

BIBLICAL ERRANCY

Issue No. 1

January 1983

COMMENTARY

(A) One of the most important concepts in Christianity is original sin or the belief that all mankind has inherited a sinful nature brought about by the acts of Adam and Eve.

Rom. 5:12 "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned:"

Rom. 5:19 "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners,..."

1Cor. 15:22 "For as in Adam all die, ..."

Yet, no amount of theological reasoning can make an inherently unjust idea seem right. Punishing billions of people for the acts of one is not only inherently unfair and unwarranted but also in opposition to other Biblical verses such as:

Deut. 24:16 "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers (2Chron.25:54) :every man shall be put to death for his own sin." (2 Kings 14:6)

Ezek. 18:20 "The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him."

Ezek.33:20 "O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways."

Jer. 31:29-30 "In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge."

Rom. 2:6 "Who will render to every man according to his deeds."

Ezek. 18:4 "... the soul that sinneth, it shall die."

Each of these verses shows that every person should only be punished for those sins which he commits, not those of others.

Original sin makes about as much sense as if I were sitting at home one evening and the following occurred. The police came to my door and stated I was under arrest because my father in Europe just shot and killed someone. I responded by asking what that had to do with me and they said, "He's your father isn't he?"

(B) Another false conception held by many Christians is that the Bible is without contradictions. Few beliefs are more erroneous. For this reason, contradictory statements will be highlighted not only in this issue of Biblical Errancy but all those that follow. The following examples are only a fraction of those that could be mentioned:

Rom.3:23 "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."

1Kgs. 8:46 "...for there is no man that sinneth not,...."

(2Chr. 6:36)

Prov.20:9 "Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?"

Eccl. 7:23 "For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not."

Mark 10:18 "And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God."

Rom. 3:10 "As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one."

(Also 1 John 1:8 & 10, Rom. 3:12, 5:12, Gal. 3:22)

Versus

Gen. 6:9 "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God."

Job 1:1 There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil.

Job 1:8 "...my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?" (Job 2:3)

Gen. 7:1 "And the LORD said unto Noah, Come thou and all thy house into the ark; for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation."

Luke 1:5-6 "In the days of Herod, the king of Judaea, there was a priest named Zacharias, of the division of Abia: and he had a wife of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth. And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.(RSV)

(C) Another clear contradiction concerns whether or not God repents.

Num. 23:19 "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent."

1Sam. 15:29 "And also the Strength of Israel will not lie nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent."

Versus

Jonah 3:10 "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil, that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not."

1Sam.15:11 "It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king...."

Exod. 32:14 And the LORD repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

Psalms.42:10 "... for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you."

Gen. 6:6 "And it repented the LORD that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart."

1Sam. 15:35 "...and the LORD repented that he had made Saul king over Israel."

(D) One final contradiction is worthy of note. It concerns the question of whether or not God's face has been seen.

John 1:18 "No man hath seen God at any time;..."

Exod. 33:11 "And the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."

John 6:46 "Not that any man hath seen the Father, save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father."

1John 4:12 "No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us."

Versus

Gen. 32:30 "And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved."

Exod. 33:11 "And the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."

Num. 14:14 "...that thou LORD art seen face to face,..."

Job 42:5 "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth thee."

Deut. 34:10 "And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the LORD knew face to face,..."

Deut. 5:4 "The LORD talked with you face to face...."

(also Psalm 63:2 Isa.6:1 & 6:5, Amos 7:7-8, Ezek. 20:35, Ex 24:9-10)

REVIEWS

In April 1982 Zondervan Publishing House issued one of the most comprehensive writings in recent memory to justify Biblical fallacies. Entitled An Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties, the promotional campaign by "Christian Readers News" describes it as a work which "exhaustively studies every difficult passage in the Bible-Genesis to Revelation." This is erroneous as this issue of Biblical Errancy, and those that follow, will show. For example, the author, Gleason Archer, a professor at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, neither explained how we could all be victims of original sin because of the deeds of one nor how Noah could be perfect if all have sinned.

Incidentally, it is always interesting to note the terminology employed by Biblical apologists with respect to contradictions. They are rarely referred to as contradictions per se. Such words a "difficulties," "discrepancies," "detractions," and "problem," are far more evident than contradictions, fallacies, and falsehoods. Using the former denotes an obvious attempt to minimize inconsistencies. A minor discrepancy sounds far less serious than a contradiction.

(E) What then are Gleason Archer's explanations for the above mentioned contradictions. In regard to the problems of God's repentance, he offers the following:

"...it is a mistake to infer from this (God's omniscience-ed) that he is incapable of emotions or reactions to willful depravity of his creatures."(p. 80)

(1) If the word repent means anything, it says, I somehow made a mistake, not that I merely regret the results of my acts. I went down the wrong road. If you regret the outcome you are also saying, I wish I had done something else. (2) But even if repent is restricted to the very narrow sense of emotion and remorse, the fact remains that God does not repent in any sense. 1 Sam. 15:29 and Num. 23:19 makes this quite clear. Whether he is sorrowful or not is irrelevant. God does not repent, period. Apologists use the phrases universally when it suits their purpose, but in a restricted sense when it is obviously wrong to employ the broad sense.

After saying God could repent in a sorrowful or remorseful sense, Archer states:

"Yet when it comes to His announced covenant purposes toward His covenant people, God is indeed incapable of repentance."

(1) But there is no evidence of such a distinction in scripture. Num. 23:19 and 1 Sam 15:29 says that God does not repent. They do not say this applies only to those situations which involved "His announced covenant purposes toward His covenant people." Archer has inserted a provision which clearly nowhere in evidence.

In groping for a way out of this quagmire, Archer has grasped at two straws. Readers are free to choose either. "Repent" is only meant in an anthropomorphic sense or God does not repent "when it comes to His announced covenant purposes toward His people." There is not the slightest evidence for either assumption.

(F) With respect to seeing God's face Archer says: "The Bible draws a clear distinction between gazing on God in his unveiled glory and beholding a representative or reflection of God..."

(1) The issue concerns whether or not God's face is seen, not whether his glory or a mere reflection is viewed. Archer has reframed and rewritten the problem. Ex. 33:11 and Gen. 32:30 clearly say God's face was seen, not a representation.

(2) The Bible draws no distinction in these verses between his glory and a mere reflection. Archer has artificially created a difference which does not exist. He is trying to escape from the problem by admitting a reflection of God was seen but not his essence, his glory.

Archer continues:

"John 1:18 declares, "no man has seen God at any time (that is, his full glory as Creator and Sovereign of all the universe.

(1) John 1:18 says nothing about "his full glory as Creator and Sovereign of all the universe." There is no such proviso, not even implicitly.

Archer then says: "We behold the face of God by faith as we look to Christ, 'He who has seen Me has seen the Father.' (John 14:9) God therefore showed His face and declared His glory through His Son, who was God Incarnate."

(1) Yes, the Bible does say men see God through Jesus but it also says God is seen face to face. The latter is prominent also. The Bible nowhere states that one excludes the other.

Archer proceeds: "God showed His face through an angel (as at the interview with Moses at the burning bush (Ex. 3:2-6), or else through his glory cloud,..."

(1) The Bible clearly states that Moses(Ex. 33:11) and Jacob (Gen.32:30) saw God face to face, not "through an angel" or "through His glory cloud." Archer is guilty of insertionism-the unwarranted and unsubstantiated insertion of words into Biblical verses to escape contradictions or a mistake.

(2) Archer chose a bad example from his perspective when he used Ex. 3:2-6. It says "And Moses hid his face: for he was afraid to look upon God." How then, could he have seen God's face through an angel or otherwise.

He adds:

"We are therefore to understand that Yahweh met with Moses and talked to him in some glorious representation that fell short of a full unveiling of His face. In that sense He talked to Moses face to face..."(1) Again Ex. 33:11 and Gen. 32:30 say "face to face" not "in some glorious representation that fell short of a full unveiling of His face.

And finally, Archer falsely alleges the in Ex. 33:18: "Moses asked to see the very face of God."

(1) This verse actually states that Moses asked to see God's glory, not his face. They are not identical. God did not deny this request as verse 19 shows, but stated in verse 20 (RSV) that it would not extend to revealing His face.

RESURRECTION--Among those beliefs crucial to Christianity few are of greater importance than that of the Resurrection. Paul went so far as to allege the very foundation of Christianity rests upon its occurrence.

1Cor. 15:14 "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." (also: 1 Cor. 15:17)

Yet, why should the Resurrection be of such significance.(?) Elijah raised a child from the dead (1Kings 17:17, 21-22); Samuel said to Saul, "Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me" (1Sam. 28.7, 11, 15); Elisha raised the dead son of a Shunammite (2 Kings 4:32, 34-35); a dead man being lowered into a grave revived when he touched the bones of Elisha (2 Kings 13:21); Moses and Elijah revived at the time of the Transfiguration (Luke 9:28, 30);the saints arose at the time of Jesus' death (matt. 27:52-53); Jairus' daughter rose from the dead (Matt. 9:18, 23-25); the widow at Nain's son rose from the dead (Luke 7:11-15); and Lazarus rose from the dead (John 11:43-44). All of these people ascended from death and all did so before Jesus. So why attribute so much importance to the event. By the time Christ rose from the dead this was a rather common occurrence. Moreover, people not only before Jesus but after as well. Peter raised Tabitha and Paul raised Eutychus.

While participating in a radio call-in program several years ago, the author was told by a caller that, except for Jesus, all of the above-mentioned people eventually died again. But Paul clearly asserted it's the Resurrection, per se, that matters not the fact Jesus never died again. The caller was asked to cite a passage that justified his contention. There was no reply.

