responsible for all the confusion that emerged from his creation of a multitude of languages.

- (7) In Matt. 26:52 Jesus said, "Put up thy sword...for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Yet, in Ezek. 21:5 God says, "Then all the people will know that I the Lord have drawn my sword from its scabbard; it will not return again." If what Jesus said is true, why has the Lord not perished?
- (8) Deut. 6:16 says, "Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God," while Gen. 22:1 says, "it came to pass after these things, that God did tempt Abraham...." God tells us not to tempt, but he does.
- (9) In First John 2:15 we are told not to love the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him. Yet, John 3:16 says, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life." We are not supposed to love the world, but God sure does.
- (10) And finally, Job 5:2 says, "For wrath kills the foolish man, and envy slays the silly one." Displaying wrath is to be considered anathema; yet Psalm 21:9 ("...the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them"), Ex. 31:10 ("...let me alone that my wrath may wax hot against them"), and Num. 16:46 ("...for there is wrath gone out from the Lord") clearly show wrath is one of the Lord's more prominent traits.

The obvious conclusion to be drawn from all of the above is that God strongly adheres to the maxim, "Do as I say, not as I do," which parents are often condemned for practicing.

In sum and substance, the last six commentaries have proved beyond any reasonable doubt that the biblical God is one of the most reprehensible characters to have ever appeared in the annals of literature.

One can readily understand why Robert Ingersoll said on page 237 in Volume 2 of his Works, "It is impossible for me to conceive of a character more utterly detestable than that of the Hebrew god." Two pages later he said, "It is impossible to conceive of a more thoroughly despicable, hateful, and arrogant being, than the Jewish god." And in Some Mistakes of Moses he said, "A false friend, an unjust judge, a braggart, a hypocrite, a tyrant, sincere in hatred, jealous, vain and revengeful, false in promise, honest in curse, suspicious, ignorant, infamous and hideous--such is the God of the Pentateuch."

After reading the last six commentaries can you imagine anyone, any being, saying, "Yes, that's my book, that represents me, that's the way I am," especially a supposedly perfect being? Is there any figure in history with a worse record, including Adolph Hitler and Ghenghis Khan? In fact, to go even further, one would be hard-pressed to think of one good, decent act god committed in the entire OT, such that you would want to hug him around his neck, kiss him on the cheek and say, "Good job, well done, I am proud of you." The Devil comes out of the Bible looking much better than God. You would almost think the book was written by the Devil about God.

And finally, Thomas Paine appears to have encompassed the entire topic as well as anyone when he said on page 198 in The Age of Reason, "All our ideas of the justice and goodness of God revolt at the impious cruelty of the Bible. It is not a God, just and good, but a devil, under the name of God, that the Bible describes."

ANNIHILATIONISM--Within Christianity are several organizations, such as the Seventh-Day Adventists, the Jehovah's Witnesses and the Worldwide Church of God which deny the existence of hell. They preach, instead, a doctrine known as Annihilationism, according to which the wicked pass into nonexistence, either at death or the resurrection. Essentially, annihilationists are trying to put a more human face on Christianity and attract more followers by modifying the scare tactic of hell-fire and damnation that is so crucial to the NT. As fundamentalist Robert Morey said on page 203 in his book Death and the Afterlife, "As the pressures of liberalism continue, we can expect to see more neo-evangelicals moving either into Universalism or Annihilationism, either of which are acceptable to those who hold a liberal theological position."

Unfortunately for orthodox Christians, such as Southern Baptists, Annihilationism is biblically defensible as the following verses show all too well. Undoubtedly the strongest passage is found in Eccle. 3:19-21 which says, "For that which befalls the sons of men befalls beasts; even one thing befalls them: as one dies, so dies the other; yet they all have one breath; so that man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go to one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knows whether the spirit of man goes upward, and the spirit of the beast goes downward to the earth." That is about as definitive as one can be. If man has no "preeminence" or "advantage" over the beasts as the RSV and the Modern Language say, then all else is for nought. Another potent verse is found in Eccle. 9:5 which says, "For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward: for the memory of them is forgotten." If there is no more reward, then it is all over, including the shouting.

As Morey said on page 216 in the same book, "The book of Ecclesiastes has always been a favorite source of proof texts for the doctrine of soul sleep" otherwise known as annihilationism. Less prominent verses are: Psalm 6:5 ("For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"), Psalm 88:10 ("Wilt thou do wonders for the dead? Will the dead rise and praise Thee?"), Psalm 115:17 ("The dead do not praise the Lord, nor do any who go down into the silence"), and Eccle. 9:10 ("Whatever your hand finds to do, do it with your might; for there is no work or thought or knowledge or wisdom in Sheol, to which you are going"). All of these verses state or strongly imply that once you are dead you are dead and that is that. As far as annihilationism is concerned, Freiling's cartoons summarize the situation as well as any by saying: "That's All, Folks" there isn't any more, at least not for the wicked.

Annihilationists have other arguments in their portfolio as well. For example, they cite 1 Tim. 6:15-16, which says, "...and this will be made manifest at the proper time by the blessed and only Sovereign, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who alone has immortality...." If only Jesus has immortality, then the conclusion is obvious. One of the annihilationists' strongest arguments against hell is related by Morey on page 218 of his previously quoted book, where he says, "The words 'olam,' 'aion,' and 'aionios' do not mean eternity, because they are used of such temporal things as mountains. Therefore, 'eternal punishment' need not mean that the punishment is eternal in duration, but only in result."

A final argument upon which annihilationists rely is succinctly stated by Morey on page 217, "'Eternal life' means unending physical immortality or existence. Since only the righteous receive 'eternal life' at the resurrection, the wicked must pass into nonexistence. Otherwise, they too would be recipients of 'eternal life'."

So annihilationism is by no means a weak position to assume from a biblical perspective. The problem is that an even larger number of verses can be cited to refute annihilationism and prove punishment awaits the wicked after death. Matt. 25:46, Rev. 20:10, Rev. 14:11, Mark 3:29, 9:43-48, and Luke 3:17 are prime examples. All that is accomplished by citing the verses relied upon by both sides is to expose a major biblical contradiction. What happens to people after death is by no means a clear-cut matter as far as the Bible is concerned, and all protestations to the contrary are doomed to failure. Anyone seeking a definitive description of post-death events should not go to the Bible for assistance, because only despair and disappointment await his arrival.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from JM Continues from Last Month (Part h)
(Point #7 in our pamphlet was: Rom. 3:23 says "All have sinned." All means all. Yet, Gen. 6:9 says Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations. Job 1:1 and 1:8 say Job was perfect. How could these men have been perfect if all have sinned?--ED.)

JM's Defense is: This is a case where Mr. McKinsey did not give consideration of the meaning of the words of the original language. According to the Greek Bible the word perfect in Genesis 6:9 is the word "teleos" which does not mean sinless. It means complete, mature, or grown up. Noah was a complete man. He was mature in the faith.

The word for perfect in Job 1:1 and 1:8 is the word amemptos which merely means blameless, irreprehensible or without defect. It is the same word that is used in 1 Thess. 3:13 ("To the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God..."). In other words Job was blameless; he was a man that lived an upright life. This does not mean, however, that he never sinned. It simply means that he lived faithfully to God. The words "without defect" do not mean "sinless." Instead the connotation that is given is that one is blameless.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part h)

This is another one of those problems around which you should have taken a wide detour, JM, for several reasons. First, according to Strong's Exhaustive Concordance the word "perfect" in Gen. 6:9 comes from the Hebrew word "tamiym" which is transliterated as "taw-meem" and means without blemish, complete, perfect, sound, without spot, undefiled, and upright. Complete, mature, or grown-up are by no means the basic meaning. Second, if he was without spot or blemish, undefiled, upright, and perfect, then he was sinless. Either he was a sinner or he wasn't; there is no in between. And if he was spotless and undefiled, then he was without sin. Third, you used a Greek Bible to trace the Hebrew meaning of a biblical term from the OT. What kind of scholarship is that? Do you use a Hebrew Bible to trace the meaning of Greek words in the NT? How do you get the meaning or derivation of Hebrew words in the OT from Greek words like "teleos" and "amemptos"? Fourth, the word "perfect," which is applied to God in Deut. 32:4, comes from the same Hebrew word as the word "perfect" in Gen. 6:9, which is applied to Noah. If God is perfect and morally sinless, then so is Noah. Second Samuel 22:31 and Psalm 18:30 say, "As for God, his way is perfect...", and this "perfect" comes from the same Hebrew word as that applied to Noah. How can God be morally perfect and Noah not be, when the same Hebrew word for perfect is applied to both? Fifth, your case with respect to Job is even weaker. You admit that the word "perfect" in Job 1:1 and 1:8 means "blameless" and without defect. How does that differ from sinless? You state, "Job was blameless; he was a man that lived an upright life. This does not mean, however, that he never sinned." Don't be ridiculous! Of course it does. If he is blameless, then he never sinned. The moment he performed any sin whatever, he would no longer be blameless or upright. He'd be a sinner. There is no in between. You are trying to draw a distinction where none exists. You make the utterly erroneous comment that, "The words without defect does not mean sinless," when, in truth, if he sinned he obviously had a defect. "Without defect" must mean he is sinless, because the instant he sinned he had a defect. You are trying to have it both ways. You want a person who is without defect, blameless, upright, without spot and undefiled, who also sins. It is a good trick if you can do it, but only those of an apologetic mentality would be so foolish as to try. Sixth, if Noah was not sinless, as you state, if he was a sinner, as you allege, then he had no more right to be on the Ark than anyone else. So why was he saved? He should have drowned with all the rest of humanity. Apparently God was playing favorites again, since Noah had done nothing to earn his escape from death. Seventh, those who translated the KJV of the Bible chose to use the word "perfect" in Gen. 6:9, and you are implying that your knowledge of Hebrew is superior to theirs because you could have chosen a more appropriate term. And lastly, could you cite a Hebrew dictionary in which the word "perfect" in Job 1:1 and 1:8 is derived from a Hebrew term which primarily means "living faithfully to God"? Again, where are you getting this conglomeration? As I have said so often, it would be nice from the apologetic standpoint if the Bible spoke as its defenders would like, but alas, the opposite is often the case.

Letter #508 Continues (Part i)

(Point #8 in our pamphlet was: How could Moses have written the first 5 books in the Bible (the Torah), when his own death and burial is described in Deut. 34:5-6, which says, "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab...and he buried him in a valley....?--ED.)

JM's Defense is: Why would Moses' obituary being included in the last chapter of the last book keep the rest of the Pentateuch from being written by Moses? The only reason is because Mr. McKinsey has determined that the Bible cannot be inspired by God and now he must find some excuse to try and prove that it was not. However, his contention falls because the argument does not necessitate the rest of the Pentateuch from excluding Mosaic authorship.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part i)

Oh, so now you are admitting that part of the Torah is not of Mosaic origin. Fundamentalists tell us that Moses wrote the first 5 books of the Bible, and now you admit that he did not write the last part of the fifth book. In other words, you have changed your argument from he wrote the first five books of the Bible to, he wrote most of the first 5 books.

Letter #508 Continues (Part j)

(Regarding the Mosaic authorship of the Bible--Ed.) Gleason Archer said, "Before me lies a copy of Roland de Vaux's excellent volume Archeology and the Dead Sea Scrolls. This is a revised English edition of the Schweich Lectures he delivered at Oxford in 1959, published by Oxford University in 1973. On page vi is a brief foreword signed by Kathleen Kenyon, which opens with the following words: 'It is sad that Roland de Vaux did not live to see the translation of his Schweich Lectures appear.' This then is the kind of obituary notice that is added to the main text of the book. In other terminal works produced by famous authors, the obituary appears in the last chapter of the book. Often that obituary is not signed."

According to McKinsey, Roland de Vaux could not have done the work ascribed to him because his obituary is included in the book. This makes just about as much sense as it does to say that Moses did not write the Pentateuch because his obituary is written in the last chapter of the book.

Editor's Response to letter #508 (Part j)

The situations are not even analogous, JM. First, the sentence from de Vaux's book appears in the foreword of the book, separate from the body of the book itself, and no effort is made to give people the impression that de Vaux was the author. Second, it clearly states another person was the author. Third, the apologetic argument is that Moses wrote the Torah; whereas, no one is arguing that de Vaux wrote all of his book. Fourth, if you want proof that Moses did not write the rest of the Torah either, I strongly suggest you read the commentaries in Issues 19 and 20 of

BE. Lastly, and most important, you insidiously shifted the focus from Moses writing all of the Torah to he wrote most of it. That is not what is claimed by fundamentalists.

Letter #508 Continues (Part k)

[Point #9 in our pamphlet was: Did Solomon have 40,000 stalls for his horses (1 Kings 4:26) or 4,000 (2 Chron. 9:25), and did Solomon's house contain 2,000 baths (1 Kings 7:26) or 3,000 (2 Chron. 4:5)?--ED.]

JM's Defense is: The Number of Stalls: There were 40,000 individual horse stalls: and 4,000 in reference to the stalls accommodating horses and chariots. Mr. McKinsey has not considered that many times different methods of calculation are involved which we may or may not use today. In the latter case, there were 10 chariots and 10 horses per stall. Some of these stalls were in Jerusalem (2 Chronicles 9:25), but others were scattered out in other cities, as some have been found in Megiddo, Hazor, Ell el Hesi dating back to Solomon's time.

The Baths in Solomon's House: This was a very large container made to hold 2,000 baths, but when filled to the rim, would hold 3,000. Many cars are made to seat 6 passengers, but will carry 8 if needed.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part k)

You should have stuck with the copyist's mistake defense that is standard fare for nearly all apologists, my friend, instead of striking out on your own. First, whoever heard of horses being bedded down with their chariots in the same stall? Secondly, and even more important, you say there were 40,000 individual horse stalls and then turn around and say no, there were actually 4,000 stalls with 10 chariots and 10 horses in each. If the latter is true how could there be 40,000 individual stalls with one horse in each? You are contradicting yourself by trying to have it both ways. Either you have 40,000 stalls with one horse in each, or you have 4,000 stalls with 10 horses in each. But you can't have both simultaneously. We are not involved with different methods of calculating the same situation as you allege, but in calculating two different situations which conflict.

As far as the baths are concerned, you are not even in the ballpark. We are talking about the number of baths, not the capacity of each. What does the capacity have to do with the number in his house? And what container are you talking about? Nothing is said about a container. Where are you getting that idea? Your reasoning is often so far off base that one hardly knows where to begin correcting your "thought processes."

Even if what you said were relevant, which it isn't, nothing is said about the baths being filled to the rim. You state, "This was a very large container made to hold 2,000 baths, but when filled to the rim, would hold 3,000" which is ridiculous. If it could hold 3,000 baths, then it was built to hold 3,000, not 2,000. Why not say it was built to hold 1,000 or 1,500 or 1,900 or 2,100? Why arbitrarily stop at 2,000? As I said, you should have stuck with the copyist error defense, instead of wandering into an area in which you are ill-equipped to navigate.

(To be Continued Next Month)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #525 from AS of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Dennis.

...I have had a lot of trouble finding people who will debate me. There was a lady at work who was shocked to find out I was an atheist, but once I told her water doesn't come from rocks, donkey's don't talk, and maybe one or two other points, she just backed down. Her attitude seems to be "He's intelligent, don't hassle him, don't take him on." She still clearly believes in the Bible, but doesn't want to take me on over it....

I have had some contact with some Jehovah's Witnesses that's getting nowhere. When they recently came to my door, we started talking about the character of God. I got into his murderous nature and she ran away like a whipped puppy dog. She told me she would write with some questions; I've heard nothing. Her partner came back one other time, and, upon recognizing me, said he would check to see why she hadn't written. I haven't heard from him since either. I wrote a letter to their kingdom hall and, again, have heard nothing.

I saw a preacher's name in another publication, wrote him a letter and sent him a copy of my "Jesus Lied" file. He told me he would not engage in a written debate, only face to face. Since he lives in Oklahoma and I'm not rich, that won't happen. He's a grandstander.

If anything does happen and I end up in a good debate situation, I'll be happy to let you know.

Editor's Response to Letter #525

Dear AS.

Every knowledgeable critic of the Bible has experienced the same kind of problems. People avoid us for several reasons. First, they are obviously afraid we might bring up something they have never heard and weaken their faith in the process. Debates reek with insecurity and uncertainty. You never know what the other side might toss out. Second, Christians have been indoctrinated to believe that all critics of the Bible in general, and of Jesus in particular, are satanic agents who are incapable of being honest, sincere and accurate. Third, all religions, especially Christianity and its Bible, are confidence schemes, and what does a confidence man fear as much as anything?--EXPOSURE. You can't sell a bogus product or a fraudulent philosophy when somebody is present to reveal the truth, and does. Fourth, look at it from the apologetic perspective. Why waste time on someone who is clearly better informed than the average citizen and far more difficult to deceive, when there are millions of suckers out there, more than willing to gobble up anything that can be made to look appetizing? Most people operate far more on emotion than intellect, and for that reason are vulnerable and easy to manipulate. The methodology of religionists is no different from that of all other con artists. Fifth, religionists know it is far easier to give an uninterrupted speech before a group of neutrals and sympathizers than contend with those who are not sufficiently brainwashed to fall into lockstep. Why spend time with those with whom you feel little success will be forthcoming? And lastly, knowing they are in the majority, religionists conclude that there is nothing in it for them to jeopardize their superiority in numbers. Why risk an uncertain encounter, when you have far more to lose than gain? Ministers, priests, and rabbis are not anxious to debate knowledgeable critics of the Bible when they know that most of the observers will be of a religious persuasion before the encounter begins. Why engage in debate before a sympathetic audience, when you could very easily lose more adherents than you gain?

The philosophy I follow in regard to this whole issue is the exact opposite of that used by biblicists. Most religionists seek to avoid those who want to discuss the validity of the Bible, while I will not spend much time with those who won't discuss the Book's validity. I won't be preached to or lectured by those who seek only a one-sided presentation with no cross-examination. If they want to debate it, then I'm their man. But if all they want is prejudiced pontification, like TV preachers--if all they seek is a biased monologue, like a radio evangelist--forget it. My time is far too valuable and my concerns far too extensive for such indolence.

WORKS--One of the most prominent themes running throughout fundamentalist and conservative Christian literature is that you are saved by faith in Jesus Christ. The number of quotes one could relate in this regard is rather sizable so there is no need to belabor the obvious at this juncture. What isn't so obvious, however, is that a large number of verses clearly say that you are saved by works or good deeds. Faith is not sufficient. In fact, many biblical verses show that faith is either unnecessary or useless without works. James 2:17 says, "Even so faith, if it has not works, is dead, being alone." James 2:14 says, "What does it profit, my brethren, though a man say he has faith, and has not works? Can faith save him?" And Matt. 7:21 says, "Not every one who says to me, Lord, Lord, will enter the Kingdom of heaven, but only he who does the will of my Father who is in heaven." So faith without works is ineffectual. According to much of Scripture, your behavior has far more to do with your ultimate destiny than any beliefs, ideas, or concepts lying at the core of your thought processes. The biblical message that constantly emerges is that it is what you do that counts, not what you believe. Because belief in salvation by works is unacceptable to most of Christianity and, in fact, is decried repeatedly and vociferously in most apologetic literature, we feel obligated to present the other side and expose "Salvation in Jesus Christ" for the fraud that it is. All of the following verses show that acts, performance, conduct, and behavior are what matter in the final analysis, not outlook, philosophy, and beliefs.

- Micah 6:8 says, "...what does the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." Note well! All one need do to meet God's requirements is to be just, love mercy and be humble. Nothing is said about believing in anything. Good deeds are sufficient.
- Another powerful citation is found in Mark 10:17-19 (See also: Matt. 19:16-18 and Luke 18:18-22) in which a man says to Jesus, "Good master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life. And Jesus said to him, Why call thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God. Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and thy mother...and go thy way, sell whatever you have and give to the poor, and you shall have treasure in heaven and come, take up the cross and follow me." In other words, a man asked Jesus what he had to do to be saved, and Jesus provided him a laundry list of obligatory good deeds. At no time did Jesus tell him to believe in anything, including himself. Good behavior, alone, is sufficient. That is salvation by works. One can't help but note that Jesus only listed 5 of the Ten Commandments. Apparently the others are not crucial for salvation.
- In Luke 10:25-28 a lawyer tempted Jesus by saying, "Master, what must (Note carefully that he says must--Ed.) I do to inherit eternal life?" and Jesus said to him, "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" The lawyer answered and said, "Thou shalt love the lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." And Jesus said to him, "Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live." So, Christianity's founder, himself, says that loving the Lord and your neighbor has more to do with salvation than faith in Jesus.

Another example of works being thrust to the forefront is found in Ezek. 18:4-9, which says, "...the soul that sins, it shall die. But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right...has walked in my statutes, and has kept my judgments, to deal truly; he is just, he shall surely live...." Again, nothing is said about belief or believing in anything. Good deeds, following God's statutes, and doing what is just and right are all that is required. That could be accomplished by anyone who has ever lived and one need never have heard of Jesus or the Bible. Rom. 2:13 says, "(For not the hearers of the law are just before God) but the doers of the law shall be justified." It says "doers" are justified, not "believers." First Cor. 7:19 in the NIV says, "Circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing. Keeping God's commands is what counts. If keeping the commandments is what counts, then belief is of little import. That is also the message to be found in Rev. 22:14, which says, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Eccle. 12:13 is another powerful verse in favor of salvation by works, and says, "...Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." Notice it says the "whole duty." There are no other requirements, such as believing in something or someone. Acts 10:35 also says that in every nation, "He that fears him, and works righteousness, is accepted with him." So, clearly works are primary according to these verses.

The Book of James is exceptionally rich in verses that focus on the importance of works over faith. James 2:24 flatly states, "You see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." James 2:21 says, "Was not Abraham our father justified by works?" James 2:25 says, "Was not Rahab the harlot justified by works when she received the messengers?" James 2:20 says, "Faith without works is dead." James 2:26 says, "For as the body without spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." And James 1:27 says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this. To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Notice that nothing is said in any of these verses about believing in anything. Visiting the fatherless and widows, in other words good deeds, are all that is required to have an undefiled and pure religion.

Works are also the focus of attention in Luke 18:29-30, in which Jesus says, "There is no man that has left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting." Good behavior is also stressed over ritual in 1 Cor. 7:19, which says, "Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but what matters is the keeping of the commandments of God." John 6:27 says, "Labour not for the meat which perishes, but for that meat which endures to everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give to you." Notice it says "labour," not "believe." Matt. 7:24 says, "Whoever hears these sayings of mine, and does them, I will liken him to a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." Again, notice it says "does" not "believes." Works, not belief, are further stressed in Luke 19:8-9, which says, "Zacchaeus stood, and said to the Lord; Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusations, I restore him fourfold. And Jesus said to him, This day has salvation come to this house, forasmuch as he also is a son of Abraham." The key verbs--give, taken, and restore--are words of action, not belief. Another key citation that is rich in action verbs is Psalm 15:1-3 which says, "O Lord, who shall sojourn in thy tent? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He who walks blamelessly, and does what is right, and speaks truth from his heart; who does not slander with his tongue, and does no evil to his friend, nor takes up a reproach against his neighbor...." The main verbs are "walks," "does," "speaks," and "takes", and not one stresses beliefs or thoughts. Deut. 10:12-13 says, "And now Israel, what does the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, To keep the commandments of the Lord, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good?" Every one of the verbs--fear, walk, love, serve, keep--embodies works over faith or belief. Other verses that clearly show works are of far greater importance in the salvation scenario are Gen. 4:7 ("If you do well, will you not be accepted?"), 2 Peter 1:10 ("...for if you do these things, you shall never fall"), 1 Cor. 9:24 ("Know you not that they which run in a race run all, but one receives the prize? So run that you may obtain"), Matt. 25:31-46, 1 John 3:7, and James 1:25.

And finally, a sizable number of verses clearly state that the ultimate reward, heaven, belongs to those who commit good deeds. Faith isn't even considered. Key verses in this regard are: Rev. 22:12 ("...my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be"), Matt. 16:27 ("For the Son of Man shall come...and then he shall reward every man according to his works"), Rom. 2:6 ("The righteous judgment of God; who will render to every man according to his deeds"), 2 Cor. 5:10 ("For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to what he has done, whether it be good or bad"), Psalm 62:12 ("...for thou renderest to every man according to his work"), John 5:28-29 ("Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, to the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation"), Ezek. 7:3 ("...and will judge thee according to thy ways"), Ezek. 18:30 and 33:20 ("I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways"), Gal. 6:7-8 ("...for whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap. For he that sows to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that sows to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting"), Rev. 2:23 ("I will give to every one of you according to your works"), Rev. 20:12-13 ("And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works...and they were judged every man according to their works").

Many more verses are available but the point has been carved in granite. As far as biblical theology is concerned, when it comes to the final decision on the last day, an overwhelming number of verses clearly show that man's ultimate destiny will be based on behavior and not beliefs. Works will be the final determinant, not faith. If faith gets into the act or, worse yet, becomes the main consideration, then fundamentalists face a dilemma of the first magnitude. What happens to someone who lives an exemplary life but never accepts Jesus as his savior? If he goes to hell, as fundamentalists predict, then he most assuredly will not have been rewarded for good behavior, as is so often promised in Scripture. All of the verses that predict, promise, or prophesy that the final reward of mankind will be based on works rather than deeds present an insurmountable problem for anyone who claims that one's ultimate destiny hinges on whether or not he accepts Jesus Christ as his personal savior. Verses such as John 14:6 ("I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man comes to the Father, but by me"), John 3:18 ("He that believes on him is not condemned: but he that believes not is condemned already, because he has not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God"), John 3:36 ("He that believes on the Son has everlasting life; and he that believes not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abides on him"), and 1 John 5:12 ("He that has the Son has life; and he that has not the Son of God has not life") place fundamentalists and their allies in a horrible predicament. If belief in Jesus is the only way, as these verses allege and fundamentalists believe, what are they going to do about all of the verses that say you are saved by works, and deeds will be the primary determinant of your ultimate fate? Equally important, what happens to those people who died never having accepted Jesus, but having led virtually immaculate lives?

Probably the most important ramification of all, however, is that if works are the primary determinant of one's destiny, then Christianity in general and the Bible in particular become all but irrelevant. Anyone from any religion or no religion can perform good deeds and attain salvation. Jesus ceases to be a factor of any importance.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Editor's Response to Letter #508 Continues from Last Month (Part I)

[Point #10 in our pamphlet was: Paul says that Christianity lives or dies on the Resurrection (1 Cor. 15:14, 17). Yet, why would it be of any consequence when the Widow of Nain's son, Jairus's daughter, Lazarus, and many others rose before Jesus? By the time he rose, this was actually a common occurrence. I would think it would have been met by a resounding yawn rather than surprise. Adam's act of coming into the world as a full grown adult is much more spectacular--ED.]

JM's Defense is:

Mr. McKinsey thinks that Paul was teaching that the resurrection itself was special. Paul never taught this idea. In Christ's life, he was sinless. In his death and resurrection he overcame death for us. That is what makes it so special. Jesus Christ was the only one who lived a sinless life, died and was raised to die no more. All of those together are what makes his resurrection so important. Had Jesus not lived a sinless life, his resurrection would mean nothing more than the others. Had he lived the sinless life, and not been raised, his death would have meant nothing. However, when all this is applied together, the end result is salvation for man-kind....

This is the same as saying that hearing saves (John 5:25); or that belief saves (John 20:30-31); or that repentance saves (Luke 13:3); or that confession saves (Romans 10:10); or that baptism saves (1 Peter 3:21). All of these are said to save, but there is not a one of them that will save all by itself. When they are all combined, when a person does all of them, salvation from past sins is the result. The same thing is true with Paul's statement about the resurrection in 1 Cor. 15:17.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part l)

Paul was not teaching the resurrection was special? Are you serious? Have you taken leave of your NT senses? The verses I cited from 1 Corinthians clearly show that Paul felt the whole ball-game rose or fell on the Resurrection. What did he say? Without the Resurrection your faith is in vain and you are still in your sins. That is what he said and that is about as definite as one can be. Second, you say that Jesus was the only one to die no more. How do you know those who rose before him died again? Would you please cite chapter and verse to justify that allegation? You certainly couldn't be making this assumption based on anything in Scripture; for nothing is said about the subsequent lives of these people. Third, would you also please cite chapter and verse to show where Paul ties the Resurrection and sinlessness together? If anything, this is the idea that "Paul never taught." At no time are they related in the manner you describe, and your efforts represent nothing more than a transparent attempt to extricate your beloved book from an obvious dilemma. Fourth, you say that, "Paul was only dealing with one aspect of salvation; the resurrection." Precisely! And that's why your efforts to bring sinlessness into the picture are wholly unwarranted. He was only discussing the resurrection in 1 Corinthians 15, and your attempt to drag in sinlessness is biblically unsupportable. Fifth, after saying that hearing, belief, repentance, confession, and baptism save us, you allege that, "there is not one of them that will save by itself." Nowhere does the Bible say they are tied together or one necessitates the others. You can't make that judgment based on either Scripture or common sense. It's ridiculous and analogous to saying: a Ford is a car; a Honda is a car; a Buick is a car, and a Pontiac is a car; but none of them are cars unless they are all cars. Each is independent of the other and is to be judged on its own merits.

Letter #508 Continues (Part m)

Why was the resurrection of Jesus a surprise after other resurrections had taken place? In every other case these people were resurrected by the power of God, given by the Holy Spirit, through Jesus Christ (cf. Matthew 12:28). In this case, Jesus was raised directly by the Father (Acts 2:22-24; Romans 6:3-5).... In Jesus' case, there was no intervention; it came directly through God....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part m)

You say that in every case except that of Jesus, people were resurrected by the power of God, given by the Holy Spirit, through Jesus Christ, and then you quote Matt. 12:28, which says, "But if it is by the Spirit of God that I cast out demons, then the kingdom of God has come upon you." Matt. 12:28 isn't even relevant to the issue. What does casting out demons have to do with being resurrected? Apparently you were desperate for a verse, and that was the only one available. Secondly, you artificially created a distinction where no substantial difference lies. You state that "these people were resurrected by the power of God" while Jesus "was raised directly by the Father." All you are saying is that the final source for the resurrection of everyone was God; so where is a difference of real substance? In fact, what difference does it make how they were raised? The fact is that they died and ascended from the grave. And lastly, you say that, "these people were resurrected by the power of God," while Jesus was "raised directly by the Father." Yet, one of your own sources for the latter allegation is Acts 2:24, which says, "Whom God has raised up." It does not say "the Father"; it says "God raised Jesus." And that is the same being you hold responsible for the resurrection of all those who preceded Jesus. So where is the distinction?

Letter #508 Continues (Part n)

[Point #11 in our pamphlet: Was Jehoiachin 18 years old when he began to reign in Jerusalem and did he reign 3 months (2 Kings 24:8) or was he 8 years old and reigned 3 months and 10 days (2 Chron. 36:9) and did Nebuzaradan come to Jerusalem on the 7th (2 Kings 25:8) or 10th (Jer. 52:12) day of the 5th month?--ED.]

JM's Defense is:

One possible explanation is that Jehoiachin was 8 years old when he began to co-reign with his father.... If Mr. McKinsey has problems with a child co-reigning with his father at such an early age, we only need remind him that Joash sat on the throne by himself at the age of 7 (2 Chron. 24:1).

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part n)

Surely you aren't going to rely on more of this co-reign nonsense, JM! There is no reason to discuss this dodge any longer. Again, how do you co-reign with a dead man? You should have consulted the text more closely before you leaped into this quagmire. Second Kings clearly states, "So Jehoiakim slept with his fathers; and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead." Jehoiachin had no father to "co-reign" with.

Secondly, your point with reference to Joash proves my argument, not yours. You readily admit he reigned "on the throne by himself" and that is precisely my point. He did not co-reign with anyone. Why on earth did you even mention Joash? I suggest that you devote more effort to creating logical connections in your reasoning processes. You often make leaps in thought that are either irrelevant, innocuous, or erroneous. You really should work on this. Seriously! I'm not being facetious or patronizing. You are exhibiting traits common to those infected by the religious malady, which always has a negative influence on the ability to reason.

Letter #508 Continues (Part o)

Did he reign 3 months or 3 months and 10 days? His actual reign (by himself) was, no doubt, 3 months and 10 days (2 Kings 24:8): rounded off to 3 months (2 Chron. 36:9). For example one puts his age of 37 on an application for a loan, when actually he is 37 and 3 months and 5 days old. Instead of putting the exact age, he rounds it off to 37. Since this is done by most people even today, why does McKinsey consider this as a contradiction, when it is found in the Bible?....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part o)

Your rounding off explanation is no answer whatever. Whether the correct figure is 3 months or 3 months and 10 days is of no consequence. What is of immense importance is the fact that one of the figures, and possibly both, is erroneous. If someone says he is 37 years old when additional days or months are involved, he is incorrect. But his figure is acceptable because the creditor does not demand perfection. Biblicists, on the other hand, claim the Bible is perfect. There are no mistakes or errors contained therein. Perfection is demanded. When dealing with perfection, approximations don't count and that is why the Bible erred. You have to be on-target at all times. We aren't pitching horseshoes. No errors of any kind are allowed in any book written by a perfect being.

Letter #508 Continues (Part p)

Did Nebuzaradan come to Jerusalem on the 7th day of the 5th month, or did he come on the 10th day of the 5th month? This is a case where Mr. McKinsey failed to carefully read what the Bible said. Second Kings 25:8-9 says, "And in the 5th month on the 7th day of the month...came Nebuzaradan...unto Jerusalem: and he burnt the house of the Lord..." While Jer. 52:12-13 says, "Now in the 5th month in the 10th day of the month...came Nebuzaradan...into Jerusalem and burnt the house of the Lord..." One account says that he came unto Jerusalem while the other says he came into (or in other words he entered) Jerusalem. He apparently waited for 3 days to enter the city after he arrived.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part p)

Like so many biblicists, JM, you have chosen the version of 2 Kings 25:8-9 which best suits your needs. If you had consulted the Jerusalem Bible you would have seen that the 8th verse says Nebuzaradan "entered Jerusalem" on the 7th day. And the New English Bible says that on the 7th, not the 10th day, Nebuzaradan...came to Jerusalem and set fire to the house of the Lord and the royal palace and burned down all the houses in the city, including the mansion of Gedaliah. For all of the latter to have been accomplished, he must have entered the city on the 7th day. In addition, 2 Kings 25:8-9 in the NEB says that Nebuzaradan came to Jerusalem AND set fire to the house of the Lord on the 7th day. In other words, both occurred on the same day. The conjunction "and" proves there was no lapse in time between the two events. (To Be Continued Next Month)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #520 from TD of Morgantown, West Virginia

These are my objections to the Christian doctrine of salvation:

The Doctrine is Incomplete because:

- (1) It is not able to specify what propositions need to be believed in order for one to be saved, or whether or not one could have any doubts about them.
- (2) It is not able to specify an "age of accountability" below which all who die are automatically saved. Such a concept seems to be both required and also absurd. (For example, it is absurd that one's eternal destiny should be a matter of luck regarding the timing of one's death.)
- (3) It is not able to specify the status of persons who lived before Christ and/or who never heard of Christ. There is an absurdity here too in that one's eternal destiny seems to be a matter of luck (the time in which one lives his/her earthly life and the information that one receives during it).

Wherever the line is drawn, it will be largely a matter of luck whether one comes to be above the line or below it. People who are born into circumstances in which they receive the right information have a chance to be saved, whereas no one else receives any such opportunity.

The Doctrine is False because:

- (1) It requires that people deserve damnation, but people do not deserve damnation. Both their beliefs and behavior are totally determined by natural causes and/or predestined by God himself (as is indicated in many places in the Bible). No one deserves anything for that which is totally determined and/or predestined.
- (2) It requires that loving God and believing in Christ, both of which we are commanded to do according to the Bible (1 John 3:23), are actions subject to the will. But neither loving nor believing are actions subject to the will. We do not have control over either of them (because of biblical predestination-Ed.).

Letter #521 from A.W.L of Terre Haute, Indiana

Dear Dennis.

Please note The GOSPEL MUDDLE: "Jesus is serene and sweet in his lovely parables," says one of his enthusiasts. For serenity and sweetness we recommend Jesus' famous parable of the marriage feast, in which a king who can't induce anybody to come to his feast, sends his armies to burn down the cities of the reluctant invitees, and then picks folk casually off the street and puts them in jail if they don't happen to be wearing tuxedos. Or perhaps we shall be referred to the parable in which we are urged to "make friends with the mammon of unrighteousness," or to the tissue of absurdities in the parable of the virgins, or to the economic parable of the employer who pays no more for a day's work than for an hour's work. Perhaps the enthusiast will explain to us why, in one text, Jesus is supposed to speak in parables so that his hearers will not learn the truth, and in another text he is said to teach in parables so as to be more democratic than the Scribes and Pharisees. Any Christian scholar who touches the subject at all, ought to know that all Jewish teachers at that time used parables--there are hundreds in the Talmud--and most of the so-called parables of Jesus are filched from the rabbis, and made in large part nonsensical in the gospel version.

February 1993

FAITH (Part 1)--Last month's commentary focused on the large number of verses stressing a view deemed anathema to most of Christendom, that salvation comes through works rather than faith in Jesus. And although a very strong case can be made in favor of works, an equally strong argument can be made in favor of faith. So many statements, comments, acts, and quotations are available from the Bible, that next month's commentary will be devoted to this vital issue as well.

Generally speaking, verses in support of faith as the road to salvation can be grouped into 2 broad categories: those which allow one path only and those in which faith is deemed a road to salvation but not necessarily the road, or the only road. The first category is undoubtedly composed of the most powerful comments in defense of salvation by faith, and is well represented by such verses as:

- John 14:6 ("I am the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me"),
- John 3:18 ("He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already"),
- John 3:36 ("He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him"),
- 1 John 5:12 ("He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life"),
- John 8:24 ("...ye shall die in your sins: for if you believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins"),
- Acts 16:30-31 ("What must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house"),
- and Acts 4:12 ("Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved").

Notice the employment of the obligatory term must in the last two verses.

These are the 7 most important utterances in favor of faith, because each not only says you are saved by faith but that you are saved by faith alone. There is no other route. There is one route, and one route only, and that route is faith in Jesus Christ.

Contrary to the belief of some, one verse that does not belong in this category because of an additional requirement is Mark 16:16 ("He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned"). This verse does not qualify for entry, because one must not only believe but be baptized as well. Belief alone is insufficient. Another verse that doesn't quite make the grade is John 6:28-29 ("What must we do, to be doing the works of God? Jesus answered them, This is the work of God, that you believe on him whom he has sent"). Even though belief in Jesus is stressed, this verse is disqualified because the key word "must" in the RSV, ASV, NEB, NAB, and NIV is translated as "shall" in the KJV, NWT, and NASB, and "should" in the Modern Language and Living Bible versions. The degree of imprecision and conflict between the various versions of this verse obviate any possibility of it being a definitive statement in favor of salvation by faith only. "Shall" and "should" are not as definitive as "must." Another verse that doesn't qualify is 1 Cor. 3:11 ("For no other foundation can any one lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ"). It's too vague. It doesn't say you have to believe in Jesus or have faith in Jesus. It could very well mean that all you need do is perform good deeds or follow in his footsteps. Another verse that can't be included is Heb. 11:6 ("But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him"). Because of the strong emphasis on faith and employment of the word "must," it would appear to meet the essential requirements for category #1. But wait a minute! Faith in what? Not faith in Jesus as one's savior, but faith in the existence of God. Under that standard a wide assortment of people, including Muslims and Jews, would qualify. And lastly, another citation that is just too nebulous to be included in category #1 is John 15:4-5 ("Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can you except you abide in me. I am the vine, you are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing"). The problem in this instance is with the word "abide." What does it mean? Does it mean belief in Jesus as one's savior, or does it mean following in the footsteps of Jesus by practicing his alleged good deeds, as is implied by "bringeth forth much fruit"? Is faith or works the key element? The question remains unresolved.

One of the more interesting conflicts between faith and works adherents arises from the fact that faith-alone adherents allege that prior to the death of Jesus on the cross, one was, indeed, saved by works. But after the cross, salvation became possible only through faith in Jesus Christ as one's savior. Unfortunately for faith-alone proponents, this defense won't stand the strain of critical analysis. A significant number of verses show that people were saved by faith prior to the cross as well. Prime examples are:

- Rom. 4:13 ("The promise to Abraham and his descendants, that they should inherit the world, did not come through the law but through the righteousness of faith"),
- Rom. 4:2-5 ("For if Abraham was justified by works, he has something to boast about, but not before God. For what does the scripture say? 'Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned to him as righteousness'"),

- Gal. 3:14 ("That in Christ Jesus the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith"),
- Gal. 3:6-7 ("Even as Abraham believed God, it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham"),
- Hebrews 11:31 ("By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believeth not"),
- Heb. 11:7 ("By faith Noah, being warned by God concerning events as yet unseen, took heed and constructed an ark for the saving of his household; by this he condemned the world and became an heir of the righteousness which comes by faith"),
- and Rom. 4:20-24 ("Abraham...grew strong in his faith as he gave glory to God, fully convinced that God was able to do what he had promised. That is why his faith was 'reckoned to him as righteousness.' But the words, 'it was reckoned to him,' were written not for his sake alone, but for ours also. It will be reckoned to us who believe in him that raised from the dead Jesus our Lord,...").

The major weakness in these verses from the perspective of salvation-by-works adherents, however, is that none of them clearly says you are saved by believing in Jesus. Yes, they allude to people being saved by faith prior to the cross. But, faith in what? That's the issue. It could very well be faith in God, which would include millions of non-Christians.

As far as this whole issue is concerned, it is important for freethinkers to not only be aware of key "salvation by faith" verses, but why some verses are too weak to apply. They should take special note of those few verses in which salvation by faith is deemed to be the only route to heaven, because they are the only comments upon which fundamentalists and other faith adherents can rely with any real degree of integrity. Next month's commentary will focus on Category #2, which is composed of all those verses which allege faith is a path to salvation, but not necessarily the only path to salvation. Other options are available.

(To Be Concluded Next Month)

EXCLUDED LITERATURE--One of the least discussed, but most important aspects having to do with biblical history, is the large number of books that vied for entry into what has come to be known as the Canon, but were excluded for one reason or another. Literally scores of books were considered for possible inclusion into the Bible, and nearly every writing had supporters to one degree or another. But, alas, religious politics had far more to do with the selection of what books gained admittance into Scripture than any adherence to divine inspiration or heavenly intervention. This is aptly described in a book entitled The Origin and Growth of the Bible. Because of the book's accuracy and poignancy, we are providing the following extended excerpt found on pages 164 through 169:

...no fewer than sixteen books are wanting from the OT which seemingly ought to be there; at least they are referred to in various places in the Bible as if they were equally authoritative with books which are included in the Canon. So far as we know, all of these books, with one exception, are lost. Their names are: The Book of the Wars of the Lord (Num. 21:14), The Book of Jasher (Joshua 10:13 and 2 Sam. 1:18), The Book of the Manner of the Kingdom written by Samuel (1 Sam. 10:25), The Books of Nathan and Gad concerning King David (1 Chron. 29:29), The Book of the Acts of Solomon (1 Kings 11:41), The Book of Enoch (Jude 14 and 15), The Books of Nathan, Ahijah, and Iddo concerning King Solomon (2 Chron. 9:29), Solomon's Songs, Parables, and Treatises on Natural History (1 Kings 4:32), The Book of Shemaiah concerning King Rehoboam (2 Chron. 12:15), The Book of Jehu concerning Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 20:34), The Book of Isaiah concerning King Uzziah (2 Chron. 26:22), The Words of the Seers to King Manasseh (2 Chron. 33:18-19), The Book of Lamentations over King Josiah (2 Chron. 35:25), The Volume of Jeremiah burned by Jehudi (Jer. 36:2, 6, 23), The Chronicles of the Kings of Judah (mentioned repeatedly in Kings), and The Chronicles of the Kings of Israel (mentioned repeatedly in Kings). Why were these books allowed to perish? Why were they left out of the OT? If scripture writers themselves referred to them as of equal authority with their own writings, how can a line be drawn between them and genuine scripture? Indeed, what is it that constitutes genuine scripture? But these sixteen books are not all that we get traces of.

A second list of 18 writings, still existing and generally known as the OT 'Pseudepigraphal' books, must also be noticed. Their names are as follows: The Testament of Solomon, The History of Asenath, Joseph's wife, The Apocalypse of Baruch, The Book of Elias the Prophet, The Book of the Secrets of Enoch, The Third Book of Esdras, The Fourth Book of Esdras, The Ascension of Isaiah, The Book Jubilees, 'Little Genesis,' The Testament of Job, The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees, The Fifth Book of Maccabees, The Assumption of Moses, The Preaching of Noah to the Antediluvians, The Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, The Psalter of Solomon, and the Testament of Adam. According to our standards today, the value of these books is not great. Some of them, however, we know exerted a good deal of influence upon early Christian thought, and were held in high esteem even by scholars like Origen.

Of much higher value is a third list of 14 books known as the OT Apocrypha. These are: 1 Esdras, 2 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, The rest of the chapters of the Book of Esther, The Wisdom of Solomon, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch, The Song of the Three Holy Children, The History of Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, The Prayer of Manasseh, 1st Maccabees, and 2nd Maccabees. These OT apocryphal books are all extant, and are more or less familiar to the public. They are found in the Septuagint, the translation of the OT into Greek, made a century or two before Christ. The Roman Catholic Church claims that they are true scripture, and prints them as a part of her Bible. Protestants, however, take the responsibility of casting them out; though now and then a Protestant Bible (generally a large one for family or pulpit use)...contains them. Whether these fourteen apocryphal books ought to be in the Bible or not is a question upon which scholars have never agreed, and upon which the Christian world today is about evenly divided. That some of them are superior not only as literature, but in respect to their moral and religious teachings, to several of the books that are now in the Bible, is certain. For example, no unprejudiced mind can hesitate for a moment to place the religious value of the apocryphal Wisdom of Solomon or Ecclesiasticus above that of the canonical Esther or Ecclesiastes.

Passing now from the OT to the New, what do we find? Are the books that appear in our NT Canon all that were written in connection with the origin of the Christian movement? Or, if others were written, how many others? And was there any clear line by which the two classes were separated?

The number of NT apocryphal books or fragments that we know to have existed during the early centuries is very large. The names of no fewer than 109 such works (41 extant and 68 lost) are in our possession. A translation into English of the whole or a part of the 41 NT apocryphal writings that are extant is often seen printed in a volume, and circulated under the title of the NT Apocrypha. A partial list of these writings is as follows: The Protevangelium of James, The Gospel of Thomas, The Gospel of the Infancy, The Gospel of Nicodemus, The Narrative of Joseph of Arimathaea, The Acts of Pilate, The General Epistle of Barnabas, The First and Second Epistles of Clement, The Apostolic Constitutions, and The First and Second Books of Hermas. We have knowledge of these lost writings through quotations from them, or references to them, found in Christian authors of the first four centuries. The names of a few of these, with the writers who mention them, are as follows: The Acts of Andrew (mentioned by Eusebius, Epiphanius, and Gelasius), The Gospel according to the Twelve Apostles (Origen, Ambrose, and Jerome), The Gospel of Barnabas (Gelasius), The Gospel of Basilides (Origen, Ambrose, and Jerome),...The Gospel of Matthias (Origen, Ambrose, Eusebius, and Jerome), and the Acts of John (Eusebius, Athanasius, Augustine).

In reference to the same topic, another work entitled The Freethinker's Textbook states on page 240,

The number of books that claim admission to the canon is very considerable.... The following list will give some idea of the number of the apocryphal writings from which the four Gospels, and other books of the NT, finally emerge as canonical: Gospel according to the Hebrews, Gospel written by Judas Iscariot, Gospel of Peter, Gospel of Marcion, Gospel of Basilides, Gospel of Thomas, Gospel of Tatian,..., Letter to Agbarus by Christ (extant), Epistle to Peter and Paul by Christ (extant), Hymn by Christ (extant), Magical Book by Christ (extant), Prayer by Christ (extant), Preaching by Peter, Revelation by Peter, Acts of Peter (and so on--Ed.).

And finally, on page 167 in a third work entitled The Twilight of Christianity Harry Barnes summarized the situation rather well when he said,

...it is quite possible that in the extant OT and nonbiblical writings of the Jews we have but a few fragments of the total literary product of the Hebrew peoples in the centuries preceding the Christian era. This matter of the free editing, alteration, rearrangement, fabrication, and even complete loss of books originally in the Bible, raises very important implications relative to the hypothesis of the divine dictation of the Bible. If God had taken the time which he is assumed by the Fundamentalists to have devoted to the dictation of his word, it is scarcely likely that he would have allowed his earthly subjects to distort and even to lose these precious products of divine revelation.

We have pointed out that the traditional religionists hold that the Bible solely expresses the will of God, thus allowing no place for the intervention and interference of human subjectivity. In reality, however, there are few books in the Bible which have not been written to advance the cause of some specific race, class, dynasty, sect, or philosophy. The Pentateuch is devoted to a large extent to propaganda in behalf of the Jewish race and their tribal God, Yahweh. Deuteronomy embodied the effort at a great moral reconstruction among the Jews, as likewise did the books of Amos and other leading prophets.... If some of the books of the OT represent propaganda for the prophetic view of the Hebrew religion, others expound the interest and viewpoint of the priestly class. The same tendencies appear in the NT....

Thus, the point has been made. An extremely large number of ancient writings could easily have been included in the Canon, were it not for the politics involved. Many more books considered for entry could have been mentioned but, like bombs on a destroyed city, they would only bounce the rubble. Protracted lists of books often bearing esoteric titles are rather burdensome to navigate, to be sure, but this is one of those extrabiblical topics that can't be allowed to pass unnoticed in any responsible study of the Bible's validity, reliability, and alleged divinity.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 Continues from Last Month (Part q)

[Point #12 in our pamphlet was: How could we follow the 6th Commandment, even if we wanted to, when the authors of the various versions of the Bible can't even agree on whether the key word is "kill" or "murder." Surely they recognize a difference--ED.]

JM's Defense is:

In this objection Mr. McKinsey overlooks the original language and complains because the translators cannot agree on the meaning of the word. Well, if they cannot agree on what the word means, that does not alleviate Mr. McKinsey from the responsibility he has to go to the original language and/or other texts in the Bible which will explain this passage.... When the evidence is in, it can be seen that this commandment forbade murder.

The first piece of evidence that shows that this commandment forbids murder is the fact that Jesus, himself, interpreted this commandment to mean murder. In Matt. 19:16-18 one came to him and asked him what to do in order to inherit eternal life, and his answer was to keep the commandments which God gave to Moses. The person asked him which ones were to be kept, and Jesus replied: Thou shalt do no murder..." (v. 18). Jesus was giving the commandment that said: Thou shalt not kill..." (Ex. 20:13). Thus "kill" and "murder" are one and the same here.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part q)

"Kill" and "murder" are most assuredly not the same here or anywhere else, JM. All murders are killings, but not all killings are murders. Second, you chose the version that provided the interpretation you desired, and ignored all contrary data. If you had done your homework, instead of focusing on mine, you would have noticed that the RSV, the NAB, the ASV, the JB, the LB, and the Lamsa Version of Matt. 19:18 say "kill" not "murder". As far as these versions are concerned, there is no reason to conclude Jesus is referring to murder rather than killing. Third, your slanted scholarship really comes to the fore when one realizes that you chose the only instance in the KJV in which Jesus used the word "murder." In all of the parallel accounts in Matt. 5:21, Mark 10:19, and Luke 18:20 Jesus says "kill." So, it is by no means true that Jesus is prohibiting "murder" rather than killing. In fact, in every Old and New Testament reference to the 6th Commandment, several key versions--the RSV, the ASV, the JB, and the Lamsa Version--always use the word "kill". At no time is the word "murder" employed. The King James Version, which you apparently prefer, refers to the 6th Commandment on 8 different occasions, and in only one verse, the one you cited for expediency's sake, does it mention "murder." Heavy reliance upon tactics of this kind by you and your religious cohorts explains in large measure why religious scholarship is so deceptive and unreliable. Tendentious reasoning permeates biblical apologetics and scriptural defenses throughout, as your strategy vividly illustrates.

Letter #508 Continues (Part r)

The second piece of evidence that shows that this commandment forbids murder is the fact that the meaning of the original word is murder. According to Strong, the word for "kill" in Exodus 20:13 is the word "ratsach" which means: "...to dash to pieces, i.e., kill (a human being) especially to murder:--put to death, kill, slay, murder."....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part r)

Wrong again, JM. Strong's Exhaustive Concordance does not say that "ratsach" means to murder. It says that "murder" is only one of the options available. And the Hebraic experts translating the KJV, the RSV, the NAB, the ASV, and the Lamsa Versions felt the most appropriate and accurate term to employ was "kill" not "murder," because that is the word they used in Ex. 20:13 for the 6th Commandment. Apparently you feel your translators are more proficient. Upon what basis do you make that judgment?

Letter #508 Continues (Part s)

The third piece of evidence that shows that this commandment forbids murder is the overall context of the Bible. In both the old and new testaments, murder was what was condemned.... God forbids the taking of innocent human life without the proper authorization. There were times when God would order his people to wipe out whole nations of people, even though there were innocent people in those nations at the time, in order to keep the evil from growing worse and to give the Israelites the land they lived on. However, God was giving the order. Since God gave the life, he could take it away. Exodus 20:13 forbids the unlawful taking of human life. Since man did not give it, man has no right to determine when and where human life should end. Only God has that right, and he can empower man to take human life....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part s)

Since your paragraph reeks with problems, JM, let's take them one at a time. First, as we have already demonstrated, killing is condemned in Ex. 20:13, not murder. The commandment says Thou shalt not kill, not thou shalt not murder. Second, you claim that Ex. 20:13 forbids the unlawful taking of human life. Where is anything said about the "unlawful" taking of life? There are no qualifiers attached. It says don't kill, period. It does not say don't kill unlawfully. Please don't insert gratuitous provisos just to elude an imbroglio. Third, you admit that God killed innocent people, and if that is not grounds for condemnation and rejection, what is? Fourth, you say that God ordered the killing of innocent people "in order to keep the evil from growing worse." What kind of justice is that? Operating on that principle, we might just as well kill everyone in prison today in order to restrict the expansion of evil tomorrow. Fifth, how does the evil of innocent people become worse, when by definition they are innocent and have done no evil? Sixth, what right did the Israelites have to the land of those they conquered? God is fostering imperialistic aggression. Seventh, as far as you are concerned God can do anything he desires, whether immoral or not. In effect, you are worshipping a being that is above morality and decency. He is a law unto himself. As far as you are concerned, no act of God, no matter how heinous or appalling, is worthy of condemnation. Your allegiance, my friend, is not to right and wrong, good and bad, but power and domination. Eighth, you say that "man has no right to determine when and where human life should end." Then I assume you are a pacifist and/or a conscientious objector, and you are firmly opposed to the death penalty. If man has no right to determine when human life should end, then you must be for the abolishment of all military spending. After all, why spend a fortune on material and equipment you would never employ? And lastly, as far as God's empowering people to take the lives of others is concerned, do you know of any soldiers or law enforcement officials who would claim they were informed by God or received a revelation from on high that they could kill other individuals? I sure don't. (To Be Continued Next Month)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #522 from BY of Seminole, Florida

Dear Dennis.

I must commend you on your publication. I find it interesting, enlightening, and useful. For example, in my classroom discussions at the University of South Florida, where I am currently a graduate assistant who teaches freshman English, I have many students who think of the Bible in only the most innocuous and positive terms. Most are entirely unaware of their religion's history in our country. When we discussed current discrimination and the history of Biblical support for slavery, many of my students thought I was merely misinformed, until I quoted them chapter and verse directly from your publication!....

Editor's Response to Letter #522

Dear BY.

Letters like yours help make it all worthwhile. You are using BE commensurate with the original purpose for which it was created. As we have said so often, if people like you don't show Christians the errors of their ways, who will?

Letter # 523 from DM of San Diego, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey,

I am subscribing to your "BIBLE ERRANCY" newsletter. I am certainly looking forward to it. I am relatively new to Freethought, but I began to see the errors in the Bible while a fundamentalist in 1988. Furthermore, I am living Disproof of the Bible. For if I was once "saved" by Faith and truly "born again" - "a new creature" - then could I have "fallen away"? Well, I did, so those who believe in Eternal Security have a problem.

FAITH (Part 2)--Last month's commentary listed the most important verses having to do with salvation by faith before and after the Cross. This month we will conclude our analysis of this very important subject by noting all those verses that say you are saved by faith in Jesus Christ, but do not automatically exclude other avenues. Key verses in this regard are:

- John 3:15-16 ("That whosoever believes in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believes in him should not perish, but have everlasting life"),
- John 5:24 ("He that hears my word, and believes on him who sent me, has everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death into life"),
- John 6:35 ("I am the bread of life: he that comes to me shall never hunger; and he that believes on me shall never thirst"),
- John 6:47 ("I say unto you, He that believes on me has everlasting life"),
- John 10:9 ("I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved...."),

- John 11:25-26 ("Jesus said to her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believes in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever lives and believes in me shall never die"),
- Acts 13:39 ("And by him all that believe are justified from all things"),
- Rom. 1:16-17 ("I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes.... The just shall live by faith"),
- Rom. 3:22 ("Even the righteousness of God which is by faith in Jesus Christ unto all them that believe"),
- Rom. 10:9-11 ("...if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God has raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believes unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the scripture saith, whosoever believes on him shall not be ashamed"),
- Gal. 3:11 ("...for The just shall live by faith"),
- Gal. 5:6 ("For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which works by love"),
- Heb. 10:38 ("Now the just shall live by faith"),
- Eph. 2:8-9 ("For by grace you are saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast"),
- Luke 7:50 ("...he said to the woman, Thy faith has saved thee; go in peace"),
- Luke 8:12 ("...lest they should believe and be saved"),
- John 4:13-14 ("Whosoever drinks of this water shall thirst again: But whosoever drinks of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life"),
- John 6:40 ("And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which sees the Son, and believes on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up the last day"),
- John 8:12 ("I am the light of the world: he that follows me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the gift of life"),
- John 12:46 ("I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believes on me should not abide in darkness"),
- John 20:31 ("...that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name"),
- Acts 10:43 ("...that through his name whosoever believes in him shall receive remission of sins"),
- Rom. 3:30 ("Seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith"),
- Rom. 5:1-2 ("Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: By whom also we have access by faith into this grace...."),
- Rom. 9:30-32 ("...the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith. But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, has not attained to the law of righteousness. Why? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law"),

- Rom. 10:4 ("For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes"),
- Gal. 2:16 ("Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed Jesus, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ and not by the works of the law; for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified"),
- Gal. 3:26 ("For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus"),
- and lastly, 2 Tim. 3:15 ("the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus").

So, clearly a large number of verses say you are saved by faith but do not rule out other means.

The final group of faith-related verses merely imply that faith assists in the attainment of salvation, and for that reason are being listed last. They certainly do not say you are saved by faith only, nor do they say that faith is one of many paths to salvation. They are just too nebulous for that. But they do imply that faith is needed for salvation, and for that reason merit consideration. We are speaking of such verses as:

- Hab. 2:4 ("but the just shall live by his faith"),
- Luke 17:19 (Arise, go thy way: thy faith has made thee whole"),
- John 7:38 ("He that believes on me, as the scripture has said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water"),
- John 12:36 ("While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light"),
- Rom. 3:26 ("...and the justifier of him which believes in Jesus"),
- and 2 Cor. 5:7 ("For we walk by faith, and not by sight").

Other verses relevant to the issue but too imprecise for any kind of definite conclusion are John 1:12, 8:51, Rom. 3:24-25, 3:27-28, and 4:16.

That concludes an extended presentation of those verses which say you are saved by faith only, or faith is a path to salvation. Faith, like works, predestination, universalism, and whim, has more than enough verses available to establish its credentials as a viable option in the on-going debate over paths to salvation, and like the other avenues it, too, frustrates those who seek to prove the viability of one route only.

JUDAISM vs. CHRISTIANITY--Anyone familiar with the history of Judaism and Christianity knows the latter is an off-shoot of the former. All of the founders of Christianity, including Jesus, Peter, and Paul, were Jews, and elements of Judaism permeate Christianity throughout. Indeed, the Old Testament, which Jews refer to as The Bible, is an inseparable part of the Christian Bible. However, what is not so apparent is that Judaism rejects many key concepts in Christianity, and the reasons are more in concert with the words and intent of the Old Testament than Christians would have people believe. What follows is an alphabetical listing from the Jewish perspective, and with a Jewish bias of some basic Christian concepts which Jews repudiate, and a brief explanation of the reasoning behind each rejection. In no sense can this presentation be viewed as an endorsement of Judaism, and we are only presenting these concepts in order to show that BE is by no means alone in its repudiation of many fundamental Christian beliefs.

The Atonement--Judaism feels that it is unjust to sacrifice a perfectly innocent Savior for the transgressions of sinners. "Vicarious atonement" is unacceptable to the Jew. Judaism can't understand why an "innocent sacrifice" is required to atone for the guilt of the sinner. The suggestion that simply forgiving sins is immoral is incomprehensible to the Jew.

Asceticism--Jewish piety does not consist in fasting, celibacy, solitude and other ascetic deprivations contrary to human nature and God's purpose. To the Jew, abstinence of any kind is sinful, for it is the rejection of the good things created by God's bounty. Far from being meritorious, it is sinful to weaken the body by ascetic practices detrimental to health. The care of the body and the preservation of health are required by Jewish law. Judaism supports the Golden Mean. The weakening of the body through fasts impairs also the faculties of the mind. Far from promoting spirituality, therefore, fasting really retards and arrests it.

Celibacy--Christianity disparages the "flesh" as the source of all evil and consequently glorifies celibacy. Judaism has a joyous affirmation of marriage and love.

The Devil--Judaism does not know a power of evil independent from and opposed to God. Jewish battles are with the "evil impulse", not the Devil.

Festivals--Persons are not glorified in the Jewish religion. No Jewish festival is centered in persons, not even Moses. Christian holidays are all centered in persons.

Grace--Christianity places "grace" above conduct and ethical effort in the quest for salvation. Christians are required to believe in Jesus and that he died for mankind's sins. This belief, and nothing else, opens wide the gates of the Christian paradise. Christians regard sin not as a challenge but as the inescapable fate of every human being from which there is only one deliverance: the grace of Jesus' sacrificial death. The Christian attains forgiveness by accepting Jesus Christ. Judaism rejects these concepts.

Images--Catholicism and Protestantism worship persons and images of persons. This violates the 2nd Commandment, which prohibits not only the worship of images but their creation. In addition to Jesus, Catholicism venerates a large and expanding group of saints and their relics, especially the mother of God. Protestantism adores only Jesus in addition to the Father. Judaism totally rejects the worship of any persons. Judaism rejects the offering up of prayers before any object, regardless of what it represents.

Incarnation--God is pure spirit, divorced from the slightest vestige of corporeality. Judaism totally rejects the incarnation.

Interpretation of Judaism--Jews totally reject the Christian belief that all the promises given to the Jews will henceforth apply to Christians only, and all confessors of Christianity are the true Israel of God. The Christian dogma of the "chosenness" of the Church, in place of the "chosen people" of the Old Covenant is central to Christianity and abhorrent to Judaism.

Jesus--

- (a) None of the Prophets of Israel ever taught on his own responsibility. The "I" of the Prophets is God; the "I" of Jesus, however, is he himself.
- (b) Jesus claimed a special nearness to God. Not even Moses ever claimed to be nearer to God than any other man.
- (c) Jesus claimed to have the right to abrogate some OT laws.
- (d) Prophets castigated others for sins but never forgave sins. Jesus, however, arrogated to himself the power to forgive sins, which Judaism reserves for God alone.
- (e) None of the prophets ever did a miracle in his own name. Credit went to God, not their own power and strength.
- (f) Unlike the OT prophets, Jesus did miracles to strengthen belief in himself, not God.

The Law--The laws of the Torah are to Judaism the quintessence of permanent goodness. Christianity, on the other hand, advances its claims on the strength that the "Law" has been superseded and abrogated by Faith. The Law has outlived its usefulness, according to Christians. Jews feel the Law is eternal and can never be superseded. This is the strongest element of dispute between Judaism and Christianity. Without the law, Judaism is nothing; with it, Jesus died for nothing.

Marriage--The NT disparages marriage as a necessary evil for the propagation of the race, and glorifies celibacy as the higher ideal. According to Judaism, marriage is not a necessary evil but a joyful consummation of the human destiny.

Miracles--Judaism has progressively disparaged miracles as props of faith. Judaism does not acknowledge miracles as proof of divine authority. Jews do not feel miracles prove anything. Truth can't be established by magic and wizardry. The Gospels use miracles as proof of Jesus' divine authority.

Monasticism--Jewish ethics are social, not individualistic. Little is gained for the world if one person achieves perfection and holiness. The Messianic ideal is that all nations and all individuals shall know peace, justice, and love. Consequently, the "saint" who withdraws as a hermit does not aid the advent of the messianic age. Jewish piety is not tested away from the turmoil of life, but in the heat of battle. Solitude is contrary to human psychology and detrimental to the realization of ethics. The monastic hermit is a sinner. It violates "Love thy neighbor as thyself." To the Jew, beauty is not the lure of Satan, but the work of God. Although Judaism looks forward to a better world-to-come, it does not disdain this world.

The Old Testament--The Church adopted the Hebrew Bible (The Old Testament) mainly because the Church regarded it as a book of prophecies foretelling Jesus' career. The OT thus became, first and last, the prediction of the Messiahship of Jesus, in whom were supposedly fulfilled all the messianic promises of the Hebrew prophets. Differences in the interpretations of identical texts make the Christian version of the Hebrew Bible an altogether different book.

Original Sin--Christianity, in contrast to Judaism, is predicated on the doctrine of original sin, which implies the belief in ethical predestination. You must commit a positive act, otherwise you are condemned. Judaism rejects this concept, as well as the belief that all should be condemned for the act of one.

Poverty--Poverty is glorified by Christianity as a sacred and desirable state. To Jews, poverty is a stumbling block rather than a stimulus to piety. Jews feel wealth is more conducive to piety and ethics than poverty, for only when one's physical needs are provided for can one concentrate upon the spheres of religion and ethics. Christianity condemns the rich and exalts the poor. Catholics require priests to take a vow of poverty. In the OT there is no statement that houses, fields, and other possessions are in themselves bad and wicked.

Sacraments--There are 7 sacraments in the Catholic Church and 2 in the Protestant. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are recognized by all Christian denominations. Judaism has no sacraments. Judaism makes salvation depend solely upon the free will ethical efforts of the worshipers.

Savior--Judaism has never sanctioned doctrines implying an affirmation of the inequality of men before God. Before God, all men are equal, and there is no need for a mediating Savior. Christians teach that God is eternally distant, and man can enter a relationship with him solely and exclusively through the mediation of Jesus. This, Judaism rejects.

The Trinity--To Jews this concept is equivalent to polytheism. It is an adulteration of the Indivisible God. Unity of God precludes belief in any other creative force, such as Satan. God couldn't possibly be defined or represented in any bodily form.

So, in conclusion, we can clearly see from all of the above that Biblical Errancy is by no means alone in its rejection of many crucial Christian beliefs. Other key concepts could be analyzed, but the point has been made. Judaism, like BE, has major disagreements with Christianity. Much of Christianity is too ridiculous even for other religionists.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from JM Continues from Last Month (Part t)

[Point #13 in our pamphlet was: We are told that the Bible has no scientific errors, yet it says the bat is a bird (Lev. 11:13,19), hares chew the cud (Lev. 11:5-6), and some fowl (Lev. 11:20-21) and insects (Lev. 11:22-23) have four legs--ED.]

JM's Defense is: Mr. McKinsey faults the Bible because it does not use 20th century terminology. He forgets that the Bible was written centuries before our modern scientific classifications ever came into existence. He refuses to take into consideration the classification of the time.

1. The bat, then, was called a fowl because it had wings and flew. I think that it is interesting to note that even the evolutionists recognize the fact that these classifications were different then, than they are today, but they do not say that those classifications outside the Bible were erroneous. For example the evolutionists talk about the early birds such as the Pteranodon and Quetzalcoatlus which were bird-like creatures that flew. According to Dinosaur Discoveries these creatures were "...like lizards in some ways, but they were also a lot like birds." The Pteranodon according to the World Book was classified as a reptile. Now these things were not birds, but they were bird-like and are often called the forerunners of birds. Even though the bird family and reptile family are two different families, many scientists, because of the similarities between the two, call birds "...feathered reptiles..." Now are scientists in error for calling birds, feathered reptiles? I do not believe that Mr. McKinsey would be so bold as to say that they are.

In early days when a thing had wings it was classified as a fowl, because of the similarities, just like birds are called "feathered reptiles" because of the similarities they hold with reptiles. Why would Mr. McKinsey accept one while rejecting the other? Simply because he needs to find something wrong with the Bible so he can discredit it, even if it is only in his own mind.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part t)

Your explanations tend to ramble incoherently, JM. Half the time I am not sure what point you are trying to make. To begin with, you are trying to manipulate the word "fowl." The text in Leviticus includes the bat in a list of fowl or birds. The word "fowl" refers to birds and has always done so. What difference does it make what century this text of the Bible was written in? Translators of the KJ and many other versions are translating the word "fowl" from a Hebraic word which they equate with fowl, and they know that "fowl" is equivalent to the word "bird". Are you saying they can't translate? Second, you say that, "The bat, then, was called a fowl because it had wings and flew." Don't be ridiculous. Many large insects can fly, but that does not mean they are birds or were so classified. Third, scientific classification is not the issue. We are talking about "fowl", and that is a reference to "birds". Do you have any proof that those who wrote the Bible expanded the term dramatically and looked upon anything that flew as a fowl? Fourth, your attempt to play me off against scientists won't stand the strain. Scientists say the Pteranodon and Quetzalcoatlus were "bird like." They didn't say they were birds or fowl. They said they were "feathered-reptiles". What is wrong with that? I accept one while rejecting the other, because referring to birds as "feathered-reptiles" is scientifically correct. On the other hand, referring to everything that flies as a fowl has never been an accurate observation.

Letter #508 Continues (Part u)

Hares that chew the cud. In the first place, Mr. McKinsey assumes that because we call a hare a rabbit, that hares have always been rabbits. However, Smith's Bible Dictionary says that "hare" was "of the squirrel kind...." Now this dictionary admits that this creature did not chew the cud, according to our standard of what a cud chewer is, but we need to get it right as to what this creature was. This dictionary says that in this area "there are no rabbits."

What is meant by "cheweth the cud"? This creature moved its jaws as though it did chew the cud. Many classifications at this time were based on appearance. The rabbit, had there been any in this part of the world, would have been classified as a "cud chewer" because it appeared to chew the cud....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part u)

Your line of argumentation has become all but incoherent again, JM. Who cares whether rabbits are hares or vice versa? Neither chews the cud, so what difference does it make? In groping out of desperation, you entered the realm of irrelevancy. Your own dictionary, which you cited, admits that even when it was of the "squirrel kind", it did not chew the cud. Are you saying that when it was not of the "squirrel kind" it did chew the cud? Surely you are not that foolish. Remember, we are supposedly dealing with a perfect book, and when that perfect book says hares or rabbits, whichever you prefer, chew the cud, it is just plain wrong.

And what difference does the appearance make? The fact is that the hare or rabbit does not chew the cud, and any source that says they did, whether the Bible or otherwise, is wrong and that is that. Any classification based on appearance rather than reality is erroneous, regardless of the era involved.

Letter #508 Continues (Part v)

Fowls that have four legs. As we have already seen, the bat was classified as a fowl, and a bat does have four legs. There are other flying creatures (such as the Pteranodon, and whether Mr. McKinsey likes it or not, the Bible does speak of dinosaurs; Job 40:15-17) which had four legs that flew, thereby could be classified as a fowl. Even the evolutionists would not deny such....

Now with the preceding three objections Mr. McKinsey, if he is to prove that the Bible is in error, must prove that the Bible was in error with the classifications of the day in which it was written....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part v)

You are wrong on every point, JM. The bat is not classified as a fowl, except in your biblical mythology. And where was it proven the bat has four legs? Or did I miss something? Second, what on earth does Job 40:15-17 have to do with dinosaurs, and where does it say anything about four legged animals? It only refers to a behemoth that eats grass. That's a dinosaur? Are you serious? Your imagination is running wild. Third, could you cite one evolutionist who concedes the existence of 4-legged fowl that flew? Who are you talking about, and what animal are you referring to? And fourth, I don't have to prove the Bible was in error with the classifications of that day. If those classifications were wrong, and they were, then the Bible is in error. Moreover, just because man's classifications are in error does not allow God's to be. We are supposed to be dealing with a perfect book that is beyond time and space. It can't be erroneous. The Bible must be perfect at all times and under all conditions.

Letter #508 Continues (Part w)

Now concerning the insects which have only four legs. Mr. McKinsey, as well as all others of his faith which have made this claim, did not read, very carefully, what the Bible had to say. It says that certain creatures creep going on all fours. Such is the classification of the grasshopper, even today: "Grasshoppers as Food, The Locust is an important food in some parts of the world...the locust and the grasshopper were not included in the law that forbade the eating of flying and creeping creatures going 'on all fours'." (From "Grasshoppers," The World Book, 1963, Volume 7, page 320). Now, if there was error in the Bible concerning this, the World Book surely would have pointed the error out. Instead, it showed that the grasshopper was one of those creatures that, even though it had 6 legs, it only used four for creeping...."

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part w)

You keep referring to people not reading the Bible closely enough, JM, when that is precisely a mistake you repeat with remarkable regularity. In essence, your argument appears to be that the Bible does not say these insects only had four feet; it says they creep on 4 while having 6, a position that is without merit. Let me quote Leviticus 11:22-23 verbatim in the RSV. "Of them you may eat: the locust according to its kind, the bald locust according to its kind, the cricket according to its kind, and the grasshopper according to its kind. But all other winged insects which HAVE four feet are an abomination to you." Notice! It says that have 4 feet; it does not say they merely creep around on 4 feet. Moreover, could you cite one species of locust, beetle, or grasshopper that has 6 legs, while only walking on four and using two for hands? (To Be Continued Next Month)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #524 from LR of Baker City, Oregon

Dennis

. The State of Oregon has one of the lowest percentages of church membership in the US, but at the same time Oregon has a very militant and dangerous cadre of fundamentalists. A local self-made "minister" recently proclaimed through our newspaper that Secular Humanism is the cause of AIDS throughout the world, and the cause of the disintegration of our American society. In answer to such outrageous, bigoted ideas, I have been able to publish a couple of letters in the same newspaper, which says a lot for the newspaper. I confess that I have plagiarized, or at least borrowed heavily from you. A whole lot of us out here in the trenches depend on you, Dennis. I hope you won't get discouraged.

Editor's Response to Letter #524

Dear LR.

Congratulations on using BE in precisely the manner intended. As I have said so often, if people like you don't correct the vast array of prevarications and propaganda that blankets this country, who will? The other side doesn't lack energy, and it's high time we exhibited some of our own. I depend on you as much as you depend on me. Without people like you, my efforts will ultimately be little more than a ripple in a river. Without people such as yourself, I'd be foolish to carry on a one-man struggle against hundreds of thousands, and seriously consider success a viable possibility. Without the mobilization and determination of thousands like yourself it can't be done. Far from being discouraged, I am more determined than ever, and have several major projects either in the works or being planned.

Correction: On page 3, 2nd column, 10th line from the bottom in last month's issue, the phrase "prejudiced mind" should have been "unprejudiced mind." The error completely altered the meaning of the sentence.

April 1993

PRAYER--Undoubtedly some of the most stupefying aspects of biblical teachings circulate around the whole area of prayer and the efficacy of supplications to a higher being. The entire topic reeks with statements that are in direct opposition to our daily experience. James 5:13-15 says, "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray.... Is any sick among you? let him call the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil.... And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up...." If that were true, hospitals and physicians would be superfluous. You could just have church elders pray over all those who are ill. But as all knowledgeable people know, many individuals have paid with their lives because they trusted this belief. They chose clergy over surgery and paid the supreme penalty for their naivete.

Even more absurd are statements that promise believers the moon if they will only persevere in the faith. Christians are told they will obtain anything they want, for example. Matt. 7:7-8 says, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and you shall find; knock, and it shall be opened to you. For every one that asks receives; and he that seeks finds; and to him that knocks it shall be opened." One should carefully note that no strings are attached, which only further divorces this statement from reality.

Equally absurd comments promise the believer powers comparable to those of superman, but qualifiers are attached. Matt. 21:21-22, along with Mark 11:23-24, says, "Jesus answered and said to them, Verily I say to you, If you have faith, and doubt not, you shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if you shall say to this mountain, Be removed, and be cast into the sea; it shall be done. And all things, whatever you shall ask in prayer believing, you shall receive." So now, as long as you have faith, it can be done. A qualifier is attached. Several verses clearly say that you can do anything as long as it is done in Jesus' name. John 14:13-14 says, "Whatever you shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If you ask anything in my name, I will do it." And John 16:23-24 says, "Verily, verily, I say to you, Whatever you ask the Father in my name, he will give it to you. Hitherto you have asked nothing in my name: ask, and you shall receive, that your joy may be full." Another verse, 1 John 3:22, says that you will receive whatever you ask as long as you keep his commandments. So, Christians are repeatedly told that the world is their oyster as long as they pray, ask with faith or in Jesus's name, or keep the commandments. Although obligations are attached to most promises, that is by no means true of all.

However, the most obvious refutation of prayer's efficacy is apparent to anyone who has either engaged in prayer or witnessed prayer in action. In virtually every instance prayers go unfulfilled. [Those few that appear to be successful will be discussed later.] And they often fail miserably. Why is this? After all, didn't God's book promise the universe to anyone who would join the faith and ask in the name of Jesus? So what's the problem? This question has been posed to apologists for centuries, and their answers are no better now than they were 2,000 years ago. On page 112 in Hard Questions apologist Frank Colquhoun directly confronts the problem of why prayers go unanswered by saying, "Here then are two blunt reasons why our prayers don't seem to produce the goods. First, because we don't really ask in faith. That means that we don't believe God can answer this particular prayer even though we say it, just in case! Secondly, all too often, as we've already seen, we only ask for things to please ourselves, whether they are good for us or not. God answers the first kind by ignoring it, because frankly it isn't a real prayer at all. And he answers the second by saying 'No'. So, because men always tend to blame God when things go wrong, we say, 'He hasn't answered my prayer' when he certainly has! It's just that he hasn't answered it our way."

In other words, according to Colquhoun, God answered it, and the answer is "no." Although this may appear to be a plausible reply, the unmistakable fallacy in Colquhoun's line of reasoning lies in the fact that it conflicts with clear statements in Scripture. Matt. 7:7-8 and Luke 11:9-10 have no provisos, addenda or restrictions attached. All you have to do is ask, seek, and knock, and it's yours. There is no obligation or requirement to ask for something that does not please ourselves. In fact, why would somebody ask for something that didn't?

Secondly, whoever heard of a Christian asking something from God while believing God was too weak to respond? Colquhoun is accusing those who fail to have their prayers answered of not believing God is omnipotent.

Thirdly, Colquhoun conveniently ignored all those failed prayers offered by people who did have faith. What about them? Or is he going to contend that every unanswered prayer emanated from someone who lacked faith in God's powers? That is patently absurd on its face, in light of the fact that those who pray the most are nearly always those most convinced of God's potency.

On pages 204 and 205 in The Bible Has the Answer, apologists Morris and Clark provide the following response to the same question. "There are, however, certain conditions to be met before we can rightly expect God to answer our prayers. The first is that there be no unconfessed sin in our lives. If we are deliberately living in disobedience to God's Word, then obviously we cannot expect Him to grant our requests."

Where on earth are they getting this nonsense? What conditions? As we saw earlier, some verses have no conditions whatever, and others merely require the supplicant to have faith, keep the commandments, or ask in the name of Jesus. And of these there is certainly no dearth. Nothing is said about "unconfessed sin", although it would no doubt be desirable from an apologetic perspective if there was. Morris and Clark continue, "No one has a right to pray to God for personal needs if he has ignored God's Son and the tremendous sacrifice He made for us on the cross.... We must also be in right relationship with the members of our own family. Another condition for answered prayer is faith that God will keep His Word.... Finally, one's purpose in prayer is important. Selfish, covetous prayers obviously are not pleasing to God."

Like Colquhoun, Morris and Clark have not only rewritten and supplemented Scripture to suit their own predilections, but ignored all of the prayers that have gone unanswered, even though the requirements Morris and Clark inserted into the text were adhered to. Everyone knows hardcore Christian believers who failed to have their prayers answered satisfactorily, although they met every requirement attached to prayer by Colquhoun, Morris and Clark.

Apologists often try to counteract the massive number of disappointments accompanying all of these prayer-related verses by relying on one lone verse, 1 John 5:14, which says, "This is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he hears us." The theory behind employment of this verse is that God will only grant prayers that are submitted according to His will. And since nearly all prayers go unrequited, nearly all prayers aren't being offered according to His will.

Two problems accompany this defense. First, no reservations or preconditions are attached to several of the verses we cited earlier, such as those in Matt. 7 and Luke 11. Anyone who insists upon interpreting 1 John 5:14 as having a condition attached, has only created a contradiction between it, on the one hand, and Matt. 7:7-8 and Luke 11:9-10, on the other. The latter have no reservations. Secondly, the verse says that if we ask according to God's will, he will hear us; it does not say we must ask according to His will in order to be heard. If I say a dog is an animal, I am not saying that in order for something to be an animal it must be a dog. First John 5:14 is saying that if I ask something in God's name it will be granted, but that does not mean I must ask it in his name in order for it to be granted. It does not say that it will be granted only if I ask in his name. The option of choosing other paths which could succeed as well is left open.

A few apologists also seek to escape through James 4:3, which says, "You ask, and receive not, because you ask amiss, that you may consume it upon your lusts." But it, too, is inapplicable, because it applies only to the particular group of people James is addressing, and it does not explain the failure of all those prayers submitted without lusts being involved. For most assuredly, every failed prayer is not involved in lusts.

Another response fed to those who are scripturally weak, but distressed by the number of ineffective prayers, is that you need to pray more. As incredible as it may be, that is precisely the tack taken by some ministers, priests and rabbis. According to them, unanswered prayers can be attributed to the fact that you didn't pray enough; you didn't pray hard enough; you didn't say the right prayer; you didn't have the right attitude or frame of mind; you weren't penitent enough, or you weren't sincere enough. In other words, by one rationale or another, the distraught supplicant is led to believe that he or she is the problem, not the inefficacy of prayers in general. One would think that after millions of failures, people would get the message. But millions don't. They keep trying to ram a square peg into a round hole. You would think that sooner or later they would realize that the problem lies not with the ineptitude of the supplicant, but with the insufficiency of prayer itself. It's like telling a drowning man that his problem lies in an inadequate supply of water. One can't help but think of the senior citizen with a very serious ailment who is told to pray by the local minister. She prays, but the illness worsens. She is subsequently told to pray more, but the sickness grows even more threatening. Finally the minister tells her to pray without surcease. So she prays so hard her sides hurt, but she dies anyway. Now, what do many religious people conclude from this? They often decide that she did not meet one of the prior criteria, while a sane man concludes that prayer is useless.

Prayer also suffers from the malady of selectivity. People will shout to the housetops about the one prayer that seemed to be answered, while quietly ignoring all those that collapsed. Not only do religious people focus on the few alleged successes, while ignoring a myriad of failures, but they fail to see that they have not established a cause and effect relationship between the desired event and the prayer. How do you know the prayer caused it? How do you know that it would not have happened, regardless? Just because I pray for an event that subsequently occurs does not mean the prayer caused it, any more than a loud bang causes the bullet to leave the barrel of a gun. Every time a loud bang occurs, a bullet goes out the barrel. But one would be foolish, indeed, to conclude that the bang, rather than the ignition of gun powder, caused the bullet to be expelled. When the subject of selectivity arises, along with the inability of superstitious people to see that reality is sending them a message contrary to that which they wish to hear, the following story comes to mind.

One day the son of an old farmer came in and said to his father, "One of the ewe lambs is dead. Well, said the father, that's all for the best. Twins never do very well anyhow. The next morning the son reported the death of the other lamb and the old man said, Well, that is all for the best, the old ewe will now give more wool. The next morning the son said, The old ewe is dead, too. Well, replied the old man, that may be for the best, but I don't see it this morning.

Like the old man, religious/superstitious people force interpretations on events that conflict with reality's message.

And lastly, another major problem with prayers is that the petitioner has taken it upon himself to ask God to alter his thoughts and behavior to fit the needs of an undeserving sinner. Ambrose Bierce described prayer as a request that the laws of the universe be annulled on behalf of a single petitioner confessedly unworthy. In a very real sense, every prayer denotes an attempt to affect, alter, or influence the activities of God. People who pray apparently don't realize that they are giving suggestions or advice to an omniscient being. How is that for an immense display of intellectual pomposity, haughtiness, arrogance, and conceit! Yet, these same people will accuse freethinkers of being victims of their own egos. The words of Thomas Paine on page 44 in The Age of Reason summarize this predicament as well as any, "Mankind finds fault with everything. His selfishness is never satisfied; his ingratitude is never at an end. He directs the Almighty what to do, even in governing the universe. He prays dictatorially. When it is sunshine, he prays for rain, and when it is rain, he prays for sunshine. He follows the same idea in everything that he prays for; for what is the amount of all his prayers, but an attempt to make the Almighty change his mind, and act otherwise than he does? It is as if he were to say--You, God, know not so well as I."

You would think that those who pray would realize that if God wanted it done that way, he would so act; and if he does not want it done that way, then who are they to suggest otherwise?

JOSHUA--One of the more common Christian misconceptions is that Joshua wrote the Book of Joshua. Their conclusion is no doubt based on the fact that the book bears his name. But, unfortunately, several verses within the Book, itself, obviate any possibility of Joshua being the author. First, Joshua 24:29-31 deals a blow comparable to that dealt to the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch by the closing narrative in Deuteronomy. It states, "And it came to pass after these things, that Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the Lord, died, being 110 years old. And they buried him in the border of his inheritance.... And Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that overlived Joshua...." Obviously, Joshua could not have written an account of his own death. Second, Joshua 10:13 says, "And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the Book of Jasher?" The Book of Jasher was not written until after the time of David, because 2 Samuel 1:18 says, "David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and over Jonathan his son: (Also he bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow: behold it is written in the book of Jasher)." For the author of the Book of Jasher to have known what David did, he would have to have written the book after David lived. Thus, Joshua, who lived long before David, could not have written Joshua 10:13. Third, Joshua 24:33 says, "Eleazar the son of Aaron died; and they buried him in a hill...." Eleazar died 6 years after Joshua, so Joshua could not have written this account. Fourth, it is hard to believe that Joshua would have written Joshua 6:27, which says, "So the Lord was with Joshua; and his fame was noised throughout all the country." Such lack of modesty and humility is hardly worthy of a great leader. Fifth, and lastly, Joshua 15:63 says, "But the Jebusites, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the people of Judah could not drive out; so the Jebusites dwell with the people of Judah at Jerusalem to this day." The Israelites did not dwell in Jerusalem until after the time of David. Jerusalem did not come into the hands of the Jews, until subdued by David as is shown in 2 Sam. 5:4 and Chronicles. This passage in Joshua, therefore, could not have been written until after the death of Joshua. Judges 1:1 and 1:8 say, "After the death of Joshua it came to pass...the children of Judah had fought against Jerusalem, and taken it, and smitten it with the edge of the sword, and set the city on fire" and also show that Jerusalem was not taken until after the death of Joshua. So how could Joshua have written Joshua 15:63?

Similar problems confront those who allege David was the author of Psalms. How, for instance, could David have written Psalm 137:1, which says, "By the rivers of Babylon we sat down, yea, we wept when we remembered Zion" when it refers to an event which did not happen until 400 years after David died, namely, the Babylonian Captivity?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 Continues from Last Month (Part x)

[Point #14 in our pamphlet was: Matt. 27:9-10 quotes a prophecy made by Jeremy the prophet. Yet, no biblicalist has ever been able to show me where it lies in the Book of Jeremiah--ED.]

JM's Defense is: This one is really absurd. Mr McKinsey thinks that if something Jeremiah spoke is not written in the Book of Jeremiah, that he did not say it. The passage is found in Zechariah 11:12. The prophet Zechariah, "makes use of the older prophets, especially Jeremiah, hence the Jewish saying that 'the spirit of Jeremiah dwelt in Zechariah'." Mr. McKinsey must really be hard up to drag this one up as a legitimate objection to the Bible. He just had to find something wrong with the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part x)

The only absurdity involved lies in your explanation, JM. I asked you where the comment could be found in Jeremiah and you said it can be found in Zechariah, which is only a backhanded way of admitting it isn't there. In other words, Matthew lied. I'd rest my case but you threw out some additional tidbits. If you had taken the time to read back issues of Biblical Errancy, especially those having to do with Accommodations, you would have seen that the prophecy is not to be found in Zechariah, either. The facts in the two cases don't match, and for that reason Zechariah 11:12 is inapplicable. In addition, who has whose spirit is irrelevant. We are dealing with a quotation that is directly attributable to an OT prophet, a comment by Jeremiah which, in fact, does not exist.