A second major difficulty associated with the Resurrection lies in the contradictory accounts in the four gospels of what occurred. The following represent some of the major disagreements surrounding the events connected with the Resurrection:

- A. At what time in the morning did the women visit the tomb?- At the rising of the sun (Mark 16:2) vs. when it was yet dark (John 20:1)
- B. Who came?- Mary Magdalene alone (John 20:1) vs. Mary Magdalene and the other Mary (Matt. 28:1) vs. Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James and Salome (Mark 16:1) vs. Mary Magdalene, Joanna, Mary the mother of James and other women (Luke 24:10)
- C. Was the tomb opened or closed when they arrived? - Open (Luke 24:2) vs. closed (Matt 28:1-2)
- D. Whom did they see at the tomb?- The angel (Matt. 28:2) vs. a young man (Mark 16:5) vs. two men (Luke 24:4) vs. two angels (John 20:11-12)
- E. Were these men or angels inside or outside the tomb? -Outside (Matt. 28:2) vs. inside (Mark 16:5, Luke 24:3-4, John 20:11-12).
- F. Were they standing or sitting? - Standing (Luke 24:4) vs. sitting (Matt. 28:2, Mark 16:5, John 20:12).
- G. Did Mary Magdalene know Jesus when he first appeared to her?-Yes, she did (Matt. 28:9) vs. no she did not (John 20:14).

If the stories were consistent, one could write one long continuous narrative incorporating all four versions without fear of divergencies. Yet, this has never been done without adding, altering or omitting key verses. Apologists often submit the witness-at-an-auto-accident argument which is quite irrelevant since two diametrically opposed and mutually exclusive versions of the same event can not be simultaneously accurate. One or the other is false. Moreover, witnesses at an accident, unlike gospel writers, are not claiming inerrancy.

Thomas Paine summarized the relationship between the gospels quite well.

"...it is, I believe, impossible to find in any story upon record so many and such glaring absurdities, contradictions, and falsehoods, as are in the books (Matthew, Mark, Luke & John). They are more numerous and striking than I had any expectation of finding, when I began this examination,..." (Age of Reason by Thomas Paine, page 167)

A third major problem connected with the Resurrection lies in the fact that even if Jesus had risen, nobody is going to follow his example.

Eccle. 3:19-21 (RSV) "For the fate of the sons of men and the fate of beasts is the same: as one dies so dies the other. ...man has no advantage (pre-eminence-KJV) over beasts;... All go to one place; all are from the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knows whether the spirit of man goes upward and the spirit of the beast goes down to the earth."

Job 7:9-10, 1 Tim. 6:15-16, Isaiah 26:14 say as much. Robert Ingersoll, one of the greatest Biblical commentators in American history, spoke wisely when he said: "The Old Testament tells us how we lost immortality and it does not say a word about another world, from the first mistake in Genesis to the last curse in Malachi. No man in the Old Testament stands by the dead and says, "We shall meet again." From the top of Sinai came no hope of another world." (Orthodoxy, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, page 424.

And lastly, others participated in even more momentous events. Adam was never born to begin with (Gen. 1:27); he came into the world as a full-grown adult. Enoch (Gen. 5:22-24) and Elijah (2 Kings 2:11) never died. The latter went straight to heaven, which, incidentally, contradicts Hebrews 9:27 which says, "And it is appointed unto men once to die..."

In fact, what did Jesus ever do that had not already been accomplished? He rose from the dead but only after others. He performed miracles but so had others. He raised people from the dead but so had Old Testament prophets. He healed but so had others. What, then, did Jesus do that was different, that had not already be [been] done? Plainly stated, "What makes him stand out from the crowd?" Thousands have claimed to be the savior; so what are the acts that substantiate his credentials. Assertions alone prove nothing. Anyone can claim to be the Messiah and thousands have.

Jesus, The Imperfect Beacon--For two thousand years Christians have alleged that Jesus of Nazareth is God incarnate, the sinless being, the embodiment of perfection.

1Pet. 2:22 Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth:

Isa. 53:9 And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

Yet, the New Testament has many statements and acts by Jesus which prove the contrary. He, like Paul, repeatedly made false statements and inaccurate prophecies. Here are a few examples:

John 7:8-10[KJV] Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast: for my time is not yet full come. When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee. But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up unto the feast, not openly, but as it were in secret.

John 7:8-10 RSV Go to the festival yourselves. I am not going to this festival, for my time has not yet fully come." After saying this, he remained in Galilee. But after his brothers had gone to the festival, then he also went, not publicly but as it were in private.

Jesus broke his promise[word] by going up secretly after saying he wouldn't.

(B) In John 13:38 Jesus said: "...Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow, till thou (Peter-ed) hast denied me thrice."

And yet, what actually occurred is shown in Mark 14:66-68

"And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest: And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth. But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew."

According to Jesus' prophecy the cock was not to speak until after the third denial, not after the first.

(C) Jesus told the thief on the cross: Luke 23:43 "... Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

This prophecy could not have been kept unless Jesus went to heaven that day, in which case he would not have been buried for three days.

(D) Jesus told a man: Mark 8:34 "... Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

This statement was made early in his ministry. Yet, the cross could not have become a Christian symbol until after the Crucifixion. There would be nothing to pick up. This utterance would have made no sense whatever to the man being addressed.

(E) In Matthew 5:22 he said:

Matt. 5:22 "...but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire."

Yet, Jesus repeated called people fools: Matt. 23:17,19 "Ye fools and blind..." Luke 11:40 "Ye fools,..."

(F) In Matthew Jesus said: Matt. 12:40 " For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

Mark 15:37 and 15:42 show Jesus died on the day before the sabbath which would be Friday. Mark 16:9 and Matthew 28:1 show he allegedly rose sometime during Saturday night or Sunday morning. Friday afternoon to Sunday morning does not encompass three days and three nights. His prophecy failed.

(G) John 3:13 Jesus falsely stated: "And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven."

This verse is not only inaccurate historically as 2 Kings 2:11 shows: 2 Kings 2:11 "...behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven." but also absurd on its face. If the son of man (Jesus-ed) is down here on earth speaking then how could he be in heaven.

(H) And in Matthew 27:46 Jesus cried with a loud voice say: " Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

How could Jesus be Savior of all mankind when he couldn't even save himself. These aren't the words of a man who went to the Cross willingly to die for our sins. These are the words of a man who could think of a hundred places he would rather be. They certainly the words of someone who has the situation under control.

These examples of Jesus' duplicity represent only a fraction of the 193 that could have been presented. The New Testament provides more than enough evidence to demonstrate Jesus' inability to provide a reliable beacon to lighten the way to truth and honesty, to claim the Messiahship. As Thomas Paine said: "The priests of the present day profess to believe it (the story of Christ-ed). They gain their living by it, and they exclaim against something they call infidelity. I will define what it (ifidelity-ed) is. HE THAT BELIEVES IN THE STORY OF CHRIST IS AN INFIDEL TO GOD." (The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol 9, page 292)

Jesus is not perfection incarnate. As Robert Ingersoll once said: "The theological Christ is the impossible union of the human and divine-man with the attributes of God and God with the weakness of man."

In closing this month's commentary several contradictions are worthy of note. Joseph's father is Jacob in Matthew 1:16 but is Heli in Luke 3:23. David slew the men of 700 chariots of the Syrians and 40,000 horsemen according to 2 Samuel 10:18 while 1 Chron. 19:18 says it was the men of 7,000 chariots and 40,000 footmen. Solomon had 40,000 stalls of horses for his chariots in 1 Kings 4:26 while 2 Chron. 9:25 says it was 4,000 stalls.

REVIEWS

Although such previously mentioned contradictions as "take up the cross," "go to the feast," and the warning not to call others fools were avoided by Gleason Archer in his apologetic work, The Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties, (discussed in January's issue of Biblical Errancy, p. 3), he did direct his attention toward several others.

His explanation for the "Today thou shalt be with me in paradise" problem is especially revealing. It abounds in suppositions, conjectures and hypotheses, virtually none of which is supported by Scripture. On page 367 Archer says: "The answer lies in the location of paradise on Good Friday. Apparently paradise was not exalted to heaven until Easter Day. Jesus apparently refers to it in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus as "Abraham's Bosom," to which the godly beggar Lazarus was carried by the angels after his decease (Luke 16:19-31).

Apparently, apparently! "Apparently paradise was not exalted!" "Jesus refers to it in the parable of the rich man!" There is no solid evidence either assumption is true. However, from Archer's point-of-view it would be nice if they were so the problem would vanish.

He continues:

"Thus Abraham's Bosom referred to the place where the souls of the redeemed waited till the day of Christ's resurrection. Presumably this was the same place as paradise... Doubtless it was to the infernal paradise that the souls of Jesus and the repentant thief repaired after they each died on Friday afternoon."

Presumably! Presumed by whom? Archer's entire explanation is based on conjecture and unwarranted assumptions. Where is the evidence that paradise did not become heaven until Easter Day, that paradise was identical with Abraham's Bosom, or that souls went to paradise before later entering heaven. Moreover, even if both did enter "paradise" rather than heaven after death, Jesus would still not have been in the earth three days as he had prophesied in Matt. 12:40.

Like many apologists, Archer assumes that if he can devise reasonably viable explanations for Biblical difficulties then substantive evidence is not required. Plausible theories enraptured in carefully devised speculation are sufficient unto themselves. Most apologetics is more concerned with rationalization and justification than truth and objectivity.

In regards to the number of Solomon's stalls and the proper-name disagreements between 1 Kings 4:26 and Chron. 9:25, Archer frankly admits the contradictory aspects. On page 222 he says:

"In explanation of these transmissional errors (As we believe them to be), let it be understood that numerals and proper names are always more liable to copist errors than almost any other type of subject matter..." "As we believe them to be" is a frank admission that speculation is involved. It would be just as rational to assume there were no copyist errors, just independent writers following independent traditions while reporting on the same events. "Copyist error" is employed far too many instances by biblicists to escape what are otherwise impossible dilemmas.(See: Alleged Bible Discrepancies by Haley). It provides a quick means of escape.