Letter #508 Continues (Part y)

[Point #15 in our pamphlet was: Heaven is supposed to be a perfect place. Yet, it experienced a war in Rev. 12:7. How can there be a war in a perfect place, and if it happened before why couldn't it occur again? Why would I want to go to a place in which war can occur? That's exactly what I am trying to escape, aren't you?--ED.]

JM's Defense is: The war in Revelation 12:7 was not a carnal war where tanks and guns were used, or even swords. This was a vision to show how Satan rebelled against God. This was a spiritual war. This is the very kind of war that Mr. McKinsey thrives on in his publication Biblical Errancy. When one reads this publication, one can see that Mr. McKinsey's statement is not only false, but it is false to the point that he goes around waging (spiritual) war upon those who believe that the Bible is the inspired word of God. Tell us, Mr. McKinsey, has anyone ever forced you to debate them? I think not! Mr. McKinsey loves a good fight, and he knows it.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part y)

What difference does the kind of war make? It was a war, wasn't it? And I don't remember saying or even implying it was fought with tanks and guns. I said Revelation 12:7 alleges there was a war in heaven. I fail to see what part of the statement is false. Would you be so kind as to elucidate? Most of your paragraph isn't even relevant to the issue. In fact, your comment, "Has anyone ever forced you to debate them," borders on the fatuous. You quickly leaped from a defense of the Bible to an attack upon my motives. I don't love a good fight. I love an effective exposure of deception, propaganda, prevarication, and subterfuge. We don't wage war upon "those who"; we critique a "book which".

Letter #508 Continues (Part z)

Why will spiritual war not happen in heaven again? Simply because the only people that will be in heaven will be those who are safe (babies, children under the age of accountability, and mental deficients), those who faithfully served God on earth, and angels who faithfully served him in heaven. In short, there will be no one there to cause spiritual war. An atheist would not be satisfied in heaven for five minutes, because if he was not interested in serving God a few years on earth, he certainly will not be satisfied with serving him in eternity. This is merely a quibble that Mr. McKinsey produces because he needs to find something wrong in the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part z)

If there is anything this question is not, JM, it is a quibble. It goes to the crux of the whole issue. The entire thrust of Christian teachings with all the concomitant baggage (Jesus, salvation, original sin, the resurrection, faith, works, etc.) is geared toward the attainment of heaven. And if you tell me a war occurred in nirvana, that can't help but raise major concerns. A war in the very place which billions of Christians seek to enter is a quibble? Are you serious? Don't be ridiculous! It's a consideration of major importance, and Christians understandably seek to minimize its impact. In fact, they would just as soon not even talk about the issue, or this verse in particular, if at all possible. Secondly, you say it could not occur again because of the nature of those allowed to enter. But weren't these the kinds of people who occupied heaven prior to the first war? Third, a question that has been asked many times in BE deserves repeating. Where does the Bible say anything about an "Age of Accountability"? And fourth, I really wish you and your compatriots would stop impugning my motives by alleging that I work very hard to find biblical shortcomings. I assure you that I don't have to work very hard to find an incredible number of things wrong with Scripture. The Bible is a veritable goldmine of contradictions, errors, and fallacies. As I have said so often, it contains more holes than a backdoor screen. So, after all is said and done, my original question--Why couldn't a war in heaven occur again?--still stands.(To Be Continued Next Month)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #525 from LC of Lufkin, Texas

Dear Dennis.

I am writing in regard to letter #520 in BE issue #119. The writer, HB of Alexandria, Virginia, suggested that you conduct a critical exposé of the Ten Commandments. You pointed out that BE had already provided a critique of the divine Decalog. In that regard, I'm sure HB will be carefully reviewing back issues in the weeks ahead. However, there is one question concerning these paragons of virtue that is almost never addressed.

From the maze of intricate, incomprehensible and often contradictory rules with which the Pentateuch is filled, scripture readers can barely manage to extract the Ten Commandments. To make things even more confusing, there are two clearly defined sets of commandments listed in the Book of Exodus. One set is given in Ex. 20:1-17. Another quite different set is given in Ex. 34:14-26. The Exodus 20 set is the one universally accepted. But oddly enough, it is the set given in Exodus 34 that is identified as the real Ten Commandments (Ex. 34:27-28). This set bears little resemblance to the Exodus 20 set, and is absolutely irrelevant in today's world. Dennis, your knowledge of things biblical is much greater than mine. So, please, if you can, answer the question, "Which set is the real McCoy?"

...I recently undertook a review of literature relating to the Ten Commandments and compiled a short paper pointing out some of their more ludicrous aspects. Not only are the Ten Commandments (both sets) shown to be bad law, it soon becomes obvious to any objective reader that the entire Exodus story is nothing more than out-and-out fiction. It never happened!

I believe HB would find my paper helpful in rebutting Bible believers. If he or she will contact me at (409) 637-1026, I will be happy to provide a copy at no expense.

Editor's Response to Letter #525

Dear LC.

You correctly noted that there is a set of commandments listed in Exodus 20 and another set in Exodus 34. Although they are similar in regard to such matters as worshipping God and honoring the sabbath, a far larger number of differences are quite apparent. The key points, however, are that although Exodus 20 relates the list of what most people consider the Ten Commandments, only the list in Exodus 34 is actually called the Ten Commandments (Ex. 34:28) and only the list in Ex. 34 was carved on tablets of stone. So far, your argument is reasonably sound. The problem is that Deut. 5 has a list that is almost identical to that found in Ex. 20, and is located between Deut. 4:13, which refers to the Ten Commandments and two tablets of stone, and Deut. 10:1 and 10:4, which also refer to the Ten Commandments and two tablets of stone. So that could mean that the commandments in Deut. 5, which are the same as those in Ex. 20, are the real Ten Commandments. However, the waters are muddied even further by the fact that Deut. 4 has a list of commandments that resemble those in Ex. 34, which implies that the rules most people know as the Ten Commandments are not the real Ten Commandments after all. The word "commandments" is thrown around rather loosely in Exodus, and especially Deuteronomy, and the question becomes which set of rules among the batches available are the real Ten Commandments? The actual phrase "The Ten Commandments" is only used three times (Ex. 34:28, Deut. 4:13, and Deut. 10:4) and never in regard to the group of laws most people associate with the Ten Commandments. Determining which set of commandments were carved in two tables of stone does not solve the problem, because those in Ex. 34, Deut. 4, Deut. 5, and Deut. 10 were all so treated. Like so much of the OT narrative, the problem is something of a muddle. But that is to be expected from a book composed of conflicting accounts of the same events by different authors. I discovered this discrepancy over 15 years ago, and you might want to approach with caution. More bothersome than anything else is the fact that the commandments found in Ex. 20 and Deut. 5, which nearly all denominations refer to as the Ten Commandments, are never referred to as "The Ten Commandments."

JESUS & THE MESSIANIC AGE (PART 1)

According to Christian teachings and apologetic writings, Jesus is the savior of the world; he was the long-awaited messiah who fulfilled all the OT messianic predictions and prophecies. Prior issues of BE clearly showed that Jesus could in no way be viewed as the fulfillment of the OT messianic prophecies. Far too many specifications and qualifications were beyond his pale of operations and endowments. Simply put, he didn't fill the bill. Another major consideration that rules out any possibility of Jesus being the messiah is that his arrival failed to usher in the Messianic Age. Not only is the messiah required to fulfill all the OT messianic prophecies, but he must also generate the arrival of heaven on earth. With the world as it is today, one can safely say that this aspect of his credentials has failed miserably. If there is anything the world is not, it is a heavenly paradise.

Jesus claimed to be the Messiah. Of that there can be no doubt. John 4:25-26 says, "The woman saith to him, I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things. Jesus saith to her, I that speak to thee am he." And Mark 14:61-62 says, "But he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked him, and said to him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am...." That is about as definitive as one can be. Matt. 16:15-20 says,

He (Jesus--Ed.) saith to them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said to him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it to thee, but my Father which is in heaven.... Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

Although done indirectly, Jesus also claims to be the Messiah in Matt. 26:63-65 and Luke 22:67-71.

So, in essence, there is no denying the fact that Jesus, himself, not just his followers, claimed he was the Messiah. The problem with this, however, and the reason he is so soundly rejected by all branches of Judaism and objective outside observers of the biblical requirements for the Messiahship, is that Jesus failed to usher in the kind of era that was to be the culmination of all mankind's hopes. He did not bring in the following which must accompany the Messiah's arrival.

- THE FINAL END OF SIN--Jer. 3:17 ("At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all nations shall be gathered to it...neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart"), Zeph. 3:15 ("...thou shalt not see evil any more"), Ezek. 36:25-27 ("Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and you shall keep my judgments, and do them"), Ezek. 36:33, 37:23-24, Zeph. 3:13, Isaiah 60:21, and Jer. 50:20;

- THE END OF SUFFERING--Isa. 65:19 ("I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying");
- PEACE AND TRANQUILITY WILL REIGN--Isa. 2:4, 65:19, Micah 4:3 ("And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more"), Hosea 2:18 ("in that day will I make a covenant with the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven...and I will break the bow and the sword and the battle out of the earth, and will make them to lie down safely"), Ezek. 39:9-10 ("They that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth, and shall set on fire and burn the weapons, both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the handstaves, and the spears, and they shall burn them with fire seven years...and they shall burn the weapons with fire..."), Isa. 9:6, and Zech. 9:10;
- ONE CREED AND ONE RELIGION--Isa, 66:23 ("And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord"), Zech. 14:16 ("And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles"), Zech. 8:23 ("Thus saith the Lord of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you"), Zech. 14:9 ("And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one"), Psalm 86:9 ("All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord; and shall glorify thy name"), Isa. 11:9 ("...for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea"), Mal. 1:11, Isa. 2:2, 14:1, 45:14, 24, 22-23, 52:1, 54:5, 60:2-6, 14-16, John 10:16, Joel 3:17, and Jer. 31:34;
- ONLY ONE KINGDOM AND ONE KING--Isa. 60:11-12 ("Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring to thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted"), Zech. 14:9 ("And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one"), Dan. 2:44 ("And the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever"), Isa. 43:5-6 ("Fear not: for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west; I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth"), Isa. 11:12 ("And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth"), Dan. 7:27, Ezek. 37:21-22, 39:28, and Deut. 30:3-5;

- PEACE BETWEEN THE FEROCIOUS AND THE DOCILE--Isa. 11:6-9 ("The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea"), Isa. 65:25, Ezek. 34:25, 28, and Hosea 2:18;
- THE DEAD WILL BE RESURRECTED--Isa. 26:19 ("The dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead"), Dan. 12:2 ("And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt"), and Deut. 32:39; IDOLATROUS IMAGES, FALSE PROPHETS, AND THE SPIRIT OF PROFANITY WILL VANISH--Isa. 2:18 ("And the idols he shall utterly abolish"), Zech. 13:2 ("And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered: and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land"), Isa. 42:17 ("They shall be turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods"), Psalm 97:7, and Zeph. 2:11;
- THE MOUNT OF OLIVES WILL SPLIT IN TWO--Zech. 14:4 ("...the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south");
- LIVING WATER WAS TO ISSUE FROM THE SITE OF THE TEMPLE--Ezek. 47:1-2;
- THE WARS OF GOD AND MAGOG--Ezek. chapters 38 and 39, and
- THE COVENANT SHALL BE RENEWED AS SANCTIFICATION FOR THE ISRAELITES-- Ezek. 37:26-29 ("Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them: yet, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore"), Ezek. 39:29 ("Neither will I hide my face anymore from them: for I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God"), Joel 3:20-21 ("But Judah shall dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: for the Lord dwelleth in Zion"), Jer. 31:34 ("And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more"), Ezek. 2:10, 43:7, 48:35, and Joel 2:27-28.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from JM Continues from Last Month (Part aa)

[Point #16 in our pamphlet was: Believers are told in Mark 16:17-18 that they can drink any deadly thing and it shall not hurt them. But I don't think you would be naive enough to drink any arsenic offered. Perhaps I'm wrong and you would be willing to test the Book's veracity?--lay it on the line so to speak!--ED.]

JM's Defense is: Mr. McKinsey's problem, here, is that he did not allow for the totality of Biblical teaching on the matter. Mark 16:15-20 deals with two conditions. [1] It deals with a condition which was obligatory and permanent. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned" (verses 15, 16). [2] It also deals with a condition which was optional and temporary. It was not commanded that they exercise spiritual gifts, but they did have them so they could confirm the word. It was temporary in that some day these spiritual gifts would be done away with. The Bible spoke of a time when these things would cease: "But when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away." (1 Cor. 13:10). The "in part" thing was the spiritual gifts, thus the perfect (complete) thing was the completed written revelation.

Understanding this, we can see that we cannot drink deadly poisons, or handle snakes, which if they bite us, we will not be hurt. Mr. McKinsey's lack of understanding of this subject and Bible knowledge in general does not make the Bible wrong.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part aa)

Well, here you are again on the horns of a dilemma, JM! Your problem is obvious. The Bible says any believer can drink any deadly thing without being hurt and we both know that's utterly ridiculous. You wouldn't drink a large quantity of arsenic any more than I would. You aren't suicidal. So, to escape the situation you propose a theoretical concoction of your own, which is flawed throughout. First, upon what grounds do you allege that part of Mark 16:15-20 is temporary and the remainder is permanent? There is nothing whatever in the text itself that justifies this distinction. Where does Mark 16 say that "some day these spiritual gifts would be done away with"? Second, since Mark 16 doesn't even imply, much less state, these powers would cease, you race off to another part of Scripture for confirmation and cite 1 Cor. 13:10 which says, "But when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away." According to you, the "in part" thing is the spiritual gifts, when nothing scriptural justifies such a connection, and according to you, the "perfect" thing is completed written scripture, which is not substantiated by scripture either.

Third, if Scripture is "perfect", as you allege, and it has not come, then how could the "in part" have existed? The "in part" is part of Scripture, according to your interpretation. How could it have existed prior to Scripture and be abolished with the arrival of Scripture, when it is part of Scripture? Fourth, most apologists contend that Jesus, not Scripture, is the "perfect" that is to come. Apparently you decided that if Jesus were deemed to be the "perfect", then Mark 16 could easily be refuted by merely noting the large number of miracles that continued to happen after Jesus left the scene. So, you chose the more dishonest strategy of referring to Scripture as the "perfect." But many of your own compatriots contend that all the autographs were completed at a very early date, even though afterwards men, such as Peter and Paul, continued to heal miraculously, speak in tongues, etc. And lastly, 1 Cor. 13:8 says, "...as for prophecies, they will pass away; as for tongues, they will cease; as for knowledge, it will pass away." It says that prophesying, speaking in tongues, and knowledge will pass away. It does not specifically state that believers can no longer safely drink any deadly thing or play with deadly serpents. Even if the "perfect" did mean Scripture, which you failed to prove, how do you know the phrase "in part" included deadly potions and serpents? The only credible definition of the nebulous phrase "in part" is found in 1 Cor. 13:8-9 and would seem to exclude the very acts you want to include. It mentions prophecies, tongues, and knowledge, but nothing is said about deadly potions, other miracles, or serpents.

Anyone who is reasonably well acquainted with Scripture can understand your strong reluctance to apply the word "perfect" in 1 Cor. 13:10 to Jesus, as most apologists do. After all, even after he departed the scene via the Ascension, all of the following continued to occur.

- (a) People continued to speak in tongues in Acts 2:4, 10:45-46, 19:6, 1 Cor. 14:5, 14:18, 12:10, and 12:28;
- (b) People continued to prophesy in Acts 19:6, 1 Cor. 14:1-5, 12:10, 12:28, and Rom. 12:6;
- (c) People continued to cure by the laying on of hands in Acts 5:12, 9:17-18, 14:3, 19:11, and 28:8, and
- (d) gifts continued in 1 Cor. 12:4, 9, 28, 31, and Rom. 12:6.

He couldn't be the "perfect" because the "in part" had not ceased to occur.

Letter #508 from JM Continues (Part bb)

[Point #18 in our pamphlet was: According to the text there are 29 cities listed in Joshua 15:21-32 (RSV). One need only count them to see that biblical math is not to be trusted. The total is 36.

JM's Defense is: Mr. McKinsey did not read very carefully what the Bible said. It did not say that there were only 29 names. It said: "...all the cities are twenty and nine, with their villages" (Joshua 15:32) (Underline added by jdm). This simply states that there are 29 cities. Now if one counts he will count 36 names. The resolution is that there are 29 cities and 7 villages. Really, Mr. McKinsey, you ought to read the Bible more carefully. Most of your difficulties with the Bible would disappear if you would.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part bb)

Again, JM, your stream of "logic" eludes me. If anyone needs to read Scripture more closely, it's you. Let's quote the text verbatim. Joshua 15:21-32 says, "The cities belonging to the tribe of the people of Judah in the extreme South, toward the boundary of Edom, were...(36 names are mentioned in the RSV followed by) in all, twenty-nine cities, with their villages." The text says "the cities" and lists 36 names. That means 36 cities, not 29. You would have us believe that only 29 of the names were of cities and 7 were of villages. Do you have any evidence for this arbitrary division? Where does the text even imply, much less state, that some of the names applied to villages? The 21st verse says "the uttermost cities," the word "villages" isn't even mentioned, and then lists the names, the clear intention being that all the names that were to follow were of cities. In essence, your explanation is without substance, because you are alleging the 21st verse is lying when it says, "The cities belonging to the tribe...were (and 36 names follow). According to you 7 of the names are not of cities at all but of villages.

In addition, Joshua 15:33-41 lists 16 cities and closes by saying, "Sixteen cities with their villages" which is correct. There are 16. So where are the villages in this list? Your rationalization collapses. The same problem arises with respect to Joshua 15:42-44. Nine names are followed by "Nine cities with their villages." Again, none of them could be a village. Both clearly show that villages are not being listed separately (To Be Continued)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #526 from NS of Richmond, Indiana

Dear Dennis.

After several letters expounding the glories of religion in our local paper, I became angry at the religious clap-trap being published and thought you might like to see the results of a letter I had published (which was copied straight from BE, hope you don't mind).

...Anyhow, this is to let you know that there are those of us who are committed to publicly exposing the Bible and all is not lost here in Richmond. I have the help of a delightful old fellow named BF, who also takes BE, and is quite a biblical scholar. But without BE I could never carry on these debates. I am learning, slowly, on my own, but as you know, it takes time! Thanks again for BE and for your never-ending expertise.

Letter #527 from BB of Cambridge, Mass. (Part a)

Dear Dennis

.... Enclosed...you will find a letter I wrote in defense of your conviction, which was demonized by a Pastor Veader. The Pastor asserted that you were trying to justify your perversion through a campaign against God. No evidence of said perversion was presented or of an anti-God campaign. It was all supposed, because you are skeptical of the inerrancy of the Bible. He went on to claim that the entire western modern world was built on protestantism, which is just more uncritical emotionalism, all of which I felt I had to refute with logic, scripture, and the most Reverend Martin Luther. Now he probably believes I'm demonic. Tough cookies! (What follows is a copy of the letter I sent to Pastor Veader--Ed.)

Dear Pastor Veader:

Your response to my letter to Mr. McKinsey's BIBLE ERRANCY flyer was so hateful I was reluctant to reply to it. But, I have conviction too, and it is my hope that we can engage in a reasonable argument. It is unreasonable to say that all non-Christians are demonic, corrupt, perverse, vile, and destined for Hell. It is readily evident that non-Christians are hard working, decent people, who are raised and live in loving, nurturing families. The apostle Paul was aware of this: "For when the Gentiles who have not the law, do by nature those things that are of the law; these having not the law are a law to themselves" (Rom. 2:14). I know Mr. McKinsey is not vile or corrupt, that he is a good husband and makes his living at a 9 to 5 job. His flyer is a supplementary income. Your attack on Mr. McKinsey's character was unfounded and typical of the clergy, who promote doctrine not for debate and logical thinking, but for blind belief and conformity. Skepticism is the essence of virtue, unwilling to be fooled or misled, and willing to stand firmly on the basis of ideas that have been thought through, but which are still open to growth.

The western modern world was built on the Renaissance: the rebirth of Greek and Roman philosophy and the beginning of humanism. The substitution of emotionalism for truth was the great error of the 16th century revolt. As Martin Luther said in (Grisar, Rev. Martin Luther, iv., 386-407), "There are as many sects and beliefs as there are heads. This fellow will have nothing to do with baptism; another denies the Sacraments, a third believes that there is another world between this and the Last Day. Some teach that Christ is not God; some say this; some say that. There is no rustic so rude but that, if he dreams or fancies anything, it must be the whisper of the Holy Ghost, and he himself a prophet."

It is argued by theists that if miracles have happened, they are the direct result of God's mind acting on matter. But, if a Divine mind can act directly on matter to produce miraculous effects, there is no reason to assume the human mind cannot do so. In both cases minds would be involved. One may claim that God's mind is different from the human mind. But, this claim assumes what needs to be proven. We do not see a person perform a miracle. But, then, we do not see God performing miracles either. In fact, we don't see God at all. In this argument his very existence is inferred merely from the presence of miracles. Human minds are known to exist, but the existence of God's mind is in dispute. It is more reasonable to assume that when someone desires a miracle and a miraculous-seeming event occurs, it does so not because of God, but because that person did it...

Editor's Response to Letter #527 (Part a)

Dear BB.

We appreciate your defense and are somewhat surprised since our prior phone conversations led me to believe that you were religiously oriented. Apparently logic, reason, and common sense could no longer be avoided and you decided to move toward the world of prudence and good mental health.

I would only offer a couple of minor corrections to your analysis of our status. My hours are 8 to 4 and BE provides no supplementary income of any consequence. On the whole we just about break even. Incidentally, without having ever met Mr. Veader, I am confident my morality is comparable to or superior to his.

Letter #527 Continues (Part b)

There were some Jehovah's Witnesses here on Saturday, January 23rd: a mother and daughter duo. The daughter was ten years old and looked at the floor, while her mother handed me a pamphlet about how the end of the world was near and I was going to become worm meat if I didn't become a Jehovah's Witness. So, I asked the mother why we are being punished for Adam's sin and if we aren't, then why did Yahweh promise a Redeemer, who would redeem us from Adam's sin (Gen. 3:15)? Then, I added, doesn't Original Sin contradict Deut. 24:16 and Ezek. 18:20? The daughter perked up and smiled broadly at me, while her mother wrote down the scripture I had cited. The mother promised to return the next Saturday. They never showed....

Editor's Response to Letter #527 (Part b)

You have inadvertently touched on a very important aspect relevant to what BE is all about, BB. That little girl you referred to has probably been brainwashed all her life to believe that the Bible is the inerrant word of God, and her life should be subservient to its maxims. She is probably tired, if not sick, of hearing about religion in general and the Bible in particular. If she has any critical skills at all, she probably has serious doubts and reservations about many things she has been taught. She would probably like to tell people what she really thinks, but doesn't dare for several reasons. She loves and/or respects her parents, and doesn't wish to hurt their feelings. She probably has an honest-to-god justified fear of what will happen to her if she tries to deviate from the proscribed path. She knows she doesn't have sufficient knowledge about the Bible or its inadequacies to expose the book, so she goes along with whatever is said. And she has probably been so intimidated and browbeaten that she doesn't dare challenge the validity of what she has been told out of fear of being demeaned, degraded, and put down. A child of that age is very concerned about his or her self-image and self-concept. And what could be more damaging and hurtful than being told you are raising stupid, ignorant, or devil-inspired questions? And finally, because of so much indoctrination, she is probably gripped by the lingering fear that perhaps her mother is correct and hell does await the Bible's critics.

When you asked that little girl's mother some poignant questions for which the little girl could see her mother had no answer, you did what any thoughtful, questioning child would like to do: you doubted the truthfulness of even the mother's most prized possession. No doubt there are many aspects of scripture the child just doesn't "buy," but she has always been discouraged from questioning the Bible's validity and never encouraged to critique its fundamental concepts. You did it for her, and for that you got a smile. I don't think most freethinkers realize how important the kind of service BE provides is to many individuals.

Letter #528 from BF of Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Dennis.

I don't want to embarrass you, but if we had any sense in this country we would declare you a "national treasure" and be done with it. I am absolutely convinced that (perhaps not in our lifetime) you will be recognized world-wide for the work you are doing. And not only that, your name will be written above that of Paine, Ingersoll, Russell, et. al. I am privileged to be able to obtain your works firsthand, and yes, honored to be able to correspond with the living genius behind it all.... You have my everlasting thanks and gratitude.....

Editor's Response to Letter #528

Dear BF.

I can't tell you how much I appreciate comments as complimentary as this. It does my heart good to know that my efforts are improving the lives of others, and hopefully I am worthy of the accolades you so generously bestow.

Issue No. 126

JESUS & THE MESSIANIC AGE (PART 2)

This month's commentary will conclude the listing begun last month of all the events that were supposed to occur in concert with the arrival of the true Messiah. Jesus couldn't be the Messiah because he failed to usher in the kind of era that was to be the culmination of mankind's hopes. Along with those events listed last month the following must accompany the Messiah's arrival:

- THE LAND WAS TO BE DIVIDED ACCORDING TO THE 12 TRIBES AFTER THE CAPTIVITY--Ezek. 47:13-21;
- THE TEMPLE WAS TO BE REBUILT--Ezek. chapters 40 to 46;
- THE ARRIVAL OF ELIJAH--Mal. 4:5 ("Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord");
- THE GOING UP OF THE REMNANT OF THE NATIONS TO JERUSALEM FOR WORSHIP--Zech. 14:16 ("And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles");

- JERUSALEM WAS TO BE SAFELY INHABITED--Zech. 14:11 ("And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited");
- EGYPT SHALL BE A DESOLATION--Joel 3:19 ("Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah...");
- MESSIAH'S ARRIVAL WAS TO BE PRECEDED BY AN EARTHQUAKE--Haggai 2:6-7 ("For thus saith the Lord of hosts; Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts");
- MESSIAH WAS TO BE THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS--Haggai 2:7 ("And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come....");
- GOD WILL SMITE THE EARTH WITH THE ROD OF HIS MOUTH AND...SLAY THE WICKED--Isa. 11:4;
- THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL WILL FEAR THE LORD AND SEEK DAVID THEIR KING--Hosea 3:5 ("Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days") and Jer. 30:9 ("But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them");
- ALL POWERS OPPOSING ISRAEL WILL BE POWERLESS--Zech. 12:8-9 ("In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem"), Zech 2:5 and Zech. 9:8;
- THE COMING OF THE MESSIAH WILL BE IN THE LAST DAYS--Deut. 4:29-30,
- And lastly, THE MESSIAH'S DOMINION WOULD STRETCH FROM SEA TO SEA--Zech. 9:10
 - ("...and he shall speak peace unto the heathen: and his dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth"),
 - Psalm 72:8 ("He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth"),
 - Dan. 7:14 ("And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed"),
 - Dan. 7:27 ("...the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him"),
 - and Psalm 72:11 ("Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him").

The conclusion to be drawn from all of the above is unmistakable. Jesus couldn't possibly be the long-awaited Messiah because of the large number of events that did NOT accompany his arrival, events that must accompany the arrival of the true Messiah according to prophecy.

We are by no means the first people in history to realize that Jesus didn't fill the bill. Throughout the last 2,000 years countless scholars have noted the wide assortment of deficiencies in the messianic credentials of Jesus of Nazareth. On page 75 in a chapter entitled "The Continuation of the Debate in the Middle Ages" from a book discussing the conflict between Judaism and Christianity, we find the following reference to the Jewish scholar and critic of Christianity, Abraham Troki:

Next, Troki collects all the signs of the onset of the messianic age, which were accepted by rabbinic and Karaite Jews from the Middle Ages down to the emancipation. Given the expectation of these signs, derived from prophecies literally understood, Jesus' messiahship could NOT be taken seriously. These are the following predictions of the prophets, still unfulfilled:

- [1] the gathering of the ten tribes under a Davidic king (Ezek. 37:21-22);
- [2] the battle between Gog and Magog (Ezek. 38 and 39);
- [3] the cleaving of the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4);
- [4] the drying up of the river in Egypt at the time of gathering of the dispersed (Isa. 11:15);
- [5] the issuing of living water from the site of the temple in Jerusalem (Ezek. 47:1);
- [6] ...ten men from other nations take hold of the hem of a Jew's coat and say to him: "We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you" (Zech. 8:23);
- [7] the going up of the remnant of the nations to Jerusalem for worship (Zech. 14:16);
- [8] the appearance there of the nations on sabbaths and new moons (end of Isaiah);
- [9] the expulsion of idols, false prophets, and unclean spirits from the land (Zech. 13:2, Isa. 42:17);
- [10] in the whole world there shall be but one faith, that of Israel (Isa. 52:1, 60:1);
- [11] in the whole world there shall be but one kingdom, the kingdom of the Israelites as God's saints (Num. 24:17, Isa. 60:10-12, Dan. 7:27);
- [12] eternal peace (Isa. 2:4, Micah 4:3);
- [13] peace between wild beasts and domestic animals (Isa. 11:6-9);
- [14] the final end of sin (Ezek. 36:33-37, 37:23-24, Zeph. 3:13);
- [15] the end of suffering (Isa. 65:19);
- [16] renewal of the covenant as sanctification for the Israelites (Ezek. 37:26-28, Jer. 31:34);
- [17] the arrival of Elijah (Mal. 4:5);
- [18] the building of the future temple (Ezek. chapters 40-46);
- [19] the division of the land according to the twelve tribes (Ezek. 47:13), and lastly,
- [20] the resurrection of the dead (Isa. 26:19, Dan. 12:2).

Beyond doubt these and similar prophecies have not yet been fulfilled, and of necessity must yet be fulfilled; for God is not a man that he should lie.

The similarities between Troki's list and that provided in BE's most recent commentaries are all too obvious.

Before closing, we might note that the common Christian defense to all of the above is wholly without merit. When pressed on this issue, Christian scholars will concede that the arrival of Jesus did not usher in that which was predicted and his credentials seem tarnished, but another appearance will rectify the situation. What wasn't fulfilled the first time will be completed during his second time around. The obvious flaw in this transparent subterfuge is that there is absolutely nothing in the OT alluding to an alleged "Second Coming." As far as the OT is concerned, there is one messiah and that's all, and he is coming once and that's it. We would challenge any Christian to provide so much as one scintilla of OT prophetic commentary to the effect that the messiah would come twice.

AGE OF ACCOUNTABILITY

Anyone reasonably well acquainted with Scripture knows that injustices and inequities abound therein. Humanity suffers for what Adam did; Jesus pays the ultimate price for what humanity does, and untold numbers of OT children pay the supreme penalty for the misbehavior of their parents, even though Deut. 24:16 says, "...children shall not be punished for the sins of their fathers." But nowhere is injustice more apparent than in the fact that babies, infants, and children who die at a young age are condemned to hell because of conditions over which they have absolutely no control. In John 14:6 Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." John 3:18 says, "He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." John 3:38 says, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abides on him." And 1 John 5:12 says, "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." All four of these verses clearly state that NO man, not some men, not most men, not many men, but NO man comes to God without accepting Jesus as his savior. Therefore, every person, without exception, must accept Jesus as his personal savior in order to reach the Pearly Gates. And since deceased babies, infants, and young children can never make a commitment to Jesus, they are unjustly condemned to hell because of conditions over which they had absolutely no control.

Because of this dilemma and others that are showered on theologians by children, the former have concocted a dishonest and unbiblical concept known as the Age of Accountability. According to apologists, children below this indeterminate age are excused from all the obligations that burden adults and will not be punished for deeds committed, or expectations unfilled, while on earth. They retain a kind of purity that exempts them from the normal obligations that plague those above the Age of Accountability. The problem with this whole idea is that it is not only unbiblical but flies directly in the face of clear biblical teachings to the contrary. Nowhere does the Bible make exceptions for those under a certain age, and nowhere does the Bible describe fetuses, babies, and children in any terms other than that of sinners in need of purification. From a biblical perspective, as the following verses effectively demonstrate, infants, babies, and fetuses are no purer than anyone else.

- Psalm 58:3 says, "The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies." Notice it says they are wicked, speaking lies, "as soon as they be born."
- Job 14:4 says, "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." Yet, many apologists would have us believe that somehow newborns are free from sin and impurity after birth and for that reason cannot be condemned until they reach the Age of Accountability.
- Rom. 5:12 ("Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned"),
- Psalm 14:2 ("The lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand and seek God. They are all gone aside, they are all together become filthy: there is none that does good, no not one"),
- Rom. 3:23 ("For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God"),
- 1 John 1:10 ("If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us"),
- Rom. 3:10 ("There is none righteous, no not one"),
- 1 John 1:8 ("If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us"),
- Eccle. 7:20 ("For there is not a just man upon earth, that does good, and sins not"),
- and Prov. 20:9 ("Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin"), clearly show that no one, regardless of age, is pure and sinless. Without exception, ALL have sinned. Therefore all will be judged by the same criteria and are under the same obligations. See also: Mark 10:18, 1 John 5:19, 1 Kings 8:46, Rom. 3:12, 7:18-19, Isa. 53:6, 64:6, Gal. 3:22, and Psalm 143:2

The Age of Accountability concept is nothing more than a transparent ruse devised by those seeking to hide the obvious injustices inflicted upon the young and defenseless by a heartless book. It is one of those ideas that should be eliminated before being allowed to exit the starting gate. The Bible makes no exceptions for those too young to comply, and all rationalizations to the contrary are without merit. The Age of Accountability concept is little more than a subterfuge designed to give scripture an aura of compassion and equity allegedly accompanied by strong considerations for extenuating circumstances. Biblicists talk about the book as if it were rational and fair when precisely the opposite is true.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from JM continues from last month (Part cc)

[Point #19 in our pamphlet was: Surely you don't believe Eccle 1:9 in the RSV which says, "What has been is what will be, and what has been done, is what will be done; there is nothing new under the sun"? How many cities had an atomic bomb dropped on them prior to 1945, and how many people walked on the moon before 1969?--ED.]

JM's Defense is: It is really embarrassing to have to respond to objections such as this. If this is the best he has to offer, he should just quit. Mr. McKinsey did not allow for the context. The writer is not saying that nothing new will ever happen. He points out that people are vain. (v.2) People work to make a profit. (v.3) One generation dies and another takes its place. (v.4) The sun rises and the sun sets. (v.5) The wind blows to the south and then to the north. (v.6) The rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not filled up. (v.7) Everything is full of labor. The eye is not satisfied with what it sees, nor the ear with what it hears. (v.8) This simply shows the regularity of life. Man is on a cycle which ends and begins over and over again....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part cc)

The scholarship of apologists such as yourself never ceases to amaze me, JM. Like so many of your compatriots, if you don't like the script you either rewrite, reinterpret, or ignore it. What does the text say? THERE IS NOTHING NEW UNDER THE SUN. Could the author have been more clear? I don't see how. Yet, you not only allege the author is "not saying that nothing new will ever happen," which he most assuredly is claiming, but try to defend your pathetic position by listing a series of acts that are decidedly repetitious by your own admission. How does your listing of a series of monotonous and repetitive acts prove that there is, in fact, something new under the sun? By referring to the "regularity of life" and the repetitive cycle in which man is involved, you are only substantiating the position of the author who said there is nothing new under the sun. In effect, you are agreeing with his observation. Yet, you earlier stated he was not saying there is nothing new under the sun. I quoted an author as saying one thing, while you said he meant the opposite. You then proceed to provide evidence that proves he meant what I said. As I have said before, your "logic" is a sight to behold. Your explanation is nothing more than a rambling stream of pseudo-thought. If this is the best you have to offer, the bowling leagues have some vacancies you might want to consider. I'm still awaiting an answer to my original question. How many cities endured atomic attack prior to 1945 and how many people visited the moon prior to 1969? By failing to provide an adequate response, you have only helped to prove that new and unique events do arise. There is something new under the sun after all.

Letter #508 from JM Continues from Last Month (Part dd)

[Point #20 in our pamphlet was: If the Bible is our moral guide, then how can it make pornographic statements such as: "...they may eat their own dung and drink their own piss with you" (2 Kings 18:27)? Is that what you want your children reading in Sunday School?--ED.]

JM's Defense is: Mr. McKinsey labors hard to find something wrong with the Bible because he has already made up his mind that it is not inspired. Here we have the results of a long and drawn out war in which the remaining soldiers are scraping the bottom of the barrel (so to speak) just to stay alive and continue the fight. They eat and drink their own waste because the supplies have run out and this is all there is left to keep them alive.

If Mr. McKinsey thinks this is pornographic, I wonder what he thinks about the PG-13, R and X rated movies that are being pushed off on the public by allowing them to be rented in video rental stores every day? Will he say that these are pornographic and should not be rented? What about the movies on T.V., where language is often worse than these words? Is this pornographic? I am sure that Mr. McKinsey would find very little wrong with these. Why, then, does he consider the Bible pornographic? Because he has to find an argument against it, and he is at the point that any old thing will do.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part dd)

To begin with, JM, I really wish you and your allies would stop alleging that I have to "labor hard" to find things wrong with the Bible. I can assure you that few comments are further from the truth. Finding problems within Scripture is easy, almost to the point of being ridiculous. Second, my mind was not made up "prior to" the analysis; my mind was made up by the analysis. Anyone who has objectively studied the evidence without any preconceptions or indoctrinations could come to only one conclusion. Third, if I am scraping the bottom of the barrel, it's only because that is where one must go in order to discuss the Bible. Fourth, I noticed you said, "They eat and drink their own waste...." What's wrong? Can't stand the Bible's terminology? Are you choking on the Bible's four-letter words? We both know the Bible did not say "waste." Fifth, who cares why they are eating the stuff; that's irrelevant. We are talking about terminology; don't try to shift our focus to another topic. Sixth, you state, "If Mr. McKinsey thinks this is pornographic...." What do you mean, "if." You mean you have doubts? "Piss" is not filthy language? Where did you grow up? If it isn't filthy language, then why did you choose the word "waste," instead? Seventh, what do you mean by saying that I am "at the point that any old thing will do"? Apparently a 50,000 watt radio station in Atlanta, Georgia doesn't think it is "any old thing." I was promptly censored when I used the word "piss" on the air, and all I was doing was quoting the "good book." Eighth, don't try to put me on the defensive by putting me in the position of defending movie ratings and content. Your statement that, "I am sure that Mr. McKinsey would find very little wrong with these" is wholly inaccurate. I am disturbed by any situation in which labels must be put on movies before you can know if they are reasonably appropriate for viewing, and I'm also bothered by the tremendous amount of trash and violence currently circulating in abundance and masquerading under the rubric of artistic freedom and creativity. But my views aren't the issue; your book's profanity is. So, let's stay on the issue. Ninth, don't try to implicitly excuse, justify, or minimize the Bible's contents because the content of movies and television is reprehensible. And lastly, you need not engage in hyperbole by saying, "Why, then, does he consider the Bible pornographic?" Where have I ever said the Bible is pornographic? There are undoubtedly pornographic statements contained therein, but that doesn't mean the entire book is pornographic.

Letter #508 from JM Continues (Part ee)

Would I want my child reading this on Sunday? Yes! Providing that he is taught why these words were used, it would be perfectly acceptable. They are not used in a pornographic way; they were used to speak of bodily functions and the last extremities of a prolonged siege. I have even quoted this language from the pulpit. The Bible uses the word "ass" to speak of the donkey; men, today, make it dirty and filthy. The Bible speaks of "hell" to refer to either the grave, the realm of the unseen for the wicked, or eternal punishment for the wicked. Men, today, use it as a slang and dirty word. The problem is not with the Bible, it is with our attitude in how we use certain words. If one finds these words offensive, another translation can be used."

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part ee)

All you are doing, JM, is resorting to the old "you are taking it out of context" defense. Do you realize how many novelists, writers, poets, musicians, painters, playwrights, composers, sculptors, photographers, and artists could make the same argument when their works are attacked as pornographic by others? I can only conclude that you have no objection to your children reading, viewing, and hearing their works as well. After all, you have already admitted you don't mind your child reading the word "piss" in Sunday School as long as it is viewed in context and "providing that he is taught why these words were used." Shouldn't those whose works you and your compatriots attack be accorded the same opportunity to explain and justify their product?

(To Be Concluded Next Month)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #529 from NS of Richmond, Indiana

Dear Dennis

.... Whether you know it or not, Biblical Errancy has become a major thing in my later years. Much time is spent at the computer, not only writing letters, but attempting to get things in some sort of order on discs. I am very dedicated to the cause, and feel I must speak out. Like you, I realize there are a lot of sick people in the world. I replied to most of the letters (Letters written to NS in response to NS's letters to the editor published in NS's local newspaper--Ed.) personally, but a couple didn't even merit a reply, for they are so encased in Christian fundamentals that getting them to read the Bible with any objectivity would be in direct proportion to my donning a tutu and dancing "Swan Lake".

With ammunition such as the Bible, BE, Robert Ingersoll, Forgery in Christianity, Deceptions and Myths in the Bible, The Bible Handbook, etc., it isn't too hard to shoot down most arguments. Even with their feet encased in cement, it must give some of them pause when they read actual contradictions, murderous laws and acts, which I'm sure most didn't even realize existed. One lady who wrote that her beloved God DID NOT ignore his own commandments, and they weren't even made for Him to begin with was so ridiculous (and wide open) I thought she did merit a reply. I patiently listed many broken commandments (quite a job within itself) along with an analysis of Josh McDowell and others like him.... I also listed various and sundry other despicable deeds her God did and a short history of where the Bible comes from and mailed them to her with my return address....

Letter #530 from CH of Spartanburg, South Carolina

Dear Mr. McKinsey,

I support your effort wholeheartedly. I wish to assure you that one can be a Christian in the truest sense of the word without relying on the Bible as one's only source of Truth. Our sense of spirituality has too often been degenerated to a blind reverence of the Bible--bibliolatry. I wish more people were involved in healing our country's bigotry, greed, self-righteousness and ignorance, cultivated by inaccurate and disingenuous uses of the Bible. What a travesty -- spreading hatred in the name of Love. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #530

Although your support is most appreciated, CH, I think you are trying to put distance between yourself and the Bible when there is little room to spare. If, indeed, you are a Christian in the 'truest sense of the word,' then you are going to be plagued by a multitude of biblical problems that all Christians must confront, even those who reject biblical inerrancy. Christian liberals, for example, cannot escape the problems posed by John 14:6, Rom. 3:23, Rev. 12:7, Original Sin, the Resurrection, God's injustice and so on, ad infinitum. You can't leave the Bible and be a Christian, and the more biblical material you reject, the less of a Christian you become. Many people are trying to remain Christians while conceding all the contradictions and problems we have highlighted over the last ten years. It can't be done without being disingenuous and intellectually schizoid.

Letter #531 from BF of Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Dennis.

You continue to mesmerize me with your knowledge, debating skills, and logic....

Editor's Response to Letter #531 from BF

Dear BF.

I am humbly appreciative for your most gracious accolades. I would be less than candid were I not to admit that commendations go a long way toward keeping our spirits high and our determination energized. Knowing one is appreciated and efforts are not expended in vain are major stimuli to our whole program.

Letter #532 from HM of Bellbrook, Ohio

Dear Dennis

.... I must compliment you on the remarkable way you handle yourself in a face-to-face or voice-to-voice debate. I wish I could stay as cool and calm as your are in confrontations with fundamentalists, but I'm inclined to blow my stack at the least bit of intimidation. By the way, on one of your tapes you read a lengthy list of "deeds" performed by God which made the Devil look like Shirley Temple. You excluded the chapter and verse numbers. Is there any way I can obtain the complete list?

Editor's Response to Letter #532

Dear HM.

Over the years my obsequious, condescending, mild-mannered approach to religious apologists has gradually faded and I think you would find my recent radio appearances to be far more in keeping with the spirit you express. I don't blow my stack but biblicists would do well to be prepared if they seek to defend the Bible or attack the validity of this publication. My strategy and tactics have changed significantly. I now realize one can overdo the Mr. Nice Guy approach. Come what may, I'm now more inclined to tell it like it is.

As far as the reprehensible deeds of God are concerned, chapter and verse references can be found in the commentaries of Issues 115-120. In addition, a brief synopsis can be found near the end of the third issue.

The June issue of BE marked a milestone in the history of this publication. For all practical purposes, we have exhausted the contents of our 5 large notebooks filled with information on the errors, contradictions, and fallacies of the Bible. Ten and one half years were required, but success has been achieved. Although commentaries will continue to appear in BE, future emphasis will now be upon book reviews, dissecting apologetic literature, answering apologetic defenses, responding to apologetic and sympathetic letters, and generally broadening our focus to include more extrabiblical material. Anyone who has all of our prior issues possesses what is probably the most comprehensive, the most thoroughly researched, the most poignant, the most accurate refutation of the Bible in the entire English-speaking world, if not the entire world. At least, we are not aware of anything more compendious or encyclopedic. But there is a limit to how much can be exposed in the manner we have employed, and that point has been reached. In effect the first phase of our entire effort has been successfully accomplished. A massive, all-inclusive volume of materials devoted to an exposure of the Bible's failings is now available for all to read. Over the years I have been asked by scores of people to write a book, but anyone who has read all of our back issues has, in effect, read several books and, consequently, I have felt little need to engage in what would essentially amount to a duplication of that which has already been produced. Other matters were more pressing. In the future, however, writing a book will be considered.

BE's new area of concentration will be as important as the first and unfortunately is the arena in which so many members of the freethought movement have come up short over the years. Opponents of the Bible have often collected a sizable amount of data but seemed lost as to how it should be employed. An effective and on-going program of debate, discussion, proselytization, education, etc. has been noticeably lacking, and that we intend to address much more extensively. It does no good to gather material that is not going to be employed in an effective and on-going manner. If you don't take it to the other side, almost nothing will be accomplished, because there is almost no chance they are going to come to ideas they have been taught to view as erroneous.

We can also happily announce that, as of last month, we concluded the second phase of our effort. FINALLY, they have arrived; they are here; they made it. After almost two years in the making, we have managed to put the heart, the essence, the nucleus of 10 1/2 years of BE COMMENTARIES onto 24 audio tapes of approximately 90 minutes each. A lot of time and effort went into constructing something that could be used by those who are visually-impaired, want to read as little as possible, want something to hear while driving, have friends, relatives, or acquaintances who refuse to read biblical criticisms, or have special needs of one sort or another. Audio/visual materials have become extremely important in spreading the message, and we have long felt a need to propagate BE by this type of medium. Unlike all prior A/V materials, these were specifically created for distribution and consumption. Because we have always felt an obligation to prove our case as would a lawyer in court, these audio commentaries, like BE commentaries throughout the years, are well supplied with facts and figures gleaned from tremendous research over several decades. So, in effect, the second phase has been successfully concluded also.

Now we are about to enter the third, and probably most challenging, phase of our program--the production and distribution of video tapes for broadcast on public access cable TV. Tentative plans are to create tapes that could then be circulated to supporters who would be willing to play them regularly on their local access station. We plan to call upon those who volunteered several years ago to participate but were never contacted. To them we extend our apologies, but time just wasn't available.

Unfortunately, this will be the most expensive activity undertaken so far. To begin with, we need a studio or place in which to record, volunteers to operate the equipment, an editing machine, someone who knows the intricacies of editing, a video-camcorder, a video tape duplicator, and other accessories needed for an effective presentation. We have been told that start-up equipment alone will total at least $2,000 to $4,000 and that the Sony TR 101 Hi-8 would fit our needs fine. We would appreciate hearing from anyone who can aid in regard to these considerations. Unfortunately, unlike many people, we do not live in an area in which the local cablevision station will provide equipment and facilities for those who seek to create a program. Many factors will have to fall into place for this undertaking to work successfully, not the least of which is getting air-times at sensible hours on a regular basis.

Although in the planning stage for many years, this third major project has been held in abeyance for several reasons. If I had gone straight to cablevision, viewers would have called or written for additional information, and I had no material available for distribution. Now that body of material exists in abundance. Second, we live in an audio-visual age, and the number of people who read serious material on a regular basis is only a small percentage of the population in general. When people come home from work or school, they turn on the TV and that is where the mass audience is. Preachers and evangelists are well aware of this fact, and don't race to TV just to see their faces on screens. If we produced cablevision programs, people would be far more likely to request additional A/V materials, such as audio tapes, rather than literature. For that reason audio tapes covering the essence of BE had to be available also. Many will listen to what you have to say, but they are not going to put forth any effort to read. Those tapes are now available also. And finally, the amounts of time and money that have to be invested have been a major hindrance.

In any event, the basics are in place. We have the literature and the audio tapes. Now we need videos, public access, a mass audience, speaking engagements, debates, exposure, and expansion. The third phase will be the most difficult because of several factors, over which I have little or no control. It won't get off the ground until every facet is in place, and how long this will take is anyone's guess. Approximately 8 years ago we briefly engaged in a project of this nature and found that even such factors as finding a suitable recording location and appropriate video lighting facilities can be a real challenge.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #508 from JM continues from last month (Part ff)

[Point #21 in our pamphlet was: If God created everything (Col. 1:16, Eph. 3:9, Rev. 4:11, John 1:3), then he created the world's evil (Isa. 45:7, Lam. 3:38). Thus, he should be held responsible--ED.]

JM's Defense is: This gets back to objection #3. God made everything, but he did not make it evil. Satan rebelled against God, and Adam and Eve allowed sin to come into the world through their disobedience. Man uses things that God gave for good, to make evil things. This is hardly God's fault, and it is unfair to blame God with it.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part ff)

Again, JW, we see that logic is not one of your strong suits. Either God created everything or he didn't. There is no in between. Scripture says in Col. 1:16 and Eph. 3:9 that God created everything and you also stated, "God created everything." That settles the matter. In groping for an answer, you say God created everything but he didn't create evil. That's a contradiction. If Satan rebelled against God, and Adam and Eve allowed sin to come into the world, then God did not create everything. But you are drifting off into the secondary consideration of how sin came about according to Christian theology, which is irrelevant. What matters is that God either is or is not the source.

Letter #508 Continues (Part gg)

...There are places in the Bible, however, that seem to indicate that God does do evil.... How can these things be reconciled with the fact that God does not do evil? Simply by realizing that whatever God allows, is attributed to him. God is the ultimate source of power and authority. This being the case, we need to realize that even evil must be allowed by God, or else it would not exist. Thus in that sense God creates evil. When one looks at the overall context of the Bible, there is no problem at all.

The figure of speech used here is "anthropopatheia" or the ascribing of human attributes to God....

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part gg)

Don't be silly, JM; of course there is a problem and your "God allows" subterfuge just won't fly. You not only said he created everything, which by definition means he must have created evil, but key verses clearly show that God did not just "allow" evil, he created it, he's the source, it's his idea. Through a subtle ruse you are trying to say he didn't create everything. You might want to read our commentary on God in the July 1992 issue of BE. There aren't just places in the Bible that "seem" to indicate that God does evil. There are verses that flatly state he is the source. Biblical readers are not ascribing attributes to God; the Bible is, and it is doing so in no uncertain terms.

Letter #508 Continues (Part hh)

[Point #22 in our pamphlet was: In Psalm 139:7-11 we are told God is everywhere. If so, why would God need to come down to earth to see a city (Gen. 11:5) when he is already here and how could Satan leave the presence of the Lord (Job 1:2, 2:7)?--ED.]

JM's Defense is: Again the figure of speech "anthropopatheia" is used here, in another one of its aspects. God does not need to come down to see what is going on, but he is said to come down so that man may understand him. Satan cannot literally leave the presence of the Lord, but he is said to be able so that men could understand God.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part hh)

You can bring in more irrelevant verbiage, JM! Who cares why he came down or if he needs to come down at all. That doesn't address the basic problem. How can he come down if he is already here? That's the issue! Don't try to change the focus. And where are you getting this stuff about his coming down "so that man may understand him"? Where is that in Scripture, or is this another concoction? And what do you mean, "Satan cannot literally leave the presence of the Lord"? Don't you believe Job 1:12 ("So Satan went forth from the presence of the Lord") or do you prefer to interpret as you see fit? Aren't you fundamentalists the ones who constantly complain about Christian liberals leaving the literal interpretation of Scripture when they're in a bind? And here you are, practicing the same dishonest scholarship. If you spent as much time reading and accepting the book as is, as you do in interpreting and redefining for expediency's sake, you'd be far better off. This "anthropopatheia" nonsense you keep tossing out is nothing more than a subterfuge to escape an impasse.

Letter #508 Continues (Part ii)

[Point #23 in our pamphlet was: For justice to exist, punishment must fit the crime. No matter how many bad deeds one commits in this world, there is a limit. Yet, hell's punishment is infinite--ED.]

JM's Defense is: The reason that Mr. McKinsey sees a problem here is because he does not understand the nature of sin and of God. There is also a limit to what man can do because he is finite. If man was infinite I have a feeling that the punishment for crimes would be greater than what they are. God is an infinite being, who cannot make allowances for sin. God is of purer eyes than to behold sin, and he cannot allow it. Mr. McKinsey does not see the terrible nature of sin in the eyes of God because he does not think that sin is very bad. To him, and people like him, sin is nothing more than a child's disregard for parental rule. In God's eyes even this is terrible (for children old enough to know right from wrong.)

Yet, hell is infinitely greater than any punishment we as humans could inflict upon evil-doers. However, it needs to be remembered that God does not want any to perish, but all to come to repentance. (2 Peter 3:9). It was terrible enough that God had to give his Son as the only way from sin back to God. If one refuses to accept the gracious gift of God's sacrifice, then God will punish them eternally. Why, because the price paid was infinitely greater than anything we could ever have offered. God gave his sinless Son that we might have life.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part ii)

What a rambling entanglement of vapid gobbledygook! First, you state that, "If man was infinite I have a feeling that the punishment for crimes would be greater than what they are," which is nothing more than speculation on your part and does nothing to excuse God's behavior. Even more important, how could the punishment be any greater, when it's already infinite? For goodness sake, what do you want? How could man's becoming infinite extend the punishment any further, when one's residency in hell is already eternal? Second, you state, "God is an infinite being, who cannot make allowances for sin," when he obviously must; otherwise, everyone will end up in hell forever. Third, the crux of your argument seems to be that God is so pure that all sin is horrific in God's eyes. Consequently, only infinite punishment is justified. Don't be absurd. That's no answer. That has nothing to do with justice. You mean that because God is so offended, infinite punishment is appropriate? God makes no allowances for degrees of culpability? That's a just God! I repeat my original question. How is God fitting the crime to the punishment, and where's the justice? Fourth, I take great exception to your wholly unjustified remark that, "Mr. McKinsey does not think that sin is very bad." Quite the contrary, I find the amount of antisocial behavior prevalent throughout our society to be nothing short of appalling, and I can't help but note that people of the most profound religious convictions are in charge of the political/social/economic/ideological scene while it runs rampant. And I have never looked upon felonious acts such as murder and rape as "nothing more than a child's disregard for parental rule." Are you serious? Where are you getting this poison? Fifth, you state that, "if one refuses to accept the gracious gift of God's sacrifice, then God will punish them eternally." How utterly outrageous! You mean the mere act of simply failing to accept a gift merits as much punishment as if one had committed the most heinous crimes imaginable? If you look upon this whole arrangement as just, I only hope I never enter a courtroom in which you are the judge.

Letter #508 Continues (Part jj)

[The 24th and final point in our pamphlet entitled "THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD?" was: And lastly, in Acts 20:35 Paul told people to "remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" Since Jesus never made such a biblical statement, isn't Paul guilty of deception?--ED.]

JM's Defense is: Mr. McKinsey labors to find something wrong with the Bible in bringing up this objection. Who said that if Jesus made such a statement that it would ever have to be recorded? John said: "Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book...." (John 20:30). If Jesus did many other signs which were not written, would it not be reasonable to say that Jesus said many things which were not written? Paul was speaking to the Ephesian elders who had no doubt been taught many of the sayings of Jesus (by the apostles) which had not been written down.

Editor's Response to Letter #508 (Part jj)

After all these months, JM, you've finally made a point that has some degree of credibility. As long as you and your compatriots are willing to admit that there is no such statement by Jesus anywhere in the Bible; as long as you and your cohorts are willing to promise that you will never again use this quotation by Paul without telling your listeners that the alleged comment by Jesus is nowhere to be found in the Bible, and as long as you are willing to admit that you are assuming Paul is correctly quoting an extrabiblical comment by Jesus which he managed to come across somehow, I am willing to concede that Paul might be correct. But that is a big "might." Even before placing this problem into my pamphlet, I realized biblicists would probably use your defense. But I inserted it anyway, because I felt the problem was of such importance as to merit consideration, and I knew how I would respond. I think most people will see your transparent defense for what it really is, a rationalization. But if they don't, they have at least been made aware of the problem.

Letter #508 Concludes After Nearly One Year (Part kk)

So where are the great problems that are supposed to make us tremble in our boots? Where are the iron-clad arguments that conclusively destroy the credibility of the Bible? Mr. McKinsey started out by saying that these difficulties could not be solved, only rationalized. Well, he can call it what he wants, but we would like to see him respond, point by point to the responses we have given. Maybe he will write another tract answering these responses. It is our hope and prayer that someone will see the truth by reading this booklet and come to God, or have his faith strengthened. If this is done, we will be paid back a hundred fold.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #508 (Part kk)

If you didn't tremble in your boots, JM, it's probably because you were too busy drowning in them. Your entire pamphlet is anemic, deceptive, and erroneous, and only substantiates the truth of my original comment: These problems can't be solved, only rationalized. You hoped that I would write a reply to your document and respond to your points one by one. I trust you aren't disappointed, in light of the fact that every issue of BE since September 1992 has exposed one or more points in your booklet entitled "Still a Perfect Work of Harmony" which attacked my pamphlet, "The Bible is God's Word?" You ask: Where are the iron-clad arguments that destroy the credibility of the Bible? Take off your Christian blindfold, and you'll see wreckage strewn all about. Like winds from Hurricane Andrew, even if you personally can't see them, objective observers can sure see the results of their force and destruction. Contrary to the title of your publication, if there is one thing the Bible is not, it's a "Perfect Work of Harmony". It's anything but. As I have said so often, the Bible has more holes in it than a backdoor screen.

Letter #533 from NB of Tucson, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Dennis.

I am a loyal subscriber to B.E., but let me say at the outset that I am not a "Biblicist", "Religionist", literalist, or fundamentalist, though I do believe in God....

I wrote this letter in reference to B.E. #120, p. 5, second column, about the "stalls" and "baths". I see no reason why copyists' errors may not have been involved in the former case, as the Hebrew system of writing numbers involved the use of modified forms of Hebrew letters, with little dots written above them to indicate orders of magnitude. Thus, a single omitted dot could make the difference between 4,000 and 40,000.

Editor's Response to Letter #533 (Part a)

Dear NB. The copyist error defense is simply not going to save the day in this instance, or hundreds of others that are often cited. The reasoning in this regard is relatively simple. First, although the alleged originals no longer exist, there are thousands of manuscripts claiming to be accurate copies of the alleged originals. When scholars decided to write the following versions--KJ, RS, ML, AS, NASB, MT, LV, JB, NIV, TEV, NWT, and etc.--they went through either some, many, most, or all of the manuscripts, compared what was said in each, reached a common consensus, and chose to use 40,000 in 1 Kings 4:26 and 4,000 in 2 Chron. 9:25. In order for there to have been a copyist error, the same incorrect figure had to have been copied in scores if not hundreds and thousands of manuscripts, certainly not one or two. Are you saying hundreds, if not thousands, of copyists made precisely the same error when they copied 1 Kings 4:26 and 2 Chron. 9:25 from the autographs? They not only copied incorrectly but made the same erroneous change? Christians love to talk about odds. What do you think are the odds of that happening? No doubt they are comparable to the figures biblicists throw around when it comes to the percentage possibility of Jesus' fulfilling all the OT messianic prophecies. The attempt by biblicists to pawn this problem off on one lone copyist or scribe in some monastery somewhere who happened to make one simple mistake is rather amusing, in light of the fact that thousands of manuscripts are involved with the same verse. Second, even if there were a copyist mistake, you could never be sure which figure was copied incorrectly. Was it the 40,000 figure that should have been 4,000 or the 4,000 figure that should have been 40,000? Because you could never know for sure, you might just as well expunge these two parts of the Bible. One is definitely incorrect, and you'll never know which. Third, and very important, is the fact that the manuscripts contradict one another, and until the original is produced, the contradiction stands. Biblicists are asking us to ignore a contradiction staring us in the face, in favor of a theory that can in no way be substantiated. The fact is that the contradiction stands, and will continue standing until evidence is produced to the contrary. The burden of proof lies on he who alleges. Because the contradiction is clear and obvious, I am under no obligation to prove a contradiction exists in manuscripts which biblicists can't even prove existed. Biblicists, on the other hand, are obligated to prove there was no contradiction in the original writings, which they are wholly incapable of doing.

Letter #533 Concludes (Part b)

I have far more serious problems with the "baths." You say: "Nothing is said about a container." I almost fell off my chair when I read that. If there was no container, then what held the "molten sea" of 1 Kings 7:23? I seem to recall your having some fun with the fact that the Israelites seemed to think that "pi" is equal to 3, whereas "everybody" knows that it is 3.1416... In fact, they were not very sophisticated mathematically, unlike the Egyptians, who a millenium before Solomon had an approximation to "pi" that was accurate to four decimal places, by far the best in the ancient world.... But where is it said that the "molten sea" was circular? 1 Kings 7:23 says only that it was "round all about, and his height was five cubits."

It appears that you have no idea of what a "bath," in this context, is. Well...a "bath" was an old Hebrew unit of volume equal to approximately 10 U.S. gallons. This leads to a very serious problem, which I will get to in a moment. But first, did you seriously interpret "baths," as "bathtubs"? I find this positively mind-blowing if you did.

Now, suppose that instead of being circular, the container was elliptical in cross-section. (At this point NB went into some mathematical calculations along with a graph--Ed.)....

Editor's Response to Letter #533 (Part b)

Read the text more closely, NB, and you'll see that your elliptical theory won't hold up. First Kings 7:23 says, "And he made a molten sea, ten cubits from the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of 30 cubits did compass it round about." If it was round all about, and one brim to the other always measured 10 cubits, then how could it have been anything other than a circle? For all practical purposes that eliminates the elliptical option and renders all your calculations moot. As I said originally, you can't have a circle with a diameter of 10 cubits and a circumference of 30 cubits.

As far as the "container" question is concerned and the accident you nearly had with your chair, I would rewrite the section about the container by simply omitting it. Everything from "And what container are you talking about" to "Even if what you said were relevant, which it isn't" should have been omitted. There was a container, the molten sea, in which the baths were contained, that's true. You are by no means the only reader who wrote a letter to us to express disagreement with what I said in regards to the baths. I stand corrected, and admit I should have read that section more closely. But my original argument and that which follows this omission, are still valid. I've never claimed perfection, but I'm light-years ahead of my competition.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #534 from DM of Supply, NC

Dear Dennis.

Great Issues! I just love them! You are brilliant! I love to see you sock it to em. Keep it up!....

Letter #535 from GS of Clearfield, Penn.

Dear Mr. McKinsey

.... Your publication is very informative and much-needed in our society. I commend you and wish you the best of luck in your endeavors.

Letter #536 from JB of Portland, Oregon

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

Your publication has been the subject of much comment on America on Line's bulletin board regarding Bible contradictions. As a militant atheist, I am presently intrigued by the subject of biblical errancy, lies and contradictions. What I have seen of your efforts has impressed me, and I believe that I would like to both subscribe and obtain back copies....

EDITOR'S NOTE: Because of a significant number of inquiries and new subscribers, we wish to send a special thanks to all those who have been putting extracts from BE on computer bulletin boards around the nation. Apparently this is an excellent means by which to advertise, and all subscribers are free to put any of our material on any computer boards they deem suitable, as long as the name and address of the source is publicized as well.

August 1993

We have always had a policy of periodically devoting an entire issue of BE to letters from our readers, and in keeping with that tradition have decided to devote this month's issue to correspondence.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #537 from GM of Oulu, Finland (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

I read with interest the sample issues of Biblical Errancy you sent me, and I would like to make a few remarks. One of the copies of Biblical Errancy I received bears the title "Sample Issue" and has no date or progressive number; therefore I assume that as a rule this copy is sent to all inquirers. I want to concentrate for this time on this sample issue. I believe that several of the arguments against Christianity contained in it are unfair, and for honesty's sake should be removed from the issue. I cannot discuss all issues in one letter, so for this time I will focus on a few of them only.

THE RESURRECTION

You ask, "Why should the Resurrection be of such significance as that ascribed to it for example by Paul in 1 Cor. 15:14?" After all, you observe, the Bible tells of other people being raised from the dead. Since I happen to believe that what Paul says is true, I will try to show that this argument is not in line with the stated aims of your periodical, and therefore should be removed from it.

First of all, I am surprised that you apparently are not aware of the fact that according to the Bible Jesus' resurrection was unique in that it was not a mere resuscitation of a corpse. All the Biblical characters you mention were raised from the dead, but after that they grew old and died once again. Jesus, on the other hand, was raised from the dead in order to be alive forever (Rev. 1:18, Rom. 6:9, Heb. 7:25). The claim that Jesus will never die again, if nothing else, does make the resurrection of Jesus unique in the Bible, is consistent with the statement of Paul, and flies in the face of your claim that other people were raised from the dead in the same sense Jesus was.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part a)

Dear GM.

Apparently I am going to have to start suggesting that people read prior issues of BE before they send us critical letters. This topic was covered long ago. To begin with, Paul says it is the resurrection that matters, not the fact that Jesus never died again. What Pauline verses are you referring to when you say that Jesus' act of never dying again is what really mattered to Paul? Paul never said that. In First Corinthians he said it's the resurrection that counts, not the fact that Jesus never died again. Secondly, how do you know that Jairus' daughter, the widow at Nain's son, Lazarus, and others who rose from the dead died again? How do you know they didn't go straight to Heaven like Elijah in his chariot? How can you be sure they didn't ascend to Heaven like Enoch? You say "the others grew old and died once again." What scriptural verses are you citing to prove that they died again, or is this mere conjecture on your part? Some of your argument rests on a gratuitous assumption. Thirdly, if the resurrection of Jesus was more than just the mere revival of a corpse, then how do you know that is not applicable to the others as well? And lastly, you cite Rev. 1:18, Heb. 7:25 and Rom. 6:9 to prove that Jesus was raised from the dead to be alive forevermore. Yet, according to Christian theology, we are all going to be raised from the dead to live forevermore in either Heaven, Hell, Purgatory or elsewhere. In fact, everyone is immortal whether desired or not. So Jesus is by no means unique in this regard.

Letter #537 Continues (Part b)

In fact, Paul teaches elsewhere that Jesus' resurrection was THE FIRST of this kind to ever occur in history. Col. 1:18 says, "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all [things] he might have the preeminence. First Cor. 15:20 says, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, [and] become the firstfruits of them that slept. And 1 Cor. 15:23 says, "But every man [will rise from the dead] in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part b)

You have misconstrued these verses, GM. In fact, you would do well to steer clear of them entirely. They say that Christ was the first to rise from the dead, period. Nowhere do they say that his resurrection was the first "of this kind." No biblical distinction is drawn between the nature of his resurrection and those of others. All three verses you cite clearly state that Christ was the first to rise from the dead, and both the Old and New Testaments clearly refute the validity of that claim. Many biblical figures rose before him. Secondly, how could Jesus have a beginning or be firstborn if he is God, the eternal? Thirdly, Paul says it's the resurrection that counts, the fact that Jesus rose from the dead, period, not the fact that his was the first in a long series of resurrections.

Letter #537 Continues (Part c)

In addition, Jesus' resurrection was unique in that He raised Himself from the dead (or, if you don't believe it, He claimed He would - John 10:17-18). No other character in the Bible raised himself from the dead, nor did anyone else claim to be able to do so. Far from being similar to other "resurrections," Jesus' resurrection was something that had never happened before, and that has not happened ever since.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part c)

The more you talk, GM, the further your quaggy descent. The Bible repeatedly states in no uncertain terms that Jesus was raised from the dead by God; he did not raise himself. Verses which clearly prove as much are: Acts 3:15 ("And killed the Prince of life, whom God has raised from the dead...."), Acts 13:30 ("But God raised him from the dead"), Gal. 1:1 ("...but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead...."), Acts. 4:10, 2:32, 5:30, and many others. Also note that verses like Gal. 1:1 draw a clear distinction between Jesus and God the Father. So don't try the old trinitarian shell-game of equating the two and saying that Jesus is God and therefore raised himself. Either he is God or he isn't. He can't be both simultaneously. If he is God, he couldn't have died to begin with, since God can't die. If he isn't, then these verses clearly show that he did not raise himself.

On top of everything else, you claim Jesus' predicted in John 10:17-18 that he would raise himself, which many verses show to be an erroneous prognostication. In essence, you've inadvertently exposed Jesus as a false prophet. You'd do well to avoid these verses as well.

Furthermore, the body with which Jesus was raised, although the same body he had before the resurrection (the scars were still there), was according to Paul a spiritual body, which he says is radically different from a physical body (1 Cor. 15:35-53). (Here as elsewhere, you can believe what Paul says or disbelieve it, but you cannot say it is a fallacy or an error or a contradiction.)

This fact too is consistent with the idea that Jesus' resurrection was completely different from, say, that of Lazarus, and it is inconsistent with your opinion that what started Christianity was just another resuscitation like many others.

Incidentally, there is a serious mistake in your list of biblical resuscitations. What happened to Samuel (1 Sam. 28) and to Moses and Elijah (Luke 9) is neither a resurrection nor a resuscitation. Rather, their disembodied spirits were made visible to people; their bodies will be raised only when Jesus comes back.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part d)

In the 15th chapter of first Corinthians to which you refer, Paul is talking about a spiritual body which all will have when they rise from the dead. He is not referring to the body of Jesus alone. The very first verse of 1 Cor. 15:35-53 says, "How are the dead raised? With what kind of body do they (Notice it says "they") come?," and is clearly referring to people in general, not Jesus in particular, as the other verses demonstrate as well. You can't use these verses to prove that the resurrection of Jesus was different from that of Lazarus, for example. The bodies which Jesus and Lazarus had after their resurrections were the same physical bodies they had before their demise and, according to Paul, any spiritual quality attached to one will accompany the other also.

Where did I ever use the word "resuscitation" or even imply that "what started Christianity was just another resuscitation." Can you show one instance in all of our prior issues where I ever used the word "resuscitation"? Biblicists throw that word around freely, and I've never used it. You've created a straw-man.

And can you provide any biblical testimony to the effect that Samuel, Moses, and Elijah appeared only as disembodied spirits? Samuel says to Saul in 1 Sam. 28:15, "Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up?" Luke 9:30 says, "Behold, two men talked with him, Moses and Elijah! They were splendid in appearance, glorious to see...." Where do these or related verses state that the appearances of Samuel, Moses, and Elijah were in something other than a physical body? You have inserted into the text a conjecture that is not only unwarranted but, even more important, unprovable. (TO BE CONTINUED)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #538 from VC of Hood River, Oregon

In response to letter #528 (May 1993) from BF of Tallahassee:

My sentiments exactly and he says it so well. I have all the BE issues. I reread them occasionally. I've underlined my favorite parts and made notations in the margins. My heirs have been instructed to save these and pass them on down through our progeny.

Letter #539 from JT of Hughesville, Penn.

Dear Dennis.

I don't know whether an elephant ever forgets, but I've forgotten to write you lately to tell you what a superb job I think you're doing with "Biblical Errancy." It took BF's letter (#528) in Issue 125 to bring me to my senses. Mea culpa!

Let me just say that "BE" is one of the few publications I can't wait to get in the mail. I wish each issue were a hundred pages long! I look forward to many more numbers to come. You've got the fundies on the run, Dennis! Now, let's close in for the kill!

Letter #540 from HLM of Bellbrook, Ohio

Dear Dennis....

You should be pleased to learn that I personally answer just about every religious editorial that appears in the Dayton Daily News, including an occasional one by David E. Kepple who is allowed far too much religious influence in that paper. Along with my personal remarks to these people, I include a copy of your pamphlets. I am yet to receive a reply from anyone!

Allow me to make a few suggestions, if you will, Dennis, regarding the format of B.E. I enjoy reading contradictions in the Bible, but somehow your heavy reliance on contradictions alone doesn't appear to affect theists in the way I hoped it would. That's why I like the philosophical approach better. Your sample copy dealing with the flood and the resurrection is the best type of ammunition you've ever presented, because you point out the ridiculous aspects of the stories. This isn't so easy to combat.

But contradictions, particularly those dealing with numbers are simply passed off by theists as translation errors. They don't appear to shake a person's faith in the least. Your flood account is a pure gem.... Please consider more newsletters in that vein. I've enclosed with this letter a page of questions that you might like to sift through for possible use in future editions of BE. Thank you for your time and keep spreading the word. Jehovah's Witnesses aren't the only ones who can command attention.

(Some of the questions you might use are--Ed.). Do you not agree that the Catholic Church is being terribly hypocritical by bowing to statues of worship when Lev. 26:1 clearly states: "You shall not erect an idol or a sacred pillar for yourselves, nor shall you set up a stone figure for worship in your land." This verse is found in both the King James version and Saint Joseph's New Catholic Edition. I have a former Catholic friend who left the church when she saw the hypocrisy of that verse....

Christians love the song "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands." Yet, in 1 John 5:19 we learn that "the whole world is lying in the power of the wicked one." I've always suspected that God and Satan were one and the same. I think this proves it.

Editor's Response to Letter #540

Dear HLM.

As we have mentioned before, BE is by no means confined to contradictions alone. It focuses on any and all problems having to do with the validity of the Bible, and that would involve a wide assortment of failings, including problems, errors, fallacies, contradictions, inaccuracies, immoralities, pseudo-science, etc. Contradictions are not the only avenue of assault. They should be viewed as crucial but by no means exhaustive.

Letter #541 from Anonymous of Virginia

Dear Dennis.

This morning when I talked to you by phone, I had "spread" 42 of the last 100 BE pamphlets that I recently ordered. It's 6:32 PM and ALL of the BE pamphlets have been distributed.... it's a privilege to distribute your stuff. I hope you get some subscribers out of this distribution, but even if you don't, a lot of people have seen THE TRUTH that they would not have seen otherwise. So it gives me a good feeling to know that maybe I have helped rescue some people from a life of mental illness. And I feel I have struck 100 more winning blows for the precious little girl in Letter #527 of May 1993 BE. Dennis, it's slow, but we can even help the chronically mentally ill. You may be the greatest force for sanity that the world has ever seen or will ever see. You are certainly a great champion--maybe the greatest ever--for the defenseless. I'm starting to rank you with Charles Dickens (after your reply to letter 527 which showed your tenderness toward that precious little girl with the grateful smile. Dennis, if she knew what you are doing for her, she would wish to hug you till it hurt and cover your cheek with sweet little kisses). I send my everlasting thanks to the writer of letter 527. Please send me 100 more pamphlets.

Editor's Response to Letter #541

Dear Anonymous. What can I say. You leave me speechless. Letters 527 and 528 in the May issue generated great interest and correspondence as your letter and those of others clearly show.

Letter #542 from AH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis. I wrote a letter to the editor of our local paper where I used items from your pamphlet entitled THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD?, and this guy, Michael, wrote in with jokes and lies. When I responded, the editor refused to print my rebuttal.

Actually I was amazed that he printed my first letter where I said there are over 300 contradictions in the bible.JK, a local pastor, wrote an article asking if the Bible was reliable. Of course, he answered his own letter by saying yes. I am writing him telling him to expect a copy of BE. Since the local editor won't print but one side of Christianity, I will ask him to debate you in your magazine. Best Wishes.

Editor's Response to Letter #542

Dear AH.

We appreciate your assistance, and please let everyone know that we stand ready to debate all biblicists at any time.

Letter #543 from BY of Seminole, Florida

Dear Dennis.

I am happily renewing my subscription to BE. I find it enlightening and a delightful source of arguments for debating those fervent Christians who cannot see beyond their precious "Book." I have also put said arguments to use in more public forums; the Atheists of Florida, Inc., produces a public-access show that has been broadcast in the Miami and Tampa areas, and will soon be in Wisconsin as well.

I also found the arguments useful when discoursing with "non-Biblical Christians" such as CH who wrote the letter in issue 126. One such liberal non-fundamentalist priest "Father" Leo Booth, has gained a measure of fame through talk show appearances promoting his book, When God Becomes a Drug: Breaking the Chains of Religious Addiction. Other local skeptics and I faced off with the "father" on a Tampa talk-show broadcast on a local CBS affiliate. Using your publication as a source for many of our questions, we placed Booth in positions for which he had no sensible answers, and no doubt did our part to hamper sales of his book locally. Additionally, several in the studio audience admitted that they were questioning the basis of their preacher's claims at face value. I doubt we've started a revolution, but every seed of doubt planted may someday bloom!

At any rate, I too have gone beyond the point of being "apologetic" for my atheism and skepticism; I think the Christians owe us all an apology for the horrendous deeds done (by humans, not through any supernatural means) in the name of their God over the last two or three thousand years. My favorite response to those who hit me with the "God bless you [you poor misguided soul], I'll pray for you" bit as a parting shot or offhand response is: Jesus Kills, are you still an accessory?"

Editor's Response to Letter #543

Dear BY.

Like so many others who have written to us, you are using BE in the manner intended. Keep up the good work!

Letter #544 from BF of Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Dennis.

Enclosed please find my check for a 2-year renewal of my subscription. I three-hole punched all of my BE's and put them in a big ring binder and started from Vol. 1 reading them all over again. This time more scholarly; taking notes and putting the more salient points on 3 X 5 cards to study while waiting in traffic, the dentist's office, etc. I figure in 18 months to two years I'll be ready to take some embryonic steps in debating fundies on their own turf. I do not wish to start before I am ready.

I sure wish we could form national and regional clinics or workshops to study debating strategy; role playing etc. to bring back to local areas and teach others of a like mind. Other than BE and Till's periodical are there any other publications you could recommend?

Editor's Response to Letter #544

Your strategy resembles that which I outlined in my speech contained in Issues 58, 59, and 60. You might want to reread them and see what you think. As far as other publications are concerned, I can't think of any that operate like Biblical Errancy except possibly Golding's Biblical Polemics, which is published in Israel, and F. Till's Skeptical Review. If you learn of any, please let me know.

Letter #545 from DS of Tiffin, Ohio

Dear Dennis....

I fully agree with your contention that to not battle the Biblicists in their own court is foolish. The only way one can confront them with reality is on their own front porch. One problem: once they seem to realize that you just might be right they stay away. It's hard to get a second shot at them. Also, no sports team can be called a winner if it can't win on the road. We rationalists had better hit the road and win a few.

Letter #546 from DM of Pasadena, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey....

BE has put out a lot of good information, especially in its major themes of recent editions, and I hope that you will keep up the good work. One bit of advice: Devote half the usual space to commenting on how stupid, incoherently rambling, idiotic, spaced-out, ridiculous, ignorant, or out-of-the-ballpark some of the letters are. Such comments have a way of multiplying until they occupy an inappropriately large space, whereupon they cast more bad light on you than your opponents.

Editor's Response to Letter #546

Dear DM.

Although your observation is to be taken in a spirit of camaraderie, I do think you have over-stated the point. Perhaps my memory is inadequate, but I don't remember ever having referred to my opponents as stupid, idiotic, ignorant, or spaced out. Terms of opprobrium have never been my stock and trade, even though they have crossed my mind on different occasions. Words such as rambling and ridiculous, however, have been employed in several instances and were directed toward the arguments of others as opposed to individuals per se. If you had been subjected to as many denunciatory comments over the last 10 years as I, you would probably have a greater appreciation for the amount of composure and forbearance we have managed to display. Be that as it may, you correctly concluded that mutual vilifications have a way of multiplying when allowed to continue unchecked. I hope we never have, and never will, cross into the arena of castigation and backbiting. My apologies to any who may feel the wall has been breached.

Letter #547 from JC of Birmingham, Alabama

Mr. McKinsey....

Received the material--most informative, especially the WSB audio tape. You have truly undertaken the more important work of our age.... You really should charge more for your excellent material.

Editor's Response to Letter #547

Your compliments are appreciated and you are probably correct. Our rates should be higher, but our primary emphasis has always been on getting the message out. In that same vein, many people have told me that with my knowledge of the Bible I could make a fortune as a preacher. Of course, my heart would not be in an undertaking of that kind, and monetary considerations would be the only motivation. That hardly sounds enjoyable, and I'd have a hard time looking in mirrors. Several years ago a Seventh-Day Adventist minister said his church would be willing to finance me in any manner deemed necessary should I decide to become a minister (Read: propagandist) for his denomination.

Letter #548 from SM of Torrance, California

Dear Dennis.

Wow! This stuff's dynamite! A friend passed along copies of your issues #125 and #126 to me, and I am impressed by your no-nonsense approach.... I debated a Creationist last week, and I found that the audience of Baptist fundamentalists were particularly attentive as I used your style to shred the Genesis account of Creation and Noah's Flood (or as I call it, the Jehovah Genocide)... Keep up the good work!

Letter #549 from GN of Scottsdale, Arizona

Dear Dennis.

I notice in this month's BE that you are having a debate about pornography in the Bible. I've found one. Perhaps you already know about it. At Genesis 24:2 Abraham is having his servant swear an oath to him about finding a wife for his son Isaac. It says, "Please place you hand under my thigh." In the footnote of my Bible it says, "procreative organ." Even the translators were reluctant to use the right word, "penis." Can't you just picture this repulsive scene? I imagine that the Bible has been cleaned up considerably over the years. I'm sure that "piss" will eventually be taken out of it in future translations.

What about all those men having concubines (women they lived with, had sex with, but were not married to)? I don't see how anyone can deny that the Bible is pornographic. If they do, then I believe that they don't really know what it says, especially when it comes to Lot offering his virgin daughters to the wicked men of Sodom to rape and brutalize, and then having an incestuous relationship with them in a drunken stupor. Wonder how JM cleans up this story to tell to his children. Another story that would shock the socks off a little kid is that of Abraham and Isaac. It seems to me that Christian kids would have a hard time sleeping at night, never knowing when their Daddy might hear the voice of God demanding them as a human sacrifice. There's also the matter of stories about the pregnant bellies of women's bodies being ripped open. The Bible certainly is not a book for children. Talk about violence on TV; nothing matches the violence in unholy scripture.

EDITOR'S NOTE: On Saturday June 26, 1993 Church of Christ Minister Don Boyer and I debated in Richmond, Indiana for 2 and one half hours. Don has his own column in the local conservative newspaper, the Richmond PALLADIUM-ITEM, and virtually challenged anyone to contest the Bible's validity. One of our subscribers contacted me and I called Boyer to arrange a discussion. He and one of our subscribers was kind enough to send me the following "Letter to the Editor" written by someone whom we do not know named John Kowalec, which appeared in the paper.

"I attended the debate held at Indiana University East auditorium Saturday, June 26. The performance by Don Boyer in my opinion was deplorable. The use of devious diversions and subtlety to prove his argument flopped, and helped to bolster his opponent's claims. I guess the above is the stock in trade used by Christian clergy to befuddle all unwary superstitious people; then they can lead them like sheep to slaughter.

On the other hand, Dennis McKinsey laid out his agenda, put forth his argument and affirmed all his assertions, and won the debate by a land-slide. Yes, the Bible in the hands of Christian zealots is a dangerous tool. By it, more crime has been committed, more people murdered, tortured and tormented than anything else used since the beginning of time. Witness the crusades, the pogroms, the Holocaust; today it's ethnic cleansing, all done in the name of Christianity, which is derived from the mythical book called the Bible. And let us not forget Jonestown and Waco, Texas.

Christianity is one of the greatest scams perpetrated on a nation of people. It has caused people to debase and mutilate themselves through its techniques. As it is written, "the blind leading the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

September 1993

Evidence to substantiate BE's position on a myriad of topics can be found not only in sympathetic literature but that of fundamentalist writers as well. In 1990 Bethany House Publishers, a conservative Christian organization based in Minneapolis, Minnesota published a voluminous text of 500 pages, entitled Today's Handbook for Solving Bible Difficulties by David E. O'Brien. The author received his M. Div. from Bethel Theological Seminary, his M.A. in OT from Wheaton Graduate School, and a B.A. in history. In addition, he has taught Bible College classes on the OT and seminar workshops on hermeneutics, and was a Consulting Editor of Today's Bible Dictionary and Today's Handbook of Bible Times and Customs. Although he says on page 217, "I believe in an infallible Bible," and his text is unabashedly apologetic in tone, many comments are worthy of note. In regard to translations of the Bible he says on page 45, "If the question is, do our present versions of the Bible contain mistakes, I'm afraid the answer is yes. When it comes to numbers, the ancient texts have suffered a great deal.... I could list numerous places where numbers have gotten changed, omitted, enlarged, or shrunk.... There are numerous places where the precise reading of a particular text is uncertain. That's particularly true when it comes to numbers." Another revealing comment on translating is found on page 114 where O'Brien says, "Translation is an incredibly complicated process. That beloved phrase of some preachers, 'If you could only read it in the original language....' contains a kernel of truth. (Most of us preachers can't actually read it in the original language, either, but we like our congregations to think we can!)." And still another translating confession is found on page 281 where he says in regard to the free will versus determinism problem, "Using one of the basic rules of interpretation, the clearest, simplest reading of Romans 9 is that God predestines and those who are predestined play no active part in the Divine decree. As a lifelong Arminian (one who stresses man's free will as opposed to Calvinistic predestination--Ed.), it grieves me to admit this, but that's the simplest reading of the text. Read in this way, Paul is presenting a picture of the sovereign God of the universe making such decisions as please Him, for reasons that only He can know or understand, and carrying out those decisions without the consent, cooperation, or resistance of the people involved." And that's the same good and just God we are supposed to love and adore.

When asked why the sexually salacious book entitled The Song of Solomon is in the Bible, O'Brien said on pages 146-48, "...the rabbis looked beneath the surface of the literal text and discovered a powerful and uplifting allegory.... This was a spiritual song about the love of God for His people Israel.... (For the early fathers of the church--Ed.)...it became an allegory of the love of Christ for His church. Both of these (are--Ed.) efforts to slide out from under the burden of a book that no one was willing to accept as literal.... There is absolutely no evidence the Song of Songs is an allegory.... By allegorizing our interpretation, we can make anything say anything.... And there's the rub. Such a text, when subjected to the imaginations of allegorizing interpreters, can indeed taste after each man's liking. There is no truth if our understanding is as subjective as that. The form of the text must shape the interpretation of the text, or there is no control outside the interpreter for what the text might be made to say." On the next page he pins down his friends even further by saying, "It means that we're not free to take a NT idea back to the Old and reinterpret the OT to teach the NT idea." As he says on page 213, "It's a mistake to sink footings and build a skyscraper on the swamp of speculation." If only more apologists were as frank!

In answer to someone who asked what was Paul's thorn in the flesh (2 Cor. 12:7-9), he says on page 64, "Because Paul never actually described the thorn in the flesh, any attempt to identify it must rely on a lot of deduction and will never establish its identity with certainty."

In answer to Christians who try to excuse Noah's drunkenness by saying it was the innocent result of drinking what he thought was wholesome grape juice, O'Brien says on page 185, "It does Scripture no honor to invent ways to make offensive events palatable to us when Scripture itself records them and makes no effort to sanitize them."

On page 365 O'Brien is asked: If the Bible teaches that drinking is a sin, why did Jesus turn water into wine (John 2:1-11), and why did Paul tell Timothy to drink wine for his stomach (1 Timothy 5:23)? His answer represents a marked departure from the common apologetic rationalizations one can expect to hear in response to this inquiry. He states, "I've read all the arguments about unfermented grape juice and how fermentation doesn't take place naturally in the climate of Palestine, and I have to tell you--they're based more on wishful thinking than on linguistic study or scientific understanding. Jesus turned the water into real wine. I know this makes some believers nervous. I know it makes some hostile. 'How can I counsel alcoholics not to drink if you're telling them drinking isn't a sin?' they ask. I wish the Bible did teach that drinking is a sin, but it doesn't. It contains numerous warnings against the abuse of alcohol, but nowhere does it say it's a sin. And we are not free to make the Bible say what it doesn't say just to make our decisions easier. For me there is a profound principle at work here." And on the next page he relates Principle Number 37 which is: 'Don't bend and twist the meaning of the biblical text to avoid an unpleasant conclusion.' Too bad few apologists follow his advice. On page 366 he states, "the Bible does not say that drinking of alcohol is a sin.... Did the overseer at the banquet think mere grape juice would dull the wedding guests' taste buds? Did Paul warn against overindulgence in grape juice (Eph. 5:18)? Did Noah drink too much grape juice (Gen. 9:21)? Is grape juice a mocker (Prov. 20:1)? Did Jeremiah liken himself to a man overtaken by grape juice (Jer. 23:9)?"