DIALOGUE & POLEMICS

Letter # 1 from Michael Hauerstir of Dayton, Ohio

I've read your "Bible Errancy" Newsletter. The Bible says in 1 Corinthians 2: 14, " But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." You are dealing with a spiritual book when you deal with the Bible. The Holy Spirit moved men to write the Scriptures, and to understand the Scripture, you must be spiritual. To you, as 1Corinthians 2: 14 states, you find the Bible foolish, full of contradictions and errors(seemingly).

Actually, you need to be born again. Jesus, God manifested in the flesh, said "Ye must be born again."The enclosed tract will tell you how to be saved, be born again. You need to be saved, please read it.

Editor's Response to Letter #1

You asked me to read your small tract entitled, "In Devil's Hell." Well, I did and found it to be typical of the pamphlets that we often find in bus terminals, on library tables and on door knobs. It is permeated with the urgent need to accept Jesus, confess sins, be saved and fear hell. Much was asserted; nothing proved.

Now I ask you to respond in kind. Read Biblical Errancy, but not through a filter composed of Christian fundamentals. Among other things the January issue proved the Bible is not to be trusted as a reliable source. Yet, your tract avoided the evidence entirely and blindly plodded forward with such quotes as: "The wicked shall be turned into hell;" "Christ died for our sins and rose from the dead;" and "that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus...thou shalt be saved." You were`shown clearly contradictory utterances which you completely ignored.

You assumed the very point in dispute, that the Bibleis truth, per se. If asked how you know your statements are true, you would probably say, because they are in the Bible. But, instead of asking yourself the Bible is true, you just assumed as much. But I have proven the contrary; it is not the truth. It says for instance, that "all have sinned," which is completely false. How do I know, because your own book says so. Don't you believe it? "Noah was a just and perfect in his generation,..." (Gen. 6:9); "... that man (Job-ed) was perfect and upright,..." (Job 1:1). These men were perfect, so obviously they could not have been sinners. How can you be a sinner and be perfect? The Bible has hundreds of problems of this nature and if you bear with me, I will prove as much in the issues to come. But please be reasonable; I can't cover the entire Book in two issues.

Quoting from a work is fruitless unless you first prove the book is valid, truthful and reliable. I provided evidence the Bible fails this test. Instead of proving my evidence to be false or invalid, instead of proving the Book to be true, valid and inerrant, you merely assume as much and proceeded to quote at will. Don't you believe the Bible when it says, "Prove all things..." (1 Thess. 5:12) or "But the wisdom from above is first pure, then...open to reason,..." (James 3:17). What have you proved? Where is your reasoning? The Bible says, "Always be prepared to make a defense to any one who calls you to account for the hope that is in you;..." (1 Peter 3:15). Where is your defense? Mere assertions prove nothing.

You sent me a tract that implies people are wicked and sinful, while confident you abide in Jesus. Yet, the Bible says, "No man who abides in him sins;..." (1 John 3:6). If you abide in him, as you believe, why are you still sinning. Surely you are not saying you no longer sin. My friend, with all due respect, if there is any verse in the Bible you and those of like mind should commit to memory it is Proverb 14:15, which says, "The simple believeth every word: but the prudent man looketh well to his going."

Letter # 2 from an Anonymous Reader in Cleveland, Ohio.

Your Biblical Errancy discusses contradictions but how important are they. The Bible was not meant to be scientifically precise. It isn't a history book. It was written to provide a path to salvation through Jesus Christ Our Lord. You are concentrating too much on details and not seeing those things that really count. Accept Jesus and you will have the answer to your questions.

Editor's Response to Letter # 2

My friend, all you know about Jesus comes from Scripture. The validity of Jesus depends upon the validity, reliability and accuracy of Scripture. Rarely do I agree with Evangelicals but I couldn't agree more when a fundamentalist group, The International Council on Biblical Inerrancy (ICBI) of Oakland California, said the following when told, "Inerrancy is not important. It is the quibbling about insignificant details. What really matters is a person's relationship with Jesus Christ:"

"... But how do you know Jesus except as he is presented to you in the Bible? If the Bible is not God's Word and does not present a picture of Jesus Christ that can be trusted, how do you know it is the true Christ you are following? You may be worshipping a Christ of your own imagination." (Does Errancy Matter by James Boice, page 24)

Once conceding there are errors in the Bible, you have opened a Pandora's Box. How do you know which parts are true if you admit some parts are false. As ICBI said: "... But this position (claiming truthfulness for those parts of the Bible where God, as opposed to men has spoken-ed), is unsound. People who think like this speak of Biblical authority, but at best they have partial Biblical authority since the parts containing errors obviously cannot be authoritative. What is worse, they cannot even tell us precisely what parts are from God and are therefore truthful and what parts are not from God and are in error. Usually they say that the "salvation parts" are from God, but they do not tell us how to separate these from the non-salvation parts." (Does Errancy Matter by James Boice, page 8)

The ICBI was also correct when it said the following statement of belief is an attack on the Bible:

"... Sure I believe in the Bible, as do you, but what difference does it make if there is a few mistakes in it? After all, the Bible isn't a history book. It's not a science book. It only tells us about God and salvation." This belief is more than an attack; it's a refutation. As the religious reformer, John Wesley, said:

"If there be any mistakes in the Bible, there may as well be a thousand. If there be one falsehood in that book, it did not come from the God of truth."

Well spoken! And Biblical Errancy will expose the falsehoods.

COMMENTARY

SALVATION--Next to Jesus probably no topic occupies the Christian mind more than salvation. We must do everything to be saved assuming, of course, salvation exists. We must obtain eternal life. That's the Christian attitude. The fundamental problem in this regard, however, is that even if one were to say to a believer, "OK, I believe you; so what must I do to be saved," he still couldn't obtain a rational response. Why? Because the answer would depend upon what the Biblical verses were selected. Some scriptural passages say you are saved by works; others say you are saved by faith; others say your destiny has already been predetermined; and still others say it is decided by God's whim. He simply looks down and arbitrarily selects those He wants.

(1) Salvation by works, for example, is clearly shown in Matthew 19:16-19[actually it should be to verse 21] where a man asked Jesus what he must do to have eternal life:

Matt. 19:16-18 "And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet? Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me."

Clearly, according to Jesus salvation is obtained by works. Good works, good deeds, following the commandments are all that is necessary. Jesus said nothing about believing in anything. Faith or belief isn't even mentioned. Robert Ingersoll correctly stated:"(In the 19th Chapter of Matthew we find-ed.) a child of God is asking God what is necessary for him to do in order to inherit eternal life... Now, if there ever has been an opportunity given to the Almighty to furnish a man of an inquiring mind with the necessary information upon that subject, here was the oppornuity... (And yet Jesus-ed) did not say to him: You must believe in me- that I am the only begotten son of the living God. He did not say: You must be born again. He did not say: You must believe in the Bible. He did not say: You must remember the Sabbath, to keep it holy... What right has the church to add conditions of salvation?" What Must We Do To Be Saved?, Ingersoll's Works Vol. 1 p 465.

Incidentally, only five of the Ten Commandments were listed and "Love thy neighbor is not even a commandment. It's actually found in Leviticus 19:18.

Mark 10:17-19 repeats the essential message of Matthew 19:16-18 and also lists a commandment-defraud not that doesn't exist. Again, five of the Ten Commandments were omitted. (See also: Luke 18:18-22, 10:25-28, Acts 10:35 Ezek.18:4-9, James 1:25, 27, 2:21, 25, Romans 2:13, 1 Cor. 7:19, Luke 19:8-9, John 5:28-29, Deut. 10:12, Ecclesiastes 12:13). All the above verses resemble Micah 6:8 which says:

Micah 6:8 "...what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

All of them state one is saved by good works; none mentions anything associated with belief or faith. Good deeds alone are sufficient.

(2) Some verses contend your destiny has already been predetermined. It's fixed. Acts 13: 48

Acts 13:48 "And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed."

and Ephesians 1:4-5:

Eph. 1:4 "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, 13:8, 2 Thess. 2:13, Eph. 1:11, Matthew 24:24, 31, Proverbs 16:9, 20:24, 2 Tim. 2:10, 1 Peter 1:2, 2:8.

(3) Some passages allege God merely selects people as He sees fit. Psalm 65:4 is a good example.

Ps. 65:4 "Blessed is the man whom thou chooseth, and causeth to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts."

(See also: John 6:44, 65, 17:9, Acts 22:14, Romans 9:16, 18, Psalm 86:13)

(4) And of course, there are those verses which Christians quote to prove one is saved by faith. Acts 16: 30-31 is as representative as any.

Acts 16:30 And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. (See also: John 14:6, 3:15-16, 18, 36, 6:28-29, 47, 11:25-26, Acts 4:12, 13:39, Romans 1:16-17, Hebrews 11:6, Ephesians 2:8-9)

All the above clearly shows that even if one were to surrender himself completely to Christian teachings, he still wouldn't know what to do. If he is saved by works then he had better commit good deeds; if he is saved by a Godly act of merciful selection then he can only hope to be chosen; if he is saved by faith, then he must choose the correct beliefs; and if his destiny is predetermined, he should ignore the entire matter. Why become concerned about something that is unalterable. It is interesting to note that although Paul often says saved by faith, Jesus clearly states you are saved by works. And unless "Christianity" is actually "Paulianity," Jesus' assertions take precedence.