In regard to famous OT biblical figures O'Brien makes the following candid statement on page 233, "When we read the Bible, we assume that all the great people of Scripture would make wonderful deacons or elders in our American church. But in fact, there's hardly a person in the OT who would even be allowed to join most of our churches without some major modifications in behavior." Later on page 260 he says, "Keep in mind the fact that very few of God's chosen instruments were without fault, or even serious sin. Moses was a murderer. David was an adulterer and a murderer. Jacob was a con-man and Abraham was a liar. Jonah was a racist who rebelled at the idea that God would forgive the Assyrians. And what about Peter's impulsiveness and the contentious spirits displayed by James and John?"

In regard to the impossibility of rich people entering the kingdom of heaven as related in Luke 18:23-25, O'Brien said on page 138, "Some teach that Jesus was talking about the small door in the city gate of Jerusalem called the 'needle's eye.' This is a common explanation of Jesus' saying. That's not what he was getting at though.... there's never been any evidence, either textual or archeological, that such a gate ever existed. There were smaller gates, each with its own name. But none of those names was 'the needle's eye'."

So, in summary, it's apparent that we are by no means alone in our critique of biblical comments and defenses. Sometimes even the Bible's staunchest proponents are willing to concede the obvious.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #537 Continues from Last Month (Part e)

While commenting on 1 Cor. 15:14 you ask "Why should [Jesus'] Resurrection be of such significance?" and "Why, then, attribute so much importance to the Resurrection?" ...as if the Bible didn't say why! And yet Paul is quite clear: only three verses later he says that the reason why Jesus' resurrection is vital to Christianity is that if it did not take place Christians are still in their sins (1 Cor. 15:17). This seems to me an eminent reason for considering the Resurrection a vital doctrine for Christianity--whose central message is that sinners can have their sins forgiven. This is Paul's answer to your question. Now you may believe or disbelieve what Paul says, but you have no right in suggesting that in the Bible the Resurrection is given so much importance without a reason, and that therefore Paul's statement is fallacious. Your argument is not only invalid: it is misleading for a reader of Biblical Errancy not acquainted with the Bible (like BY of Seminole, Florida, who trusts your Periodical when he/she quotes the Bible--BE #122).

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part e)

Some how or other, GM, you don't seem to understand the problem. Despite having been stated many times in different ways, it has apparently eluded your grasp. So let me reiterate the dilemma in no uncertain terms. You say Jesus was resurrected. I say, SO WHAT, BIG DEAL. Why make a big case out of an accomplishment that was performed by many in earlier biblical accounts? So he rose from the dead! From a biblical perspective that hardly merits an applause, much less a standing ovation. You still haven't shown how this was an achievement exceeded by none. And if it wasn't truly unique, why should the validity of Christianity or the fate of millions rest on its occurrence? My argument is neither invalid nor misleading. Quite the contrary, BY is well within the bounds of wisdom and propriety to rely on our analysis.

Letter #537 Continues (Part f)

At this point I fail to see how Paul's statement in 1 Cor. 15 can be proved at all to be an error or a contradiction or a fallacy. What proofs can you offer that would deny the truth of Paul's statement that if the resurrection did not take place Christians are still in their sins and that their faith is vain?

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part f)

You are trying to shift the burden of proof, my friend. I am asking you to demonstrate why he would attribute so much importance to a relatively innocuous event. Biblically speaking, rising from the dead was nothing to shout about. You ask me to provide proofs that would deny the truth of Paul's statement that if the resurrection did not take place Christians are still in their sins and their faith is vain, when that isn't the dilemma at all. You keep hitting a strawman. I agree, that is what Paul said. I'm asking you to show why that event is a turning point in history and should merit the importance Paul attributes to it. The burden of proof lies on you.

Letter #537 Continues (Part g)

To this please don't answer that the burden of proof is for Christians, for 1 Cor. 15:14 and 17 are statements, just like "Jesus died for our sins", "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth", or even "God does not exist" that CANNOT be proved or disproved, but only believed or disbelieved.

Your Periodical's stated aim, on the other hand, is to focus "on Biblical ERRORS, CONTRADICTIONS, and FALLACIES". If you don't find proofs for your opinion that 1 Cor. 14:14 is an error or a fallacy or a contradiction, please remove that entire paragraph from your Sample Periodical. As an alternative I suggest that you either change the aim of your Periodical, or that you include in it all biblical statements that imply God exists, and claim that they are all fallacies until a Christian proves them.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part g)

Biblical Errancy focuses on ANY AND ALL PROBLEMS having to do with the validity of the Bible, which would include errors, contradictions, and fallacies. We are by no means narrowly focused on contradictions alone as some people erroneously believe. In this particular instance, we ask how the Bible can be a book of logic and reason as its adherents proclaim, when it attributes unique importance to an event performed by one individual that had been performed by many others years earlier. In effect, we are dealing with a fallacy, namely, the assertion that the Bible is consistent. It attributes importance to one resurrection while denying equal importance to other resurrections performed previously. The statement to which you refer regarding God creating the heavens and the earth is not analogous because it is a mere assertion based upon nothing other than faith. The comment regarding Jesus dying for our sins is analogous and was covered in prior issues, because it is contradicted by other biblical comments demonstrating the opposite. While on the cross Jesus certainly did not exhibit behavior that would lead one to believe he was willingly dying for our sins.

The essence of your argument, which you feel compelled to repeat in different ways, appears to be that our subcaption should read: The only national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, fallacies, and problems in general.... We have always looked upon the word "fallacies" as a general term encompassing just about everything not included in errors and contradictions and that would include problems in general. You, on the other hand, are trying to restrict it to a rather narrow definition. If that were to be allowed, in effect, we would be conceding the validity of your contentions until we disproved their reliability. As we have said so often, THE BURDEN OF PROOF LIES ON HE WHO ALLEGES. That means, for example, that you are obligated to prove the resurrection of Jesus is of greater importance than that of others. We aren't obligated to accept it just because Paul says it was. Quite the contrary, we can and should reject it until you can prove he was right.

You say 1 Cor. 15:14 and 17 are statements, just like 'In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth' that CANNOT be proved or disproved, but only believed or disbelieved. But you don't seem to realize that these statements are fallacious until proven to be true. When will you religionists ever learn that "belief", "faith", and assertions by people you hold in high esteem are NOT proof, and are not to be accepted as such; they never have been and they never will be. And until these statements are proven to be true, they will remain under the heading of fallacies. There is no reason to alter our subcaption as you so desire. Just because Paul said it, doesn't make it so any more than an African witch doctor should be believed on his authority alone.

You say that the statement "God does not exist" CANNOT be proved or disproved, but only be believed or disbelieved. False again! You and your compatriots are the ones who keep bringing up the subject of God, so it is up to you to demonstrate the existence of this being. And until you are able to do so, the statement "God Exists" is false. You should have read all the prior issues of BE before sending your letter, GM, because this subject has been covered several times before. As I have said so often before, if your premise were true, then every crackpot theory imaginable would be valid until proven to be false. How would I prove, for example, that beings do not live within the planet Jupiter as some would allege? According to you, "faith" or "belief" in their existence or an assertion to that effect by someone you hold in high regard would mean they, in fact, do live there until I prove the contrary. Your thought processes would open the world to a Pandora's box of wild delusions. Is it any wonder that the word "religion" is little more than a euphemism for "superstition"? (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #550 from KB of Los Angeles, California (Part a)

Dennis McKinsey.

Issue #127 arrived yesterday, July 13. All sorts of congratulations for having stuck it out for these past ten and a half years, which is about as long as Atheists United has been around, since the middle of 1982.... I suggest that now is the time to catch up on that promise made to your readers some time ago and devote at least one issue of BE a year to publishing letters, and only letters, with your responses. Indeed, I suggest, as an often respondent to BE, as though I had no motive at all in getting my deathless prose into print, that you now devote the next and how many after that issues to getting those letters that have swollen your files to running over onto the floor, and give your readers that expected and well deserved feed-back of their contributions to freethought.

Editor's Response to Letter #550

Dear KB.

Thanks for your congratulations, but we have always had a policy of devoting an entire issue to letters from our readers. That has been in effect for many years, was continued last month, and will be even more prominent in months to come. You probably just forgot.

Letter #550 Concludes (Part b)

I am relieved that the extended response to the worthless diatribe of "JM" is finally over. As I have said in the past, you should give up addressing the likes of JM directly, but use their material as examples of "inerrancy thinking" and give indirect quotes and respond to them succinctly. Avoid direct address, keep to the issues regardless of how stupid a person reveals himself to be. Telling a person that his response is stupid only takes up valuable BE space! As I say, give your readers who have written you the exposure they deserve, or don't. Fill BE pages with BE readers!

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #550 (Part b)

Although your long support of BE is most welcome, KB, we have a significant difference in strategy and tactics. A major aspect of this periodical has always been dialogue and debate with the opposition. Indeed, that goes to the very heart of this publication. In the subcaption itself is the phrase "while providing a hearing for apologists." The whole idea is to debate and expose the opposition on their own territory in their own subject. If you expect to debate somebody without quoting him verbatim, what do you think his response is going to be? If you leave out parts of his extensive argument, what do you think his response is going to be? If you talk about what strikes your fancy rather than what interests him or turns him on, what do you think your effect is going to be? If you give up "addressing the likes of JM directly," how are you going to conduct a forceful, direct, poignant, effective, devastating assault indirectly? I've never seen two people box indirectly, nor have I ever seen two football teams slam one another indirectly. With all due respect, we aren't involved in a game of cricket or horseshoes. We are playing for big stakes in a subject that is of great importance to millions of people and of even greater significance than economics or politics to others. Make no mistake about it. We are engaged in serious business! You have to deal with people where they are, not where you would like them to be. And you have to talk with them on subjects that are of greatest interest to them, not what is of greatest interest to you or tickles your funnybone. The philosophy you are expressing has accounted for more freethought group and individual failures than any other factor that comes to mind. The most obvious result of this theory is that many groups of our persuasion end up having the same people say the same things to the same people, and preaching to the choir is certainly not the way to go. In fact, that is precisely what should be placed near the bottom of the agenda. But, unfortunately, that is often of highest priority. From your perspective the response of JM is a "worthless diatribe," but from his viewpoint it is anything but. In fact, he provided several rationalizations that are typical of the very stock and trade of biblicists' arguments and he probably extracted a few from their writings. By confronting him on his own book, I not only corrected his errors but provided reasons for all others who may be so inclined to pause and reconsider the error of their ways.

In addition, you say I should give my readers the exposure they deserve or don't and fill BE pages with BE readers. What does this mean? Are you saying I should only insert letters that are sympathetic to my philosophy? What do you think would be the response of biblicists who read this newsletter based upon groundrules of that nature? Besides turning part of our subcaption into a prevarication, BE would become little more than a one-sided propaganda organ not unlike those of its opponents. If it means I should insert letters from the opposition, then how should I insert them? Should they be quoted word-for-word, paragraph by paragraph, page by page, or should things be omitted? And who makes the latter decision? Even more important, what do you think my opponent is going to say when I start deleting comments? I can hear the yells now. "You left out my strongest arguments or you omitted the key words. Your presentation is both slanted and biased." We have scrupulously avoided vulnerability of this nature since day one. Remember when I said in my speech (See: Issues 58-60) that before you fire something over you had better know what lies in the other side's arsenal. If you don't consider their arguments ahead of time, then you are headed for misery, if not catastrophe.

When you say that I should "give up addressing the likes of JM directly...give indirect quotes and respond to them succinctly. Avoid direct address...." you are propounding a philosophy that is not only far from this publication, but could only result in its demise were it to be implemented. BE is a forum of debate and discussion, not a one-sided propaganda agency. I hope you take my response in the spirit intended, but you struck a chord by expressing an ideology that is all too common among many freethinkers.

Not long ago a subscriber told me that a prominent representative of a freethought publication objected to my critique of the Bible because it was deemed to be too negative. My critic expressed the belief that attacking the Bible only alienated Christians by creating ill-will and hatred. This person felt that if you don't criticize the Bible, people will be more open to what you have to say and less repelled by your arguments. Unfortunately this philosophy expresses the sentiments of too many people in the freethought movement and is exactly what you don't want to do. The person so inclined couldn't be further from the truth if he or she tried. Christians have been indoctrinated with a mass of beliefs that are the very antithesis of what freethought represents, and any delusion that the two can somehow be melded into a harmonious relationship in the same individual is absurd. One must sound the death-knell over the other. They are utterly incompatible, and people are not going to be oozed into freethought by some sort of mass mollification, masked under the heading of universal brotherhood, common values, and mutual tolerance. That's a pipe dream. Telling them what they want to hear in order to get them to listen won't carry the day. Telling them that which is not too far from what they have been hearing all along isn't going to get the job done. As I have said so often, why would they come to hear our position when they are already convinced they have truth and we have error? And how are they going to know they are living under multiple delusions, if the numerous delusions under which they operate are not brought to their attention. Who is going to perform that role? That's certainly not what ministers, priests, and rabbis are paid to do. If you think the latter are going to provide a balanced presentation, forget it. BEFORE PEOPLE ARE GOING TO LISTEN TO US THEY MUST FIRST BE SHOWN THE ERROR OF THEIR WAYS, and that's why I teach a kind of Sunday-School-In-Reverse. That's why I tell them all the things they should have heard in Sunday School but didn't. That's why I return to the fundamentals upon which they are operating and viewing the world and begin anew. Any other program is doomed to failure from the outset because it is not materially altering or affecting the basic concepts upon which all decisions are premised. That's why churches know it is so important to indoctrinate and "brainwash" the very young. Before constructing a new building in a city, what is the first thing you have to do? You have to destroy. You have to destroy either the structure that is already in place or you have to bring in a bull-dozer or other earth-moving equipment to destroy the vegetation and ground configuration that already exists on the plot of land to be used. One way or the other, destruction must precede construction. They are inseparable, and the same is no less true of philosophies and ideologies. Before you can start people thinking differently, you must first destroy the way they are thinking.

Of course, all of the above is said in a spirit of camaraderie, and I hope it will be taken as such.

Letter #551 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California

Dear Dennis.

It's a great pleasure to renew my subscription again. I have been a dedicated BE fan every since I began to read it. Over the past couple of years, I have put the material to good use, too. Some of the Biblicists I've met may never be the same. I dialogue with Biblicists, hear them out, and discuss what I have learned through BE. Many are surprised to see that their arguments collapse so quickly. Some counter with sophisticated apologetic arguments; yet these are easily and effectively refuted with information from BE. BE is effective. It causes Biblicists to re-think age-old beliefs, and would-be Biblicists to reject them altogether. Judging by your letters, many are as dedicated to spreading BE as I am.

I am excited about the latest product from BE -- audio tapes! I have received taped sermons from Christians, but I never had anything to send back. Thanks to BE, that situation will be remedied! I was wondering if you had BE on a wordprocessor, and if you had considered placing an IBM disk version on the market like the Skeptical Review does. I would love to have the information on my computer. With the information on computer, I could arrange it by subject, Bible verse, etc. It would help me considerably in composing speeches, rebuttals to letters, etc. Furthermore, have you considered putting BE on a computer bulletin board?

Editor's Response to Letter #551

I'm glad to see that you, too, are using BE in the manner intended, RS. Keep up the good work. As far as computer bulletin boards and putting everything on a wordprocessor are concerned, I just don't have the time. Please believe me when I say I have too many balls in the air now. You are by no means the only one to make these suggestions.

ARCHER'S ENCYCLOPEDIA--(Part 1) One of the most well known and comprehensive biblical defenses written in recent years is entitled Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties by Gleason Archer, professor of OT and Semitic Studies at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Illinois. Because the book is one of the most prominent apologetic works available, a study of some of that which is contained therein is appropriate in order to minimize its negative effects on unwary minds. Archer clearly believes he has generated a volume of immense importance because he states on page 11, "I candidly believe I have been confronted with just about all the biblical difficulties under discussion in theological circles today--especially those pertaining to the interpretation and defense of Scripture." If that comment is true, then theological circles are dramatically restricted in their coverage because the amount of substantive material omitted from his work would fill volumes. In any event, so many statements and biblical defenses by Archer are fraught with flaws that several issues of this publication will have reviews devoted to exposing some of their inadequacies. Among those worthy of mention are the following.

On page 25 Archer states, "As we have already seen, Christ accepted as literally true (1) the historicity of Adam, (2) the rescue of Noah and his family by the ark, (3) the literal accuracy of Moses' interview with God at the burning bush, (4) the feeding of Moses' congregation by manna from heaven, (5) the historicity of Jonah's deliverance, and (6) the repentance of the pagan population of Nineveh in response to Jonah's preaching. Nothing could be clearer than that our divine Savior believed in the literal truthfulness of the entire OT record, whether those accounts dealt with doctrinal matters, matters of science, or history." Archer was on firm footing until the last sentence. Just because Jesus believed in the 6 events listed does not mean he believed in thousands of other biblical events that are to be found from Genesis to Malachi. He made a grandiose leap in logic that is wholly unsupportable by Scripture.

On page 86 Archer is asked, "In Genesis 9:24-28, why did Noah curse his youngest son and say that Canaan should be a slave? Was this the beginning of slavery? Was slavery all right in the sight of God?" After explaining why Noah cursed Ham and minimizing the impact of same, Archer correctly stated that, "As to the moral status of slavery in ancient times, it must be recognized that it was practiced by every ancient people of which we have any historical record: Egyptians, Sumerians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Phoenicians, Syrians, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Greeks, Romans, and all the rest. Slavery was as integral a part of ancient culture as commerce, taxation, or temple service." But then he said, "Not until the more exalted concept of man and his innate dignity as a person created in the image of God had permeated the world as a product of Bible teaching did a strong sentiment arise in Christendom in criticism of slavery and a questioning of its right to exist." Few comments are more at variance with reality. Slavery was abolished despite the Bible and Christianity, not because of them. Indeed, both the Old and New Testaments are strong proponents of slavery as several prior issues of BE clearly showed. Numerous verses in each regulate, direct, and condone the administration of slavery while none advocate its abolition. Support for slavery is all too obvious. In defense of the biblical stance on slavery Archer states, "Hebrew slaves were required under Mosaic law to be set free after six years of service; they could not be made to serve out their entire lives as slaves unless they willingly chose to remain so, out of love for their masters" (Ex. 21:2-7). What Archer neglects to mention is that these verses in no way advocate the abolishment of slavery. They merely regulate its operation and administration. Restriction does not equal abolition. And second, liberation after 6 years only applies to Hebrew slaves, their blood brothers, which were undoubtedly a small fraction of all the slaves they possessed.

Archer concludes by saying, "Yet there was inherent in the biblical concept of man as a person fashioned in the image of God and a candidate for heaven...a dynamic principle that undermined slavery." This diverges markedly from reality because slaves by definition are owned by others. Slaves were not viewed as human beings but as property. In effect, one biblical mandate overrules another. One says people are created in the image of God, while another says slaves are not people because they are property. If they aren't people, there is no need for them to be treated as such or for them to be considered creatures created in the image of God. If A is owned by B, B will never look upon A as his equal or a person, and the Bible wholly supports this conclusion. The Bible can never be a force for the liberation of mankind until, among other things, it denounces slavery and deems former slaves to be on a par with all other human beings, all of which would necessitate a revision of Scripture.

On page 96 Archer is asked how God could condemn human sacrifice in Leviticus 18 and 20 and yet command it in Genesis 22, or at least accept it in Judges 11? Archer states, "It is a mistake to interpret Genesis 22:2 as a command by God for Abraham to sacrifice his son Isaac on the altar. On the contrary, God actually (through his angel at least) restrained Abraham's hand just as he was about to plunge the knife into his son's body...." Archer's answer is little more than a deceptive shift in focus. True, Abraham's hand was restrained and the execution did not occur. But that was not the question. The question was how God could have given the order to begin with. He ordered a man to engage in human sacrifice and the man fully intended to comply with his wishes. Just because God stopped him at the last moment does not excuse or justify the original order. The question is how the original order could have been given by a "just" God, a god who condemned human sacrifice in Leviticus 18 and 20. Archer concludes by saying, "It is logically indefensible to assume that God would expect or condone infant sacrifice on the part of Abraham or Jephthah, or any other of his servants, after such a stern prohibition of it in the Mosaic law." No, it is not logically indefensible. It's quite possible as long as one has not been indoctrinated to believe that biblical contradictions are an impossibility. In Judges 11:30-31 Jephthah vowed to the Lord that if the latter would allow him to defeat the Ammonites he would sacrifice to the Lord as a burnt offering whatever came out of his house to greet him upon his return from victory. The 34th verse shows that his only child, his daughter, came out to meet him as he returned victorious and the 39th verse says he "did with her according to his vow which he had vowed." The Lord did not restrain this man's hand, so it is not illogical to assume God would expect or condone infant sacrifice, and there is little to be gained by only focusing only upon the Lord's prevention of that which was fully contemplated by Abraham.

On top of everything else, Archer ignores verses even more potent than that found in God's order to Abraham such as Exodus 22:29-30 which says, "Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy liquors: the firstborn of thy sons shalt thou give unto me. Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep...." And we all know what happened to oxen and sheep on a regular basis in the OT. So, for Archer to say that it is "logically indefensible" to assume God would order human sacrifice is ridiculous. (To Be Continued)

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #537 Continues from Last Month (Part h)

Regarding the FLOOD. Just some observations on your paragraph. Question (c) How would a flood destroy all sea animals?

Answer: It wouldn't! Why don't you read carefully what the Bible says? You have underlined almost every word in the verses you quote, except those words that answer your question! So I will take again the same verses you quoted and I will underline the words that answer the question:

"And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein [is] the breath of life, from under heaven; [and] every thing that [is] in the earth shall die." (Genesis 6:17)

"For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth." (Genesis 7:4)

I trust you are familiar with the fact that the Bible distinguishes between earth and sea (Ex. 20:11).

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part h)

You are exhibiting the kind of reasoning that has caused biblical scholarship to be held in such low esteem by so many people for so many centuries, my friend. You cite Gen. 6:17 which says, "I will cause it to rain upon the earth." According to your restriction of the word "earth" to the land mass only, it did not rain on the oceans. How utterly preposterous! You mean there was a wall of water beginning at the ocean's edge that covered land only and was held back somehow? Or do you mean that it rained only on the land portion of the globe and the water then flowed over the seas? In either case, I believe you have reached the outer limits on this one. If TV's The Twilight Zone is ever revived, you would do well to apply for a position as a script writer. I'm surprised you didn't say that when Gen. 6:17 says everything that is in the earth shall die, it was only referring to worms, moles and other underground creatures. The sky is the limit when your imagination runs wild. According to you, then, when Gen. 1:17 says, "And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly...fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of the heaven" fowl fly above land only, and when Gen. 2:1 says, "the heavens and the earth were finished..." the seas were not finished. When Abraham says in Gen. 14:22, "I have lift my hand to the Lord, the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth," God did not possess the seas? And when Gen. 18:25 says, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right," God is not the judge of the seas? Anyone unwilling to concede that the word "earth" refers to the entire planet, not just the land portion, has entered a troublesome swamp, indeed. As is so often true, when biblicists try to reconcile one aspect of the Bible with another, they often wreck havoc upon a third.

Letter #537 Continues (Part i)

Question (d) How did animals that are restricted to certain parts of the earth get to the Ark? They would have had to have crossed vast oceans (plus other similar questions).

Answer: You are assuming that before the Flood geography was similar to what we see today. This idea does NOT come from the Bible, but from some other source. In fact the Bible teaches that the world was destroyed by the Flood (Gen. 6:13, 2 Peter 3:6), and that therefore we have no way of knowing how it was like. There is nothing absurd in the idea, for example, that animals were distributed evenly before the Flood. What is relevant here is that if you stick to the biblical text there is nothing contradictory in the story. Actually, in the beginning of your discussion on the Flood you promised you would do just that--forget the scientific issues, and stick to the Bible. However what you did forget, it seems to me, was your own promise.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part i)

How could animals be distributed evenly, GM? You have completely ignored the climatic factor. How could animals that can only live in the tropics live alongside animals that can only live in the arctic? And how could the specialized vegetation upon which many depend be interspersed as well? Bamboo and eucalyptus, for example, the only food for some animals, would last no time at all in another climate. You might as well have said the climates were evenly distributed. Secondly, as I have said so often, BE does not deal only with biblical contradictions. Its scope is much broader and focuses on any and all problems having to do with the validity of the Bible. So your comment that "if you stick to the biblical text there is nothing contradictory in the story" is quite irrelevant, because I never said that internal biblical contradictions were involved. In fact, I specifically said "BE will concentrate on the great number of difficulties, impossibilities, and unanswered questions accompanying the biblical account." Where is the word "contradiction" even mentioned in the section on the Flood in the Sample Issue? You accuse me of saying something I never said and then proceed to disprove it. Thirdly, you state that at the beginning of my discussion of the Flood I promised to "forget the scientific issues, and stick to the Bible." You then say I forgot my own promise. Unfortunately, you didn't read very carefully. On the front page is clearly written, "BE will not discuss the scientific data used by proponents (of the Bible--Ed.) to support their beliefs." Notice it says the scientific data used by "proponents" would not be used. I didn't say I would not use any scientific considerations whatever. That does not mean, on the other hand, that only the scientific data of opponents would be employed but only that the scientific questions that would be asked by any student of science would be posed. And one need only reread the section to see that that is exactly what occurred.

Letter #537 Continues (Part j)

Secondly, God told Noah that the animals would come to him, and the animals did come. Period. How? From where? When? These are interesting questions, but have nothing to do with errors, fallacies or contradictions in the Bible, although they may be of interest to Christian scientists. You may not know how, when and from where your family migrated to America, but this does not make the story of your family an error or a fallacy or a contradiction.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part j)

For some unknown reason hundreds, if not thousands, of animals from all over the world began simultaneously to march to an ark in the Middle East. You wish to attribute this to an act of God. So be it! But be sure to make this clear to your students. Don't leave them with the impression that this can be explained rationally or by natural forces. Be sure it is confined to the realm of theological mythology and students are made aware of the rational difficulties involved. I'm sure your concern for precision will not let this slip your mind.

Like so many Christian analogies your reference to my ancestors is inapplicable. Thousands, if not millions of Europeans, did not simultaneously march to ships like mindless zombies for no apparent reason. Immigration to America has been occurring for decades and the reasons are generally quite obvious. They nearly always have something to do with economics and higher standards of living. That is hardly comparable to hundreds of animals meandering to an ark as if to a magnet.

Letter #537 Continues (Part k)

When you ask, "How were animals prevented from killing their natural prey?" you again assume something that does not come from the biblical text, namely that carnivorous attitudes were present in the antediluvian world. The Bible says clearly that this was not the case: animals ate grass (Gen. 1:29-30), man himself was allowed to eat flesh only after the Flood (Gen. 9:3), animals began to fear man only after the Flood (Gen. 9:2). This is in perfect harmony with the story that animals and men could live together for a year in the Ark without serious danger for the weak creatures. I see no errors, no contradictions, no logical fallacies in this fact that the animals came to Noah, or that they stayed together: do you? If you don't, I suggest you remove these two arguments too from your Sample Issue.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part k)

You sure want to rewrite my sample issue, GM. Do I see any errors, contradictions, or fallacies? Of course! Error lies in the fact that you are claiming there were no carnivorous animals on the earth before the Flood. No cats, no dogs, no sharks, no seals, no frogs, no spiders in other words no flesh-eaters, and that would include snakes. But wasn't the serpent in Gen. 3:1-14 a kind of snake? Wasn't he a meat eater? Tyrannasaurus Rex and many other carnivorous dinosaurs and prehistoric creatures must be figments of folklore according to you. If you insist on ruling out any carnivorous activity prior to, and during, the Flood, then just make sure these difficulties are brought home to your students who will probably find your rationalization hard to swallow. Secondly, if the world was idyllic prior to the Flood, then how can Gen. 4:4 say, "and Abel brought the fatty cuts of meat from his best lambs, and presented them to the Lord." A period in which animals were slaughtered certainly doesn't sound heavenly, especially from the perspective of the animals involved. That's an idyllic world in which carnivorous attitudes weren't present? It's also important to note that according to Gen. 4:4-5 ("And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering; But unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect") Abel's offering of sacrificed animals was preferred by God over Cain's offering of the fruit of the ground. Thirdly, animals sacrificed to God were normally eaten in order to complete the sacrifice. Isn't that carnivorous activity? Or are you saying and substantiating biblically that nothing slaughtered and sacrificed prior to the Flood was eaten? And lastly, in light of the fact that Cain slew Abel, conditions prior to the Flood couldn't have been as heavenly for the human animal as you would have us believe either. Incidentally, according to your mythology, all carnivorous plants, such as the Pitcher Plant, the drosera (sundew), and the Venus Fly-trap, had to have been nonexistent prior to the Flood as well.

Letter #537 Continues (Part 1)

...In the end of Question (e) you write: "These are only a few of the problems associated with the Flood that believers must address" (emphasis mine). Three observations are in order:

1. That in the Bible there are interesting problems no believer doubts. No honest believer has ever claimed that he has all answers to all questions. Neither has the astronomer or the biologist or the archeologist or the linguist. However none of the latter decides to give up with his profession only for the reason that there are open questions: on the contrary, open questions are what make their job exciting. A theory is abandoned not because there are open questions, but if it is proved to be wrong.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part 1)

Don't try to soft-pedal your dilemma, GM. The problems under discussion are not just "open questions." They are blatant problems that either contradict other parts of scripture and/or directly conflict with science and/or logic. Again you have submitted another invalid analogy. The scientists you listed are not defending data that counteracts logic, other valid data, or their own pronouncements. If there is any group that deals with open questions, it is the scientific community, while you and your compatriots deal with open conflicts and impossibilities.

Letter #537 Continues (Part m)

This leads me to my second point. Your periodical's stated aim is precisely to present "biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies." That is, you willingly take the burden to offer proofs that the Bible contains such things. I don't see then why you waste the reader's time in listing questions about the Flood that are not errors nor logical fallacies nor textual contradictions. Therefore I suggest that you remove all these useless sentences about the Flood from your Sample Issue.

Editor's Response to Letter #537 (Part m)

The time of readers is never wasted when they are being exposed to the Bible's inadequacies. I know you would like for these questions to be kept under wraps but I'm unwilling to oblige. Contrary to your assertion, the questions submitted fall within the category of biblical fallacies and errors and will not be removed from the Sample Issue. There is no obligation on our part to remain entirely within the Bible nor did we ever state we intended to do so. Where did you get the impression from the subcaption of this periodical that we will remain totally confined to the Bible alone. BE addresses any and all problems bearing on the Bible's validity and that could very well entail the incorporation of extrabiblical material or considerations. Scientific data and logical difficulties are certainly not going to be ignored. Based upon your misreading of our subcaption, you would have people believe that unless something in the Bible contradicts another part of the Bible it is out-of-bounds and can not be included within BE. Wrong! As we have said so often, BE deals with any and all problems bearing on the Bible's validity and that may or may not entail concentration on the Bible alone. If your interpretation of our subcaption were valid, we could never have presented much of that which can be found in our issues on biblical history, historicity, geography, math, science, differing versions, etc.

Letter #537 Concludes (Part n)

Please note that I am not suggesting that you remove arguments that I am afraid to address: I have addressed, though shortly, some of them, I am more than willing to discuss at length the problems you raise--but not in a context of biblical errancy, for the simple reason thatÿÿ these are problems, not fallacies.

Nor am I suggesting that you remove everything from your Sample Issue: some questions you ask in the paragraph "Contradictions" do qualify as possible or apparent fallacies; but for honesty's sake please remove all the things that are not what your Periodical claims to be about, and are thus irrelevant, as well as all alleged biblical fallacies that are shown by readers not to be fallacies at all. When you have done that, then we can start talking about what is left.

If you decide to remove fallacious arguments from your Sample Issue, the latter will surely appear less impressive. However, I trust you do not intend to dazzle the unaware and unlearned reader using a mass of arguments that have been already answered and that you know are fallacious or irrelevant.

I am looking forward to receiving your answer and I hope we can start a fruitful dialogue. Please forgive me for the mistakes I have surely made. English is not my mother language. Thank you for your kind attention.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #537 (Part n)

You say you won't discuss them within the context of BE because they are problems, not fallacies. As I have already stated, BE deals with any and all problems having to do with the Bible's validity and those are incorporated into what I refer to as fallacies. Perhaps I should use the word "problems" instead of "fallacies" in the subcaption or use both simultaneously in order to make our position clearer. But I don't think so. People know what is intended, and to refer to fallacies as mere problems would be to concede the very point in dispute. In effect, I'd be accepting your position that they are mere problems and will remain as such until proven to be fallacies, when they are fallacies and will remain such until proven to be mere problems. Again, as I have said so often, the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. You are obligated to prove that the events occurred as you and your book allege, while scientists are obligated to prove that they occur as the scientific community believes. And where do you think the vast preponderance of the evidence lies. You won't find very many scientific creationist laboratories complete with fossils, artifacts, and other physical remains. Instead you will find a body of pseudo-scientists trying to prove their theory is true by casting doubts on contentions of the other side. They fail to realize that even if they could thoroughly disprove the theory of evolution, that would by no means prove their theory was correct. Disproving another theory does not prove yours is automatically true, not by a long ways. Creationists must not only disprove the other side but substantiate their own assertions by something other than words in a mythological and superstitious book and, unfortunately for them, they are unable to do either. Because you have misread, misunderstood, and misinterpreted what our "Periodical claims to be about," your "irrelevant" argument is without standing. I'd be glad to remove "all alleged biblical fallacies that are shown by readers not to be fallacies at all" as soon as you provide some good examples, and what "fallacious arguments" are you referring to that have already been answered and you feel should be removed?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #552 from JA of Cambridge, Mass.

To Whom It May Concern: I learned about your magazine in a small leaflet. "The Bible is God's Word?" which I picked up this morning on the Boston subway system. I was very excited to hear of your magazine as I have been thinking about the subject of biblical inconsistency for some time and wondering where I can learn more about it. Please send a copy of your magazine and subscription information to me.

Letter #553 from JB of Portland, Oregon

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... I would like for my subscription to commence with Issue number 125.... Doctor (name deleted--Ed.) was the first person to suggest that I subscribe to your publication. He recommended you very highly. Then I saw a sample copy at our local Center for Rational Thought and I was convinced that I had to subscribe. I don't know how you do it but I hope you keep it up! I am a retired lawyer who is experienced in the examination of documents and I really appreciate your cutting analyses.

November 1993

ARCHER'S ENCYCLOPEDIA--(Part 2) On page 113 Archer is asked: Why did God slay all the firstborn Egyptians when the Egyptian people had no control over Pharaoh's decision not to allow the Israelites to leave his country which can be found in Ex. 12:29-30? Archer responds by saying, "There is no way for nations to be dealt with other than on a collective basis. The fortunes of the citizens of any country are bound up with the government that guides their national policy, whether that government be a democracy, a party dictatorship, or monarchy...." Archer subtly evades the fact that there was no need for the nation to be dealt with at all. The Egyptian people did not commit the deed and, thus, should not be saddled with any punishment. Rulers may go to war and bring defeat and destruction on their people, but that bears no relation to a nation of people being punished by an omnipotent god for what one leader did. We are talking about the administration of justice, and fundamental to all systems of fair play is that those who do the crime should do the time. A people who are decimated because their leader led them into a disastrous encounter are not being punished by anybody. That is simply the outcome of the decision to go to war. It may have been a wrong decision on the part of the ruler and an even worse decision on the part of his nation to follow in lockstep, but defeat is a far more appropriate term than punishment, especially when national sentiment favored the ruler's decision.

Later on page 114 Archer states, "A loss of life in the family of the king alone--or even in the households of his aristocracy--would scarcely have sufficed to compel Egypt to grant a release of the entire Israelite nation and all its cattle. Nothing short of an all-inclusive calamity visited on the entire people would serve to bring about the deliverance of God's people from the bondage they had suffered in Egypt." In reality, the sequence of events in Exodus strongly imply precisely the opposite is true. It was not until the pharaoh's son was killed that the pharaoh conceded defeat. Evidence strongly indicates that if the lives of the pharaoh's son or other family members had been clearly and unequivocally at stake from the outset all of the plagues and loss of life could have been avoided.

On page 121 Archer is asked one of the most common questions addressed to Christians over the centuries: Why is there so much killing of human beings mentioned in the Bible, along with the frequent references to animal sacrifice on the altar, and how does this square with the divine command "Thou shalt not kill" in Exodus 20:13? Archer begins by saying, "Since the Bible is a book about man in his state of sin, and since there is so much violence and bloodshed in human society, it was inevitable that frequent mention of manslaughter should occur in Scripture." Notice his sly shift to the word "manslaughter" which isn't even at issue. We are talking about killing and murder, not manslaughter, as he well knows. Manslaughter is not the problem by any means. He continues, "But much confusion has arisen from the misleading translation of Exodus 20:13 that occurs in most English versions. The Hebrew original uses a specific word for murder (rasah) in this 6th commandment and should be rendered 'You shall not murder'." If Archer were to consult the section entitled the Hebrew/Chaldee Dictionary in Strong's Exhaustive Concordance he would see the following with reference to the word "kill" in Exodus 20:13: (from--Ed.) "ratsach; a primitive root; properly to dash to pieces, i.e., kill (a human being), especially to murder:--put to death, kill, manslay, murder." Why does he believe the word should be translated as murder? If anything it should be "kill," and there is certainly nothing to justify the allegation that "kill" is a "misleading translation." According to Strong, the Hebrew word means kill in the broadest sense, not in the narrow sense of murder only, and there is no justification in saying that "the 6th commandment should be rendered as 'you shall not murder'." Archer tries to restrict the word's coverage to murder by saying, "This is no prohibition against capital punishment for capital crimes, since it is not a general term for the taking of life, such as our English word 'kill'." Wrong again! Nothing was said about capital punishment. According to Strong the relevant word is a general term and those who translated the word as "kill" were wholly justified in doing so.

If murder is the proper translation of the Hebrew word, then that same Hebrew word creates the following problem in Num. 35:27 in which God says, "(if--Ed.)...the revenger of blood kill the slayer; he shall not be guilty of blood." In this instance, the Hebrew word is translated as "kill," and if it should be translated as murder, then according to Archer God is saying a man who murdered another should be found not guilty of blood. In sum and substance, Archer is saying he knows Hebrew better than committees of experts who translated many of the most prominent versions on the market.

Later Archer makes the incredible statement that, "Violence and bloodshed are occasionally mentioned in the record of man's history throughout Scripture, but never with approval." Is he serious! Violence and bloodshed are rampant throughout the OT and often mentioned with approval, especially in historical books such as Joshua. One need only read the Commentary in Issue #116 to see that God not only killed repeatedly but ordered others to kill as well. Since God was often the instigator, one can safely assume violence and bloodshed met with his approval.

Archer says violence and bloodshed were never met with approval but then says, "Yet, there were specific situations when entire communities (such as Jericho) or entire tribes (such as the Amalekites) were to be exterminated by the Israelites in obedience to God's command." So, violence and bloodshed were carried out with God's approval after all.

Archer proceeds to justify all of this mayhem by saying, "In each case these offenders had gone so far in degeneracy and moral depravity that their continued presence would result in spreading the dreadful cancer of sin among God's covenant people. Just as the wise surgeon removes dangerous cancer from his patient's body by use of the scalpel, so God employed the Israelites to remove such dangerous malignancies from human society." But what had these tribes done that had not been committed by the Israelites as well? The latter constantly violated one or another of God's laws and asked forgiveness either before or after punishment. The Israelite record of violating divine decrees was reprehensible and, thus, they deserved God's vengeance as much as anyone. According to Archer God used a scalpel that was no cleaner than the disease being excised.

Archer concludes by saying the sacrifice of animals symbolized the coming sacrifice of the Son of God on the cross, and he justifies animal sacrifice by quoting one of the most inaccurate comments in the entire NT, Hebrews 9:22, which says, "Without the shedding of blood, there is no remission of sins." Yet, sins were repeatedly forgiven in the OT by methods other than bloody sacrifices. Blood was by no means the only means by which sins could be forgiven. Lev. 5:11-13 states flour can make atonement for the soul. Money can atone for the soul according to Exodus 30:15-16; jewelry can atone for the soul as is apparent from Num. 31:50, and in Num. 14:17-20 and Hosea 14:3 we find that prayer can atone for the soul.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #554 from SF of York, Penn. (Part a)

(A Christian apologist sent a subscriber, SF, the following letter and SF asked us to respond because after several encounters he has become convinced the source is a "hopeless, lost cause case"--Ed.)

Dear SF.... Christianity is, indeed, the most intellectually satisfying world-view there is and although it is not something one can prove the truth of, as you take so much delight in pointing out, this is of absolutely no importance when comparing it to competing world-views inasmuch as no such philosophy of life, whether theistic or atheistic, can be proven.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part a)

Dear SF. Your opponent's intellectual myopia is rather pronounced to say the least. For one to say that Christianity is the most satisfying world-view available borders on the ridiculous. Jews would say that of Judaism; Muslims would say that of Islam; Buddhists would say that of Buddhism; fascists would say that of fascism, libertarians would say that of libertarianism, and communists would say that of Marxism. That statement is almost too ridiculous to merit a reply. And for him or her to say that the inability of Christians to prove the truth of Christianity "is of absolutely no importance" belongs in the realm of the bizarre. If that is true, then every satisfying belief is as credible as all the others. Whether a philosophy is true or demonstrable is no longer of any significance; all that counts is whether or not it is intellectually satisfying, a wholly arbitrary and unreliable criterion.

Unlike our friend, many adherents to other philosophies heatedly contend their beliefs are provable and for him to say that nothing can be proven is merely an opinion that will remain as such until he can show that adherents of competing philosophies are also unable to substantiate their allegations.

Letter #554 Continues (Part b)

The satisfactions of Christianity derive from the fact that it offers answers to all the major questions of life, including the one you ask in your last letter about the meaning of life (a response to which will have to await another time). But even more it offers hope. It holds out the promise that there is, in fact, meaning to life....

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part b)

What kind of response is this? Virtually every philosophy offers answers to all of life's major questions. They are more than glad to comply. That's no problem. The problem is that the answers are either wrong or indemonstrable in far too many instances. And virtually every philosophy offers hope of some kind; that's no problem either. If they didn't, they wouldn't be in demand. Again, the problem is whether or not the hope is well founded and justified. Narcotics, religions, cults, the occult, New Age, and a wide variety of other superstitions and mental escapes offer hope for a better life as well. If they didn't, they wouldn't be around very long.

Yes, it holds out the promise that there is meaning in life, but it doesn't prove real meaning is to be found through acts and beliefs outlined and pursued by Christians. There could very well be real meaning that is not found through Christianity. In all probability it is not a choice between Christianity and no hope whatever, as your opponent alleges, but a choice between another philosophy and all other philosophies, including Christianity.

Letter #554 Continues (Part c)

Atheism, on the other hand, offers nothing but emptiness, hopelessness, meaninglessness, death, and despair....

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part c)

What an inaccurate comment! Atheists and others who don't base their life on belief in a nebulous, unsubstantiated afterlife of sweet bliss have always been in the forefront of those most concerned with the improvement of this world and everything in it. After all it only stands to reason that those most convinced that this world is all there is are going to be among those most concerned with improving the world as we see it. They have been and always will be in leadership of the fight against emptiness, meaninglessness, hopelessness, and despair and have always felt that if man is ever going to abolish these qualities of life, then that will have to materialize here and now, because nothing is going to be bestowed later. This world is all we have and we had better make the most of it. A logical concomitant to this view of life is that conditions will only improve when man rolls up his shirt sleeves and digs in. It isn't going to fall into his lap like a ripe apple from a tree. Who would be more inclined to fight against the deplorable conditions we all see and experience in everyday life than those most convinced that there is no nirvana to follow and no beneficent deity presiding over the welfare of mankind who has taken humanity to raise like a benevolent babysitter in the sky.

Religionists, on the other hand, are victims of precisely the opposite mentality. Firmly believing a better world is coming and conditions are mainly improved by prayer and reliance upon a benign deity, they are far more inclined to write this world off as a loss, abstain from opposition to social injustice, avoid social activism or improvements, and flee rebellion against unfairness. After all they reason, if you only live 80 or 90 years in this world, why be so involved. Don't worry about events; God will provide and heaven is on its way. The degree of involvement in social problems and distribution of financial assistance by religious agencies throughout the planet is in direct proportion to the extent to which the particular group, church, organization or religious instrumentality involved has left fundamentalism in general and the Holy Book (the Bible, Koran, etc.) in particular; while those closest to the religious/superstitious mentality distribute less aid and provide assistance more out of a need to ingratiate people to religious ideas and make the latter more amenable to the message than any real concern for their worldly condition. Most Salvation Army centers, for example, will not provide support until those in need have willingly submitted to an indoctrination session or propaganda barrage. Of course there are exceptions. But one would be ill-advised to latch on to an exception in an attempt to use it to destroy the rule. That is one of the most common tricks in the arsenal of all propagandists. They seize and magnify an exception in order to portray it as the rule. Make no mistake about it, religious aid is a means to an end; it's not an end in itself.

Incidentally, in light of the fact that religious organizations are subject to very little financial accountability, how can we be sure that money donated to organizations associated with "Save the Children," for example, actually reaches the children? What assurances are in place that nearly all of the funds donated reach the destination intended as opposed to enhancing the affluent life style of the "philanthropic" conveyor. After all, if vast sums are siphoned off who would know the difference?

The bottom line is that people work to improve conditions in this world in direct proportion to the extent to which they jettison their interest or concern for the "next" and vice versa. So who offers emptiness, hopelessness, meaninglessness and despair? -One who tells you that the world reeks with injustice and deplorable conditions that can be improved or eliminated through work, involvement, sensitivity, and realistic thinking or one who tells you the world reeks with injustice, deplorable conditions, and corrupt people that can not be improved to any meaningful degree but only escaped, and promises you a better world is coming based upon nothing more than admittedly unprovable faith, hope, and dreams found in a man-created book saturated with contradictions, errors, and fallacies. Personally, my conscience is clear, my deeds are pure, my cause is just, my advice is sound and that is far more than can be said for the biblical God and his proponents who are urging mankind to not only follow in his footsteps but adopt the tenets of "his" book. (To Be Continued)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #555 from VS of Lake Worth, Florida

Dear Dennis. Congratulations on your completing publication of the mass of material you have collected. Although I found out about your publication long after you started, it has helped me immensely in my search for knowledge about the Bible to counteract the seemingly endless stream of "soul-winners" out there.

I took the liberty of putting your name, address, and something about your publication on America OnLine. I wrote a short piece on how to debate Christians and quoted you (with attribution of course). I also mentioned Farrell Till of the Skeptical Review. Till does a bang-up job, in my opinion. You do, too. The piece has been downloaded about 40 times so far and one person sent me e-mail saying he would write to you for more information....

As you note, if nothing else we have to get some sort of message across about the Bible. I know from personal experience, however, that preachers simply tell their flocks that Bible critics (and even scholars) are miserable, disturbed people who want to share their misery with "joyful" Christians by destroying the Bible: claiming it is not the work of God to point out its contradictions, and so on. But, there are rational people out there who seek the information you have provided; I am on the lookout for them and have plenty of your nontracts to hand to them. Just by showing them that life without literal Bible belief can be just as good (and more so) than life in Christianity's intellectual cage, we may accomplish our goal.

Like you, I would like to see an intelligent debate on not only the Bible but also extra-Biblical topics presented on electronic media. I'm glad you're beginning to "broaden [the] focus" in bringing other material to the Bible. Fundamentalists like Robertson and Randall Terry want to drop the Bible, like a bomb, on our society and remake it in its image. We have to do the same. In any case, simple logic can disprove most of the Bible handily. We have to be sure to emphasize that the fact that the book has parts that are true does not make the whole book true. As you have noted in the past, every book has some truth in it. The Christian's insistence that it's either all true or all false are, in my view, indefensible and easily dealt with.

Keep up the good work.... Take care, keep plugging away, and don't lose hope. I look forward to future issues of Biblical Errancy and wish you luck in your future endeavors.

Letter #556 from JG of Altadena, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I was reading Issue #97 (Jan. 1991) and came across this misquote you were citing. It was at the top part of page two. (4) Matt. 11:10 ("For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. Mal. 3:1 ("Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me").

(a) the OT says "thy way before thee." WRONG! The OT says "The way before me."

(b) Jesus created the phrase "before thy face." As an atheist I don't believe the Jesus character ever existed. Jesus never created anything.

....On Issue #125 (May 1993) page 3. THE WARS OF GOD AND MAGOG.
WRONG! THE WARS OF GOG AND MAGOG.

Please be careful in printing up this material. I give these periodicals out to read.

Editor's Response to Letter #556 (Part a)

Dear JG. You are correct on both textual points. It is so easy to make typing errors and accidentally transpose words when you work with as much material as I do. I wish you had caught the first error when it appeared nearly three years ago. (4)(a) should say, "The OT says "the way before me" not "thy way before thee." This mistake should be corrected on all copies in everyone's binders. And THE WARS OF GOD AND MAGOG should be changed to THE WARS OF GOG AND MAGOG in all copies. Try as we may we can't catch them all.

Letter #556 Concludes (Part b)

Nevertheless I really enjoy how you point out these erroneous references made by the NT writers that this and that verse or verses in the OT are a prophetic fulfillment of what they write about. I think the Jesus character is their crowning achievement. There are other references about Moses and other items also. Moses is another fictional character. Why would these NT charlatans refer to Moses without fear of being punished by an all powerful God for falsely using his name; I think it's because they know the OT story about Moses is fiction.

Letter #557 from MC of Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir. A casual acquaintance showed me a copy of your newsletter. I would like to subscribe, and also obtain any back issues that might be available. I have been doing a lot of research in preparation for writing a book.... I started out thinking that the errancy issue had probably been covered exhaustively in the last few centuries, but I began to find some "corkers" on my own that had not been mentioned in any of the other literature I looked at, including various compendiums of errors such as the old Foote's Bible Handbook. My personal preference in error-hunting is to look for specific internal contradictions that require no referencing outside the Bible itself. I also like to compare certain passages in the different English translations; what is hidden or distorted in one is often revealed in another. My pet peeve is skeptics whose only stock in trade is to debunk the Bible's miracle tales. With perhaps a couple of exceptions (like the sundial movements), to point out that an event is highly improbable does not prove absolutely that it (or something similar, or subsequently exaggerated) did not occur. There are plenty of airtight logic boxes (and some serviceable ones, too) with which to confound the fundamentalists' claims; and they have not all been found, I daresay....

Letter #558 from HB of Alexandria, Virginia

Dear Dennis.... Letter #549 in (Issue 128 of August, 1993) states that Abraham has a servant place his hand under Abraham's thigh to take an oath, but this does not refer to his penis. The thigh actually refers to Abraham's testicles or testes, which are the most important part of a man taking a vow because he swears on his progeny. Testes are so important that they are parts of words like testimony, testify, testament, Old Testament, and New Testament. None of my several reference books on the Bible mention this, probably from embarrassment because Christians have always had difficulty dealing with sex.

Your most recent Issue 128 of August, 1993 suggests only general directions for future issues. I would like to suggest several topics. (1) Put the 27 books of the NT in chronological order and then examine them to determine what has been added and removed over time.... (2) Describe how the canon of the Bible developed over time and the conflicts involved. (3) Show the difficulties of determining authors and dates of the 66 books of the Bible, with continuing disagreements. (4) Examine the 613 laws in the OT to determine which are obeyed, disobeyed, or ignored. (5) Examine the treatment of women in the Bible and anti-Semitism in the NT. (6) Compare science in the Bible with what the Greeks knew at the time.... (7) Examine the justifications for slavery and conflicts related to this. (8) Analyze the two dozen errors in procedure and Jewish law in the trial of Jesus. (9) Analyze the Christian claim that democracy is based on the Bible. (10) Examine the relationship of the Dead Sea Scrolls to the Bible. (11) Examine the changes which have been made over time to make the Bible more appealing. For example, Jesus was a Mediterranean Jew with dark skin, hair, and eyes, yet he appears much lighter in our art. (12) Comment on such thinking as Hyam Maccoby's The Mythmaker--Paul and the Invention of Christianity and John Spong's Born of a Woman--a Bishop Rethinks the Birth of Jesus. They turn the Bible upside down and raise numerous questions. (13) Describe the contents of the Apocrypha, how it developed, and why it is important. This is my way of encouraging you to continue your fine work.

Editor's Response to Letter #558

Dear HB. Don't worry; instead of winding down our efforts we have every intention of increasing them. As far as your list of suggested topics is concerned, I would say we have covered to one degree or another virtually everything you suggested except points 1 and 9-13.

Letter #559 from RH of Dayton, Ohio

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Heartiest congratulations on the completion of your catalogue of Biblical errors. This is a superb achievement! I wish you well on your TV efforts; perhaps it will attract the attention of those who get their religion from TV. For those of us who usually avoid TV, and have no cable, it will be inaccessible. That is one reason I'd like to join the "scores of people" who have asked you to write a book. I value my 127 editions of BE highly. I often take down my binders and look at the older issues. But I would guess that there are relatively few like me who have every issue. And ring-bound notebooks of duplications of a computer-printout are not the easiest volumes to read. A one volume, thorough inclusion of your commentaries, organized by subject and indexed would be terrific ammunition for anyone wanting to debate biblicists, and as I am certain that there is no more comprehensive point-by-point refutation of the book, it would become a standard reference book as useful in one hundred years as it is now, and as a book, much more accessible than TV tapes.

I urge you, therefore, to do more than consider writing a book sometime in the future. It cannot be published too soon. Dennis, you have my admiration for the superb service you have done. I'll look forward to hearing about whatever new projects you undertake.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Over the years many people have asked us to write a book about the Bible's inadequacies and because the essentials of a very comprehensive work can be found in the transcripts of 24 recently completed audio tapes, we have decided to comply with their request. An abbreviated version of the book encompassing 3 of 24 chapters, a preface, and a table of contents is now available for review by any interested publishers readers may suggest. The final stimulus for this undertaking came from Paul Kurtz of Prometheus Books who sent us a letter in July stating that he would be delighted to consider any proposal we may have. Although we declined his initial suggestion because of so many other irons-in-the-fire, we decided to reconsider the matter and phoned him a month later to accept his kind offer. Because he stated he would like to review an abridged version of any manuscript we might seek to publish, in mid-October our abbreviated version of 75 pages was sent to him for analysis.

December 1993

With this month's issue we will continue our critique of The Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties by Gleason Archer.

REVIEWS

(ARCHER'S ENCYCLOPEDIA--Part 3)

On page 126 Archer is asked how the Bible can be correct when it contends rabbits chew the cud. After discussing the hyrax of Lev. 11:5 and the rabbit of Lev. 11:6, he responds by saying, "True ruminants normally have four stomachs, and that which has been worked over in these stomachs is regurgitated into the mouth when it is ready to be chewed again. In this technical sense neither the hyrax nor the hare can be called ruminants, but they do give the appearance of chewing the cud in the same way ruminants do. So convincing is this appearance that even Linnaeus at first classed them as ruminants, even though the four-stomach apparatus is lacking." In effect, he's provided little more than an admission that the Bible erred. What does a "technical sense" have to do with the issue? They either are or they are not chewers of the cud. And that's that. What does he mean by "technical sense?" Does he mean there is another sense that makes sense? And what does appearance have to do with accuracy? You might as well say a car is alive because it moves or all birds fly because you have never seen one that didn't. You might just as well allege loud noises cause bullets to be expelled from guns, because every time one is expelled it is accompanied by a loud noise; or someone is a king because you saw him wearing a crown and a gorgeous robe. What difference does the appearance make? The fact is that they do not chew the cud. If Linnaeus classified them as ruminants, then he was no more accurate than the Bible.

On page 152 Archer is asked: Deut. 24:16 says that children will not be killed for the sins of the fathers. Yet 2 Samuel 12:15-18 shows that the baby born to David and Bathsheba died because of their sin. Later, in 2 Samuel 21:5-9 Saul's seven grandchildren were put to death because of his sin, in order to bring the 3 year famine to an end. How do you reconcile these? And he responds by saying, "...It is clearly recognized in Scripture that each person stands on his own record before God.... In the case of the child conceived by Bathsheba and David when she was married to Uriah, the loss of that baby (in the OT setting) was a judgment visited on the guilty parents for their gross sin (which actually merited the death penalty under Lev. 20:10). It is by no means suggested that the child was suffering punishment for his parent's sin but that they were being punished by his death." This exhibits the kind of perverted logic that is so indicative of Christian apologetics. Certainly the child was bearing the brunt of the punishment, regardless of how it affected the parents. He paid the price, not them. One might just as well say that if I murdered someone and my father was executed in response, I was adequately punished because I lost my father. How ridiculous! My father was punished for my deeds, not I. He paid the price not I. All I endured was mental agony, at best. Later, Archer adds to his perverse sense of justice by saying, "Under special circumstances, then, the general rule of safeguarding children against punishment for the sins of their parents was subject to exceptions, so far as God's administration of justice was concerned. In each of the above cases it is fair to conclude that if the children involved had been permitted to live out a normal lifespan, they would have chosen to follow the evil example of their forebears and thus occasioned much suffering and woe to others." How absurd! Working on this principle we should kill the children of all criminals because they will probably choose to follow in their parents' footsteps. It is unfair to conclude anything, much less prejudice.

Even more important, how could it be just to punish people for doing something they have never done but could possibly do in the future? The kind of reasoning Christian apologists display to reconcile biblical contradictions is often downright unnerving.

On page 155 Archer is asked: Did God approve of Rahab's lie as related in Joshua 2:4-5? In essence, he seeks to justify her behavior by noting that she had faith in the Hebrew god, risked her life, joined the Israelites and became an ancestor of David and Jesus. But these considerations are irrelevant. The fact is that she lied and his answer rambled on for a page and a half without answering the question: Did God approve of the lie or didn't he? Even good people lie, but that doesn't make the lie any less false.

On page 175 Archer is asked: In 1 Sam. 16:19-21 Saul recognizes David as the son of Jesse, but in 17:58 Saul is said to have asked David, "Whose son art thou?" How can the two be reconciled? Archer responds by saying, "It is true that Saul had already been introduced to David (1 Sam. 16:18) as 'a son of Jesse the Bethlehemite who is a skillful musician, a mighty man of valor, a warrior, one prudent in speech, and a handsome man.' But it should be noted also that up until the contest with Goliath, David had shown to King Saul only his artistic side; and then David had been permitted to return home to Bethlehem. It is altogether true to life for Saul to see David in an entirely new light and to show a keen interest in his background."

What drivel. In other words, we are supposed to believe that David was known by Saul as an artist, went home, returned, and was no longer recognized by Saul. To say Archer is reaching on this one is an understatement. Saul knows David is Jesse's son in 1 Sam 16:19, saw him face to face in 1 Sam. 16:21, and told David he was a valiant man of war in 1 Sam. 16:18. Yet we are to believe he later saw him in a "new light." Archer's explanation is little more than an act of desperation. Saul isn't seeing David in a new light when the text clearly shows he's seeing him for the first time. After all the prior events, he doesn't even know David, according to 1 Sam. 17:58.

On page 184 Archer is asked: What is the correct number of horsemen that David took in his battle over Hadadezer, 1,700 (2 Sam. 8:4) or 7,000 (1 Chron. 18:4)? In this instance we are at least given an answer that is not smothered in irrelevant and inaccurate verbiage. Archer states, "There is no question but that these two accounts refer to the same episode, and therefore the prisoner count should be the same in both instances. There has been a scribal error or two either in Samuel or in Chronicles." Of course, he is guessing and we have already addressed the inadequacies of this whole copyist-error defense in prior issues. It just won't save the day.

The same approach is employed on page 206 when Archer is asked: How old was Ahaziah when he began to reign (compare 2 Kings 8:26 with 2 Chron. 22:2) and Jehoiachin when he began to reign (compare 2 Kings 24:8 with 2 Chron. 36:9-10)? It's interesting to note that Archer doesn't even attempt to justify this contradiction. Even the most conservative of fundamentalists can no longer evade the obvious on occasion. He opts for the more expedient ploy of invoking the following rationalization: "Copyists were prone to making two types of scribal errors. One concerned the spelling of proper names...and the other had to do with numbers.... It is beyond the capability of anyone to avoid any and every slip of the pen in copying page after page from any book--sacred or secular. Yet we may be sure that the original manuscript of each book of the Bible, being directly inspired by God, was free from all error. It is also true that no well-attested variation in the manuscript copies that have come down to us alter any doctrine of the Bible...." To this one can only reply: How does he know there were any original manuscripts? Secondly, how can he be sure that any document is errorless when he admits no one living, including himself, has ever seen that document? How can he attest to the validity of a document he has never seen? Thirdly, how does he know they were errorless, in light of the fact that the copies reek with errors and contradictions? Fourthly, how does he know they weren't copied correctly and still contradict one another? This is certainly a reasonable assumption, in light of the fact that the copies often conflict. Having never seen the originals, how does he know they agree? How can he prove they are in concert, when they no longer exist?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #554 from SF Who is Citing a Letter Received from an Apologetic Opponent Continues from Last Month (Part d)

If you are interested in a more detailed response to Utchen's booklet, let me know, but I didn't think it worth the effort in this letter, especially since I found Dennis McKinsey's claims in his column entitled COMMENTARY to be more interesting.... McKinsey expresses his further concern that believers will be disinterested in the environmental destruction of our planet, since this earth, they believe, is only temporary.... I myself am a contributing member of half dozen conservation groups, including The Nature Conservancy, Audubon Society, Sierra Club, Wilderness Society, World Wildlife Fund, and others. I speak on environmental issues to churches from time to time, and I find that many Christians are very concerned about the degradation of the biosphere. McKinsey here, as elsewhere, just doesn't know what he's talking about.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part d)

As long as you don't mind, SF, I'll address your opponent's comments concerning me directly.

If there is anyone who doesn't know the subject matter, it's you. In the first place, you are concealing your position with respect to the inerrancy of the Bible. To what extent you have drifted from a fundamentalist position is central to the issue. If you are a liberal Christian who has drifted away from many biblical teachings, then your inclination to join social activist groups is understandable. If, on the other hand, you are a conservative Christian of the fundamentalist or inerrantist variety, then you are nothing more than an exception to the rule. For every one in your camp, scores of fundamentalists are not. Again, the exception does not destroy the rule. You are participating in those organizations despite biblical teachings, not because of them. The central thrust of biblical doctrines is other-worldly, not this-worldly, and that remains an unalterable fact.

McKinsey argues that believers will be motivated to good behavior by the hope of reward rather than by concern for simply doing what's right. ...in a world where so many aren't motivated to do good by anything at all, he should be pleased that believers strive to do good for whatever reason, even self-interested ones.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part e)

I should be glad that they are doing good, even if it is for reasons of self-interest? You admit they are doing it for self interest, self aggrandizement, self-enhancement and say I should be pleased. That's morality? That kind of behavior is included in what you deem to be desirable behavior? Can acts be moral that are based upon nothing more than self-interest and personal gain? Are they moral acts even though they may appear magnanimous to others? All you are saying is that if we can get people to behave correctly through the promise of personal reward, who cares if we are basing our morality upon self-interest. That isn't morality; that's the systematic manipulation of others by the expectation of personal gain and profit. People would not be inclined to behave unless they could see some personal benefit to themselves, and to say that that is better than nothing is to justify the world's sad condition, which Christianity and the Bible enhance. Doing a good act for a bad reason could never lead to a real concern of one person for another. Instead people would tend to base their acts on cold prior calculations of what benefits they could expect. We have too much of that occurring already, and Christianity is a prime cause. People should do the right because it is the right thing to do, not because they expect a kickback, a reward, or a payoff.

In addition, you are saying that the end justifies the means, because it doesn't really matter if Christian teachings are true as long as they obtain results.

Letter #554 Continues (Part f)

But beyond this, his assertion is just plain wrong. It requires a complete and utter misunderstanding of Christianity to aver that Christians strive to do good out of hope for reward. Our reward is already established when we accept Jesus Christ as our Savior. The Christian's motive for doing good is love for God, which manifests itself in love for God's creation, both human and non-human. McKinsey would do well to read, say, Book I of Thomas A Kempis' THE IMITATION OF CHRIST before he ventures again to make such uninformed statements in his journal.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part f)

Wrong again! According to biblical theology, your reward is not received by accepting Jesus Christ as your savior, but when you enter heaven -- and not a moment before. If you did nothing more than accept Jesus as your savior, and absolutely nothing happened to you subsequently, where is the reward? Jesus Christ is not an end in himself; he is a means to the end, which is eternal salvation. Heaven and hell are inseparable parts of Christian theology;

indeed, they lie at the very foundation. Take them away and the superstructure begins to crumble. For you to say that Christians don't do good out of hope for a reward or that Christian morality is not ultimately based upon a system of rewards and punishments is ridiculous. If there is anyone who displays an utter misunderstanding of the true import of Christian teachings, you are that individual. Abolish heaven, hell, and purgatory from Christian theology and see what happens. When I say abolish, I mean completely eradicate them from the minds of all Christians. See what that does for your love of Jesus. See how much is left of your concern for salvation. See what that does to Christian charities. And see what is left of Christian churches and denominations. And then come and talk to me about Christian beneficence and humanity. Why do you accept Jesus? Because you think it's to your own personal benefit. That's why. Take the fear of hell-fire and damnation out of the Bible, as well as the expectation of self-centered rewards in heaven, and Christianity would collapse. For you to say that "the Christian's motive for doing good is love for God which manifests itself in love for God's creation, both human and non-human" is little more than a prevarication. How can Christians love this world when the Bible says this world's god is the devil? For biblical Christians, the external world, the Devil's domain, is to be used as a means to an end -- to get people into heaven-- and is not to be loved or viewed as an end in itself. And since we have already shown that good deeds toward others primarily arise out of self-interest and personal profit, it cannot be said that the Christian motive for doing good is love for a supreme being. It's love for self that is cloaked in love for another.

Letter #554 Continues (Part g)

The author alleges that believers will not oppose wars very strenuously because of their belief in an afterlife. This whiff of intellectual flatulence evinces once again a complete ignorance on the part of the writer. The criteria of Just War theory were first worked out by Christians who were loath to have their governments go to war capriciously, and Christians have striven ever since to hold their governments to these standards. Additionally, many of the staunchest elements of the anti-war and nuclear disarmament movements have been Christian, as are many pacifists and conscientious objectors.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part g)

If there is any ignorance, my friend, it lies in your failure to realize that I never said anything about a Just War theory. My comment was much broader. I said that religion, by its very nature, is supernatural and otherworldly, and those entangled in its web are far more likely to accept war and possible death than those who believe that this world is the sum and substance of existence. Those who believe that death is followed by another world, another existence, or another life are less inclined to fear that which places their life in danger.

Secondly, religious components of the anti-war and nuclear disarmament movements are composed almost completely of liberal Christian elements and organizations. The latter are comprised of Christians who have moved farthest from an inerrant Bible and are least inclined to accept the largest number of biblical teachings. Generally speaking, those least inclined to accept the Bible are most involved with saving this world and vice versa. Your arguments remind me of Christian apologists who love to trot out the names of Christian ministers who opposed Hitler and Mussolini when their forces were rampaging throughout Europe. What they neglect to mention, of course, is that the ministers and priests who opposed them were the exception, and nearly always of the liberal Christian persuasion. Biblical inerrantists, fundamentalists, conservatives, evangelicals, and reactionaries were noticeably absent from beginning to end. Yet, it is those few brave individuals who were willing to oppose fascist tyranny that are projected as indicative of biblical Christianity as a whole, when they were by no means representative of the latter. It's from the liberal wing of Christianity that conscientious objectors and those who hold governments to a higher standard emerge. The support given to fascism by the pope and to the Vietnam War by Billy Graham, Oral Roberts, Pat Robertson, Jerry Falwell and other conservative Christians is fully understandable.

Letter #554 Continues (Part h)

On the other hand, as I have written before, most of the wars of this century have been precipitated and prosecuted by atheistic tyrants. It wasn't Christians who invaded Czechoslovakia in the thirties, it wasn't Christians who bombed Pearl Harbor. Christians have traditionally been disinclined to go to war unless they feel there is no other recourse. McKinsey doesn't have to speculate on this. It's history. He can look it up if he's really interested in truth and not in merely flummoxing his readership in order to score debating points.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part h)

This comment is almost too inane to warrant a response. Where on earth are you getting this preposterous nonsense! Tens of millions of people died in World War I, and prime leaders of that catastrophe, such as the Hapsburgs and Romanovs, were not Christians? Are you serious! Key initiators and participants in World War II such as Hitler, Mussolini, Churchill, and Roosevelt were not Christians? I can remember seeing a newsclip of Roosevelt and Churchill on a ship in the North Atlantic singing "Onward Christian Soldiers" with thousands of sailors following a crucial meeting in the darkest hours of late 1941. Every major war of this century and most of the smaller conflagrations have been led, caused, or fought by Christians. Are you saying Adolph Hitler was not a Christian when he invaded Czechoslovakia, or Mussolini was not a Christian when he invaded Albania, Greece and Ethiopia? Franco was not a Christian when he attacked a legally elected government and killed prisoners? And what about Northern Ireland and Yugoslavia? If Christians have been disinclined to go to war, deliver me from those you feel are so inclined. I taught history for many years and rarely encountered information that would substantiate your version of historical events.

Actually, flummoxing appears to be your specialty, in light of the fact that you deftly slipped in the phrase "wars of this century." Apparently you prefer to avoid other centuries, and in light of what repeatedly occurred throughout the last 2,000 years, one can easily understand why. Entire books would be needed to adequately cover the history of the wars, massacres, atrocities, tortures, and executions perpetrated by Christians for religious reasons. Anyone who doesn't know that the history of Christianity is replete with warfare and aggression of one sort of another has no business denouncing the historical comments of others. Succinctly stated, what you say is wholly inaccurate, and if anyone needs to be more concerned with research and less concerned with scoring debating points, it's you.

Letter #554 Continues (Part i)

McKinsey alludes to passages in the Bible that suggest that it teaches the inequality of men and women, but what the Bible teaches is that men and women are different, not that they're unequal. Indeed, Christianity revolutionized how women are viewed by the larger culture. Contrary to Judaism...and contrary to Roman society...women were exalted by the early church to a status similar to what they enjoy in twentieth century America....

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part i)

What tripe! I'm tempted to say trash. All the apostles were men; all the patriarchs were obviously men; all the founders of Christianity were males; Christianity's savior was a male, and God is depicted throughout the Bible as a male. From priests, through bishops, cardinals, and popes, women were purposely excluded from any meaningful role in church activities, and except for lesser parts for Eve and Mary, no women play significant roles in the formulation of biblical Christianity. Even more importantly, the Bible specifically relegates women to a role lying somewhere between that of a slave and a domestic household servant. And you want us to believe that men and women are biblically equal! Don't deceive people by contending the Bible teaches "that men and women are different, not that they're unequal." You definitely need to read the 8th issue of BE, my friend. The thrust of verses like 1 Cor. 11:3 ("...the head of the woman is the man"), Gen. 3:16 ("thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee"), 1 Cor. 11:7-9 ("the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man. Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man"), Eph. 5:22-24 ("Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church"), Col. 3:18 ("Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands"), and 1 Tim. 2:11-14 ("I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve..."), is clear to all but the most indoctrinated. In no sense does the Bible teach that men and women are equal in social standing. Women are clearly to be viewed as subservient. Christianity never "revolutionized how women are viewed by the larger culture." In fact, the opposite is true. One would be hard pressed to find any religion that is not a bastion of male supremacy, and Christian teachings are directly in the mainstream of all religious pronouncements on women. At no time were women "exalted by the early church." Would you cite chapter and verse to substantiate this wholly unbiblical comment? In fact, I'd even be willing to consider any extrabiblical data you can provide to prove women were exalted by the early church or endured any other role than that of an appendage to a man. To be perfectly blunt, where on earth are you getting this palaver? You're merely writing your own script, my friend.

Letter #554 Continues (Part j)

McKinsey voices his dismay that believers enrich certain televangelists in an attempt to "buy their way into heaven." While giving money to Jimmy and Tammy Faye Bakker and their ilk is doubtless foolish, people don't do it to buy a ticket to heaven. They do it because they believe in the people to whom they contribute and wish to help their ministries prosper. They may be deluded, but that is not the point at issue. The point is that Christians don't give in order to garner some reward....

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part j)

They don't! Take away the fires of hell and the eternal rewards of heaven's bliss and see what happens. If you don't think the underlying motivation behind nearly all contributions is self interest and personal gain, then you have failed to detect one of the pillars upon which Christianity rests. Its financial growth depends upon the concern and fear people have for a suspected or perceived future. Terror and fear of the unknown lie at the heart of all religions.

Letter #554 Continues (Part k)

I agree with McKinsey's assertion that Christians tend to view evil as a problem of human nature rather than a problem of our environment, and what's more, they are absolutely correct to do so. While environment is certainly a factor in how our nature expresses itself, our moral predicament today is nevertheless a function of the propensity of human beings, whether rich or poor, to be lustful, greedy, proud, and violent. These evils arise from within the hearts of men, they are not imposed from without.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part k)

Here, probably more than anywhere else, our views differ drastically. You say the world will never improve until you get the garbage out of people, while I say the world will never improve until you get the people out of the garbage. It is not a matter of bad people making a bad environment; it's a matter of a bad environment making bad people. You have the cart before the mule. Where do you find the most crime, the most violence, the most anti-social behavior, the most profanity, the most debilitating addictions, the most of that which is undesirable? It's in the poorer sections of society throughout the world. Where do police patrol the most? Where crime is greatest-- and that's in poverty-stricken areas. You can't bear a child in a rat's nest, raise him in a slum, restrict his every movement during maturation by removing everything material that allows him to enjoy life and respect others, and still expect him to display the manners of Emily Post and the etiquette of Amy Vanderbilt. It just isn't going to happen. In debating this very point with a fundamentalist minister, I repeatedly mentioned the fact that no amount of preaching and sermons would ever be able to overcome material conditions that were generating the opposite behavior. When words are saying one thing while every aspect of surrounding reality is dictating the opposite, people are going to obey the latter. That's a virtual foregone conclusion. Try stressing the evils of prostitution to a woman who has children to feed and can't find a decent job paying anything comparable to what she can make in one night on the streets. On the other hand, try teaching those who are materially well off to engage in criminal behavior and see what happens. They'll nearly always ignore your advice, because people with something at stake, people with more to lose than to gain, aren't about to jeopardize their status. (To Be Continued)

Issue No. 133

January 1994

On pages 15 and 16 of the publication entitled Pros Apologian, published by Rev. James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries, is an article entitled "Rebellious Lumps of Clay and the Praise of God's Glorious Grace." In this article White is essentially trying to reconcile God's sovereignty with man's free will, and only succeeds in painting himself into a corner. He states, "...before the very creation of the world, God chose His people in Christ Jesus, not on the basis of what they did or would do, but solely on the basis of His mercy and grace. He makes them holy and blameless in his sight by His Spirit and power (Jude 24-25). They are predestined to be adopted as sons through Jesus Christ, not according to their works, but according to His pleasure and will. Because this predestination finds its basis completely in God's will, not in man himself, it is all of grace, for it is freely given to us in the Beloved One, Jesus Christ." Later he states, "...we truly are God's creatures, at His disposal, to be used for His glory." In effect, White is saying that God and God alone determines who is saved and who is damned. Man has no influence on the decision whatever. As we have shown in several issues of BE, this position is biblically sound, although in conflict with God's alleged justice, and morally detestable.

But on the next page White says, "There is the objection that is heard over and over again. If God truly has mercy on whom He will have mercy, and hardens whom He hardens, then how can God still hold us responsible? Paul's answer provides us with the second part of our answer.... Paul's words are harsh, unloving, and repulsive. Why? Because Paul's answer is so clear: we are clay, God is the potter. We are the creation, He the Creator. We have no right to judge God. God has every right to judge us. We cannot put Him 'in the dock' and accuse Him." Apparently, White doesn't realize he has unsatisfactorily answered the question, and is on the horns of a dilemma. If people are free throughout their entire lives to act as they please, but their fate was determined by God long before they came onto the scene, then behavior is irrelevant to salvation. If behavior is irrelevant to salvation, then justice is irrelevant also, and many of those who will be saved will be among those who are least deserving. On the other hand, if the behavior of people is completely determined by God from beginning to end, then how can God be just, as is alleged in Deut. 32:4, when he condemns some people to hell for doing that which he forced them to perform? How can God judge or condemn those who have no freedom? White evades the whole issue by relying on Paul, and alleging man has no right to pass judgment on God's behavior, no matter how unjust it may appear. That's analogous to saying: Are you going to believe me or your lying eyes? From White's perspective, any act of God is proper, regardless of the degree of injustice involved, and that's no justification whatever. In essence, he wants people to make a tremendous leap of faith and accept his unsubstantiated allegation that God would never do anything that was unjust, despite obvious evidence to the contrary. He offers no proof; just preachments. We are supposed to accept because of our unworthiness to criticize. Working on that theory, no act of God would be reprehensible no matter how heinous. Every despicable act of God listed in the commentaries of Issues 115 through 120 of BIBLICAL ERRANCY would be justified, and that would, indeed, be the ultimate in religious faith and indoctrination. Every contemptible deed of the Almighty could be defended on the supposition that God's ways are above man's understanding. Individuals entangled in that loop resemble those who believe that the failure of prayer lies in more prayer. They are so blinded to reality that they wouldn't believe god's behavior was reprehensible, even if Paul, himself, returned from the dead and said so.

On top of everything else, White later says, "We are, after all, rebellious lumps of clay, and what an incredibly foolish thing it is for lumps of clay to rise up in rebellion against the Potter!" If all acts by man are determined by God from the beginning, then how could man rebel to begin with? He would only be performing that which God determined. If, on the other hand, he is free throughout his entire life, but his ultimate fate is determined, then what difference does it make whether or not he rebels? He is going to Heaven or Hell, regardless of his behavior. His fate was sealed ab initio. Either way, the situation is fixed and ridiculous.

Anyone who takes White's theory seriously might as well devote his life to wine, women, and song, because the outcome is foreordained. If the outcome is set in concrete, White should live it up and forget about preaching: the die has been cast.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #554 Continues from Last Month (Part 1)

McKinsey is wrong here yet again when he delivers himself of the opinion that Christians regard each other as so much rubbish or dung. I can't speak for other religions, but Christianity teaches that all people have dignity, worth, and beauty because they are made in God's image and because they are loved by God. Jesus commands us, in fact, to value each other to the point of giving our lives for each other. To say that we regard each other as pieces of dung is to confuse us with the secularists and humanists like B.F. Skinner, who regards man as nothing more than an animal with no intrinsic worth beyond what he can contribute to the common good....

The twentieth century has certainly paid in copious quantities of blood for this sort of thinking, as tyranny after tyranny has striven to expunge any theistic basis for human rights and human dignity from the societies they oppress....

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part 1)

You are only perpetuating the ridiculous mythology that has enraptured the Christian community for centuries, SF. In the first place, you have chosen to ignore the teachings of Christianity's real founder, Paul, who said in Romans 7, "We know that the law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin. I do not understand my own actions. For I do not do what I want, but I do the very thing that I hate.... For I know that nothing good dwells within me, that is, in my flesh, I can will what is right, but I cannot do it. For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I do.... I see in my members another law at war with the law of my mind and making me captive to the law of sin which dwells in my members. Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death?" Clearly, Paul looks upon himself as carnal and having nothing good dwelling within; he is wretched and captive to the law of sin. Are you saying you and the rest of humanity are somehow better? Are you saying your moral character exceeds that of a saint? Other verses could be quoted, but the point is that Martin Luther's reference to man being little more than a piece of dung is biblically sustainable. Second, the Bible refers to man being made in the image of God, but could you cite chapter and verse where the Bible specifically applies the words "dignity," "worth," and "beauty" to man, rather than having them eisegetically read into the text? In other words, do you have specific citations, or are you just drawing conjectures from words that are present, and one lone verse in particular? Third, could you also cite chapter and verse to substantiate your assertion that Jesus commanded us to give our lives for each other? One of the most common illnesses of nearly all Christian propagandists lies in their repeated tendency to embellish the biblical story. They just can't help but add to the text anything that makes it more astounding, more colorful, more indicative of the message they seek to convey. I have sat through many a sermon, wondering where on earth he was getting that from Scripture. A couple of Christmas movies I recently viewed entitled Sodom and Gomorrah and Samson and Delilah reek with addenda. Fourth, as far as the reference to pieces of dung is concerned, I think you will find that Martin Luther, the most influential of all protestant theologians, is far more in tune with biblical teachings than yourself, and more likely to refer to man as a piece of dung than B.F. Skinner. Fifth, your observations with respect to the twentieth century are little short of ludicrous. I challenge you to find any group on this planet that has been involved in bloodier and more costly conflicts than the world's Christians. All the European countries swim in a sea of Christian indoctrination, and yet they have been the source of the bloodiest internal and colonial conflicts in world history. In this century alone, tens of millions have paid the supreme sacrifice in wars in which major Christian leaders and organizations clearly supported both sides. The Christian record is nothing short of abysmal. And lastly, as far as governments are concerned, those which have oppressed their citizenry the most are precisely those that have been most closely allied with religion, churches, and the propagation of Christianity. Franco in Spain, Pinochet in Chile, Somoza in Nicaragua, Duvalier in Haiti, Diem in Vietnam, Hitler in Germany, and Mussolini in Italy are prime examples.

Letter #554 Continues (Part m)

McKinsey says that believers will not be open to new ideas because they believe that there are some eternal truths. This is too ridiculous a charge to merit a response.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part m)

Why don't you try, anyway? Probably because you know that eternal truths are, by definition, not open to alteration, modification, or revision; they aren't subject to adjustment. And insofar as they are not subject to renovation, believers are not open to new ideas. And to the extent they are not open to new ideas in such key areas as morality and Christian dogma, the tendency to be closedminded in other areas is heightened dramatically, because everything is interrelated. If there is any aspect to which the word ridiculous can be applied, it lies in your subtle attempt to provide an aura of complete mastery through abrupt evasion.

Letter #554 Continues (Part n)

He argues that believers tend to be intolerant of others because they believe they have the Truth. Unfortunately, there are indeed some Christians who are guilty of a kind of religious chauvinism. But what has this to do with the correctness of their beliefs about God? The fact that some people are intolerant does not mean that their beliefs are incorrect. The fact that some who believe God exists display little liberality in their dealings with others certainly does not mean that God doesn't exist.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part n)

You ask, "What has this to do with the correctness of their beliefs?" I would ask you, What has your response to do with my question? We aren't talking about the correctness of their beliefs or their belief in the existence of God. Whether their beliefs are correct or incorrect or God does or does not exist is irrelevant to my original assertion. The fact is that believing they have the "Truth," whether they have it or not, tends to make them intolerant. If the extraneous verbiage in your answer is removed, your real defense includes the assertion that intolerance is only displayed by some Christians. You don't realize that Christians displaying religious tolerance as opposed to intolerance are doing so despite biblical teachings, not because of them. I strongly recommend for your enlightenment the commentaries on Pro- and Anti-intellectualism in Issues 80, 81 and 110.

(To Be Concluded Next Month)

Letter #560 from TG of Arlington, Texas

Dear Dennis.

You're doing excellent work. Even the hard core biblicists who won't be persuaded by the obvious must realize that their position is not so strong as they thought when they encounter your arguments. So I hope you take the following in the spirit in which it's offered.

Biblical criticism is useful and important. But, as you say, "You have to deal with people where they are, not where you would like them to be." And many MANY people, unfortunately, are not going to be separated from their Christian indoctrination by Biblical criticism, for the simple reason that an awful lot of them aren't the least bit interested in such matters. Most of these are "liberal" Christians who would readily agree with us that the Bible is not inerrant, and to most of them, Dennis, the intellectual arguments against their faith just aren't that important. Moreover, most people can readily see that choosing to abandon religious superstition will cut them off from friends and family and isolate them in a way that can be very uncomfortable. I'm convinced that this is why so few freethinkers are women. Men can more easily afford to go their own way, whereas social attachments and acceptance are very important for most women.

This is why the frontal assault that you are so accomplished at is not the whole solution. This is also why "preaching to the choir" should not be at the very bottom of our priorities. You certainly don't see the Christian churches attracting their main following by holding picket and protest activities. Sure, they draw on a vast pool of people who've been indoctrinated since birth in religious superstition. But the pull of common sense is very strong, too. It's just too strong to overcome the desire to "go along to get along." Many people whose religious beliefs are tenuous at best join churches simply because they don't see any alternatives. This is especially true of couples with young children. And let's not kid ourselves. What we endure is not seen as an acceptable way of living by most people, and the greater part of this has nothing whatever to do with logic and reason.

I don't know what the whole solution is, Dennis. What you do is a part of it. But it doesn't stand much chance of getting us all to where we ought to be. Where we ought to be is in freethought communities that sponsor regular events, open to the public, concerning matters of wide appeal. We freethinkers, and not the fundagelical crazies and peddlers of irrationalism and mysticism, ought to be the ones sponsoring public lectures, workshops, and classes on things like being happier, improving our marriages, raising more self-reliant children, and so on and so on. We can build a better mousetrap, and people will beat a path to our door if we do.

P.S. How about a 4-5 page instead of a 3 page BE?

Editor's Response to Letter #560

Dear TG.

Please accept my response in the spirit intended, but your letter is plagued with beguilements. You wouldn't believe the number of suggestions I have received over the years on how to conduct, write, direct, and manage this publication, much of which is calculated, either wittingly or unwittingly, to lead us down a side path that is little more than a cul-de-sac, if not a slippery slope to oblivion. In regard to your points: First, you are correct. Many people are not as interested in biblical criticism as are others, but as we have stated so often, our focus should be on those who are most in opposition to our position and most actively propounding biblical inerrancy and religious superstition. Insofar as the amount of work that needs to be done is concerned, this group has barely been touched. You want to move on to another group, when this one is yet to be dealt with in any meaningful way. Second, liberal Christians aren't nearly as immune from biblical contradictions and problems as they have been led to believe. As we have noted before, Adam and Eve, the Resurrection, the Virgin Birth, Original Sin and a host of other issues impact as much on liberal Christianity as the fundamentalist wing. The former are in the loop, whether they like it or not. Third, if I internalized your comment that people are not going to choose "to abandon religious superstition" because "it will cut them off from friends and family and isolate them in a way that can be very uncomfortable," then I might as well abandon all biblical criticism and close up shop, because that would apply to individuals on every side of the Christian spectrum. Although your statement no doubt applies to some, it is by no means applicable to all. Fourth, no doubt some women in the audience have something they would like to say in regard to your comment that "few freethinkers are women." Fifth, I have never said that the "frontal assault" is the whole solution, only that it is far ahead of whatever is second. Sixth, you don't think that "preaching to the choir" should be near the bottom of our priorities? I suggest you talk to some propagandists for the Mormons and Jehovah's Witnesses, if you don't think much is to be gained by "spreading the word." All you are doing is submitting another version of the "you can't change those people" argument, TG, and I don't buy it. I'm sorry. I have attended many atheist and humanist meetings over the years, and virtually everyone present came out of some kind of religious background. If they can do it, so can others. And I know from letters and phone calls we have received over the years that BE has significantly altered the religious beliefs of many people. Seventh, you support the "preaching to the choir" approach by saying that "where we ought to be is in freethought communities that sponsor events, open to the public, concerning matters of wide appeal." But what could be of wider appeal than the Bible! Have you looked at your television or turned on your radio lately? Good grief, my friend, where on earth have you been! The media is saturated with hallelujahs to the Bible in general and Jesus in particular. Eighth, you say that "we freethinkers, and not the fundagelical crazies and peddlers of irrationalism and mysticism ought to be the ones sponsoring public lectures, workshops, and classes on things like..." But TG, how many times have I said that biblicists are NOT, I repeat, they are NOT going to come to our events when they are convinced they already have the truth? It just isn't going to happen. You are living in a dream world if you think religionists are going to appear in droves to hear an atheist, humanist, or freethought speaker. You are going to have to go to them, if you want our numbers to increase dramatically. Don't expect them to come to you. And lastly, you say that "we can build a better mousetrap, and people will beat a path to our door if we do." Why do you say "we can," when we already have. We have had a better mousetrap, at least ideologically, for centuries. That's a done deed; yet, they're not beating a path to our door. No, my friend that's not how it works. Just because you have the truth does not mean your cause will prevail. By no means! If that were true, Falwell, Swaggart, Graham, Roberts, Robertson, and a host of other purveyors of perfidy would never see the light of day. Financial backing, political access, influential relationships, censorship, sympathetic media, educational control, escape from despair into phantasia, yet-to-be-demonstrated promises and threats, and general domination of the scene are far more important. And nobody's going to race to a door they don't even know exists. The situation resembles that noted by a political candidate discussing a controlled election who said, "It's not who has the votes; it's who counts them." Unfortunately, TG, it's difficult to avoid the impression that you are trying to justify doing little and avoiding conflict by rationalizing everything.

As far as your comment regarding expanding BE to 4 or 5 pages is concerned, time and resources just aren't available. In fact, with so many irons in the fire, we are taxed to the max already. But thanks for the suggestion and encouragement.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #561 from MJ of Andover, Mass.

If God wrote a Book, it would be clear, concise, and intelligible, and not filled with muddled thinking masquerading as spiritual mysteries. It would not be filled with contradictions in claims, in accounts, in advice, and in logic. It would not constantly assert mutually exclusive ideas are both true, such as emphatically claiming the end is near and then extending this claim century after century (Mark 9:1).

It would not contradict known facts (Job 39:13-16). It would not present obviously mythological stories as literal truth (Gen. 7 & 8, Noah's Ark). It would not depend on miracles as a key to legitimacy (Matt. 11:3-5). It would not contain prophecies that failed, nor claim fulfillments of prophecies which were clearly talking about unrelated events (Ezek. 26:7-21 & Acts 21:3, Acts 1:16 & Psalm 41:9, 41:4).

It would have a real sense of justice. It would not favor one nation over another (Deut. 7:6). It would not discriminate against handicapped people (Lev. 21:16-23). It would not condone slavery (Ex. 21:20-21). It would not preach hatred toward gay people (Lev. 20:13, 1 Cor. 6:9-10). It would not be cruel. There can be no justification for the slaughtering of infants and animals, who cannot be guilty (Psalm 137:9, 1 Sam. 15:3). It would be appalled at the idea of eternal punishment for anyone, just because a person won't accept screwy theology (John 3:18, 3:36, Matt. 25:46, Mark 9:44). It would not hold people responsible for the sins of someone else (2 Kings 5:27, Romans 5:18-19). It would provide a better answer to the problem of evil than the Book of Job, which answer amounts to, "You have no right to ask, you puny human" (Job 40:2).

Its ethics would show some wisdom and maturity. It would not hold up an atrocious character such as David as a hero (Acts 13:22, 2 Sam. 6:20-22). It would not regard obedience as a greater virtue than understanding. Obedience is not an intrinsic virtue (Gen. 2 & 3, Adam and Eve; Ex. 24:7).

It would understand the nature of real faith--the will to find meaning in life--and not hold up simple-minded credulity as such a virtue (John 20:29). It would not claim that what a man believes is the critical factor, rather than how he treats people (Romans 4:5-6). It would have an understanding of forgiveness, and not demand a blood sacrifice, a barbaric concept at best (Heb. 9:22). Its teachings on marriage and divorce would be clear and humane, and not change from the OT to the NT or from gospel to gospel (2 Sam. 5:13, Mark 10:11, Matt. 19:9). It would teach that men and women, though different, are equal in value, with equal rights (Lev. 27:3-5, 12:1-4, 1 Cor. 11:3). It would celebrate life, not deny it (John 12:25).

Its chief spokesperson (the Son of God) would have realistic ethics, and not make utopian statements advising people to forgive endlessly, to take no thought for the morrow, and not to resist evil (Matt. 18:22, 6:34, 5:39). It would inspire us to work for the ideals of humanity, rather than to trust in wishful thinking and the adequacy of passivity (Matt. 17:20, 21:22, Psalm 37:3-11). It would reveal a God of compassion, understanding, and justice, not an egotistical, jealous, vengeful character (Job 40:2, Ex. 20:5, Nah 1:2). The essence of its God would be reason and compassion, rather than a desire to dominate and control.

In short, if God wrote a book, you can be sure the Bible ain't it....

Letter #562 from PD of Mesick, Michigan

Hi Dennis.

I answer all ads I see on TV and in printed media offering free religious materials. This material is invariably followed by a visit from the local clergy of the sponsoring denomination. So I get experienced biblical apologists on my home turf, with all of my notes and biblical materials readily at hand. What a wonderful opportunity to test out various BE arguments before chancing making a fool out of myself in public!

This practice gets me ready for various radio talk shows which do not screen their callers. (Those are getting more common every day.) As soon as I hear a Bible quoter call in, I call in to oppose his verse with one or more of my own. The host often asks me why the other caller's scripturally supportable position is any less valid than mine. I reply with a sigh, saying, "Well, I guess this is another example of biblical inconsistency and self-contradiction. Anyone can find verses to support whatever he wants to believe." The host is usually desperate to avoid straying off the day's topic with a never-ending biblical argument, so he quickly expresses agreement and terminates the call. Then, regardless of any subsequent Bible defense by angry callers, the damage has been done. Thousands of on-the-fence listeners have been exposed to information which seriously discredits any claim of biblical inerrancy! Many thanks for your help in all this. P.S. Can you please publish a source for an up-to-date BE index?

Editor's Response to Letter #562

Dear PD.

Keep up the good work, and stay on the offensive. Using our material to expose the Bible is sorely needed. However, I do have a problem with your strategy. A major weakness of your hit-and-run approach is that when you are no longer on-the-air any number of callers can attack, twist, distort, pervert and "correct" everything you have said with impunity. Who is going to show them the error of their ways? Who is going to tell them where they went awry? After hanging up, you become fair game and anything goes, as I have experienced on several occasions.

As far as inviting apologists into your home is concerned, that is an excellent strategy for those who are fully prepared. But remember, they are not going to send their dummies for idle chit-chat. Sending you propaganda and propagandists is costly, and they intend to get their money's worth. More than likely you will be visited by either skilled propagandists or ordained clergy. In any event, let me know what is most effective and I'll relay the message.

As far as a textual index for all biblical verses in BE is concerned, we have been distributing one for several years at $10 a copy. A Tennessee subscriber with computer expertise sends us an updated version every year.

Every year or so an entire issue is devoted to letters from our readers and this month's issue will continue that tradition.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #554 Continues from Last Month (Part o)

McKinsey accuses believers of nurturing feelings of superiority and nationalism. Some believers are guilty as charged, but again this is not a fault of their religion which, if it emphasizes anything, emphasizes personal humility and universal brotherhood. McKinsey would do well to judge religion by what religion teaches and by how its most exemplary votaries live and not by what some of its most unrepresentative members practice. In any event, nationalism and chauvinism are universal. They're no more likely to be found among believers than among non-believers....

The greatest commandment of the Bible, indeed, the quintessence of the entire Old Testament is the adjuration to do justice, to work for it, to fight for it for others. This is why churches were in the vanguard of the Civil Rights movement in this country, and why religious themes infused the movement with energy, songs, manpower, and blood.... It is why churches have historically resisted tyrants and oppressive laws.

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part o)

You seem to be incapable of realizing, SF, that the appropriate response to nearly all of your observations is that if Christians are being tolerant, considering new ideas, rejecting chauvinism and otherwise behaving properly, it's because they are leaving the Bible rather than incorporating it. People are acting intelligently DESPITE the Bible, not BECAUSE of it. You say "some believers are guilty as charged, but again this is not a fault of their religion" when precisely the opposite is true. It is precisely the ones most in tune with biblical teachings and most capable of substantiating their position biblically that are least tolerant, most nationalistic, most chauvinistic and most provincial. You say we should judge religion by what religion teaches and "not by what some of its most unrepresentative members practice." Yet you fail to realize that these members are, in fact, the most representative of, and closest to, what the Bible teaches. Far more biblical teachings propagate narrowmindedness and intolerance than openness and magnanimity. Those behaving as you favor are doing so in opposition to, rather than in compliance with, the essential biblical message. Because they still refer to themselves as Christians and are adhering to exceptional verses, outsiders mistakenly believe that they are behaving as the Bible prescribes.

You say nationalism and chauvinism "are no more likely to be found among believers than among non-believers." Talk about being too ridiculous to merit a response! The American populace alone disproves this comment quite easily. The most nationalistic, chauvinistic, racist, and sexist elements are found among those believing the Bible is the inerrant word of a supreme being. The greater their attachment to the Bible, the less their attachment to other human beings. This can be attributed to the fact that in both quantity and quality the number of biblical verses pulling men apart is far greater than the number pulling men together and, consequently, the closer one adheres to biblical teachings, the more he is affected accordingly.

As far as your comment that "the quintessence of the entire Old Testament is the adjuration to do justice, to work for it, to fight for it for others" is concerned, a remarkable lack of sophistication is clearly evident. What parts of scripture prompted this wholly erroneous assessment? Virtually every book from Genesis to Job reeks with nationalism and contempt for other groups, and divine favoritism toward a special people is prominent throughout. Are we going to go by the overwhelming theme of the book or by a few isolated and contradictory verses that conflict with the general tenor?

Moreover, for you to assert that "churches were in the vanguard of the Civil Rights movement in this country" is both misleading and deceptive, and therefore inaccurate. Although a few churches and denominations in the liberal wing of Christianity conducted struggles for civil rights, they were by no means the majority or representative of Christianity as a whole, and were furthest from the fundamentalist approach to scripture. For every minister participating in the civil rights movement, scores either railed on the evils of integration or gave no encouragement to racial equalization.

And as far as your comment that churches have historically resisted tyrants and oppressive laws is concerned, that probably exhibits the most abysmal ignorance of all. Throughout the last 2,000 years, Christian leaders have worked relentlessly with the most tyrannical rulers imaginable and have received incredible amounts of ideological, political, and financial largess in the process. The record of the Catholic Church is especially reprehensible in this regard. Billy Graham and Jerry Falwell's "scriptural assistance" to Nixon during the Vietnam War era come readily to mind as well.

Letter #554 Continues (Part p)

Anti-semitism, he worries, will be hard to avoid should Christianity become culturally ascendant. This concern is hard to comprehend in light of the fact that it is Christians who are the strongest gentile supporters of Israel in this country, when it is Christians who believe that the Jews are God's chosen people, and when it is Christians who believe that it is our sin, not the Jewish people, which crucified Christ....

Editor's Response to Letter #554 (Part p)

This publication is concerned with presenting what the Bible teaches, SF, not how you choose to interpret or misinterpret Scripture. Portions of the New Testament are clearly anti-semitic in essence. For you to allege that Christians "believe that it is our sin, not the Jewish people, which crucified Christ" is to erroneously allege that the scriptural comprehension of those opposed to your analysis is weak, and to ignore the fact that many biblically-based Christians not only clearly hold Jews responsible for the death of Jesus, but don't look upon the Jews as God's chosen people. In 1 Thess. 2:14-15 Paul says, "...the Jews: who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men; forbidding us to speak to the gentiles....," and while speaking to the Jews Peter says, "...that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified..." (Acts 4:10) and "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree" (Acts 5:30). Jews are persecutors of Jesus according to John 5:16, 5:18 and 7:1 and accuse him of having a Devil (John 8:52). Jews delivered Jesus to Pilate (John 18:35) and Jesus says Jews are satanic (John 8:44). And according to the commentary in John 19:1-23, Jews combined with Roman soldiers to slay Jesus. So, for you to say the Bible does not propagate anti-semitism is ridiculous.

The problem for people who choose to look upon the Jews as God's chosen people is to reconcile this with biblical comments that clearly attribute the death of God's son to God's chosen people. God's Chosen killing God's only begotten son generates a clash of great significance. Christians in support of Israel have decided to ignore the Crucifixion in favor of Chosenness, while others have decided to ignore Chosenness in favor of focusing upon those responsible for the Crucifixion. Some Christians believe that Jews are God's Chosen and our sin crucified Christ, while others do not. From a NT perspective, the latter position is more viable.

Letter #554 Concludes (Part q)

Having spent some time with this article an objective reader might find himself left with several thoughts. One is that the author of such a piece must be either intellectually unscrupulous or terribly unsophisticated....

I have no doubt that McKinsey knows the Bible, but I don't think he understands it at all....

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #554 (Part q)

For you to denigrate the character of others, SF, while exhibiting in your letter more shortcomings than one would care to recite is nothing short of absurd. Your biblical comprehension is poor and your understanding of Christianity's role throughout history is even poorer. You refer to me as "intellectually unscrupulous or terribly unsophisticated", when these terms could more accurately be applied to yourself with "or" being replaced by "and." Like so many Christians, you twist, distort, pervert and, when all else fails, ignore thousands of biblical verses that don't conform to your conception of what the Bible "should" say. You create your own script with numerous embellishments, and then foist it on the public. The parallel between your activities and those of snake-oil salesmen is unavoidable. While supposedly providing the cure for everything, you only drain your devotee's resources, while keeping him in a detached euphoria at best. His problems are not cured, but only viewed in a different light.

Letter #563 from Dr. KM

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I've read a number of back issues of B.E., and I think I have a pretty good idea of what you're trying to do, but as far as I can see, in all this time, you've neglected one very important point that affects all your arguments, and that is this: God can do anything. Any Sunday-school child can tell you that.

And what does that mean? It means that God can, whenever He wants to, take a contradiction and turn it into a non-contradiction. He can take a fallacy and turn it into truth. That is only one way He can "confound the wise".

You can say "Well, 'white is black' is a contradiction." It is, unless and until God wants it not to be. Then "white is black" is no longer a contradiction, but is gospel truth. God is more powerful than all the laws of reason and logic, and can nullify or change the rules in any way at any time. Don't ask me how He can do it. His ways are omnipotent, and beyond my understanding or yours. If he wants to turn "up" into "down" or say that " $1 + 1 = 3$ " He can do it and it will make perfect sense in a microsecond. Every verse in the Bible is literally true. People like you are just too narrow-minded and have such tunnel vision that you can't accept the almighty power of an infinite and omnipotent God. Change your ways, Mr. McKinsey, and you can have a great reward at the end of your life.

Editor's Response to Letter #563

Dear Dr. KM. You have taken pseudo-intellectual anti-intellectualism to new heights by submitting the ultimate in religious inculcation and gibberish. I always thought Dr. Peter Ruckman's book Science and Philosophy was the most anti-intellectual composition in my repertoire, but your letter has surpassed even his absurd meanderings. This situation is made all the more tragic by the fact that your perverse thought processes and those of Ruckman are loaned an aura of respectability by a doctorate in something or other. Critiquing your letter is in a category by itself. You are among those pathetic beings who have left the realm of reason, logic, rationality, evidence, proof, data, and common sense and entered a never-never land of make believe and self-indulgent bliss. You refer to a being whose existence you can in no way prove, and assert he is capable of performing deeds which you can in no way demonstrate. As sad as it is to say, KM, you are a disgrace to every scientist, every inventor, every person who has ever tried to improve the status of mankind by demonstrating that which they allege. All you have succeeded in doing is proving that when carried to its ultimate conclusion, religious propaganda is dangerous to sane minds and can only lead to a total divorce from reality, not unlike that found in neurotics and psychotics. You would have humanity believe that there can be a square circle, a four-sided triangle, and a non-existent existing being. You would have us believe that God can totally -- not partially -- totally destroy himself and then bring himself back into existence. You would have us believe that God can create a being more powerful than himself, or create something too heavy for him to lift. You would have us reject the law of non-contradiction itself, and have us believe that something can be itself and not itself simultaneously. You would literally have us believe that black can be white--the quintessence of inculcation, propaganda, indoctrination, and brainwashing. Is it any wonder that you would have us accept the Bible as the inerrant word of a supreme being? It's nothing more than the logical culmination of an up-is-down philosophy that can only lead to the rejection of all contradictions per se. Once people seriously adopt your philosophy, then anything they choose to believe can be justified on the grounds that God can do anything and God is on their side. They don't have to prove by reason or demonstrate by proof; all they need do is assert, and that alone is sufficient for verification. Talk about being divorced from the real world and dwelling in phantasia! Following that stream of thought I could claim to be god and defy you to prove otherwise. After all, you said god can do anything, anything. If that's true, then I could very well be god. Even more important, my claim to be god is true until you can prove the contrary, which is impossible. How do you know for certain that I am not god?-- prove it. I defy you to prove that I am not God. If you were to ask me to perform some stupendous feats, I need only say that I do not choose to do so, and you were told by Scripture not to test the Lord thy God. If you say my behavior is imperfect, I would only ask you to observe the activities of God in the OT and note that they were justified as well. That settles the matter. Every one of your thrusts could be easily parried. In fact, everyone on the face of this planet could make equally incredible claims and your stance with them would be no stronger than with me. You religionists just don't realize that you have to PROVE things. You completely ignore your own book, which clearly says "Prove all things" (1 Thess. 5:21). Merely saying or believing something is wholly insufficient. You just don't understand that when you alter or remove a basic intellectual concept, such as the law of non-contradiction, a chain reaction is set in motion that affects everything down the line. Everything is interrelated, and what you think will work to your favor in one instance will operate to your detriment in others. If you can go on a wild spree, then so can I. If you can make ludicrous claims, then so can I. And mine are not only as valid as yours, but equally incapable of being disproven. The pandora's box you seek to open for yourself is also opened for all of mankind, and the only limits are the imaginations of all concerned. Someone could murder the person you love most and claim he is either god or acting on god's orders, and until you proved otherwise, you would have no right whatever to punish him. How do you know he isn't being truthful? I challenge you to prove otherwise! If you took his life, you could very well be killing a physical manifestation of god, and I don't need to tell you what the ultimate punishment for that would be.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #564 from SF of York, Penn.

Dear Dennis.

Over the last several years, you have done a great job, exposing Bible contradictions. Non-believers and atheists will all agree and approve of that. But how effective is it with the superstitious majority? I would like to suggest that you go after absurdities. The Bible has just as many ridiculous absurdities as contradictions (and an absurdity would only require one verse). As an example, the "flood"--would require more water than exists on earth. Where did it all come from, and where did it all go? (It didn't, it couldn't!) An obvious absurdity.

Editor's Response to Letter #564

Dear SF.

Over the years we have mentioned quite a few biblical absurdities. They are by no means as rare as you might think. For example, most of the 9th Issue, especially the commentary entitled Biblical "science," discusses a sizable number of absurdities. You asked where all the water involved in the Flood went, which is one of the questions we posed years ago that now resides in our sample issue. If you are really interested in these kinds of difficulties I would recommend The Bible Handbook by Foote and Ball which has over 50 pages of absurdities listed.

Letter #565 from DM of Pasadena, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

Regarding letter #537e, I think that the truth would not please GM. The real reason why Jesus' resurrection was given such play in the NT, as you have made clear, has nothing to do with its biblical uniqueness or miraculous content. Rather, Jesus was being cast increasingly into the popular "pagan" mold of a savior god, joining the ranks, as it were, of such worthies as Attis (Phrygia), Mithra (Persia), Adonis (Syria), Bel (Babylonia), Osiris (Egypt), Prometheus (Greece), Krishna (India) and others. A glorious resurrection, entailing hope for mankind, was the heart and cornerstone of every savior god, long before Jesus came onto the scene. Jesus evolved from a classical Jewish messiah to a "pagan" savior god. Early Christian communities scattered around the Mediterranean, populated by recent "pagan" converts, naturally read their Hellenized ideals into Jesus, and their influence no doubt increased after the Roman conquest of the Holy Land.

Regarding letter #537g, I recommend that you refer to claims which have no evidential support as "non-facts" or some such term. Calling the existence of something "false" implies two things: (1) The object is meaningfully defined. (2) The object, in fact, does not exist. In the case of God, as envisioned by Christian theologians, it seems that the definition consists of a systematic negation of every quality or aspect of existence. That is, God is neither here nor there, without mass or dimension, invisible, etc. Thus, one wonders if the word "God" has, in the final analysis, any more meaning than "Jobblywick." We would not say that the existence of a Jobblywick is a false statement. The statement could also be called a "non-fact" which would cover in addition those cases where a Jobblywick is clearly defined (a two-foot green spider with red wings), but of which there is not the least bit of evidence.

After reading RS's letter (#551) a thought occurred to me. Why don't you try to round up 10 volunteers who will type the back issues of BE onto a computer disk? Surely, there must be eight others besides RS and myself who might willingly provide the labor if the workload isn't too heavy. I can see knocking off a dozen issues of BE over two or three weeks, without disrupting my routine too severely, and maybe others with computers would come to the same conclusion. If ten volunteers can be found, I'm willing to coordinate such a committee if no one else wants the job.

Think of it, BE roaring into the computer age! Every name or word being located by powerful search and find commands! Easy printouts (and custom handouts) of selected material! Easy duplication and a low price for a disk of all the back issues! Enthusiastic supporters loading portions of BE on electronic bulletin boards everywhere!

Editor's Response to Letter #565

Dear DM.

We appreciate your willingness to undertake the computerization of BE, but we already have a gentleman who has volunteered to type the first fifty issues onto a computer data disk. He is working on it now. Assigning a separate chapter to different people, working with different programs on different computers, is a prescription for disaster. I can imagine the dissimilarity that would arise. We do hope, however, to enter the computer realm much more extensively in the not-too-distant future.

Letter #566 from BY of Seminole, Florida

[While debating BE, GM made the following comment in Part (e) of Letter #537 on page 3 of Issue #129. He stated, "Your argument is not only invalid; it is misleading for a reader of Biblical Errancy not acquainted with the Bible, like BY of Seminole, Florida, who trusts your Periodical when he/she quotes the Bible." That statement prompted the following reply from BY, himself--ED.]

Since GM of letter #537 used ME as an example of how you are "misleading" people, I'd like to add a response of my own.

GM, you are making assumptions about me without any facts to back them up. I know this is not unusual for Christians, but unlike those referred to in the ancient texts, I'm still alive to rebut your errors. To begin with, without in any way detracting from this publication which I have found to be utterly reliable in those cases I've had occasion to check, I would certainly not be much of a scholar of anything if I relied only on one source without independent verification. In fact, this is the most grievous error that Bible-believers make, especially when the source they rely on has been translated, hand-copied, reinterpreted, and exists in so many variations--all claiming inspiration from an identical divine source--that none might be considered authoritative. However, BE constrains itself to the most popular version upon which most believers base their faith, and I will confine myself there as well. It so happens that I have the entire KJV on the hard drive of my computer, making it quick and easy to grab a printout of both the verses mentioned and surrounding ones, avoiding the claims of "out of context." Additionally, I have a small library of concordances and guides other than BE, some written by apologists such as yourself, and some written by more rational thinkers.

In circumstances where I have used these independent sources, the rational thinkers have always concurred with BE, and the apologist arguments are always so rife with fallacies that they are usually absurd. Most end with appeals for acceptance on the basis of faith, which is equivalent to admitting that reason cannot refute BE's claims.

Reliance on faith as a basis for life is foolish. Faith is simply emotion, wrongly used (as Ayn Rand and others have often noted) as a cognitive tool. If you need evidence as to the foolishness of allowing feelings to direct your life, ask yourself how many people have bought lottery tickets (or something similar, in case there is no lottery in Finland) because they "had a lucky feeling." Of course, when they lose, they seldom recall the strength of this "lucky feeling" that caused them to act as fools.

It would seem that Jesus himself had similar "lucky feelings", which undoubtedly accounts for that famous phrase, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" when he recognized that he too had lost the lottery. As Dennis notes, these are not the words of a man who planned it this way.

Letter #567 from JS of Medford, Massachusetts

Dear Dennis.

I hope your battle against mythological deception continues apace. "Judge" Joseph F. Rutherford, second president of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society (Jehovah's Witnesses) so aptly chirped at one time, "Religion is a snare and a racket"! I am hardpressed to disagree with him--on that count! As a former religionist I now take sides with you in your valiant battle!

Editor's Response to Letter #567

Dear JS.

Since Rutherford is one of the foremost leaders in the evangelistic movement, your quote could be of great assistance. Could you please cite book and page where it can be found?

Letter #568 from TF of Eau Claire, Wisconsin

Dear Dennis.

... I am attending the University of Wisconsin--Eau Claire with a double major of Philosophy and Religion. In my Bible classes the instructors typically do not emphasize the many errors, contradictions, failed prophecies, and atrocities contained in the Bible, but I take advantage of the opportunity and always raise my hand and point these things out for the benefit of the class. Most of these students were brought up as Christians, yet this is the first time they have actually read the Bible for themselves instead of listening to their clergy tell them what it allegedly says. Many of them are embarrassed, shocked, and outraged by what they are reading within the pages of this book, and it is obvious from their responses that they are beginning to question their religious upbringing. Truly the Bible is its own worst enemy....

Editor's Response to Letter #568

Dear TF.

Like many others, you are using BE in the manner intended. You researched the issue, found an audience, didn't expect people to come calling, and engaged biblicists on their own turf. You deserve a bouquet!

Letter #569 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California

Dear Dennis.

I am thoroughly impressed by your new tape series. As far as I know, your new commentary tape series is the most comprehensive rebuttal to Christianity's pseudo-scholars available. You take the Christian "experts" on their own turf, and dispose of their arguments one by one. Christians turn to McDowell, Sproul, and others, little realizing they are headed on a one-way trip into never-never land. Your tapes prove decisively that the apologists can't solve the problems they claim to solve, and that the problems are incapable of being solved, except in dreamland. Keep up the good work!

Issue No. 135

March 1994

This month's issue will conclude our analysis of Archer's volume entitled the Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties.

REVIEWS

(ARCHER'S ENCYCLOPEDIA--Part 4) On page 294 Archer is asked: How could a holy God command Hosea to marry a harlot? Specifically, Hosea 1:3-4 says, "And the Lord said to Hosea, Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms: for the land hath committed a great whoredom, departing from the Lord. So he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim; which conceived, and bare him a son." Archer rationalizes the situation by saying, "From the standpoint of Hosea himself, looking back on his domestic tragedy, it was quite clear that when God had encouraged him to marry Gomer, the daughter of Diblaim, who He foreknew would be unfaithful to Hosea after he had married her, this amounted to a divine directive to marry a harlot. This does not necessarily mean that she had already shown a tendency to sexual promiscuity when he was courting her or that she was already a woman of ill fame when he married her...." To begin with God did not encourage Hosea to marry Gomer; he commanded it. "Go and take" is not mere encouragement. But even more importantly, Archer has all but ignored the text. The Living Bible states, "Go and marry a girl who is a prostitute." The NAB says, "Go take a harlot wife." The NEB says, "Go, take a wanton for your wife." The NIV says, "Go, take to yourself an adulterous wife and children." And the JB says, "Go, marry a whore, and get children with a whore, for the country itself has become nothing but a whore by abandoning Yahweh." Every citation clearly shows that the woman was a whore before Hosea married her. The text says nothing about foreknowing that Gomer would later become a whore, while it most certainly does show "that she was a woman of ill fame when he married her." Seeing no way out of the situation, Archer chose to simply rewrite the script to his own specifications.

Moving to another problem, Archer is asked on page 329: Is the mustard seed really the smallest of all seeds? Obviously Archer toned down the question, which should have been: Didn't Jesus lie when he said the mustard seed was the smallest of all seeds? In any event, Archer replies, "In Matthew 13:31-32 Jesus describes the mustard seed as being 'smaller than all the seeds.' The question arises as to whether this statement could be supported by a knowledgeable botanist, or did Christ make a mistake in His rating of the comparative size of the mustard seed? In all probability, He was referring to the black mustard seed.... J.C. Trever in the Interpreter's Dictionary suggests that the orchid seed is even smaller than the seed of the black mustard. But it is highly questionable whether Jesus was discussing all plant life on planet Earth when He made this statement. No one yet has proved that ancient Palestinians planted anything that bore a smaller seed than that of the black mustard, and that was the framework within which Jesus was speaking." First, how does Archer know that "in all probability" he was talking about the black mustard seed? He's guessing, and what difference does it make what kind of mustard seed is under consideration? As Trever strongly implies, in a Christian publication no less, the orchid seed is smaller than every kind of mustard seed; so Jesus erred. Second, for Archer to say that it "is highly questionable whether Jesus was discussing all plant life on earth" is equally conjectural. He is pulling speculations out of a hat, because nothing in the text justifies that conclusion. Jesus said the mustard seed is the smallest of all seeds, period. He did not qualify the comment by saying it only applied to seeds in Palestine. Third, as is so often true of religionists, Archer tried to shift the burden of proof by alleging that no one has proved that ancient Palestinians planted anything that bore a smaller seed than that of the black mustard seed, when they are under no obligation to do so. Instead, Archer is obligated to prove that only seeds within Palestine are being discussed. Jesus said the mustard seed was the smallest of all seeds; he did not say it was the smallest of all seeds in Palestine. It is incumbent upon Archer to prove that Palestine, rather than the world at large, was intended. Jesus attached no qualifications or modifications to his statement, and for that reason the burden of proof lies on Archer's shoulders.

On page 373 Archer is asked how Jesus can call some men gods, as is done in John 10:34 ("Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods?"). His vapid defense is as follows. "In citing Psalm 82:6, Jesus was appealing to a verse from the infallible Scriptures...that attaches the name or title 'god' to certain men, not to all men, of course, but only 'those to whom the word of God came' (John 10:35). A divine dimension was added to those people who had been especially chosen by God to be bearers of His saving truth and administrators of His holy law. In Psalm 82 God is addressing judges and administrators who have been chosen to serve as His representatives in teaching and enforcing His holy law...." In the first place, what difference does it make how many men are involved? No man at any time can rightly be called a god. From a biblical perspective, the word is inapplicable to all men and can't be applied to anyone, even a select few. Secondly, if the word can be applied to men "who have been chosen to serve as His representatives in teaching and enforcing His holy law," then Peter, Paul, Moses, some prophets and several other people can be called gods as well. But isn't Christianity a monotheistic religion? Apparently Archer just couldn't concoct a better defense.

Moving further, on page 378 Archer is asked if Abraham was 75 years old when he left Haran. His reply is, "In Acts 7:4 Stephen asserts that Abraham did not leave Haran for Canaan until after his father, Terah, was dead. But Terah did not die, according to Gen. 11:32, until the age of 205. That would mean Abraham must have been 135 when he left Haran, since Terah fathered him at the age of 70, according to Gen. 11:26. But Gen. 12:4 states that Abraham was only 75 when he migrated to Canaan. Therefore Stephen was 60 years off in his statement.... But things are not really as bad for Stephen as the previous paragraph declares, for there is one serious fallacy. Gen. 11:26 records: 'And Terah lived 70 years, and became the father of Abram, Nahor and Haran.' Normally the first named in a list of sons is the oldest, but that rule has its exceptions. Abraham was not Terah's oldest son, even though he was named first. It is far more likely that Haran was Terah's oldest, since he was the first of them to die (Gen. 11:28). Concerning Nahor's death we have no information, except that he outlived Haran, and that his descendants Laban and Rebekah were living up in the region of Haran by the time of Isaac's marriage. But in all probability the reason Abraham was mentioned first was that he was by far the most important of the three brothers. Even though he must have been born when his father was 130--and may therefore have been the youngest of the three--he was the most prominent of them all as far as historical achievement was concerned."

Archer's resolution of this difficulty is unconvincing, to say the least. To begin with, Gen. 11:26 clearly states that Terah fathered Abram, Nahor, and Haran at age 70. It doesn't say that he fathered Nahor and Haran and 60 years later fathered Abraham. What in the text would lead one to believe there was a 60 year gap between the birth of the sons, and why would Abraham even be mentioned with respect to the children Terah fathered at age 70, if there were a 60 year gap between Abraham and his brothers? And if Terah fathered only Nahor at age 70, then why were Abraham and his brother Haran mentioned? Secondly, since Abraham was mentioned first, it seems reasonable to assume he was the oldest, despite the prior death of Nahor. If anyone was born when Terah was 130, it was one of Abraham's brothers. And finally, most versions of Gen. 11:26 blow Archer's rationalization out of the water. The Living Bible says, "By the time Terah was 70 years old, he had three sons, Abram, Nahor, and Haran." The NAB says, "When Terah was 70 years old, he became the father of Abram, Nahor and Haran." The BBE says, "And Terah was 70 years old when he became the father of Abram, Nahor, and Haran." The NEB says, "Terah was 70 years old when he begot Abram, Nahor, and Haran." And the JB says, "When Terah was 70 years old he became the father of Abram, Nahor, and Haran." In every instance, the text clearly shows that all three sons were born before Terah reached the age of 71, and none even remotely implies that Abraham was born 60 years later.

And lastly, on page 383 Archer is asked with respect to another topic: Was Paul obedient or disobedient to the Spirit when he went on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem? He responds by saying, "Acts 20:22 ('And now, behold, bound in spirit, I am on my way to Jerusalem, not knowing what will happen to me there, except that the Holy Spirit solemnly testifies to me in every city, saying, that bonds and afflictions await me') expresses Paul's confidence that he is in the will of God as he journeys back to Jerusalem to fulfill his vow as a pilgrim. But in Acts 21:4 ('And finding disciples...who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem') the disciples at Tyre kept telling Paul through the Spirit not to set foot in Jerusalem...." Paul later went to Jerusalem and Archer explains his defiance by saying, "It is clear that the Holy Spirit did everything to warn Paul of the danger and suffering that awaited him if he went back to Jerusalem. The statement in 21:4 that the disciples told Paul through the Spirit not to set foot in Jerusalem makes it sound as if Paul was acting in disobedience...." Of course, that's understandable in light of the fact that he was, as is noted by a scholar named Pettingill, whom Archer quotes as saying, "Paul was forbidden to go to Jerusalem at all. It is therefore evident that he was out of the Lord's will." Archer claims Pettingill's "position is difficult to maintain in view of God's continued faithfulness to him through all his trials." And Archer later concludes by saying, "All things considered, then, it seems best to understand Acts 21:4 as conveying, not an absolute prohibition of Paul's journey to Jerusalem, but only a clear, unmistakable warning that he is not to set foot in Jerusalem--if he wants to avoid danger and stay out of serious trouble."

The obvious defect in Archer's protracted explanation lies in the fact that Acts 21:4 says, "who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem." It's not a warning; it's a direct command. Don't do it, period! Paul chose to ignore a direct order from the Holy Spirit, relayed to him through his disciples, and went. Nothing was said about suffering, trouble, or dangers allegedly awaiting him. Archer's Christian compatriot, Pettingill, correctly concluded that Paul "was out of the Lord's will" and that's about all that needs to be said on that topic. Paul was disobedient, not obedient. He defied God.

DEWITT'S BEYOND THE BASICS--One of the most common problems to plague the Gospels is the numerical clash between different accounts. On pages 59 and 60 in the book entitled Beyond the Basics, apologist David DeWitt addresses this issue by saying, "Mark 5 and Luke 8 describe one Gerasene demoniac who confronted Jesus, whereas Matthew 8 says there were two. Matthew 28:2 mentions only one angel at Christ's tomb, and John 20:12 says there were two.... In the case of two demoniacs versus one, and two angels at the tomb or one, that is certainly no contradiction. If there were two, there certainly was one. There were, no doubt, many angels, and a hillside full of demoniacs. One author simply mentions two, whereas the other zeros in on one. The Bible never says there was only one demoniac or only one angel." This is the most common rationalization given for difficulties of this nature, and several problems accompany each excuse. First, the text refers to one demon-possessed man in Mark and Luke, and two in Matthew. DeWitt is assuming an additional man exists in the former accounts, even though he is not referred to in any way. Second, DeWitt is assuming the larger number is always correct and the lesser is not. Why couldn't the reverse be true? If four different witnesses to a hit-and-run accident say there were one, two, three, and four people in the car, respectively, are police to automatically assume four is the correct number? Are they to automatically accept the higher figure? Are they to ignore the possibility of shadows, faulty vision, distorted angles, distractions, human-like contents of the automobile, etc.? Or should they just immediately assume the greatest number is valid. That's the procedure apologists want critics of the Bible to follow. Why couldn't the lower number be correct and the higher number be erroneous? And third, if we are going to make assumptions, why can't we assume 6, 8, 10 or even 50 men possessed with demons are involved and both accounts are invalid? Why can't we let our imaginations run wild and concoct any figure that strikes our fancy? If proof is not required, we could say the hit-and-run car was crammed with people, although only four were seen. After all, two can play that game. Apologists operate on the assumption that anything possible is actual, until disproven, which is only another ruse by which to shift the burden of proof and ignore our time-honored maxim that The Burden of Proof Lies on He Who Alleges.

In another defense DeWitt says on page 59, "Mark 6:8 speaks of the disciples taking staffs along on their journey, but Matthew 10:9-10 seems to speak against it.... Concerning taking a staff (Mark 6:8) versus not having one (Matthew 10:9-10), a closer reading will solve the supposed problem. In Mark 6 Christ instructs them to only take along 'a mere staff,' whereas in Matthew 10 He tells them not to 'acquire' an additional one. In Mark the instruction is on what to take along, but in Matthew the instruction is concerning what they are not to acquire after they got going." One need only read the appropriate texts to see that this explanation is without substance. Mark 6:8 says, "He charged them to take nothing for their journey except a staff; no bread, no bag, no money in their belts." In other words, they were to take a staff. But Matthew 10:9-10 says, "Take no gold, nor silver, nor copper in your belts, no bag for your journey, nor two tunics, nor sandals, nor a staff, for the laborer deserves his food." In other words, they were not to take a staff. How much clearer could the text be? Where does Matthew say anything about what they were to acquire after being underway? Matt 10:5 clearly shows that Jesus is giving them marching orders prior to the commencement of their journey. When Jesus says, "Take...no staves" for your journey, he is saying they should not be acquired at the start, and subsequent behavior is irrelevant.

On pages 68-69 DeWitt provided additional proof that his biblical defenses warrant little credibility. He stated, "It may be, for instance, that the apostle Paul thought that Jesus Christ was coming back during his own lifetime. If he did, he was wrong. But if he did, he never said that in the Bible." One can only say in response to this observation that DeWitt needs to read scripture with a more discerning eye. In 1 Thess. 4:17 Paul says, "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Two verses earlier he stated, "...we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep" and in 1 Cor. 7:29 he said, "...the time is short..." In Heb. 1:2 Paul said, "In these last days" and in Heb. 10:37 he said, "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry." So, clearly Paul felt the end of the world was coming in the lifetime of his contemporaries, and he expected to be snatched up bodily into heaven with the other disciples then living who would, thus, never taste death. Paul taught his converts that Christ's coming was close at hand, and after 2,000 years it is safe to conclude that his prophecy is as erroneous as DeWitt's observation that he made no such prognostication.

On pages 90-92 DeWitt recites the fundamentalist belief--Once saved, always saved--and then says, "Of all the major world religions, biblical Christianity is the only one that teaches that we cannot lose our salvation.... Salvation is a cleansing of all sins of all time totally accomplished by Christ on the cross and applied to the believer at the time he or she receives Christ. Can a Christian stop believing? Of course he can! But he cannot stop being saved...." Then DeWitt is asked about the unpardonable sin and says, "The expression 'the unpardonable sin' is in one sense like the expressions 'Cleanliness is next to godliness' and 'God helps those who help themselves.' The one thing all such expressions have in common is that not one of them is in the Bible.... The Bible mentions a sin committed by the Pharisees that Jesus called 'blasphemy against the Spirit,' adding that, for whoever did what they did, 'it shall not be forgiven him, either in this age or in the age to come (Matt. 12:31-32, Mark 3:28-30, Luke 12:10). A couple of observations are significant to understanding the 'blaspheming against the Spirit' as seen in Matt. 12. For one thing, the 'blasphemy against the Spirit' is nowhere repeated in the Bible. The apostles never warned anybody about it.... They were very specific in their warnings and exhortations to the early church, careful not to overlook anything that the Body of Christ was to be or not be."

What difference does the apostolic influence make? A direct instruction from Jesus should be more than sufficient. Since when do his admonitions have to be reiterated by the apostles to have validity? If that were true, a wide variety of his teachings would lack substance.

DeWitt continues, "A second observation to consider here is that there are two different kinds of events described in the Bible. There are the ones that might be repeated anytime (like someone praying) and the ones that will probably never be repeated (like the Israelites crossing the Red Sea on dry land). Some sins are unique to a certain time.... The sin of Matthew 12 appears to be just such a sin.... To blaspheme the Spirit was actually to see Jesus in a human body doing miracles by the power of the Holy Spirit and to reject that as evidence that He was the Messiah, the God of Israel. This sin was committable while Jesus was physically on earth doing those things. After that, the conditions for this particular unpardonable 'blasphemy against the Spirit' were (and are) not present. Therefore it could not be committed today."

There is nothing in Matthew 12:31-32 that would lead one to believe that it "appears" to be a unique sin, and where does the text say that in order to blaspheme the Holy Spirit you must "see Jesus in a human body doing miracles by the power of the Holy Spirit and reject that as evidence that He was the Messiah"? DeWitt is rewriting the script according to his predilections, and has increased the amount of material contained therein. He is asserting the sin could only be committed while Jesus was alive, which is nowhere to be found in the text, and is alleging the sin consists of rejecting miracles performed by Jesus, which isn't scriptural either.

Interestingly enough, DeWitt's explanations still won't allow him to escape. If this unpardonable sin could only have been committed by contemporaries of Jesus who saw him doing miracles in a human body, we would still have people who would not have had all of their sins forgiven by him. He could not have paid for the unpardonable sins of contemporary detractors who witnessed his miracles but denied his messiahship. So DeWitt's comment on page 91 that "Salvation is a cleansing of all sins of all time totally accomplished by Christ on the cross" is fallacious.

DeWitt is resorting to a strategy often invoked by apologists. If a biblical maxim is liked by the Bible's defenders, they say it is applicable to all men everywhere. If, on the other hand, it is anathema or offensive, they claim it only applies to those being admonished at that particular time. Biblicists leap in and out of biblical teachings like porpoises following in a ship's wake.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #570 from of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis.

I recently wrote a letter to the Editor of our local paper where I stated the contradiction between Num. 23:19, which says that God doesn't repent, and Ex. 32:14 which says, "And the Lord repented...."

A Rev. John R. Wayne responded with this; "Secondly the supposed contradiction regarding God's 'repenting' is clearly a matter of context. Num. 23:19 is simply a statement that God is not like a sinful man in need of repentance; while Exodus 32:14 tells of God's mercy toward a band of disobedient Hebrews, in response to an intercessory prayer offered by Moses."

I wrote a second letter where I quoted verses. Unfortunately the second letter wasn't printed, leaving the impression that Rev. Wayne's "clarification" was valid. I am beginning to see how sneaky and dishonest Christians are. I am still writing letters to the editor and every one is being challenged. But I have BE! And I fight back....

In another letter I quoted the OT teachings on slavery and the status of women. Mr. Bjerkhoel wrote in saying that "the position of woman has been greatly changed for the better through Christianity" and we are no longer under the old law. Well, thanks to your BE I replied that someone forgot to tell Peter and Paul, and quoted the NT verses supporting slavery and the subservience of women. Dennis, when you have the truth (i.e. BE) it is wonderful! Thank you so much.

And I found another JW to show my short list of 8 verses. Four say no one has ever seen God, and four say they saw God. I wish that you could have seen the sinking look on her face. She said, "Gee, if someone read this they might think that the Bible contradicted itself." I wish you the best.

Letter #571 from JL of Seattle, Washington

Dear Dennis.

I just got your sample issue of Biblical Errancy today. All I can say is, wow! Where have you been all this time? I wish I had known about you sooner. For the last six months, I have been researching the question of New Testament reliability. I am an Agnostic going to Seattle Pacific University, a Free Methodist university in Seattle, WA. I have been challenged by several fundamentalist Christians who are Josh McDowell fans to investigate NT reliability.

Well, I've done about 160 hours of research on the subject so far, and I wish I had found your newsletter sooner. I looked through the list of materials you have available, and I think I eventually want a copy of all of it.... Keep up the good work!

Letter #572 from KB of Santa Barbara, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

As a late subscriber to Biblical Errancy I am in the process of catching up on all the back issues. In my view one of the most interesting of all the issues is number 15 and its in-depth comments concerning the doctrine of the Trinity. Countless books have been written about it...pro and con. People have been put to death for not believing in it. Everyone on both sides of the issue agrees that it is incomprehensible. It must be accepted on faith since it could never be accepted as a result of the reasoning process.

In all of my considerable readings on the trinity doctrine I have never read of anyone mentioning the following. If all three persons of the trinity are co-equal, as well as co-eternal, with no one any greater than the other two, then why was the son the one fated to be the "fall guy" in this great celestial drama? Why should it not have been the father who had to come to earth and offer himself as a living sacrifice to the son? To my way of thinking the fact that it was the son who had to placate the father is implicit recognition that the three so-called persons of the trinity are anything but equal.

Keep up the good, liberating work. You are a treasure to the freethought movement.

Letter # 573 from JB of Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Dennis.

...You completed phase one a few months ago. Now comes the marketing project. I doubt that there is a more thorough or comprehensive work in the world than what you have compiled. It deserves a lot more than frustrating a Jehovah's Witness or diehard fundamentalist.... A study of your works in a college religion course would be excellent exposure. Actually it should be a required course. Bible

Critique 101 could get the message out to anyone with an open mind.... Please give your superb work the exposure it deserves.

Letter #574 from RL of Marysville, Washington

Dear Dennis.

A thousand thanks for your great publication; it is eagerly awaited each month.

EDITOR'S NOTE: At long last our fledgling TV program is underway and airing every Wednesday and Friday at 7:00 P.M. in the northern half of Dayton, Ohio and some surrounding communities. We tape a 1/2 hour show every other Saturday morning at 10:00 A.M. and need volunteers to assist. The station kind enough to lend us its studio is located very close to the intersection of Interstates 70 and 75. Please contact us if you can arrive on a regular basis and are willing to be trained in one or more aspects of TV program production. Later we intend to activate and expand that list of volunteers compiled several years ago of people willing to play copies of them on their local public cable access channel.

DEHAAN'S 508 ANSWERS TO BIBLE QUESTIONS:

On page 25 in the book entitled 508 Answers to Bible Questions apologist M.R. DeHaan is asked: How could the Devil sin in Heaven? He responds by saying, "...we must remember that the Devil was not a redeemed creature, and, therefore, could sin, but we who are redeemed by the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, when we have received our resurrected bodies will be beyond all possibility of sinning. Remember that heaven, too, is going to be purified." DeHaan's conception of heaven is not only unbiblical, but illogical for several reasons. First, where does scripture say the Devil was unredeemed before his fall from heaven? If that were true, then he would have been a corrupt being in heaven before his fall, which is impossible, since corrupt beings can't be in heaven. Second, how could the Devil have behaved improperly in heaven? Heaven is a perfect place by definition, and nothing of an imperfect nature can occur there. It's the place that matters, not the deed or doer. The place only permits perfect behavior. And thirdly, whoever heard of heaven being "purified"? Heaven is going to be purified? How do you purify the perfect? If DeHaan's conception of heaven is valid, then Christians are attempting to enter a place that is similar to that which they are leaving. Hardly a pleasing prospect!

We have all seen babies being sprinkled or dunked in water by someone dressed in religious garb. Not only is the act of purifying someone who has never committed a morally reprehensible act incongruous, but the ritual itself is biblically unsupportable. Occasionally an apologist provides a correct response to biblical questions, and just such an answer is tendered by DeHaan to the query of whether or not infant baptism is taught in the Bible. He states, "...Carefully studying my Bible, I found that infant baptism is nowhere taught or even suggested in the Scriptures. It is a doctrine of the church which is certainly not founded upon the Word of God, but is a remnant of Roman Catholicism. There is not a clear instance of it in the Bible, and no trace of it until three hundred years after Pentecost. It is a wholly unscriptural doctrine of man...." DeHaan's analysis is correct.

Moving further, apologists claim that the angel of the Lord that reappeared several times in the OT was actually Jesus Christ. On page 57 DeHaan is asked where the Bible states that "the Angel of the Lord always refers to the Lord Jesus Christ in the Old Testament?" DeHaan responds by saying, "There is no direct statement which says in so many exact words that the 'angel of the Lord' is always the Lord Jesus, but it is rather on the accumulation of evidence where the term occurs in Scripture. From the various passages where the expression, 'the angel of the Lord,' occurs, it is quite evident that it is the second Person of the Trinity who is there, and who is the spokesman for the Trinity itself. We call this a 'theophany,' or an appearing of Jesus Christ in human form before His incarnation in Bethlehem. As is true of other doctrines of Scripture, we cannot put our finger on any one particular passage which states in so many words that this is true, but we have to assume it from the revelation." To say DeHaan is flying by the seat of his pants is an understatement. First, there is not only no "direct" statement saying so, but no "indirect" statement saying so, either. Second, there is not only a lack of "exact words" saying the angel of the Lord is Jesus Christ but a notable lack of "inexact words". Third, what "accumulation of evidence" is he referring to? He doesn't provide a shred of proof, let alone an accumulation. Fourth, in no way is it "quite evident" that the second Person of a Trinity is present. Fifth, DeHaan can call it a "theophany" or any other term he and his compatriots may wish to concoct, but it's not biblically sustainable. The evidence is weak at best and wholly unprovable in a court of law. And lastly, why do "we have to assume" Jesus appeared in the OT other than to satisfy the unsupportable Christian yearning for OT signs of the Trinity? Just because they are desperate for biblical assistance to their theological imaginings does not mean the rest of us have to follow suit. Much has been asserted but nothing proven. Interestingly enough, DeHaan ignored his own warning found on page 95, "Many Bible teachers and evangelists find things in the Bible which even the Lord did not place there." He would do well to heed his own advice.

Just to show readers the extent to which biblicists let their imaginations run wild through Scripture, we might note DeHaan's answer to the following question on page 96: Is the atomic bomb mentioned in Scripture, specifically Psalm 137:9, which says, "Happy shall he be, that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones?" He responds by saying, "In regard to your question concerning Psalm 137:9, we would refer you to Isaiah 13:16 ('Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes; their houses shall be spoiled, and their wives ravished'). The latter verse contains the same expression, and this is evidently referring to the atomic bomb in the judgment of the Lord during the tribulation, as seen in verses 13 and 14 of Isaiah 13 ('Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of Hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger...')." Children being dashed against stones and smashed into pieces is equivalent to atomic war? How DeHaan made this leap in logic is anyone's guess, and we are hearing this from a man with a doctorate degree. Shaking the heavens and moving the earth are far too vague to draw reliable conclusions. Assertions of this nature demonstrate why children should be kept as far from biblical indoctrination and "reasoning" as possible. Information within the verses themselves shows that they have nothing to do with the atomic bomb. Would people be concerned with ravishing wives and stealing from homes during atomic attack? More than likely concerns of this kind would be near the bottom of their list of priorities. Self-preservation, on the other hand, would undoubtedly be near the top. And would God employ the atomic bomb during the time of tribulation when his powers are far more potent?

On page 96 DeHaan confronts one of those problems that all biblicists would do well to flee. He is asked: How do you reconcile the Book of Ecclesiastes with the rest of Scripture? Specifically, DeHaan addresses the problem presented by Eccle. 1:9 ("The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun") by saying, "...Solomon speaks here not of the spiritual man, but of the physical man, and tells us that there is nothing new which man has ever discovered. All the inventions and discoveries of science are based upon the things which God has already placed in nature, so that he is only applying the laws and the materials which God has already created in making the things which we call new inventions. In this respect, there is 'nothing new under the sun'."

DeHaan is attempting to restrict the comment in Ecclesiastes to unformed matter and the natural laws by which it operates. But we are talking about more than just the ingredients out of which things are made. The arrangement of the materials is as important as the materials themselves. Airplanes, automobiles, computers, refrigerators, and millions of other items did not exist before 1800. Certainly their material components and the natural laws by which they operated were present, but all of the configurations in which they can lie vis a vis one another were by no means exhausted. So there are new things under the sun afterall.

On page 122 DeHaan is asked if Luke 14:26 ("If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple") teaches us to hate our parents. He responds by saying, "The word, 'hate,' in Luke 14:26 is a comparative word in the Greek and not an absolute word. It means that the tender love we have for our fathers and mothers and loved ones is like hatred in comparison with the love that we have for the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord certainly does not tell us to hate our loved ones." Several problems accompany his explanation. First, if what DeHaan says is true, then the translators of the NASB, the NIV, the NWT, the NEB, the ASV, the JB, the KJ, the RSV, and the BBE are incompetent, because every one of these versions uses the word "hate," when they could just as easily have said "love less." According to DeHaan, who is no more of a Greek scholar than those who translated these versions, the verse should have been translated as, "If any man come to me, and does not love his (relatives-- Ed.)...less than me, he cannot be my disciple." The difference between "love less" and "hate" is not only quantitative but qualitative. "Hate" is absolute in nature, while "love less" is not. Choosing between the two represents a major distinction in translation, which the translators of the previously-mentioned versions were no doubt aware of. Yet, they chose "hate" over "love less." Second, according to Strong's Concordance the word comes from the Greek word "miseo" which means "to detest (especially to persecute); by extension to love less:-- hate (ful)." Detest clearly means more than just to "love less" and no doubt explains why the translators opted for the word "hate." Third, in 38 other instances in which the Greek word "miseo" is used in the NT it is translated as "hate" not "love less." Like so many apologists, DeHaan is grasping for the highest straw in the bunch because he can't think of another excuse. And lastly, DeHaan says, "The Lord certainly does not tell us to hate our loved ones" when he just did. How much clearer could the text be. What would Jesus have to say to convince him that that is exactly what he intended? Jesus is saying you must reject everything in this world, even your closest companions, if you want to be his disciple. How would Jesus have to phrase his admonition to convince DeHaan that that's precisely what he means? To resort to the common defense--that's what it says but that's not what it means--is to grasp for a thin string indeed.

On page 133 DeHaan, like so many other apologists, became entangled in the perennial problem of whether or not one can be saved without the Gospel. After being asked if the heathen can be saved without the Gospel, he responds by saying, "In regard to your question concerning Romans 1:19-20, the Bible is plain that there can be no salvation apart from faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Faith in the God of creation is not enough. However, we must remember that God is a just and righteous God, and the heathen who have never heard the Gospel will be judged by the light which they had. The judgment of the heathen will be infinitely lighter than that of those who have heard the Word and then rejected it." Apparently DeHaan doesn't realize that he has fallen into a theological quicksand bog. He began by saying everyone had to believe in Jesus in order to be saved, and then reversed himself by saying that the heathen who have never heard the Gospel are exempted. They will be judged by whatever light they have. Regardless of the light they have, it is not the light of Jesus Christ. So how could they be saved under the criterion he himself established? Either they have Jesus or they don't. There is no in between. They are either saved or they aren't. If they are saved by whatever light they had, then, in effect, belief in Jesus is not mandatory. Secondly, if "the judgment of the heathen will be infinitely lighter than that of those who have heard the Word and rejected it," then justice becomes a mockery, because a dual standard rules the roost. People will be judged more leniently or stringently because of where or when they were born, and that's injustice in action. Yet, Deut. 32:4 says God is just. Moreover, missionaries are disserving the heathen immensely, because the latter's salvation is virtually assured until the former appear on the scene.

On page 136 DeHaan is asked what Romans 14:5-6 ("One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it") teaches in regard to observing a sabbath. He responds by saying, "The Christian has no sabbath. The Lord's day is not a command, but a privilege, and Romans 14:5-6 has to do with our liberty in Christ. The spirit, not the day, is of the greatest importance." DeHaan doesn't seem to realize that he has, in effect, abolished the fourth commandment found in Exodus 20 and Deuteronomy 5. What does he mean by saying the Christian has no sabbath? If that's true, then how can he adhere to the fourth commandment? How can he observe a day he denies exists? What is he doing to heed the fourth commandment? How can DeHaan say "the Lord's day is not a command, but a privilege," when Exodus 20:8 says, "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days you shall labor, and do all your work; but the seventh day is a sabbath to the Lord your God; in it you shall not do any work...." According to DeHaan you can obey or ignore the fourth commandment at will; you don't have to honor any day, be it the sabbath or the Lord's Day. If the spirit is all that matters, then any day could arbitrarily be deemed the sabbath and THE sabbath is fiction. You can call any day the sabbath or ignore it entirely, which hardly represents an adherence to the fourth commandment.

In regard to the same issue, DeHaan is asked on page 173 to explain the difference between the sabbath and the Lord's Day. He replies by saying, "Saturday is still the Jewish sabbath, but certainly not the Christian's. Sunday is not a sabbath, but the Lord's Day and the day of the resurrection. Saturday Christ spent in death; on the first day He rose from death.... The sabbath was a command to Israel. The Lord's day is a privilege for Christians. The sabbath has never been changed." Talk about perverting scripture and poor thought processes! In the first place, what does he mean by saying "Saturday is still the Jewish sabbath, but certainly not the Christian's." There are two sabbaths? How absurd! A "Christian sabbath" is unbiblical. Secondly, the 4th commandment says we are to observe the sabbath, not the Lord's Day. What difference does it make when the Lord's Day occurs when we are told to observe the sabbath? That's what matters! Whether or not the Lord's Day is a privilege or an obligation is irrelevant, since nothing is said about paying it homage. Third, since when did the fourth commandment become applicable only to Israel? It applies to everyone. Fourth, by DeHaan's own admission the sabbath has never been changed; therefore, the seventh day, Saturday, is the only day mankind is obligated to observe. And lastly, DeHaan admits Sunday is not the sabbath, and if that is true, then mankind is not obligated to observe Sunday in any event.

And finally, on page 209 DeHaan is asked: If Christ kept the law before Calvary, was he not breaking the law by plucking ears of corn on the sabbath day as recorded in Matthew 12:1? He answers by saying, "You are making the same mistake the Adventists and a great many others make in not distinguishing between the Law, and the traditions of the Law. When Christ 'violated the sabbath,' as you say, by picking corn, He was violating the 'tradition' of the Pharisees and the Scribes. Jesus Himself laid down the principle that it is good to do good on the Sabbath Day. If you will remember that it was 'tradition,' that Jesus violated, and not the 'Law of God,' I think you will have the solution to your problem." The only one making a mistake is DeHaan. People don't distinguish between the Law and "traditions of the Law" because no clearly defined biblical distinction is made, and that's a pretty good reason. If DeHaan tries to find textual support for his wholly arbitrary differentiation, he'll find the only one with a problem is himself. If plucking ears of corn on the sabbath can be relegated to the "traditions of men" category, then so can just about every other OT mandate. As was noted by his biblical critics, Jesus plucked ears of corn on the sabbath in clear violation of the law, and that's about all that needs to be said on that subject without becoming involved in maze of rationalization and obfuscation.

STEWART'S 99 QUESTIONS PEOPLE ASK MOST ABOUT THE BIBLE:

On page 17 in a book entitled 99 Questions People Ask Most About the Bible apologist Don Stewart says, "Jesus claimed to be the unique Son of God, God in human flesh. And he backed up his claim with the most remarkable event in history. He came back from the dead...." Actually, in light of other biblical feats, the resurrection was by no means remarkable. As has been noted in prior issues, many people rose from the dead both before and after Jesus. Christians never tire of extolling the Resurrection, even though it was surpassed by other accomplishments. It was not an exceptional event and the record clearly proves as much.

On page 27 Stewart says, "The Bible is a unity, one unfolding account from beginning to end in complete harmony and continuity." To that one can't help but reply: Read the book with a more discerning eye, my friend. If there is anything the Bible is not, it is harmonious.

Two pages later Stewart says, "Unfortunately, many who practice biblical criticism assume nothing in the Bible is true unless it is proved correct by some outside source. Scripture is assumed to be in error until some evidence can be brought up to substantiate its trustworthiness." Stewart's prejudice against biblical critics is all too obvious. The latter don't assume the Bible is erroneous throughout; in fact, they don't assume much of anything. But they do ask for proof. And when the only "proof" that is forthcoming in far too many instances is testimony from a book that is saturated with errors, contradictions, and supernatural events, they understandably discount its reliability. When I am told to believe in something by a book that is not only inconsistent but says people rose from the dead, sticks turned into snakes, donkey's talked, people walked on water and iron ax heads floated, you can understand my skepticism. Stewart does not hesitate to reject Greek, Roman, and Egyptian mythological literature when they speak of fantastic events. Yet he races to embrace Christian mythology, which is no less incredible.

Then Stewart says, "The benefit of the doubt should be given to the Bible, not to the critic, and the work should be assumed to be correct until some evidence is brought forth contradicting what has been said." Again we are confronted with the time-honored tactic so often exhibited by those of a superstitious/religious mentality--shift the burden of proof. Instead of proving their assertions are true, they claim the latter are valid until opponents can prove they aren't. As has been noted previously, if this position were credible, every crackpot theory imaginable would be valid until proven false. No, the burden of proof lies on him who alleges. Those who make an assertion are obligated to prove it is true; opponents are not obligated to prove it is false. And until proven valid; it's not to be accepted as true.

On page 80 Stewart states, "Today, no serious scholar doubts the existence of Jesus. The fact that Jesus lived is an established historical fact." Don't be ridiculous! It is by no means an established historical fact. A significant number of scholars doubt Jesus lived, not so much because they can prove he didn't, as that his adherents can't prove he did. After all, the burden of proof lies on the latter.

On the next page Stewart states, "... disciples were eventually transformed from cowards to martyrs. Because of the influence of Jesus, men's lives were radically altered." Stewart contends we shouldn't rely so heavily on extra-biblical information, when that is the only source of data he could possibly use to substantiate his martyrdom proposition. Nowhere does the Bible state that the disciples of Jesus were transformed from cowards to martyrs. That isn't biblically sustainable.

And finally, on page 91 Stewart says, "...every time Satan spoke, he lied." How does he square that comment with Luke 4:41, which says, "And devils came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God. And Jesus rebuking them suffered them not to speak: for they knew that he was Christ'." Or are we supposed to believe devils can tell the truth but The Devil cannot? And what about Gen. 3:4, in which The Devil told Eve she would not die on the day she ate the forbidden fruit? Since Eve relayed the message to Adam and he lived to be 930 years old after eating the fruit, it is safe to conclude the Devil told the truth.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #575 from JL of Seattle, Washington (Part a)
Dear Dennis.

I read your commentary on audio tape #5 and had some questions/responses for you. Specifically, I tried three of your four objections to the resurrection on a fundamentalist Christian, and I would like to share with you the responses I got.

First, you ask, "Why should the resurrection be of any significance to begin with, when other people rose from the dead before Jesus." Here is the response I got:

"This question shows a lack of knowledge of the Bible's message about the resurrection of Jesus.... Unlike any others, Jesus was without sin and was the perfect sacrifice to satisfy God's justice regarding payment for the sins of the world. When Jesus died he died for the sins of others, not for his own sin, since he was sinless, and thus the only person not worthy of death. His resurrection was the crowning statement that the power of death (which is sin) had been broken, and that forgiveness of sins and eternal life could be granted based on faith in the work of Christ. Finally, all others who came back to life in the Bible eventually died again, whereas Jesus rose never to die again."

Editor's Response to Letter #575 (Part a)
Dear JL.

Your fundamentalist acquaintance is attempting to employ a subtle shift in focus to escape what is otherwise a cul-de-sac. The first part of his answer, which includes everything but the last sentence, focuses on information that isn't even relevant. What difference does it make if Jesus was sinless or died for the sins of others? We aren't discussing his death; we are discussing his resurrection. That's the issue. And if his resurrection "was the crowning statement that the power of death had been broken," then some of his predecessors broke the power of death as well.

<

As far as the last sentence is concerned, he is attempting to link the resurrection to immaterial considerations. We are talking about the resurrection, per se, not factors relative to the character of the one being resurrected. Paul said it is the resurrection that matters, not the fact that Jesus never died again or was superior to those who rose before.

Incidentally, how does he know these people died again? That's not stated in scripture. Perhaps they went straight to heaven like Elijah in the chariot.

(TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

Letter #576 from DP of Ann Arbor, Michigan
Dear Dennis.

Congratulations on your fine work in BE. I look forward to examining the outcome of your association with Prometheus Books. I have one small criticism. You frequently say, as in Issue 135, page 4, "The burden of proof is on he who alleges."

I certainly agree with your meaning, but the pronoun should be "him", not "he". It's the object of the preposition "on" (the clause "who alleges" is an adjective clause modifying the objective pronoun him.) If the adjective clause modifying the pronoun is omitted, one can clearly see that the objective form of the pronoun is required. Your assertion could read: The burden of proof is on him who alleges. OR, if you prefer, The burden of proof is on the one who alleges (or the person who alleges). It's just a small point, but it makes English teachers and editors grind their teeth (I've been both of those). You are doing a brilliant job, a superlative job. Don't stop.

Editor's Response to Letter #576

Dear DP.

I thought "who" was merely a repeat of "he" and both were subjects of the verb "alleges". Apparently I'm mistaken, in view of the fact that other knowledgeable subscribers recently sent us correspondence corroborating your observation. Corrections of this nature are always welcome and accepted in a spirit of respect.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #577 from JP of Portland, Oregon

Dear Dennis.

One of the members of the Atheist Community Center introduced me to your newsletter, and I think it's fabulous. Therefore, I'd like to subscribe for one year. Frankly, I am glad that somebody is telling the truth about a 2,000 year old storybook that should be burned, banned, recycled, or just plain thrown away.

Would you, by any chance, be a professional editor/writer? Your skills really shine in your newsletter. So by all means, keep up the work! I'm looking forward to my first issue.

P.S. I also wanted to say that people like yourself are living proof that the home entrepreneur is alive and well. Why didn't I think of this concept? Oh well!

Editor's Response to Letter #577

Your kind comments are most appreciated and although I am not a professional writer or editor, I'd enjoy either role.

Letter #578 from DW of Marietta, Georgia

Dear Dennis.

I received and read my free sample issue of "Biblical Errancy" and have a few comments. I like the content, I like the format, I like the length, I like the price and I admire your style, your courage and your intransigent approach -- SIGN ME UP!....

Issue No. 137

SPROUL'S REASON TO BELIEVE:

On page 28 in a book entitled Reason to Believe, apologist R.C. Sproul is asked why the Bible is so offensive. An inquirer who wants to know why the law code laid down by God in the OT is so merciless asks on the next page, "When we examine the law code of Israel do we not see a legal ethic that is in fact bloodthirsty? Does not the list of over 35 crimes which require capital punishment reflect a barbarian ethic? Are not the punitive measures of the OT manifestations of what we would regard as cruel and unusual punishment?" Sproul responds by saying, "The law code of the OT seems harsh to us in light of our present societal standards. But we live in an age where serious sin is not taken seriously. We live in an age where the holiness of God and the sanctity of human life have been sadly eclipsed. If we compare the law of the OT with the law of creation, we see not the cruelty of God but the mercy of God. In creation all sin against God is regarded as a capital offense. In the slightest act of rebellion we commit cosmic treason. Any sin against a perfectly holy and righteous God may justly culminate in death. Thus the OT law represents a massive reduction of capital crimes which reveals not the bloodthirsty vengeance of an angry God, but the long-suffering mercy of a holy and loving God.... If we are offended by the Bible, perhaps the fault is not in God but in our own corrupt and distorted sense of values."

In light of his answer, Sproul would have done well to have avoided this question entirely, for several reasons. First, the law code of the OT would be considered harsh in any age. It doesn't "seem" to be harsh according to present societal standards. It is harsh, and would be considered harsh in any era. Secondly, we don't live in an age "where serious sin is not taken seriously." Hundreds of thousands of people are incarcerated in the United States for every felony imaginable. Perhaps the number isn't as high as Sproul desires? But he can't honestly say it isn't taken seriously. Thirdly, he is obligated to cite chapter and verse for this alleged "law of creation" that is even more stringent than the law of the Old Testament. Sproul is trying to make God look less oppressive by comparing his Old Testament laws to an even harsher code that is neither spelled out nor corroborated. Where does the Bible say that "in creation all sin against God is regarded as a capital offense"? Judged by an imaginary criterion that is neither delineated nor substantiated, anyone could be made to look good, no matter how reprehensible his behavior. Fourthly, he states that "in creation all sin against God is regarded as a capital offense and in the slightest act of rebellion we commit cosmic treason." What kind of justice is that? Stealing an apple or lying about one's age warrant execution! If Sproul's assertion has validity, then at one time there were thousands of acts deserving of capital punishment rather than a mere 35. Fifthly, even with all his fire and brimstone, the god of the OT never went so far as to allege that "all sin against God is regarded as a capital offense and the slightest act of rebellion" is "cosmic treason." In his exuberance to defend the faith at all cost, Sproul went beyond the pale. Sixthly, the allegation that God reduced the number of capital offenses to 35 hardly warrants serious consideration, in light of the fact that so many of the remaining 35 are ridiculous. According to Ex. 19:12 you can be executed for touching a mountain; Lev. 24:14 demands capital punishment for cursing; Num. 15:32-35 requires death for gathering sticks on the sabbath, and Deut. 21:15-21 requires the extreme penalty for striking your father or mother or disobeying your parents. In each instance the severity of the punishment is far out of line with the violation. Even with Sproul's alleged massive reduction of unspecified capital offenses, those which remain still reveal "the bloodthirsty vengeance of an angry God." And lastly, the only "corrupt and distorted sense of values" in evidence is that exhibited by Sproul's defense of a moral and legal code that is plagued by tremendous iniquities and disparities between transgressions and punishments.

On pages 122 and 123, Sproul digs himself into another hole when he says the following with respect to God's omnipotence, "In fact there are many things God cannot do. Reason tells us He cannot be God and not be God at the same time and in the same relationship. God cannot make a square circle or a two-sided triangle. Triangles by definition have three sides." So far so good. But Sproul continues by saying, "The point that is crucial, however, is that all of this does not deny the omnipotence of God but affirms it. The point of confusion rests with the meaning of the term 'omnipotence.' As a theological term the word does not mean God can do anything. What it does mean is that God does have all power over His creatures. The whole created order is always under the control and authority of God."

Sproul is exhibiting theological doubletalk. There is no confusion with respect to the meaning of the term "omnipotence." The only confusion lies with his feeble attempt to redefine the word by restricting its coverage. According to Webster's New World Dictionary "omnipotence" means "having unlimited power or authority." Yet, Sproul would have us believe God's power is restricted; it isn't unlimited. But if it's limited, then it's not all-powerful. Sproul wants an all-powerful, omnipotent being with abbreviated powers. Either God can create a square circle and a two-sided triangle or he can't. There's no in between. And if he can't, then he's not omnipotent, and the "whole created order" is not "under the control and authority of God." Squares, circles, and triangles are as much a part of the created order as anything else. And what difference does it make whether the term "omnipotence" is used theologically or otherwise? It's an absolutist word that allows no exceptions. That's about all that needs to be said on Sproul's efforts to have a foot in both camps.

SCRIPTURE MIXTURE

This new section consists of a potpourri of invalid or dubious biblical observations found in a variety of apologetic sources. Many writings don't have enough material to warrant a separate REVIEW section, but they do contain comments that deserve consideration.

COLQUHOUN'S HARD QUESTIONS:

On pages 112 and 113 of apologist Frank Colquhoun's dull book entitled Hard Questions the author addresses the topic of prayer and says, "It's not so much getting what you want as asking God to give you what he wants. Even Jesus prayed 'Your will be done' when he spoke to his Father." If that's true, then why bother praying? Why ask for what you are going to receive, regardless, since that's what God wants? Later Colquhoun says, "What then is the point of praying? Surely the only answer to that must be that God tells us to because he wants us to learn to depend on him and to align our needs and wishes with his will." What kind of an explanation is that? How can you align your needs and wishes with an uncertain will? Biblicists either know God's will or they don't. If they know it, then they can do it. So why pray? If biblicists don't know his will, then praying is nothing more than guesswork. So why pray?

MCDOWELL'S MORE THAN A CARPENTER:

On page 19 in his little book entitled More Than a Carpenter apologist Josh McDowell says, "Since none but God can forgive sins, it is conclusively demonstrated that Christ, since he forgave sins, is God." This argument no more proves Christ is God than a comparable claim by any street charlatan. Jesus may say an individual's sins are forgiven, but that doesn't mean they are. Just because someone makes an assertion doesn't mean it's true. If I met someone on the street and told him I forgave his sins, would that prove I am god or his sins were actually forgiven? Hardly! What evidence can biblicists provide to show that sins were forgiven by Jesus other than assertions of the latter and his accomplices? Saying something doesn't make it true, especially comments that are self-serving.

STEWART'S 101 QUESTIONS PEOPLE ASK MOST ABOUT JESUS:

On page 17 in this paperback edition apologist Don Stewart says, "Therefore, the question of the existence of Jesus is not an issue. Twenty-seven separate documents (the books of the NT--Ed.) written by people who had personal contact with Jesus testify to the fact that he did, indeed, exist. We add to their testimony that of the Jews and the Romans. Neither of these groups believed in Jesus.... Yet they never denied that he existed. Thus we can confidently say that the issue of Jesus' existence is not an issue at all. Every source, friendly and unfriendly, testified that he existed."

This is the kind of deceptive apologetic reasoning critics of the Bible should always be on the alert for. Stewart starts from a wrong assumption, proceeds wrong, and concludes wrong. First, the existence of Jesus is very much an issue, and is by no means settled. Second, he relies primarily upon a book, the NT, which is in total agreement with his basic premise. He is using a book to prove the validity of the book itself, the essence of circular reasoning. Third, scholars certainly do not agree that the authors of the various NT books had personal contact with Jesus. They not only clash over who wrote what books, but, even more importantly, when they were written. Fourth, Stewart began by saying the Jews and Romans never said Jesus did not exist, but concluded by saying every friendly and unfriendly source testified that he existed. There is a vast difference between these two assertions. The first is essentially one of neutrality with respect to the existence of Jesus; while the second denotes a strong belief in his prior existence. Stewart might be able to substantiate the first position, which has always been the stance of this publication, but he'll never be able to prove the latter is valid. Even today, plenty of "unfriendly" sources would never testify that Jesus existed, especially when his supporters have provided so little evidence that he did. For Stewart to allege that "every friendly and unfriendly source testified that Jesus existed" is ridiculous. That's never been the case.

Stewart says on page 34 with respect to another topic, "Jesus was unique in His victory over death-- the Resurrection." We have already shown in prior issues that this event is by no means unique, since many biblical figures rose from the dead before Jesus. No matter how many times they extol its distinctiveness, the Resurrection remains a bland occurrence from a biblical perspective.

On page 110 in the same book Stewart says the ministry of Jesus "was attested by miracles. He offered the proper credentials as the Messiah, yet they did not believe". He completely ignored biblical testimony to the effect that the ability to do miracles is not to be used to establish one's credentials as the messiah. According to Matt. 24:23-24/Mark 13:21-22 ("For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect") and Rev. 19:20 ("the beast was taken, and with him, the false prophet that wrought miracles before him....") false christs and false prophets can not only perform miracles, but fool the elect as well. Second Thess. 2:9 ("...Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders...") proves Satan himself can perform miracles. Even the pharaoh's magicians can execute miracles, according to Ex. 7:10-11, 21-22, and 8:6-7. So the ability to perform miracles is not to be used as a criterion by which to identify the messiah, because it also lies within the purview of false prophets, false christs, Satan, and magicians.

SISSON'S ANSWERING CHRISTIANITY'S MOST PUZZLING QUESTIONS, VOL. 1:

On page 80 in this verbose apologetic work, the author, Sisson, says, "Paul was an apostle. He had seen the risen Savior! Jesus Christ had called him by name. He was the divine instrument for bringing the authoritative message of the gospel to the Gentiles...." He erred in a couple of respects. To begin with Paul was not one of the 12 apostles, and for him to be repeatedly called the Apostle Paul is decidedly misleading. Secondly, he incorrectly related the sequence of events relative to Paul's conversion on the road to Damascus, which can be found in the ninth, twenty-second, and twenty-sixth chapters of the Book of Acts. Nowhere does it say Paul saw Jesus. In fact, Acts 9:3-9 says, "As Paul journeyed he approached Damascus, and suddenly a light from heaven flashed about him. He fell to the ground and heard a voice saying to him,.... The men who were traveling with him stood speechless, hearing the voice but seeing no one. Saul arose from the ground; and when his eyes were opened, he could see nothing; so they led him by the hand and brought him into Damascus. And for three days he was without sight...." The text not only says that when Paul arose he saw nothing, but he remained blinded for three days thereafter. Even the men with him saw nothing.

Sisson contends on page 157, in regard to another subject, that God "has decreed that sin can be atoned only through blood sacrifices" and he cites Lev. 17:11 ("For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it for you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes atonement, by reason of life") as proof. He further states, "God rejects all human devices and schemes that attempt to pay for sin." Like most apologists trying to prove the validity of Heb. 9:22 ("...without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness of sins") he completely ignores the fact that the Leviticus passage does not exclude other methods. It does not say "only" through the shedding of blood can sins be forgiven, but merely portrays this as one path. As Shmuel Golding notes on page 33 of his work entitled The Light of Reason Vol. 1, "The scriptures clearly state that blood was one way of obtaining an atonement. There are indeed other forms of atonement, as seen in Lev. 5:11-13, where it states that flour can make atonement for the soul. Money (Ex. 30:15-16), jewelry (Num. 31:50), and prayer (Hos. 14:3) can atone for the soul." So from a biblical perspective it is by no means true to say that "God rejects all human devices...that attempt to pay for sin."

O'BRIEN'S TODAY'S HANDBOOK FOR SOLVING BIBLE DIFFICULTIES:

Most of this apologetic work is little more than a mass of conjectures and generalities that systematically avoid the tough issues. We've discussed some of its comments before, although most aren't worthy of critical analysis. We can't help but note, however, that O'Brien says on page 217, "...did Scripture ever teach a flat earth? I think not." If he thinks not, then he thinks wrong. He continues by saying, "Bible readers today see poetic imagery in places where Christians of past centuries saw proof of a flat earth." No! Christians of today "seek", rather than "see", poetic imagery to escape the text's wording. He omitted the letter "K". Christians of past centuries were more candid in their interpretations of scripture, because they didn't have to face modern science or be so involved in molding the Bible to reality and greater rational criticism. The Bible has several verses that support belief in a flat earth. Rev. 7:1 says, "I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth..." and Isaiah 11:12 says, "...assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." How could the earth be round, circular, or a globe if it had corners? Job 28:24 says, "For he looks to the ends of the earth and sees everything under the heavens" and Dan. 4:11 says, "The tree grew and became strong, and its top reached to heaven, and it was visible to the end of the whole earth." Globes or circular objects don't have ends. "Ends" are only applicable to something that is flat and whose surface abruptly changes direction. And no matter how tall the tree was, it could not have been seen by someone on the other side of the planet. Probably the most potent verse of all is Matt. 4:8 which says, "Again the devil took him to a very high mountain, and showed him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." How could Jesus have seen all the kingdoms of the world at one time from one spot, if the world were round or a globe? How could he have seen around a curved object? How could he have seen kingdoms on the opposite side of the planet? The answer is that he couldn't. Those who believed in a flat earth centuries ago were following the implications of scripture rather than reinterpreting the Bible for purposes of expediency.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #575 Continues from Last Month (Part b)

We skipped your second objection for now. Your third objection was that many verses in the Bible rule out any possibility of a resurrection of anybody to begin with. Here is the response I got from my fundamentalist acquaintance:

...These isolated passages hold little weight when cross-checked with the whole of the Biblical message about man and the afterlife. First, one must check the context of the statement and understand the meaning in terms of the immediate passage at hand. Two of these (verses that you quoted) are from Ecclesiastes, which is known to be reflecting the negative conclusions and musings of Solomon after having pursued all manner of earthly amusements in a search for meaning; they do not necessarily reflect doctrinal statements.

Editor's Response to Letter #575 (Part b)

How did your fundamentalist friend manage to cram so much palaver into such a small paragraph, JL? First, the passages I used are neither isolated nor of little weight. Several were mentioned, including Eccle. 3:19-21 (RSV) which states, "For the fate of the sons of men and the fate of beasts is the same; as one dies, so dies the other. They all have the same breath, and man has NO ADVANTAGE over the beasts; for all is vanity. All go to one place; all are from the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knows whether the spirit of man goes upward and the spirit of the beast goes down to the earth?" To say this passage is of little weight is absurd, although I can understand apologists wishing that were true. He's trying to ignore Ecclesiastes because it doesn't fit his preconceptions of what the Bible should say. The fact that other biblical verses say the opposite does not invalidate what is said in Ecclesiastes, but only proves the Bible is contradictory. Running to other verses and claiming they are more valid because they say what he wants to hear, and picking and choosing according to conditions is anything but objective scholarship. Second, insofar as Ecclesiastes is concerned, one need only read the entire chapter to see that the contextual argument isn't going to save the day. There is nothing either before or after the text that invalidates the clear intent of the words. The format of Ecclesiastes is similar to that of Proverbs, in which a series of statements are made on a variety of topics. Consequently, the contextual argument has little or no applicability. Third, what difference does it make if Ecclesiastes is reflecting the negative conclusions and musings of the author as long as its contents reflect biblical doctrine? Since when do biblical teachings have to be positive and uplifting? Fourth, how does your fundamentalist acquaintance know Solomon wrote Ecclesiastes? Every version I have says the book was written by the Preacher, the son of David, who was king in Jerusalem. David had many sons and only one was king in Jerusalem? Fifth, how does your fundamentalist friend know that comments in Ecclesiastes "do not necessarily reflect doctrinal statements?" Is that stated somewhere? If he can use that defense, then nearly every statement in the Bible is up for grabs and can be discarded on the pretext that it "does not necessarily reflect biblical doctrine." What are his criteria for valid doctrinal statements? How does he know what is bona fide and what isn't? When he says "they do not necessarily reflect doctrinal statements," he is obligated to prove otherwise, since they are, in fact, scriptural. If a comment is scriptural, do we assume it is doctrinal until proven otherwise, or do we assume it is non-doctrinal until proven doctrinal? Not surprisingly, when distasteful comments, such as those found in Ecclesiastes, are under consideration, our fundamentalist acquaintance opts for the latter.

Letter #575 Concludes (Part c)

Finally, you assert that the resurrection is not nearly as important as other events in the Bible by saying, "Our FIFTH AUDIO COMMENTARY states the resurrection is of no real consequence when compared to other events. How many people came into the world as full-grown adults as did Adam and Eve in Gen. 1:27 and Gen. 2:7? Elijah never died at all; he just went straight to heaven in 2 Kings 2:11. According to Gen.5:22-24 Enoch never died either. He, too, went straight to heaven. In Gen. 18:11 and Gen. 21:1-3 Isaac was born to a woman who had passed through menopause, and according to Heb. 7:1-3 Melchisedec had no father, no mother, no beginning, and no end...Jesus never topped that. At least he had a father and a mother."

My resident Christian has the following feedback,

"...It is true that there are other supernatural events recounted in the Bible, which fill out the picture of the revelation; however, the resurrection of Jesus, as noted above, has unique qualities as those associated with the promised Redeemer (messiah) which is pivotal for the Christian message. Read 1 Cor. 15 and you will see that the resurrection is crucial for the gospel that Paul preached. He himself stated that if Christ be not raised then the Christian faith is futile and that Christians, above all people of the world, should be pitied (presumably for their naivete and gullibility). Read Revelation 5:9-10. Here the statement is made that the Lamb (Christ) overcame by his death and resurrection. This accomplishment makes him worthy to open the seals of God's book of judgment on the earth, as recounted in the fifth chapter of Revelation. It should be read in context. Rev. 1:18 has Jesus saying that he was dead and is now alive forevermore."

I consider myself a novice at this; that is why I am feeding this Christian's responses directly to you. Hopefully, you can either send me a reply directly or publish this letter and your reply in your next issue of Biblical Errancy. Whatever you decide, I will look forward to your response.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #575 (Part c)

I fail to see the relevance of your resident Christian's response, JL. All he is doing is reemphasizing the alleged importance of the resurrection to humanity. But that's not what I asked; that's not the issue. I want to know what makes the event, itself, so unusual, in light of the fact that others rose from the dead before Jesus, and participated in acts that were far more spectacular. For obvious reasons, he wants to concentrate on its ramifications, rather than the event per se.

Letter #579 from CK of Bloomfield, New Jersey
Dear Mr. McKinsey.

In regard to your discussion on whether the words "dung" and "piss" are pornographic, I would have to disagree with that categorization. The dictionary labels "piss" as vulgar, but "dung" is in no way so annotated. I wouldn't even venture to guess, however, how either word was considered at the time of translation of the King James Bible, and the words can only be judged in that context. The NRSV uses "urine." Ultimately it rests upon some Hebrew word, to whose connotations we have even less a clue. As for "pornographic", that usually implies some sexual context, and that is absent in the cited verses. I never understood myself why some synonyms are considered vulgar and others are not.... Intrinsically, no set of phonemes or letters is offensive--it's only in the trained ear of the listener, and eye of the reader....

Editor's Response to Letter #579

Dear CK.

According to my Webster's New World Thesaurus pornography is comparable to obscene literature, vulgarity, smut, salaciousness, prurience, and grossness. And since the word "piss" is rather vulgar, to say the least, I think it can be reasonably classified as pornographic. Technically speaking, the word "pornography" probably does pertain to lewd sexual activity, but that is not the manner in which it is generally employed today. Secondly, how the words were originally used when the KJV was translated is not as important as how the words are currently viewed, especially by children. Whether words are intrinsically offensive is of less importance than the fact that they are viewed as salacious by today's reader. Incidentally, if you traced the Hebrew origins of the word "dung" you would find that the latter is translated from a word that would have been more offensive if it had been translated literally rather than euphemistically. It's reminiscent of the comment by Abraham to his servant in Gen. 24:2 that the latter should swear an oath by putting "thy hand under my thigh." That's a sanitized version of where the hand was really placed when an oath was sworn. In Gen. 47:29 Jacob told Joseph to put his hand on the former's male organ when he swore an oath as well.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #580 from PC of Donalsonville, Georgia
Greetings....

My son is a fundamentalist Baptist minister. I have now shaken his position, due to your publication, mostly. His deceased mother misguided his education and endeavors. I was traveling abroad at the time. He is now 51 years old. It isn't easy to endure a change in his life's pursuits since there is his livelihood. ...You are indeed an unusual person who ventures forth with the sword of truth against odds approaching the incredible.

Letter #581 from SC of La Honda, California
Dear Dennis.

We ordered your publication kind of like a kid sending in a boxtop for a plastic slingshot; imagine our delight when we received instead a high-quality, fully loaded bazooka! Great information to fuel anti-biblical debating. So, we'd like to get some more ammunition, please.

Letter #582 from JT of Williamsport, Penn.
Dennis....

I continue to be amazed at the work you've put into the tapes! I've never run across their equal anywhere else....

Letter #583 from KB of Santa Barbara, California
Dear Mr. McKinsey. ...

You have been an inspiration to many freethinkers, including myself. You have the ability to put into words the thoughts and beliefs that I've had all my life....

Letter #584 from BW of Shreveport, Louisiana
Dear Dennis.

Don't let my subscription expire!... Your publication is a valuable resource for freethinkers. I mention it every chance I get. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #584

Dear BW.

Your kind words, like those of PC, SC, JT, and KB, are warmly received.

Issue No. 138

June 1994

JOHNSON'S SO THE BIBLE IS FULL OF CONTRADICTIONS? (Part 1):

One of the more prominent apologetic writings currently on the market is a 146 page paperback entitled So the Bible is Full of Contradictions by Carl Johnson. The author attempts to answer some of the most obvious biblical contradictions in as succinct and conclusive a manner as possible. Unfortunately, the following examples show that his efforts were often to no avail.

On page 13 Johnson seeks to reconcile the Noah-and-the-Ark conflict between Gen. 7:2-3 ("Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, the male and his female: and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female. Of fowl also of the air by sevens, the male and the female....") and Gen. 7:8-9 ("Of clean beasts and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth, There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female...."). He states, "Noah was commanded to bring two of every kind of animal into the ark, a male and a female, then to bring seven of some animals and fowls, and then we read that the animals went in two and two.... In the first reference, God instructed Noah to bring the animals in by twos, but later, in the second reference, he was given further instructions to bring in seven of every clean animal and fowl. Clean animals and fowls are the ones acceptable for sacrifice. Exodus gives ten such beasts. The unclean animals and fowls went in by twos, the clean by sevens."

I'm always amazed at the apparent willingness of apologists to leap into a contradiction with which they are ill-prepared to cope. His "reconciliation" leads one to believe that he would have done well to have passed over this problem entirely. It's hard to believe we're reading the same verses. What does the text say? Gen. 7:2-3 says clean beasts and fowl shall go in by sevens while the unclean are to go in by twos, even though Gen. 7:8-9 says they are all to go in by twos, whether clean or not, whether fowl or not. Johnson's final statement that "the unclean animals and fowls went in by twos and the clean by sevens" ignores Gen. 7:8-9, which says clean beasts went in by twos, not sevens. His final statement also clashes with Gen. 7:2-3, which says "Of fowls also of the air by sevens." Fowls did not go in by twos; they went in by sevens.

On pages 16 and 17 of his book, Johnson confronted a different kind of problem relative to the Egyptian pursuit of the Israelites during the Exodus. He attempts to meld Exodus 9:3, 6 ("Behold the hand of the LORD is upon thy cattle which are in the field, upon the horses, upon the asses, upon the camels, upon the oxen, and upon the sheep: there shall be a very grievous murrain. And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and all the cattle of Egypt died...") with Exodus 14:9 ("But the Egyptians pursued after them, all the horses and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horsemen, and his army, and overtook them..."). Johnson reconciles the problem by saying, "The seeming contradiction here is: how could the Egyptians pursue the Israelites with their horses and chariots if all the horses were killed earlier? If we read the two accounts closely we find that the first reference speaks of a judgment upon the cattle, horses, asses, camels, oxen, and sheep. The judgment was to be 'a very grievous murrain,' which is a contagious disease among cattle. The record does not say that all the horses died, but that all the cattle died (verse 6)...and only the 'cattle which are in the field (verse 3)." When Johnson says "the record does not say that all the horses died," he is only using the version of verse 6 that satisfies his interpretation. True, the KJV, RSV, ASV, MT, BBE, and the LB say only the "cattle" died but the NASB, JB, NIV, NAB, and NEB, say "All the livestock of Egypt died." The word "cattle" comes from the Hebrew word "miqneh" which actually means "livestock" or "live herds". If all of Egypt's livestock died, instead of cattle only, then all horses would be included as well. And if all the horses were dead, then how could the pharaoh have pursued the Israelites on horses?