Thomas Paine once made an astute observation with respect to Paul's salvation by faith: "One set of preachers make salvation to consist in believing. They tell their congregations that if they believe in Christ their sins shall be forgiven. This, in the first place, is an encouragement to sin, in a similar manner as when the prodigal young fellow is told his father will pay all his debts, he runs into debt faster, and becomes the more extravagant. Daddy says he, pays all, and on he goes: just so in the other case, Christ pays all, and on goes the sinner." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine Vol 9, p. 27

Paine made an equally apt comment with respect to predestination: "Another set of preachers tell their congregations that God predestinated and selected, from all eternity, a certain number to be saved, and a certain number to be damned eternally. If this were true, the day of judgement is Past: their preaching is in vain, and they had better at some useful calling for their livelihood. This doctrine has a direct tendency to demoralize mankind." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol 9, p. 208

Is it any wonder that Jesus' prophecy:

John 10:16 "... and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." has never materialized. One can easily understand how a book as inconsistent as the Bible has given rise to more than fifteen hundred separate Christian denominations. The deficiency lies not so much with the preachers as the book from which they preach.

Prophecy--Christians often assert alleged inspiration of the Bible is proven by accurate prophecies contained therein. Yet, any reasonably objective analysis of the Book will expose many inaccurate predictions. Generally speaking, prophetic failures can be grouped into three separate categories: Those which were fulfilled in a manner different from that promised, those which have never occurred, and New Testament references to Old Testament prophecies that don't exist. Besides Jesus' inaccurate predictions with respect to the cock crowing, the attainment of paradise by the thief on the cross, and the similarity in time between His internment and Jonah's period in the whale (See 2nd issue, Feb. 1983, p.3) the following falsehoods could be mentioned. In Genesis 2:17 God told Adam.

Gen. 2:17 "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Yet, Adam ate the fruit and did not die that day. In fact, he lived to be 930 years old (Gen. 5:5). If a spiritual, as opposed to a physical, death was intended, as apologists allege, then why wouldn't this be true of what Nathan told David in 2 Samuel 12:14. David had sinned against God and Nathan said:

2 Samuel 12:14 "Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the LORD to blaspheme, the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die." Verse 18 clearly shows that the child died physically, not spiritually, shortly thereafter. [Which also goes against Deut. 24:16.]

Unless the context shows a verse should be given a spiritual interpretation, we should adhere to a literal approach. The well-known apologist W. Arndt aptly stated: "It must be remembered that a deviation from the literal sense is not justified unless the Scriptures themselves prescribe such a course." Bible Difficulties, W. Arndt, p. 133.

Another inaccurate prophecy is found in Genesis 28:13: Gen. 28:13 "...I am the LORD God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed." Jacob never received the promise land and it is questionable whether the spot on which he lay ever came into the possession of his descendants.

In Genesis 35:10 God said to Jacob:

Gen. 35:10 "And God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name: and he called his name Israel"

Yet, just 11 chapters later the text says:

Gen. 46:2 "And God spake unto Israel in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob. And he said, Here am I."

A concluding false prophecy among the scores of available is found in Deuteronomy 23:

Deut. 23:3 "An Ammonite or Moabite shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD; even to their tenth generation shall they not enter into the congregation of the LORD for ever."

Ruth a Moabitess, not only entered the congregation of the Lord as Ruth 1:4, 1:22, 4:13, 4:17 show but gave birth to the ancestors of David and Jesus.

Even more noteworthy are prophecies that don't exist such as found in Matthew 2:23.

Matt. 2:23 "And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene." He shall be called a Nazarene does not exist in the Old Testament. There is no such prophecy.

Jesus, The Imperfect Beacon--I thought it might be appropriate to conclude this month's commentary with some additional statements and acts by Jesus which disprove his perfection. In Matt. 5:44 Jesus told people to: Matt. 5:44 "...Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, ..." Yet repeatedly called his opponents names and hurled epithets. (See Matt. 23:15, 23:17, 19, 27, 33, John 10:8, Luke 11:40, Matthew 12:34)

In John 23:32 Jesus said: John 12:32 "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Jesus alleged lifted up but he is far from having drawn all men to him. The majority of mankind have never heard his name.

In Matthew 8:20 Jesus said: Matt. 8:20 "And Jesus saith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." while in Mark 2:15 says: Mark 2:15 "...Jesus sat at meat in his house." Jesus had no place to lay his head, yet he owned a house. According to psalm 24:1 he owned everything.

And lastly, in Matthew 19:19 Jesus said: Matt. 19:19 "Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." while he said to his own mother:

John 2:4 "...Woman, what have I to do with thee?" Apparently Jesus' love escaped him. This is the same Jesus who told everyone else to "Honor thy father and mother."

REVIEWS

In regard to eating the forbidden fruit, a related problem is especially troublesome to Biblicists. How could evil arise in the beginning if God created everything was good, yeaperfect. Certainly Adam and Eve couldn't have created evil since they were part and parcel of the perfect creation. As perfect beings they couldn't have created imperfection, i.e. sin. If they did, or could, create sin, then by definition they weren't perfect. The apologist W. Arndt said it well:

"Here we face a mystery, baffling to all thinkers, for which we, standing on the Bible, can offer no explanation than the one given in divine revelation, to wit; that Satan brought sin into the world. If the inquiry is pushed beyond this point(which I wouldn't hesitate to do-ed) and it is asked, How could Satan, who evidently was created as a good being, become perverted and an enemy of God? We are not able to give a solution. It is a question on which God has not thought it necessary to inform us in His holy Word." Bible Difficulties, W. Arndt, p.132

Why no answer is given is quite easy to understand. There isn't any.

This directly parallels the problem presented by Isaiah 44:24, Eccle. 11:5, John 1:3, Eph. 3:9, Rev. 4:11 and other verses saying God must have created everything. If God didn't create everything and evil then either evil doesn't exist or God did not create some things, namely evil. It's that simple. In attempting to remedy the problem W. Arndt alleged"

"... there are angels who did not remain in the state of righteousness and holiness in which they had been created, but who sinned, leaving their own habitation, the mansions of Heaven, and by God were cast down to hell... It is here where we have the origin of evil in the universe. One of these fallen angels is Satan, and it was he who employed the serpent in his successful endeavor to lead mankind into sin." Ibid. p136

This explanation has an obvious fatal flaw. If God's original creation was perfect, then no aspect of it could have create evil. If the fallen angel was originally perfect then he could no more have committed an evil act than could the allegedly perfect Jesus.

DIALOG & DEBATE

Letter #3 from Ray Wigdal of Cedarville, Ohio

(After quoting 2 Tim. 3:16 which contends all scripture is inspired, Ray continues-ed)

The first question I would like to ask is why are you going to such lengths to disprove the authority of the Word of God. Secondly, Do you believe that a Christian who loves the Lord Jesus has the authority to refute the Word of God? Thirdly, do you believe this verse (2 Tim. 3:16-ed) to be the Word of God or the word of men? I believe it to be the verbal plenary inerrant word of God!... Fourthly, do you believe our God is a God of truth? We know from Titus 1:2 "God who cannot lie" that God cannot lie. Lastly, Mr. McKinsey If you do not know Jesus Christ personally as a Savior then your heart and mind is darken by the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience. See Eph. 2:1-10... (After asking me some common questions generated by preachers on the stump, Ray continues-ed) Are you saved by faith? I would like sometime to personally meet with you and discuss this matter more personally. Please respond to my questions. The only reason I can ask you these questions is because it is so vital to know Christ in order to rightly divide and understand the truth. I definitely would enjoy responding to some of your arguments on errancy and the various verses you have quoted! But I trust that you are looking to the word of God for salvation in Christ and not to prove your own convictions."

Editor's response to Letter #3

Ray, I appreciate receiving your letter not only because several major fallacies within Christian beliefs are exposed but also because dialogue can occur. Unlike Christian preachers on radio and television, I believe both sides with respect to the Bible's validity deserve a hearing. The emergence of truth is impossible when millions listen to or read only one side. In large measure that is the problem with denominations today. Each group lives in an ideological cocoon with all the accompanying feelings of superiority.

Let me respond to your statement one at a time. You begin by making the most serious mistake of all Christians asserting the Bible is the Word of God. I'd like to give you a list, a litany, of the deeds that God committed somewhere in the Old Testament. Now remember, God, the Perfect Being, did all of following in what is supposedly His book. He created evil (Lam. 3:38, Jer. 26:3, 36:3, Ezek. 20:25-26, Judges 9:3, 1 Sam. 16:23, 18:10); He deceived (Jer. 4:10, 15:18, 20:7, 2 Chron. 18:22, Ezek. 14:9, 2 Thess. 2:9-12); He told people to lie (Ex. 3:18, 1 Sam. 16:2); He lied (Gen 2:17, 2 Sam. 7:13); He rewarded liars (Ex. 1:15-20); He ordered men to become drunken (Jer. 25:27); He rewarded the fool and the transgressor (Prov.26:10); He delivered a man, Job, into Satan's hands (Job 2:6); He mingled a perverse spirit (Isa. 19:14); He spread dung on people's faces (Mal. 2:3); He ordered stealing (Ezek. 39:10, Ex. 3:22); He made false prophecies (Jonah 3:4, Gen. 5:10); He Changed his mind (Jonah 3:10); He caused adultery (2 Sam. 12:11-12); He ordered the taking of a harlot (Hosea 1:2, 3:1-2); He killed (Num. 16:35, 21:6, Deut. 32:39, 1 Sam. 2:26, Psalm 135:10); He ordered killing (Lev. 26:7-8, Num. 25:4-5); He had a temper (Deut. 13:17, Judges 3:8); He was often jealous (Deut. 5:9, 6:15); He wasn't omnipresent (Gen 4:16, 11:5, 1 Kings 19:11-12); He wasn't omniscient (Deut. 8:2, 13:3, 2 Chron. 32:31); He often repented (Ex. 32:14, 1 Sam. 15:35); He practiced injustice (Ex. 4:22-23, Joshua 22:20, Rom. 5:12); He played favorites (Deut. 7:6, 14:2, 1 Sam. 12:22); He sanctioned slavery (Ex. 21:20-21, Deut. 15:17); He degraded deformed people (Lev. 21:16-23); He punished a baster for being illegitimate (Deut. 23:2); He punished many for the acts of one (Gen. 3:16, 20:18); He punished children for the sins of their fathers (Ex. 12:29, 20:5, Deut. 5:9); He prevented people from hearing his word (Isa. 6:10, John 12:39-40); He supported human sacrifice (Ex. 22:29-30, Ezek. 20:26); He ordered cannibalism (Lev. 26: 29, Jer. 19:9); He demanded virgins as a part of war plunder (Num. 31:31-36); He ordered gambling (Joshua 14. 2, Num. 26:52, 55-56); He ordered horses to be hamstrung (Joshua 11:6); He sanctioned violation of the enemies women (Deut. 21:10-14); He excused the beating of slaves to death (Ex. 21:20-21); He required a woman to marry her rapist (Deut. 22:28-29); He taught war (Psalm 144:1); He ordered the burning of human feces to cook food (Ezek. 21:3-5); He intentionally issued bad laws (Ezek. 20:25); He excused the sins of prostitutes and adulterers (Hosea 4:14); He excused a murderer and promised his protection (Gen. 4:8-15); He killed a man who refused to impregnate his widowed sister-in-law (Gen. 38:9-10); and He is indecisive (Gen. 18:17).