As far as the defense alleging only cattle or livestock in the fields died is concerned (verse 3), that is refuted by verse 9 in the NASB and other versions, which says, "All the livestock of Egypt died." Johnson quotes Sir Gardner Wilkinson as saying that some animals were stall-fed in Egypt and survived because they weren't in the field. But whether or not livestock were fed in stalls or fields is irrelevant, since ALL the livestock of Egypt died according to verse 9.

On page 63 Johnson is asked to blend Matt. 11:13-14 ("For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John (John the Baptist--Ed.). And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come") with John 1:21 ("And they asked him (John the Baptist--Ed.), What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No"). In the former verse Jesus said John the Baptist was the Elijah who was prophesied to come, while in the latter verse John says he isn't. Johnson explains this dichotomy by saying, "John the Baptist denied that he was Elijah, while Jesus said he was. This has bothered a number of people. I have personally been asked about this.... Jesus said on at least two occasions that John (John the Baptist--Ed.) was Elijah (Matt. 11:14, 17:10-13). The answer lies in understanding 'the law of double fulfillment.' That means that a prophecy is often partially fulfilled as a type of the total fulfillment. John came in partial fulfillment of what Elijah was to do. Both John and Elijah preached against sin in Israel; both attacked the kings and religious leaders of the day; both spoke against religious corruption of the people; both were severely persecuted for offending the kings and immoral wives; and both were highly commended by God. John did come 'in the spirit and power of Elias' (Luke 1:17) but not in his reincarnated form."

The only double involved in Johnson's answer is double-talk. Contrived phrases such as "partial fulfillment" or "double fulfillment" are nothing more than theological smokescreens. Either John the Baptist is Elijah or he isn't; there is no in between. And Jesus says he is. That should settle the matter. But when John the Baptist says he is not, and who is in a better position to know, then an irreconcilable contradiction between the words of Jesus and those of John the Baptist materializes. Johnson says John came in "partial fulfillment" of what Elijah was to do. But who cares what he came to do? That isn't even the issue. The question is: Was he or was he not Elijah? What deeds he performed or did not perform are irrelevant. Johnson is trying to redirect our focus toward extraneous considerations. When Johnson says "John did come in the spirit and power of Elias but not in reincarnated form" he is saying Jesus is a liar and John the Baptist told the truth. While later quoting the New Scofield Reference Bible Johnson says in reference to the ministry of John the Baptist "with a ministry so completely in the spirit and power of Elijah's future ministry in a typical sense, it could be said: 'Elijah is come already'." Spirit, however, has nothing to do with the issue. The question is: Is John the Baptist Elijah or isn't he? Whether he is or isn't in the spirit of Elijah is immaterial. The fact is he's not Elijah, and that's what counts.

Johnson closes out this issue by saying, "Elijah reappeared in the flesh on the Mount of Transfiguration in the days of Jesus, will come again 'before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord' (Mal. 4:5), and will probably be one of the two witnesses in the tribulation period." These comments are not only immaterial but irrelevant as well.

Johnson is one of the most prominent users of the "that's what it says but that's not what it means" approach. He repeatedly substitutes his own spin for what a verse really says. What follows are some of the more glaring examples of this ruse.

On pages 20 and 21 he addresses the clash between Ex. 31:17 ("...for in 6 days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the 7th day he rested, and was refreshed") and Isa. 40:28 ("...the everlasting God, the LORD, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary..."). Johnson states that,

"Several times in the Bible we read that God rested (Gen. 2:2, 3; Ex. 20:11; 31:17; Heb. 4:4) yet the passage in Isaiah says He is not weary. We think of God as a being who is almighty, infinite, who never becomes tired. Why does He need to rest? The answer is that when we read that God rested from His work it simply means He ceased from His work. The word translated rested comes from the Hebrew word shavath, from which we get the word Sabbath, which means 'to stop' or 'cease.' He ceased because He was finished. When we read that God 'was refreshed' it means He was delighted.... Dr. J.B. Thompson said in his book, Man in Genesis and in Geology: 'To rest' here does not mean to seek repose from fatigue, but to suspend activity in a particular mode of operation, to cease from doing thus and so."

In effect, Johnson is saying that he has a more accurate rendition of Gen. 2:2 ("And God blessed the seventh day, and...rested from all his work...." than those who translated many of the most well known versions of the Bible. The KJV, RSV, ML, NASB, MT, NWT, NAB, BBE, ASV, NIV, and the JB versions use the word "rested". Their translators chose the word "rested" and, in effect, he claims they should have used the word "ceased." His resolution of this conflict is little more than an assertion that he knows Hebrew better than those who translated many of the most famous and scholarly versions on the market. He also claims that "was refreshed" means "delighted" when they are even further apart than "rested" and "ceased". And why have "re" in front of "refreshed," if he was not refreshed a second time? The prefix "re" means "again." If "refreshed" means he was "delighted," then what would the word "refreshed" mean? Lastly, the word "rested" is much more compatible with the word "refreshed" than the word "ceased." Johnson is trying to escape the problem by rewriting the script to his own specifications. Is he qualified to correct a whole battery of experts? I doubt it.

On pages 49 and 50 he confronts a direct contradiction between Proverb 3:13 ("Happy is the man who finds wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding") and Eccle. 1:18 ("For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increases sorrow"). He rationalizes the conflict by stating, "One verse says wisdom brings happiness, the other verse says it brings grief. Which is correct? Both. The first verse speaks of wisdom from God, the wisdom from above.... (James 3:17).... This kind of wisdom brings happiness. The wisdom that causes grief speaks of worldly wisdom, the wisdom that "descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish" (James 3:15). In effect, Johnson has arbitrarily assumed that two "wisdoms" of totally opposite character are involved because different kinds of wisdoms are referred to in the NT. Yet, no distinction of this kind is made in our original conflicting OT verses, and the disagreement stands until Johnson can provide evidence that the NT differentiation applies to this problem as well.

On page 50 he is asked to reconcile Prov. 8:17 ("I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me") with Prov. 1:28 ("Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me"). Again he resorts to the reinterpretation defense by saying, "Once again there seems to be a contradiction: If you seek God early you shall find Him, but if you seek Him early you shall not find Him. The first reference promises that those who seek God "early," that is, diligently, shall find Him.... The second reference speaks of persons who refuse to listen to God, who do not regard God, who will not heed God's counsel nor his reproof (Prov. 1:24-25). When distress and anguish come upon them, then they call upon God, but he will not answer.... There is no real contradiction here when we keep the two different classes of persons in mind."

In the first place, Johnson assumes that the word "those" in Prov 8:17 refers only to those who love God. Why couldn't it also refer to those who do not regard God or his counsel or his reproof? Prov. 8:17 does not say that only those who love me and seek me early shall find me. Just because the first part of the sentence is referring to those who love God does not mean the second half of the sentence is only referring to those who love God. It could include those who have not been heeding God's counsel or his reproof, but for some reason have decided to seek him. In simple terms, Johnson has assumed Prov. 8:17 is only referring to "good people," while Prov. 1:28 is only referring to "bad actors". When considered in context, the latter can be substantiated textually but the former cannot.

Secondly, he quotes the first verse as saying, "those who seek God 'early'...shall find Him," and the other verse as saying those who seek God "'early'...shall not find" him. If "early" means "diligently" in the first verse as Johnson claims, then why wouldn't it mean the same in the second, absent evidence to the contrary? Thus, the contradiction would remain.

Another example of arbitrarily drawing class distinctions comes to the fore when we compare Prov. 22:15 ("Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child; but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him") and Prov. 27:22 ("Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet his foolishness will not depart from him"). Johnson's defense is, "The first verse speaks of driving foolishness away and the second verse says foolishness will not depart. The two passages refer to entirely different people. In the first reference the Bible is speaking of foolishness in the heart of a child.... The second verse speaks of a grownup fool whose folly is past cure. After long years of wilfulness, folly has become part of his very being...."

Although Johnson correctly states the first verse is referring to children only, he has no proof that the second verse is referring to adults only. It refers to "a fool" and that could apply to someone of any age. Why must the verse apply only to adults? The contradiction remains until Johnson can prove it specifically excludes children.

Another arbitrary distinction is concocted by Johnson in response to those who would like for him to reconcile Eccle. 1:4 ("One generation passes away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth forever") with Rev. 21:1 ("And I say a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea"). He responds by saying, "The first verse says the earth will abide forever, the second says it will pass away. When the Bible speaks of the earth passing away, or being burned up (2 Peter 3:10-12), we believe it means that God will renovate the earth by fire. In the past God renovated the earth by water: 'Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished' (2 Peter 3:6). When Peter said the earth 'perished,' he did not mean it was annihilated. When God renovates the heaven and the earth in the future, the earth will not be annihilated, but the fire will purge away all sin and everything that has been contaminated by sin.... when John says in Rev. 21:1 that the earth will pass away, he means it will pass from one condition to another...."

This is one of Johnson's trickiest defenses, so be wary. The sleight of hand, reminiscent of the huckster maneuvering peanuts under shells, is performed around the middle of his monologue. He deceptively equated the "passing away" in Eccle. 1:4 with the word "perished" in 2 Peter 3:6. But the words are not synonymous, because more than mere renovation is involved in Eccle 1:4. It says generation after generation "passes away" and that refers to total annihilation or extermination. They were not merely renovated. One vanished and another appeared, and there is no reason to believe that the "passing away" in Rev. 21:1 does not have the same meaning as the "passing away" in Eccle. 1:4, especially in view of the fact that the former says "there was no more sea" when the earth passed away. If the sea was gone, then it was annihilated, and not merely renovated.

To make a long story short, Johnson chose to equate the "passing away" in Rev. 21:1 with the word "perish" in 2 Peter 3:6, which does not mean total extermination, rather than with identical words in Eccle. 1:4, which do mean total eradication. He also ignored the fact that the sea was abolished when the earth passed away in Rev. 21:1. If "there was no more sea," then it was not merely renovated but annihilated. For him to say "we believe" is understandable, since that's about the only appropriate summation of his position. As this example readily demonstrates, apologetics can more accurately be called sophisticgetics, since sophistry is a key component.

Johnson's rationalization of the conflict between Isa. 45:7 ("I form the light and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the LORD do all these things") and Psalm 5:4 ("For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness: neither shall evil dwell with thee") is the standard fare foisted on the public. He states, "God is said to create evil, yet evil shall not dwell with Him. The word 'evil' has more than one meaning. In the first reference 'evil' means affliction, adversity, calamity, and in the second reference 'evil' means sin and iniquity. God is not the author of sin. He did not create iniquity, but He did create evil as an inevitable result of sin. Sometimes, because of the sin of evildoers, He permits catastrophes, earthquakes, storms, wars, and other physical calamities to come upon them to punish them or to chasten His own children...."

During one of my radio debates years ago, a fundamentalist Bible college professor used this very defense. He contended that the word "evil" in Isa. 45:7 was referring to catastrophes and calamities, not evil in the sense of corrupt or degenerate. Both men fail to realize that Isa. 45:7 is only one of several verses with moral overtones, saying God is the author of evil. Lam. 3:38 in the RSV says, "Is it from the mouth of the Most High that good and evil come?" The words "good and evil" are set in contrast to one another which implies both are referring to morality and behavior. If the word "evil" refers to catastrophes, rather than wickedness and corruption, then why use the word evil at all, since it's misleading? The words "catastrophe" or "calamity," rather than the word "evil," would have been more applicable. And if evil means calamity, then why set it in contrast with the word "good", which also implies morality or ethics? It should have been set in opposition to either "tranquillity," or "harmony", rather than the word "good".

In Jer. 26:3 God says, "...that I may repent of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings." The second "evil" refers to corrupt or wicked behavior. Why assume the former does not? If the word "evil" always refers to catastrophes and calamities when God is the perpetrator, then scores of scholars need to improve their translating skills, because the word "evil" implies morality and ethics, not calamities and catastrophes.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #580 from MJ of Andover, Mass. (Part a)
Dear Dennis.

I listened to some tapes by the Christian apologist Walter Martin. He says that the most common intellectual error skeptics make is to accuse Christians of using the book's own words to substantiate its validity, in essence claiming it's the word of God because it says so. But, Martin responds, the Bible is not one book, but many! It was written by some 50 odd people from different cultures and times, so that establishes legitimate independent corroboration.

My response would be, yes, I agree it was written by some 50 odd people (pun optional) but 50 people, each from a different state, claiming an Elvis sighting doesn't constitute solid independent corroboration. Or, as Ingersoll said, "If 50,000 people believe a foolish thing, it is still a foolish thing."

I'd be interested in how you would respond to this issue, because I'm sure many Christians have jumped on this rationalization to support their use of the Bible's own assertions as evidence for its validity.

Editor's Response to Letter #580 (Part a)

Dear MJ.

Either the Bible is one book or a compilation of 66 books; it's either one or the other. It can't be both. And evidence leads to the conclusion that it's one book rather than many for several reasons. First, if it's merely a compilation of 66 books, then each book would have to make a separate and independent claim that it is the word of God, and many do not. Where do the Books of Esther or the Song of Solomon, for example, say they are the inspired word of God? In fact, the words "God" and "Lord" don't appear in either. Since the Bible does not claim to be God's word very often, it must be considered a unity for many of the books to be considered divinely inspired. Secondly, one need only read the Bible to see that the work is not only sequential, especially with reference to the Old Testament, but interdependent as well. If I walked into any library and took 66 books off the library shelves at random, the chance of their being as interrelated, interdependent, sequential, similarly focused and concurrently scripted as the Bible, is almost non-existent. Thirdly, if the Epistles from Romans to Hebrews were all written by Paul, as fundamentalists claim, they could hardly vouch for the authenticity of one another. Would you believe a book merely because 13 other books written by the same author testified to its reliability? Fourthly, even if the Bible were viewed as merely a compilation of 66 books and not a book itself, critics are still well within their rights to ask what evidence exists outside of these 66 books to substantiate the validity of much of that which is contained therein. Fifthly, and most important of all, what difference does it make whether or not the Bible is one book or merely a compilation of 66 separate books? If one part of a book contradicts another part of the same book, you have as strong a contradiction as you would have if something in one book contradicted something in another entirely different book. A contradiction is a contradiction, regardless of the source. I don't know what "skeptics" Martin is referring to, but if he thinks the most common intellectual error they make is to accuse Christians of using the book's own words to substantiate its validity, then apparently I am exempted, because this tactic has never been a significant ingredient in my approach. My focus has never been upon determining what part of the book or books tends to substantiate another part of the same book or books. Instead, I have tried to expose those parts which disprove the Bible's perfection by revealing one part's contradiction of another. After all, in the final analysis what is a contradiction? Essentially it is nothing more than a statement by one passage that another passage is lying. Lawyers, scientists, politicians, and everyone else concerned with the compilation and utilization of data spend a lot of time trying to find, expose, or camouflage contradictions. From media interviews and economic analyses to scientific assertions and political philosophizing, the process of detecting contradictions is central to logical thought. Comedians, for instance, would be out of business without them. They lie at the very core of their profession.

Letter # 580 from PC of Donalsonville, Georgia
Greetings...

My son is a fundamentalist Baptist minister. I have now shaken his position due to your publication, mostly. His deceased mother misguided his education and endeavors. I was traveling abroad at the time. He is now 51 years old. It isn't easy to endure a change in his life's pursuits, since there is his livelihood. ...You are indeed an unusual person who ventures forth with the sword of truth against odds approaching the incredible.

Letter #581 from SC of La Honda, California
Dear Dennis.

We ordered your publication kind of like a kid sending in a boxtop for a plastic slingshot; imagine our delight when we received instead a high-quality, fully loaded bazooka! Great information to fuel anti-biblical debating. So, we'd like to get some more ammunition, please.

Letter #582 from JT of Williamsport, Penn.
Dennis....

I continue to be amazed at the work you've put into your tapes! I've never run across their equal anywhere else....

Letter #583 from KB of Santa Barbara, California
Dear Mr. McKinsey ...

You have been an inspiration to many freethinkers, including myself. You have the ability to put into words the thoughts and beliefs that I've had all my life....

Letter #584 from BW of Shreveport, Louisiana
Dear Dennis.

Don't let my subscription expire!.... Your publication is a valuable resource for freethinkers. I mention it every chance I get. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #584
Dear BW.

We are only too happy to be of service. Your accolades, like those of PC, SC, JT, and KB, are received with heartfelt thanks. Without the support of people like you, our efforts would be all but fruitless. After all we can't do it alone, and see little potential in trying.

Issue No. 139

July 1994

With this month's review we will continue our extensive analysis of the apologetic work entitled So the Bible is Full of Contradictions? by apologist Carl Johnson.

JOHNSON'S SO THE BIBLE IS FULL OF CONTRADICTIONS? (Part 2)

One of the most prominent nonquotes in Scripture is found in Matt. 27:9-10, which says, "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued...And gave them for the potter's field..." The act of buying a potter's field for the 30 pieces of silver was supposedly a fulfillment of a prophecy in Jeremiah. Unfortunately for apologists The Book of Jeremiah contains no such prophecy. Johnson says on pages 68 and 69 in this regard, "Matthew is charged with making a mistake by saying that Jeremiah spoke about 30 pieces of silver, when in reality it was Zechariah who made the statement. John Calvin is reported to have said about this: 'How the name of Jeremiah crept in I confess I do not know, nor do I give myself much trouble to inquire. The passage itself plainly shows the name of Jeremiah has been put down by mistake instead of Zechariah, for in Jeremiah we find nothing of the sort, nor anything that even approaches it.' The Dean of Westminster quoted this passage to prove that Gospel narratives are not necessarily 'historical accounts of what actually occurred.'

Alford calls it a 'slip of the pen.' Augustine said that Matthew was only quoting 'from memory.' John Haley commented: 'It is obviously a mistake, either made by Matthew or by subsequent transcribers. The prophecy was uttered by Zechariah, not Jeremiah'."

Johnson suggests that "a more probable solution comes when we realize that Matthew does not say it was written by Jeremiah, but 'spoken by Jeremiah.' It is not an uncommon thing for the men who were used by God to write the NT to give in writing for the first time verbal utterances of some of the OT saints.... It may well be that there were sayings of some of the prophets that were handed down orally."

Again we are faced with some typical apologetic distortions of Scripture. Johnson wants us to believe that "spoken by Jeremy the Prophet" does not mean it was written by him. Yet, this flies in the face of that which can be found elsewhere in the Book of Matthew. Matthew 1:22 says "all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet saying" and the text then goes on to repeat Isaiah 7:14. In other words, it was written. Matthew 2:15 says "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet saying" and the text then goes on to quote Hosea 11:1. Matthew 2:17 says "then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet saying" and the text then goes on to quote Jeremiah 31:15. Matthew 3:3 says "For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Isaiah saying" and the text goes on to quote Isaiah 40:3. Matthew 4:14, 8:17, 12:17, 13:35, 21:4, 22:31, and 27:35 continue the same pattern. Every time Matthew said something was spoken by an OT source, he clearly meant it was actually written down. When Matthew used the word "spoken" he meant "written", not mere verbal communication. So when Matthew said something was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, the problem becomes one of finding it in the Book of Jeremiah, which is impossible.

Johnson resorts to an even weaker defense by citing J. Sidlow Baxter's explanation. The latter states in regard to the absence of anything of relevance in Jeremiah, "Perhaps we need say no more on this point. It is not one on which anyone can speak with absolute finality at the moment; but we have said enough to show that Matthew's reference to Jeremiah might be no problem at all if we had fuller information. Matthew may have been writing with the knowledge and precision upon which we ourselves are quite incompetent to pass any critical judgment. We do not now possess all the data required for a final verdict...." Baxter's defense borders upon the pathetic, because it amounts to nothing more than saying: "There is an explanation; we just don't have a handle on it at present." His explanation is an amalgam of speculation and pure conjecture. While admitting he has no answer, he's claiming one exists. Apparently Baxter doesn't realize that if his premise were to rule the roost, an incredible number of preposterous claims would have to be given credence, on the grounds that substantial and convincing evidence currently unavailable will eventually materialize. Under this criterion I could claim I have the ability to raise people from the dead, and will eventually prove as much. I could claim to be god incarnate and will eventually substantiate my allegation. I could claim I am the reincarnation of Abraham Lincoln and will provide substantive proof in due time. After all, can my detractors conclusively prove I am not god incarnate or the reincarnation of Abraham Lincoln or that I am unable to resurrect others? We have again returned to the Achilles heal of superstitious thought: The burden of proof lies on him who alleges. Baxter is obligated to prove that sufficient data and convincing proof is available, and until he does, Matthew's comment is erroneous.

On page 72 Johnson confronted another problem which he would have done well to have ignored. I'm always amazed at the willingness of apologists to tackle quandries for which they are ill prepared. What's the old adage: Fools rush in where wise men fear to tread. Prudent individuals realize when they are in over their heads and back out. But not our apologetic respondents. They plow ahead like bulls in a mine field, utterly oblivious to the fact that their explanation does little more than corroborate the problem's implacability. That can't help but say something about their intellectual capabilities.

In any event, Johnson addresses the clash between Mark 6:5 ("And Jesus could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them") and Matt. 28:18 ("And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth") by saying, "The first verse speaks of the time when Jesus went to Nazareth. Because Nazareth was His hometown, the people there were offended at Him and did not believe in Him, thus he could do no mighty works there. The second verse says that He has all power. Once again we have a seeming contradiction.... It may surprise some to know that there are some things God and Christ cannot do, but as we read the Bible, we find this is so. Young says, 'God's inability is moral. In the material world He can do everything; in the moral and spiritual world God is confronted with glorious impossibilities.' There is nothing physically impossible for Christ. He said, 'All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.' Morally, He cannot do some things."

Johnson's rationalization is fatally flawed in several respects. First, he says God is limited in what he can do in the moral world but "in the material world God can do everything." If Johnson is going to talk about an omnipotent being, then commentators are well within their rights to discuss omnipotent feats. Again, we ask if God can create another being with powers exceeding his own. Can God create something too heavy for him to lift? Can God annihilate himself and then reappear? Can God create a square circle or a two-sided triangle? Can god count to infinity? These are not trivial, childish, or flippant questions, because they go to the heart of this omnipotent being in which Johnson places so much faith. They show he is, in fact, limited in his physical capabilities. Limitations in one area open up the possibility of limitations in other areas. Even more importantly, once limitations are admitted, the same crack appears in divine infallibility that appears in biblical inerrancy when contradictions are exposed. Secondly, Johnson directly contradicted himself when he quoted Jesus as saying, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and followed that up by saying, "Morally, He cannot do some things." Either he has all power or he doesn't. There is no in between. And if he has all power, then there are no moral feats he can't commit, regardless of their nature. If Johnson is trying to say Jesus has all power but merely chooses not to do some things, then he is inaccurate when he says "Morally, He cannot do some things." He can do them, but he just doesn't choose to do so. There's a difference. But Johnson has taken us adrift. That's not what the original verses say. One says he has all power, and the other says he could do there no mighty work. It says he can't do it; it doesn't say he can do it but chooses not to do so. There's a big difference. Johnson is surreptitiously altering Mark 6:5. According to him it should say "he chose there to do no mighty work" and that's dramatically different from "he could there do no mighty work." His rationalization implies that either some people are incompetent translators, or he knows Greek better than a committee of experts. We are again confronted with the "That's what it says, but that's not what it means" strategem.

One of the most well-known NT conflicts concerns the question of who heard what during Paul's conversion on the road to Damascus. On page 86 Johnson addresses the conflict between Acts 9:7 ("And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man") and Acts 22:9 ("And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me"). While submitting the standard defense, he says, "In the first reference we read that they heard the voice, but in the second we are told they heard not the voice. At first glance this looks like a flat contradiction. (That's only because it is--Ed.). The difficulty is easily solved with a little knowledge of the Greek language in which the New Testament was originally written. In the Greek of Acts 9:7, the word voice is in the genitive case, and in Acts 22:9, it is in the accusative case. In the first instance the voice is only heard as a sound. The meaning of what is said is not understood. Those with Paul heard the sound but did not understand the words which Jesus spoke to Paul.... In Acts 22:9 the words translated "the voice" are in the accusative. They did not hear the message of the One who spoke. They heard the voice as a mere sound, but they did not hear the voice as the sound of uttered words."

To cut through all the verbiage and get to the meat of the matter, all Johnson is saying is that the word "hearing" in Acts 9:7 means only hearing the voice but in Acts 22:9 "heard" means more than mere hearing; it means understanding, which they failed to do. This is another instance of: That's what it says but that's not what it means. If his defense had any merit, then the word "heard" in Acts 22:9 should have been translated as "understood" which is quite different, and the committee of experts who composed Acts 22:9 would have been exposed as incompetent translators. There is a qualitative difference between the word "heard" and the word "understood." Everything audible that is understood had to have been heard, but everything heard certainly does not have to have been understood. Finally, both of the key words come from the same Greek word (akouo). In every instance in the NT where the words "hearing" and "heard" come from this Greek word, they mean hearing as hearing is normally used. Nowhere does it mean to not only hear but understand.

Moving further, on page 87 Johnson seeks to resolve the conflict between Acts 26:23 ("Christ should suffer, and...be the first that should rise from the dead....") and Luke 7:15 ("And he (a young man--Ed.) that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And he (Jesus--Ed.) delivered him to his mother"). In response to this dichotomy Johnson says, "Jesus is said to be the first to rise from the dead, yet we read of others who rose from the dead before Him (see 1 Kings 17:22, 2 Kings 4:32-35, 13:21, Matt. 9:18-25, Luke 7:11-15, John 11:43-44). The solution to this seeming contradiction is that Christ was the first to be raised into an endless life over which death has no power. 'Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him' (Rom. 6:9). All others who were raised passed through death again..." Johnson's constant reliance upon the "That's what it says but that's not what it means approach" leaves us no alternative but to suggest that he write his own version of the Bible and send us a copy. Time after time his defense is little more than an assertion that he has a more accurate rendition of what a particular verse should say. He repeatedly adds, deletes, or changes the meaning of words. In this instance nothing is said about Christ being "the first to be raised into an endless life over which death has no power" or that he would never die again. Johnson has supplied some wholly gratuitous addenda. All Acts 26:23 says is that Christ "should be the first that should rise from the dead." Nothing is said about what occurs afterward, and for that reason it's irrelevant. Acts 26:23 does not say Christ was to be the first to rise from the dead and never rise again. For obvious reasons Johnson is more concerned with differences between what happens after the act of rising from the dead than with the act of rising itself. But that's not what the verses are discussing. He's attempting to shift the focus.

And finally, on page 87 Johnson addresses the problem of whether or not all Israel will be saved. It's generated by the clash between Rom. 11:26 ("And so all Israel will be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob") and Zech. 13:8-9 ("And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the LORD, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; and the third shall be left therein. And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined...." In order to resolve this difficulty he says, "Paul says 'all Israel shall be saved.' Zechariah says only one-third of them shall be saved. The Bible teaches that when Christ comes back to earth He will gather the Jews, bring them into the wilderness, cause them to pass under the rod of judgment, and will purge out the rebels from among them (Ezek. 20:33-38). The passage in Zechariah teaches that two-thirds of them will be purged out, and one-third of them will come through the judgment. Those Jews who accept Jesus as their Messiah will make up the 'all Israel' who will be saved...."

Wait a minute! Proceed no further! Johnson's argument just collapsed. He quoted Rom. 11:26 as saying, "And so all (Not some, most, or many, but all--Ed.) Israel will be saved." But then he says that only those Jews who accept Jesus as their Messiah will make up the "all Israel" who will be saved. That means "All Israel" does not include all Jews but only those who accept Jesus. Obviously if that is true then all Israel is not included and all Israel will not be saved. All Israel can not be saved when 2/3 are excluded.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #585 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California
Dear Dennis.

Just want to say hello and thanks again for your great publication. It is a great contribution to intellectual integrity, exposing, as it does, the fantasy world of Christian apologetics, where two plus two equals five and red is green. It's about time someone attacked the head of the snake and exposed the appalling befuddlement underlying Christian "scholarship". Anyone who takes the time to study Christian apologists and their writings will eventually see the convoluted web they weave. It's truly amazing how they can offload such drivel onto an unsuspecting public. Their apologies are really a cut below medieval science and scholarship, at best.

If we were forced to believe the arguments of apologists, we would eventually become rambling imbeciles, forever forcing facts to fit fallacies. I often hear Christians regurgitating apologetic denials like magical incantations to ward off Biblical errors. For example, when shown a contradiction in their scriptures, some of them will say the verse has been taken out of context, or the verse is better in the original Greek or Hebrew, or some other such obfuscating nonsense. But in every case when you call their bluff and read the actual verse in context and analyze the original Greek or Hebrew so that there can be no mistake about it, their argument collapses for sheer lack of support. Eventually, they are wrestled to the mat with their own spurious information and have to take the "faith" amendment. Really, they must re-examine the false information of their apologetic sources if there is to be any light on the matter. Then, maybe, just maybe, they will see how apologists work with shadows and smoke to effect their miscreant sophistry.

Christians rarely think independently and, more often than not, rely on some "expert" with a new, "magic bullet" against the innumerable problems of the Bible. They'll read apologetic drivel till the cows come home, yet rarely will they review scholarly critiques found outside of Christian bookstores. The reason for this shameful farce is simple. They're not looking for truth; they're looking for a band-aid to cover their self-deception. They have no real faith to begin with. If they did, they would not fear getting a second opinion from independent scholars. In my mind, most Christians are intellectual cowards. They'll die at the stake for their beliefs, but run like hell when the silver bullet of reason flies at them.

I have encountered similar subterfuges, as you have in apprehending apologetic criminals like Carl Johnson. I recently talked to a Christian who had Zondervan books up the kazoo and still he couldn't answer the question: "Why does God create evil?" He gave the same response as Johnson, so I had him look up the Hebrew word used in the verses in which it is stated that God creates or causes evil. The meaning of the word includes "calamity", but it most certainly also includes "iniquity." I told him that if the verses were intended to mean "calamity" only, then they should have used the Hebrew word for "calamity" rather than using a word that means "iniquity", especially since the word clearly means "iniquity" wherever it's used in the Bible. Finally, I asked him how can anyone trust a God who creates evil. There was no response.

The more I talk to persons of the Christian persuasion, the more I realize what a foul mess of sloppy thinking they have gotten themselves into. If the propensity to believe Christian apologists reflects the intellectual development of the Christian millions who populate the earth, then we are definitely headed for a grave decline in moral and intellectual achievement. B.E. provides the only "review board" that examines apologetic authors and exposes their intellectual depravity at the root. By the way, your tape transcripts were excellent.

Letter #586 from KN of Sacramento, California
(In our 137th issue we answered a letter written by a fundamentalist to one of our supporters who forwarded the letter to us. The author accused us of taking verses out of context and he also stated, "Two of these verses are from Ecclesiastes, which is known to be reflecting the negative conclusions and musings of Solomon after having pursued all manner of earthly amusements in a search for meaning; they do not necessarily reflect doctrinal statements." KN would have altered our response to the fundamentalist and sent us the following letter--Ed.).

Dear Dennis.

You missed a good bet in your response to JL's fundamentalist friend (letter #575, part b, Issue #137, page 5). Like many apologists, JL's friend argued that some of the more inconvenient teachings in Ecclesiastes are simply the sinful musings of Solomon in his twilight days.

Indeed, Eccle. 1:1 identifies the following verses as the words of the "Teacher" or "Preacher," the "son of David" and "king in Jerusalem." One might well identify this as King Solomon, son of David.

But now read Eccle. 12:9-10, at the end. Ecclesiastes has stopped quoting the Preacher and has returned to narrative form. These closing words, at least, are not the musings of Solomon. And they clearly say that what the Preacher wrote was "upright" and "true".

The entire Book of Ecclesiastes, therefore, has God's stamp of approval. JL's friend should have kept reading.

Letter #587 from FM of Novato, California

Dear Dennis.

I participated in an effort which resulted in the city of Santa Rosa dropping its requirement to have a prayer before council meetings, and also the city of Petaluma that changed the requirement to a moment of silence for those who wished to pray and for those who preferred not to do so.

Editor's Response to Letter #587

Dear FM.

Your efforts are to be commended and every bit helps, but I think Petaluma tarnished your achievements. Isn't a moment of silence, prayer by another name? A moment of silence to do what? What is its purpose, if not for the insidious introduction of silent prayer? Nobody has died and no tragedies have occurred, so it can't be in commemoration of anything. Perhaps I'm mistaken, but as far as I'm concerned Petaluma has surreptitiously inserted prayer through a cleverly disguised subterfuge. Prayer by another name is still prayer. What about those who don't believe in prayer or a moment of silence? What about those who just want to get down to work and have no interest in wasting time looking at the floor for some outside force to alleviate their problems or provide assistance? In any event, keep up the good work and more power to you.

Letter #588 from MO of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Dennis.

I missed reading Biblical Errancy very much. I've read tens or hundreds of books and articles in critique of Christianity, but two among them are outstanding: Biblical Errancy and "The Case Against Christianity" by Michael Martin.

Letter #589 from SS of Kalamazoo, Michigan

Dear Dennis.

...I consider Psalms 137:9 as the SECOND most blasphemous verse in the Bible. First Samuel 1:3 is the most blasphemous verse. And yet as Ingersoll points out in his "Why I am an Agnostic" the doctrine of "eternal torment" should be considered the worst. He writes, "As a matter of fact, the New Testament is infinitely worse than the Old. In the Old there is no threat of eternal pain." Ingersoll is correct. This doctrine is the worst, the most horrible.... Thank you for making Biblical Errancy available to former SLAVES, like myself. Keep up the GOOD work, doc. We're all behind you!

Letter #590 from RS of Sherman Oaks, California

Dear Dennis.

Love your publication; you're still the tops. I'm still challenging every Christian who believes the Bible has all the answers. Thanks to your publication I have been able to totally educate myself about the Bible and I believe myself to be a competent spokesperson for our cause. It is interesting to see how many Christians are at first shocked and ultimately incapable of refuting the many counter-arguments which I have in store for them. I have a sense of total control over my interchanges with Christians to the extent that they are finally unable to come back with a persuasive counter-argument. I owe a debt of gratitude to you.

Editor's Response to Letter #590

Dear RS.

It sounds as if you are using BE in precisely the manner intended. Keep up your excellent work, and if we can be of further assistance, please write. As I have said so often: Taking it to the other side goes to the crux of this publication. Gathering information merely for the sake of compiling data is all but worthless. We have no interest whatever in amassing a mountain of anti-biblical data merely in order to put a trophy on a shelf.

Editor's Note: Our TV game plan is as follows. So far we have created and played on cablevision eight one-half hour programs. When we have a much larger number of programs available, we intend to start distributing them to supporters who are willing to see that they are played on their local cable access television station. We will be asking people to do the following. First, contact your local cable access station and arrange for our programs to be played at a favorable time. All programs are one half hour in length. Second, buy a blank TWO HOUR-- BROADCAST QUALITY VIDEOTAPE at a company specializing in tapes of this kind. We get them for around $3 to $4 each from a company in Columbus, Ohio called Comtel Instruments. Send us the blank tape and we will record FOUR (4) programs onto each of your tapes and then mail them back to you. The first tape has programs 1-4 and the second has programs 5-8. Try to have each program played four times--Two times one week and two times the next week. We, for example, have a program played on a Wednesday evening at 7:00 PM and then two days later on a Friday evening at 7:00 PM. The next week the same program is again played at 7 P.M. on Wednesday and 7 P.M. on Friday. Then that program is completed and the same procedures are followed for the next program. Since each tape contains four programs, one tape should last 8 weeks or two months. If you can only get the tape played twice a week for one week, then one 2-hour tape should last one month. Once you finish with a tape you can keep it, circulate it, give it to a local library or friend, save it for a later showing or do whatever you prefer. That's your choice to make. But we definitely need your help. This is one project that is not going anywhere without the assistance of BE's supporters. Of that there can be no doubt. WE'LL NEED YOUR HELP! Right now we are only asking you to be willing to respond YES when asked to assist. We already have 11 volunteers and hope to enlist more. If you want to combat religious superstition and the Bible in particular, then effort and dedication are a must. Mere complaining won't accomplish much of anything. The other side has thousands of dedicated volunteers, and we need to exhibit similar determination if inroads are to be forthcoming. We'll let you know when the circulation of videotapes is to begin.

Issue No. 140

August 1994

With this month's review we'll conclude our analysis of the book by Carl Johnson entitled So the Bible is Full of Contradictions?

JOHNSON'S SO THE BIBLE IS FULL OF

CONTRADICTIONS? (Part 3): Johnson resorts to the old word game when faced with the contrast between Gal. 6:2 ("Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ") and Gal. 6:5 ("For every man shall bear his own burden"). He says, "A seeming contradiction is found in the sixth chapter of Galatians. In the first verse above we are told to bear one another's burdens, while in the second verse we read that every man shall bear his own burden. In verse 2, the burdens we are to bear for one another refer to the responsibility each Christian should feel for the welfare of other Christians, especially when they have sinned. The Greek word for 'burdens' here is 'baros' and has the idea of weight, that which can be lightened. God wants us to help bear others' burdens. There are many burdens people carry for which they need help: the burden of sin,...the burden of sickness, of sorrow....

The word 'burden' in verse 5 is 'phortion,' which has the idea of a task, a personal responsibility which a person must not shirk, which no one else can do for him. Each person is responsible for the kind of life he lives...."

Unfortunately for Johnson, his rendition of "phortion" won't stand the strain, because Strong's Exhaustive Concordance says the word means "a task or service, a burden, a diminutive of 'phortos' which means something carried, i.e., in the cargo of a ship: lading, or freight." Since this does not refer to a task that someone must do on his own and is the kind of burden that can be lightened, there is no meaningful distinction from the "burden" used in the first verse. So his explanation collapses.

On page 92 Johnson waded with reckless abandon into the clash between Gal. 6:10 ("As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith") and 2 John 10-12 ("If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds"). He says, "Paul and John seem to contradict each other in these two verses. Paul tells the Christians to do good unto all men; John forbids them to receive a man into their house or bid him Godspeed. There is really no contradiction here, since Paul is speaking of a Christian's duty of doing good to all men, while John is speaking of a Christian's attitude toward false teachers. A false teacher is not to be received into our house and we are not to bid him Godspeed.... We are to love everybody, even our enemies, but we are not to approve of, and support, their dangerous doctrine."

In the first place, Johnson says we are to do good to all men but not to "false teachers." Since when did false teachers resign from the human race? Despite their behavior, they are as much a part of mankind as anyone else. "All" means all, and if we are to do good to "all men," then that would include false teachers as well. Secondly, in typical apologetic style Johnson attempts to shift the focus by saying we are to do good to all men while our attitude toward false teachers is to be one of disapproval. He surreptitiously changed the thrust of the second verse in order to make it appear as if it were addressing a different issue. Actually the first says we are to "do good" unto all men and the second says we are not to "receive" him into our house or "biddeth him God speed." Both refer to doing rather than attitudes or beliefs. Johnson is trying to say that we are to "do good" to all men but our "attitude" toward false teachers is to be negative. But the second verse, like the first, is referring to actions, not attitudes.

On page 94 Johnson finds himself entangled in one of those absolutist imbroglios with which the Bible is so bountifully endowed. He addresses the contradiction between Heb. 9:27 ("And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment") and two other verses: John 11:26 ("And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die") and 1 Cor. 15:51 ("Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed"). In order to reconcile this conflict he states, "According to the first verse above all men will have to die, but according to the second and third verses those Christians who are living when Christ comes for His own at the rapture will not have to die ('shall not sleep' means shall not die). The first verse refers to physical death, while the second verse speaks of spiritual death.... The general rule made by God is that it is appointed unto men once to die a physical death, but there will be an exception to this rule when Christ returns for his own, and those who belong to Him 'shall not all sleep,' but they shall be...'caught up to meet the Lord in the air' (1 Thess. 4:17)."

Apparently Johnson is unable to realize that he actually proved Heb. 9:27 and 1 Cor. 15:51, in particular, are contradictory. He stated, "The general rule made by God that it is appointed unto men once to die a physical death" and then admitted there will be an exception to the rule when Christ returns. He can't have it both ways. Either all men will die once in accordance to Heb. 9:27 or they won't. There's no in between. If some men will not die when Christ returns, then all men are not going to die.

Later, he all but buried himself by saying, "Enoch and Elijah in the OT did not have to die-- they went to heaven without dying. So will all Christians who are living when Christ comes again. They will be translated, changed...in the twinkling of an eye.... The God who made the rule that all must die will also make an exception to that rule when Christ comes again." Need more be said? He began by allegedly reconciling a contradiction and concluded by conceding the contradiction's existence. One can't help but be amazed at the willingness of apologists to tackle problems with which they are wholly ill-prepared to cope. With a defense like this, Johnson would have done well to have avoided this conflict entirely. One could hardly imagine a more inept explanation. In effect, he is not only saying Heb. 9:27 is false, but providing evidence to prove as much.

On top of everything else, he didn't even interpret the second verse correctly. He said, "according to the second and third verses those Christians who are living when Christ comes for His own at the rapture will not have to die." That may be true with respect to the third verse, but the second verse, John 11:26 is referring to those in general who believe "the resurrection at the last day" (John 11:24) will occur, not just those who will be living when the rapture is supposed to occur.

On page 95 Johnson sought to reconcile Heb. 11:17 ("By faith Abraham...offered up Isaac...offered up his only begotten son") with Gen. 25:6 ("But unto the sons of the concubines, which Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts, and sent them away from Isaac his son...."). He states, "The first verse says that Isaac was Abraham's 'only begotten son,' while the second verse says he had other sons. This looks like a contradiction. (Of course, that's only because it is--Ed.). The solution is that though Abraham had sons by concubines and by Keturah, and a son by Hagar, Isaac was the 'only begotten son' by Sarah, the only one in the direct line of ancestry to the Messiah, and the only heir of all the possessions of Abraham. Josephus says the 'only begotten son' means the 'beloved son'."

To begin with, Johnson needs to straighten out in his own mind his definition of "begotten". Does it mean a son who is a direct ancestry of the Messiah, or a son who is merely "beloved"? Either way, his explanation carries no weight. Where does the Bible say that "begotten" refers to someone who is in the messianic lineage? Judges 8:30 says, "Gideon had seventy sons of his body begotten: for he had many wives." Does that mean every one of these seventy sons was in the messianic line? After all, they were "begotten". In Hosea 5:7 God condemns Israel and Ephraim for having "dealt treacherously against the Lord" by having "begotten strange children...." Although these children were "begotten", surely Johnson is not going to allege they were ancestors of the messiah? And finally, Johnson must be aware of the incredible number of times the word "begat" is used in the OT. If all of those people were "begat", then they must have been "begotten". Yet, no one with even a modicum of biblical knowledge would dare claim they were all ancestors of Jesus. So, the word "begotten" isn't used only in reference to those in the messianic lineage.

As far as "begotten" meaning "beloved" is concerned, Johnson is not only obligated to show where Josephus made this correlation but prove they are synonymous. He provided evidence of neither. And where does the text show or even imply that Isaac was the only "beloved" son of Abraham?

On page 96 Johnson leaps into another prominent biblical dilemma by trying to meld 1 John 1:8 ("If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us") with 1 John 3:9 ("Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God"). Oddly enough, he begins by refuting two of the most common rationalizations provided by his own compatriots. He states, "These two verses, which seem to contradict each other, have been a source of perplexity to many of God's children. Many attempts have been made by Bible scholars to reconcile these verses. One interpretation says that 1 John 3:9 is referring to the new nature of a Christian which does not and cannot sin. It is true that the new nature cannot and does not sin, but that is not the true interpretation of the verse. Another interpretation, which is perhaps the most common one, says that the sin referred to is a continuous act or habit of life, and that a Christian does not practice sin. Dr. William Pettingill, in his book Bible Questions Answered tells about speaking to Dr. Scofield about this verse and says, 'I see you have adopted the word practice in the margin of your reference Bible relating to the third chapter of John. But, doctor, how does that help matters any? When you consider that any coming short of the glory of God in thought or word or deed is sin, is it not true therefore that we all do practice sin?' 'Alas! Alas! so we do,' replied the doctor."

In effect, Johnson has saved us the trouble of refuting two of the most common excuses used in an attempt to make these two verses compatible. As he correctly showed by his little story, to sin at all is to practice sin. It doesn't have to be repetitive. First John 3:9 says that whoever is born of God does not sin; it does not say it has to be done on a regular basis.

Unfortunately, Johnson closes by submitting a harmonization of his own that is no more sea-worthy than those already disproven. He states, "The key to the problem is found in the literal rendering of 1 John 3:9: 'Whosoever is begotten of God is never lawless, for His seed remains in him; and he cannot be lawless because he is begotten of God.' No born-again child of God will be guilty of sin in the sense of lawlessness. There is a great difference between disobedience and lawlessness. A person may disobey the Word of God at the same time he acknowledges God's Word to be right that he should obey it.... So, although a Christian can sin, as we see in 1 John 1:8-9 and 2:1, he cannot be lawless...."

Apparently Johnson is trying to prove that the adage "Words were invented to hide reality" has some validity. Not only does the Bible make no such distinction between the words "lawlessness" and "disobedience" but they aren't even mentioned. Where on earth Scripture justifies a wholly arbitrary distinction of this nature is anyone's guess. Secondly, not only does Scripture make no such differentiation but Webster's New World Thesaurus New Revised Edition equates the two words on page 429. If you are disobedient then you are lawless, and if you are lawless then you are disobedient. Johnson has concocted a distinction without a difference.

So, in summary and based upon what we have seen over the last couple of issues, the evidence clearly demonstrates that Carl Johnson is a firm believer in one of the most common of all apologetic defenses: "That's what it says, but that's not what it means"

Before ending our extensive analysis of Johnson's book, we can't resist citing his quotation on page 124 of an absurd remark made by Dwight L. Moody, founder of the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, Illinois. The latter states, "I know the Bible is inspired because it inspires me." If that is to be the criterion, then hundreds of religious books are inspired because millions are inspired by them. No doubt Muslims feel inspired by the Koran and Mormons are inspired by the Book of Mormon. Being a source of inspiration hardly proves a book was written or produced by God. Even more important, in no way does it prove the book is valid.

That completes an analysis of Johnson's work entitled So the Bible is Full of Contradictions? and if our readers have been provided with additional tools with which to examine apologetic literature more critically, then our efforts will not have been in vain.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #591 from TD of Morgantown, West Virginia (On page 2 in the 137th issue we asked a biblicist if god could create a two-sided triangle or a square circle and TD feels our comments should have been altered--Ed.)

Dear Dennis.

I think you erred in your answer to Sproul on BE page 137-2. To have unlimited power means to be able to perform any action. But there are some sequences of words that do not describe actions. For example, the sequence "to make green ideas sleep furiously" is a nonsense string. It does not describe any action. So if someone were to ask "Can an omnipotent being make green ideas sleep furiously?" then the correct reply would not be "Yes, of course," but rather "Your very question is unintelligible."

Similarly with the sequences "to create a square circle" and "to create a two-sided triangle." They are nonsense strings and do not describe actions. If someone were to ask "Can an omnipotent being create a square circle (or a two sided-triangle)?" then the correct reply is not "Yes, of course," but rather "Your very question is unintelligible."

In order to describe an action, a sequence of words must be intelligible, which means that it must express something thinkable or imaginable, something capable of being represented by pictures or on film (if only in a cartoon). Thus, Biblical miracles would be actions in this sense because they can indeed be represented on film (e.g., the movie "The Ten Commandments"). It follows that an omnipotent being must be able to perform all the Biblical miracles. But sequences of words like "create a square circle," "create a two-sided triangle," "make green ideas sleep furiously," "make is were he if," etc. are mere nonsense strings. They do not express anything thinkable or imaginable or capable of being represented on film (even a cartoon). Some would say they are ill-formed sequences that violate rules of language. Thus they do not describe actions or anything that an omnipotent being might intelligibly be said to do.

Most of your answers are well done, but that one was objectionable. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #591

Dear TD.

I appreciate your suggested modification to my critique of Sproul in the 137th issue, but beg to differ with your analysis in several respects. Firstly, I think you are confusing an unintelligible sentence with an unintelligible concept. I asked if God could create a square circle, which is an intelligible sentence with an unintelligible concept. Your statement "make is were he if" is no sentence and has no concept. The mere presence of verbs like "make, is, and were" and the pronoun "he" is not sufficient for the creation of a sentence. So nothing is doing anything. If I had made that kind of comment, it would have been as if I had never spoken at all. Your question: "Can an omnipotent being make green ideas sleep furiously?," on the other hand, is a sentence and, like my query, contains an incomprehensible concept. But you have taken the absurdity in my question one step further by relating concepts that are not associated with one another. Ideas are not associated with color and speed is not associated with sleep. With reference to my questions, however, shapes are associated with triangles and squares. Perhaps you are merely making a subtle attempt to discredit my observations, I'm not sure. But I don't think your analogy will stand the strain. If you insist the situations are analogous, then I'm willing to go one step further by asking your questions as well. Can God create green ideas? Can he make ideas sleep furiously? Of course not.

Secondly, you say that "to have unlimited power means to be able to perform any action. But some sequences of words do not describe actions." If a sequence does not describe any action, how would it even be applicable to what we are discussing, since I was asking god to do something in every sentence I uttered?

Thirdly, you say, "a sequence of words must be intelligible, which means that it must express something thinkable or imaginable, something capable of being represented by pictures or on film (if only in a cartoon). Thus, Biblical miracles would be actions in this sense because they can indeed be represented on film (e.g., the movie "The Ten Commandments")." In effect, you are saying that man has no right to ask god to perform any kind of deed that man cannot imagine or put into films or cartoons. In other words, unless man can conceive of it, man has no right to ask god to do it. God's powers are limited to what man can imagine! Or stated somewhat differently, god can only be justifiably asked to do what man can conceive. Since when is god acting only within the constraints of man's capabilities? Since man can't conceive of someone counting to infinity; therefore, man has no right to ask god to do so?

And lastly, you say, "If someone were to ask 'Can an omnipotent being create a square circle (or a two sided-triangle)?' then the correct reply is not 'Yes, of course,' but rather 'Your very question is unintelligible'." The question is not unintelligible, but conceiving of a response is.

In summary, I can't help but feel that your "God can only be asked to do what man can conceive" approach betrays an insidious religious background coming to the fore. In any event, I appreciate your suggested modifications to my analysis and hope my observations will be taken in the spirit of camaraderie intended.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #592 from JS of Detroit, Michigan
Dear Dennis.

On page 139-5 I don't understand why SS says in his letter that 1 Samuel 1:3 is the most blasphemous verse in the Bible. Can you get clarification?

Editor's Response to Letter #592
Dear JS.

We received several letters expressing the same concern. We should have been more vigilant. Perhaps SS will write and enlighten us.

Letter #593 from EEB of Corpus Christi, Texas
Dear Dennis.

I have been aching to find a steady supply of freethought programs to put on the local public access channel, but the search has been frustrating. My first hope was a series of readings from Ingersoll's works done by a man in Wisconsin. Unfortunately, his tape did not meet the requirements of the local TV company. Your program will not either unless you are willing to change your format.

I am sure that you know the federal laws concerning public access use. The only local requirement is that "No program shall be transmitted which contains copyrighted material for which proper clearance has not been obtained." When the manager of the public access channel saw the Ingersoll tape, he told me I had to have authorization from the copyright owner of the music that was used in the introduction.

The cable company has the following technical standards:

- The videotape is previewed for minimum technical requirements.
- Access programs must have technical standards high enough to deliver clear pictures throughout the entire length of the program.

- A label must accompany each tape cassette. It should contain the producer's name and phone number, the length of the program, the title of the program, and the cablecasting date. Only one program per tape is allowed.

These specifications are strongly encouraged:

- 60 seconds of color bars and tone at the head of the tape.
- Slate with title of program, producer and production date.
- A countdown or at least 10 seconds of black before the program begins, and 60 seconds of black after the 30 or 60 minute mark.
- The public access tape format is 1/2" VHS (SP speed) and 3/4" u-matic. All other formats must be transferred to 3/4" for cablecasting.

My concern is that you intend to put four programs on one tape, which would mean that I cannot get them on the local channel. It seems you probably use the SP speed, since you intend to put four 30 minute programs on one 2-hour tape.

I hope it will be possible for you to be a source for me. Surely you know about Freethought Television Network which will publish a catalogue of programs.

Editor's Response to Letter #593

Dear EEB.

Your willingness to assist is greatly appreciated. In regard to specifics, let me say this. Our music was chosen from a list of songs on a generic list that presents no copyright problem. Our station provides a list of songs that are free for anyone to use. Having one program on each tape isn't possible, however. I tried that initially and quickly realized that I was going to have a room full of tapes very rapidly. Even more importantly, mailing costs would soar. I can mail four programs on one tape for almost as much as it would cost to mail one program per tape. Of course, once you receive the 2 hour tape you are free to record it onto four separate tapes or divide it in any manner you deem preferable. As far as color bars, labeling, countdowns, clarity, and so forth are concerned, I recommend showing it to your local cable access personnel to see what they think. I hope you can make whatever modifications may be required, if any. Our program's quality exceeds that of many of the programs that are shown on our local access channel, so I don't think that should be much of a problem. I'm unacquainted with the Freethought Television Network. Is it connected with the Freedom From Religion Foundation in Madison, Wisconsin? I've always found Dan Barker to be a fine gentleman, doing good work.

Letter #594 from PS of Charlotte, North Carolina
Dear Mr. McKinsey:

I would like to volunteer to contact my local cable station to arrange "airing" the television program you mentioned in the last issue of BE. The comments you made regarding the purchase of "broadcast quality videotape" on which to record the shows is not specific enough, since there are several "broadcast quality" video formats. Our local cable station uses 3/4" U-matic video cassettes, which will only hold a total of 1 hour of programming. I assume you are referring to SVHS, which some cable companies are now using, and will hold up to 2 hours of total programming in the SP speed.... Please specify what format tape you require, and I will send them to you. Also please advise the title of the show so that I can give this information to the cable station when I contact them. In order to reserve a time slot for a program they usually want to be sure the show will continue pretty much uninterrupted every week. They have had problems with people starting a project and then its fizzling out after a few shows.

Editor's Response to Letter #594

Dear PS.

I'm certainly glad you also are willing to volunteer to help in our most worthy cause. We just finished recording our 11th program, but we still aren't ready to begin circulation yet. We'll let you know through BE when we are ready to proceed.

In regard to specifics, we can say the following. The name of the show is BIBLICAL ERRANCY COMMENTARY. Every program is 1/2 hour in length. (The shows are supposed to begin with a disclaimer by the station according to the station's manual, but they have never bothered to insert the disclaimer at the beginning of any of our shows. I asked why it wasn't inserted and wasn't given much of a reason.) Except for the first one or two programs, the format is as follows. The show begins with a 30 second color bar which is required by the local station. Then we see a Bible splitting in half with the name of the program appearing in the middle. A short introduction with respect to the program's purpose and content is followed by my appearance on a short stage speaking from notes on a clip-board. Every program ends with a rolling of the credits and a final statement as to where additional information can be obtained. ALL programs are on 1/2 inch tape only. We never use 3/4" tape for any reason. Programs are recorded on tapes that are 2 hours long, so we put 4 programs on each tape. Once I have four programs on a tape, I will take it home and record the tape from one of my VCR's to another one of my VCR's, which will have your blank tape inside. Your tape will then be mailed to you. I have no way to modify the tapes as recorded; so if your local station has some local requirements with respect to a tape's format, all I can do is ask that you make whatever changes are needed.

There has been some concern about what is meant by a "broadcast quality tape." Basically, it is a quantum improvement over the 2 hour tapes that can be purchased in most local discount stores. We use VHS Broadcast quality tapes. We do not use the next grade up which is SVHS (Super VHS) because it cannot be used on my home VCR's without damaging my equipment. The picture is better, but it can only be used by our studio equipment. So, in order to get a good picture without great expense, we record the show on an SVHS tape and then use studio equipment to transfer the recording onto a VHS tape, which I then take home and use in my VCR's. Stay tuned. We'll keep you informed as to the latest developments. More is yet to come.

September 1994

DID JESUS OF NAZARETH EXIST? (The Talmud) The thirty-second and thirty-third issues of BE discussed a group of non-Christian writers whom biblicists allege referred to Jesus in their writings. Both issues clearly showed that ancient writers such as Josephus, Tacitus, Suetonius, and Pliny the Younger are not referring to Jesus of Nazareth in their most commonly quoted passages, and only by twisting and quoting out of context can their extrabiblical writings be employed in this manner. Another extrabiblical source occasionally cited as well is the Talmud. It is the collection of writings constituting the Jewish civil and religious law, and consists of two parts--the Mishnah (text) and the Gemara (commentary). In Judaism, the Torah, i.e., the law, is the Pentateuch, the first five books of the Old Testament, and the Mishnah is the oral Torah supplementing it. For several centuries after the codification of the Mishnah, rabbis and scholars wrote commentaries on it, known as the Gemara, i.e. completion. The Talmudic comments most often relied upon by biblicists were not cited earlier because their strength ranges from poor to pathetic. But to forestall any possibility of their being used to deceive the unwary, an exposure of the most prominent references and their deficiencies is well advised.

The first comment worthy of note is found in Sanhedrin 43a of the Talmud, which states,

On the eve of the Passover Yeshu (The Munich manuscript adds the Nasarean) was hanged. For forty days before the execution took place, a herald went forth and cried, 'He is going forth to be stoned because he has practised sorcery and enticed Israel to apostasy. Anyone who can say anything in his favour, let him come forward and plead on his behalf.' But since nothing was brought forward in his favour he was hanged on the eve of the Passover.... Do you suppose that he was one for whom a defence could be made? Was he not a Mesith (enticer), concerning whom Scripture says, Neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him (Deut. 13:9)? With Yeshu however it was different, for he was connected with the government (or royalty, i.e., influential). Our Rabbis taught: Yeshu had five disciples, Matthai, Nakai, Nezer, Buni, and Todah.

Although difficult to imagine, this anemic passage is a reference to Jesus, according to some commentators. Reliance upon passages as weak as this can't help but dissipate respect for apologetic scholarship. Obvious inadequacies are:

- (1) It says Yeshu, not Jesus.
- (2) Even if Yeshu and Jesus were identical words, it was not an unusual name. On the contrary, it appears rather frequently in ancient Jewish literature. Josephus records the following out of 28 high priests in the 107 years from Herod to the destruction of Jerusalem: Jesus, son of Phabet; Jesus, son of Damneus; Jesus, son of Gamaliel; Jesus, son of Sapphias; Jesus son of Thebuthus.
- (3) Jesus was crucified, not hanged.
- (4) Jesus was not stoned, at least not according to the biblical record.
- (5) The New Testament says nothing about a herald going forth for forty days before the execution occurred.
- (6) Jesus had no connection with the government. At least nothing within the Gospels would lead one to believe that he lived among royalty or the influential class.
- (7) Nowhere in the New Testament was Jesus charged with sorcery or leading Israel astray. The New Testament record tells of three accusations against Jesus: (a) blasphemy, (b) claiming to be the Son of God, and (c) assuming the role of King of the Jews. But he was never charged with practicing sorcery nor of leading Israel astray. Any attempt to apply this part of the Talmud to Jesus is doomed to failure.

Another passage relied upon is found in section 55b of the Sanhedrin in the Talmud and states, "The blasphemer is punished only if he utters [the Divine] name.... The whole day [of the trial] the witnesses are examined by means of a substitute for the divine name, Thus, 'May Jose smite Jose.'" This is vagueness at its worse. The suggestion is made that the first "Jose" represents God. But it is unlikely that even for illustrative purposes the rabbis would allude to Jesus as a divinity. And did God ever smite Jesus?

A footnote to Sanhedrin 67a says, "In the uncensored editions of the Talmud there follows this passage.... 'And thus they did to Ben Strada in Lydda, and they hung him on the eve of Passover.'" Although cited by apologetic sources, this clearly isn't much to go on either. As we all know, according to the biblical account Jesus was crucified, not hanged, and he was killed in Jerusalem, not in Lydda, near the coast. The names aren't even the same.

Another passage that is sometimes cited is found in Sanhedrin 106b and is interpreted by some apologists in such a manner as to equate Balaam with Jesus of Nazareth. It says, Balaam also the son of Beor, the soothsayer, [did the children of Israel slay with the sword]. A soothsayer? But he was a prophet! R. Johanan said: At first he was a prophet, but subsequently a soothsayer. R. Papa observed: This is what men say, 'She who was the descendant of princes and governors, played the harlot with carpenters....! Rab said: They subjected him to four deaths, stoning, burning, decapitation and strangulation. A certain man said to R. Hanina: Hast thou heard how old Balaam was? He replied: It is not actually stated, but since it is written, Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their day, [it follows that] he was thirty-three or thirty-four years old. He rejoined: Thou has said correctly; I personally have seen Balaam's chronicle, in which it is stated, 'Balaam the lame was thirty years old when Phinehas the Robber killed him.

Believe it or not, that nebulous maze of disjointed monologue is used as a reference to Jesus of Nazareth. Apparently some Christian apologists just couldn't resist the temptation when they read such emotionally charged words as "prophet," "she/carpenters," "subjected/deaths," "slain by Israel," and "thirty-three." The discrepancies between the life of Balaam and Jesus are numerous.

- (a) Balaam was slain with a sword, while Jesus died by crucifixion.
- (b) The father of Jesus was not named Beor, nor was he a soothsayer.
- (c) One would be hard pressed to find biblical support for allegations that Jesus died by stoning, burning, decapitation and strangulation. Incidentally, how could he have died by all four methods? In order to make sense, "and" should have been translated as "or".
- (d) If "she" is referring to the mother of Jesus, this passage is saying she was a harlot with many carpenters (plural).
- (e) If Jesus is Balaam, then the passage is implying Jesus is bloody and deceitful.
- (f) When did Jesus keep a chronicle, especially one relating his age or death?
- (g) Jesus was never lame, and certainly not for thirty years.
- (h) The names Jesus and Balaam are quite different.
- (i) And finally, Jesus was not killed by someone named Phinehas the Robber.

It doesn't take a great deal of wisdom to see that apologists are stretching interpretation to the limits on these.

A short little comment found in the footnotes of Sanhedrin 107b says, "In the uncensored editions there follows here, 'and not like R. Joshua b. Perahjah, who repulsed Jesus (the Nazarene) with both hands.'" The problem with this sentence is that only the Munich manuscript adds (the Nazarene).

Another footnote in Sanhedrin 107b says, .

..When King Jannai slew our Rabbis, R. Joshua b. Perahjah (and Jesus) fled to Alexandria of Egypt. On the resumption of peace, Simeon b. Shetach sent to him.... He arose, went, and found himself in a certain inn, where great honour was shewn him.... He (Jesus) thinking that it was to repel him, went, put up a brick, and worshipped it. 'Repent,' said R. Joshua to him. Jesus replied, 'I have thus learned from thee: He who sins and causes others to sin is not afforded the means of repentance.' And a Master has said, 'Jesus the Nazarene practised magic and led Israel astray.'

Although hard to realize, this is the more intelligible part of the entire passage. Again, one can see how desperate some apologists are to find something in the Talmud that can substantiate the alleged existence of Jesus of Nazareth. The attraction of "fled to Egypt," an "inn," "Jesus the Nazarene," "led Israel," and "sin/repentance" were more than they could resist. The problems with this are readily apparent.

- (a) Jesus was not a rabbi when he fled to Egypt.
- (b) The New Testament says nothing about Jesus fleeing to Alexandria, Egypt.
- (c) When did Jesus ever worship a brick? The worship of bricks is known in the Hermes cult, and is not Christian.
- (d) According to apologetic theology, Jesus neither sinned nor caused others to sin.
- (e) Jesus was not a contemporary of King Jannai.
- And (f) while the Munich, Florence, and Karlsruhe manuscripts and the early printed editions of the Talmud mention Yeshu, only the Munich text adds "the Nazarene."

That's about as coherent as these passages can be rendered.

Another passage of equal clarity is found in Abodah Zarah 17a which says,

I was once walking in the upper-market of Sepphoris when I came across one [of the disciples of Jesus the Nazarene] Jacob of Kefar-Sekaniah by name who said to me.... To which I made no reply. Said he to me: Thus was I taught [by Jesus the Nazarene], 'For the hire of a harlot hath she gathered them and unto the hire of a harlot shall they return.' They came from a place of filth, let them go to a place of filth.

Again, the power of imagination appears to have been overwhelming.

- (a) How does the mere mention of a disciple of Jesus prove that Jesus lived?
- (b) The reference to Jesus only occurs in the Munich manuscript.
- (c) And nowhere in the Gospels can one find the quote that was attributed to Jesus.

A final passage from the Mishnah itself, as opposed to the Gemara, is found in Yebamoth 49a, which says, "I found a roll of genealogical records in Jerusalem, and therein was written, 'so-and-so is a bastard [having been born] from [a forbidden union with] a married woman,' which confirms the view of R. Joshua."

Some people actually see Jesus in this. The problems are:

- (a) Jesus was born in Bethlehem, not Jerusalem.
- (b) Although technically speaking, Jesus was a bastard since his parents were not married, one is hardpressed to understand how apologists would want to use a passage that is so derogatory toward him.

To skirt this difficulty some writings say, "A certain person was illegitimately born of a married woman." The word "illegitimate" is a euphemism. In addition, "a certain person" could apply to thousands of Middle Eastern people, and Mary was not married.

In summary, the Talmud has no independent tradition about Jesus; all that it says of him is merely an echo of Christian and Pagan legends, which it reproduces according to the impressions of the second and later centuries. The Talmud has "borrowed" its knowledge of Jesus from the Gospels. When Josephus is excluded from the Jewish witnesses to the historicity of Jesus, there remains only the question of whether or not there may be some other evidence in the other Jewish literature of the time, in the Talmud, for instance. The answer is no.

Most readers should now be able to understand why this whole topic of Jesus and the Talmud was given such low priority and is only now being discussed.

REVIEWS

On page 86 in Evidence That Demands a Verdict apologist Josh McDowell refers to some Talmudic passages, including some discussed earlier, to prove the historicity of Jesus. Essentially all he did was scour the Talmud for any sentence, phrase, or passage that could possibly be twisted in such a manner as to refer to Jesus. Context was deemed irrelevant. For example, on page 86 McDowell quotes the Talmud as saying, "The Amoa 'Ulla' ('Ulla' was a disciple of R. Youchanan and lived in Palestine at the end of the third century.) adds: 'And do you suppose that for (Yeshu of Nazareth) there was any right of appeal? He was a beguiler, and the Merciful One hath said: 'Thou shalt not spare neither shalt thou conceal him,' It is otherwise with Yeshu, for he was near to the civil authority."

Besides the fact that this passage is so vague that hundreds of people could be under consideration, allegations are included that should exclude Jesus, according to apologetic propaganda and the Gospels. For McDowell to cite as a source a passage which refers to Jesus as a beguiler is rather interesting, to say the least. I'm surprised he would admit it. Secondly, if Jesus was near to the civil authority, then McDowell is obligated to cite chapter and verse for corroboration.

McDowell cites Yeb. IV 3, 49a ("R. Shimeon ben Azzai said [concerning Jesus]: 'I found a genealogical roll in Jerusalem wherein was recorded, Such-an-one is a bastard of an adulteress'") for his own purposes. He is uncomfortable with the word "bastard." So, he quotes Klausner who redefines bastard by saying,... "What is a bastard? Everyone whose parents are liable to death by the Beth Din." Now McDowell feels that he can comfortably quote Klausner's final conclusion, "That Jesus is here referred to seems to be beyond doubt." After disassociating Jesus from the word bastard, McDowell feels he can now claim that "beyond doubt" his passage is referring to Jesus. He neglects to mention the fact that the reason they are punishable by death at the hands of Beth Din is that they are participating in a forbidden union. To be specific, the passage says, "so-and-so is a bastard [having been born] from [a forbidden union with] a married woman..." A footnote to this passage says, "Such a union is punishable by death at the hands of Beth Din." The essence of McDowell's deception lies in the fact that he made it look as if a bastard was anyone who was liable to death by Beth Din, as if Beth Din were some kind of uncontrollable murderer, when they are to be killed by Beth Din because they engaged in an illicit relationship that gave rise to a bastard. So, if it were referring to Jesus, then Jesus would be a bastard, and for McDowell to say it "seems to be beyond doubt" that Jesus is being referred to speaks for itself. McDowell is calling his saviour a derogatory name.

Other Talmudic passages are available for discussion, but there is a limit beyond which imprecision, speculation, and imagination should not be allowed to go. That point has been reached..

Over the years we have repeatedly critiqued apologetic books of one sort or another on a wide variety of topics. But there are also many books and pamphlets corroborating our contentions on various issues and they deserve at least one hearing. After all, there is no sense in just reviewing books with which we disagree. And also it might be well to lighten up a bit after enduring the agony of a Talmudic excursion. Since it would be wholly impractical to quote everything available on the market, we have decided to extract from our personal portfolio some comments that are poignant, appropriate, entertaining, or amusing as the case may be.

SLAVERY--In a pamphlet entitled "Christianity and Slavery" Chapman Cohen says on page 3,
The twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus contains a full permit to own slaves, with some interesting rules as to their cost and treatment.... In the twenty-seventh chapter there is a scale of prices that are to be paid for slaves.... In the New Testament there is no condemnation of slavery. Jesus accepted it as a settled institution.... Jesus was never at any time appealed to for help in abolishing slavery. His teaching of non-resistance, and Paul's teaching that slaves were to be obedient to their masters, whether the masters were good or bad, held out no hope for the slave. It should be remembered that the translation of the Greek word slave is given in the New Testament as 'servant.' Honesty of interpretation or translation has never been a strong feature with Christian apologists.... Our endeavor here is merely to show that there was no clear word of condemnation of slavery in either the Old Bible or the New Testament.

Quoting Renan on page 6 Cohen says, "Christianity never said that slavery is an abuse.... The idea never came to the Christian doctors.... No word occurs in all the ancient Christian literature to preach revolt to the slave.... Never is the master Christian who has Christian slaves compelled to free them."

And on page 7 Cohen quotes Professor Westermarck who says in his Origin and Development of Moral Ideas, "Christianity recognized slavery from the beginning. In the early ages martyrs possessed slaves, and so did abbots, bishops, popes, monasteries, and churches.... The Church was concerned with saving souls. Slavery of the body or mind did not matter."

FUNDAMENTALISM--On page 29 in a pamphlet entitled "Religious Bunk Over the Radio" published by Haldeman-Julius, L. M. Birkhead answers liberal critics of publications like BE by saying, Why bother about campaigns against the fundamentalists? Let them alone! Why stew and fret and work one's self up over such insignificant, stupid people? Let science, education, books, magazines, travel, more rapid means of communication, the industrial revolution, a better knowledge of comparative religions, and time do their work. And then fundamentalism will be as dead as a doornail. Such is the line of reasoning of the majority of liberals.

The only trouble with this attitude is that there is a menacing possibility that the above enumerated forces have not, and are not likely to have, a chance at the fundamentalists. The fundamentalist millions might be cured of their fundamentalism if they could have a thorough exposure to the liberating forces of the modern world. It is just possible, however, that the fundamentalists may put these forces into a theological strait-jacket. The battle in behalf of liberalism has by no means been won yet. Right off, I must break down and confess that I number myself among the minority of liberals--I mean the minority that 'views with alarm' the rise of fundamentalism. I must also admit that I have actually been out campaigning against the fundamentalists.

On page 32 Birkhead says, "The great majority of the liberals do not appreciate the temper and tactics of the fundamentalists. The fundamentalists mean business. They propose to capture the reins of government and make modernists, liberals, atheists, Unitarians, etc. bow down and put their necks in the yoke of medieval theology."

Later on page 43 Birkhead proves BE is by no means alone in its thrust toward rationality by saying,

The one thing on which the hand of modernists, atheists, agnostics, liberals, etc. must not be laid, is the Bible. Fundamentalists rave, storm, shout, and denounce when the Bible is criticized. When I was speaking on 'The Truth About the Bible,' in Oklahoma City, I mentioned particularly the historical inaccuracies in the Bible, the contradictions, the unworthy ideas of God, and then came to a discussion of the inadequacy of the teachings of Jesus. When I began to point out the contradictions in the teachings of Jesus, the belief of Jesus in devils as the cause of disease, and the fact that Jesus cursed a fig tree because it did not bear fruit out of season, a lady with her ten-year old son, became very restless, squirmed about in the seat, mumbled some words, and suddenly jumping up, shouted, 'I protest,' and, grabbing her son, left the church. As she walked hurriedly down the aisle, she made a most peculiar, 'sput, sput' sort of noise. It sounded something like the sputtering of a small motor boat out on a lake. As she went sputtering out the door, someone said, 'That's fundamentalist language.'

In that same address on the Bible, I pointed out some of the unfulfilled promises in the Bible, among others the warning to Adam by Yahweh that in the day that he ate of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, he would die. I mentioned the fact that according to the Bible, Adam lived several hundred years after eating of the forbidden fruit, and the promise that he was to die on the day that he ate the fruit didn't come true. A very belligerent looking fundamentalist gentleman stood up, pointed his finger at me, and shouted, 'But he died, didn't he?'

One can't help but note the similarity between Birkhead's situation and ours, even though everything he said was written in 1929.

JESUS--Ruth Green made a poignant observation with respect to Jesus on page 205 in her book The Born Again Skeptics Guide to the Bible,

Much of the morality taught by Jesus is impractical to the point of the absurd: Turn the other cheek, pay double damages, judge no one's behavior, go farther than forced to go, don't use your mind but be as children, sell all and give the proceeds to the poor (thus becoming poor yourself), have no thought for the morrow, make no plans, don't worry about food and clothing, be passive and meek, let everybody walk all over you, love people who persecute you as much as those who are kind to you and have regard for your feelings, be mournful, be smug and self-righteous and goad others into mistreating you, forsake everything of this world in preparation for the next, agree with everyone, deny sexual urges, mutilate yourself, have no deep love for your family and seriously consider deserting them, if robbed give the thief the same amount again, don't resist attackers but let them abuse you once more, avoid coarse people not on your level, accept every misfortune gratefully, don't share your culture with dolts, and behave as you please as long as you finally repent.

Anyone well acquainted with the Gospels knows the high degree to which Green's observations are applicable to Jesus.

In so far as scriptural information on the life of Jesus is concerned, John Jackson said the following on page 8 in Pagan Origins of the Christ Myth,

The paucity of our information concerning the Christian savior is concisely expressed by Mr. Robert Keable, in his work, The Great Galilean: 'No man knows sufficient of the early life of Jesus to write a biography of him. For that matter, no one knows enough for the normal New York Times obituary notice of a great man. If regard were had to what we should call, in correct speech, definitely historical facts, scarcely three lines could be filled. Moreover, if newspapers had been in existence, and if that obituary notice had had to be written in the year of his death, no editor could have found in the literature of his day so much as his name. Yet few periods of the ancient world were so well documented as the period of Augustus and Tiberius. But no contemporary knew of his existence.... His first mention in any surviving document, secular or religious, is twenty years after.

INTERPRETATION--On pages 52 and 53 in Lucifer's Handbook (A tactically questionable title) Lee Carter says, The great bulk of the Bible is made up of stories, poetry, and parables which are ambiguous enough to enable anyone to read anything he pleases into them.... no one can believe all the Bible; if one is to believe any of it, it is necessary to select a few passages which agree with each other on some point that one already believes anyway and ignore all the rest. However, any group of passages is just as valid (or as invalid) as any other, and the result is the thousands of Protestant sects, or denominations.... The very reason there are different sects is that they cannot agree on which parts are literal and which metaphor.

Later on page 68 he says, "It should be apparent to all by now that the Bible is so ambiguous, and says so many different things, that anyone can take a passage out of context here, and another there, and piece them together to form any kind of doctrine he pleases, then claim the Scriptures prove him right."

SCRIPTURE AND MENTAL HEALTH--While discussing religion and mental health, Carter makes the following blunt comments on page 75,

Until the advent of modern psychiatry, the deranged have always been considered holy men. In fact, according to historian Vardis Fisher, the Hebrew word for 'prophet,' and 'lunatic' was one and the same. Epileptics were thought to be seized by God--catatonics to have left their bodies--hebephrenics to be speaking in angelic tongues. Psychotics have always been the shamen, seers, prophets, witch-doctors, wizards, and oracles--up until now. Today, a potential Jeremiah, or John the Baptist is simply kept under sedation. But since we cannot reach the ones of the past to examine their blood chemistry..., many assume they must have been the real article.

On the next page he states, "In point of fact, much sociological data is now available which indicates that the more devoutly 'religious' a person, the more likely he is to be mentally disturbed." And he concludes his powerful assault by saying on page 66,

Any psychologist, social worker, and prison warden can easily explain the simplest way to make a criminal. Take one otherwise normal child, or adult, and repeatedly humiliate him until he has no pride, dignity, or self-respect left. We then have an ideal Christian. We also have a criminal. A person who no longer respects himself can no longer respect anything. One who does not love himself, cannot love anything. If he hates himself, he hates the world.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We would like not only to advertise but endorse the publication entitled THE SKEPTICAL REVIEW. The editor, Farrell Till, is a former fundamentalist minister who critiques the Bible in a manner very similar to that found in BE. Based upon several phone conversations and the content of TSR, I find him to be both genial and knowledgeable. For a copy of his periodical write to Skepticism, Inc., P.O. Box 717, Canton, Illinois 61520-0717 or phone (309) 647-4764

P.S. Since TSR has been available for approximately four years and appears to have staying power, our subcaption has been altered accordingly.

Issue No. 142

October 1994

For a long time we have had a policy of periodically devoting an entire issue to letters from readers. This month's edition marks another addition to that sequence.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #595 from TD of Morgantown, West Virginia

Dear Dennis.

On pages 4-5 of BE #140, you responded to my previous letter, but you seem still to have not comprehended the issue. It could be initially posed as a simple question: what can an omnipotent being do? My answer is: any action whatever. But then the question becomes this: what restrictions must be placed on sequences of words for them to describe actions? I would say that they at least need to express something intelligible. You seem to agree with me that "make he were he if" does not describe any action, but you disagree with me about the words "create a square circle". You say that those words do describe an action, whereas I say they do not.

What about the sequence "make green ideas sleep furiously"? Does that describe an action? You seemed to flounder on that example, in one place suggesting that it expresses no action because it relates concepts that are not associated with one another, but in another place suggesting that it does describe an action, but one which not even an omnipotent being can perform! (You wrote: "Can God create green ideas? ...of course not.") If there is an action there at all, then how is it that an omnipotent being cannot perform it? Some explanation is needed. Here are some other sequences to try out. Can an omnipotent being:

- (1) create an if but mountain?
- (2) brightly extricate makeshift brawny flashbacks?
- (3) know carefully that a tree is brightly even?
- (4) state, season, ride, and caution one and the same thing?
- (5) see a book carefully?
- (6) paint the theory of relativity blue?
- (7) make it be 5:00 PM on the sun?
- (8) create an object that is red and not red at the same time?
- (9) create an object that is all red and all green at the same time?

My view is that all of the examples are unintelligible. I would not say (as R.C. Sproul apparently would) that the answer to them is "No". I would say, instead, that there can be no answer because no intelligible question is being asked. And it follows from that that there is no action described in any of them. You said in BE 137-2 that "omnipotence" is an absolutist word that allows no exceptions. So in that case you ought to be able to apply to the above examples and come up with answers to the nine questions. What are your answers to them?

Editor's Response to Letter #595

Dear TD.

With all due respect, you are repeating yourself. All you are doing is adding additional examples to the same point you made with your "make he were he if" illustration. So all I can do is ask you to reread the answer I gave earlier. You say I "have not comprehended the issue" and tended to flounder when I think the floundering lies elsewhere. You say words need to describe actions and "express something intelligible" but immediately reinterpret that to mean "express something possible." Sentences don't have to express something intelligible. All they have to do is "be intelligible." When I ask if God can create a square circle or a two-sided triangle that is clearly referring to an action. Your first, second, third, and fourth examples are unintelligible because the sentence (assuming an omnipotent being is the subject) in which they are contained is itself unintelligible. The problem lies not with the concept being conveyed, because we never get that far. The problem lies with the sentence itself. That's the problem with your "make he were he if" example as well. On the other hand, your seventh, eighth, and ninth examples are intelligible sentences but convey unintelligible concepts. They are like asking God to create a square circle or a two-sided triangle. The sentence is intelligible but the idea conveyed is not. As I said in the 140th issue, you are confusing an unintelligible sentence with an unintelligible concept. The biblical ideas of someone being both God and man simultaneously (the Trinity), predestination directing a free-willed human being, and the emergence of evil in a world created by a perfectly good being are excellent examples of unintelligible Christian concepts that can be put into intelligible sentences. Christians constantly say, for example, "Jesus was God and man simultaneously." According to you that is an unintelligible sentence, on a par with "make he were he if." I disagree. The sentence is intelligible but the concept it is attempting to convey is not. According to you, the sentence "Can God count to infinity?" is unintelligible. Again, I disagree. The sentence is intelligible, while the act or concept is not.

Letter #596 from DM of Pasadena, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

I have to agree with TD's final conclusion (Letter #591). Since all triangles have three sides by definition, there can never be such a thing as a two-sided triangle. When we use the word "triangle" in the mathematical sense we are referring to a three-sided figure. Whatever two-sided figure God might create, whether we could comprehend it or not, would not fit our idea of a "triangle."

I would go one step further and say that an all-powerful god could not create a three-sided triangle or a round circle! When we draw a triangle we are not creating a triangle. Rather, we are creating an approximation in graphite or ink of an abstract concept. Being an idealized concept, a triangle is not an object which can be created or destroyed. It has neither substance nor beginning nor end in time or space. Therefore, it makes no sense to speak of a triangle as being created or destroyed....

I enjoyed your handling of Johnson's attempt to explain away a number of Bible contradictions. The contradictions you selected were excellent. You really nailed his hide to the ground!

Editor's Response to Letter #596

Dear DM.

You may agree with TD's conclusion, but your reasoning is different. In simple terms, all you are saying is that God can't do it because it can't be done. I couldn't agree more. You say that "whatever two-sided figure God might create, whether we could comprehend it or not, would not fit our idea of a 'triangle'." Precisely! In other words, God can't make a two-sided triangle. It can't be done, even by a being with alleged unlimited powers. So how could he have totally unlimited powers? How could he be omnipotent, when there are feats even he can't accomplish? I appreciate your compliments regarding Johnson.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #597 from Mickey Jako of 4 Chickering Court, Andover, Mass. 01810

(Mickey is a believer in the philosophy of Thomas Paine (deism) and specializes in making audio tape recordings of his meetings with Christian fundamentalists. What follows are some of his conclusions, based upon numerous encounters--Ed.).

(a name="libxtian">STRAWMANISH STUFF I think the liberal Christian, in fact I would say, the average Christian, views things like disputing the Noah's ark story as a "strawmanish" endeavor, as somehow a bit spiritually immature or retarded, or foolishly literalist. They would say that surely there are many valuable, instructive myths in the Bible that do not have to be taken as literally true. I tended to think this way myself for many years. But not any more; and here's why.

Christianity, whether fundamentalist or liberal, rests on the person of Jesus Christ. Jesus...believed in the literal truth of the OT accounts! He does not refer to them as mere stories; he refers to them as actual happenings. The flood, in Matt. 24:37-41. Lot's wife turning into salt, in Luke 17:32-33. Jonah and the whale, in Matt. 12:40. I just recently spoke to an astute minister who agreed with me, that Jesus regarded these stories as literally true, because he does not refer to them as "the story of" or "the parable of" but simply straightforwardly as actual occurrences.

Therefore, if Jesus considers these things as actual happenings, and if such accounts can be shown to be literally impossible, then Jesus is not the son of God, and Christianity is not valid. I believe one cannot judge the validity of Xity by selecting parts of only certain teachings of Jesus and probing them for their deep spiritual insight. Instead, you must examine all of what Jesus said, taught, claimed, and supported, and if specific passages do not hold up, in their wisdom, in their morality, in their scientific credibility, or if they are irreconcilable with other passages, then Jesus was not divine, and was not the representative of God as claimed.

I agree with Dennis's approach here. To resolve whether or not Xity is valid, you don't go off meditating on the wonders of love and the brotherhood of man apart from the actual words of the Bible; instead, you examine what the book says, you get down to the verses, you study the specifics of key passages, like examining a crime scene, to determine the truth. I do not think it's strawmanish. I do not think it's letter-of-the-law quibbling. I think it's examining clues to determine the truth.

A 450 foot wooden boat (Noah's Ark) puts the lie to Jesus, because such a vessel could not be seaworthy, according to modern shipbuilding experts, and a divine person would have known that. A divine person would have known the difference between a mythical story and reality, and surely would have taken care to make that distinction clear to his followers.

If Jesus believed in the OT, which he did, the liberal Christian is not justified in overlooking serious contradictions in it, or labeling those issues "strawmanish."

LIBERAL CHRISTIANITY I find the liberal Christian's position to be untenable on other points of principle, also. The liberal will believe there are many paths to God. But Jesus says he is the only way - John 14:6 "No man comes to the Father except through me." Acts 4:12 "Nor is there salvation in any other."

The liberal is tolerant, views intolerance as a definition of evil, and tends to respect the sincere beliefs of other faiths; but Jesus supports, if not identifies with, the nobleman in Luke 19:27, who says, "Bring here those enemies of mine, who did not want me to reign over them, and slay them before me."

The liberal regards errors in the Bible as largely irrelevant, but Jesus said in John 10:35 "Scripture cannot be broken." I say you cannot, as a liberal Christian, consider Jesus to be the essential source of divine wisdom, and simultaneously disagree with what he says.

THE SPIRITUAL SCAM Christians approach Biblical passages with the PRESUMPTION that divine wisdom underlies them, and then proceed to play fast and loose with what the passage actually says, so that they get something positive out of it, regardless. For example, Jesus can get away with saying you can move mountains (Mark 11:23-24) and Christians marvel at his wisdom and "advanced spirituality," instead of saying, "Man, that's simply not true, that's utopian, that's just rhetoric, you're feeding people's fantasies, you're just selling dreams!"

Of course, if you make that criticism, Christians respond by firing their all-purpose bazooka...their master mental trick: Jesus was speaking figuratively! not literally! FIGURATIVELY!

Oh, I beg to differ. HE MOST CERTAINLY WAS NOT!! Read the passage. If he meant figuratively, he would have given some indication that that's what he meant, saying something like "If there is a mountain IN YOUR HEART, you can move it." The moving mountains comment immediately follows Peter's astonishment at the PHYSICAL, repeat PHYSICAL, miracle of the withered fig tree.

No, I think Jesus and the NT writers were just prone to overblown rhetoric, overstatements, telling people what's exciting to hear. It's promiscuous spirituality, in my opinion. Jesus taught the greatest spiritual idea, regardless of reality--which is not the greatest spiritual idea, only the most temporarily exciting. The greatest spiritual ideas must be rooted in reality.

I'm reminded of one of the Who's songs, a song called "It's Hard." The lyric goes, "any kid can fly, but only a few can land." If you fly with the idea that you can move a mountain by just commanding it to move, you're going to crash. That's not wisdom, that's dumb.

It's so dishonest, all this making excuses for the Bible and Jesus. All this forced figurative interpretation. I'm not the literal-minded dummy that can't grasp the spiritual aspects of passages. I'm very spiritual. I see spiritual aspects, if they're there. The Christian is the dummy who won't read it for what it says. He has a vested psychological interest in positive spin, and in drawing sense out of nonsensical passages. Not me. Not any more. I've studied it long enough and hard enough. There's too much indisputable evidence that Christianity is flawed at its very core.

I think it's one of the most extraordinary intellectual scams of human history, how everyone gives Jesus all this extra credit! Even atheists tend to think of Jesus as at least a good moral teacher. But read the book! Read the passages objectively. Step outside your cultural conditioning. Stop distorting many of his dubious teachings into presumed pearls of wisdom.

Stop making excuses for Jesus, simply because you want or need to believe in an ideal man. Believe in some of the ideals you've seen in Jesus, yes, believe in those ideals, but don't believe in Jesus as that ideal man, because I don't think he was. Jesus as a whole doesn't cut it; only parts of him do.

You can believe, for example, in the spirit of generosity, without believing in Santa Claus. You can believe in love and compassion, without believing in Jesus. Don't tie the reality of a spiritual quality to the reality of a myth describing it. That's immature.

Rejecting Jesus as the Son of God does not mean rejecting some of the good values he espoused, although that is exactly the box Christianity tries to lock you into. Christianity does NOT have a monopoly on good spiritual values, nor is it the source of them.