Now, can you imagine anyone saying, "Yes, that's my book, that represents me; that's the way I am." -especially a supposedly perfect being. What villain, what criminal, in all history had a record to match?

Second, you ask if I believe a Christian who loves the Lord Jesus has the authority to refute the Word of God. To begin with, it is not a question of "authority," its a question of "right." Everyone, Christian or otherwise, has a right, indeed, an obligation, to question the truth of what he is told and to demand evidence. Blind obedience leads to disaster. And every part of BIBLICAL ERRANCY proves the Bible is something other than God's word.

Third, you ask if I know and love our Lord and Savior. My answer should already be obvious. He isn't the Lord and he isn't our Savior. But mere assertions by you or me prove little; evidence, such as that provided by BIBLICAL ERRANCY is what counts.

Fourth, you ask if I believe the Bible to be the Word of God. You say you believe it is plenary and inerrant. But what you or I believe is irrelevant and immaterial. As is true in court, the evidence, must speak for itself.

Fifth, you ask if I believe our God is a God of truth. BIBLICAL ERRANCY is not concerned with the nature of God; it is concerned with the Bible. By definition God cannot lie, but the Bible does.

Six, constantly saying Jesus is our Savior proves nothing. Why do you keep repeating this, while providing little or no proof. Believers seem to think that if they repeat a statement long and hard enough people will eventually succumb.

Seven, am I saved by faith? No, neither are you according to Jesus. How one is saved, assuming salvation exists, was discussed earlier. The Bible can't give anyone a definitive answer to this question.

And, in answer to your last question, Ray I am sorry to say you are wrong on both counts. I am not looking to the Bible for salvation in Christ because it isn't God's word and Jesus isn't my Savior; and I am not proving my own convictions. I provide facts, evidence, documentation and information. Others formulate the convictions; they are the jury.

Editors Note: BIBLICAL ERRANCY will always provide a hearing for apologist. Indeed, creating a forum for debate between proponents and opponents of the Bible's validity is one of the primary reasons for it's existence. However, increasing numbers of apologists want more than a hearing; they seek to turn the publication into little more than a spokesman for fundamentalism by putting unacceptable controls on their letters. For example, one writer sent a 13 page handwritten analysis of BIBLICAL ERRANCY and stated his writing could only be published if done so verbatim and en total. Another writer sent me a lengthy tract and said, it too, must be published verbatim. If this continues, they will be wanting me to publish entire books. BIBLICAL ERRANCY is composed of 6 pages not 60. I would be glad to address the points made in both writings but the conditions imposed are unreasonable. Any submitted manuscript having less than 200 words will be probably be published verbatim, but those exceeding 200 words must, of necessity, be edited with only the stronger aspects being published. I suggest those having many points to make either write several letters over a period of months or submit one comprehensive summary. They could even write a lengthy letter divided in such a matter that one section could be discussed each month. Secondly, any literature sent to BIBLICAL ERRANCY could very well be published unless the submitter indicates otherwise.

COMMENTARY

MORALITY--Defenders of the Bible, such as fundamentalists, never cease criticizing the evils and immoralities of modern society. And environment, a return to the "Bible" movement is hardly the answer. The Bible is definitely not the fountain from which truth, goodness and purity spring as its proponents would have us believe. Many Biblical verses are permeated with corruption, degeneracy and immorality. Awakening our children on Sunday morning to participate in Biblical readings could easily to that which is being opposed. Much of the Bible dwells on immorality, fasters profanity and honors corruption. If children were not diverted from various parts of scripture, they could easily be influenced by such negative language as the following:

Gen. 38:9 "...and it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilled it on the ground."

Lev. 21:20 "... a man that is brokenfooted or...hath his stones broken."

2Sam. 16:21 "... and Absalom went in unto his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel."
Ezek. 23:20 "..Yet she increased her harlotry, and doted upon her (RSV) paramours there, whose members were like those of asses, and whose issue was like that of horses. Thus you longed for the lewdness of your youth, when the Egyptians handled your bosom and pressed your young breasts." Song 5:4 "My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved for him." I don't think many people need to be told what "it," "stones," "went unto," "members," and "issue," and "by the hole of the door," are referring to.

One school of apologists alleges that some of these verses are to be understood figuratively, not literally. But what does it matter? The words are equally disgusting and should be kept away from impressionable people. Children, for example, are not going to make subtle distinctions as to intent and meaning. Other apologist contend:

"When it (the Bible-ed.) speaks of sin, it describes it in its ugliness, so that disgust and horror enter the heart of the reader. Not once, for a moment, does it leave the high moral level of stern opposition to unrighteousness in all its forms." Bible Difficulties, W. Arndt, p. 63

"Disgust and horror" are clearly produced but where is the "high moral level;" where is the opposition to profanity. The context of each verse shows they have nothing to do with moral teachings.

The following verse aren't going to elevate the morality of society either. If anything they are worse: Deut. 23:1-2 "He that is wounded in the stones, or hath his privy member cut off, shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD. A bastard shall not enter ..." 2Kgs. 18:27 "... that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you." Prov. 5:19 "... let her breasts satisfy thee at all times;..."

Biblicists allege that the Song of Solomon's infatuation with breast comprises part of a love poem between either with a man and his wife or Christ and His Church: Song 1:13 "A bundle of myrrh is my wellbeloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts."

Song 4:5 "Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins, which feed among the lilies."
Song 8:10 "I am a wall, and my breasts like towers:..." But regardless of motive, such language is still offense.

Many other verses could be quoted but the point is made. Enough is enough. I don't like writing verses of this nature any more than decent people like reading them. How could the Bible be a book of goodness, moral teachings and purity when it actually indicts itself:

Prov. 15:26 "... the words of the pure are pleasant words."

Later issues of Biblical Errancy will discuss morality in regard to patriarchs and numerous events but what better way to close this month's commentary than quoting Robert Ingersoll and Ashley Monagu who said:

"The believers in the Bible are loud in their denunciation of what they are pleased to call the immoral literature of the world; yet few books have been published containing more moral filth than this inspired word of God... Until these passages are expunged from the Old Testasment, it is not a fit book to be read by either old or young... There are chapters that no gentleman would read in front of a lady... and the time will come when mankind will wonder that such a book was ever called inspired." "Some of Mistakes of Moses," Ingersoll Works, Vol.2, p. 177

"If the Bible is not obscene, what book is?... The Christian world should never say another word against immoral books until it makes the inspired volume clean. These vile and filthy things were not written for the purpose of conveying and enforcing moral truth but seem to have been written because the author loved an unclean thing. "Some of Mistakes of Moses," Ingersoll Works, Vol.2, p. 178

"THE GOOD BOOK - one of the most remarkable euphemisms ever coined." Ashley Montagu

DIALOG & DEBATE

Letter #4 from Michael Hauenstein of Dayton Ohio (Part 1)

Dear Mr. McKinsey, Thank you for reading the tract("In Devil's Hell"-ed) that I sent you. I hope that you'll also read the tract("Today's Keys to Everlasting Life"-ed), that I've enclosed this time. You have asked me "to respond in kind: Read Biblical Errancy." I have read Issue Number two.

You said that my tract avoided the issue ("your tract avoided the evidence entirely..."), however that is not true. The issue I pointed out (See: Letter #1, Feb. 1983 Issue-ed.), is that you Mr. McKinsey "must be born again." The tract dealt with that subject alone. You need to be saved more than anyone I know. The reason why I say that is because you are so bent on trying to prove the Bible false. The Holy Spirit must really be reproving you of sin, so to avoid the point, you are trying to air condition Hell. There are no air conditioners in hell, its jut hot all the time...

The issue therefore is, are you Mr. McKinsey, born again? Please answer that question, openly. Be open with your readers. The front page of your "periodical" states that you provide a hearing for apologist... Why didn't you print the tract (the first tract he sent-ed.) in toto? Why refer to it out of context? You are not providing much of a hearing when you won't present all of the evidence which the other side has to offer!... Having made my point, I will proceed by the grace of God, to correct your periodical....(To BE Continued-ed.)

Editor's response to Letter#4 (part I)

Since your letter is long, Mike, I will respond to one section at a time in this and subsequent issues. First, I read your small tract, "Today's Key to Everlasting Life," and found it to be erroneous in several major respects. First, it claims to know the specific procedures one must follow in order to be saved. As I showed in the March, 1983 Commentary of Biblical Errancy this can't be done since the Bible is hopelessly inconsistent in this regard. Second, it claims "all have sinned" which clearly contradicts such verses as Gen. 6:9 and Job 1:1 (See Jan. 1983 Issue, p.3). Third the following verses in your tract:

Hebr. 9:27 "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." contradicts:

1Ths. 4:17 "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

2Kgs. 2:11 "... there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven."

Hebr. 11:5 "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God." (See: Gen. 5:24)

Each of the latter verses clearly shows an instance in which people have gone to God without dying. Fourth, the tract says, "You must admit that you are a sinner who deserves to die and go to hell." According to Christian beliefs this is true of anyone the moment he becomes a human being. But Biblical Errancy demonstrated in January, 1983, issue that Original Sin is patently unjust on its face and could not possibly be sanctioned by a just God. There is not now, never has been, and never will be an adequate answer as to why humanity is being punished (allegedly) for what one man, Adam, did.

"The absurdity of the doctrine known as 'The Fall of Man,' gave birth to that other absurdity known as 'The Atonement.' So that now it is insisted that, as we are rightfully charged with the sin of someone else, we can rightfully be credited with the virtues of another." "Orthodoxy," Ingersoll Works, Vol. 2, p. 370

And fifth, the pamphlet states, "God is Holy and Righteous. There is no sin in Him." Although this may be true of God, it is in direct opposition to "His" Book's description of him. According to "His" Book he not only violated his own Ten Commandments by killing individuals, telling people to lie, causing adultery, and ordering stealing but committed a wide assortment of other despicable acts. (See: Biblical Errancy, March, 1983, p. 5) As Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll said:

"A false friend, an unjust judge, a braggart, a hypocrite, and tyrant, sincere in hatred, jealous, vain and revengeful, false in promise, honest in curse, suspicious, ignorant, infamous and hideous—such is the God of the Pentateuch." "Some Mistakes of Moses, Ingersoll Works

"All our ideas of the justice and goodness of God revolt at the impious cruelty of the Bible. It is not God, just and good, but of a devil, under the name of God, that the Bible describes." The Age of Reason", Thomas Paine, p.198

"... A book so full of contradictions and wickedness could not be the Word of God, and...we dishonor God by ascribing it to him." The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 177

"...for in my opinion the Bible is a gross libel against the justice and goodness of God, in almost every part of it." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p.199

"... as I never will believe any book that ascribes cruelty and injustice to God. I therefore reject the Bible as unworthy of credit." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p.199

"I seek to rescue the reputation of the Deity." "What We Must Do To Be Saved," Ingersoll's Work, Vol. 1, p.470

You stated in your letter, Mike, that the issue is, "You must be born again." But that is by no means the issue. The issue is, "Is the book from which that statement comes, valid? Is it the word of God?" That's the real issue. If it isn't God's Word, who cares what it says. It's no more inspired and deserves no more credence than any other book. Thomas Paine could not have said it better: "... but before anything can be admitted as proved by the Bible itself must be proved to be true; for if the Bible be not true, or the truth of it doubtful, it ceases to have authority, and can not be admitted as proof of anything." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p.89

You say I need to be saved. But the truth is, you need to be aware of the fact that you have accepted a book, adopted its precepts and expounded its teachings without investigating its validity or performing a reasonable intelligent critique of its contents. Apparently you are so desperate for something to believe in that you are willing to minimize or ignore all contrary information. As I told some college students recently after a protracted discussion, "As long as it looks good, sounds good, feels good, and seems to make sense, you really don't care whether it is true or false. Having something to believe in is more important to you than the accuracy of that which you believed." Francis Bacon, the philosopher said it well: "Man prefers to believe what he prefers to be true."

You say I am "bent on trying to prove the Bible false." In truth, Mike, I am trying to awaken people to the tremendous number of problem contained within Scripture. For several years I have been sending a letter of introduction to call-in radio stations which says, in part, "Since the 1960's most of my time has been devoted to a searching analysis of the Bible. Like Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll, I was disturbed by the large number of difficulties contained therein and decided to initiate a calm, dispassionate presentation of that which was not being exposed to the laity. My intent was not to injure people's feelings but to inform. Once individuals have the data, only they can decide how it should be employed." I also stated a fundamental judicial tenet that, "People can only formulate an informed reasoned analysis of any subject when given both pro and con information." On the other hand, Mike, those representing your position, especially the evangelicals, are bent on making sure people are allowed to hear only one point of view. When did you ever hear a preacher on radio or television state the Bible was mistaken in some respect. I'm not "bent" in any direction, Mike. I'm trying to straighten matters out. The world's conditions are bent enough already; they don't need any assistance.

You say the "Holy Spirit must really be reprovng me of sin." I think you had better consult the Holy Spirit again, Mike. Since when has he been driving people away from "God's Word." When and where does the Bible relate an instance in which the Holy Spirit punished someone by urging him to go elsewhere. Incidentally, in regard to one of your comments, I hope you didn't mean to question my integrity. Neither of us has any reason to doubt the decency of the other. Ad hominen arguments prove nothing, are irrelevant, and only generate ill will. So let's stay with the Book and not shift the discussion to personal comments.

You accuse me of wanting to "air-condition" hell, while all I'm trying to do is let some fresh air into the minds of many. You ask me to open up to my readers and imply I failed in this respect by not publishing your tract in toto. As I stated in the March 1983 Issue, copying extended tracts such as yours is not practical (See: Editor's Note in Issue #3). Moreover, so many of your tracts fallacies have already been exposed that little can be accomplished by printing the rest. Why discuss the remaining secondary information. I have been providing you with a hearing, Mike, and will continue to do so. So will you please relate one instance in which your tract was quoted out-of-context or were denied an adequate hearing.

Letter #4 Continues:

You say the "Elijah revived at the time of the Transfiguration." I'd say that in the context of your sentence that the word "revived" meant "came back to life." Yet you say on page two, line 32, that Elijah never died! If he didn't die, how did he revive?

Editor's Response to Letter #4

Good Question, Mike! That's the most intelligent comment you have made. But don't ask me; ask the Bible. I've wondered how apologists resolve this contradiction. I didn't say Elijah never died; the Bible says as much (2 Kings 2:11). I never said Elijah rose from the dead; the Bible shows as much (Matt. 17:3). I am merely repeating the Biblical account. If you insist that Elijah never died and, thus, never came back to life at the time of the Transfiguration, then why was he mentioned along with Moses who did return to life. The problem is, "Does Matt. 17:3 mean Elijah rose from the dead." The context seems to say yes.

Letter #4 Continues:

You say, "How could Jesus be the savior of all mankind when he couldn't even save himself." That's how He was the Savior of Mankind, He gave himself for us to pay for our sins. In a sense- Jesus couldn't save Himself from dying on the cross, if any person was to ever be born again, because Jesus had to make the sacrifice which would pay for the sins we've committed against God.

Editor's Response to Letter #4

Mike, you just ignored what I wrote in Feb. 1983 issue on page 3. How could Jesus have been giving himself for mankind when he said on the cross, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me. Clearly he was not dying willingly for anyone and was not "giving himself for mankind. You keep saying he is dying for you when he says he isn't. Why don't you believe him.

What do you mean by, "In a sense Jesus couldn't save himself." Either he could or he couldn't. There is no inbetween. And his words clearly show he couldn't, although he wanted to.(Part II of Letter #4 will be in next month's issue.

Letter #5 from Abigail Brown of Fort Worth, Texas

Dear Mr. McKinsey, Even if every copy of the Bible were destroyed and there was no way to reproduce the Bible again, the story and message of Jesus Christ would live. It will continue to live and to grow, as long as the world needs love. Every aspect of creation needs care and concern (love). Survival of life itself is in jeopardy. I send this sermon(a copy is attached-ed) in hope it can get through to you.

Editor's Response to Letter #5

Dear Abigail, I'm sorry to tell you that of all the apologetic letters I have received your approach is among the weakest. What have you proved? Nothing! What evidence have you provided? None! Where is your data?All you have done is utter some assertions that make you feel good. You haven't even bothered to support your position with some Biblical verses. I might just as well say I am positive I will be elected president of the United States in 40 years. Now prove this false. How do you know what is going to occur until it's happened. How do you know the message of Jesus would live on if the Bible were destroyed and couldn't be reproduced. But even more importantly, who cares. The question is not whether the Bible's message will endure, but whether it is accurate. Continued support by the majority doesn't prove it is truth. To quote a wit: "Majorities mean nothing: during the Flood only one man knew enough to get out of the rain." The majority wants to hang a man at a lynching but that doesn't make it right.

I agree with you that "living" aspects of creation need love and survival itself is in jeopardy, but what has that to do with the Bible's truthfulness. The need for love doesn't prove Jesus is the answer; it only causes some people to look to him for love.

As far as the sermon you sent me is concerned, it is difficult to see how it could get through to anybody in light of its glaring inaccuracies. Proof for this is shown by looking at a statement on page 2. It says, "He (Jesus-ed) did not believe there was a devil, but he believed that power was demonic." Yet, Jesus not only believed the devil existed but had conversations with him (Matt. 4:3-10, Luke 4:3-8).

Letter #6 from Paul Hutchinson of Cincinnati, Ohio

The fact that present-day individuals still base their political, social and even economic philosophies and outlooks on overt and demonstrable false pronouncements of ancient figmental deities is alarming to say the least. And although I would never deny anyone the right of free expression and belief, your efforts, Dennis are precious in that they point out blatant falsehoods in what far too many people have for far too long held absolute, uncontested truths. The overall importance of our philosophies, religious or otherwise, are far greater than one would automatically assume. Our outlooks often determine how we observe, interpret and react to our environments and ourselves, and it is mostly for this reason that it is important our philosophies stand in accord with the available facts-an uncommon occurrence. I heartily salute your efforts to separate fact from fiction. If all had your desires to better know and understand our complex world, there's little doubt it would be much more enjoyable place to live. Keep up the good work (and God be with you).

Editor's Response to Letter #6

What can I say, Paul! Your kindness is exceeded only by your wisdom.