I say follow the dictates of compassion and common sense. Can anybody who taught and supported the things Jesus did, the things Dennis points out month after month in Biblical Errancy, be a representative of God? I think not. Myself, I take the Thomas Paine position. I believe in a different God, a tolerant God, who is deeply dishonored by those who claim Jesus and the Bible represent him.

Editor's Response to Letter #597

Dear MJ.

I think the conclusions you have drawn based upon many encounters with biblicists are well considered, and for that you are to be complimented. Keep up the good work, and I look forward to the distribution of your audio tapes.

However, I do have a few reservations. First, you say, "I'm very spiritual. I see spiritual aspects, if they're there." The word "spiritual" is a metaphysical term that should be replaced by a more accurate word such as "ideological" or "philosophical." Belief in the spiritual realm is equivalent to saying one believes in spirits, ghosts, devils, demons, and other disembodied entities. I think it would have been wiser to have said you have high ideals or aspirations or ethics or morality. Secondly, you say, "The greatest spiritual ideas must be rooted in reality," "Don't tie the reality of a spiritual quality to the reality of a myth describing it," and "I see spiritual aspects if they're there." The spiritual realm has no reality and, therefore, could not be rooted in anything, especially reality. Third, you say, "...follow the dictates of compassion and common sense." The problem with this advice is that far too many people are doing exactly that. They are following the dictates of compassion, and unfortunately in all too many cases that represents anything but common sense. They need to think critically more and operate by emotion less. Fourth, you refer to the "good values he espoused" and say, "Jesus as a whole doesn't cut it; only parts of him do." I would go even farther by saying that those parts which cut it are far outweighed by those that don't. As our quote from Ruth Green's book showed in last month's issue, the ideals of Jesus are by no means as admirable as is commonly believed. Jesus is not only unqualified to be God incarnate, but doesn't even past muster as an advocate of a proper Weltanschauung. A few platitudes about brotherly love and forgiveness are by no means sufficient to overcome a plethora of escapist, submissive, unrealistic teachings. The negative aspect of Jesus far outweighs the positive. And lastly, by saying Christianity does not have a monopoly on good spiritual values, you are exposing the degree to which you have been subtly influenced by Christian propaganda. As is true with Jesus, the so-called "good spiritual values" are far outweighed by negative Christian teachings. Christianity not only doesn't have a monopoly on "good spiritual teachings," but the latter aren't even its central thrust.

Letter #598 from JL []of Seattle, Washington

Dear Dennis.

I wanted to share with you and all of your readers some resources that are available on the Internet computer network. There is a wealth of freethought material available to anyone who has Internet access. Some of these resources include: The Usenet newsgroups alt atheism and alt atheism moderated. These newsgroups are sometimes my only escape from the religious mindset so prominent at the Christian university I attend. These newsgroups have prepared documents called FAQs (answers to Frequently Asked Questions) which answer some of the most common arguments used by Christian apologists. There is even a 200+K file devoted just to Josh McDowell's book Evidence That Demands a Verdict. They have also scanned many freethought books, including many that are out of print. All of the newsgroup resources are available via FTP and WWW. The alt atheism web can be accessed via <http://mantis.co.uk/atheism>. The alt atheism FTP site can be accessed via ftp.mantis.co.uk. I strongly encourage everyone with Internet access to check out the sites I just mentioned.

A second, and just as impressive, freethought web is also available on the net. It can be accessed via <http://freethought.tamu.edu/freethought/>. There are many freethought books available here (including some by Robert Ingersoll), and there isn't too much overlap with the other web mentioned above.

On a different note, those readers who are interested in the subject of evolution can contact the National Center for Science Education at ncse@crl.com.

I have been researching the alleged resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth, and have found many valuable documents on-line. These have been very helpful in my research. They have also saved me a lot of money, because I was able to download them for free. Clearly this is a resource that many of your readers will want to take advantage of, if they haven't already. Perhaps other readers know of some other freethought resources available on the Internet? Like Biblical Errancy for example? When is Biblical Errancy going to get on the Internet?

Editor's Response to Letter #598

Dear JL,

Your letter was included within BE because many people use Internet. Personally I haven't gotten around to using this vital means of communication, but hope to do so someday. I'm juggling so many balls now that one more could put me under. But we intend to enter this arena eventually.

Letter #599 from DR of La Mesa, California

Dear Dennis.

I appreciate the information you publish in Biblical Errancy, and have found it to be quite useful and informative. I would be interested in obtaining all of the back issues of your publication.... I find it easiest to read and utilize materials when they are stored electronically, as I can do rapid searches for key words rather than flip through hundreds of pages looking for the example. Do you offer the back issues of Biblical Errancy on disk, perhaps in ASCII format? If so, what is the cost involved? I also operate a computer bulletin board here in La Mesa, entitled Dante's Inferno, and host several discussion echoes on religion and biblical errancy. What is your position on my quoting from Biblical Errancy articles to support my positions? When I have quoted from other publications in the past, credit is always given, as are references listed in the article or book. However, different publishers have differing preferences on how this is handled. The Skeptical Review, for instance, permits posting of entire articles and distribution of their publication via the electronic media, as long as their address is always listed at the bottom of the article. Thanks again for publishing Biblical Errancy, and I look forward to receiving your response to this letter.

Editor's Response to Letter #599

Dear DR.

The publisher of Skeptical Review and I have similar policies. Please feel free to quote from BE at will, as long as the source is properly identified. We don't offer anything on disc, although we may do so later.

Letter #600 from HM of Bellbrook, Ohio

...in case you have not yet been informed, your latest newsletter was stamped by the post office with two PRAY FOR PEACE messages. It's up to you, but this is something that should be looked into. You might demand that you be permitted to watch the postal clerk stamp the copies. What's more, the religious message was stamped twice, right across the printing on the back page.

This nation "under God" is becoming increasingly intolerant and belligerent toward non-Christians...

Editor's Response to Letter #600

Dear HM.

Other people sent letters mentioning the postal stamp as well. As far as I am aware, the post office is a governmental agency, which has no business promoting a religious concept. In no way did I authorize or approve my literature being used to carry a message with which I am in complete disagreement. We are again faced with a blatant violation of the separation of state and church. If the message had said WORK FOR PEACE I would not object. But prayer is a debilitating mental exercise in which no one should ever be asked to participate. It makes one vulnerable to outside forces which are often inimical to one's interests, promotes sloth and laziness, advances a negative self-image, creates low self-esteem, fosters a belief in gaining something for nothing, generates escape rather than involvement, and activates reliance upon miraculous rather than this-worldly solutions to one's problems. Realistically, putting this message on our periodical is like putting IN GOD WE TRUST on our coins. It's completely unconstitutional, although little can be done. I can think of many slogans Christians would not like to see placed on churches or Bibles; yet they have no hesitation about slapping propaganda on our property.

EDITOR'S NOTE: FINALLY IT'S HERE, IT MADE IT, IT HAS ARRIVED.

Mark JANUARY 1995 on your calendar. The latest catalogue issued by PROMETHEUS BOOKS has the following ad on page 17. We encourage everyone to purchase a copy of our encyclopedia and interest others in doing the same. We need the money. No, seriously. It should be an excellent reference book, providing a wealth of readily-accessible anti-biblical information and documentation. It should also be of great assistance in furthering our cause, and could very well act as an incentive for the publication of additional writings. The essence of 12 years of BE commentaries has been compressed into 24 poignant chapters, crammed with citations and potent polemics. In order to purchase the book be sure to contact Prometheus rather than us. You might want to contact them at their 800 phone number in order to obtain their latest catalogue.

Issue No. 143

November 1994

This edition will continue our potpourri of invalid and dubious biblical observations found in a variety of apologetic sources that was begun several months ago in the May 1994 issue.

SCRIPTURE MIXTURE (Part 2)

SISSON'S ANSWERING CHRISTIANITY'S MOST PUZZLING QUESTIONS, Vol. 2--On page 4 Sisson defends one of Christianity's most absurd concepts, the Trinity. He begins by admitting, "It is not an easy doctrine" which is not only an understatement, but nothing more than a backhanded attempt to make it appear as if some rationality were involved. He later states, "The doctrine of the Trinity, however, is of vital importance to us all--not just theologians. It helps us to understand truths about God and salvation...." No. It's real purpose is to provide a backdoor, an escape hatch, for all those contradictions that are obvious to anyone reading Scripture with a reasonable degree of objectivity. He states the concept of the Trinity "may irritate your sense of logic," as if logic came in varieties. It doesn't irritate a particular sense of logic; it conflicts with logic, period. Logic has no gradations or degrees. Logic is logic, and no one has a corner on the market or a variety superior to that of others.

On page 6 Sisson defends Jesus' claim to be God incarnate by saying, "Ultimately, we must let the Savior speak for Himself. In 7 ways He defended His claim to be God incarnate. First, He gave evidence by His works as stated in John 5:36 ('...for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me') and John 14:11 ('Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father in me; or else believe me for the sake of the works themselves')." How this helps establish his credentials is baffling, to say the least, in light of the fact that Jesus performed no work that was not performed by other biblical figures. He rose from the dead, but so did others. He performed miracles, but so did others. He healed, but so did others.

Sisson continues by saying, "Second, He had authority only God could claim--authority to give life. John 5:21 says, 'For as the Father raises the dead and gives them life, so also the Son gives life to whom he will.'" Merely because a man claims to have a power makes it true? Many people have claimed to give life throughout history. Does that mean it's automatically true? Merely because somebody alleges something is sufficient to establish its validity? Hardly! Just because he claimed it, doesn't mean he had it. Peter raised Tabitha, and Paul raised Eutychus from the dead. Does that mean they can justifiably claim to be God incarnate? Sisson's argument is pathetic!

He expands on his second point by saying, "He had authority to exercise final judgment over men (John 5:22-23); authority over heaven's host (Matt. 26:53); authority over nature (Mark 4:39-41); authority to forgive sins (Mark 2:5, 10); and authority to expound the truth of the Scriptures (Matt. 5:27-28)." Again, mere assertions prove nothing. Proof going beyond mere words must be forthcoming. Anyone could claim to have comparable powers, and we would be obligated to believe them as well, if they weren't required to substantiate their assertions. Words are cheap. Saying something doesn't make it true.

Sisson continues, "Third, He fulfilled OT prophecies, which indicated an incarnate deity as shown by Isa. 7:14 ('Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel') and Isa. 9:6 ("For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace')." Issues 76 through 80 of BE clearly showed that no OT prophecies pertain to Jesus. They proved that the child mentioned in Isa. 7:14 could not be Jesus; nor could the one in Isa. 9:6, because it says he shall be called 'The everlasting Father,' when Jesus was the everlasting 'son'.

Sisson continues by saying, "Fourth, His character and relationship with God the Father were unique. Jesus never spoke of 'our Father' when he was with the disciples. It was always 'My Father' or 'your Father,' because the two kinds of relationships were distinct." Millions of people say "my Father" and "your Father" when referring to God. Does this mean they have the same relationship to God as Jesus allegedly did? By offering this argument, Sisson appears to have been merely trying to extend his list in order to make it appear more impressive. Apparently desperation was setting in.

He continues by saying, "Fifth, He was eternal as shown by John 8:57-58 ('The Jews then said to him, You are not yet fifty years old, and have you seen Abraham? Jesus said to them, Truly, truly, I say to you, before Abraham was, I am')." How John 8:57-58 proves Jesus is eternal is enigmatic. Jesus merely asserted that he lived before Abraham. Why would that automatically mean that he existed for all eternity prior to Abraham? And how does that prove Jesus will live for an eternity? Jesus alluded to time gone by, but that says nothing about time to come. Even more importantly, from a biblical perspective we are all eternal. Whether you go to heaven or hell, immortality is unavoidable, according to the Christian interpretation of Scripture. You are immortal, whether you like it or not. Jesus is no more eternal than the rest of us. The biblical annihilationist who says his destiny is nowhere and the rest of mankind will follow suit is one of the few to deny eternal life.

Sisson proceeds to dig his hole even deeper by saying, "Sixth, He demonstrated His power over death and hell by His resurrection (Matt. 12:38-40). That is the ultimate proof of His deity (Rom. 1:4--'And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead')." As was shown in prior issues of BE, biblical resurrections from the dead were a dime a dozen. If rising from the dead proved one were God incarnate, then Lazarus, Jairus' daughter, the Widow of Nain's son, and many others were God incarnate as well.

Sisson concludes by saying, "Finally, He appealed to people to believe in Him the same way they believed in God as shown by John 6:29 ('Jesus answered them, 'This is the work of God, that you believe in him whom he has sent') and John 11:25 ('Jesus said to her, 'I am the resurrection and the life; he who believes in me, though he die, yet shall he live')." Again, words; nothing but words. Mere acclamation does not make something true. Throughout history others have said the same. How can we be sure their claims weren't valid?

On pages 18 and 19 Sisson reveals the lengths to which apologists will go to close the minds of their followers, by saying,

"Jesus Christ must be fully God and fully man. If He is not, we are still in our sins.... Our task is not to explain the unexplainable, but to expound on the essential. May such antinomies (a euphemism for contradictions--Ed.) give us a great appreciation for God's wisdom and knowledge. As we discover such antinomies in Scripture, may they serve as constant reminders that God expects us to put His revelation ahead of our comfortable logic." In other words, don't think and critique; just listen and believe. Advice of this kind exposes religion in general, and the Bible in particular, to be among the most dangerous opponents of mental health and rational thought.

On page 23 Sisson tackles the free will versus determinism problem, under the heading of God's sovereignty versus man's responsibility. He states, "Twenty years ago, as a college student, I first became aware of the paramount theological controversy of all time: 'Is salvation the result of man's choice or God's choice?' I remember twin reactions. I was intellectually confused, and I suffered great emotional frustration over the issue. Two decades later I am still intellectually mystified.... I entertain no thoughts of resolving the difficulty.... the Scriptures teach both that God is sovereign and that man is responsible. It is commendable to try to harmonize both side of an antinomy (there's that euphemism again--Ed.) into one rational system, but it is not always possible...." Sisson is wrestling with the problem of how man can have free will if everything is determined by God. He tries to reconcile the conflict by saying, "The doctrine of God's sovereignty as taught in Scripture never negates human significance. God is working out His sovereign plan. But He truly depends on His people to accomplish that plan." But how can people be free to accomplish what God has already pre-ordained? Not only does God's sovereignty negate man's free will, but scores of biblical verses buttress predestination. On page 26 Sisson says, "Perhaps we never will be able to satisfy our human intellects with an answer." That's true! At least not until man also finds a square circle. While attempting to submit some sort of plausible defense, Sisson says on page 27, "In God's mercy He has chosen to save those who believe." But that can't be! The reverse is true. They chose to believe because they had already been selected. Sisson has it backwards. In concluding this topic, he tells Christians, "Don't be afraid to acknowledge what you perhaps do not understand completely." His modifiers are disarming. There is no "perhaps" to it, since no one can understand a blatant contradiction. Understand "completely"! Most Christians would be happy to understand it even minutely. Sisson concludes his sales pitch by saying, "God is sovereign. Salvation is His work. He chooses whom He wills to be objects of His mercy. But it is also true that men are responsible for their choices. No one will go to heaven without trusting Christ. Your choice determines your destiny." How could your choice determine your destiny when Sisson admits "God chooses whom he wills to be objects of his mercy"? God and God alone determines who will be saved. Sisson concludes by saying, "Is your mind troubled by the antinomy (again read this as contradiction--Ed.)? You are not alone. Be willing to live with unresolved questions. Accept the inevitable--that you will go to your grave with questions unresolved." In other words, you'll just have to trust me on this one. Square circles are possible. Sisson's explanation is understandable, considering the fact that it's based on a book that says people can rise from the dead, sticks can turn into serpents, people can mutate into pillars of salt, and donkeys can talk. Is one any more incredible than the other?

RYRIE'S BASIC THEOLOGY--Having discussed Sisson's defense of the Trinity, we might note the following admission found on page 79 of a book entitled Basic Theology by Dallas Theological Seminary professor Charles Ryrie, "It is fair to say that the Bible does not teach the doctrine of the Trinity, if by clearly one means there are proof texts for the doctrine. In fact, there is not even one proof text, if by proof text we mean a verse or passage that 'clearly' states that there is one God who exists in three Persons."

Moving to an analysis of the sabbath, Ryrie states on page 268, "What caused the day of worship to change? All the first Christians were Jewish accustomed to worshipping on the Sabbath. Yet suddenly and uniformly they began to worship on Sunday though it was an ordinary workday (Acts 20:7). Why? Because they wanted to commemorate the resurrection of their Lord which took place on Sunday, they changed their day of worship. Christ's resurrection, the cause; Sunday worship the effect." Whether or not this correctly explains why the day of worship was changed, the fact remains that the alteration cannot be supported biblically.

BOWMAN'S WHY YOU SHOULD BELIEVE IN THE TRINITY--In 1990 Robert Bowman, a staff member of the Christian Research Institute, issued a book entitled Why You Should Believe in the Trinity, which was created to refute the misconceptions of Jehovah's Witnesses regarding the Trinity. Although the Jehovah's Witnesses are as lost as any other fundamentalist group, they at least have enough intelligence to realize that the Trinity is a concept without substance. Jesus couldn't possibly be God. While attacking the JW's, Bowman made several noteworthy observations. On page 10 he stated, "It is true that many trinitarians--Catholics especially, but also Protestants and Orthodox--state flatly that the Trinity cannot be understood and that it is in this sense a 'mystery.' ...Trinitarian theologians do not mean to imply that the Trinity is unintelligible nonsense. Rather, the point they are making is that the Trinity cannot be fully fathomed, or comprehended, by the finite mind of man.... the Trinity can be understood, or 'apprehended,' but not 'comprehended.'" The only appropriate adjective for Bowman's convoluted explanation is "doubletalk." He says the Trinity is not "unintelligible nonsense" and immediately turns 180 degrees by exuding some unintelligible nonsense about its being understood and apprehended but not comprehended. If it is understood and apprehended, then it is comprehended and vice versa. How could it be understood but not comprehended?

In regard to the Canon's formation, Bowman says on page 22, "No verse in the Bible explicitly states that a certain collection of books is the only inspired writing to be recognized as God's Word. There is no list in the Bible of books that belong there--no inspired 'table of contents.' Yet the belief that these books, and only these books, belong in the Bible is itself based on the Bible's teaching,...." What on earth is he talking about? Where does Scripture teach the specific books that are to be in the Bible? Where does it enumerate the specific writings that are to be deemed inspired? Where does it say "only" these books are to be included? And where are other writings specifically excluded?

BLAIKLOCK'S JESUS CHRIST, MAN OR MYTH?--One of the most ridiculous arguments on the market for the existence of a real Jesus was made by E. M. Blaiklock in his book entitled Jesus Christ, Man or Myth? On page 86 he states, "Consider how impossible it would have been for the writers of the gospels, whoever they might have been and whenever they might have written, to create out of aspiration and imagination the character which confronts the reader of the gospels. Consider how equally impossible it would have been, after close association and fellowship, to imagine and graft into their story details not obviously known and observed." Blaiklock stated earlier on page 77, "And then read the story of the conversation at Sychar's well, with the Samaritan fighting her losing battle of words with the strangest Jew she had ever met. Read on to the poignant account of the Passion Week with its climax in the vivid resurrection stories, paralleled for simple reality only by the narrative in Luke. Simply read. These men were not writing fiction. This is not what myth sounds like." And Blaiklock concludes his vapid argument by saying, "It is as Rousseau said, men who could invent such a story would be greater and more astonishing than its central figure." To all of this one can only say, Surely he isn't serious? He says "this is not what myth sounds like" when precisely the opposite is true. The events surrounding the passion, the resurrection, etc. are directly comparable to numerous myths in other religions. They are precisely what mythology does sound like, and Christianity reeks with stories of this kind. In effect, Blaiklock is contending that stories become more credible as they become more incredible. Almost any child's imagination could concoct stories as fantastic than those found in the gospels, and for Blaiklock to say that "men who could invent such a story would be greater and more astonishing than its central figure" is almost too absurd to discuss. This is one of the weakest arguments imaginable for the existence of a real Jesus and gospel truthfulness.

With respect to the character of Jesus, Blaiklock says on page 107, "There was no violence, no lashing in anger, only the tremendous power of His presence." Again, his allegiance superseded his prudence. Or maybe Blaiklock has never read John 2:15 ("And making a whip of cords, he drove them all, with the sheep and oxen, out of the temple; and he poured out the coins of the money-changers and overturned their tables"), Matt. 10:34 ("Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword"), Luke 22:36 ("...and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one"), Luke 12:51 ("Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division...."), and Luke 12:49 ("I am come to send fire on the earth...."). Obviously Jesus is not the paragon of quietude his followers have pictured in their minds. In fact, Jesus even downgraded his own character by saying in Matt. 19:17, "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is, God..." What Jesus would have to say or do in order for biblicists to radically alter their image of his character is anyone's guess. Christians have a specific concept of his personality, and nothing anyone says or demonstrates to the contrary, including Jesus himself, is going to modify their mindset.

LITTLE'S KNOW WHY YOU BELIEVE--One of the most widely distributed apologetic books of recent decades is Paul Little's work entitled Know Why You Believe. It's essentially a wide ranging theological defense of Christianity in general, rather than the Bible in particular. But some comments contained therein cry out for analysis. While discussing whether or not God exists, Little says on page 15, "...Suppose we knew he existed, but that he was like Adolph Hitler--capricious, vicious, prejudiced, and cruel. What a horrible realization that would be!" Apparently Little is unacquainted with the God of the OT. Issues 115 through 120 of BE clearly revealed a disreputable being of the highest order. If Little reread the OT ,or read it more thoroughly, he might experience his "horrible realization." Then, again, perhaps, like most apologists, he would turn a blind eye to whatever clashes with his preconceptions.

On page 17 Little correctly uttered something which many liberal Christians would do well to note. He stated that many of, "those who deny the deity of Jesus affirm that they think Jesus was a great moral teacher. They fail to realize those two statements are a contradiction. Jesus could hardly be a great moral teacher if, on the most crucial point of his teaching, i.e., his identity, he was a deliberate liar." In other words, if he said he was God and wasn't, he certainly couldn't be considered a great moral teacher or a man of integrity.

While answering the question of why God allows suffering and evil, Little inadvertently dug himself into a deep, deep hole. He stated, "Many ask, Why didn't God make man so he couldn't sin? To be sure, he could have, but let's remember that if he had done so we would no longer be human beings, we would be machines. How would you like to be married to a chatty doll? Every morning and every night you could pull the string and get the beautiful words, 'I love you,' There would never be any hot words, never any conflict, never anything said or done that would make you sad! But who would want that?" How incredible! Unbeknownst to our apologetic friend, while trying to prove mankind is not composed of automatons, he destroyed heaven's perfection. Isn't heaven supposed to be the place in which conflict, sadness, and hot words no longer exist? Yet Little says of such a condition "who would want that?" In light of his inadvertent renunciation of heaven, one can't help but wonder why he is a Christian at all. Jesus is only the means to the end. The end is heaven itself.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #601 from EM of Tucson, Arizona
To Whom It May Concern:

It may be in your best interest to eliminate number four in your JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER flyer/advertisement or make some minor adjustments. [It states, "Isn't Jesus a false prophet since he wrongly predicted in Matt. 12:40 that he would be buried three days and three nights as Jonah was in the whale three days and three nights? Friday afternoon to early Sunday morning is one and a half days--Ed.]. Those with a critical eye may catch an inconsistency in your flyer and perhaps become skeptical about the merits of your publication.

There's an inconsistency in the author's logic or the way in which you chose to depict a biblical error. Why in #20 ["In Luke 23:43 Jesus said to the thief on the cross, 'Today shalt thou be with me in paradise.' But how could they have been together in paradise that day if Jesus lay in the tomb three days?--Ed.] is three days used and in #4 only one and a half days? Do you feel that three is interchangeable with or equal to one and a half? If the three days in #20 was moved to #4, and the one and a half days in #4 was moved to #20 then the point you are trying to prove seems rather trivial. In #4 it may not have been three "whole" days, but it certainly was three "whole" nights. Thus the argument in #4 is rather insignificant. In #20 however, the argument is valid, but its weakened by the word choice in #4.

I think it's best to call attention to inconsistency and at the same time be consistent. Leave dishonesty and hypocrisy for fundamentalist publications.

If you decide to edit your flyer, please send me a copy. If corrected, the Arizona Student Atheists, at the University of Arizona, would be more than happy to distribute them with other materials we have.

Editor's Response to Letter #601

Dear EM.

I think you have confused me with someone else. Why in #20 is three days used and in #4 only one and a half days? Because that's what Scripture states. I never said "three is interchangeable with or equal to one and a half," That's what the text is saying indirectly. You've confused me with the Bible. Apparently you want me to present a biblical contradiction in a non-contradictory fashion. I certainly don't intend to rewrite the script in order for it to be more amenable to a logical sequence. There is no inconsistency, whatever, in my flyer/pamphlet. It merely highlights an inconsistency in Scripture. And we certainly don't intend to move or alter figures in order to make the text more palatable. You say, "In #4 it may not have been three 'whole' days, but it certainly was three 'whole' nights." What was three whole nights? The prediction or what actually happened? Certainly the prediction was. But what actually occurred was not. I think you need to reread the script, and after having done so you'll feel more comfortable distributing our pamphlets. We appreciate your assistance..

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #602 from RR of Altamonte Springs, Florida

Dear Mr McKinsey,

I thank you for the sample issue of BIBLICAL ERRANCY. I thought it was very good.... I spent 40 years in the Seventh-Day Adventist church and now I am having the most wonderful time of my life reading philosophy and reading about people who were skeptics throughout the centuries. I feel that those people who believe that the Bible is "inerrant" have never really read the Bible, or else have refused to believe the things it says. Surely the main reason people believe it is out of fear and from having been brain-washed.

Letter #603 from KF of Lancaster, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis.

As a long-time subscriber I have carefully read all issues of BE and find the material well thought out and devastating to the Christian cause. You have a great enterprise going in your publication and I wish you the best.

I was thinking the other day, what's the biggest, most obvious contradiction in the Bible, especially one involving Jesus, that no one to my knowledge, even you perhaps, has managed to bring to our attention? Jesus commands, "Love your enemy." Matt. 5:44 says, "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use you, and persecute you...." Yet does he follow his own advice? I think not. Who's one of the biggest baddest enemies around? It's the devil, isn't it? Matt 13:39 says, "The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels." Now does Jesus love his enemy (and yours too)? Yes? Bzzzzt! Wrong! Far from loving, blessing, doing good to, and praying for his enemy the devil, Jesus has simply built a bizarre eternal fiery hell-pyre for him, as is shown by Matt. 25:41 ("Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"). If Jesus, the paragon of Christian morality, cannot bring himself to do what he preaches, what does that say about the whole Christian enterprise? So much for Jesus' strength of character, honesty, and integrity. On a higher level, though, I really think that the scriptwriters who formulated Christian theology over the years went so far in complexity that they simply couldn't avoid deep philosophical contradictions such as this one. Christianity is often trapped by its own rhetoric.

Terrasse Eardley, Aylmer, Qc J9H 6B5

Dear Dennis.

Looking forward to reviewing your new book. I have always thought that it was a bit unfair of us atheists to require an omnipotent god to perform acts linguistically possible to state, but realistically impossible to perform, such as creating a square circle or a two-sided triangle. I thank you for reminding us all that these acts are merely some of the impossibilities that god is already claiming credit for, such as being god and man simultaneously; looking, tasting, and having all the qualities of bread, while being actually human flesh; likewise for wine and blood; and being equal to three and one at the same time. If god can perform these miracles, it is only fair to require that he make square circles. It is certainly no harder to make something all red and all green simultaneously than to make it be both flesh and bread, or to make $3=1$.

The fact that god's defenders so readily give in, admitting that god cannot make square circles, shows that they don't really believe in the other miracles. If you intellectually and viscerally accepted that three is the same as one, that Jesus had brothers and sisters, and that virgins can give birth and stay virgins; square circles and simultaneous redness and greenness would seem to be trivial accomplishments in comparison....

Priests, politicians, and advertisers all use language to conceal or convert, rather than to communicate. Christians, in particular, speak and write with the sole intention of justifying what they wish to believe, or forcing you to assent to it. It is rare to find one that can actually be brought around to rationality, but it is important that rational people maintain a constant denial of the truth of Christian propaganda. Every time somebody claims that the bible is a wonderful book, it is necessary for someone else to state it is not.

Issue No. 144

December 1994

HALEY'S ALLEGED DISCREPANCIES OF THE BIBLE (Part I)-
-One of the most famous of all apologetic works is entitled Alleged Discrepancies of the Bible by John W. Haley, which appeared in 1874. Because this work is quite specific and voluminous, several issues will be devoted to an examination of its contents. In the Preface Haley states, "I have restricted my attention to the so-called 'discrepancies,' that is, to those cases in which the statements or narratives of the Bible are said to conflict with one another. I have kept within the Bible. Cases in which the scriptures seem to be at variance with secular history or with science have been left to other and abler hands." Surprisingly, that mirrors the philosophy of BE. So far so good. But after listing how biblical problems can arise, Haley begins a long series of rationalizations, justifications, and obfuscations of hundreds of the most prominent biblical contradictions. Since it would not be possible to discuss every problem addressed in his book, we are undertaking the less ambitious task of simply exposing many of the most egregious.

Haley begins with what are commonly known as doctrinal problems. The first is on page 55, and pits Jer. 32:27 ("Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there anything too hard for me?") and Matt. 19:26 ("With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible") against Heb. 6:18 ("It was impossible for God to lie"). This problem was discussed in some recent correspondence in BE, and highlights one of the most intractable religious conflicts. Haley's explanation is that, "Omnipotence does not imply the power to do every conceivable thing, but the ability to do everything which is the proper object of power. For example, an omnipotent being could not cause a thing to be existent and non-existent at the same instant. The very idea is self-contradictory and absurd. When it is said that God can do 'all things,' the phrase only applies to those things which involve no inconsistency or absurdity." His explanation won't stand the strain for several reasons. In the first place, the verse neither says nor implies anything relative to "the proper object of power." It says nothing is too hard for God to accomplish, and no expressed or implied qualifications are attached. Secondly, God can't lie because the moment he lied he would cease to be God. And God can't cease to be God. And thirdly, Haley says, "an omnipotent being could not cause a thing to be existent and non-existent at the same time." He says the very idea is self-contradictory and absurd. Precisely! And that's why God's not omnipotent. If he were all-powerful, he could do it, and since he can't we'll rest our case.

On page 89 Haley tackles the conflict between Luke 11:10 ("For every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened") and James 1:5 ("If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not: and it shall be given him") on one side and Isa. 1:15 ("And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yes, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood"), Micah 3:4 ("Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings") and James 4:3 ("Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts") on the other. His explanation is, "The limiting clauses of the last three texts, 'hands full of blood,' 'ill behavior,' and 'asking amiss,' show clearly why God withholds his blessings in these cases. Moreover, the connection in which the first two texts stands evinces that these texts were not intended to be of universal application. They contemplate those persons only who 'ask in faith.' Every one that asketh aright, receiveth. The principle upon which God, in answer to prayer, bestows his blessings, is thus enunciated: "If we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us." Haley says the first two texts "were not intended to be of universal application" but only apply to those who "ask in faith," even though Luke 11:10 clearly refers to "everyone who asks," period, and no restrictions or limitations are involved. Where does the verse say or imply that it only applies to those who ask "in faith"? The word "faith" doesn't appear in either verse. And where does Luke 11:10 say anything about asking in accordance with God's will? The word "will" doesn't appear either.

Upon reading a verse with obvious difficulties, apologists often race off to find another verse that can somehow be twisted in order to escape, modify, alleviate, or counteract the original dilemma. And this conflict is a classic example. Haley has, in effect, chosen the version of God's response to requests that suits his purpose. He's acted as if Luke 11:10 and James 1:5 were non-existent, because they don't say what he wants to hear.

On page 97 Haley tries to reconcile Mark 1:2-3 ("Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: yet I loved Jacob, and I hated Esau") with Psalms 145:9 ("The Lord is good to all") by saying, "The word 'hate' is used here, as often in scripture, in the sense of to love less. If one person was preferred to another, the former was said to be 'loved,' the latter 'hated.' As the opposite of love is hatred, when there is only an inferior degree of the former exhibited, the object of it is regarded as being hated, rather than loved."

Haley is a past master at convoluted distortions and perverted thought, as this example readily attests. In the first place, He admits "the opposite of love is hatred," but then says an inferior degree of love, which remains love nevertheless, is hatred, which is only another way of saying love and hatred are the same. In other words, black is white and up is down. Secondly, "hatred" either means no love at all or it has no meaning. Haley is trying to have it both ways. His phrase "to love less" still involves love; yet he tried to equate it with hatred, its opposite, which is only another way of saying love and hate can be the same. The bottom line is that "hate" means "to not love at all"; it does not mean to "love less," and that's why the contradiction stands. Thirdly, he says "hate" is often used in scripture to mean "to love less." Yet only three instances are cited.

The first is Prov. 13:24 which says, "He who spares the rod hates his son, but he who loves him is diligent to discipline him." This verse is not saying hate is only a diminished form of love or implying hate means to love less. It isn't even analogous to the original problem. Instead of equating love with hate, it is making a rather sharp distinction between the two.

The next verse is Luke 14:26, which says, "If any man comes to me, and hates not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Apparently Haley is under the impression that "hate" in this instance means "to love less" because Jesus wouldn't actually tell people to hate members of their family. But what does it say? How could Jesus have phrased his comment to prove that is exactly what he meant? How could he have written it more clearly or more definitively? If he had meant "love less" or something comparable, it would have been very easy for him to have said just that. He could have said, "You should not love your parents more than me" or "You should not be more dedicated to your parents than to the mission I am assigning to you" or "You should be more dedicated to the cause than even to your closest relative", or something comparable. Any one of these would have been far clearer and resolved the problem. But none of them were mentioned.

The third citation comes from Gen. 29:30-31, which says, "So Jacob went in to Rachel also, and he loved Rachel more than Leah, and served Laban for another seven years. When the Lord saw that Leah was hated, he opened her womb; but Rachel was barren." This is the only citation which appears to lend support to Haley's contention that "hate" means "to love less." The problem is that even though Leah is loved less than Rachel, she is still loved. Love is still present even though the amount may be diminished. How then can the verse say that "Leah was hated"? How can she be loved if she is hated? According to Webster's Dictionary "love" is an antonym for "hate". They are opposites. According to Haley and Gen. 29:30-31, they can mean the same, which will be true when black can be white and up can be down as well.

On page 99 Haley addresses the clash between Mal. 1:14 ("Cursed be the deceiver...") on one side and 1 Sam. 16:2 ("And Samuel said, How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the Lord said, Take a heifer with thee, and say, I am come to sacrifice to the Lord"), Jer. 20:7 ("O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived..."), and Ezek. 14:9 ("And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet...") on the other.

In essence, God curses deceivers in Malachi, while practicing deception in Samuel, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. Rather than manufacturing his own explanations for this dichotomy, Haley merely recites those of famous Christian apologists. He states that, "On the text from 1 Samuel, Calvin says: 'There was no dissimulation or falsehood in this, since God really wished his prophet to find safety under the pretext of the sacrifice'." Pretext! Did he say pretext? And what is a pretext if not a deception? Calvin is all but proving God is promoting deception. Haley continues quoting Calvin by saying, "A sacrifice was therefore really offered, and the prophet was protected thereby...." Yes, but the sacrifice was merely part of the deception.

Haley then offers an explanation from the German biblical scholar Keil. The latter states, "There was no untruth in this; for Samuel was really about to conduct a sacrificial festival, and was to invite Jesse's family to it, and then anoint the one whom Jehovah should point out to him as the chosen one. It was simply a concealment of the principal object of his mission from any who might make inquiry about it because they themselves had not been invited. It is our privilege to withhold the truth from persons who have no right to know it, and who, as we have reason to believe, would make a bad use of it."

This explanation is little short of drivel. To begin with, Keil doesn't even have his facts straight. He says "Samuel was really about to conduct a sacrificial festival" which is false. The sacrificial festival was God's idea, dreamed up in order to deceive Saul. Secondly, the concealment was devised to fool Saul so he would not kill Samuel, not in order to fool those "who might make inquiry about it because they themselves had not been invited." Thirdly, Keil admits that a concealment is involved, and what is a concealment but a deception, a deception instigated by God? Fourthly, like most sophisticated apologists, Keil sought to shift the focus by saying "It is our privilege to withhold the truth from persons who have no right to know it," when he knows the problem does not lie merely in the truth being withheld. The problem resides in the fact that a deliberate lie was told. There was a positive act, not just passive inactivity. He did not just conceal; he actively lied. Lastly, and of great importance, Keil finessed God's key statement, which is, "Take a heifer with you, and say, I have come to sacrifice to the Lord." It's totally false. That's not the real reason he came. The Lord deliberately told a man to lie.

On page 110 Haley confronts the clash between Matt. 28:18 ("Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and earth") and John 3:35 ("The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand") on the one hand and Matt. 20:23 ("To sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father") and Mark 6:5 ("And he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hand upon a few sick folk, and healed them") on the other.

Is Jesus omnipotent or isn't he? Haley says, "Matt. 20:23 is rendered by Grotius, Chrysostom, Clarke, Barnes, and others thus: 'is not mine to give, except to those for whom,' etc. With this the Syriac Peshito precisely agrees." Realizing there is no possibility of escaping this dilemma, Haley has decided to simply rewrite the script by relying upon one lone version of Matt. 20:23--the Syriac Peshito. None of the 14 versions in the repertoire of BE has the word "except," and unless the translators of virtually every available major version of the NT are incompetent, his explanation is worthless. He proceeds to sink even further by saying, "The real sense is: 'It is not fitting that I should bestow it upon others.' The question is not one of power at all, but of fitness." Wrong! According to the verse the real sense is that God will pick who'll sit where. Jesus could not determine it even if he wanted to. Thus, he is not all powerful.

After discussing the omnipotence of Jesus, Haley turned to a problem relative to the omnipresence of Jesus. On page 114 he relates the problem created by Matt. 18:20 ("For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them") and Matt. 28:20 ("Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world") vis a vis Matt. 26:11 ("For ye have the poor always with you; but me ye have not always") and John 11:15 ("I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe....").

Haley's explanation is short and sour. He states, "The first texts refer to his spiritual presence with his people; the second series relates to his visible presence, in the body. Paul, in Col. 2:5 ("For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit....") employs language of a quite similar import." But Paul's situation is not analogous, because he made a clear distinction between flesh and spirit, whereas Jesus does not. How could "In the midst" have a spiritual meaning? Jesus did not say he was in them spiritually; he said he was "in the midst", which would mean he was among them, not in them. Haley provides no evidence that Matt. 18:20 and 28:20 have a spiritual connotation while Matt. 26:11 and John 11:15 have a physical one. That's a completely unsubstantiated, expedient distinction, created purely for purposes of evasion-- in other words, a snow job.

On page 115 Haley sticks out his neck even further by attempting to reconcile Psalms 72:17 ("All nations shall call him--Jesus--blessed") with Gal. 3:13 ("Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree"). If Christ is being referred to in both Psalms 72 and Gal. 3, as most Christians allege, then Jesus is being called both a blessing and a curse.

Since that's too much for Haley to swallow, he says, "Luther and some other commentators, taking the language in Galatians too literally, have supposed that by some mysterious transference of human guilt to Christ, he actually became a sinner. This interpretation is, however, uncalled for, and repugnant to our feelings." Rarely do I agree with Martin Luther on much of anything, but in this instance his interpretation and that of other commentators is far more accurate than Haley's. The problem lies not with Luther taking the verse too literally, but with Haley refusing to take the verse at all. It's more than he can stomach. Rather than providing some kind of evidence to support his position, he merely says it is "uncalled for" and "repugnant to our feelings."

If that were all the proof one needed to substantiate a position, I could have blown away the Bible years ago. Haley has opted for one of the most common of all apologetic subterfuges: That's what it says, but that's not what it means.

And finally, Haley approached this problem from still another direction by quoting the scholar Barnes, who said, "Jesus was subjected to what was regarded as an accursed death. He was treated in his death as if he had been a criminal." The problem with this explanation is that it ignores the unmistakable assertion in Gal. 3:13 that Jesus was "made a curse." It does not say "as if" he were made a curse or criminal. It says he was a curse, period. (To Be Continued)

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #605 from RH of Hubbard, Ohio (Part a)

(RH, a liberal religious supporter of BE, entered into a written debate with a fundamentalist baptist minister named Rev. BB, who lives in Richford, Vermont. He wrote to us and said, "I am in the process of housecleaning and ran across the enclosed correspondence and because it contained references to you, decided to send it to you. You may toss it in file 13; as far as I'm concerned it should have been ditched a few years ago.... However, I am becoming aware that perhaps some good could come out of dialog with fundamentalists. You are my inspiration for that change of heart.... I just wanted to let you know of another attack on your pamphlet." Although RH waited nearly 4 years before sending us a copy of their dialogue, we are glad it was sent, nevertheless. Their acerbic interplay involved such words as irrational, overtones of hatred and self-righteousness, hermeneutical hocus-pocus, worse than useless liberal trash, self-excusing lies, liar, pseudo-religious doubletalk, sickening, cloud of falsehoods, groundless, venomous attack, hateful disposition, erroneous rhetoric, barnyard matter, liberal bunk, slanting the truth, and insane. I think you get the idea. In one of Rev. BB's letters he states, "As for McKinsey's awful little tract, I will, in the second part of this lengthy tome, refute his alleged arguments." It is his alleged refutation of our THE BIBLE IS THE ANSWER? pamphlet to which we will now turn our attention. It is packed with the kind of material we love to refute, expose, and critique. Sometimes I think I'd rather debate the Bible than eat--Ed.).

As regards McKinsey's little tract it's interesting to see how the introduction already exposes his hypocrisy. First, the same man who is about to debunk the Bible as being unreasonable and inconsistent appeals to it! I know the Book of Mormon IS an unreliable and inconsistent document. That's why I would never quote from it to persuade anyone of anything other than its faults.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part a)

To say Rev. BB missed this one is an understatement. He wants me to refute the Bible's validity without citing anything other than its faults. How can you show what is wrong with a body of literature without first reading it and then citing every difficulty worthy of consideration? I use the Bible against itself and he calls that "appealing" to the Bible. How is that "appealing" to the Book? What could be more destructive to the Bible than the Bible itself? The Bible is its own worst enemy. I would hardly call that "appealing" to the book. It would be foolish to focus your attention upon something else, especially when that something else is not inspired in the eyes of the Bible's adherents. Hypocrisy would only be involved if I denied the Bible's validity and then turned around and cited it as an authoritative and reliable source. I, on the other hand, deny the Bible's validity and cite it to prove as much. There is no turning around whatever. Instead, I am merely fortifying my original premise. I don't appeal to the book in the manner he implies; I merely cite it to prove my case and because it's a source to which he appeals.

Secondly, he says he "would never quote from the Book of Mormon to persuade anyone of anything other than its faults." How myopic! There are other reasons to quote from a book with which you disagree than to cite its faults. What could be more effective than quoting from a book in which someone believes fervently in order to prove that it denounces something they are doing, teaching, believing, or saying? As we have said before, BE focuses on more than just contradictions to prove the Bible is anything but divinely inspired. Now who is being hypocritical? Rev. BB implicitly portrays himself as an open-minded individual, while admitting that he would never quote from the Book of Mormon except to accomplish a very narrow agenda.

Letter #605 Continues (Part b)

(The pamphlet entitled THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? begins by saying, "I can't accept the Bible as God's Word because it contains hundreds of problems and contradictions that can't be solved, only rationalized." Rev. BB says the following in response--Ed.)

Second, to "rationalize" can be a positive effort as well as a negative one. In a positive sense, to rationalize is to employ reason to prove an assertion is rational, reasonable. If McKinsey slurs defense of the Bible as "rationalization", he's not necessarily charging the defender with doing anything other than what he urges us to do - to be reasonable!

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part b)

I am well aware of the fact that "rationalize" can have one of two meanings as Rev. BB suggests. But apparently he is unable to distinguish the one being employed, even after having read the entire pamphlet. Is he so immature that it must be spelled out in detail? Webster's Dictionary defines "rationalize" as meaning "to make rational; make conform to reason; to explain or interpret on rational grounds." That's quite true, as most people are well aware. But it also means "to devise superficially rational or plausible explanations or excuses for (one's acts, beliefs, desires, etc.), usually without being aware that these are not the real motive." If Rev. BB can't tell which of these wholly divergent meanings BE employs, then he's either in over his head or just doesn't know all the meanings attached to the word "rationalize". Then again, maybe he is just banking on his audience not knowing the widely disparate meanings attached to the word "rationalize" and wants to make it look as if BE is endorsing his approach, in which case he is more than a hypocrite; he's a deceiver.

Letter #605 Continues (Part c)

Third, it is a self-serving argument to label (and libel) one's opponents as unreasonable (or non-reasoning) without offering any authoritative proof of same. This is specious, and, again, argument by "wishful thinking". "Hundreds" is a puerile exaggeration. Sweeping exaggerations are a sure sign the individual actually knows nothing about which he is writing, and is bluffing.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part c)

It's hard to believe the lengths to which Rev. BB will go to prove he knows almost nothing about that of which he speaks. Were he to read all 144 issues of BE and listen to our 24 audio commentaries, he would more than likely retract such an injudicious comment. If there is anything BE does not lack, it is "authoritative proof." Indeed, some readers feel that I tend to overprove my points and saturate them with citations and evidence. Obviously either Rev. BB has little or no acquaintance with our publication, or he's whistling in the dark. I would STRONGLY recommend that he read every back issue of BE, and then come to me and say with a straight face and a clear conscience that I'm "bluffing" and engaged in "wishful thinking." He's the one who's wishing. He's wishing my philosophy would vanish and he could propagandize unhindered.

The opening sentence to the pamphlet is merely an outline of what I'm about to prove. Would Rev. BB prefer that I just jump into my points without any explanation of where we are going and why? In his hatred of what I'm doing, he ignores one of the most elementary principles of responsible writing--a clear introductory statement of purpose and intent. If he feels the pamphlet does not contain an adequate number of problems and contradictions to make my case, then he obviously chose to ignore my final sentence, which was that the pamphlet contains "just a few of the Book's many shortcomings." Surely he is not going to be so narrow-minded as to think I would base my entire refutation of the Bible's validity on 24 points in a brief pamphlet. In truth, Rev. BB is desperately looking for something to criticize, and this is about all he could concoct.

In a real fit of hyperbole he says I failed to offer "any authoritative proof." That isn't even true of our short pamphlet, let alone our entire publication. All 24 points were buttressed by biblical citations and impeccable logic.

As far as "hundreds" being an exaggeration is concerned, I probably should have used the word "thousands" instead. "Hundreds" is more applicable to individual books within the Bible than all of Scripture. "Puerile" is only applicable to those who are so foolish as to think they can restrict the number of biblical contradictions to hundreds. And if "sweeping generalizations are a sure sign an individual actually knows nothing about which he is writing and is bluffing," then Rev. BB qualifies unreservedly. He hasn't hesitated to make grandiose generalizations concerning not only my approach, but also a publication which he has never read, and about which he knows almost nothing. It provides the "authoritative proof" which he claims is lacking.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #606 from SA of Brooklyn, New York

Dear Dennis.

Your publication is excellent and I agree 100% with your objectives in your critical examination of the Bible. The Bible, just like any other book, should be subject to cross examination and critical review. I am enclosing an item that I put together called "The Bible--The Book of the Five B's." Perhaps you may be able to use it in one of your issues of Biblical Errancy. Keep up the excellent work. (What follows is his item--Ed.)

As a result of about 2,600 years of brainwashing, most Jews and Christians believe that the Bible is: a) "The Good Book" and b) "The Word of God." However, those people who read the Bible carefully, and with their reasoning switch in the on position while doing so, will eventually come to the conclusion that it is neither. This is easily confirmed by referring to statements made by the two most famous "Doubting Thomases" and "Princes of Reason," Thomas Jefferson and Thomas Paine.

Thomas Jefferson - "I find some passages of the Bible of correct morality, and others of so much ignorance, untruth, charlatanism and imposture." (Letter to William Short, April 13, 1820).

In a letter to John Adams, dated October 13, 1813, Thomas Jefferson describes how he wrote the Jefferson Bible by cutting verse by verse from the printed book and arranging the matter that contained morality, and wound up with 47 pages out of 615 from the NT. He stated that good passages were as easily distinguishable from dross as diamonds in a dunghill.

Thomas Paine, in a letter to Thomas Erskine, dated Sept. 1797, stated that the Bible makes God to say to Moses (Deut. 7:2) "And when the Lord thy God shall deliver them before thee, thou shall smite them and utterly destroy them, thou shall make not covenant with them, nor show any mercy unto them."

He concluded the letter by stating that he could never believe that the Creator of the Universe would give such an order to Moses, and could therefore not believe that the Bible is the Word of God.

As Jefferson stated, there are some moral teachings in the Bible, but they are few and far between. The rest of the Bible, however, can be described as a book of the five B's - Barbarism, Bestiality, Bigotry, Bloodshed, and Brutality. If you do not believe this then please read the following passages. (1)

Barbarism: Num. 31:1-20, Hosea 13:8, 2 Kings 2:23-24 (2)
Bestiality: Num. 21:21-25, 21:3, Ex. 22:18, Isa. 45:7, Ezek. 5:10
(3) Bigotry: Ex. 3:21, 11:1-2, 34:7, 20:5, Deut. 14:21, Matt.
13:12, 10:35-36, Luke 14:26, John 15:6 (4) Bloodshed: Ex. 32:27-
28, Num. 14:1-37, John 15:6 (5) Brutality: Ex. 32:19-26, 34:7,
Gen. 9:20-25, 2 Sam. 12:14, Isa. 14:21, Ezek. 4:12-15, Lev.
21:18, Mal. 2:3.

The above passages are but the tip of the iceberg. There are many more. What sayest thou Brother Evangelist, Brother Rabbi, Brother Priest, Brother Minister?

Issue #145 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

Jan. 1995

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

This month's issue will continue our analysis of Haley's book that was begun in the last issue.

REVIEWS

HALEY'S ALLEGED DISCREPANCIES OF THE BIBLE (Part II)--One of the more well known biblical contradictions involves the conflict between John 8:14 ("Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true:....") and John 5:31 ("If I bear witness of myself my witness is not true") which Haley addresses on page 117. He offers several reconciliations and begins by noting that, "Grotius takes the first passage as a mere hypothesis, 'even though I should bear witness of myself,' etc." This tactical attempt to change the mood won't stand for several reasons. First and most obvious is the fact that Grotius inserted the hypothetical words "even" and "should" which are not in the text. If you can insert words at will, then you can make Scripture say anything you want. Second, the second half of the sentence is in declarative form. It's a direct statement and nothing hypothetical is involved. John 8:14 isn't "iffy" or hypothetically written; it's assertive. Third, even if the statement were hypothetical, it wouldn't matter. Jesus is still saying his witness is true.

Haley continues by saying, "Bishop Pearce, Wakefield, and others render the second text thus: 'If I bear witness of myself, is not my witness true?'" In other words, they decided to eliminate the contradiction by completely rewriting the script and putting John 5:31 in interrogatory form. Although not a question originally, it was refashioned to escape the dilemma. How's that for objective scholarship!

Haley carries this charade even further by saying of John 5:31, "Should the common version be retained, the meaning is, 'If I alone bear witness of myself.' The Mosaic law required at least two witnesses. Jesus therefore admits that his own testimony alone would not be 'true'; that is, would not be regarded as legal proof; hence he proceeds to adduce the corroborative testimony of another."

This is the kind of rationalization that makes you want to stay as clear of the Bible and religious institutions as is possible. First, the word "alone" is neither present nor implied in the script. It's nothing more than a gratuitous insertion. Secondly, Haley says, "the Mosaic law required at least two witnesses. Jesus therefore admits that his own testimony alone would not be true; that is, would not be regarded as legal proof." But who said anything about "legal proof?" Where is that in the text? The text is talking about truth or accuracy, not testimony admissible in court according to the Mosaic law. Finally, if we are going to judge these verses on the basis of what is required by Mosaic law, then Jesus lied in the first verse, John 8:14, when he said that if he bore record of himself his record is true. If we are going to apply the Mosaic law to the second verse, then it applies to the first verse as well. After all, what is good for one is good for the other. In John 8:14 Jesus says his record is true, but how can that be true if two witnesses are required according to the Mosaic law which Haley seeks to invoke?

On page 118 Haley confronts the clash between Isa. 9:6-7 ("The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end") and John 14:27 ("Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you") on the one hand and Matt. 10:34-36 ("Think not that I am come to send peace on earth, I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father...") on the other. He states that, "the object of his mission was peace, but a result of it would, in many cases be strife and war. Often, in securing a valuable end, we cannot avoid certain incidental evils. The object of the surgeon in amputating a diseased limb is the preservation of life, yet pain, as an incidental evil, follows the stroke of his scalpel."

Haley's explanation is without merit because his injection of the word "result" is not in harmony with what Jesus said in Matthew. He said he came to "send" a sword, not peace. He came to set men at variance with one another. This was his intent, not the "result" of a far more beneficent motive, i.e. to create peace. He said he came to create strife; it was not a mere by-product of his mission.

A conflict addressed by Haley on page 119 involves Isa. 49:6 ("I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth") and 1 Tim. 2:6 ("Christ Jesus who gave himself a ransom for all") versus Matt. 10:5-6 ("Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel") and Matt. 15:24 ("I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel"). Haley's relatively brief explanation is, "He made atonement, 'tasted death,' for every man, and the benefits of his mediation are, to a certain extent, enjoyed by all, but his personal mission was chiefly to the 'house of Israel.' And the first, but not the later, mission of the apostles was similarly restricted."

His rationalization is deficient for several reasons. First, since when did Jesus have two assignments? Where is scriptural support for the allegation that Jesus had two missions, one of which was personal? And where is scriptural support for the allegation that his mission changed? Surely Haley isn't contending Jesus changed his mind? Secondly, even if Jesus had a personal mission, that's not the issue. Where he told his disciples to go is what matters. Thirdly, how can Haley say Jesus "gave himself a ransom for all" and then say "his personal mission was chiefly to the 'house of Israel'?" Fourthly, how can Haley say the mission of Jesus "was chiefly to the house of Israel" when Matt. 15:24 says, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel?" It was only to the house of Israel, not chiefly to the house of Israel. And finally, there are no modifiers or qualifiers in the verses cited. So how can Haley employ words and phrases such as "to a certain extent" and "chiefly"?

Haley confronts a similar difficulty on the same page. Jesus said his followers were to go to the Jews only in Mark 7:26-27 ("The woman was a Greek...and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter. But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs"). Yet, this conflicts with the behavior of Jesus according to Luke 17:2 ("And it came to pass as he went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee"), John 4:3-4 ("He left Judea, and departed again into Galilee. And he must needs go through Samaria"), and John 4:40-41 ("And when the Samaritans were come unto him they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days....").

Haley's rationalization for this clash is. "It is impossible says Zeller to reconcile these different accounts. Now the truth is that the infrequent exceptions alluded to in the second series of texts, only prove the general rule, that Christ's personal mission was to the Jews. The mere fact that, in journeying from Judea to Galilee, he passed through Samaria, which lay between the two, or that he wrought a miracle upon one Samaritan, and virtually commended another, or that he actually tarried two whole days in Sychar, does not, in the slightest, militate against the certainty that his personal ministry was among the children of Israel."

Haley is again trying to legitimize a wholly unbiblical concept. Where does Scripture state that Jesus had a personal mission distinct from that of his followers or later intent? Secondly, it's important to note that to some extent Haley built a strawman by failing to insert the most potent verse supporting Mark 7:26-27. He used Mark 7:26-27 which says go to the Jews only but omitted a more powerful verse which specifically rules out going to the Samaritans in particular. Matt. 10:5 states, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not." Jesus directly violated this instruction in John 4:3-4, 40-41, and Luke 17:11. Apparently Haley decided to omit consideration of this verse and cited Mark 7:26-27, instead, so he could more easily sell his "personal ministry" theory. And lastly, what is this nonsense about "infrequent exceptions"? Any exception is one too many and destroys the rule.

On page 120 Haley tackles the conflict of John 5:22, 27 ("For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: and hath given him authority to execute judgment also") and John 9:39 versus John 8:15 ("Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man"), John 12:47 ("And if any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but save the world"), and John 3:17. Haley seeks to escape this dilemma by playing with the meaning of the Greek word "krino" (to judge). He states, "The Greek word 'krino' has the distinct, though associated meanings of, to judge merely and to condemn. In some of the above passages it seems to be used in one sense, in others a different one is employed. Jesus came, in a sense, to 'judge' the world, that is, to determine, by means of the gospel, the moral status, and consequent final destiny of men; yet his primary object was not to condemn men, though, in the process of judgment, the condemnation of some will be a certain although incidental result."

Again we are faced with typical apologetic weaseling. First, all of the references to the word "judge" in these verses come from the same Greek word "krino" which means, according to Strong's Exhaustive Concordance, "to distinguish, i.e. decide (mentally or judicially); by implication to try, condemn, punish:--avenge, conclude, condemn, damn, decree, determine, esteem, ordain, call in question or to sentence to." Nowhere does Strong make the distinction between "merely to judge" and "to condemn" that Haley makes. What part of the verses cited lead credence to a distinction of this nature. Second, Haley doesn't even state which verses have the former meaning and which have the latter. He leaves that to his reader, hoping one of them will "click." Third, by saying "it seems to be used in one sense, in others a different one," Haley is all but admitting he's hypothesizing; he's guessing. Fourth, Haley says, "Jesus came, in a sense, to 'judge' the world, that is, to determine...the final destiny of men; yet his primary object was not to condemn men, though, in the process of judgment, the condemnation of some will be a certain although incidental result." Haley loves to toss in qualifiers at regular intervals. What does he mean "in a sense"? The text says he came to judge the world (John 5:22, 27). There is no "in a sense" to it. Fifth, we are talking about "judging" the world. True, that could have either a positive or negative result. But where does the text say his primary object was not to condemn men? That isn't even at issue. Haley hopes his reliance upon the word "condemn" will save the day. He hopes that if he can draw a distinction between judging, which can be either positive or negative, and condemning, which is viewed as negative only, he'll be able to pull a rabbit out of the hat. The fact is that verses on both sides of the equation refer to judging and it's irrelevant as to whether or not that has a positive or negative connotation. One says he came to judge and the other says he did not come to judge. Neither refers to judging only in the negative sense or what Haley refers to as condemning.

Our last example of Haley's duplicity emerges from his reconciliation of John 9:5 ("As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world") and John 1:9 ("That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world") with Matt. 5:14 ("Ye are the light of the world") and Phil. 2:15 ("Among whom ye shine as lights in the world"). So who is the light of the world? Jesus or his followers? On page 129 Haley states, "In the primary and highest sense, Christ is the Light of the world; in a secondary and subordinate sense, Christians, viewed as receiving and reflecting his light, may be designated as the 'light of the world'." Again Haley seeks to resolve a conflict by drawing a whimsical distinction lacking textual support. Jesus is referred to as "the light" in John 9:5 and calls his followers "the light" in Matt. 5:14. If Jesus has top billing in the former, then his followers have top billing in the latter. There is no difference. Both "he" and "they" are referred to as "the light" not "a light." Both are referred to in the primary or highest sense. If one is primary then so is the other. If one is not referred to as primary, then neither is the other. If one is secondary then so is the other. They sink or swim together. In fact, why couldn't Haley's explanation be reversed 180 degrees and say, "In the primary and highest sense, Christ's followers are the Light of the world; in a secondary and subordinate sense, Christ, viewed as receiving and reflecting their light, may be designated as the 'light of the world'?" After all Christ's light is only reflected throughout the world as a result of the evangelistic and proselytization efforts of his followers. They activate the light coming from Christ. His secondary status is dependent on their primary efforts. Without them he would either be unknown or could very well fade into oblivion.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #605 Continues from Last Month (Part d)

(The first question on our pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD, asks how fetuses and the mentally deficient can be saved if you must accept Jesus as your savior. In responding to our question via a subscriber's letter, fundamentalist Rev. BB says--Ed.)

I wonder about the wisdom of putting your strongest argument first. I also wonder about the smallness of a mind that cannot imagine the broadness of God's love and justice. Likely, McKinsey is already guilty of creating a "strawman" - an easily defeated argument construed to belong to one's opponent, created falsely for the sole purpose of knocking it down. It is a deception, a forensic sleigh of hand. I do see straw here - after all, he is using an ultra-Conservative line of reasoning to come to a Liberal conclusion.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part d)

How does God's alleged love and justice adequately address this issue? If Rev. BB would only answer the question and not bring in a lot of extraneous grandiloquence, we'd both be better off. In addition, "The broadness of God's love and justice" is an assumption for which there is not only very little biblical proof but much evidence to the contrary. Secondly, the real difficulty lies not with my creation of a strawman but with Rev. BB's attempt to evade the issue by giving people the impression that the question is some sort of trick undeserving of a reply. Thirdly, I'm not using any line, ultra-conservative or otherwise. I'm just asking a simple, straightforward, logical question that should disturb anyone concerned with the reliability of Scripture. And fourthly, I fail to see how my question automatically classifies me as an ultra-conservative or a liberal. Atheists, agnostics, and humanists could very well pose the same dilemma.

Letter #605 Continues (Part e)

My answer to this complaint is in the first case, very broad. "If we cannot trust those incapable (for any legitimate reason) of accepting Christ as Savior to God, then to whom can we trust them?" I would rather rely on the justice of God (as revealed in the Bible) than on the weening, sentimental, foolish sense of justice exercised by Liberals like McKinsey (who's name does not, by the way, appear on this little tract - an act of cowardice?). In a related vein, God's thoughts and ways are clearly higher than ours (Is. 55:8+9), and beyond our capacity to understand (Rom. 11:33+34). Given these conditions, I'm willing to trust persons legitimately unable to make a faith-commitment to God's justice and His love and His mercy, all of which exceeds our human ability to understand or measure it.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part e)

In other words, to cut through the verbiage and make a long story short: Rev. BB doesn't have an answer. He could have saved a lot of rhetoric by admitting as much at the beginning. All he's really saying is that, although he doesn't understand how God will provide, somehow he will, which is no answer at all. Secondly, I would respectfully request that Rev. BB read Issues 115 through 120 on God's behavior before relying upon God's alleged justice. Thirdly, in true apologetic style he denounces an alleged shortcoming on my part--possessing a weening, sentimental, foolish sense of justice--without providing so much as a shred of proof for its existence. The problem lies not with my foolish sense of justice but with his lack of justice. Fourthly, Rev. BB should stop referring to me as a liberal since inane comments of this nature show he knows little or nothing about my religious or political views. Fifthly, my name was left off the pamphlet because I could think of no good reason for inserting it. Who wrote the pamphlet is of far less importance than the accuracy of the arguments contained therein. Why would I be afraid to put my name on a pamphlet when my name is on locally produced cable access TV programs, hundreds of audio tapes, thousands of BE issues, and a soon to be published book. I'm displaying cowardice? Is he serious? Again, he proved that he knows little or nothing about that which he speaks. And lastly, Rev. BB's final sentence is nothing more than a restatement of his contention that he will leave the matter in God's hands, which is only another way of saying he has no answer. His critics will just have to accept his contention that God will find a way out. Of course, God doesn't have to find a way out because he never found a way in. It's not his book, so it's not his problem. It's the problem of those who created the mess known as Scripture.

Letter #605 Continues (Part f)

More specifically, in my own study of this topic, I have found at least one-half dozen verses that imply a different kind of Judgement for those who have had a chance to believe. I find the Bible DOES address this issue by stating that God judges people first and primarily on the basis of belief and unbelief (the conscious decision NOT to believe, when given the opportunity to choose). And, secondarily, on the basis of works - good or evil. The person who had no legitimate opportunity to choose belief or unbelief is not included in this process. While their fate is a matter open to biblical conjecture, and best entrusted to God as I've already stated, it can be shown from the Bible that God will indeed show mercy on them. In other words, the contradiction is only apparent until we realize that we're talking about two different things here, two different situations, a Day of Judgement, and (perhaps) a time on non-judgement. This is NOT a different (or opposing) kind of salvation, but a different (not opposing) category of judgement.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part f)

Rev. BB is sinking deeper and deeper. First, he earlier said God would eventually provide an answer to this question and now he says he has "found at least one-half dozen verses that imply a different kind of Judgement for those who have had a chance to believe." Yet he fails to provide so much as one. What verses? But even more importantly, who cares? He should quit trying to shift the focus. We are not discussing people "who have had a chance to believe." That's not the issue, so it should not have arisen and was only mentioned in order to muddy the waters. We are talking about those who could never believe because of their circumstances. Second, what is a different kind of Judgement? Does he mean there are degrees of justice and the goal posts are set further back for some than for others? Isn't justice supposed to be blind? Third, he says people will be judged "first and primarily on the basis of belief and unbelief" and "secondarily on the basis of works - good or evil." Where is this kind of outline formulated in Scripture? But even more importantly, how is that relevant to those who have neither belief nor works. Fourthly, he says "the person who had no legitimate opportunity to choose belief or unbelief is not included in this process." According to what verses? Where is this in Scripture? He's writing his own text. Fifthly, I would again suggest the Rev. BB read Issues 115 through 120 before saying "God will indeed show mercy to them." Judging from the manner in which God treated infants and sucklings in the OT, one would be foolish, indeed, to conclude that they are going to receive any more justice in the next world than they did in this one. After all didn't God order the slaying of "both man and woman, infant and suckling" in 1 Sam. 15:3 and Ezek. 9:6. Rev. BB says, "it can be shown from the Bible that God will indeed show mercy on them." Where? What verses say they will get special treatment? Sixthly, because the last two sentences of Rev. BB's monologue have no biblical foundation and fall, like much of his discourse, into the category of esoteric gibberish, I'll do him the favor of forgetting he ever mentioned them. Based upon his use of the word "perhaps," even he is uncertain about what he's saying. Finally, and on top of everything else, Rev. BB should realize the word "judgment" is almost never spelled "judgement."

Letter #605 Continues (Part g)

(The second question on our pamphlet asks: Why are we being punished for Adam's sin. After all, he ate the forbidden fruit, we didn't. It's his problem, not ours, especially in light of Deut. 24:16 which says children shall not be punished for the sins of their fathers. Rev. BB's answer is as follows--Ed.).

Deut. 24:16 is part of a section of miscellaneous laws given to Israel by God. It's teaching regards capital punishment, that "each is to die for his own sin." In other passages, God does talk about "inherited punishment" and "inherited righteousness" both of which have natural, logical and/or theological explanations. In other words, "inherited punishment" is a right God reserves for Himself but denies His people. This verse has NO direct link with the Genesis account.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part g)

In the first place, is Rev. BB saying Deut. 24:16 only applies to capital punishment and only in regard to capital punishment shall each man be punished for his own sins? If a man robs, rapes, maims, or vandalizes another, then it doesn't really matter who is punished as long as someone pays the penalty. Only in the case of killing another human being should the perpetrator die? I've never been a fan of the Bible but I don't think that's one of its ridiculous statements. Secondly, his attempt to divorce this problem from "inherited punishment" has no substance, since mankind is clearly adversely affected by what Adam did according to the Bible. Third, Rev. BB states that, "In other passages, God does talk about 'inherited punishment'." Very true! I'm surprised he'd admit it. In Rom. 5:12 ("Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned") Paul clearly alleges we are all paying the penalty for what Adam did. In effect, in Rom. 5:12 Paul talks about the very inherited sin which Rev. BB denies exists--the sin we all inherited because of Adam's sin. Rev. BB says, "inherited punishment" is a right God reserves for Himself but denies His people. What's his point and how's it relevant? And lastly, his concluding comment--"This verse has NO direct link with the Genesis account"--has no validity whatever as is proven by the worthlessness of his entire rationalization.

Letter #605 Continues (Part h)

(Rev. BB concludes his comments on our second point by saying--Ed.).

Further, this man (I think he is referring to me--Ed.) is either a gimpy theologian, or is fond of creating 'strawmen.' We'll have a whole hayfield full of 'em soon! We are NOT being "punished" for Adam's sin. We live under its effects, which are certainly sufficiently horrible (including the kind of non-reasoning that leads a man to write nutty papers like this one). The effects of Adams's sin have compromised creation, and will continue to do so until the New Creation at Christ's Second Coming.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part h)

As far as NOT being punished for Adam's sin is concerned, Rev. BB had better consult Paul before opening his mouth again. What did Rom. 5:12, which we quoted earlier, say? Did he try to find out or did he just assume that the theology with which he had been indoctrinated would naturally agree with anything Paul asserted? We aren't just living under the effects of Adam's sin. We sinned, period. Rom. 5:19 says, "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners." We "were made sinners." And what happens to sinners? They are punished! If that's not being punished for what Adam did, what is? Rom. 5:18 says, "...by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation," again showing we are all being punished for what Adam did. And 1 Cor. 15:22 says, "For as in Adam all die...." How many verses does he want? He tries to hide man's punishment for Adam's sin under a smokescreen of nebulous nonsense about a "compromised creation" and living under the "effects" of Adam's sin. We are being punished for Adam's sin, and if he doesn't believe it he should ask Paul. The latter said that when Adam sinned we all sinned. Instead of calling others "gimpy theologians," Rev. BB would do well to acknowledge his own lack of theological expertise. The only non-reasoning and nutty papers involved in this whole affair are those emanating from an amateurish reverend projecting a counterfeit aura of sophistication that seems to never end.

Editor's Note: We apologize for not having contacted those who volunteered to play our video tapes on their local public access channels, but we have been incredibly busy throughout all of 1994. In fact, I can't think of a year in my life in which I have been more preoccupied. Just making tapes has been quite an accomplishment, let alone circulating them. Baring any unforeseen circumstances, we hope to get there eventually. We just finished our twenty-first program.

Erratum: In the first column on page 2 in last month's issue we should have printed Mal. 1:2-3 instead of Mark 1:2-3.

Issue #146 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

Feb. 1995

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

This month's issue will continue our discussion of Haley's classic apologetic work.

HALEY'S ALLEGED DISCREPANCIES OF THE BIBLE (Part III)--One of the most famous biblical inconsistencies arises from Paul's statements in 1 Cor. 15:51-52 ("We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump"), Phil. 4:5 ("The Lord is at hand"), 1 Thess. 4:15 ("We which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep") and 1 Peter 4:7 ("But the end of all things is at hand") that the coming of Christ is at hand versus his statement in 2 Thess. 2:1-3 ("Now we beseech you, brethren,...that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand, Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there be a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition....") that the coming of the Lord is far off. Simply put, Paul said he and others would live to see Jesus return; whereas, Jesus not only failed to return in Paul's lifetime but is yet to make an appearance.

Quoting Dr. Davidson on 1 Cor. 15:52 Haley's "explanation" for this conflict is that, "The expression we means such Christians as shall then be alive; all believers then living are grouped together. On 1 Thess. 4:15-17 he (Dr. Davidson--Ed.) says we which are alive and remain, etc., can only mean such Christians as live and remain. Paul employs himself and the early Christians as the representatives of those succeeding Christians who should be alive at the Redeemer's second advent." Sometimes one can't help but feel apologetic "explanations" should not even be read much less taken seriously. The text says WE--WE which are alive. And that must include the speaker if it is to make any sense. Paul did not say "those" who are alive or "whoever" may be alive. He said WE, clearly showing he expected to among those who would be alive at the second advent. There is no evidence whatever that Paul was merely employing himself and the early Christians as representatives of those succeeding Christians who should be alive at the Redeemer's second advent. Later Haley says, "The Thessalonians, though a very amiable people, were by some means mistaken on this subject, so as to expect that the end of the world would take place in their lifetime, or within a very few years." They weren't mistaken at all. There was no "by some means" to it. They were simply taking Paul at his word. That's what Paul said and they believed him. There is nothing mysterious involved. They trusted him and were deceived.

Haley continues his defense by making an analogy with Deut. 30:1 which says, "Thus in Deut. 30:1 ('And when all these things come upon you, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before you, and you call them to mind among all the nations where the Lord your God has driven you...') the generation addressed is the representative of a succeeding one; and in John 6:32 ('Jesus then said to them, Truly, truly, I say to you, it was not Moses who gave you the bread from heaven; my Father gives you the true bread from heaven'), a succeeding generation is employed to represent a past one." These situations are not even parallel with our original verses. No one in Deut. 30:1 is saying he or she will personally experience a future event. Paul's statements set a definite time limit on what is to occur. It had to occur before he died. There is no such limit in the Deut. 30:1 verse where God is addressing the nation of Israel whose existence could extend into the future indefinitely. Nowhere in Deut. 30:1 does it say a particular person had to still be alive when the prediction materialized. God is addressing the nation of Israel generally. All members of the particular generation who are listening to him could die and the prediction could still come true. John 6:32 is even more irrelevant. Not only does it lack a specific time line but is addressed to all followers of Jesus, both then and now. The giving of "the true bread" is something that happens over a period of time. It's not a one time only specific event.

Our second and final conflict for this month involves the clash on page 135 of Matt. 10:23 ("But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come") versus Matt. 24:14 ("And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come") and Mark 13:10 ("And the gospel must first be published among all nations"). One verse says Christ's followers will not have even covered the cities of Israel before Jesus returns, while the others say all nations shall hear the gospel before Christ's return. Haley's "reconciliation" is, "Strauss works hard to make a contradiction here. He remarks: 'On one occasion Jesus says to his disciples that the Son of man will return before they shall have completed their Messianic preaching in all the cities of Israel; another time he says that the second advent will not occur until the Gospel has been preached in the whole world among all peoples.' The difficulty is obviated by the following interpretations, any one of which may be adopted." His explanations, which follow, "may be adopted" but they certainly aren't valid.

Haley states, "Regarding Matt. 10:23 Barnes states, 'That is, in fleeing from persecution, from one city to another, you shall not have gone to every city in Judea, till the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the Jewish economy.'" What on earth does the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the Jewish economy have to do with what's predicted? It's talking about the arrival of the Son of man, not the destruction of a city and an economy.

Haley continues by quoting another apologist named Wordsworth who says, "In a primary sense, you will not have completed your missionary work in Judea before I come to judge Jerusalem. In a secondary and larger sense,--the missionary work of the church for the spiritual Israel will not cease till the second coming of Christ. There is a successive series of 'comings of Christ,' all preparatory to, and consummated in, the great coming." Oh, for goodness sake! Where in the world is he getting all this gibberish? Where does the Bible make reference to a "successive series of comings of Christ?" Talk about writing your own script! In addition, Wordsworth shifted the focus from specifics to generalities. What does Matt. 10:23 say. It says, "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel...." That is a specific statement referring to a definite group of cities. There is nothing vague or nebulous about it. But Wordsworth refers to "the missionary work of the church for the spiritual Israel" which is not only vague but unscriptural. That's not in the text. And where is a "secondary and larger sense" even implied, much less stated? And finally, "the missionary work of the church for the spiritual Israel" can be portrayed as a never-ending, on-going activity which can be made parallel with the prediction of the return of Jesus which is yet to occur; while covering the cities of Israel is a specific accomplishment that did occur, even though Jesus is yet to return. In other words, he changed the prediction from a specific achievement which was fulfilled to a goal that is yet to come to fruition, in order to make the non-arrival of Jesus parallel to the non-accomplishment of a missionary assignment. As you might have noticed Haley relies upon some of the most deceptive and sophisticated rationalizations ever devised. You have to think more deeply than normal or you'll miss the subtle shifts that are made in everything discussed. Some apologists are past masters at derailing the truth train. They can get you involved in more extraneous, irrelevant, twaddle than you ever thought possible.

Haley continues by citing the comments of other apologists on the phrase "Till the Son of man be come." He states, "Baumgarten-Crusius says, 'Until the victory of the cause of Christ'; Michaelis, 'To the destruction of Jerusalem'; Calvin, 'To the outpouring of the Holy Spirit'; Norton, 'That is, before my religion is established and its truth fully confirmed';.... Lightfoot: 'Ye shall not have travelled over the cities of Israel, preaching the gospel, before the Son of man is revealed by his resurrection.'" And Haley concludes his illusory defense by saying, "These interpretations, almost any of which may be adopted without an arbitrary exegesis, serve to show how slight is the foundation for the objection urged by Strauss."

The only "arbitrary exegesis" involved in this whole affair is that emanating from a deceptive defender of the Bible citing a group of biblicists engaged in specious interpretations. As far as the explanation of Baumgarten-Crusius is concerned, nothing is said about a "victory of the cause of Christ." Who said anything about a victory? The word "victory" doesn't even appear in the verse. And the verse is not even referring to the "cause" of Christ. It's referring to Christ himself. It says the "Son of man." That's a human being, not a cause or mission. How much clearer can the verse be? In addition, even if the "victory of the cause of Christ" were intended the explanation is all but worthless because the same problem exists with this as with the arrival of Jesus personally. Just as Jesus did not arrive before they had gone over the cities of Israel, the "victory of the cause of Christ" did not occur before they had gone over the cities of Israel. So, either way the contradiction stands.

The explanation of Michaelis is hardly worth considering since the word "Jerusalem" is non-existent in Matt. 10:23. It was just whimsically thrown in by Michaelis.

Calvin refers to the Holy Spirit which is also not the topic of conversation. Wouldn't it be nice if people talked about what verses discuss rather than heading out on some kind of tangent that strikes their fancy but is wholly divorced from the topic at hand!

Norton's defense suffers from the same malady that plagues the defense of Baumgarten-Crusius. Matt. 10:23 is referring to a man, a person, a human being, not a cause or mission. It is not talking about "my religion" but me (Jesus--Ed.) personally. It's talking about the physical appearance of a real live human being, not his cause, his purpose, his mission, his victory, his religion, or the full confirmation of truth. And also like the Baumgarten-Crusius defense even if "my religion is established and its truth fully confirmed" were intended the explanation is all but worthless because the same problem exists with this as with the arrival of Jesus personally. Just as Jesus did not arrive before they had gone over the cities of Israel, "my religion being established and its truth being fully confirmed" did not occur before they had gone over the cities of Israel. So, again, either way the contradiction stands.

Lightfoot's "rationale" is afflicted with the same shortcoming as that of Michaelis. While the latter uses the word "Jerusalem" which isn't even in the text, the former employs the word "resurrection" which isn't in there either.

Anybody could explain anything to anyone's satisfaction if they were allowed to gratuitously insert words and phrases with utter disregard of the text itself. That is one of the most obvious flaws in the explanations offered by the apologists cited by Haley. Haley says these explanations "may be adopted without an arbitrary exegesis" when precisely the opposite is true. They can only be adopted with an arbitrary exegesis. Haley's allegation that the interpretations of these men "serve to show how slight is the foundation for the objection urged by Strauss" rests on no foundation whatever. Quite the contrary, Strauss was one of the most meticulous of all biblical critics and he knew exactly what he was talking about. (TO BE CONTINUED)

COMMENTARY

Nearly every time I hear a fundamentalist tell me the exact time, place, and occasion under which he or she underwent the born-again experience, I can't help but think of a movie released in 1956 entitled "Invasion of the Body Snatchers." The parallels are striking if not unnerving. In the movie, large football shaped pods are placed beside people while they are sleeping and the latter awaken with an entirely new personality. With respect to Christianity, Jesus and the Bible are placed near people and they, too, are absorbed, transformed, and awaken with a new character. In the movie, the absorbing pods are the product of a being or beings from another world just as the Bible is supposedly an emanation from God and heaven. In the movie, people are troubled with life in general before they change but afterwards they testify to a feeling of contentment, serenity, and happiness. Being born-again generates the same feeling according to fundamentalists. In the movie, those who are absorbed by the alien force devote a tremendous amount of time and energy trying to convince the unconverted to accept the inevitable, succumb willingly, and join them in their realm of bliss. The comparison between this and the amount of religious propaganda on radio and TV programs throughout this country is all too obvious. In the movie, people are betrayed by those whom they trust the most--relatives and friends--who have already been absorbed. And that is no less true of the process by which most people join religious rigidity and are changed today. People are suckered in by those in whom they place the greatest confidence. In the movie, people had the same outward appearance before and after being incorporated, but the inner change was sinister, insidious, deceptive, and devastating. And that is no less true of those who have been co-opted by the born-again experience. In the movie people are only assimilated when they lower their guard and are lulled to sleep. How true that is of the process by which people are taken in through fundamentalist cunning and duplicity. In the movie those converted to the alien force do not hesitate to resort to coercion when persuasion proves to be ineffective. When peaceful measures are ineffective, imposition and violence are readily employed. Recent torchings of abortion clinics and the killing of their personnel, as well as events in the Ayatollah's Iran, show that's no less true of those who have undergone the born-again experience or something comparable. In the movie, those who have succumbed to the alien force behave as mindless, uncritical robots, blindly following every command or whim of their new cause. Those who have undergone the born-again experience adopt a similar mind-block to any concepts or ideas emanating from a source other than the one to which they have succumbed. But undoubtedly the most important parallel is that in the movie, the hero, the sane man, the sensible man, was doing everything in his power to either escape or destroy the alien force and its agents. And when it comes to the Bible in general and Jesus in particular, that's no less true of sanity today. In the movie, the hero puts up great resistance, escapes from the town controlled by his enemies, is chased by them through the hills out onto a busy highway occupied by people still unconquered by the alien force. As he is running up and down the highway saying and doing everything in his power to alert the unwary, a leader of his band of pursuers tells the others to stop the chase and then turns to them and says paraphrastically, "Never mind, let him go. They'll never believe him anyway." How well that applies to today's society. How well I know the feeling of that poor man on the highway trying to alert Americans to the ideology that is seeking inroads everywhere. When I see my programs on public access cablevision I can't but feel there are some influential figures in the audience saying to themselves: Never mind, let him go. They'll never believe him anyway.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #605 Continues from Last Month (Part i)

(The third question on our pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD, says God created Adam, so he must have been perfect. How then, could he have sinned? Regardless of how much free will he had, if he chose to sin, he wasn't perfect. In responding to our question via a subscriber's letter fundamentalist Rev. BB says--Ed.),

God's verdict on His creation was that it was "very good" (Gen. 1:31), NOT that it was "perfect." Just because God created it doesn't mean that He created man and/or the rest of creation as "perfect" in exactly the same way that God Himself is perfect. Obviously not, since God's perfection is original, and the best creation could boast would be a derived perfection. But the Bible never describes creation as having any measure of perfection.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part i)

First, by definition God is perfect. Everything he does is perfect. If he creates something it must be perfect. How could a perfect being create something that is less than perfect? Rev. BB is relying on Gen. 1:31. But what does "very good" mean? Does it mean perfection or less than perfection. If "very good" is a surreptitious way of saying God's creation was less than perfect, if Rev. BB is contending the Bible is saying a perfect being committed a less than perfect act, then we have an impossibility. A perfect being cannot do anything that is imperfect or flawed. Second, Rev. BB chose the translation of Gen. 1:31 that best served his purpose. If he had consulted the Modern Language Bible or the Living Bible he would have seen "...everything He had made was excellent" and "it was excellent in every way," respectively. If something is excellent in every way, then it is perfect. Something with even the slightest imperfection is not excellent in every way. Third, Rev. BB is trying to shift the focus. We are talking about the Bible's analysis of Adam, not what the Bible says about creation in general. Regardless of the nature of Creation, Adam sinned. He was not perfect as Paul makes clear in Rom 5:12. Fourth, Rev. BB says, "Just because God created it doesn't mean that He created man and/or the rest of creation as 'perfect' in exactly the same way that God Himself is perfect." Yes it does. How else could he have created it? It had to be as perfect as himself. After all he created it! Fifth, Rev. BB asks if that means God created man and/or the rest of creation as "perfect" in exactly the same way that God Himself is perfect and answered his own question by saying, "Obviously not, since God's perfection is original, and the best creation could boast would be a derived perfection." What kind of doubletalk is this? What is "original" and "derived" perfection? Perfection is perfection, period. Something is either perfect or it's not. There's no inbetween. Even the Bible is not so absurd as to make a wholly arbitrary distinction of this nature. One can't help but ask where on earth Rev. BB is getting all of this nonsense. And sixth, Rev. BB says, "the Bible never describes creation as having any measure of perfection." If that is true, if no part of creation is perfect, then how does Rev. BB account for Gen. 6:9 ("Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations") and Job 1:1 ("There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright....")? Clearly some parts of creation are perfect and we are back to square one.

Letter # 605 Continues (Part j)

Also, perfection does not necessarily include incapability of sinning. In fact, Heb. 4:15 teaches that Jesus was perfect precisely because He withstood temptations to sin; that He resisted the capacity to sin that was born in His humanity. There's no virtue in resisting sin if one is incapable of committing it in the first place. "Perfection" that exists only as the incapability of doing otherwise is not true (at least not truly human) perfection.

"Free will" is an essential theological issue and cannot be so lightly dismissed as McKinsey attempts. As will prove to be typical, his argument has only the barest appearance of logic.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part j)

Rev. BB says, "perfection does not necessarily include incapability of sinning." Yes it does. Otherwise the being in question is not perfect. If Jesus could sin, then Jesus was not perfect. If Jesus could sin, then Jesus was not God. Rev. BB says, "Jesus was perfect precisely because He withstood temptations to sin." If Jesus had to withstand temptations to sin, then Jesus was not perfect. Rev. BB says, "There's no virtue in resisting sin if one is incapable of committing it in the first place." Precisely! And that's why Jesus deserves no credit. As God, he was incapable of sinning in the first place. If he could have sinned, then he was neither God nor perfect. Rev. BB says, "Free will is an essential theological issue and cannot be so lightly dismissed," while failing to realize that perfection negates free will from the outset. No being can be free to do something that negates an essential aspect of his nature. If Jesus or God is perfect, then neither is free to do anything that is less than perfect. And if a man, in our case Adam, was created by a perfect God, then he had to have been created perfect. He couldn't have sinned or committed an act of imperfection, even if he had wanted to. The overriding error made by Rev. BB and all of his compatriots on this issue is that they just don't realize "perfection" negates "free will." No being can be both free and perfect simultaneously, unless that being is only committing perfect acts. Among perfect acts he does have a choice. Only in regard to perfect acts does he have options. Imperfect acts, however, are ruled out ab initio.

Letter #605 Continues (Part k)

(The fourth question on our pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD, asks how Num. 23:19, which says God doesn't repent, be reconciled with Ex. 32:14 which clearly says he does. In responding to our question fundamentalist Rev. BB says--Ed.),

Num. 23:19 describes God's consistency, truthfulness and trustworthiness. "Repent" is used in the KJV in a variety of ways, one of which describes what seems to be a change of mind that is inconsistent, and thereby untruthful or untrustworthy. As the writer points out, God, unlike human beings, does not engage in such inconsistency or deception. Ex. 32:14 describes the mercy of God and uses "repent" to describe the appearance of God changing his mind, to show mercy rather than wrath to His people. These passages are talking about two different things. If anything, all McKinsey has "proven" is the general unreliability of the KJV translation, and his own desire to create inconsistencies where none truly exist.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part k)

First, we aren't discussing a change of mind that exhibits inconsistency and deception which God allegedly would not do versus a change of mind to show mercy rather than wrath which God allegedly would do. We are discussing a change of mind, period. Num. 23:19 says, "God is not a man that he should lie; neither the son of man that he should repent." There are no qualifiers, modifiers or restrictions applied to the word "repent." It simply says he won't repent. Why he later repents is irrelevant. What evidence does Rev. BB provide to prove that the word "repent" in Num. 23:19 has the very narrow meaning he attaches to it. It simply says God does not repent. Second, Rev. BB says God does not engage in "a change of mind that is inconsistent," but later says Ex. 32:14 uses repent "to describe the appearance of God changing his mind, to show mercy rather than wrath to His people." In other words he changed his mind; he was inconsistent. Any change of mental direction exhibits inconsistency. Rev. BB is trying very hard to shift the focus from the fact that he changed his mind to why he changed his mind. Third, Rev. BB says, "God, unlike human beings, does not engage in such inconsistency or deception." If he changes his mind then he is engaging in inconsistency and to the extent it deceives people he is engaged in deception. Fourth, what does he mean "the appearance of God changing his mind?" There is no "appearance" to it. It says he changed his mind, period. Fifth, many modern versions use the word repent in the same manner employed by the KJV. Rev. BB hopes he can mislead readers and improve his case by attacking the KJV as if it were the only version on the market containing this contradiction. In fact, it's not. And lastly, the "repent" in Num. 23:19 and the one in Ex. 32:14 come from the same Hebrew word which is transliterated "nacham." The two "repents" do not come from two separate Hebrew words which can't help but weaken dramatically the possible apologetic argument that they have separate meanings. (TO BE CONTINUED)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #607 from FS of Anaconda, Montana

Dear Dennis. Regarding Charles Ryrie's "explanation" for the change of day-of-worship from the Jewish Sabbath to the Sun's day.

Michael Baigent, Richard Leigh, and Henry Lincoln wrote on page 340 in the book entitled Holy Book, Holy Grail, "By an edict in A.D. 321...Constantine ordered the law courts closed on 'the venerable day of the sun' and decreed that this day be a day of rest."