Letter # 7 from BR of St. Cloud, Minnesota

I received your issue #2(Feb.) and found it to be extraordinary. It has long been my belief that the Christians have to be defeated on their own turf (that is, Christian who seek to convert) which is the Bible itself. So sign me up for six months(and may I have a copy of No.1 as well?) My check is enclosed.

Editor's Response to Letter #7

Dear BR: I think we both agree with Paine who said, "I will not go out of the Bible for proof against the supposed authenticity of the Bible. False testimony is always good against itself." The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 105

Letter #8 from M. Potts of New York, New York

Sorry to keep you waiting on this subscription, it was one of the many waiters on the pile. Anyway, here we go for six months. Love your article, keep up the good work mate. This is great stuff! By the way. I've only gone as far as No.2 so could you follow on from there please. Thanks again for the wonderful information. (A subscription was enclosed-ed.)

Letter # 9 from Rev. Heins of Wisconsin

Dennis: I like the material you're putting in the newsletter. I'd like to try and give it a shot to publish some working manuals for Bible study. There must be some way to get the message out that Biblical interpretation must be based on other than literal interpretation. Keep up the good work

Issue No. 5,

COMMENTARY

Peter--The Bible has many heroes who play a crucial role in the formulation of Biblical concepts and ideology. Jesus, Paul, Abraham, David and Peter are among the more prominent figures. Unfortunately, each of these individuals has serious deficiencies in his character and should not be depicted as models for our children to emulate. Peter is as good an example as any of one lacking in courage and integrity. All of the following acts, statements, and events in the New Testament show poor judgement associated with naming churches, cathedrals, basilicas, and so forth after him, and the absurdity of granting him sainthood:

- He denied Jesus three times and lied under oath in the process (Matt. 26:70, 72.74-75);
- he will be denied by Jesus in Heaven because he denied Jesus before men (Matt. 10:33);
- he falsely and deceptively stated he would never desert Jesus, although all others may (Matt. 26:33);
- he lied when he said he would stand behind Jesus to the end (Luke 22:33);
- he was called Satan by Jesus (Matt. 16:23);
- he admitted he was sinful (Luke 5:8); he drew a sword and violently cut off a man's ear (John 18:10);
- he was rebuked by Jesus for having little faith (Matt. 14:31) and intruding into Jesus' affairs (John 21:21-22);
- he rebuked Jesus and accused him of making a false statement (Matt. 16:22);
- he repeatedly failed to stay awake at the Garden of Gethsemane when asked to do so by Jesus (Matt. 26:40-45);
- he wanted to know what was in it for him if he followed Christ (Matt. 19:27);
- he acted afraid and cowardly by refusing to eat with converted Christian gentiles because Jewish legalists were approaching and would object (Gal. 2:11-12);
- he, along with other apostles, felt the report of the Resurrection by the women was an idle tale (Luke 24:10-12);
- he entered Samaritan villages (Acts 8:25) in direct defiance of Jesus' commands (Matt. 10:5);
- he alleged Lot was righteous (2 Peter 2:7-8) despite the fact that Lot offered his virgin daughters to a crowd (Gen. 19:8), was wicked like the others, and did not deserve to be saved from Sodom and Gomorrah's destruction;
- after publicly accusing Ananias before the entire community and frightening him to death, he repeated the act with Ananias' wife (Acts 5:1-10) in contradiction of Jesus' admonitions to show concern for the sensibilities of others (Matt. 5:7. 39);

- he deceptively asked Jesus who was going to betray him (John 21:20), yet was present when Jesus exposed his future betrayer at the Last Supper (Matt. 26:25) and was present when Judas led the soldiers to arrest Jesus (John 18:3-5, 10);
- he asked for signs to be given to his generation (Acts 4:29-30) in opposition to what Jesus said would be done (Mark 8:12);
- he unjustly accused Pontius Pilate of being responsible for Jesus' fate (Acts 4:26-27) when Pilate clearly said he was innocent and did not want to be associated with the taking of "this just person" (Matt. 27:24);
- he said Jesus was killed and then hanged on a tree (Acts 5:30); whereas, he was crucified on a cross before he died (Matt. 27:40, 46);
- and he said God made Jesus both Lord and Christ (Acts 2:36) which would mean he was neither at one time.

Later issues of BE will discuss the accuracy of additional statements by Peter.

Despite this deplorable record, Peter is considered to be a "saint" by many, and one branch of Christendom has even gone so far as to use Matt. 16:18-19 to designate him as first Pope. Of all the Apostles, Peter was the most important; yet he often demonstrated a sorrowful lack of honor, truthfulness and integrity. One can only pity any institution having him as a founding father.

Contradictions

--If there is any area in which the Bible's imperfections and errancy is most apparent, it is that of inconsistencies and contradictions. The book is a veritable miasma of contradictory assertions and obvious disagreements, which is to be expected in any writing formulated over approximately 1,500 years by 40 or 50 different writers, few of whom seemed to be precisely concerned with what the others had penned. Moreover, the highly repetitive nature of the Bible accounts for many of the conflicts. It would have been far better for those attempting to defend the Book if, for example Deuteronomy had not repeated so much of Exodus, Chronicles had not repeated so much of Samuel and Kings, and the gospels had not been so repetitious. But they do repeat and, thus, problems exist. Yet, despite all historical, mathematical, ethical, philosophical, geographical, and chronological difficulties contained therein, some die-hard fundamentalists carry their hopelessly doomed resistance to the bitter end. As incredible as it may seem, there are some individuals who still say, "The Bible is perfect and inerrant. There are no inaccuracies." So, for the benefit of these holdouts, I am going to provide a list of some simple, straight-forward problems that even some well-known spokesmen for the fundamentalist position grudgingly concede:

- (a) David took seven hundred (2 Sam. 8:4), seven thousand (1 Chron. 18:4) horsemen from Hadadezer;
- (b) Ahaziah was 22 (2 Kings 8:26), 42 (2 Chron. 22:2) years old when he began to reign;
- (c) Jehoiachin was 18 (2 Kings 24:8), 8 (2 Chron. 36:9) years old when he began to reign and he reigned 3 months (2 Kings 24:8), 3 months and 10 days (2 Chron. 36:9);

- (d) There were in Israel 800,000 (2 Sam. 24:9); 1,100,000 (1 Chron. 21:5) men that drew the sword and there were 500,000 (2 Sam. 24:9), 470,000 (1 Chron. 21:5) men that drew the sword in Judah;
- (e) There were 550 (1 Kings 9:23), 250 (2 Chron. 8:10) chiefs of the officers that bore the rule over the people;
- (f) Saul's daughter, Michal, had no sons (2 Sam. 6:23), had 5 sons (2 Sam. 21:6) during her lifetime;
- (g) Lot was Abraham's nephew (Gen. 14:12), brother (Gen. 14:14);
- (h) Joseph was sold into Egypt by Midianites (Gen. 37:36), by Ishmaelites (Gen. 39:1);
- (i) Saul was killed by his own hands (1 Sam. 31:4), by a young Amalekite (2 Sam. 1:10), by the Philistines (2 Sam. 21:12);
- (j) Solomon made of a molten sea which contained 2,000 (1 Kings 7:26), 3,000 (2 Chron. 4:5) baths;
- (k) The workers on the Temple had 3,300 (1 Kings 5:16), 3,600 (2 Chron. 2:18) overseers;
- (l) The earth does (Eccle. 1:4), does not (2 Peter 3:10) abide forever;
- (m) If Jesus bears witness of himself his witness is true (John 8:14), is not true (John 5:31);
- (n) Josiah died at Megiddo (2 Kings 23:29-30), at Jerusalem (2 Chron. 35:24);
- (o) Jesus led Peter, James, and John up a high mountain after six (Matt. 17:1, Mark 9:2), eight (Luke 9:28) days;
- (p) Nebuzaradan came unto Jerusalem on the seventh (2 Kings 25:8), tenth (Jer. 52:12) day of the fifth month.

Besides hundreds of singular contradictions, the Bible has several instances in which contradictory statements appear in blocks or groups of anywhere from 10 to 25. The numerous problems associated with the Resurrection show this quite well (See: BE #2). Probably the most blatant example concerns the listings in Ezra 2 and Nehemiah 7 of the family units of the returning exiles. There are about 33 units that appear in both lists, starting with the children of Parosh. Fourteen of these units disagree, as can be seen by simply reading down the lists and comparing the numbers. Moreover, Biblical writers often had difficulty in adding figures, and this instance is no exception. Ezra 2:64 says the whole congregation together was 42,360, whereas, one need only add the figures to see that it is actually 29,818. Neh. 7:66 says the total number of returnees was 42,360, whereas, the actual number of people listed in Nehemiah 7 is 31,089.

REVIEWS

For many years apologists have been using a wide assortment of rationalizations and justifications to explain away obvious contradictions or inaccuracies in Scripture. Many have become masters of distortion, prevarication, and obfuscation, often going as far to make that which is patently false on its face seem rational, if not extraordinarily wise. They have developed an ability to make that which is irrational and absurd seem sensible and profound. The noted Biblical scholar J.T. Sunderland said it well:

Men (theologians-ed) allow themselves conveniently to drop into the background some of the more incredible or objectional things which the books contain; they develop a marvelous facility in explaining away contradictions and inaccuracies and things which the increase of knowledge has shown not to be true, and in reading into the books in a thousand places all sorts of new meanings and so-called "deeper interpretations" to make the teachings of the books harmonize with the increase of knowledge. That which really belongs to the mind of the reader is attributed to that of the writer. The natural and simple meaning of the words is set aside. Forced interpretations are put upon passages for the purpose of compelling them to harmonize with that which it is supposed they ought to mean. Statements, doctrines, and allusions are discovered in the books which not only have no existence in their pages, but which are absolutely foreign to the epoch at which they were written." The Origin and Character of the Bible, by J.T. Sunderland, p. 12.