Thus Christians, formerly "worshipping" on the Jewish Sabbath, named for the planet Saturn, began their worship on the Sun God's day, the day of "Sol Invictus," the Invincible Sun.

Editor's Note: D. L. Smith is in the process of compiling a larger WORD INDEX of BIBLICAL ERRANCY than that which has been distributed in the past. He needs your assistance and sent me the following letter.

Dear Dennis. I'm writing to ask you and your readers for help. As you know I have offered to index the BE's from 1983 to 1994 and hopefully update every year or so. However, I have run into a bit of a problem that only you and your readers can solve. A VERSE INDEX is no problem because once a verse appears, its in the index list. BUT - words, that's a horse of a different color. I could use the old index and pick words I would like to see, but would that be adequate for others? I need readers and yourself to send me a list of words they would like to see in the index. If you or they would send them to me on 3.5 in. disks, in either PC, MAC, or PRODOS format, it would make the job easier, but a written list is still good. Then I could compile all the lists and use that as the index. I don't need issue dates or pages, just a word list. Word 6.0 should do all the marking and pagination once the list is compiled. Send disks or list to: Index, Box 513, Tiffin, Ohio 44883, (419) 447-0669. The deadline should be around APRIL 1995 for lists. Full index should be available before summer 1995. Thanks for your help.

Issue #147 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

Mar. 1995

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

Most of this month's issue will concentrate on continuing our response to Rev. BB's crude and intemperate attack on our pamphlet entitled THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? Few acts fire my ire more than an assault on this publication's veracity or the materials we distribute. For some reason I'm attracted to that kind of challenge like iron to a magnet.

Many of Rev. BB's responses to the following questions were refuted in prior issues of BE and are probably not deserving of reconsideration. But because of Rev. BB's cockiness, arrogance, and insulting demeanor and the number of years that have passed since our prior discussions of these issues, I can't resist reviving a few old battles and making some new points.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #605 Continues (Part 1)

(The fifth question on our pamphlet asks how 2 Kings 8:26, which says Ahaziah began to rule at age 22, can be reconciled with 2 Chron. 22:2, which says he was 42. In responding to our question fundamentalist Rev. BB says--Ed.),

In my NIV Bible the 2 Chron. 22:2 text is described as a variant reading favored by SOME Septuagint and Syriac manuscripts, and can be explained by textual criticism, perhaps as a "scribal error." It is certainly NOT indicative of an inconsistency in the original autographs.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part 1)

As I said in regard to the "you have to go back to the originals" defense on my 20th TV program, "When it comes to the inerrancy of the Bible, its advocates are required to provide adequate evidence of the inerrant originals, because certainly everything that comes after them is full of errors and contradictions. Why on earth anybody would assume the originals have no mistakes, when all of the copies reek with errors and contradictions is beyond me. That's a leap in logic that only the irrational can fathom. Of course, the problem lies in the fact that there is no logic involved. If you have never read or seen a book, how can you be sure of what it really says? No living human being has ever read a copy of the original Bible and that's assuming there was an original Bible. The entire 'you have to go back the originals' defense is basically the mark of a desperate man trying to defend a hopeless position. People who want to return to the originals are using that as a defense, a subterfuge. They know there are contradictions in the writings facing them. That's obvious. But, they say there are no contradictions or inaccuracies in the originals, knowing full well the originals can't be produced by anyone no matter how hard they may try and hoping that will provide seclusion. As Peter Ruckman, founder of the Pensacola Bible Institute alleges, 'it is nothing but cowardice and desertion in combat'."

When Rev. BB says, "it is certainly NOT indicative of an inconsistency in the original autographs," he couldn't be more incorrect. Precisely the opposite is true. It most assuredly is.

Letter #605 Continues (Part m)

(The sixth question on our pamphlet asks how can Ex. 33:20, which says no man can see God's face and live, be squared with Gen. 32:20, which says a man saw God's face and his life was preserved. In responding to our question Rev. BB says--Ed.),

The answer is found in the Gen. 32:20 text ("And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved"). Had McKinsey bothered to read the whole verse, he would've found it on his own -- "and yet my life was spared." This verse is a fine example of the love, forgiveness and mercy of God, that He allowed Jacob to see His face, and relaxed one of His "personal rules" and did not punish Jacob with death. Uniformity is not necessarily just, and sometimes justice is served by observing the spirit of the law even while violating its letter.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part m)

Rev. BB would have done better to have avoided this problem entirely. His explanation is not only pathetic but an open admission that a contradiction exists. His assertion that God "relaxed one of his personal rules" along with his last comment that "sometimes justice is served by observing the spirit of the law even while violating its letter" is nothing more than a defensive concession. Need more be said? His melodramatic injection of a lot of irrelevant bleeding-heartism about God's alleged love and mercy is little more than a doomed attempt to play on the reader's feelings at the expense of his logic. In essence, all Rev. BB is saying is that God violated a rule he laid down personally in Ex. 33:20 but it was done for a good cause. Nevertheless, the fact remains that God said in Ex. 33:20 that no man, NO MAN, can see God's face and live, while in Gen. 32:30 Jacob saw God's face and his life was preserved. Why God relaxed one of his rules is irrelevant. Reality exposes an exception and that's all that's necessary for the contradiction to exist.

Letter #605 Continues (Part n)

What McKinsey doesn't realize is that Jacob isn't the only man to see God's face. In fact, later in the book of Exodus, God allows Moses to see His face and live. This is then, in both cases, an act of divine intimacy: God mercifully extended to two very important men this great honor. The "contradiction" exists only in McKinsey's mind.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part n)

No! A "non-contradiction" exists only in Rev. BB's imagination. I fully realize Moses saw God as well and Rev. BB has only managed to provide another event contradicting the rule laid down in Ex. 33:20. Instead of resolving the dilemma, he's only strengthening my case and weakening his. He seems to think that if God contradicts himself for a justifiable reason, somehow the contradiction vanishes. Hardly! God flatly stated something would not happen and it did, which is all that's needed for the contradiction to stand.

Letter #605 Continues (Part o)

(The seventh question on our pamphlet asks how Rom. 3:23 ("All have sinned and come short of the glory of God") can be reconciled with Gen. 6:9 ("Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations") and Job 1:1 ("Job...was perfect and upright..."). In responding to our question Rev. BB says--Ed.),

What the admittedly inferior KJV renders as "perfect" the NIV translates as "blameless." Thus, the contradiction with Rom. 3:23 is eliminated.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part o)

Now let's don't be ridiculous. Of course it's not eliminated. "Blameless" means someone has done absolutely nothing for which he can be blamed. In other words, he's morally perfect. Changing the word in no way resolves the dilemma.

Letter # 605 Continues (Part p)

McKinsey is also guilty of simplemindedly taking these words at their English face value, just for the purpose of making complaints such as this. Taimiyim is the Hebrew word in Gen. 6:9. It means "entire integrity, truth: without blemish, complete, full, perfect, sincere, sound, without spot, undefiled, upright" (Strong's). The root word, tam, is found in Job 1:1, 8, and means "complete; pious; gentle, dear; completely together, perfect, plain, undefiled, upright" (Strong's). With all these other, better translations available, to assume that the OT author meant to convey any kind of perfection, let alone a spiritual one, is, again, to be guilty of constructing a conflict.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part p)

No one needs to construct a conflict, that's already present. Rev. BB should have read all of our back issues before signing his name to such an inane letter. If any simplemindedness were coming from me it would only exist if I were so naive as to accept his rationalizations. In the first place, he would have done well to have avoided Strong entirely because words and phrases such as without blemish, complete, without spot, and undefiled are identical with perfect. He's only proving my argument, not his. Secondly, as I said in a prior issue, if Noah was not perfect then he had no more right to be on the Ark than anyone else. He should have drowned with the rest of humanity. Thirdly, I'm becoming increasingly perturbed with these Johnny-Come-Lately's who always think they have better translations of biblical verses than those of the scholars who created the most prominent modern versions. I'm tempted to ask: Just how much Greek and Hebrew have you had? Never mind about their credentials or mine. What about yours? As I've told several people who resort to this technique: Why don't you create your own version of the Bible and send me a copy which I would be glad to critique. Until you do, we are going to go with what is available. Fourthly, the word perfect in Gen. 6:9 which is applied to Noah comes from the same Hebrew word which is applied to God in Deut. 32:4 and Psalm 18:30. If there is no reason to say Noah is perfect according to Gen. 6:9 then there is no reason to say God is perfect according to Deut. 32:4. If Noah wasn't perfect then neither is God. If it applies to one, it applies to the other. And lastly, Rev. BB isn't very well acquainted with modern translations because the King James is not the only version to use the word "perfect." The American Standard Version of 1901 also says "perfect" and few people call it inferior.

Letter #605 Continues (Part q)

It is highly unlikely the author meant to convey in any way that these men lived in the same perfection as God, especially when the narrative of their lives is much less glowing than the glowing praise of a perfect being. Therefore, this argument is spurious, false, and contrives a nonexistent contradiction.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part q)

Rev. BB feels it is "highly unlikely" that "these men lived in the same perfection as God." That's supposed to be proof! Since when is the gut reaction of a narrow-minded ideologue comparable to hard evidence? If he thinks God's behavior is immaculate, then I would strongly suggest that he read issues 115 through 120 of BE. That should cure him of any delusions regarding the perfect behavior of his biblical God. He also needs to reread what is stated in the fourth point in the prior answer regarding the application of "perfect" to God and Noah. The only thing spurious, false, and contrived is the bogus defense of an unctuous escapist.

Letter #605 Continues (Part r)

Let us now observe another contradiction (a sure sign of untruth and hypocrisy) in McKinsey's writing. While he would decry a wooden, strictly literal method of Bible interpretation (because he thinks the Bible is too unreliable to support such a method), he is certainly guilty of employing such a method.

What we have just read is an example. Since Rom. 3:23 literally says all have sinned, and as he observes "All means all," McKinsey adopts an extremely literal interpretation that "all" means all persons, at all times, in all places and situations, can never be described as "perfect." Obviously (according to this interpretation) that "all" includes Noah and Job, who, in his KJV Bible, are literally described as "perfect." And there appears the specter of contradiction.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part r)

To begin with, untruth or hypocrisy is a crime of which Rev. BB is far more representative than I will ever be. I've made a mistake now and then, but I've never displayed the kind of consistent pattern of falsehood and deception that is so prominent in the apologetic circles he represents. By denying that "all" means all persons at all times in all places, Rev. BB is saying there are some instances in which people are perfect. But he doesn't provide so much as one example. There is no "specter of contradiction"; there's a real contradiction. Secondly, the problem lies not with my adoption of an extremely literal method but with his repeated abandonment of the literal interpretation every time he feels the pinch. Talk about dishonesty and shoddy scholarship! Unlike him, I operate on the principle that the Bible says what it means and means what it says. His operative standard is that the Bible means what he says and says what he means. My approach is neither wooden nor strictly literal, and is far from being extremely literal. If I had been pushing an unwarranted or excessively literal approach over the years, there are hundreds of arguments I could have submitted that have never been broached in the history of this publication. Some of the most obvious examples are the following: Gen. 3:20 says, "Adam called his wife's name Eve; because she was the mother of all living." I don't know about Rev. BB but I have a mother and her name is not Eve. Except for a few people in the Book of Genesis, Eve was not the mother of anyone in history. Genesis 7:11-12 says, "...the windows of heaven were opened. And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights." The argument could be made that heaven has real windows. After all that's what it says. Matt. 16:19 says, "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven..." According to this you must have some keys to get into heaven. Imagine actually unlocking some kind of door and then entering the promised land! Job 1:20 says, "Naked came I out of my mother's womb; and naked shall I return thither." That would be quite an accomplishment considering the fact that many mothers are deceased and many children are bigger than their mothers! But that's what it says. Matt. 10:12 says, "And when ye come into a house, salute it." So why don't Christians salute a house after entering it? In 1 Tim. 5:23 Paul says, "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities." So why don't Christians stop drinking water when they are sick? That's what it says. Proverbs 15:3 says, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place." One could argue from this not only that the Lord actually has eyeballs like human beings but that he has trillions of them. Otherwise how could they actually be in every place? In 1 Cor. 4:17 Paul says, "For this cause have I sent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord..." So Paul must be the father of Timotheus. John 3:7 says, "Ye must be born again." Consequently, you have to reenter the womb and make another appearance. What a feat! Job 21:24 ("His breasts are full of milk") and Prov. 30:28 ("The spider taketh hold with her hands") could also be pushed to the wall. After all, Scripture says males have breasts with milk and spiders have hands. In John 10:7 Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep." Jesus said he was a door; so he must be a door. He called his followers sheep. Therefore all Christians are real sheep. Otherwise he's a liar. First Cor. 10:4 says, "...for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ." If the Bible says Christ was a rock, then he must be a rock. In Matt. 5:29 Jesus says, "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee" and in Matt. 5:30 Jesus said, "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee." I don't see any Christians walking around with plucked out eyes or severed hands. But that's what it says. And how could a hand or an eye offend you to begin with? I have never known of one to display intellect or will power. In light of these citations and scores of others that are available, one can now understand what a real strict literalist sounds like. Obviously a zealous biblical critic could press many additional points home if he really stuck to the letter of the script.

But I don't emphasize these verses, because I don't think in all fairness they should be taken literally. You could, and some do, but I don't. The ones I have stressed over the years, however, are meant to be taken literally and only those feeling the heat contend otherwise. A reasonable balance must be maintained and in all honesty I think that I have attained that equilibrium quite well. The Rom. 3:23 versus Gen. 6:9 and Job 1:1 example, to which Rev. BB takes exception, has the necessary qualifications. A literal interpretation is fully warranted, especially in light of the rest of Scripture and the attitude Paul has toward humanity in general.

Letter #605 Continues (Part s)

As we have already proven, McKinsey's hypocritical method ignores a whole set of grammatic factors, and all three contexts in a blatant attempt to rationalize disharmony. "Nature abhors a vacuum," scientists proverbialize. Similarly, true Bible interpretation abhors a vacuum between the ears of the interpreter. McKinsey's methods are deceitful and illegitimate, arranged solely for the creation of facades like this one. God has reserved a special fate for such false teachers (Matt. 18:6).

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part s)

When Rev. BB mentions "a blatant attempt to rationalize disharmony" one can't help but feel he is referring to himself, for surely that describes his entire biblical defense to a tee. He refers to my violation of "a whole set of grammatic factors" without mentioning so much as one. What factors? This is nothing more than an attempt to impress his readers without being required to put up or shut up. To quote Mondale: Where's the beef? One of the most common tactics of apologists is to make grandiose generalizations without providing a shred of solid data in an attempt to prove without proof. Without explaining how or where, Rev. BB alleges that I ignore contexts and interpret too literally. Critics of BE have to fortify their allegations with chapter and verse, if they expect to be taken seriously. Otherwise, I have no way of knowing what they are referring to. If they can't be specific; if they can't provide the nuts and bolts necessary for a credible argument, then they should do everyone a favor by remaining dormant. The "taking out of context" argument is one of the most overused, misused, perverted, twisted, and distorted arguments ever devised by biblical mouthpieces. It's a catch-all that can be thrown at any criticism without doing minimal research or putting forth any effort to prove one's case. I for one am tired of hearing this enervated defense that more often than not emanates from those least able to defend Scripture. It's the lazy man's out while projecting an aura of sophistication and erudition. When Rev. BB refers to my methods as being deceitful and illegitimate, when he refers to a vacuum between an interpreter's ears, he is only attempting to rid himself of his own inadequacies by projecting them on to another. His entire biblical philosophy is illegitimate and deceitful, which can no doubt be attributed in large part to the deficit lying behind his own forehead. But enough of this puerile namecalling which would not have been invoked were it not for the fact that his diatribes are so plentifully endowed with same. As far as the terrorism inherent in his citation of Matt. 18:6 is concerned, I can't help but think of the terror he should feel when the Koran condemns him to hell in Sura 5:72-75 for believing in the Trinity. One's as childish as the other.

Incidentally, the words "grammatic" and "proverbialize" aren't even in my Collegiate Dictionary and I've never heard of them. Either my vocabulary has just been increased or Rev. BB has further demonstrated his ineptitude with the English language. As far as "grammatic" is concerned, I think he means "grammatical."

Letter #605 Continues (Part t)

(The eighth question on our pamphlet asks how Moses could have written the first five books in the Bible (the Pentateuch) when his own death and burial are described in Deut. 34:5-6. In responding to our question Rev. BB says--Ed.),

First of all, there is no internal evidence for Moses' authorship of the Pentateuch, of which I am aware. (In other words, nowhere in those five books does Moses identify himself as the author.) Moses' authorship is commonly and widely accepted...on the basis of tradition. Therefore, what appears to be at odds here is NOT the Bible with itself, but the Bible with tradition. There's nothing self-contradictory about this.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part t)

For once Rev. BB and I are in agreement. There is no internal evidence for the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. When he says "nowhere in those five books does Moses identify himself as the author," he is correct. In fact, there is a sizable body of evidence proving precisely the opposite. So why doesn't Rev. BB enlighten his fundamentalist friends who continue to claim Moses wrote the first five books of the Bible? He is also correct when he says the Mosaic "authorship is commonly and widely accepted...on the basis of tradition and therefore what appears to be at odds here is NOT the Bible with itself, but the Bible with tradition. There's nothing self-contradictory about this." But he's wholly incorrect when he alleges I claimed the Bible contradicted itself. I never said anything of the kind. If he had taken the time to see what was actually said, he would have noticed the question was directed toward those who claim Moses was the author. I never said the Bible was contradictory. I said the fundamentalist claim that Moses was the Torah's author contradicted the internal evidence. As I've said so often, and apparently it bears repeating, Biblical Errancy is concerned with everything bearing on the Bible's validity and that includes more than just internal contradictions. Exposing contradictions is only one phase among several in our program. BE is not, I repeat, IS NOT concerned only with biblical contradictions.

Letter #605 Continues (Part u)

Again, McKinsey indulges in excessively rigid, simplistic reasoning. There is a simple explanation that can reconcile this tradition (of Moses' authorship) with the Bible. Perhaps Moses authored the majority of Deuteronomy, writing until his death. Afterward, an anonymous scribe wrote the epilogue that chapter 34 clearly is. No, I cannot "prove" this theory, but it's certainly a more natural explanation than the antagonistic construction McKinsey's imagination creates.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part u)

As has been stated on several occasions and apparently it bears repeating, I really wish our critics would read all of our back issues before sending us a letter that so clearly shows they haven't done their homework. This question was addressed long ago in issues 19 and 20. The only rigid, simplistic reasoning involved is that exhibited by someone who is relying upon his indoctrination, did not sufficiently research the question, and is obviously unaware of the response we gave to this common apologetic ploy. Even if Moses could not have written the last part of Deuteronomy, which Rev. BB is reluctantly willing to concede, he could not have written the remainder of the Pentateuch for other historical reasons as well. He admits he cannot prove his theory, but that's only a small part of his problem. He must also refute the historical arguments made in BE years ago regarding Moses and the Pentateuch. For him to say my imagination is creating an antagonistic construction is nothing more than a whimsical escape into grandiloquent rhetoric for purposes of "scholarly" exhibition and obfuscation. In other words, he's trying to hide his ignorance with a flurry of high-falutin rhetoric. If there is anyone who should not be free with the word "imagination" it is Rev. BB. TO BE CONTINUED

May 1996

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

Because of considerable correspondence, this issue, like last month's, will be devoted entirely to letters from our readers.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #611 from HJ of Charlotte, North Carolina (Part a)

You take issue with fundamentalists when they choose to define a word to suit their purpose. Since listening to a number of your tapes and reading many of your BE newsletters, frankly, I find it necessary to accuse you of doing likewise. It's a sad commentary to fault the opposition for using junk warfare while flailing disembodied or misunderstood words at them yourself.

Case in point: You define perfect as absolute or unwavering in its meaning. In all civilized languages people use words to mean whatever they choose for them to mean at that moment. "I've looked for this dress everywhere. It's perfect! I'll wear it to the Woop-goopers' dinner tomorrow."

Pursuant to your style of argument, this dress, being perfect, must have made itself spontaneously, cannot be damaged or soiled and will fit any and all comers flawlessly, while making them also beautiful beyond perception. Furthermore she sought it looking between every molecule in the universe. Hog wash. The lady obviously meant she'd shopped several stores and the dress suited the occasion. To condemn her to perpetual labor in a tailor shop for her statement would be unkind. So would saying that she used the word correctly.

Editor's Response to Letter #611 (Part a)

When are you and your compatriots going to realize we are dealing with the perfect work of a perfect being? We aren't talking about statements by fallible people but statements beyond mortal man's capability. No man can go everywhere or create something that is flawless. That's beyond his capacity and we all know it. But it's not beyond God's capability and that's what's on the agenda. For that reason your analogy is completely invalid. No one is going to hold any mortal to a standard only God can fulfill. So that's not the issue and you are only trying to deceive people by implying it is. There is a world of difference between God using the word "perfect" and man using it. As I have stated repeatedly, if Noah was not morally perfect, then he had no more right to be on the ark than anyone else. If Noah wasn't morally perfect, then the flood was useless because it did not purify the world by eradicating all the evil people and starting things anew as we are told. And if Noah wasn't morally perfect, then neither is God, because the same Hebrew word for "perfect" is applied to God in Deut. 32:4. In essence, when you are dealing with God and the perfect book, you have entered an entirely different arena that cannot be compared to everyday living by normal people.

Moreover, what rationale led you to conclude that if something is perfect it must have made itself, spontaneously no less. I don't see the logical connection and why can't it be damaged or soiled. Are you saying that because something is perfect it must remain so forever? And why must your dress fit all comers. That's an impossibility. How could any dress be all sizes simultaneously? Your leaps in logic repeatedly elude me.

Letter #611 Continues (Part b)

I sense that you would want to ask, "Can't God just say what He means even though He is dictating?"

Please tell me what authority you use to claim that if God is perfect he could not make something imperfect? Even experts do a lesser job sometimes because they intend to.

Editor's Response to Letter #611 (Part b)

Don't try to build a strawman. I'm not asking for God to say what He means. The problem is that he said what he meant (assuming it's his book) and you don't like what you heard. You are the one implicitly asking for him to say something different.

You say a perfect being can do things that are imperfect when he intends to. But that is a repudiation of the very definition of God. By definition, everything he does is perfect. He can't do something that's imperfect. How can a perfect being do imperfect acts and still be called perfect? Your reference to "experts" is invalid because you are dealing with mere mortals who are not perfect and couldn't be so even if they wanted to. No expert ever did a perfect job. He is only classified as an expert when compared to others in the trade. He is more qualified than others and performs the same deeds better, but nothing he does is perfect. When experts do a lesser job, they are not moving from perfect behavior to imperfect behavior but are moving from imperfect behavior to behavior that is even further from perfection. Again, you are trying to concoct an invalid analogy.

Letter #611 Continues (Part c)

To argue that God would have to make man perfect in order to be perfect himself flies in the face of the very common sense which is your stock in trade. Why would not man be perfect for His purpose? "Let's cast the die," He might have said, "and see what numbers come up!" (Two dice, in the case of Adam and Eve).

This, of course, refutes His omniscience, but what the heck, nobody's perfect! If God is perfect then he is omnipotent and can do anything even though it be paradoxical. (Yes, Virginia, He can make a rock so big that even He can't pick it up. Then He'll pick it up to prove He's omnipotent!). I made up that rule myself. How do you like it?

Editor's Response to Letter #611 (Part c)

Now you're getting silly! You refer to God casting dice as if he wouldn't know the outcome beforehand. This is an argument? You say God can perform the paradoxical which is a euphemism for contradiction and then admit you made it up. How do I like your rule? I don't! It's childish. You said he can't pick it up and then reversed 180 degrees and said he picked it up.

Your rule is as absurd as your argumentation. But still, I'd like to thank you for saying common sense is my stock in trade.

Letter #611 Concludes (Part d)

...Who told you that excellent in every way means perfect? In spite of the fact that not even perfect always means perfect you have already expressed that perfect is a superlative. "Excellent" falls short of perfect, even if it's the lady's excellent dress! You can't add up enough excellents to have a perfect any more than you can add up a bunch of pretty goods and get an A+....

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #611 (Part d)

At times your letter borders on being incoherent when not puerile. Who said anything about the word "excellent"? And what does that have to do with the issue? We're discussing the word "perfect." Another one of your strawmen? What do you mean by saying I have always said perfect is a superlative? There are no degrees or gradations with respect to "perfect," just as there are no degrees or gradations with respect to God. You seem to think that God and his book should be held to no higher standard than one would expect from mankind in general. Not only are your arguments poor but you possess an amazing ability to express yourself in rambling, disjointed, uncommunicative, sophistic rhetoric. It doesn't take a mental genius to realize that non sequiturs, invalid analogies, and strawmen are your stock-in-trade.

Letter #612 from Rev. WW of Lufkin, Texas

In a discussion of salvation with a local acquaintance (I won't call him a friend because he is an admitted atheist) reference was made to your publication, Biblical Errancy. In several issues you address the subject of salvation, but issues 3, 71, and 94 concern me the most. Your interpretation of biblical passages referring to salvation are on the surface scholarly and penetrating. They give the illusion that we Bible believing Christians are ill informed when we tell others that faith in our Lord Jesus Christ is all that is needed for salvation. However, it is you who have missed the point.

Scripture teaches a great deal about salvation. In treating such an all-encompassing theme, it discusses a number of different facets of that doctrine. But regardless of how esoteric they may appear to the evangelically inept, what it all comes down to when properly interpreted is simply to have faith. Ephesians 2:8-9 says, "For by grace you have been saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is a gift of God." Faith and nothing else is required, not works, not grace, not predestination, not choice....

Editor's Response to Letter #612

You haven't proved much of anything, my friend. All you have done is utter some unsubstantiated allegations that blend with your biblical inculcations. First, you refer to my analysis of the Bible as being superficially scholarly and penetrating without providing any substantive evidence. I'd appreciate specifics rather than glittering generalities. Which of my observations in particular are less than scholarly? Second, you said I misled your fellow Christians by giving them the impression that faith in Jesus Christ is not all that is needed for salvation. But that's not my position; that's the Bible's stance. You'd better reread your own book, my friend. You missed more than one point; you missed all of the data in the commentaries of issues 3, 53, 54, 71, and 94 which show that works, whim, predestination, universalism, faith, and grace are all possible avenues to salvation according to Scripture. You've thrown all of your eggs into the Eph. 2 basket, while discounting a mountain of evidence to the contrary. Your mind is set in ideological concrete because the Bible itself says that faith alone is not the only route to salvation. As I said before, faith alone may be the position of Paul but it does not meld with the assertions of Jesus, James, the OT, and elsewhere. You state that, "Scripture teaches a great deal about salvation." It most assuredly does, but, unfortunately, you have chosen to ignore about 90%. You say that, "what it all comes down to when properly interpreted is simply to have faith," when only the scripturally inept would make such an erroneous comment. You say, "Faith and nothing else is required, not works, not grace, not predestination, not choice." That may be your position but it's not that of the Bible. Again, I would advise you to read the issues cited earlier or Chapter 16 in my book, The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy.

And lastly, you injudiciously quoted Eph. 2:8-9, a passage contradictory within itself. It says you are saved through faith, while simultaneously calling salvation a gift of God. How can it be a gift when it must be earned. If you don't make an effort, if you don't have faith in Jesus, then you aren't saved. How, then, can it be called a gift completely divorced from any works on your part? You must do something-believe in Jesus-in order to receive it. Apparently, even after having read my commentaries, you remain unaware of other roads to salvation and unaware of a substantial contradiction in the passage upon which you are relying for support.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #613 from HK of Randolph, Mass.

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I've now had the chance to read several issues of BE, and like very much what I see. I thought that you might find it useful to have some feedback from a new reader.

Overall, BE is great! It's highly informative, literate, reasoned, etc. And I'm especially glad that you went to a 2-column format--it makes it much easier to read.

OTOH, the dot-matrix printer you use to put the newsletter out is not so great. The dot matrix print itself is of very mediocre quality, and it looks worse when you go to italics. Nor is the type font great--a serif'd font would be much more comfortable on the eye.

The reproduction of the newsletter is fine--it's the original printing which could benefit from some work....

Finally, I'd like to suggest another area you might explore in BE, and that's Paul and the automatic acceptance of his writing which is found among Christians. Because Paul wrote that stuff in the bible, Christians automatically accord him respect. But just who the hell was Paul? What is the source of his authority as an original source for Christian thought? Did anyone with authority appoint him or bestow his blessing on Paul, or is it possible that Paul was just some kind of con-artist who saw a good opportunity to make a name for himself with this new product line?.... By Paul's own account, he was quite a zealot. Now, there are some things about the behavior of zealots which are quite well-known. For example, Paul boasts of his lying to "save souls"--"I became all things to all men, that I might [save?] some." This confusion of means and ends is one of the things which characterizes demagogues and fanatics of all persuasions (religious, political, social)....

The bottom line is, I think it would be beneficial for Christians, as well as for their victims, and certainly interesting for all concerned, to go back to basics and start thinking anew about who Paul was, how he came to be such a major part of Christianity, how his ideas relate to those of Jesus, how they might be a parody of what Jesus wanted, etc. I suspect he's simply a con artist or opportunist who saw a good thing and latched on to it, and sold his ideas by force of personality. Thanks. Keep up the interesting work!

Editor's Response to Letter #613

We appreciate your compliments and you'll be happy to learn we will no longer use italics on our dot-matrix printer. I concluded several issues ago that it was just too hard to read. Hopefully we will be able to improve the overall print quality by employing a lazer printer but that's still in the works. Your comments regarding Paul are worth considering, although that's essentially an extra-biblical topic outside our normal purview....

Letter #614 from JV of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Dennis. Recently I came across a problem in the bible you may or may not be aware of. In the essay entitled "Of the Books of the New Testament," the patriot Thomas Paine concludes that most, if not all, the letters attributed to Paul in the new testament were not written by Paul. As proof of this, Paine shows that certain of Paul's letters (1st and 2nd Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians) end with a clear statement claiming authorship other than Paul; in most cases, the city in which the letter was written is also given. For example, the biblical book entitled "The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Ephesians" concludes with this statement: "Written from Rome unto the Ephesians by Tychicus." This letter begins with a statement that Paul wrote it, and ends with a statement that someone called Tychicus wrote it. I decided to check the bible to see just who it was that wrote this particular letter. Well, Paul did, and so did Tychicus--depending on which version of the bible you read. For instance, the New King James version omits not only the closing statement of the Ephesians' letter but all the closing statements of authorship that Paine cites for the other Pauline letters--thereby neatly avoiding one of the more obvious conflicts about who wrote the letters attributed to Paul. But wait--I have a King James version of the bible, published shortly after the turn of the century, and--lo and behold--the end-statements of authorship that Paine mentioned in his 19th-Century essay are there for all to see. I also happen to have a copy of Gideon's version of the King James bible and--presto!--the end-statements disappear again. The end-statements are gone, then they're there, then they're gone again. Since there are many versions (and translations) of the bible, and I have not read even a fraction of them, I'm certain the confusion over who actually wrote the so-called Pauline letters will be with us for a long time.

What disturbs me most about all of this is the gall of the christians. If there's something in the bible that is contradictory or assaults reason, they eliminate it with a new "version" (or new translation). So much for the vaunted inerrancy of the bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #614

Dear JV. I've been aware of this problem for years but never pressed the issue because it works to our advantage for biblicists to strongly assert that Paul was the author of all those letters. The more writings they attribute to Paul the greater opportunity we have of exposing the duplicity of one of Christianity's most important founders. More writings only make him more vulnerable. The more he said, the more we can critique and the greater becomes the number of contradictions, inconsistencies and inaccuracies we have at our disposal. So I wouldn't work too hard to restrict his authorship. He's one of Christianity's creators and the more that can be laid at his doorstep the more open to attack he becomes.

Before closing, there are a couple minor points you might want to reconsider. First, the Gideons have no version of the bible that I am aware of. If my memory serves me correctly the Gideons are merely a group of people, mostly businessmen, who agreed to finance the distribution of the King James Bible in hotels, motels, etc. Secondly, I don't think you meant to say, "If there's something in the bible that is contradictory or assaults reason, they eliminate it with a new "version" (or new translation)." If that were true, most versions of the Bible could be written on memo pads. I think I know what you meant to say, so I would recommend that you either rewrite or eliminate that sentence. In no way, shape, or form has everything in any version of the Bible been eliminated that is contradictory or assaults reason.

Letter #615 from PC of Bainbridge, Georgia

...You and your work have meant more to me than any of my college courses or professors.

Letter #616 from JR of Saline, Michigan

Dear Mr. McKinsey.I just received my long-awaited copy of "THE ENCYCLOPEDIA". Words cannot describe how pleased I am to have it. I would love to send it to you to have it autographed but it's going to be a long time before I'll be able to part with it long enough to do that. I would like to urge you in the strongest way possible to consider publishing a compacted "vest pocket" edition of your "encyclopedia" so I could keep it handy for "battle" whenever I encounter the "enemy" unexpectedly. You know, a cute little volume printed on that super thin gilt-edged paper, perhaps with a simulated leather cover. I'm serious - I would be willing to pay good money for such a treasure.

I have a teenage son who is very confused by all the christian propaganda he's being bombarded with by his friends so I am forever grateful for your assistance in helping to present the "real" story to him.... Keep up the great work! P.S. I'm already looking forward to receiving your NEXT BOOK!

Editor's Response to Letter #616

Dear JR. Depending on how The Encyclopedia turns out I already have plans for two additional books I would like to publish. One would be a debater's handbook specifically designed for verbal encounters in which all of the notes from my five large notebooks would be condensed into an easy-to-read, readily accessible, tabulated, alphabetized format for quick reference during encounters with biblicists. Instead of being in narrative form, it would resemble a dictionary or almanac with a wealth of biblical citations followed by observations on their obvious implications. More than likely this volume would be even larger than The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy.

The second book would be far smaller and contain the information found in our Dialogue and Debate and Letters to the Editor sections. Some of the Review sections could be included as well. A lot of good information is contained within these arenas that was never included within The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy.

Letter #617 from SS of Angels Camp, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey. A short note to thank you for writing The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy. It should be required study in every school in the country.... Thank you again for what has to have been a Herculean labor of love.

Letter #618 from GL of Waldorf, Maryland

Mr. McKinsey. I recently finished your extensive book on Bible errancy. You really dissect the book. I was curious if you are a wealthy person, as it would seem to me that you would need a staff and a lot of concentrated time to do all that work and analyses. In any event, I enjoyed the book a great deal.

Islam appears to be a rather hard-headed, ruthless, debilitating religion to me and the Koran is a lot of repetitive nonsense. You mention in your book that you have some further analyses concerning the Koran. How could I get them?.... I am 72.... I feel that all religion is bunk, as Edison said.... The tenets, ideas, philosophies, etc. of all religions fly in the face of basic reason, logic and good sense.... I have also read about Mormonism and the Book of Mormon. It is almost impossible to believe that there is a significant number of people who cling to that hogwash. Amazing!!

Editor's Response to Letter #618

I appreciate your compliment and can assure you that I am not a wealthy person, although, like everyone else, I would like to be. I have no staff other than my wife who acts as my bookkeeper and the amount of time I devote to this cause is sizable.

Islam is an exceptionally dangerous religion because the Koran actually advocates the eradication of its opponents. With all their faults, New Testament writers never went quite that far. The Ayatollah Khomeini is far more representative of true Koranic teachings than the Islamic mouthpieces who periodically appear on the media and tailor their propaganda to an American audience. Look at any country dominated by the mullahs and/or their sidekicks and you'll see what Islam really entails. You can find more information about Islam in the commentaries of Issues 105, 106, and 107.

(GL is a periodic writer of letters to his hometown newspaper. We would like to thank him for sending the following letter to the Chairwoman of his local Board of Education, which was also sent to, and published by, his local Maryland paper on November 23, 1994. It would be nice if more people followed his example--Ed.).

Dear Mrs. Patterson: Not surprisingly, I have noted that the Bible, as well as other religiously oriented material, is part of the collections in public schools throughout Charles County. We have no objection to the Bible being included but feel that all views concerning mythology, religion, and rationalism should be available for scholarly research. And since the Charles County Public Schools are subsidized by taxpayer funds, it is important to be cognizant of the establishment clause of the First Amendment.

With these thoughts in mind, I would like to request that the following reference sources be added to the libraries of the schools of Charles County: (1) The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy by C. Dennis McKinsey. Prometheus Press, 59 John Glenn Drive, Amherst, New York 14228-2197. (2) The Bible Handbook. 11th Edition by Foote & Ball. Published by The Pioneer Press, 1961.

It might be possible that the above books could be supplied with moderate or little cost. Your response to this request would be appreciated.

Letter #619 from HM of Bellbrook, Ohio

Greetings Dennis. It isn't often that I'm overwhelmed by the urge to write a letter of praise to the author of a book I enjoyed reading, but in your case the urge had to be satisfied. If I could save only one book from my considerably large collection of literature critical of religion (that is, if my house was on fire), it would doubtless be The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy. It, more than any other, strikes at the very heart of Christianity, reducing the revered scriptures to superstitious rubble. It seems unlikely that any reader could still accept the Bible as God's Word after a journey through the absorbing pages of your Encyclopedia.

This certainly has to be your crowning achievement to date, though your newsletter cannot get lost in the shuffle. Have you ever thought of donating a copy to the U.S. Supreme Court (where "the buck stops here") or to your local library, etc.? I've been tempted to purchase several copies myself and mail them to a chosen few.... Good luck on the sales of your splendid book, Dennis. It's my favorite!

Letter #620 from MC of Santa Clara, California

Finally received your book last week. Definitive! Excellent! I look forward to your monthly issues with pleasure. I am running out of space on my "Religion" shelf!

EDITOR'S NOTE: If you find any errors in The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy please let me know as soon as possible. The editor and I would like to have them corrected if a second edition is issued. With as many names, dates, places, facts, and citations as are in this book, no errors of any kind would be too much to expect.

Issue #150 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

June 1995

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

This month's commentary will mark a resumption of our critique of Haley's apologetic defense of the Bible which was last addressed in the February issue.

REVIEWS

HALEY'S ALLEGED DISCREPANCIES OF THE BIBLE (Part IV)--On page 178 Haley confronts the conflict between 2 Tim. 3:12 ("All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution") and Prov. 16:7 ("When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."). How can people who live godly in Christ suffer persecution when the latter verse says the enemies of a man who pleases the Lord will live peacefully with him? As is true in so many instances, Haley cites other authorities to make his case. He quotes Andrew Fuller who says, "The truth seems to be that neither of the above passages is to be taken universally. The peace possessed by those who please God does not extend so far as to exempt them from having enemies; and, though all godly men must in some form or other be persecuted, yet none are persecuted at all times." Now let's don't be duplicitous. If these two passages are not to be taken universally, then what passage is? And if no passages are to be taken universally, then a monkey wrench is thrown into the gears not only of the Ten Commandments but a substantial portion of the entire NT. This defense generates an interesting variation on a point we have made repeatedly: How do you know what is true when you begin to admit certain parts are false. In this instance, how do you know what is to be taken universally when you begin to claim universals are to be taken restrictedly. Both verses are stated as universals and nothing justifies limiting their coverage, other than an apologetic need to escape a cul de sac. Haley says God does not exempt those who please him from having enemies when Prov. 16:7 says he does. He continues by saying "all godly men must in some form or other be persecuted, yet none are persecuted at all times." Yet Prov. 16:7 says they can't be persecuted at any time, let alone at all times. It's frequency is irrelevant. It can never occur, period.

Continuing to quote Fuller, Haley says, "God has always given his people some seasons of rest. The former of these passages may therefore refer to the native enmity which true godliness is certain to excite; and the latter to the divine control over it. Man's wrath shall be let loose to a degree; but farther than what is necessary for the praise of God it shall not go." Fuller's dissimulation becomes even more pronounced when he says "The former of these passages may therefore refer to the native enmity which true godliness is certain to excite." What does this have to do with anything? Whether native or foreign born, enmity is enmity. And the word "persecution" in 2 Tim. 3:12 goes beyond mere dislike and wrath. More often than not physical acts are involved. So we are not talking about some form of "mild enmity."

Haley concludes by saying the latter verse refers "to the divine control over it." But divine control is not divine abolition. Prov. 16:7 says his enemies will always be at peace with him, not that this will usually be the case.

Another conflict addressed by Haley (page 200) concerns Isa. 26:19 ("The dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise") and 1 Cor. 15:21, 52 ("The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible") on the one hand and Job 7:9 ("He that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more") and Isa. 26:14 ("They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise") on the other. In reaching for an explanation Haley offers the following. "The quotation from Job expresses the opinion, or perhaps the temporary doubts, of a good, but uninspired man." The speaker in Job is uninspired? One might just as well say the entire book of Job is uninspired and doesn't belong in Scripture, since the same person is speaking throughout nearly all of Job. Using the word "perhaps" is an admission by Haley that he's merely suggesting or guessing. Haley then states, "They cannot counterbalance the express statements of inspiration" that the dead will rise. I beg to differ! Oh yes they can! Most of scripture counterbalances something said elsewhere. Why assume this is an exception?

On the next page Haley seeks to resolve the conflict between Acts 26:23 ("The Christ should suffer, and...be the first that should rise from the dead") which said that Christ was the first to rise from the dead and other verses (1 Kings 17:22, 2 Kings 13:21, and Luke 7:15) which say people rose from the dead prior to Jesus. Haley states, "Romans 6:9 ("Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him") furnishes a solution to this difficulty. Jesus was the first who rose from the dead 'to die no more.' All others who were raised, passed a second time through the gates of death. But over him, death 'hath no more dominion.' Hence, he is the 'first-begotten of the dead,' the first who was raised to immortal life." Haley's explanation is a classic example of switching emphasis. We aren't talking about what occurred after the various resurrections occurred. That's irrelevant. The fact that Jesus did not die again is not germane to the issue. We are discussing who rose from the dead first, not what happened to them afterwards. The contradiction stands.

On page 215 Haley tackles the clash between Psalm 78:69 ("The earth which he hath established forever"), Psalm 104:5 ("Who laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be removed for ever") and Eccle. 1:4 ("The earth abideth for ever") versus Luke 21:33 ("Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away") and 2 Peter 3:10 ("The earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up"). He states, "As to the first texts, the Hebrew word 'olam' rendered 'forever,' does not imply the metaphysical idea of absolute endlessness, but a period of indefinite length, as Rambach says, 'a very long time, the end of which is hidden from us.' These texts do not necessarily teach the absolute perpetuity of the earth." Stripped to its bare essentials, all Haley is saying is that "forever" doesn't mean forever. It has an end which happens to be hidden. But if it has an "end," then it can't be forever. He's hoping his readers will swallow this doubletalk. All three verses in the first group say "forever." What would the authors have had to say in order to convince Haley that when they said "forever" they meant "forever," not merely an indefinite period with a hidden end. It is often hard to imagine how the Bible's authors could have written something to make the Book's defenders admit it means exactly what the words state. One can't help but feel the Book's defenders are telling its authors: You don't really mean that; to which the authors would no doubt reply: Oh yes we do. In this instance, there is no word or series of words the authors could have used that apologists would not have perverted in such a manner as to make them mean something less than "eternal" or "forever."

Haley's "reconciliation" of John 3:13 ("No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven") with 2 Kings 2:11 ("Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven") is exceptionally weak. He states, "In the first text Jesus, setting forth his own superior authority, says substantially, 'No human being can speak from personal knowledge, as I do, who came down from heaven.' 'No man hath ascended up to heaven to bring back tidings.' But the text says nothing of the kind. Where does Jesus say anything about speaking from personal knowledge or bringing back tidings? Haley continues by saying, "So we, speaking of the secrets of the future world, should very naturally say: 'No man has been there to tell us about them.' In saying this, we do not deny that any one has actually entered the eternal world, but merely that any one has gone thither, and returned to unfold its mysteries." When I read rationalizations of this stripe, as occurs so often, I can't help but think of the political comment that was thrown around so loosely not long ago: What is mine is mine; what is yours is negotiable. The very fact that Haley's vacuous explanation is even given a hearing and seriously contemplated can only work to his advantage. Nothing whatever is said, either expressed or implied, about anyone bringing any information back from anywhere. Where does the verse say or imply anything with reference to someone returning from the eternal world "to unfold its mysteries"? The mere discussion of something so inane provides it a degree of legitimacy, a degree of credibility, which is all Haley desires. In confronting a problem without a sensible solution Haley concocted a brew that he hopes will somehow stick. If any part thereof is seriously considered, then he's halfway home. The whole idea behind a good apologetic defense is to generate any kind of explanation that can somehow be deemed plausible. As long as it is sufficient to create indecision and doubt, that's all that's needed. It doesn't have to be airtight. Apologists are not interested in the attainment of truth. They are only interested in making sure you don't obtain it or remain uncertain once you have. Anything that sows doubt, discord, or uncertainty in your logical processes works to their advantage. That's their stock-in-trade. As long as they can convince you that something is meant other than what you are reading with your own eyes, their assignment is well on the way to completion.

On page 217 Haley's reconciliation of 1 Cor. 15:50 ("Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption") with Heb. 11:5 ("Enoch was translated that he should not see death") is short but not sweet. He states, "A late sceptical writer adduces this as a...discrepancy. It need only be said that, beyond question, Enoch and Elijah, before entering the heavenly world, passed through a change 'equivalent' to death. The corruptible put on incorruption, and their mortal put on immortality." Talk about reading into the text! Where does the Bible either state or imply that they went "through a change equivalent to death" that changed their corruption into incorruption? Second Kings 2:11, which Haley prefers not to cite, vis a vis Enoch's account, says Elijah went straight to heaven. Nothing is said about prior purification. Haley hopes that by using the phrase "beyond question," the sheer force of his words will carry the day. But it's by no means beyond question. Quite the contrary, it's very much in question.

On the same page Haley continues to engage in eisegesis (reading into the text) via an unsubstantiated harmonization of Matt. 21:31 ("The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you") with 1 Cor. 6:9-10 ("Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God"). He states, "The first text does not say that publicans and harlots as such, but merely that some who had been such, and had afterwards repented, should enter heaven. Paul, in the verse succeeding the quotation in Corinthians, observes: 'And such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified.' They had been corrupt and wicked, but were so no longer. Observe also, that our Saviour's assertion amounts simply to this, "The publicans and harlots are more likely to be saved, stand a better chance for salvation, than do you, chief priests and elders.' Neither this passage, nor any other, sanctions the idea of impurity tolerated in heaven."

Haley's rationalization is plagued with dissemblance. First, the first text says nothing about people who "had been such." There is no past tense involved. Haley is making a faltering attempt to make their status diametrically opposed to what Matt. 21:31 is saying and commensurate with his conception of what heaven allows. It is talking about people who are currently publicans and harlots, not those who formerly retained that status. Where does the first text say anything about them "repenting" and thereby changing their status? Second, Paul's comment in 1 Cor. 6:11 ("And such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified") only substantiates verses 9 and 10. All it is saying is that while they were publicans and harlots they could not have entered the kingdom of heaven, but now that they are washed and sanctified they can. But all of this contradicts Matt. 21:31 which refers to publicans and harlots who entered heaven, even though nothing is said about them having been purified. And lastly, Matt. 21:31 ("The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you") is another one of those absolutist statements upon which the Bible periodically chokes. If Matt. 21:31 had said something akin to, "The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you after they have been purified, sanctified, or cleansed there would have been no problem." But that's not what the text states. Instead, they are going in as harlots and publicans per se. Haley is trying to use 1 Cor. 6:11, in combination with the two prior verses (9 and 10), to modify Matt. 21:31. In essence, we are confronting another instance in which an apologist is trying to use verses in other parts of Scripture to ameliorate the effects of absolutist cul de sacs.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #605 from Rev. BB Resumes (Part aa)

(The fourteenth question on our pamphlet is: Matt. 27:9-10 quotes a prophecy made by Jeremy the prophet. Yet no Bible believer has ever been able to show me where it lies in the book of Jeremiah. Rev. BB responds by saying--Ed.),

Perhaps you weren't listening - at least that wouldn't surprise me. Read Jer. 32:6-9, where Jeremiah buys a field, paying for it with silver. Then read Zech. 11:12-13, where the potter and the thirty pieces of silver are mentioned.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part aa)

Instead of shooting from the hip through his foot, Rev. BB should have read my commentary on page 2 in the 108th Issue regarding the dissimilarities between the accounts in Jeremiah and Zechariah. They are not discussing the same events. But even more importantly, who cares what Zechariah says. We are talking about a prophecy that is allegedly in the Book of Jeremiah. And since it's nowhere to be found in Jeremiah and Rev. BB made no attempt to reveal where it can be found in Jeremiah, I rest my case.

Letter #605 from Rev. BB Continues (Part bb)

(The seventeenth question on our pamphlet is: We are told salvation is obtained by faith alone (John 3:18, 36); yet, Jesus told a man to follow the Commandments--Matt. 19:16-18 (saving by works)--if he wanted eternal life. Rev. BB responds by saying--Ed.),

Half truth! McKinsey lacks any sense of finesse, any flexibility to search for a larger truth beyond the merely obvious. For example, far from making an all-encompassing statement about salvation, further from contradicting Himself, in Matt. 19, Jesus is setting up a surprise for the rich young man. His purpose is to shock him into a realization that salvation is more than a matter of externals, but involves an inward faith commitment as well. His method is to shock the young man with the rigid requirements and further, the radical commitment that true faith demands. Thus, the teaching method produces a statement that may seem contradictory, but is only superficial. A better understanding of this event and Jesus' purpose in the light of the entire Bible's teaching quickly eliminates any alleged differences.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part bb)

What Rev. BB really means by saying I lack "any sense of finesse, any flexibility to search for a larger truth beyond the merely obvious" is that I don't read into the text whatever tickles my funnybone or what I'd like to hear. I'm too involved in exegesis rather than eisegesis. This "larger truth beyond the merely obvious," which Rev. BB chooses to insert into the script is nothing more than a cloak for his own opinions and conjectures. He says Jesus is trying to shock the rich young man "into a realization that salvation is more than a matter of externals, but involves an inward faith commitment as well," when that is exactly what the text is not saying. The only subject discussed is externals. Nothing is said about believing in anything. In true apologetic style Rev. BB is interpolating at will. Words such as "faith" and "commitment" are nowhere to be found. Rev. BB says, "Jesus' method is to shock the young man with the rigid requirements and further the radical commitment that true faith demands. Thus, the teaching method produces a statement that may seem contradictory, but that is only superficial." What a lot of twaddle! Where on earth is he getting all this? It doesn't seem contradictory; it is contradictory. There is no "may seem" to it. The problem does not lie with my being superficial but with Rev. BB adding a layer that doesn't exist. And then he states, "A better understanding of this event and Jesus' purpose in light of the entire Bible's teaching quickly eliminates any alleged differences." In other words, ignore what Jesus is saying, wander off into other parts of Scripture that say what you want to hear, and then transpose whatever strikes your fancy. Incidentally, to what other biblical teachings is he referring? Citation of chapter and verse are noticeably absent. I wonder why? Instead of providing specifics, he simply refers to "the entire Bible's teaching."

Letter #605 from Rev. BB Continues (Part cc)

(The eighteenth question on our pamphlet is: According to the text there are 29 cities listed in Joshua 15:21-32 (RSV). One need only count them to see that the total is 36, proving biblical math is not to be trusted. Rev. BB responds by saying--Ed.), Criticisms like this are petty and picayune. They reveal more about the mind and soul of the writer than they do about the Bible. McKinsey has clearly not read the text very carefully. The NIV says "29 towns and their villages." As the number of villages is not given, we can easily assume that 7 of these names designate "their villages" and not the "towns".

Finally, what does it matter? The bible (sic--Ed.) is a spiritually alive work of divinely-inspired art, not a set of IRS tax tables and instructions. An overweening attention to details is unnecessary, and, as we have been forced to repeatedly observe, is culturally inappropriate.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part cc)

How wrong can one be! First, there is nothing petty or picayune about providing facts to prove the Bible is flawed. Rev. BB only wishes the opposite were true. Inerrancy goes to the very crux of whether or not the Bible is the word of a perfect being. If the Bible has mistakes, then it couldn't emanate from a perfect being and 2 Tim. 3:16 ("All Scripture is given by inspiration of God") is a lie. Apologists don't seem to realize that lawyers build their cases on details. That's the meat and potatoes of their profession. The grandiose rhetoric and glittering generalities in which apologists specialize are wholly inadequate. They'll never get the job done, even though biblicists employ them on a regular basis.

Second, Rev. BB asks, "What does it matter? The bible (sic) is a spiritually alive work of divinely- inspired art, not a set of IRS tax tables and instructions." As we have noted on numerous occasions, precision and details matter tremendously. Imagine one lawyer telling another: You're just too concerned with details. The Bible is nothing without accuracy. Without perfection, its spirituality differs from other works only in terms of quantity not quality. How could a book possibly be spiritually alive and divinely-inspired that contains so much dead wood? And its only resemblance to art is that found on ghetto walls and passing buses.

Third, the only one who has submitted drivel for homework and failed to read very carefully is Rev. BB. He employs the NIV to prove his case, when it is no less clear than the KJV, the RSV, and many other versions on the market. They all say the same. Joshua 15:21 in the NIV says, "The southernmost towns of the tribe of Judah in the Negev toward the boundary of Edom were" and then it goes on to list 36 names. Yet the total is supposed to be 29 according to Joshua 15:32 which says "a total of twenty-nine towns and their villages." So the Bible erred by 7. To reconcile this difference Rev. BB says, "The NIV says '29 towns and their villages.' As the number of villages is not given, we can easily assume that 7 of these names designate 'their villages' and not the 'towns'." Rev. BB needs to read more meticulously. He's all but ignored Joshua 15:21 (NIV) which says "towns" situated along and then goes on to list 36 names. In other words, all of the subsequent names were to be those of towns. None of the names following Josh. 15:21 are those of villages. Nowhere does Josh. 15:21 say they are villages, and nowhere in the list does it say they are to be interpreted as such. Haley's reliance upon the word "villages" is nothing more than a gratuitous insertion based upon Josh. 15:32. There cannot be only 29 towns listed with 7 additional villages when the 21st verse said the following names are those of towns. If any version of the Bible is scripted with expediency as the overriding theme, it's the NIV. Yet, even it deserts Rev. BB when the chips are down.

And lastly, since Rev. BB likes to refer me to prior information and material, then I'll ask him to note what we said in prior issues regarding the cultural context and pettiness ploys. (To Be Continued)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #621 from RH of Simi Valley, California

I am burning with curiosity and intrigue to learn more about the 3 resurrections before Christ. Are they well-documented/witnessed as the Christians claim theirs is? I'd like to be able to use this as evidence in my argumentation sessions, so vehement have they become and so easily is the issue defused by showing that Christ was typical, not atypical, in regards to resurrection.

By the way, who decides what is a proof of being God? Even if He did rise from the dead, that wouldn't convince me that He created the whole universe, only that he had some superior knowledge that allowed him to perform resurrections. The degree of creativity and power required for the respective tasks is hugely different. Most Christians don't possess any degree of logic capable of handling degrees of anything. They prefer black and white arguments that make little sense to one who has experienced life even a little bit with an open mind.

Thanks again, and I repeat: you've made my breakfast sessions invigorating, and provided me with excellent defenses against solicitations by zealots. My own logic was fledglingly good, but yours and your data are superb.

Editor's Response to Letter #621

You might want to note the 10th point on our pamphlet entitled THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? or read 1 Kings 17:17-22, 1 Sam. 28:7-15, 2 Kings 4:32-35, 2 Kings 13:21, and Matt. 27:52-53. All of them describe people rising from the dead before the resurrection of Jesus.

Letter #622 from LB of Firenze, Italy

Dear Mr. McKinsey. ...In BE I've read about the existence of many discrepancies concerning numbers in the Bible. On page 380 in Haley's Alleged Discrepancies in the Bible I read an explanation for this problem. He says single letters were used to represent numbers and often those letters were similar, and so many of those discrepancies arose from mistakes of copyists.

But in a little grammar of biblical Hebrew I've found that cardinal numbers were written literally. For example "Twenty-one" for 21. So a word, and not a single letter, was used to indicate a number. In this case misunderstanding is almost impossible isn't it?

Editor's Response to Letter #622

Dear LB. I think you've answered Haley without my assistance.

Letter #623 from RG of Brooklyn, Ohio

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I greatly enjoy Biblical Errancy and look forward to each issue.... As an ex-Jehovah's Witness who wasted the first thirty-five years of his life on religious nonsense, I can see the need for a movement countering religion. Most people are not able to see the contradictions and lack of logic in religious teachings on their own. For some reason I finally did, but in trying to talk to others still in various religions I can tell you that most of them are afraid to examine anything that challenges their beliefs. We need to keep exposing the contradictions in the Bible. I would be most happy to contribute to this effort by duplicating the tapes or helping in any other way that I can.

Editor's Response to Letter #623

Dear RG. We appreciate your willingness to assist and will notify everyone in a future issue how they can aid our cause. Stay tuned.

Letter #624 from SA of Brooklyn, New York

(SA wrote a letter in the Dec. 1994 issue regarding his 5 B's of bestiality, barbarism, bigotry, bloodshed, and brutality. He was criticized by RH of Simi Valley, California in Letter #609 (Issue 148/April 1995) for making mistakes and I concurred with some of RH's observations. SA sent us a corrected copy and prefaced it with the following comments--Ed.)

I can't seem to locate the Dec. 1994 issue of Biblical Errancy in which my letter appeared. I would appreciate your sending me another copy of that issue.... The writer of letter #609 is correct in stating that I made several mistakes and I should have checked it out more carefully. Your comments were also correct and I must apologize for being "overzealous." Your suggested verses are definitely more appropriate. I am enclosing several items with a Table of Contents and Comments. I hope that you will find them useful. Keep up the excellent work.

Editor's Response to Letter #624

Dear SA. I'm glad to have an ally as openminded as you. If only our opponents were as willing to admit their errors and make corrections! Instead, they prefer to defend hopeless positions at all costs.

ERRATUM: In the 148th issue on page 3 in the right column the 14th line from the bottom should read: "Moreover, would Rev. BB be so kind as to give...." We left out the word "be."

Issue #151 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

July 1995

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

This issue will continue our analysis of Haley's classic work and our exhaustive critique of Rev. BB's denunciation of our pamphlet, "The Bible is God's Word?"

REVIEWS

Haley's ALLEGED DISCREPANCIES OF THE BIBLE (Part V)--On page 230 Haley addresses the conflict between Rom. 7:18 ("For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing") and Gal. 2:20 ("I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me"). His explanation is relatively brief but highly suppositional. He states, "In these passages Paul speaks in two distinct relations. (a) 'In me, that is, in my flesh,'--in my lower, carnal self. (b) 'Christ liveth in me,'--in my higher, spiritual self, in my renewed heart in which Christ is enthroned. This is Alford's view. Hodge takes substantially the same view. Some interpret the first text as describing Paul previous to his conversion; the latter, as applying to him after the event."

Haley says "some interpret" and that's just the problem. Too much interpreting is involved at the expense of reading the words themselves. To begin with, how could the first text be interpreted as "describing Paul previous to his conversion", when it's found in the Book of Romans which Paul allegedly wrote after his conversion?

But even more importantly, this entire defense is based on guesswork. Where does the text state, either expressly or implicitly, that two opposite natures of Paul are involved. There is no evidence one text is referring to a higher spiritual self while the other is referring to a lower carnal self. Gratuitous assumptions are certainly not the hallmark of objective scholarship based on evidence and textual corroboration. This defense is founded far more on what Haley would like to think is the case than what he can prove to be true. A far more sensible explanation is that Paul just didn't remember or take into account his earlier comment that no good thing dwelt in him when he said that Christ dwelt within him. Or perhaps the order of the comments was reversed because Galatians was written prior to Romans. Either way he was more concerned with theological hyperbole than consistency. Of course, if Christ is no good then the contradiction vanishes.

On page 231 Haley submits another short reconciliation of a direct biblical clash. In this instance, Matt. 6:5-6 ("When thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say to you, they have their reward. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret"), 2 Kings, 4:33, Luke 6:12 and Acts 10:9 are opposed to 1 Tim. 2:8 ("I will therefore that men pray every where"), 1 Kings 8:22-23, and Dan. 6:10-11. Haley states, "It is not publicity, but ostentation in prayer, which is prohibited; not praying in public, but praying in conspicuous places 'to be seen of men.' The motive, not the place, is the thing in question. Chrysostom and Augustine both caution us against a merely literal interpretation of Matt. 6:6."

The phrase "to be seen of men" lies at the core of Haley's rationalization. He tries to shift the focus by implying that as long as they pray modestly and with no intent to be seen by others they are behaving well. Motive is supposedly more important than location. If that were true, then there would be no need for Matthew to have said that when you pray you should enter your closet, shut thy door, and pray to your Father in secret. Why even refer to the location of prayer if the motive behind the prayer is more important? Why? Because location is of greater importance than motive.

Moreover, 1 Tim. 2:8 says God wants men to pray everywhere. Why would God give people specific instructions to pray in their closets, if he wanted them to pray everywhere? For understandable reasons, Haley is more interested in discussing one aspect of Matthew than the clash between Matthew and 1 Timothy. Haley falsely says, "It is not publicity, but ostentation in prayer, which is prohibited." The text says that when you pray enter into your closet and shut the door. It does not say public prayer is permissible as long as it is not ostentatious. It says don't pray in public period.

Haley's reconciliation of Ex. 31:15 ("Whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath-day he shall surely be put to death") with Matt. 12:1-5 ("At that time Jesus went on the sabbath-day through the corn, and his disciples were a hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat....") is also relatively brief. He says, "Deeds of necessity and mercy were not forbidden by Moses. Eating, drinking, caring for the sick, and like needful acts were not interdicted. Our Savior did not 'break' the Sabbath. He did, indeed, disregard the foolish traditions of the scribes and pharisees relative to that day, but neither by precept nor example did he sanction its real desecration."

Again, Haley let his imagination assume control and interject whatever it deemed appropriate for the occasion. First, Jesus didn't merely "disregard the foolish traditions of the scribes and pharisees relative to that day;" he directly violated a cardinal tenet of the old law itself. And second, where does Exodus say or imply that caring for the sick and other needful acts are exempted? Haley reads more between the lines than on them. Nowhere does the Bible say there are exemptions or exceptions are permitted. When Haley says "Our Savior did not 'break' the Sabbath" he couldn't be more incorrect. He most assuredly did. And as we have noted in prior issues of this publication, he violated many other OT laws as well. (To Be Continued)

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #605 from Rev. BB Continues from Last Month (Part dd)

(The 19th question on our pamphlet is: Surely you don't believe Eccle. 1:9 (RSV) which says, "What has been is what will be, and what has been done is what will be done; there is nothing new under the sun." How many cities had an atomic bomb dropped on them prior to 1945 and how many people walked on the moon before 1969? Rev. BB responded by saying--Ed.),

I believe there is nothing new about war or human inventiveness. Both pre-dated Ecclesiastes' "Preacher." The atomic bomb is simply another variation on the war theme. It killed, maimed, injured, and brought grief. Certainly there's nothing new about that. Similarly, the moon landing missions stand in a long line of human technological achievements that began with the wheel and continue in gene splicing. In this sense, there's certainly nothing new about man walking on the moon.

In this case, McKinsey isn't even presenting a case of the Bible contradicting itself, only a contradiction with his opinion, born in his narrow interpretation of the text and of recent events. Such pickiness is either construed or irrational or both.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part dd)

As usual Rev. BB's thought processes are performing inadequately on extraneous considerations. First, we aren't talking about war in general but an event in particular. Again, he's trying to hide among broad generalizations. Just as we aren't talking about war in general, we aren't talking about technological achievements in general. We are talking about a specific occurrence. Of course, wars have always been fought. Who would deny that? But when was an atomic bomb employed? We are not talking about war broadly speaking but about a specific event which may or may not be included within war. In this instance, it is. The dropping of the atomic bomb is a variation on how to fight a war, a unique variation, having never been used until 1945. Its use in 1945 was not a variation on a war theme but a new way in which to fight a war. Certainly the atomic bomb killed, maimed, injured, and brought grief. But its uniqueness does not lie in what it did but in how it did it.

Second, of course technological developments have always been emerging, but when did one entail walking on the moon. If there is nothing new about men walking on the moon, then Rev. BB should be more than willing to cite an instance that occurred prior to 1969.

Third, Rev. BB says, "McKinsey isn't even presenting a case of the Bible contradicting itself." If Rev. BB had read with a more discerning eye, he would have noticed that I not only never said I was presenting an internal contradiction, but I noted that this involved a contradiction between the Bible and real events, not a conflict within Scripture. As I have said so often, and apparently it bears repeating, this publication does not deal with biblical contradictions alone. Much of its contents involves biblical conflicts with external science or events and this is a prime example.

Fourth, Rev. BB says I am only presenting a contradiction with my own opinion. How ridiculous! People walking on the moon and dropping the atomic bomb are facts, hard facts, not opinions. Opinion has nothing to do with this problem.

Fifth, the only construed and irrational aspect relative to this dilemma is Rev. BB's evasive, disingenuous, deceptive excuse for an answer.

And lastly, nearly every time apologists like Rev. BB are confronted with specifics that play havoc with biblical pontification, they escape into glittering generalities and secondary befuddlement. When the Bible says there is nothing new under the sun, it's lying pure and simple. And only someone possessed by a narrow-minded ideology bordering on fanaticism would deny the obvious by alleging otherwise. The problem lies not with a narrow interpretation of the text on my part but with Rev. BB trying to escape into glittering generalities and avoid specifics at all costs. I'm not interpreting anything. I'm merely reading what is said, while operating on the principle that Scripture says what it means. If only Rev. BB did likewise!

Letter #605 Continues (Part ee)

(The 21st question on our pamphlet is: If God created everything (Col. 1:16, Eph. 3:9, Rev. 4:11, and John 1:3) then he created the world's evil (Isa. 45:7, Lam. 3:38). Thus he's responsible. Rev. BB responded by saying--Ed.),

Neither of the OT texts listed describe God as creating evil. They do attest to the fact that God allows trials to come to the faithful for their training in godliness--there is nothing evil about that. To insist that, as the texts clearly say, God created all things that He must therefore have created evil too is to make an invalid "inductive leap."

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part ee)

First, since Rev. BB apparently has serious difficulty reading and comprehending that which lies before him, I'll render some assistance. What do the two OT texts say verbatim? In Isa. 45:7 God says, "I form the light and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things." If Rev. BB will notice, nothing is said about allowing anything. The word "allow" or its equivalent is nowhere to be found in the text. God says he "creates," which means he's the source. Lam. 3:38 says that good and evil proceed out of the mouth of the Most High. Again God is shown to be the source of evil; he doesn't just allow it. He generates it.

Second, Rev. BB says, "to insist that, as the texts clearly say, God created all things that He must therefore have created evil too is to make an invalid inductive leap." He accuses me of making "an invalid inductive leap" when his own stream of logic has no flow but is stagnant and fatally polluted. He admits that the NT texts "clearly say, God created all things" and then immediately reverses himself by saying that does not include evil. If God created EVERYTHING and evil is a part of everything, then the simple syllogistic reasoning of Logic 101 will tell you that God must have created evil. And to think he's denigrating my logic! His logic is neither inductive nor deductive, it's merely elusive and deceptive.

Letter #605 Continues (Part ff)

Evil's existence is not sufficient proof that God created it. The "all" in the verses needs to be qualified in light of the broader Bible teaching that Satan is the source of all evil (John 8:44) and that sin entered creation by means of Adam's disobedience (Rom. 5:19).

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part ff)

Rev. BB is creating and fighting a strawman. As usual he's attempting to shift the focus. I never said evil's existence is sufficient proof that God created it. I said that according to the Bible God created everything and simple logic tells us that if evil exists then God must have created it as well. Since Rev. BB believes evil exists and freely admits "the NT texts clearly say, God created all things" the point is made.

Rev. BB incorrectly concludes that "the 'all' in those verses needs to be qualified in light of the broader Bible teaching that Satan is the source of all evil (John 8:44) and that sin entered creation by means of Adam's disobedience." John 8:44 says, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own for he is a liar, and the father of it." And Rom. 5:19 says, "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." In the first place, John 8:44 does not say Satan is the source or cause of all evil. It says he was a murderer and the father of lies, but many evils involve activities other than murdering or lying. Even more importantly Rev. BB's qualification is nothing more than an attempt to ignore one side of a biblical contradiction while stressing the other. Who is the source of evil, God or Satan? Several verses, which Rev. BB chooses to avoid, say God, while one verse, John 8:44, which Rev. BB incorrectly interprets and prefers to use, allegedly says Satan. Rev. BB thinks he can run off to another part of Scripture to prove there are other sources of evil than God. But instead of resolving the problem he has only managed to highlight a contradiction.

And on top of everything else, if Adam is the source of evil as Rev. BB proves by citing Rom. 5:19, then God didn't create everything; several verses (Col. 1:16, Eph. 3:9, Rev. 4:11, John 1:3) are a lie, and we are back to square one. Something has to give!

Letter #605 Continues (Part gg)

Thus statement #21 is false. But even if we conceded it, the statement has no direct relationship to biblical authority. This is just another case of McKinsey grinding his own axe of illogical illegitimate theology.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part gg)

The only false aspects regarding this problem are a series of apologetically contrived excuses manufactured to derail the unwary. For Rev. BB to say "the statement has no direct relationship to biblical authority" is to add nonsense to duplicity. Whether or not God created evil bears directly on his character which, in turn, impacts on the validity and reliability of everything contained in what is supposedly his book. Stated differently, how could a book be perfect, if it arose from an imperfect, evil-creating author? The evidence clearly demonstrates who is grinding an axe, protecting his ideological turf, and propounding an illogical illegitimate theology. In point of fact, Biblical Errancy has never propounded any kind of theology, since the very phrase "logical theology" is an oxymoron. Our philosophy is based on logic and proof; whereas, theology is based on hope and theory.

Letter #605 Continues (Part hh)

(The 22nd question on our pamphlet is: In Psalm 139:7-11 we are told God is everywhere. If so, why would God need to come down to earth to see a city (Gen. 11:5) when he is already here? And how could Satan leave the presence of the Lord (Job 1:12, 2:7)? Rev. BB responded by saying--Ed.),

It's hard to believe anyone could overlook figurative language when it's under his nose. The author of this tract is either devoid of imagination, reason, and faith, or he willingly sacrifices in his vain attempt to discredit the Bible. Or, he may appear to give up on these to construct an army of "strawmen" that masquerades as reasoning. Clearly, he is going for a quantity of "arguments", unconcerned with their quality.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part hh)

Rev. BB is only widening the distance between himself and reality. First, he doesn't hesitate to employ the old "figurative" defense when the obvious meaning of any biblical statement makes his dearly-beloved book look like something that emerged from the myopic mind of a child in fantasyland. In truth, it is hard to believe that anyone would try to make something figurative that is so obviously literal. Is Rev. BB also saying that Jacob didn't wrestle with God in Gen. 32:24-30 even though the text says, "...for you have striven with God and with men" and "For I have seen God face to face and my life is preserved."? After all it is difficult to see how God could be seen face to face in a wrestling match without moving. Is he also saying Abraham was not visited by the Lord, even though the 18th chapter of Genesis says he was? One need only read Genesis to see that there is nothing symbolic or figurative about the entire visitation and movement by God in the flesh is present throughout.

Second, even if Gen. 11:5 and Job 2:7 were intended to be taken figuratively, that would in no way solve the problem. How could God move from point A to point B, even in a figurative sense, if God is everywhere? Whether interpreted figuratively or literally, God either is or is not everywhere. How could he not be everywhere literally; how could he not be everywhere figuratively. Therefore, for one to say God moved is to deny the omnipresence of God. Figurative movement is no more possible than literal movement. One is no more plausible than the other. Rev. BB is so narrowly focused that he doesn't realize he's denying God's omnipresence. As far as my nose is concerned, the only thing under it is the stench coming from an apologetic concoction composed of the foulest of ideological ingredients.

Third, Rev. BB accuses me of being devoid of imagination, reason, and faith. And since he's no doubt referring to these concepts as he understands them, I'll concur. Coming from somebody whose imagination runs wild, whose faith ignores reality, and whose "reason" is nothing more than a perversion of the word itself, I consider this a compliment. The only real imagination involved is that associated with the lengths to which Rev. BB will go to create a defense. I'm glad to see he admits I don't have "faith," which he so obviously possesses in abundance, and which the Bible describes as evidence of things not seen. Faith is applicable to virtually his entire defense in light of the fact that the latter rests wholly on evidence, proof, and data not seen.

Fourth, he vilifies my approach as a "vain attempt to discredit the Bible" when it could only be portrayed as such by someone fully unacquainted with over 150 issues of this publication. No one with even a modicum of objectivity could possibly believe such buncombe. I'd strongly suggest that Rev. BB read all 150 issues and then try to make that statement with a straight face. If he succeeds, then he's no longer with us and has entered the detached world of make-believe.

Fifth, the only "strawmen" involved are the anemic defenses erected by Rev. BB to divert attention from the real issues. In a doomed attempt to appear erudite, he doesn't even use the word strawmen correctly. I am not attributing arguments to him that he did not in fact make. Quite the contrary, I'm addressing direct and unequivocal biblical assertions, while he's resorting to a modified version of the old hackneyed defense: That's what it says but that's not what it means.

And lastly, he says I am "going for a quantity of 'arguments' unconcerned with their quality." If I were going for quantity over quality, does he seriously think I'd rely on a mere 24 questions in a small pamphlet. Can't he get anything right? If he spent as much time on verification and validation as he does on vituperation and vilification, he'd be far better off.

Letter #605 Continues (Part ii)

As I began to say, even though the Bible affirms that God is omnipotent, it sometimes aids our understanding to think of God in figurative language. In this case, that means imposing imaginative spatial limitations on God, when, to be completely literal no such limitations exist. Since Heaven is thereby described as being overhead, God, as Heaven's Chief Resident, occasionally comes "down" to earth to deal directly with His people. Another purpose of this imagery is to highlight the importance of the events so described. After all, anything that merits a special visit from God in Heaven to earth is important indeed.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part ii)

First, figurative language that denies the very nature, the very definition, of God is hardly of use to anybody interested in being accurate. As we noted earlier, a being that is everywhere can't go anywhere either figuratively or literally.

Second, Rev. BB says "it sometimes aids our understanding to think of God in figurative language." No! Far more often it is used merely to provide apologists with an escape hatch.

Third, Rev. BB says that in this case "that means imposing imaginative spatial limitations on God." I'm glad he said "imaginative" because that's why they aren't worthy of being taken seriously. Even from a theological, much less a rational, perspective, they don't exist. "Imposing" is a revealing term because that's exactly what's being done. Because they don't exist they're being imposed.

Fourth, Rev. BB says "no such limitations exist." Then why are they even being discussed, much less imposed? Why discuss something that is no more valid from a Christian perspective than Greek or Roman mythology?

And finally, Rev. BB says, "Another purpose of this imagery is to highlight the importance of the events so described." It's language like this that shows why biblical defenders are past masters at doubletalk. How can you highlight events that couldn't possibly occur and still be discussing the real world? In essence, Rev. BB concludes by begging the question. He refers to an event that can't occur and then acts as if it's a given. He argues as if his initial premise is an established fact when that's the very point in dispute. (To Be Concluded Next Month)

EDITOR'S COMMENT: We would like to thank Dr. Gordon Stein, Editor of The American Rationalist, for his complimentary analysis on page 13 in the May-June 1995 issue of his periodical regarding our book. His final comment that it "belongs in the library of every rationalist, non-theist, or religious liberal" is most gracious. Coming from someone who reads incessantly and is as qualified as anyone to make an accurate comparison with other works, that's quite a compliment. Oddly enough I agree with his only negative comment that the book could more accurately be titled a handbook than an encyclopedia. The word "handbook" was not chosen, because I hope to create another work that will be a true handbook--a compilation of our five notebooks in alphabetized and indexed form. Dr. Stein and I have exchanged publications for years and since he was kind enough to recommend my book I would like to recommend an exceptionally "on target" article he wrote on page 2 in the same issue of The American Rationalist entitled "Shooting Ourselves in the Foot." Although consisting of only 3 short paragraphs, the article encapsulates precisely the feelings of many atheists, freethinkers, and humanists regarding who should, and should not, be our national spokesperson.

EDITOR'S NOTE: FINALLY!! FINALLY!! We are ready to distribute our public-access cablevision programs. But we DEFINITELY NEED YOUR HELP. There is no way this undertaking can be successful without dedicated and determined supporters. Nancy Stanley of Richmond, Indiana, has enthusiastically volunteered to be our duplicator and distributor, so we are all set at this end. As of now 33 programs have been completed and we have more than enough material for approximately 80. Each program is one half hour long and is recorded only on Broadcast Quality Tapes that are 2 hours long. Low quality tapes such as those found in discount stores simply won't do. Since each program is 30 minutes long and each tape is 120 minutes long, we are putting four programs on each tape. So the programs are distributed as follows: Tape #1 (Programs 1-4); Tape #2 (Programs 5-8); Tape #3 (Programs 9-12); Tape #4 (Programs 13-16); Tape #5 (Programs 17-20); Tape #6 (Programs 21-24); Tape #7 (Programs 25-28), Tape #8 (Programs 29-32) etc. We are now asking people throughout the nation to become involved in our ongoing struggle against religious superstition in general and the Bible in particular. But as with any endeavor of real substance expenses are unavoidable. I simply can't afford to pay for everything. Instead, we are asking you to send $10 for each tape. Considering what religious programs charge for 2 hour video tapes, $10 is definitely reasonable. With that money we hope to be able to buy a blank tape, record 4 programs on the tape, purchase the mailer in which the tape will be mailed, and pay postage. With each $10 you need only tell us which tape you want. Of course, all tapes are yours to keep and circulate. The real challenge will be in getting them played consistently on your local public access stations. Stations have different requirements and some have none. Some want disclaimers at the beginning; some want color bars; some use 3/4" tapes only (ours are 1/2"); some want Super VHS tapes only, some want to see a sample first, and so forth ad infinitum. You will have to contact your local station, find out what is required, and then tailor our tape to their specifications. There is simply no way we can arrange our tapes to meet the specific requirements of every cable station. We are asking you to complete whatever arrangements are involved. Once you have worked out mutually agreeable procedures with your local station we recommend: (a) playing each program at least two times a week; (b) playing each program at least 2 weeks in a row, (c) having each program played as near prime time as possible, not at 2 or 3 in the morning; (d) watching each program enough to see that everything is proceeding smoothly, and (e) asking your friends or relatives to play your tapes on their local public access stations. The greater the circulation the better. Some people have already volunteered to assist our efforts but many more are needed. So, please join this worthy cause. And don't be overly concerned about people finding out what you are doing. Your name should never be broadcast in any way and will not appear in the credits. We have been playing my tapes all over the entire north Dayton-Montgomery County area (a circle with a radius of approximately 50 miles encompassing hundreds of thousands of people) for over 18 months and, although I am undoubtedly the most visible participant, I have never received any negative feedback, except for some textual comments.

Issue #152 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

Aug. 1995

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

This issue will continue our analysis of Haley's classic work and conclude our exhaustive critique of Rev. BB's analysis of our pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD?.

REVIEWS

Haley's ALLEGED DISCREPANCIES OF THE BIBLE (Part VI)--On page 241 Haley relates the conflict between Acts 13:39 ("And by him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses") on the one hand and Matt. 12:32 ("Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come") and Mark 3:29 ("He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation") on the other. He states, "The texts at the left (Acts 13:39, Rom. 5:20, 1 John 2:1) by no means assert that every sin, wherever and by whomsoever committed, will be forgiven. The general rule is that sins repented of will be forgiven. Matthew and Mark are speaking of sins which will never be repented of, consequently never forgiven; hence they are sins 'unto death'."

Haley's entire resolution of this conflict is based on faulty premises. First, he began by saying, "The texts at the left (Acts 13:39, Rom. 5:20, 1 John 2:1) by no means assert that every sin, wherever and by whomsoever committed, will be forgiven." Nobody said they did. They are only referring to sins committed by those who believe. Second, who cares. The issue is not whether or not all sins will be forgiven but whether all sins can be forgiven, and according to Acts 13:39 they can be for believers. But according to Matt. 12:32 there is one sin--blaspheming the Holy Ghost--that can't be forgiven under any circumstances either in this world or in the world to come. Third, Haley says, "The general rule is that sins repented of will be forgiven." In none of these verses can one find the word "repent" or a comparable concept; therefore, it isn't even relevant. And fourth, Haley says, "Matthew and Mark speak of sins which will never be repented of, consequently never forgiven; hence they are sins 'unto death'." Again, since the word as well as the concept of "repent" are nowhere to be found in Matthew or Mark, this, too, is irrelevant. And why refer to "sins unto death" when only one sin is being discussed?

Probably the most common defense used by Haley throughout his entire book, and this problem is a prime example of same, is to read into the text or read between the lines. Haley is a past-master at adding concepts to the script that aren't present in the original text. He doesn't twist or delete passages as much as he supplements them. He specializes in adding ideas that modify, restrict or redirect what is being said. He redefines words and statements so that they say what he deems desirable and then continues the battle on a new footing. Like a typical politician, he reframes the issue in the light most favorable to himself and proceeds accordingly. Stripped to its bare essentials, he relies most heavily on the old defense of: That's what it says but that is not what it means. But instead of being forthright and frankly admitting that that is the essence of his approach, he simply restructures the conflict by restating the original dilemma, while hoping his sleigh of thought will stay off his detractor's radar screen. He makes the conflict something it is not and then proceeds to show how easily the conflict can be resolved. Of course, if the original problem were as he defines it, then there would have been no need to have mentioned it to begin with.

Another good example of his ideological shell-game is evident in his resolution of the conflict between Eccle. 1:18 ("For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow") and Eccle. 6:8 ("For what hath the wise more than the fool") on the one hand and Eccle. 2:13 ("Wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness") and Prov. 3:13 ("Happy is the man that findeth wisdom and the man that getteth understanding") on the other. So is wisdom a curse or an asset. That's the issue. You'll never know from these verses. Haley's explanation is that, "The term 'wisdom' is applied, in the scriptures, to at least three things: 1. Worldly craft, cunning, or policy; 2. Mere human knowledge or learning; 3. Enlightened piety. The first is always disapproved; the second, having in itself no moral quality, is not condemned save when it usurps the place of the third kind, or enlightened piety. The latter is invariably commended. In the case before us ethical wisdom is contrasted with carnal wisdom."

The obvious sophistry permeating this explanation, as with so much of Haley's approach to biblical clashes, lies in his constant propensity to embellish the text. There is nothing in these verses justifying these distinctions and they are only offered because of their attractiveness from an apologetic perspective. Where are distinctions of this kind outlined in the text? Where does the Bible say it is referring to 3 different kinds of wisdom? There is no reason to proceed further until Haley establishes the premise upon which his entire rationalization is based. And that he completely failed to do.

Everyone is familiar with the commandment in Ex. 20:14 which says Thou shalt not commit adultery. And Heb. 13:4 says, "Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge." So adultery is clearly condemned. But in Num. 31:18 God condones the practice by saying, "All the women children...keep alive for yourselves" and in Hosea 1:2 he says, "Go take unto thee a wife of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms, for the land hath committed great whoredom departing from the Lord." In defense of the biblical God Haley says on page 255, "In Numbers Keil (a famous German apologist--Ed.) says all the females were put to death who might possibly have been engaged in the licentious worship of Peor, so that the Israelites might be preserved from contamination by that abominable idolatry. The young maidens were reserved to be employed as servants, or, in case they became proselytes, to be married."

Apparently Haley couldn't think of an explanation so he turned to Keil for assistance. Instead of addressing the problem, all Keil did was focus on the alleged justice associated with killing women who might have worshiped Peor. But that isn't the issue. We are not concerned with those women who worshipped incorrectly but with those the Israelites took for themselves without the benefit of matrimony. And Keil is trying to give the impression that these women were merely impressed into servitude without sexual contact being involved and some were later married. If Haley had quoted all of Ex. 31:18 ("But all the women children, that have not known a man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves") he would have shown that more than mere servitude was involved. The last part of the prior verse ("...kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him") provides further evidence that mere servitude is not on the speaker's mind. In addition, by saying "all the females were put to death who might possibly have been engaged in the licentious worship of Peor," Keil is denigrating the biblical God by accusing him of ordering the killing of people on the mere suspicion that they may have engaged in a forbidden act. That's justice! What happened to a fair hearing?

As far as the Hosea quote is concerned, Haley turned to another famous German apologist, Delitzsch, who takes the prophet's marriages simply as internal psychological events, i.e. "as merely carried out in that inward and spiritual intuition in which the word of God was addressed to him." Apparently Delitzsch was even more at a loss for an answer than Keil, because he submitted an array of words without a ray of light. He needs to go back to the drawing board and return with something considerably more lucid. In commenting directly on the passage in Hosea Haley says, "the word 'whoredom,' in the first part of the verse may mean, as it certainly does in the last part, simply spiritual whoredom, or idolatry." That Haley is guessing seems rather clear. Saying "may mean" shows he's offering a plausible explanation that's by no means airtight. And when other versions of this verse are read, his entire rationale all but collapses. The RSV says, "To, take to yourself a wife of harlotry and have children of harlotry...." The Living Bible says, "Go and marry a girl who is a prostitute, so that some of her children will be born to you from other men." And the New International Version says, "Go, take to yourself an adulterous wife and children of unfaithfulness, because the land is guilty of the vilest adultery in departing from the Lord." Clearly none of these versions are referring to "simply spiritual whoredom, or idolatry." The clincher is found in the very next verse which says in the NIV, "So he married Gomer daughter of Diblaim, and she conceived and bore him a son." That eradicates Haley's entire theory that a spiritual meaning is intended. On top of everything else, even if the meaning were spiritual, how could a morally perfect God tell people to take whores?

Haley's rationalization of the conflict between Jesus' comment in Matt. 28:19 ("Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost") and Paul's assertion in 1 Cor. 1:14, 17 ("I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius. ...For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel") is one of his shortest. That's probably because he decided the only way to address a direct conflict of this magnitude would be to hit and run.

He says, "Obviously, 'Christ sent me not so much to baptize, as to preach the gospel.' Paul did not neglect or undervalue baptism, but gave himself to the work of teaching, leaving his associates to administer baptism."

Again Haley rewrote the script. Paul said Christ sent him not to baptize, period. He did not say "Christ sent me not so much to baptize." While acting under the orders of Jesus, Paul specifically said that he baptized no one, except two people, and for that he implicitly apologized.

And finally, on page 258 in Haley's tome can be found the conflict between Gen. 9:6 ("Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed") and Gen. 4:12-13 ("A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth. And Cain said unto the Lord, My punishment is greater than I can bear"). The problem generated by these verses is that instead of executing Cain for killing Abel as is required by Gen. 9:6, God merely condemned him to a life of wandering throughout the earth. Haley provides an exceptionally poor resolution of this contradiction by saying, "By some unaccountable freak of exegesis, a well-known critic makes the first text the prohibition of capital punishment. Instead, it is a most explicit command, sanctioning it. The case of Cain occurred some 1,500 years before the command was given to Noah."

In the first place what difference does it make how some "well-known" biblical critic misinterpreted the first text. If he understands that to be saying capital punishment is to be prohibited, then obviously he can't read very well. Haley is correct in reprimanding this unknown critic. He shouldn't have even mentioned him. Then Haley says that the command regarding capital punishment was given to Noah 1,500 years after the Cain/Abel incident and, thus, by some strange twist of logic the command does apply. The only "freak of exegesis" involved is that emanating from the pen of Haley. His entire train of thought in this regard is all but incoherent.

Some of Haley's supporters may say that all he meant to state was that Cain was not executed because capital punishment was not instituted until 1,500 years after Cain lived. Thus, the command would not apply. What? Morality varies with the times? That's "situation ethics" which fundamentalists denounce in no uncertain terms. If one of the Ten Commandments is only applicable to a particular time in history, then a Pandora's box is opened with respect to the applicability of the entire Ten Commandments. (To Be Continued)

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #605 from Rev. BB Continues from Last Month (Part jj)

(The 23rd question on our pamphlet is: For justice to exist, punishment must fit the crime. No matter how many bad deeds one commits in this world, there is a limit. Yet, hell's punishment is infinitely greater. Rev. BB responded by saying--Ed.)

It would be interesting to hear just what McKinsey's definition of hell is. How a biblical concept could find a place in his non-biblical theology is beyond me. At any rate, he has failed to understand first of all what sin is. It is a deliberate act of willful disobedience that has the effect of distancing us from God. It makes us estranged in our relationship with the divine. Only the blood of Christ can bring forgiveness of sin and remove the estrangement, close the distance.

Second, he does not understand what hell is. Hell is the fate of the unrepentant, the unbelieving. It is eternal separation from God. With a correct understanding, you can see that the punishment does "fit the crime," indeed, perfectly. Because sin is a willing separation of ourselves from God, it only makes sense that the separation in eternity is a continuation of the separation begun in this life. The person who dies in unbelief, in sin, has committed themselves to being separate from God, to "going their own way," and God's judgment is, in this sense, a continuation of that separation.

Editor's Response to Letter #605 (Part jj)

To begin with, my definition of hell is irrelevant. What counts is the Bible's description of hell. Second, what does Rev. BB mean by saying, "How a biblical concept could find a place in his non-biblical theology is beyond me." Some of his comments are worse than erroneous, they're muddled. Is he implying I believe in hell? How nonsensical can one be? Does he mean that because I discuss ghosts, goblins, spooks, heaven, and hell for example, I must therefore believe in them? Third, Rev. BB says I "failed to understand first of all what sin is." I have no problem at all understanding what the Christian definition of sin is. But Rev. BB has a big problem showing how his ramblings are relevant. Fourth, his theology is a chaotic mess. If sin is a willing separation of ourselves from God, then all fetuses, infants, babies, and severely mentally impaired people who die in that condition never sinned. Yet, the Bible says all have sinned and come short (Rom. 3:23). Moreover, John 14:6 says no one comes to the father but by me. Since these beings are in no condition to make a conscious decision to come to the father, they are automatically condemned. Yet they never sinned. And fifth, because someone separates himself from God, whatever that means, during his short period of time on earth, he is to be punished forever? That's justice! There is nothing someone could do in the short space of 80 or 90 years that could possibly warrant eternal punishment, including separating himself from God. Even though someone decided to separate himself from God for 80 or 90 years, it is illogical to continue that for an eternity. Has Rev. BB lost his mind? One might just as well say that since someone spent 10 years in prison for armed robbery, he might as well go the extra mile and spend the rest of his life there. Rev. BB says "it only makes sense that the separation in eternity is a continuation of the separation begun in this life." What's he talking about? There's no sense to it. Doesn't he believe in a man serving his time and completing his sentence?

Letter #605 Concludes (Part kk)

(The 24th and last question on our pamphlet is: In Acts 20:35 Paul told people to "remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, 'it is more blessed to give than to receive'." Since Jesus never made such a biblical statement, isn't Paul guilty of deception. Rev. BB responded by saying--Ed.),

It is transparently false to assume that the Gospels record every word Jesus said. It is this false assumption that is the basis of this "argument." John tells us that his own account is not the complete, verbatim record of Jesus' teaching and preaching. Paul is not logically guilty of deception when we realize the Gospels do not (and cannot) contain everything Jesus said. Here Paul refers to something that went unreported by the Gospel writers. Or, perhaps, Paul is referring to something the resurrected Christ said to him personally. Or, it may have been revealed to him otherwise. What I am trying to show is that there are a host of possible explanations of Paul's statement better than McKinsey's illogical, mean-spirited one.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #605 (Part kk)

The only false assumption that really matters is the assumption by biblical readers that these words were said by Jesus and are in the Bible. As I have said on several occasions, as long as Christians make it clear to readers and listeners alike that these words are not in Scripture, I am willing to admit that they could have been said by Jesus, although never recorded scripturally. But this distinction is rarely made, even though biblicists repeatedly use this verse for propaganda purposes. When an alleged statement by Jesus is nowhere to be found in Scripture, when people are not told it is nowhere to be found in Scripture, when Paul and his followers give people the impression that the statement is to be found in Scripture, then people are being deceived. A deception based on omission can be as deceptive, damaging, and misleading as one based on commission.

I am well aware of the fact that Scripture could not contain everything Jesus said. That's not the problem. The problem is that Jesus is quoted as if his comment is in Scripture, when it most assuredly is not. As long as everything is kept open and above board I have no problem. But when Christians intentionally give people the impression that their beloved hero said something that, in fact, is not in Scripture and can't be demonstrated, I have qualms and raise objections.

Letter #625 from JS of Grosse Pointe Farms, Michigan

Dear Dennis. Would you please answer this question for me, or refer me to chapter and verse in Biblical Errancy where this may have already been dealt with. On page 39 in your book, you state that the Crucifixion could not have occurred on a Wednesday, and the resurrection not on a Saturday, because all of the special sabbaths mentioned in the OT occurred in the fall, and the Crucifixion occurred in the spring.

However, as I read Leviticus 23 and its parallels, at least one Sabbath did occur around the time of Passover, and that Sabbath is the first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread.

Furthermore, the NT does say that the Sabbath on the day after the Crucifixion was a "special" sabbath. Accordingly, it seems to me that perhaps the Wednesday to Saturday scenario is plausible (such as in the year A.D. 31). Any comments on this?

Editor's Response to Letter #625

Dear JS. I'll take your points one by one. First, I did not say on page 39 that "all of the special sabbaths mentioned in the OT occurred in the fall, and the Crucifixion occurred in the spring"? I said that "the sabbaths referred to in the OT all occurred in the seventh month, while the Crucifixion occurred in the first month." But I'm willing to overlook this discrepancy because I assume you are using a Hebrew calendar. Second, you say that "at least one Sabbath did occur around the time of Passover," which is borne out by the early part of Lev. 23. What verses are you referring to specifically, and where do they say the sabbath referred to fell on any day other than the 7th day or what we know as Saturday? The 3rd verse preceding what you are referring to says, "Six days shall work be done: but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest,...it is the sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings." It specifically states the seventh day, not one of the other six, is the sabbath. Third, you say the sabbath you are referring to "is the first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread." But where does it say it fell on any other day than the seventh day, Saturday? As far as this problem is concerned, if it didn't fall on a day other than the seventh, what difference would it make what it's called or what's being celebrated? Fourth, you say that "the NT does say that the Sabbath on the day after the Crucifixion was a 'special' sabbath" without proving this is any day other than the seventh or citing chapter and verse to show where it is deemed special. From the perspective of Christians no doubt it was special. After all, how many sabbaths occurred on the day after the Crucifixion of Jesus? But where is it cited as such? And lastly, I am at a lost to understand how you feel you have demonstrated a possible faux pas on my part. In order to prove your point, you are going to have to prove that one of the OT sabbaths not only occurred on a day other than the seventh day, specifically Thursday, but also prove this occurred in the first month because, as you noted, that is when the Passover occurs and the Crucifixion occurred around the time of the Passover.

I know you have always been a strong supporter of BE and are submitting this question for purposes of clarification and to eliminate any possible avenues of attack from which I may have left myself exposed. Thanks for the assistance and please don't take umbrage if the tenor of my response seems reminiscent of those directed toward apologists.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #626 from SC of La Honda, California

...Keep up the good work. Those self-satisfied, dangerous religious zealots think they're going to establish a theocracy in this country, and it is ever more important to keep attacking their beliefs and their idiotic "holy book" at every level. B.E. is an inspiration, a delight, and a comfort. So glad you are out there. All the best for 1995.

Letter #627 from WD of Melbourne Beach, Florida

I have found your Encyclopedia of BE tremendously enlightening, stimulating, importantly necessary for study by everyone -- in all religions.... Allow me a moment for a background of myself. For 63 of my 65 years I had a very good relationship with religion. It didn't bother me and I didn't bother it.... I got into the study and research of religions as a matter of protection from some friends who evidenced themselves as good ole fundamentalists who clued me into the absolute truth that if I didn't agree with their beliefs I was going to be welcomed into the Devil's cadre. Since that didn't make too much sense to me I bolted for the books. Unfortunately the deeper I get the more unbelievable it becomes. At the moment I am at a loss as to how religion, in particular Christianity, has ever survived. Worse, I feel I have been intellectually raped by the church....

Letter #628 from BY of Seminole, Florida

Dear Dennis. Once again, I am happily renewing my subscription to BE. I continue to find it a well-researched source or arguments for debating Christians whose faith is based on an incomplete knowledge of their own Bible. I have also acquired your book, The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy, and find it immensely useful as a starting point -- one might even say "inspiration" -- for newspaper and other "letters to the editor" responses.

I have also taken the liberty of becoming an unpaid salesman for you (no, I'm not asking for a raise). I've created the enclosed stickers (a couple were included--Ed.) which I place in strategic places in hotel bibles; I will eventually create an entire line of them referring to specific verses and contradictions which I will forward to you. Feel free to make whatever use of them you see fit. As our country sinks deeper into the fanaticism encouraged by radio talk show hosts and ambitious politicians using the Bible as ammunition, I think that your publication will continue to grow in value as a defusing tool for religious bombast.

Editor's Response to Letter #628

Dear BY. I'm glad you are finding my book useful and I have no doubt distribution of your stickers will be useful to our cause. Keep up your great work and I can't help but note that your analysis of the average radio talk show host is similar to mine.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We would like to take this opportunity to thank all those people who have contributed over the years to our worthy cause. It's about time, indeed long overdue, that we gave credit to where credit is due and apologized for the oversight. Many unsung heroes have given funds and other assistance to this periodical without being solicited or pressured because they realize that any undertaking of real consequence can't operate effectively without the appropriate wherewithal. Specifically we would like to alphabetically acknowledge contributions by the following individuals. SA of Brooklyn, New York; GA of Belmont, Massachusetts; JA of New York, New York; JA of British Columbia, Canada; PB of Nova Scotia, Canada; WB of Waterloo, Iowa; EB of Wayne, Michigan; SC of La Honda, California; RC of Altadena in the California Republic; RD of Tempe, Arizona; DG of Sioux Falls, South Dakota; AH of Sonoma, California; RH of Hubbard, Ohio; GK of Brooklyn Center, Minnesota; GL of Saskatchewan, Canada; WL of Cambridge, Massachusetts; DM of Pasadena, California; HM of Bellbrook, Ohio; RM of Baton Rouge, Louisiana; RM of Balwin, Missouri; AM of Bloomington, Texas; RN of Moscow, Idaho; JO of Sonora, California; JP of Meriden, Connecticut; HR of Greendale, Wisconsin; SR of Anaheim, California; VS of Lake Worth, Florida; JS of Grosse Pointe Farms, Michigan; JS of Columbus, Ohio; JS of Ambler, Pennsylvania; JT of Riverside, California; and JV of Chicago, Illinois.

A special thanks goes out to the following individuals for exceptional donations. CB of Prescott, Arizona; JE of Elizabeth, Illinois; PJG of Cincinnati, Ohio; RK of Ruston, Louisiana; DL of Ipswich, Massachusetts; FM of Chicago, Illinois; JO of Jacksonville, Florida; ET of Sanford, Maine, and FT of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

And finally, a very special, indeed, a unique note of gratitude is extended to a retired Florida businessman whose untiring efforts and generous contributions to our cause have been truly extraordinary. Without his support and that of everyone else we would not have been able to obtain the computer equipment and other peripherals that will soon be producing and disseminating a much more readable and professional looking periodical. No one is more aware of the need to improve BE's appearance than I. Once, again, we'd like to thank you all. The Best, Dennis.

COMMENTARY

Due to an increase in the volume of mail, we are going to devote several issues to letters from readers.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #629 from HJ of Charlotte, North Carolina (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. How can you deftly extract so much forensic-type information from a work as complicated as the bible and still not understand the point of a simple--if silly--letter? It appears by your response that you missed the intent of every issue I brought up regarding word definition .

I quote from my own letter, "You define perfect as absolute or unwavering in its meaning." I went on to say, "In all civilized languages people use words to mean whatever they choose for them to mean at that moment. 'I've looked for this dress everywhere. It's perfect! I'll wear it to the Woopergoopers' dinner tomorrow.'"

I must emphasize that it was you who defined perfect. I simply established this silly example to make the point that neither you nor God can give an absolute definition to any word as long as human beings -- of any language group -- will understand the word to mean what they think you intended to say!

I must assume that while God can proclaim himself to be perfect, you can come along and say to Him, "But you have committed genocide so many times!" Then He will say, "Yeah, but I did a perfect job of it!" thereby defending his stature. (We must remember that God has all of man's attributes augmented by all of man's fantasies, including omniscience and omnipotence which are mutually exclusive, and is still (according to some) perfect in spite of it. It really takes a disjointed group of writers to describe him with all these attributes). Forgive the ridiculous examples, but I have no biblical credentials just as I assume you have no more English credentials than I, but I do have English credentials and I'm telling you, words mean what the listener (or reader) believes or wants them to mean, not what the speaker intends to say -- and authority has nothing to do with it. That's how the fundie shuffle was born and how you used it so skillfully when you commented, "That there's a world of difference between God using the word perfect and man using it." Wrong! It's who hears or reads it!

Editor's Response to Letter #629 (Part a)

You don't listen very well, HJ, when you're repelled by what you hear or your ego is involved. But we'll go through it again. Gen. 6:9 ("Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations") was originally written in Hebrew. A group of scholars read the verse and then translated it into English. Those who did the translating felt that the English word "perfect" was the best duplication available of the Hebrew term. The English word "perfect" is clearly defined in Webster's Dictionary, so the translators had no doubt about the full implications of the word they were using. Therefore, your complaint is not with me but with those who did the translating. In effect, you are saying you know

Hebrew better than a group of Hebraic scholars. And to coin a current comment making the rounds: I don't think so!, especially in light of your admission that you "have no biblical credentials." That's readily apparent. Many additional mistakes accompany your poor analysis. First, I didn't miss the intent of every issue you brought up. I was fully aware of the points you were making because they're nothing more than a variation on the cultural differences theme. The real problem is that you refused to recognize the point I was making. I didn't miss your points; you missed mine. Second, from whence comes your wholly erroneous assertion that I "define perfect as absolute or unwavering in its meaning." You state, "It was you who defined perfect." Where are you getting this? I didn't define it that way; Webster did. Your quarrel is with him, not me, my friend. Third, I am well aware of cultural differences and that "In all civilized languages people use words to mean whatever they choose them to mean at that moment." And those who translated the word "perfect" are as aware of these differences as you or I. Nevertheless, they chose an English word with a definite meaning to represent a Hebrew term which they no doubt felt was comparable to the English word, "perfect." In other words, after having taken account of cultural differences in the process of translating, they still used the English word "perfect" as the best duplication of the Hebraic term. For you to say that cultural variations were not taken into account, is for you to say the translators were incompetent. At this point I would normally ask for a recitation of your qualifications to correct a group of Hebraic scholars, but since you have already acknowledged your inadequacies, we'll forego that step. Fourth, your dress analogy is wholly inapplicable because you are substituting a colloquial use of the term in the English language for Webster's definition of "perfect" that is also in the English language. Everyone knows that to say the dress is perfect is not to say it is totally flawless. People are well aware of the fact that you are engaged in hyperbole; they know that perfect means without imperfections and that you do not really mean to imply it's truly perfect. But when the word "perfect" is in a supposedly flawless book, accuracy is crucial. If your dress example were analogous, then the translators would have seriously erred by using a word that is so clearly defined by Webster. No, I think the problem lies with you, not Webster or a group of Hebraic scholars. Fifth, all of the problems I raised on several occasions with respect to Noah not being perfect would come into play if Noah were not "perfect" as Webster defines the term. Sixth, you say "neither you nor God can give an absolute definition to any word as long as human beings -- of any language group -- will understand the word to mean what they think you intended to say!" I can't speak for God but he would no doubt agree with me that you need a lesson in translating. "Cultural relativism" is taken into account by any good translator. If not, then the translator is out of his league. No one is trying to "give an absolute definition to any word" and anyone experienced with translating knows that people are going to interpret a word "to mean what they think you intended to say" or how they understand the term. But that is factored into any competent, reliable, translation. In simple terms, translators chose the word "perfect" because it best represented the corresponding Hebraic term. And if you don't think they made the best choice then you are putting your expertise above theirs, an act for which you are admittedly wholly unqualified. That's the bottom line. Incidentally, I can't help but notice that you said God can't give an absolute definition to any word. I thought your omnipotent God can do anything? Seventh, your reasoning often drifts off center as is shown by your statement that, "I must assume that while God can proclaim himself to be perfect, you can come along and say to Him, 'But you have committed genocide so many times!' Then He will say, 'Yeah, but I did a perfect job of it!' thereby defending his stature." How could God be a perfectly moral being if he replied by admitting that he did a perfectly immoral act? We are talking about moral perfection not about the manner in which an act was performed. There is a big difference between God being described as a being with perfectly moral character and God committing an act that is perfectly immoral. The only perfection he could claim in the latter instance would be perfect imperfection, a quality generally reserved in Christian theology for the Devil alone. For God to be perfect every act committed by him would have to be moral. If he committed an act that was perfect but immoral, then he would no longer be perfect. You are describing the method by which the act was performed while ignoring the nature of the act itself. You are trying to make God perfect while ignoring the goodness or badness of the act performed. Eighth, you stated that "God has all of man's attributes." Are you serious? God is self-centered; God is greedy; God is envious and jealous, etc.? That may be in harmony with the OT presentation of God but is hardly commensurate with the Christian conception of God. Your conception of God all but destroys any reason for respecting him. Ninth, you refer to "all of man's fantasies, including omniscience and omnipotence, which are mutually exclusive." Why would omniscience and omnipotence have to be mutually exclusive? Indeed, I would say the opposite is true. Tenth, in light of your description of God, wouldn't you be in that "disjointed group of writers" who describe him with all these attributes? After all, you did say, "We must remember that God has all of man's attributes augmented by all of man's fantasies." If that isn't degradation of God I don't know what is. Eleventh, you say, "I do have English credentials and I'm telling you, words mean what the listener (or reader) believes or wants them to mean, not what the speaker intends to say -- and authority has nothing to do with it." Wrong again! How can you make so many mistakes in such a short monologue. Words mean what the dictionary says they mean. They don't mean what the listener or reader wants them to mean. If that were true, then why have dictionaries? Everyone would be free to interpret any word as it struck his fancy. Words may be interpreted by listeners and readers as desired but that may or may not be the correct meaning. If you had said "words mean To the Listener or Reader what the Listener (or Reader) believes or wants them to mean" I would have had no objection. But you turned personal opinions, whether true or not, into facts. There is an objective real world out there and the sooner you get in tune with it the better off you will be. The world is not going to change according to your whims or conceptions; it's up to you to change your conceptions so as to bring them in line with the real world. This very issue, more than any other, has divided all philosophers throughout history into two great assemblages. One group--the idealists--believes that ideas are primary and material conditions are secondary and has always made the world conform to beliefs and conceptions. The other group--the materialists--has always felt there is a real world out there to which ideas must conform. One feels that ideas are primary while material conditions are secondary, while the other feels material conditions are primary and ideas are secondary. I have never encountered any observer of the world scene, especially philosophers, who did not fall into one camp or the other. Twelfth and finally, the real problem lies not with my use of the fundie shuffle but with your intransigent unwillingness to nuckle or buckle.

Letter #629 Continues (Part b)

...I quite agree with you regarding Noah's moral "perfection" and his right to be on the ark, etc., but your whole argument is based on the use of the word "perfect". If you want to shoot down the story do it on the basis of God's heinous act, not some pointless syntax.

Editor's Response to Letter #629 (Part b)

First, "to shoot down the story," to use your words, on the basis of God's heinous act would hardly be realistic in light of the fact that many biblicists would no doubt say that the act was far from heinous. The world was corrupt and people got what they deserved. You are making a judgment with which many of your own compatriots would disagree. Second, as has been shown throughout the history of our discussion of this topic, there is nothing pointless about my syntactical attack. Gen. 6:9 is another one of those absolutist comments that play havoc with the Bible's alleged inerrancy.

Letter #629 Continues (Part c)

(After returning to his dress analogy and making some assertions that are even more vacuous than those presented earlier, HJ says--Ed.), You go on to say that the flood was useless because it failed to purify the world. Well, you're right. It was, and it did fail if that was the goal. There's your fodder for argument. I got the distinct impression that God did it as a matter of punishment because he was angered, not as a matter of purification, but I must admit not yet having dissected the story. He saved a few beans so he wouldn't have to go to the trouble to make another Adam and Eve. I'm surprised He didn't see the problem beforehand, being omniscient and all.

Editor's Response to Letter #629 (Part c)

I really wish you would stop attributing assertions to me that were made by others and which I am merely relating. I didn't say it failed to purify the world. That's the position of many Christians and I'm merely relaying their sentiments. If you feel it was done for purposes of punishment only, then you are at odds with a sizable number of Christians. Apparently not only is your dissection of the story incomplete, but your surgery is decidedly at variance with that performed by most biblicists.

Letter #629 Continues (Part d)

I took note of the fact that you didn't address my issues regarding idiomatic expressions in which I used the challenging example: I'd like to know how you can interpret perfect in his own time or perfect in his own generations to mean simply perfect without an ancient Hebrew thesaurus. I suspect that the simple word perfect would have been employed if simply perfect is what the writer meant.

Editor's Response to Letter #629 (Part d)

Like so much of your entire presentation, HJ, your point is somewhat vague, poorly conceived, and badly worded. In any event, I think I know what you are trying to say and if I'm correct, then you are merely fishing for an answer. If you think adding the phrases "in his own time" or "in his own generations" to the word "perfect" somehow modifies the entire problem, then it is incumbent on you to prove as much. You may "suspect that the simple word perfect would have been employed if simply perfect is what the writer meant" but that is about all you have to go on. According to Rom. 3:23 all men have sinned and no man can be perfect at any time, either in or out of his generations.

Letter #629 Concludes (Part e)

In your response to someone else's letter #614 you admit to being divisive in order to make your points. Frankly, I don't think you need to be divisive, and taking the quality and the intent of your work into account, I think doing so is beneath your dignity. Tacky. Self-diminishing, a.k.a. shooting yourself in the foot.

Your response #611 'part a' says, "When are you (referring to me--Ed.) and your compatriots etc. ...?" Well you are one of them! I'm no fundamentalist! I'm just trying to squeeze out the stuff that doesn't fly so they'll have one fewer rational argument (as if they had one now!).

I like your stuff. Keep it up.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #629 (Part e)

I've reread my response to Letter #614 several times, HJ, and for the life of me I can't find any comment by me showing that I admit to being divisive in order to make my points. Where on earth are you getting this? You need to reign in your imagination. As far as unjustly including you within the fundamentalist community is concerned, I apologize for any humiliation this may have engendered. Being fully cognizant of how I would feel if the tables were turned, I can sympathize with your ire. But in light of your arguments in a couple of letters I think you can understand my conclusion. In any event, if your orientation is far closer to mine than is apparent, then I welcome you into the realm of sanity as a compatriot in our ongoing struggle against religious superstition in general and the Bible in particular.

Letter #630 from CK of Bloomfield, New Jersey (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I am enjoying your Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy and find it a useful compendium that looks a lot nicer than a stack of issues of the periodical. I do note however that some topics are covered more than once, under more than one category. More important, I think some of your attention to small matters can detract from the really egregious errors in the Bible. For example, when the "Prince of Peace" who would have us "turn the other cheek" and love one's enemies, brandishes a whip and creates a riot in the temple, this is an egregious contradiction. This involves such well-known aspects of Jesus that even liberal theologians have a problem (even if they can't see the problem). On the other hand, comes the problem of the 10-cubit bowl having a circumference of 30 cubits. Your criticism is subject to criticism itself. That Lindsell agrees with your criticism should not be of comfort, as Biblicists' levels of mathematical sophistication certainly leave something to be desired. OK, my criticism of yours: You say, "the circumference of this 'molten sea' must be 31.4 feet [sic--I assume you mean cubits], not 30." I can say that it must be 31.4159265...cubits, not 31.4. We all make an agreement to round to a certain place. Remembering that the circumference was not necessarily a calculation, but an observation, probably done by using a forearm as a ruler, it would be logical to round to the nearest cubit. Any diameter from 9.5 cubits to 10.5 cubits would round to 10 cubits.... The reportage would be correct, rounded to the nearest unit.... in the days when basins were measured by forearms, the nearest cubit was as good reporting as you could get, and in the case of the above-mentioned possible "precise" measurements, can indeed be an accurate representation of what was there.

Editor's Response to Letter #630 (Part a)

Dear CK. Your explanation of this problem is very much in the tradition of most apologists and will be addressed as such.

First, the fact is that 30 cubits is not the correct answer. If you say that 31.4 is not the correct answer either, then I will allege that your 31.4159265 figure is incorrect as well. Following the stream of logic you have set in motion, there is no correct answer, because every answer involves rounding. Any answer would be automatically false.

Second, you are assuming the answer involves rounding without proving as much. The answer is wrong until you can prove it results from rounding. You can't allege it's the result of rounding until I prove it's not. As I have said so often, the burden of proof lies on him who alleges. In effect, you want me to prove it is not the result of rounding rather than you and your compatriots being required to prove it is the result of rounding. The error is blatant; it's obvious; it's staring us in the face. Biblicists must provide proof, not mere supposition, that rounding explains everything. If guesswork is going to be admissible, then many biblical contradictions could be explained away by mere conjecture and theorizing.

Nearly every numerical contradiction in the OT, for example, could be lightly dismissed by simple reference to the "rounding" defense. Apparently I'm supposed to be Mr. Niceguy by defocusing on the script and giving the Bible the benefit of the doubt every time a contradiction is clearly evident, when the Book's defenders wouldn't grant me a scintilla of slack if they saw a loophole. I'm too accommodating already. If I were really playing hardball, my arguments could become considerably more poignant. As was shown in a prior issue, I'm not as much a stickler for details as is true of strict literalists. On the other hand, I'm certainly not going to assume the Bible has it all together every time it opens its mouth, nor am I going to give it the benefit of the doubt when the proposed reconciliation is so obviously beyond the pale of what one would expect even from someone writing 2 or 3,000 years ago in a far more primitive era.

Letter #630 Continues (Part b)

Along the same lines, your criticism of 2 Sam. 24:9 versus 1 Chron. 21:5 (page 75) is that one quotes a figure of 500,000 men and the other quotes 470,000 men. You say rounding cannot account for this discrepancy. I know that my fifth grade daughter has textbooks which give rounding problems (and answers) like this all the time. How would you round 470,000 to a single significant figure? The textbook solution is 500,000.

Editor's Response to Letter #630 (Part b)

While using even weaker figures, you are repeating the numerical argument you submitted with respect to the 10-cubit bowl and my answer would be the same.

First, you are assuming without evidence that these figures are the result of rounding.

Second, by asking how I "would round 470,000 to a single significant figure," you are assuming it has not been rounded already. Four hundred and seventy thousand does not need to be rounded to a significant figure; it's already there.

Third, even if the biblical figures are the result of rounding, the roundings don't agree. There's still a difference of 30,000.

And lastly, my son does rounding problems too, but his teacher does not allege the answer is precisely correct. Everyone is well aware of the fact that the answer is not meant to be precise. That's made clear from the outset. But nowhere does the Bible imply, much less state, that the figures cited are the result of rounding or approximating.

Letter #630 Concludes (Part c)

Another subject: To your criticism on page 116 in your book of John 10:27-28 ("My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and...neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand") which also includes similar verses such as John 18:9, 17:12, 13:21, and 25-27, can be added John 6:66 ("After this, many of his disciples left him and stopped going with him").... I note John 6:66 is not in your Index of Verse Citations.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #630 (Part c)

Your observation has merit. I probably should have included John 6:66 in my list. It's hard to get them all.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #631 from BS of Baton Rouge, Louisiana

Dear Dennis. In Issue #152, you mentioned contradictions regarding adultery in the Bible. Permit me to add another. Deut. 22:22 clearly states "god" orders that the man and the woman who commit adultery shall die. Yet in the story of King David and Bathsheba (2 Sam. 12:15) they commit adultery and are not killed. Instead, god kills their baby, after first making it suffer for seven days. Either a) god is a hypocrite, b) god gives kings special dispensation, or c) the people who wrote those Bible verses out of their imaginations were just plain stupid. I favor option 'c' myself....

Letter #632 from SB of Los Angeles, California

I would like to subscribe to Biblical Errancy which was mentioned in the Skeptical Review. I am a recent convert to freethought, having spent a lifetime (age 53) under the bondage and fear of Christian fundamentalism. My route to freedom was initially through studying astronomy and science. This started the doubts which led to serious readings on Christianity. The more I read, the more absurd Christianity became, until I finally "chucked" the whole thing. What a great day that was.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (A) Last month's issue contained an appeal for assistance in the circulation of our cablevision videotapes. I'm quite disappointed with the response. A few people volunteered but far more are needed. How is religion in general and the Bible in particular going to be countered if effort comparable to that exhibited by the other side is not forthcoming. Biblicists are working like beavers to spread their doctrines and undermine much of that which rational minds hold most dear and frankly, the only thing that has been keeping them at bay so far are the liberal wings of Christianity and Judaism represented by the World Council of Churches and Reform Judaism. Atheists, agnostics, freethinkers, and others of a decidedly rational frame of mind have been depending upon those whose reliance is unstable and dubious at best. Playing a secondary role to those who more often than not are in league with your devout opponents is hardly a sensible approach. People complain to me that fundamentalists are co-opting school boards, inserting religious observances and clubs into the schools, propagandizing unhindered and unopposed in the media, raking in vast sums of wealth without opposition or correction, controlling or influencing political decisions regarding abortion, euthanasia, corporal punishment, prayer, textbooks, unionizing, social activism, environmental concerns, etc., and successfully promoting a wide assortment of other nefarious activities. When I say, "I couldn't agree more, what do you suggest be done?," about all that is forthcoming is the writing of letters to the editor and court challenges. Hardly viable approaches! Cussing out the TV isn't going to get the job done either. I constantly receive letters complaining about church/state violations and freethought books and journals replete with examples of same, as if I wasn't aware of the fact that the constitution is ignored on a regular basis. I am well aware of numerous breaches and being told the obvious is superfluous. Every time I hear the Pledge of Allegiance or read my coins, constitutional violations and religious domination hit me in the face. The question is: What are we going to do about it. Are we going to merely complain or take action? Something tangible, of real substance, has to be done and that involves taking it to the other side. I can provide the format, the presentation, programs, research etc., but I can't put determination, dedication, motivation, and commitment into my disseminators. Only they can play programs in areas in which I don't even live. If people don't get serious about the power and threats posed by the world of biblicism, then they could very well arrive at a time when they will wish that they had done something earlier. But then, of course, it could be too late. Apparently they feel it can't happen here. Oh, yes it can! The United States is no more exempt from the vicissitudes that have plagued other nations than any other country on this planet. The mentality and philosophy generated by religion in general and the Bible in particular is regressive to mankind's advancement and inimical to his welfare. Make no mistake about that. The sooner and more vigorously it is opposed the better. It is a shame that so often people have to learn the hard way before they are willing to act.

The Editorial Note at the end of July's issue (#151) outlined some very simple procedures that could be followed by anyone. Many stations don't ask for anything more than someone who is willing to bring a tape down to the station to be played. If people with access to cablevision can't muster that much energy, especially when the other side has thousands of people who are willing to go to other nations and devote years to spreading the word, the outcome is a foregone conclusion. I have been told by subscribers that some cablevision managers yearn for the type of information I have available in order to offset the religious saturation that currently exists in their vicinity. So, I would again ask that you become involved and check out cablevision's opportunities. To those who have already acted I say, THANK YOU. Would that you could be cloned.

(B) Several subscribers have asked me to advertise their anti-religious material and have even sent me copies of that which they wish to see advertised. The problem with this is that when I advertise something I feel obligated to read and check out everything involved and I just don't have sufficient time. By advertising material written by others I am implicitly vouching for its reliability. So rather than discourage some energetic writers, whom I have no reason to distrust, I have decided to advertise their names and addresses. By all means contact the following to see what they have available. Dave Matson, P.O. Box 61274, Pasadena, California 91116, (213) 422-5251 and Stephen Barr, 6425 Old Redwood Highway N., Santa Rosa, California, 95403 (707) 838-4238. Others who have wanted me to advertise their material in the past are invited to send me their names, addresses and phone numbers as well. I was more than willing to advertise The Skeptical Review because I have conversed with Farrell Till on numerous occasions, read many of his issues, seen his video tapes, been aided by his ads for Biblical Errancy, and feel confident he is on the right track.

(C) By now you have no doubt noticed the considerable improvement in the appearance and readability of this publication. Because of some significant financial contributions we were able to: replace our out-of-date Apple II-S Computer with a 6200CD Macintosh Performa, exchange an Apple Imagewriter II Printer for a Hewlett-Packard LaserJet 5MP, and substitute a ClarisWorks 4.0 Program for a Publish-IT 4.0. I have been spending a considerable amount of time reading the manuals and getting accustomed to how everything operates. As time goes on I hope to make even more improvements in BE's format, style, appearance, and readability. But that is going to require more study and the manuals are pretty thick. Not being a computer expert, I am happy with just what I have been able to accomplish so far.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #633 from DA of LA Puente, Cali fornia (Part a)

Dear McKinsey.

Herein is a check for $12 for a 1 year subscription to Biblical Errancy. I expect I shall get enough fun out of it to make it worth the effort. Now how much fun you will get is your problem.

Presumably you have learned some of the below since you put together the sample issue, but since you still put it out, you will have to suffer being told it again. So, a few of the points you need to correct (in your sample issue are as follows--Ed.).

Resurrection just a routine event? Yawn? No, there exists a difference of at least an order of magnitude between the Resurrection and the other risings of the dead you mention. In each of the other cases, an outside force, generally a holy man, raised the dead. There was no outside force for the Resurrection. For comparison, consider your car when it won't run. The mechanic can do an impressive job of repairing it (& an even more impressive job on your wallet), but that would be nothing compared to the car simply repairing itself (& the sticker shock if you had to buy one would really be impressive. Except for very minor cases, such a self-repairing car can't be built for any sum that won't let you buy lots of cars and simply replace them every time they run out of gas.) So the Resurrection, if true, would qualify as THE event.

Editor's Response to Letter #633 (Part a)

Dear DA.

When you start out with "Dear McKinsey" it's not hard to tell what is going to follow. Your letter, along with those of other recent critics of BE, has convinced me that before biblicists send me any more of these "Johnny-Come-Lately I'll slay the dragon for Christ" letters, they should read ALL of the back issues of this publication. In other words, I'd strongly recommend they do their homework. That should more than forestall many of the repetitive criticisms coming across my desk. But alas, in your case it's too late. If there are any points that need to be corrected, it is the one you just made and many to follow. Having confronted your points on numerous occasions, I'm compelled to restrain my own yawn. First, Jesus did not raise himself; he was raised by another--God. You might want to read my response to RVH two months from now in the Dialogue and Debate section. This subject has been covered many times in various issues of BE. Too bad you didn't take time to read them. Second, you say, "In each of the other cases, an outside force, generally a holy man, raised the dead." Would you be so kind as to name the holy man who raised the saints before the Resurrection in Matt. 27:52-53? Third, in light of the fact that Jesus did not raise himself, your self-repairing car analogy is all but worthless. You wasted some ink.

Letter #633 Continues (Part b)

Your attacks are very uneven in nature, from serious points to attacking for what everybody, atheist or not, believes. We have under the Flood (section--Ed.) "...are we also to believe, for example, that the tremendous variety of dogs in the world today...descended from two of the species?...tremendous evolutionary change in only a few thousand years." But that is precisely what evolution and geology say did happen. They of course differ with the Bible on when, but the dog mutated out of the wolf in a very short period of time. Wolves began following men around for food and not long afterwards dogs appear (probably despite human attempts to avoid it. Despite the common assumption that man domesticated the dog, the dog/wolf was the active partner and changed itself enough to avoid most human hostility.) Strictly speaking, there were more than 2 original dogs, likely full packs of them, but just about any 2 of those original dogs would figure in the ancestry of any living dog.

The dog, by the way, has a very plastic shape largely because a puppy doesn't look like a dog. As the dog grows up, its form changes greatly. So it is a relatively easy task to select those dogs who change at a slow rate or a fast rate, and thereby end up with a different type of adult dog. You want a big dog? Just select those that grow fast. One with short legs? The legs just grow a little slower than the rest of the body

Despite all the difference in dogs, there is actually very little genetic difference. This can be seen in feral (wild, untamed--Ed.) dogs. By the time they have been on their own for a few generations, they "revert" to general mutt, almost wolf. There just isn't much genetic difference between a great dane and a chihuahua (sic.).

Editor's Response to Letter #633 (Part b)

You are all over the waterfront, my friend. I'd suggest that you confine your musings to theology, since theoretical imaginings and concoctions are far more acceptable in theology than in science. I hardly know where to begin. Your entire presentation is very uneven in nature. First you say "that is precisely what evolution and geology say did happen." Are you serious? Geology and evolution teach that the tremendous variety of dogs today descended from two dogs that lived a few thousand years ago? Where on earth did you learn your science? Then you say, "They of course differ with the Bible on when" which refutes what you just stated. You said geology and evolution teach "tremendous evolutionary change in only a few thousand years," which is also the biblical position, and then you reversed yourself by saying evolution and geology "differ with the Bible on when." Second, where did you get the idea that "the dog mutated out of the wolf in a very short period of time"? And from whence may I ask did the wolf evolve, or was it the original ark-occupant? Third, I fail to see any relevance to your whole wolf-followed-man-around scenario. Fourth, you say, "Strictly speaking, there were more than 2 original dogs, likely full packs of them, but just about any 2 of those original dogs would figure in the ancestry of any living dog." What a mess! How could there be more than two original dogs when the Bible says TWO of each species was taken aboard the ark? If there were "full packs of them," then the ark was oversupplied with dogs, and that would contradict the biblical account. Fifth, I also fail to see the relevance or accuracy of your whole discussion of the rate at which dogs grow. How does the rate at which they grow cause them to change from one kind of dog into another? And your comment that if you want a big dog just select one that grows fast is quite amusing, as is your assertion that short-legged dogs have legs that grow slower than the rest of their body. Sixth, despite genetic similarity between dogs, you still have not shown how all of the dogs now living could have descended from two dogs that lived a few thousand years ago. You still haven't shown how 2 dogs on a boat a few thousand years ago could have given rise to the tremendous variety of dogs that now populate the earth. Seventh, apparently you haven't noticed that your penchant for talking about topics extraneous to the issue is quite pronounced. And lastly, what do you mean by saying "a puppy doesn't look like a dog." I had two puppies as a boy that were exact images of their parents. Your knowledge of dogs resembles your knowledge of science in general.

Letter #633 Continues (Part c)

In lesser degree, we can see much the same pattern in other domesticated animals. Existing with man, whether as pest, partner, or food-source, meant greatly changed conditions, and thus a great rate of evolution. The wild cow has great big horns, and had them for millions of years. Man domesticated the cow, and within a couple of thousand of years, the horns shrank to a size men "desired" (or more likely were willing to put up with as they probably didn't even realize they were breeding for horn size) and stayed at that size to current times. However the base point is that there has been way more than enough time since the Ark to account for all the variety of domestic animals.

Editor's Response to Letter #633 (Part c)

I'm not sure your presentation of animal development is even worthy of a response. It sounds as if you are saying domestic animals stayed nearly the same for millions of years until man got into the act and then they evolved rapidly. Do you have any evidence for this, or are you just spinning a theory that strikes your fancy and tickles your funny bone? Even if man had taken over, could he have made all those changes in such a short period of time? And what about the millions of animals that had no contact with man but changed as well? I can't help but notice that your final sentence only refers to "domestic" animals. In any event, the central point is that there is no way every variety of existing animal could have evolved from two of each species in the biblical time allotted.

Letter #633 Continues (Part d)

[On page 2 in our sample issue BE lists the following biblical contradictions: (a) David took 700 (2 Sam. 8:4) vs. 7,000 (1 Chron. 18:4) horsemen from Hadadezer; (b) David slew the men of 700 chariots and 40,000 horsemen (2 Sam. 10:18 vs. David slew of the Syrians 7,000 men which fought in chariots and 40,000 footmen (1 Chron. 19:18); (c) Jehoiachin was 18 (2 Kings 24:8) vs. 8 (2 Chron. 36:9) years old when he began to reign and he reigned 3 months (2 Kings 24:8) vs. 3 months and 10 days (2 Chron. 36:9); (d) There were 800,000 (2 Sam. 24:9) vs. 1,100,000 (1 Chron. 21:5) men in Israel that drew the sword in Judah; (e) There were 2,000 baths (1 Kings 7:26) vs. 3,000 baths (2 Chron. 4:5); (f) Saul's daughter, Michal, had no sons (2 Sam. 6:23) vs. 5 sons (2 Sam. 21:8) during her lifetime; (g) Lot was Abraham's nephew (Gen. 14:12) vs. brother (Gen. 14:14); (h) And Joseph was sold into Egypt by Midianites (Gen. 37:36) vs. Ishmaelites (Gen. 39:1). DA said the following regarding these contradictions--Ed.],

In regard to contradictions in the Bible: Your own errors are less important here since you are not claiming perfection. Still, the critic is implying a certain superiority to what is criticized & so you need to correct some of your own errors. (a) 2 Sam. 8:4 says David took 1,700 (not 700) horses (or "...a thousand and 700.." according to the Revised Standard Version. (d) "...in Judah" appears to be an editing error. Did you intend to continue with the differences in the count for Judah and then decide it wasn't an error worth bothering about, only to forget to delete it completely? (e) There "were" neither 2,000 or 3,000 baths. Bath was a measure of capacity in 1 Kings 7:26 and 2 Chronicles 4:5. "Held" is a term used in some Bibles. (f) There is a contradiction between Michal of 2 Sam. 6:23 having no sons, and Merab of 21:8 having 5, only if the 2 are the same woman. Saul surely had a substantial number of daughters as well as sons. & since ancient Hebrew didn't write vowels, different names are spelled the same way. A contradiction is still possible here, but it hardly ranks as "straight-forward" or one a serious spokesman must "grudgingly concede." (g) Gen. 14:14 says Lot is Abraham's kin. You presumably read the King James Version, or one of its descendants. However more precise works, such as the New English Bible, correct this error.

Editor's Response to Letter #633 (Part d)

Well, let's take them one at a time. (a) You say the conflict should actually be between 1,700 and 7,000, not 700 and 7,000. In other words, you aren't denying a contradiction exists; you are just saying one figure should be 1,700 rather than 700. I have no problem with that, although the King James is not the only version that says 700. If you'll read the Modern Language Version of 2 Sam. 8:4, you'll see that it agrees with the KJV by saying "700 hundred cavalry." So the KJV is not alone in its rendition of this verse. But regardless of which version you use, a contradiction exists.

(d) Thanks for noticing this editing error. The phrase "in Judah" should not have been gratuitously inserted, but nothing is changed by its admission or omission. The contradiction remains.

(e) Your criticism makes no sense. What do you mean by saying "there were neither 2,000 or 3,000 baths"? I'd suggest you reread 1 Kings 7:26 and 2 Chronicles 4:5. One says 2,000 baths and the other says 3,000 baths in the same account, and that's about all that needs to be said on that issue.

(f) The KJV is a more reliable translation of the Hebrew/Greek manuscripts of the Bible than many recent translations, because its creators were not nearly as concerned with politics, expediency, and the reconciliation of biblical contradictions as are modern biblicists. Religious domination was far more prominent 400 years ago than is true today, and for that reason translators didn't worry about critics or detractors. They knew the latter would most likely keep their mouths shut out of fear for life and limb. But that is no longer true, and translators now feel compelled to make politically expedient textual changes. And (f) provides a good example of same. "Michal" in 2 Sam. 21:8 has been changed to "Merab" in some translations to eliminate the contradiction. The translation you are using reveals only one alteration among many. Nevertheless your beloved change was more than the translators of some modern versions could stomach, so they stayed with the KJV. Note, for instance, the rendering of 2 Sam. 21:8 in the Masoretic Text, the NWT, and the ASV. The NIV has your "Merab", but with the following footnote: It is in two Hebrew manuscripts, some Septuagint manuscripts and Syriac, while most Hebrew and Septuagint manuscripts have "Michal." It doesn't take a rocket scientist to realize that the more opportunistic translators opted for the word "Merab" in order to escape this contradiction, even though they were fully aware of the fact that it is found in only 2 Hebrew and some Septuagint manuscripts, while all the other Hebrew and Septuagint manuscripts have "Michal." That's politics, pure and simple, my friend. Now you can see why I often call the Bible and its various versions a political book.

(g) Again you are relying upon the version you prefer--the New English Bible--and acting as if it were more reliable and up-to-date than the KJV. I beg to differ. If the KJV is so unreliable and in need of modernization, then why do the Masoretic text, certainly not a KJ descendant, and such modern versions as the NWT and the ASV, agree with the KJV? And why does the NASB, certainly no bastion of liberalism, say "relative" while conceding in a footnote that, literally translated, the word should be "brother"? No, my friend. The problem lies not with defective translations but with deceptive translators.

You may wish to argue that (g) is still an error in "a" bible. But this is to set up a straw man. We need merely open 2 of the many bibles on the market to demonstrate at least one of these is in error, and we don't need a newsletter to point out such an obvious point. A Bible is not THE Bible. It is something acknowledged to have been done by mortal, and fallible, hands. Errors in a Bible no more challenge the perfection of THE Bible than a smudge of ink on your newsletter would change the meaning of what you were trying to write.

We can note here that the Bible presumably doesn't exist, and may never have existed, all versions being in some degree or other in error in "copying" it. This can be interesting for the philosopher, but of no importance to us. The same is true of any document, including your newsletter and this letter. Each step in communication is subject to error. You didn't mean exactly what you wrote, and what you wrote is not exactly what is printed, and what is printed is not read as printed.... But when I write back to you, I have to overcome those errors and write about THE newsletter, not the physical one I hold in my hand. Else we are simply talking about different things and I am wasting my postage even more obviously than normal.

Editor's Response to Letter #633 (Part e)

In your rush to appear erudite and sophisticated you have not only thrown out the baby with the bath water, but flip-flopped in the process. With an added twist you are merely submitting a variation on an apologetic defense that has been addressed repeatedly in this newsletter. Again, I wish you had done your homework by reading our back issues. Most apologists adopting your line of defense will say that although all the physical bibles in our possession have errors and contradictions, the originals do not. You, however, have gone one step further by implicitly denying the Bible ever existed, by saying "the Bible presumably doesn't exist, and may never have existed, all versions being in some degree or other in error in 'copying' it." How you can copy something that never existed to begin with is enigmatic. And if the Bible never existed to begin with, then there is no THE Bible to go to. All we have under your scenario are manuscripts claiming to be the best version of the Bible to use, while in reality being copies of nothing. But earlier you stated, "Errors in a Bible no more challenge the perfection of THE Bible than a smudge of ink on your newsletter would change the meaning of what you were trying to write," all of which strongly implies you feel there was an original THE Bible. Your position is muddled, to say the least. Do you or do you not believe there was an original, genuine, bona fide copy of THE BIBLE, or at the very least manuscripts that would have comprised THE BIBLE had they ever been assembled into one book? If you say there was an original copy, then you are in the same predicament as countless other apologists we have confronted over the years, and I would definitely recommend you read past issues of BE to see our responses to them. If you say there was no original Bible, then you couldn't have a book that was divinely inspired according to Christian theology, because it never existed and, thus, could not have been written by God. According to Christian theology only THE BIBLE was written by God. All you could have is a writing resembling hundreds of other writings to one degree or another, which you feel is more reliable than the others, and you choose to call the Bible. But it couldn't be THE BIBLE. (To Be Continued)

Letter #634 from GN of Scottsdale, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Dennis.

I requested your Encyclopedia for my birthday. It arrived and I've been immersed in it ever since. I LOVE it. I read somewhere that we should tell you of any errors, etc. so that the next edition will be even more accurate than this one. I found a few things that are obviously slips or typos, and then I have a few comments that you might be interested in.

(The 16th point on page 116 in The Encyclopedia contends that every jot and tittle of the Old Law is to be upheld until heaven and earth passed away and all was fulfilled. It notes that Jesus violated the Old Law on numerous occasions and contended he would be severely punished according to Rev. 22:18-19 ("I warn every one who hears the words of the prophecy of this book: if any one adds to them, God will add to him the plagues described in this book, and if any one takes away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God will take away his share in the tree of life." GN says in response--Ed.), The book of Revelation is what is referred to at Rev. 22:18-19, not the entire bible. The bible was not yet put together into a book when Revelation was written. I think we would need Jesus deviating from the prophecy of the book of Revelation in order to make the point valid.

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part a)

I became aware of your observation many years ago but have always accepted the apologetic contention that Rev. 22:18-19 applies to the entire Bible. If that is how they view it, that's fine with me. If your assertion that it does not apply to the entire Bible is valid, I have no problem with that either, since I could also cite Deut. 4:2, 12:32, and Prov. 30:6.

Letter #634 Continues (Part b)

(The 13th point on page 134 in our book says, "In Matt. 21:22 Jesus seems to answer all our problems by saying, "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." John 14:14 holds out the same ephemeral promise by saying, "If ye ask anything in my name, I will do it." Yet, his promise is dashed by much more realistic comments found in Lam. 3:44 and Isa. 1:15 which say, respectively, "Thou (God--Ed.) hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through" and "When ye spread forth your hands, I (God--Ed.) will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear...." Those who think their prayers are going to be answered on a routine basis have discovered, like millions of Christians, that that is little more than a pipe dream. Millions of believers have prayed to Jesus millions of times, only to be met by disappointment and failure. His promise of the universal efficacy of prayer has proven as miserable a sham as his promise of all power to those with faith. GN says in response--Ed.), Regarding Isa. 1:15 an apologist would simply say that god would naturally not answer the prayers of those people because their hands were full of blood. The other excuse that they would likely come up with is that the O.T. verse in Isaiah was before Christ had reconciled man to God.

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part b)

An apologist can say anything he likes, GN. The question is whether or not it can be proven. In fact, can any evidence be offered? True! The last part of Isa. 1:15 says "your hands are full of blood" But what difference does that make? Matt. 21:22 and John 14:14 just as clearly assert you can do anything and no restrictions or limitations of this kind are involved. For understandable reasons, apologists only emphasize verses that have qualifiers. If you have one verse that says you can do anything and another that says you can do anything with provisos, which one is going to prevail? That a conflict exists is obvious. But there is no reason whatever to assume the former should be rejected or held subservient to the latter, as apologists repeatedly favor. Since the former encompasses the latter, shouldn't the former be adopted? After all, isn't that the rule of thumb followed by apologists, using the auto accident example to rationalize the different resurrection accounts? The larger number encompasses the smaller, and is therefore always to be deemed more reliable.

Letter #634 Continues (Part c)

(The 23rd point on page 136 in our book states that in Mark 8:35 Jesus said, "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it." What gospel? How on earth could Jesus have made this statement when there was no gospel during his lifetime? The gospel did not come onto the scene until years after the Crucifixion. GN says in response to this--Ed.),
Could Jesus have been using the word gospel to simply mean "good news?" If that is the case, then he could have made the statement about the gospel while still alive and it would make sense....

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part c)

You are altering the script, GN. It says "gospel," not "good news." Essentially your defense amounts to: That's what it says, even though that's not what's being said. If "good news" was meant, then "good news" should have been used. Are we going to go by speculation or the words lying before us in black and white? Because theories are a dime a dozen, more than guesswork is required.

Letter #634 Continues (Part d)

(On page 143 the 46th example states, "In Mark 9:50 Jesus says, 'Salt is good: but if salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it.'" In response to this GN says--Ed.),
The sentence should say, "If salt has lost ITS saltiness, not HIS saltiness."

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part d)

I agree with you, GN, that's what it should say and some versions do, but not the King James which I was using. Rule #1 in all textual criticism is to check your sources FIRST. As I've said before, picking words is like picking apples. Be very careful, because what you pick you may have to eat. Speaking as one who knows, if you don't do your homework, you can get awfully bloated and mighty sick. (To Be Continued)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #635 from FA of Santa Rosa, Cali fornia

(The 18th point on one of our pamphlets is: According to the text there are 29 cities listed in Joshua 15:21-32 (RSV). But one need only count them to see that the actual total is 36. Rev. BB latched onto the verse in the NIV which says "29 towns and their villages" to prove that 29 of the names were towns and the other 7 were villages. In the third part of my response I showed that Joshua 15:21 clearly states all 36 names were those of towns and none applied to villages. FA says in reaction to our exchange--Ed.),

Dear Dennis.

In your response to Letter #605 cc (Issue #150), I must say that neither Rev. BB nor you carefully read Joshua 15. While you are absolutely correct and Rev. BB is completely wrong, it requires no more proof than that found in the rest of Joshua 15.

- Josh. 15:33-36 lists 14 names and says "fourteen cities and their villages."
- Josh. 15:37-41 lists 16 names and says "sixteen cities and their villages."
- Josh. 15:42-44 lists 9 names and says "nine cities and their villages."
- Josh. 15:48-51 lists 11 names and says "eleven cities and their villages."
- Josh. 15:52-54 lists 9 names and says "nine cities and their villages."
- Josh. 15:55-57 lists 10 names and says "ten cities and their villages."
- Josh. 15:58-59 lists 6 names and says "six cities and their villages."

Josh. 15:60 lists 2 names and says "two cities and their villages."
Josh. 15:61-62 lists 6 names and says "six cities and their villages."

Following the same sequence, Joshua 15:21-32 clearly lists 36 names but says "all the cities are twenty and nine, with their villages." The Bible is wrong! Once again the Bible proves itself wrong and is your best argument and Rev. BB's worst enemy. While you used "a text out of context," you proved your case the hard way. Now you have the context to prove your case the easy way. Congratulations on your brilliant arguments.

Editor's Response to Letter #635

Dear FA.

I decided not to use your approach because there are 15 names mentioned in Joshua 15:33-36, not 14, as you assert. You are using an inaccurate textual count. Rev. BB might have used this as additional proof that the names of villages are included in the lists of names. Then, again, perhaps you are correct and I did prove my case the hard way, since all the others clearly support your conclusion. Incidentally, you might want to correct your observation that "Josh. 15:42-46 list 9 names and says 'nine cities and their villages'." The citation should be Joshua 15:42-44, not 15:42-46.

Letter #636 from an Unidentified Writer near Rockford, Illinois

On page 150-6 of BE in Letter #622 reference is made to "a little grammar of biblical Hebrew." Do you know the name and author and where I might be able to get it or any other information on this "grammar"?

Editor's Response to Letter #636

Letter #622 was written by a subscriber in Firenze, Italy. You would have to contact him for that information.

Letter #637 from FVH of Flagstaff, Arizona

I would like to subscribe to your Biblical Errancy publication. I need sources to refute statements made by people who write letters to the editor of our paper expounding the absolute inerrancy of the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #637

Welcome aboard! We are only too happy to provide information to someone who is confronting biblicists on their own turf via the media. You are engaged in that which goes to the very raison d'etre of this periodical.

Letter #638 from RW of Topeka, Kansas

Please send me information on your publication. In this area of the country, we need all the information we can get to help counter the "apologists" and similar Christian reconstructors of both scripture and history.

Editor's Response to Letter #638

Again we are glad to oblige. That's what we're here for.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) We are still seeking people who are willing to play our cable television tapes on their local public access channel. Please call or write anytime.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #633 from DA of La Puente, California Continues from Last Month (Part f)

[In our sample issue a critic, MJ, objected to what I said regarding the ark landing upon Mount Ararat as related in Gen. 8:4. He stated, "I wish to make a few comments on what you said about the Flood. First you quoted Gen. 8:4 ('And the ark rested in the 7th month, on the 17th day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat') and then you commented, 'How could the ark have rested upon several mountains at once?'" MJ then went on to register his objection to our criticism. Commenting upon our exchange DA said--Ed.), MJ has it all over you on the ark rested "upon the mountains of Ararat" issue. Your pointing out the distinction between mountains and mountain is clever. Your thinking it means anything is stupid.

As MJ points out, the statement reads perfectly properly as a plural. "I am in the mountains of California" is wrong because I am on the plains, not because I am in a solitary mountain. & as already noted, you have not shown this is the correct text of THE Bible. Again, the New English Bible, among others, does use the singular....

You ask if a woman turning into a pillar of salt is any more or less incredible than a ship landing on several mountains at once, and the answer is that while each is presumably impossible, landing on top of several mountains is much more incredible. It immediately springs to mind that this is not what the speaker means, that he means an area of mountains (& maybe not even a mountain at all), or that we misheard the plural. The pillar of salt, we may assume is a lie, but we don't assume the writer meant she became a pillar of the community, or was actually silt.

Editor's Response to Letter #633 (Part f)

Your train of thought, assuming there is one, often eludes me DA. At times I can't help but feel your disjointed synapses are trying to communicate something. In any event, I'll proceed on the assumption that I got your drift and respond to several of your comments. First, you stated, "I am in the mountains of California is wrong because I am on the plains, not because I am in a solitary mountain." It's difficult to make much sense out of this comment, since we are not talking about "in" the mountains but "on" the mountains. And how do "plains" or "in" a solitary mountain contribute to your point? The word "stupid" might be more appropriately applied elsewhere. Second, if "stupid" is applicable to the point I made, then why does the New English Bible buck the tide by saying "on a mountain in Ararat"? Today's English Version follows suit by saying "a mountain in the Ararat Range." Apparently some of your apologetic comrades felt the issue was of sufficient importance to warrant a change from the King James. You weakened your own argument by noting that the NEB uses the singular. Third, you say I "have not shown this is the correct text of THE Bible." Considering the fact that the NASB, the KJ, the NWT, Page 155-2 the BBE, the NAB, the Masoretic Text, the ASV, the NIV, and the JB all say "mountains" (plural), it would appear to be incumbent upon you to prove that "mountains" (plural) is not the correct text. Before doing so, you might also provide data to the effect that your comprehension of Hebrew exceeds that possessed by those who translated the NASB, the KJ, the NWT, the BBE, the ASV, the NIV, and the NAB. I have little doubt that you'll fail egregiously in this regard because your knowledge of Hebrew does not equal that of any committee member. Fourth, I fail to see why "landing on top of several mountains" is any more incredible than a woman turning into a pillar of salt. If anything, landing on several mountains simultaneously is less incredible, since a ship of horrendous size could do so. Fifth, you say, "It immediately springs to mind that this is not what the speaker means, that he means an area of mountains (and maybe not even a mountain at all)." Are we going to go by what the writer says or your speculations as to what you think he meant, what you feel he should have meant, or what it would be nice to believe he meant? He said "mountains" and since he is a writer of perfect Scripture (the autographs), he must have known what he meant, absent evidence to the contrary. Your employment of the "That's what it says but that's not what it means" defense is anemic at best considering your admission that maybe it's not even a mountain at all. You're trolling for a way out my friend. Sixth, what do you mean by saying that maybe "we misheard the plural." To whom are you referring? Who's we? Maybe you misheard something, but my hearing is excellent. I'm reading the page in front of me and it says "mountains." Seventh, what do you mean by saying "The pillar of salt, we may assume is a lie." From whence comes this idea? You are all over the board. One minute you sound like a fundamentalist and the next you resemble a liberal Christian. If the pillar of salt is a lie, then the Bible lied, and I don't have to tell you what the ramifications of that are. And finally, to add ideological chaos to confusion you say, "we don't assume the writer meant she became a pillar of the community, or was actually silt." We don't assume she became salt? Again who is we? Speak for yourself. If the word 'silt' is your substitution for the word "salt," then I most assuredly do come to that conclusion, since that's what the text says. You appear to be one of those capricious fundamentalists who don't hesitate to abandon the literal approach when the going gets rough.

Letter #633 Concludes (Part g)

Your answer to MJ gives another example of quibbling over nothing. The assertion that "all have sinned" conflicts with Gen. 6:9 and Job 1:1 (saying that Noah and Job were "perfect", or "blameless") does so only under certain definitions of the word. & under routine logic, we automatically reject those meanings that cause a conflict. "Perfect" does not always mean perfect. In fact, it probably rarely does. It's normal usage is that the errors and flaws are tiny, normally visible to the speaker or to anyone else likely to be viewing. Sports frequently speak of "perfect" performances that don't even meet this standard. They are merely extremely good. So it is quite correct to read that Gen. 6:9 and Job 1:1 in fact say only that Noah and Job were sinless by comparison to their fellow man, not by the stricter standards of God. Here too we can note that the translations vary and to establish a contradiction, you need to establish that "perfect" and not "very good" is the correct translation. (& you must prove that, not those who wish to call the Bible perfect must prove there is no error. For them to prove it would be proving a negative, a feat bordering on the impossible.... you must not only establish that the word not only could mean "perfect", but also that that is what the writer intended to say. I know, I know. This is making you work hard. Sorry, but that is still your burden. Somebody has got to do that work in order to establish there is a flaw, and you have nominated yourself.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #633 (Part g)

I really wish you had at least read the relevant back issues on this topic, DA, before sending such a poorly conceived monologue. First, quibbling has nothing to do with the issue. This clash nails the Bible to the wall for all to see and again shows that to deal in absolutes is to invite anguish. Second, rather than tax our readers by meticulously rehashing arguments that have been cited ad nauseum, I'll simply restate the basics. As I have said repeatedly: (a) Noah had to have been perfect or he had no more right to be on that boat than anyone else, (b) If Noah had not been perfect then the earth would have begun after the Flood with people corrupt like those who perished and the world would not have been purified. The Flood would have been for nought, and (c) The word "perfect" comes from the same Hebrew word that is used to call God perfect in Deut. 32:4. If you are going to argue that Gen. 6:9 is not asserting Noah is perfect, then I could argue with equal force that Deut. 32:4 is not arguing God is perfect. Third, you said, "'Perfect' does not always mean perfect. In fact, it probably rarely does." And white does not mean white and black does not mean black! That kind of defense demonstrates the lengths to which apologists will go to defend the indefensible and provides another reason why religion is intellectually bankrupt. You are confusing a word's accurate definition with how it is used in colloquial parlance. "Perfect" means without spot or blemish, undefiled. The fact that people mistakenly apply it to things which are not in fact perfect does not change the meaning of the term. You say that the word "perfect" does not always mean perfect. Oh yes it does. It's just not always used that way. And when God's perfect book uses the term, one would expect nothing less than absolute precision. After all, that's God speaking, not your average Joe on the street. The analogy you draw between sports figures being labeled perfect and Noah/Job won't stand the strain because listeners realize the word "perfect" with respect to sports performances is actually false. That's understood, but it is not understood with respect to Noah and Job for reasons already listed. You say that "perfect does not always mean perfect. In fact, it probably rarely does. It's normal usage is that the errors and flaws are tiny...." I don't care how tiny the flaws are, if they exist at all, perfection is out the window. Fourth, you say that Gen. 6:9 and Job 1:1 in fact say only that Noah and Job were sinless in comparison to their fellow man. Then they weren't sinless! They were sinners like everyone else. They either are or they aren't. There's no in between. Fifth, you say I, "need to establish that 'perfect' and not 'very good' is the correct translation." Correction! I don't need to establish anything. You need to establish that your definition of the word "perfection," which isn't even a definition but merely a description of how the word is used, is more valid than the dictionary's definition. The people who translated the King James and other versions used the word "perfect" or a comparable term. By being opposed to their choice, you are saying you could have done a better job of picking the right term. At this juncture you'll again need to establish your credentials in Hebrew. Just how well do you know this language? You fail to realize the burden of proof lies on him who alleges. I don't have to prove the word "perfect" is the right term to use; you have to prove it is the wrong one. You are the one asserting that you could have done a better job of translating than a team of Hebraic scholars. You are the one saying they chose the wrong word and should have used "very good" or something comparable. I have no problem with their translation of the relevant Hebrew term into the English word "perfect"; you do. Sixth, you say that, "you must not only establish that the word not only could mean 'perfect,' but also that that is what the writer intended to say." How silly! That's what he said, isn't it. I take him at his word. No, my friend. You have to prove that's not what he meant, despite the fact that that's exactly what he said. Seventh, your final sentences could be more appropriately applied to yourself. You state, "I know, I know. This is making you work hard. Sorry, but that is still your burden. Somebody has got to do that work in order to establish there is a flaw, and you have nominated yourself." Apparently you're unable to realize you've described your own dilemma. Last, but not least, you said, "...under routine logic, we automatically reject those meanings that cause a conflict." Are you serious? That's your idea of routine logic? That's your idea of objective scholarship? No wonder it's crucial that children be kept as far from this ruinous mental blindness that masquerades under the name of religion as is possible. In truth, unencumbered, open minded, dispassionate observers don't automatically reject anything. They weigh, quantify, and analyze everything on its merits and only discard that which the evidence shows to be wanting. From your perspective anything that conflicts with the Bible should be automatically discarded regardless of its merits. That's nothing more than another variation on the time honored maxim: My mind is made up; don't confuse me with facts.

Letter #639 from NB of Tucson, Arizona (Part a)

[On page 4 in the 148th issue we noted that the Bible erred when it said the bat is a bird (Lev. 11:13, 19). Rev. BB said in response to this, "Once again, you have a translation difficulty, and all you have 'proven' is that that the KJV is generally a less reliable translation of the Bible." I responded by noting that the NASB, the NEB, the ASV and other versions have the same terminology as the KJV. Taking the side of Rev. BB, NB said in response to our dialogue--Ed.),

Dear Dennis I have a few comments regarding BE #148. First, in discussing Letter #605 you say: "the terminology of the NASB, the NEB, the ASV and 'other' versions is no different from that of the KJV." I beg to differ. You didn't mention the NIV, but I assume you read it.

Editor's Response to Letter #639 (Part a)

Dear NB. I said the NASB, the NEB, the ASV and other versions are in agreement with the KJV. I didn't say that included every version on the market.

Letter #639 Concludes (Part b)

...Now as to resurrections. On page 148-3 you say you "mentioned more than 3 resurrections and they all preceded that of Jesus." Pray tell, what were they? I know of only three in the OT, and two of them (the translations of Enoch [Gen. 5:24] and Elijah [2 Kings 2:11] were not really "resurrections", in the sense that neither Enoch nor Elijah rose from the "dead." Which brings us to the resurrection by Elijah of the son of the widow of Zarephath (1 Kings 17:22). Would you please cite at least two others in the OT?...

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #639 (Part b)

I have never referred to the translations of Enoch and Elijah as resurrections and you appear to be of like mind. So why did you even mention them, unless you're feebly trying to build a straw man. They weren't dead, so how could they have been resurrected? To answer your specific question, besides the 1 Kings 17:22 example you mentioned, I have always cited 1 Sam. 28:7, 11, 15, 2 Kings 4:32, 34, 35, and 13:21, as other examples of OT resurrections.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #634 from GN of Scottsdale, Arizona Continues from Last Month (Part e)

[The first messianic prophecy referred to on page 153 in our book The Encyclopedia of Biblical Errancy is Gen. 3:15 which says, "I (God--Ed.) will put enmity between thee (the evil serpent--Ed.) and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed (allegedly Jesus--Ed.); it shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel." Christians interpret this as meaning a woman (Mary--Ed.) will give forth a seed (Jesus--Ed.) who will fight the devil's descendants.--Ed. GN says in this regard, There is no proof that Jesus bruised the head of Satan. Jesus was the one crucified (more than a heel wound), and we can surely see the works of evil manifest in the world daily. This prophecy certainly was not fulfilled in any way. Jesus is the one who died suffering the more serious of the two wounds by dying.

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part e)

What can I say other than your observation has merit.

Letter #634 Continues (Part f)

[Among the list of God's deeds found on page 171 in the Encyclopedia is the assertion that he delivered a man, Job, into Satan's hands. GN says in response--Ed.), God not only delivered "a man, Job, into Satan's hands," he delivered the INNOCENT man, Job, into Satan's hands. It's not the first time that god had little regard for the innocent. God had no qualms about demanding the murder of the innocent Isaac to test Abraham's heart (one has to wonder what kind of heart god wants in a man), nor did he anguish over the death of the innocent firstborns in Egypt. Handing innocent men, women, and children over to death is one of the great pleasures of the O.T. god. How about the murdering of David's innocent baby by God for the sins of David? Talk about abortion. At least a fetus isn't born yet.

Letter #634 Continues (Part g)

[Among the list of reprehensible deeds by the patriarchs on page 184 in the Encyclopedia we referred to the fact that Lot offered his virgin daughters to a mob in Gen. 19:8. GN says in response--Ed.], Lot offered his daughters to be RAPED and perhaps worse. If you could add the word RAPE, the incident would carry more weight.

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part g)

I didn't use the word because the text does not directly say they were raped, although that is certainly a reasonable assumption.

Letter #634 Continues (Part h)

[On page 186 in our book we listed reprehensible deeds performed by major biblical matriarchs. GN felt we omitted some good examples and stated--Ed.], Sarah also wanted Hagar and her son thrown out into the desert to be abandoned because of her jealousy, and don't forget Esther who got herself all oiled up to go to bed (before marriage) with a pagan king. Rachel was a drug addict as proven by her desire for the mandrakes that Leah's son had found. Mandrakes are a narcotic.

Letter #634 Continues (Part i)

[In the Encyclopedia we note that God said to Eve because of her behavior, "I will greatly multiply your pain in childbearing; in pain you shall bring forth children." GN says in response--Ed.], How could god "multiply" a pain that Eve supposedly had never felt before?

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part i)

Interesting question!

Letter #634 Continues (Part j)

[On page 234 in the Encyclopedia we cited Psalm 55:23 which says among other things that "bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days." GN felt we neglected to mention the fact that--Ed.],

Jesus was supposedly "righteous" and yet he "fell" and did not "live out half his days"--just like the wicked.

Editor's Response to Letter #634 (Part j)

If I'm not mistaken, I did mention Jesus in this regard.

Letter #634 Concludes (Part k)

Dallas Theological Seminary Professor Charles Ryrie claims Paul is not the accepted author of Hebrews - "author unknown".... If one doesn't even know who authored a book, how would one know if they were honorable people or not. This is one of my arguments about Moses writing the Law. Why would God choose a murderer to tell man the will of God?.... I'm very interested in all aspects of the bible and its teachings. If I am not correct in the above, please let me know so that I can correct my records. I do not want to make mistakes when talking to religious friends and foes. I want to thank you so much for publishing the Encyclopedia . It will be a great help to me. You really have the gift. Much affection.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #634 (Part k)

I left out parts of your letter GN because I felt they weren't as strong as the ones included. But much of what you say has merit. Thanks for the compliments and keep up the good work.

Letter #640 from FA of Santa Rosa, California

Dear Dennis. Thank you for your correction on Joshua 15:42-44 on page 6 in the last issue. The reason I included Joshua 15:33-36 as 14 names instead of the 15 listed was that in my KJV, between Gederah and Gederothaim, the word "and" has a marginal reading of "or." I took this to mean that the two names were interchangeable names of the same city.

Letter #641 from RR of Altamonte Springs, Florida

Dear Dennis McKinsey. I certainly agree with the writer of letter #619 in the May 1995 issue of BIBLICAL ERRANCY. When I saw THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF BIBLICAL ERRANCY in the Prometheus catalog, I ordered it immediately. It took a few months for it to come, but I have been reading it for several weeks now. IT IS FANTASTIC!!!

This kind of book has been needed for years (centuries) to try to correct the misunderstanding of what the BIBLE is and what it contains. I am amazed at the people who never examine their "book" nor consider how it came to have such high regard.

People are simply brainwashed from infancy to believe all that "stuff."

Noah's ark is a very attractive story - with all the animals, etc. for even very little babies and young children. What a travesty! I liked what you said about Noah in the May 1995 BB #149. How true - if God had plans to correct his "mistakes" of creating such horrible sinners previously, then to start over with Noah would have been a good idea (??) but only if Noah had been a perfect example.

I was once a Seventh-day Adventist, having been taught to "love" the Bible from childhood. But after 40 years I began to question and use my brain to say WHY WOULD GOD DO THAT? WHY WOULD GOD (JESUS) SAY THAT? And after about ten years of studying philosophy, etc. I now agree with you completely.

Editor's Response to Letter #641

Dear RR. Thanks for the accolades. Many Christians fail to see that it would be ridiculous for God to have drowned everyone but Noah in order to cleanse the world and then to have started over with someone who was corrupt like all those who drowned. This is additional proof that when the Bible said "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations," it meant just that. He had to have been perfect.

Letter #642 from LC of Lufkin, Texas

I bought you book and am very happy with it. Although I have a complete set of your newsletters, I find it much more convenient to have your work all together in a single volume. Thanks so much for all that you have done, and continue to do, in exposing the negative side of the Bible.

Letter #643 from PD of Lapeer, Michigan

Dear Dennis. Two weeks ago I went to an Office...Store in Flint and as I was getting out of the car a minister approached and asked if I was saved, believed in Jesus and all the other non-sense that they believe it is their responsibility to intrude into other peoples' lives. He handed me one of his pamphlets as well. If he has the right to hand tracts to me, then I likewise have an equal right to hand him something in return. He was in for a surprise because I carry your BE tracts in my wallet.

I must have been muttering under my breath about the nerve of those people because a young woman who works in the store overheard me and came up to me and said she was in full agreement. She went on to tell me that she lived in a small four-square block housing development with four fundamentalist churches competing against each other and relentlessly trying to have her join their church. Each of them according to her is somewhat in disagreement with each other. She indicated she'd like to be able to turn the tables on them somehow or, at least, become more knowledgeable on the religious positions. I mentioned to her that I handed the preacher in the parking lot a couple of pamphlets on biblical errors and questions. She said she'd like to see one, so I gave her my last two. When I was back in the store a couple of weeks later she told me she and her friends liked what they read.

I believe she is just out of high school. She's never heard of freethought, rationalism, humanism, and doesn't know how, who, or where to go for information. The local library was of no real help to her. I agreed to help her and gave her a few issues of your publication and will help her as long as she so desires. Perhaps she will write you although she may be apprehensive not wanting her parents to know.

Now, I would like to restock my BE pamphlets. Is the price still ten cents apiece? I would like 50 of each; so let me know the cost....

Editor's Response to Letter #643

Dear PD. Our pamphlets are still 10 cents each and thank you so much for using them in the manner intended. You probably affected that woman more than you realize.

Letter #644 from KJ of Blaine, Minnesota

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I have ordered several of your publications and commentaries which have been extremely informative and beneficial to the research that I have undertaken to try to enlighten my husband (a Jehovah's Witness for 6 years) about biblical issues. I wish that I could have known about your literature much sooner, but I have only recently changed my beliefs from Christian to humanistic/agnostic.

Forrest Carroll, editor of the Family of Humanists Newsletter, sent me a suggestion from TG (Freethought Observer). TG noticed a letter (in your June, 1995, issue of BE) from RG of Brooklyn, Ohio, who was an "ex-JW who wasted the first 35 years of his life on religious nonsense." TG thought that you might be able to put me in touch with RG and that he might be able to give me some advice on the best ways to help my husband. The only information I've gotten from ex-JW's has been from people who are involved in some other fundamentalist Christian group. I would really appreciate learning about the insights of an ex-JW who is no longer religious. Perhaps RG could send me a short letter explaining why he left the JW organization and what points or issues I should concentrate on when I have discussions with my husband about the Bible and the WT Society. Please forward my letter (or a copy of it) to RG in Brooklyn, Ohio. Thank you so much for your assistance in this matter, and thank you for all your wonderful work over the years in the struggle to inform people about biblical errancy.

Editor's Response to Letter #644

Dear KJ. We are only too happy to respond to your request and hope RG can provide you with the kind of information you so obviously desire. I sympathize with your plight and can only imagine the agony of being married to a fundamentalist Christian. I work with fundamentalists and cringe nearly every time I hear their answer to personal, societal, national or international problems. It isn't so much their description of problems and their disdain for same that alienates me as their suggested causes and proposed solutions. I am as opposed to pornography, prostitution, drug legalization, and sex/violence in the media as they are but our suggested causes and solutions for these ills differ dramatically. Teaching and preaching are far less effective than environmentally improving and enhancing. Religious people just don't realize that the ills of mankind will never be abolished by getting the garbage out of people but only by getting people out of the garbage.

Letter #645 from SM of Torrance, California

Dear Dennis. Please send me a copy of your book. I have purchased many copies of your newsletter, and used them six months ago when I debated a local pastor at UCLA on the issue of biblical errancy. He was so overwhelmed with all the examples I provided, it was almost embarrassing.

Editor's Response to Letter #645

Dear SM. Keep up your excellent work. You are using this publication in precisely the manner intended. If only you could be cloned!

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) Some of our critics seem to be under the mistaken impression that our failure to respond to their letters in a timely fashion exposes fearfulness, apprehension, and timidity on our part. Rest assured that we are not at a loss for answers. That'll be the day! Our real dilemma lies in the fact that we are being inundated with correspondence. It's never been as voluminous, both pro and con. One stack of letters alone is half a foot high. We only ask writers to be patient and hopefully most will receive a response. (b) We still need volunteers to help circulate our cablevision public access tapes. Incidentally, we'd be very interested in not only hearing from everyone regarding their negative and positive experiences with respect to airing our programs but also their opinions of our presentations per se.

Issue #156 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

Dec. 1995

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

COMMENTARY

Having obtained permission from Dan Barker of the Freedom From Religion Foundation, we're printing the following abbreviated version of his pamphlet entitled WHY JESUS, some of which came from BE according to Dan. He is a former fundamentalist minister who is quite knowledgeable with respect to Scripture and provides chapter and verse to buttress many of his points. Because fundamentalists and evangelicals have been talking incessantly in recent years about the importance of Jesus as a role model and in the maintenance of "family values," the following is more relevant than ever. Dan states,

"Jesus has been held in high regard by Christians and non-Christians alike. Regardless of whether he existed in history, or whether he was divine, many have asserted that the NT Christ character was the highest example of moral living. Many believe his teachings, if truly understood and followed, would make this a better world. Is this true? Does Jesus merit the widespread adoration he has received? Let's look at what he said and did.

WAS JESUS PEACEABLE AND COMPASSIONATE? --The birth of Jesus was heralded with "Peace on Earth," yet Jesus said, "Think not that I am come to send peace: I came not to send peace but a sword" (Matt. 10:34), "He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one" (Luke 22:36), "But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me" (Luke 19:27). In a parable, but spoken of favorably, the burning of unbelievers during the Inquisition was based on the words of Jesus: "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth..., and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned."

Jesus looked at his disciples "with anger" (Mark 3:5) and attacked merchants with a whip (John 2:15). He showed his respect for life by drowning innocent animals (Matt. 8:32) and refused to heal a sick child until pressured by the mother (Matt. 15:22-28).

The most revealing aspect of his character was his promotion of eternal torment. "The Son of man (Jesus himself) shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 13:41-42). "And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched" (Mark 9:43). Is this nice? Is it exemplary to make your point with threats of violence? Is hell a kind and peaceful idea?

DID JESUS PROMOTE FAMILY VALUES? --"If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke 14:26). "I am come to set man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household" (Matt. 10:35-36). When one of his disciples requested time off for his father's funeral, Jesus rebuked him by saying "Let the dead bury their dead" (Matt. 8:22). Jesus never used the word "family" and he never married or fathered children. To his own mother, he said, "Woman, what have I to do with thee?" (John 2:4).

WHAT WERE HIS VIEWS ON EQUALITY AND SOCIAL JUSTICE?--Jesus encouraged the beating of slaves: "And that servant (read: slave), which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did accor- ding to his will shall be beaten with many stripes" (Luke 12:47). He never denounced servitude, but quite the contrary, incorporated the master-slave relationship into many of his parables. He did nothing to alleviate poverty. Rather than sell some expensive ointment to help the poor, Jesus wasted it on himself, saying, "Ye have the poor with you always" (Mark 14:3-7). No women were chosen as disciples (or apostles-Ed.) or invited to the Last Supper.

WHAT MORAL ADVICE DID JESUS GIVE? --"There be eunuchs (Webster defines a eunuch as 'a castrated man in charge of an Oriental harem or...any man or boy lacking normal function of the testes, as through castration or disease'--Ed.), which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it." (Matt. 19:12). Some believers, including church father Origen, took this verse literally and castrated themselves. Even metaphorically, this advice is in poor taste.

If you do something wrong with your eye or hand, cut/pluck it off (Matt. 5:29-30, in a sexual context). Marrying a divorced woman is adultery (Matt. 5:32). Don't plan for the future (Matt. 6:34), don't save money (Matt. 6:19-20), or become wealthy (Mark 10:21-25). Sell everything you have and give it to the poor (Luke 12:33). Don't work to obtain food (John 6:27). Don't have sexual urges (Matt. 5:28). Make people want to persecute you (Matt. 5:11). Let everyone know you are better than the rest (Matt. 5:13-16). Take money from those who have no savings and give it to rich investors (Luke 19:23-26). If someone steals from you, don't try to get it back (Luke 6:30). If someone hits you, invite them to do it again (Matt. 5:39). If you lose a lawsuit, give more than the judgment (Matt. 5:40). If someone forces you to walk a mile, walk two miles (Matt. 5:41). If someone asks you for anything, give it to them without question (Matt. 5:42).

Is any of this wise? Is this what you would teach your children?

WAS JESUS RELIABLE?--Jesus told his disciples that they would not die before his second coming: "There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom" (Matt. 16:28) and "Behold I come quickly" (Rev. 3:11). It's been 2,000 years, and believers are still waiting for his "quick" return.

He mistakenly claimed that the mustard seed is "the least of all seeds" (Matt. 13:32), and that salt could "lose its savour" (Matt. 5:13). Jesus said that whoever calls somebody a "fool" shall be in danger of hell fire (Matt. 5:22), yet he called people "fools" himself (Matt. 23:17). Regarding his own truthfulness, Jesus gave two conflicting opinions: "If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true" (John 5:31) and "Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true" (John 8:14).

WAS JESUS A GOOD EXAMPLE?--He irrationally cursed a fig tree for being fruitless out of season (Matt. 21:18-19 and Mark 11:13-14). He broke the law by stealing corn on the Sabbath (Mark 2:23), and he encouraged his disciples to take a horse without asking permission (Matthew 21). The "humble" Jesus said that he was "greater than the temple" (Matt. 12:6), "greater than Jonah" (Matt. 12:41), and "greater than Solomon" (Matt. 12:42). He appeared to suffer from a dictator's "paranoia" when he said, "He that is not with me is against me" (Matt. 12:30).

WHY JESUS?--Although other verses can be cited that portray Jesus in a different light, they do not erase the disturbing side of his character. The conflicting passages only prove the NT is contradictory.

The "Golden Rule" was said many times by earlier religious leaders. [Confucius said, "Do not unto others that you would not have them do unto you"]. "Turn the other cheek" encourages victims to invite further violence. "Love thy neighbor" applied only to fellow believers. (Neither the Jews nor Jesus showed much love to foreign religions). A few of the Beatitudes ("Blessed are the peacemakers") are acceptable, but they are all conditioned on future rewards, not based on respect for human life or values. (As I have said so often, you should do the right because it is the right thing to do, not because you expect rewards or kickbacks someday-Ed.)

On the whole, Jesus said little that was worthwhile. He introduced nothing new to ethics (except hell). He instituted no social programs. Being "omniscient," he could have shared some useful science or medicine, but he appeared ignorant of such things (as if his character were merely the invention of writers stuck in the first century).

Many scholars doubt the historical existence of Jesus. No first-century writer confirms the Jesus story. The NT is internally contradictory and contains historical errors. The story is filled with miracles and other outrageous claims. Consisting mostly of material borrowed from pagan religions, the Jesus story appears to be cut from the same fabric as all other myths and fables.

WHY WOULD JESUS BE SPECIAL?--It would be more reasonable and productive to emulate real, flesh-and-blood human beings who have contributed to humanity--mothers who have given birth, scientists who have alleviated suffering, social reformers who have fought injustice--than to worship a character of such dubious qualities as Jesus."

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #646 from DA of La Puente, California (Part a)

Dear McKinsey. Got your Biblical Errancy #149, and return some comments. 2 issues in a row devoted to letters? It seems a bit excessive. You had best consider ways to reduce that. One obvious way is stop printing letters that say how great you are doing. No doubt you like to hear from such clearly perceptive writers, but we have no need to hear praise of you. We see your stuff directly and can make up our own minds. (However, the converse is not true. We do need to see the criticism of you because this may be something we have missed.) In effect, letters praising you are just advertisements, and a waste of limited space. So unless the writer is suggesting something, just take pleasure from the letter and file it. Even if a printable suggestion is made, the compliments should be edited out or down.

Editor's Response to Letter #646 (Part a)

Dear DA. I'd be more inclined to take your letter to heart if I felt confident that it didn't reek with ulterior motives. For several reasons I'm inclined to look upon it as an insidious attempt to squelch euphonious comments by your opposition masked under some objectively-disguised sophistry. First, complimentary letters are inserted not so much to elevate my ego or spirits as to raise those of everyone involved in our cause. Critics of the Bible receive so little support, commendation, or exaltation that it is good for everyone to be aware of the fact that our efforts are not in vain. Complimentary letters with respect to everyone aiding our cause have been included. We all feel better when one of our own is recognized for his or her contribution to the betterment of mankind. You, on the other hand, merely seek to short-circuit the process by making it appear as if I am on some kind of ego trip. Is that really your concern? I doubt it. Otherwise you'd be sending comparable letters to your Christian compatriots in the media who never tire of singing praises to the efforts of other biblicists or spouting "Praise the Lord." How many letters have you sent to Billy Graham, Pat Robertson, Jerry Falwell, and other emissaries of escapism? If you were really tired of hearing somebody or something praised without surcease, you'd be sending them letters incessantly. But you aren't! Why? Because you're in league with their proselytism, that's why. Some of their TV shows reek with so much mutual-adulation and euphonious encomiums that it's all I can do to retain my last repast. But you dislike hearing our efforts complimented, so you wrote your derogatory letter. If you get sick of hearing someone praised, then you must really become nauseated every time you view a Christian propaganda broadcast and hear all those interminable "Praise be to God," Hallelujah Jesus," or "Praise the Lord" accolades that closely resemble chalk scraping a blackboard. If letters in praise of me and those aiding our cause "are just advertisements and a waste of limited space," what do you call all that music, literature, and talk that appears on the Christian media with respect to Jesus and his mutually congratulating propagandists? You must think that's Madison Avenue personified. Ad agencies gone berserk!

Second, you say, "We do need to see the criticism of you because this may be something we have missed." I think a more candid reason is that you want as much negative publicity with respect to this publication as is possible. You aren't so much concerned with truth and balance as discrediting this periodical by any means possible with disingenuous rhetoric concealed under an aura of objectivity. Frankly, I think you're only trying to fake-out our readers.

And third, most of the complimentary letters that are published are accompanied by additional information and don't dwell merely on my ideological assets or those of others. Until recently the overwhelming majority of letters received by us have been printed, so what you see is what we get and reflects the opinions of our subscribers. People can make up their minds with respect to the validity of what I am saying, but they have little idea of how it is being received by others unless nearly every letter is published. How many letters have you written to your Christian compatriots complaining about the obvious absence of critical letters and negative comments in their publications and media presentations? I have no doubt the answer is ZERO. Don't you do all you can to discourage indoctrination, brainwashing and one-sided monologues? Of course not! You don't really care. You just play the part.

Letter #646 Concludes (Part b)

You had best try to edit your own answers. It is, granted, difficult to impossible to respond to an error within the limited space the error takes, but you should still take as a standard that your response should be no longer than the letter. One way to do that is to drop things like: ad homin (sic) attacks "..(sic) borders on incoherent if not puerile." "(sic) possess an amazing ability to express yourself (sic) in rambling, disjointed, uncommunicative sophistic rhetoric..(sic) non sequiturs, invalid analogies, and straw men are your stock-in-trade." Really now. This is just being nasty. (& wrong, HL was in fact superior to your response.) It does nothing to settle the argument and has been identified as a basic fallacy long ago. & you can edit out reprints of routine letters to others such as GL.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #646

My answers are edited or isn't that obvious. If our full repertoire of repartee were unleashed, some answers to letters like yours would consume an entire issue. You don't know how difficult it is to straighten out some people who are light years from reality. To really be precise, correcting some sentences would take an entire issue. Second, ad hominem arguments and "nasty" rhetoric are by no means endemic to my approach as any objective observer must willingly concede. Acerbic replies only come to the fore in response to even more caustic and unjustified rhetoric on the part of my detractors. The primary difference, however, is that my fusillade is considerably more accurate and potent. Third, anytime you think someone's response was "superior" to my analysis, don't just say so and run to the hills for cover; prove it. Assertions aren't evidence and beliefs aren't factual equivalents. I know of nothing that HL said that eclipsed my observations. And finally, as far editing out is concerned, I realize that's probably your forte but it has never been mine. The religious crowd is far more adept and experienced at editing out and censoring than I will ever be. Your suggested screening of GL's letter (#618 in the May 1995 Issue) is unwarranted in view of the fact that his comments and social activism are by no means routine. You are probably really bothered by the fact that he denounced religion in no uncertain terms and spent considerable energy seeing that our Encyclopedia was placed in his local school libraries beside other material on the same topic. GL was as entitled to a response as much as anyone else. You don't have to be an orator gifted in the art of grandiloquent rhetoric and original thought to receive a hearing in BE. After all you're getting a hearing aren't you.

Letter #647 from RVH of Simi Valley, California

Dear Dennis. Thanks for your reply to letter #621. I hope I haven't confused you. What I meant to refer to were resurrections where the resurrectee did it himself--without relation to some outside event, person, or power. To my knowledge, only Jesus has done this--i.e. said, "I'll be back" and done it. Personally I don't care, but my Christian friends say this is why Jesus' resurrection is so important. Can you think of any similar cases? I'm gonna battle these people on their own ground if I can. I wonder what it is that makes Christ's self-resurrecting any more miraculous than the others.