In light of this fact, let us look at some of the explanations apologists often submit to explain problems such as those already discussed. In his work, The Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties, professor Gleason Archer of Evangelical Divinity School attempted to wrestle with many of the contradictory aspects of the Bible and produced a work which is something less than definitive. Although a strong evangelical fundamentalist, he admits the previously-mentioned inconsistencies (a, b, c, d, and e) are in fact, contradictory. He doesn't dispute the point, but attributes this to copyist errors. A Biblical writer supposedly transcribed something incorrectly. This explanation is often employed by apologists when any other approach would obviously be false. Facts are stubborn things, and close-mindedness might begin to show through. But how does one know if a copyist has made a mistake, when Archer himself admits the original writings longer exist? "...we must deal with the very real problem of the complete disappearance of the autographa (the original writings-ed) themselves... it is technically true that there are no extant inerrant originals." (p. 27). "it may be true that we no longer possess any perfect copy of the inerrant original manuscripts of the Bible." (p. 28). Having said this, Archer then makes a statement bordering on the absurd. "So also, we must cherish the inerrant originals of Holy Scripture as free from all mistakes of any kind, even though we have never actually seen them." (p. 29). Imagine the nonsense of this! We are told, Yes, there are contradictions in the KJV of the Bible. Why? Because somebody copied something wrong from the original writings. But no one has ever seen the original writings, so how does Archer know that something was copied incorrectly? How does he know the original itself is flawless? The originals themselves could very well contradict each other. In fact, how does Archer know there were original writings to begin with? Apologists constantly talk about the autographa, which admittedly do not exist, and no living person has ever seen. Modern versions of the Bible such as the King James, the New American standard, the Revised Standard, and the New International are nothing more than compilations, put together by a team of scholars who, after viewing a wide variety of Biblical manuscripts and codices (e.g., Codex Sinaiticus, Codex Vaticanus), attempted to reconstruct the alleged original writings. The fatal flaw in the entire process, even if there had been original writings, lies in the fact that hundreds of manuscripts disagree on hundreds of verses. Consequently, any version of the Bible is nothing more than the outcome of a popularity contest, in which conflicting manuscripts were reconciled with conflicting scholarly opinion. Votes, not God, gave man the Bibles of today.

Turning from the copyist error defense, let's examine some other common responses apologists often give to problems. With regard to the contradictions between Ezra 2 and Nehemiah 7, Archer says, "But it may well be that Ezra used the earlier list of those who originally announced their intentions to join the caravan of returning colonists, whereas Nehemiah's list reproduces the tally of those who actually arrived in Judea at the end of the long trek..." (Ibid. p. 230). Archer then dismissed the inaccurate totals by saying, "At any rate, the difference in totals that do appear in these two tallies should occasion no surprise whatever. The same sort of argumentation and attrition (while en route-ed) has been featured in every large migration in human history." (Ibid. p. 230).

This explanation has no strength whatever, since Ezra 2:1 and Nehemiah 7:6 clearly show both lists are referring to those who actually returned to Jerusalem and Judah. What happened while they journeyed is irrelevant. Thus, there are contradictions with respect to the number in each tribe and total number of arrivals. Archer closed his commentary by attributing some of the difficulty to copyist errors. "...it is very easy to see how uncertainty as to the digit might join with absent-mindedness on the part of the copyist to produce an inaccuracy in reproducing the figures." (p. 230).

In regard to the Ezra/Nehemiah problem, W. Arndt, an apologetic professor of New Testament exegesis and hermeneutics at Concordia Seminary in St. Louis, said copyist errors were responsible. "It is quite likely that where so many names and figures had to be copied, errors of transcribers crept in, and that these are responsible for some of the variations." Does The Bible Contradict Itself?, W. Arndt, p.49.

Chronological contradictions exist throughout much of the Bible, and nowhere is this more evident than in the gospels. For instance, Luke 4:5-9 says the devil took Jesus up to an (sic) high mountain and then to the pinnacle of the temple, while Matt. 4:5-8 says he took him to the pinnacle first and then to the mountain. Archer's attempt to resolve this problem relies almost entirely on one word. He claims that Matthew uses "then" (Matt. 4:5), which shows a logical sequence of events, while Luke uses "and" (Luke 4:9) between the two events, which obscures the sequence of events (p. 230). The problem with this approach is that several versions of the Bible (NIV, Modern Language, the Living Bible) say that the Greek word which has been translated as "and" in the KJV (Luke 4:9) should be translated as "then". Moreover, there are 44 verses in Luke's fourth chapter, and 34 of them begin with "and". If Archer's logic is adhered to, 34 of the verses could be rearranged in any manner a translator desired, and no one could possibly know the sequence of events.

Another chronological contradiction Archer attempts to reconcile concerns whether Jesus overthrew the tables of the money-changers (Matt. 21:12) and subsequently cursed the fig tree (Matt. 21:19), or cursed the fig tree (Mark 11:14) and then threw out the money-changers (Mark 11:15). Archer's resolution of this problem borders on the pathetic. He admits Mark 11:14-15 is arranged sequentially, but says of Matthew,

"As we study the narrative technique of Matthew in general, we find that he sometimes arranges his material in topical order rather than in the strictly chronological order that is more often characteristic of Mark and Luke" (Ibid p. 334). Yet, one need only read Matthew 21:12-19 to see that the narrative is arranged chronologically, not topically. Matthew 21:18 clearly shows the fig tree was cursed the day after the money-changers were expelled, in clear opposition to Mark's account.

Anyone desiring a more comprehensive listing of head to head Biblical disagreements can consult such works as: The Bible Handbook by G.W. Fooote, Is It God's Word? by Joeseoph Wheless, The Bible by John Remsberg, The Age of Reason by Thomas Paine, or The Christ by John Resburg. Each book is well worth reading.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #4 from Michael Hauenstein of Dayton, Ohio (PART II)

You say that Jesus repeatedly made false statements (See: BE #2-ed.). Using a RSV (Revised Standard Version-ed), a corrupt piece of junk if there ever was one, you say, "Jesus broke his promise" in John 7:8-10. First of all, AV 1611 (King James Authorized Version-ed.) is the only Bible without a provable error in it. By using a RSV you'll find all kinds of mistakes. But the AV 1611 is correct every time, it won't miss a lick. The AV 1611 says, "I go not up yet." Jesus didn't lie. He just wasn't going to go up when they went. Now, who made a false statement: God and the Bible or you?

Editor's Response to Letter #4 (PART II)

Mike, let's don't be absurd. The fact that the King James Version of the Bible has obvious and provable contradictions is beyond rational dispute. Holding strongly to one's beliefs and defending them with firm conviction is one thing; fanaticism is another. Anyone who can read can see contradictions abound. That's not the issue. The question is: Are they of sufficient numbers and of such overriding importance as to destroy the Bible's validity? Do yourself a favor, Mike. Don't try to protect an utterly indefensible position. You said the King James Version "won't miss a lick." Don't let yourself be licked by relying on it.

You contend the KJV, unlike the RSV, protects Jesus by having "Yet" in the verse (John 7:8). But I suggest you observe other versions of the Bible, such as the New American Standard Bible (NASB) because it omits "yet" also. Before calling it a "piece of junk" too, you'd better consult such fundamentalist evangelicals as Josh McDowell and Don Stewart, whose writings are quite prominent in Christian bookstores. In Reasons Skeptics Should Consider Christianity they say, "Although it is not as readable as some translations, its accuracy is second to none. If one desires to study the Scripture, the New American Standard Bible is perhaps the best Bible available." (p. 71). There was no "yet" in the manuscripts scholars studied. and that's why the RSV of 1952 and NASB of 1971 omitted it. Biblicists are well aware of this problem, Mike, and certainly would have put "yet" in, if at all possible. They don't want to confront this difficulty any more than you do. (Letter#4 will be continued-ed.)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #10 from M.B. of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin

Dear Sir, It is refreshing to hear a sound rebuttal against literalists and "their" Bible. I am an unfortunate person who works with three "fundies" (one of whom is a self-taught Reverend) on an almost daily basis. Furthermore, these "fundies" have friends, so I am constantly bombarded with biblical rhetoric.

The so-called Reverend is smugly reviewing your first two issues. His comments, I'm sure, will only be defensive at best, since your logic is impeccable. Having enjoyed your first two issues of BE, I would be interested in knowing about yourself and your background. Indeed the fervor of your attack seems to suggest a former fundamentalist past. In any case, I'll be looking forward to your next issues.

Editor's Response to Letter #10

Dear M.B. I always avoid leaving the Bible and discussing myself, but since your letter is so nice I guess a slight divergence won't matter. I have a bachelors's degree in philosophy and a master's in the social sciences. I've been in the field of education for over 15 years, and passed the age of 40 some time ago. Serious reading, chess, and tennis are my favorite pastimes, and probably show I have no fundamentalist background whatever. I grew up as a religious neutral and have been teaching myself since age 16, thus avoiding the usual one-sided instruction. Incidentally, ask your "so-called" reverend friend to write me. I'd like to hear from him.

Letter #11 from Don Morgan of Crusade Publications of P.O. Box 200, Redmond, Washington 96052-0200

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Your March issue was, as usual, very well done. With regard to letter #3, and your response to it, I would like to offer a few comments. When 2 Tim. 3:16 was penned (and it was probably NOT written by the so-called Paul) THE BIBLE DID NOT EXIST--the verse could not, therefore, refer to the Bible as we know it. At the most, it could only have pertained to the Old Testament. All of "Paul's" letters were completed BEFORE the first word of any of the so-called gospels was penned, and long before the question of biblical canon was settled (as you probably know). In addition, the verse can be correctly translated as follows: "All scripture WHICH IS INSPIRED by God..." (which puts the verse into an entirely different perspective). 2 Tim. 3:16 can only be used by, or on, the gullible to "prove" the inspiration of the Bible. When so used, not only is the verse being used incorrectly in terms of Biblical chronology and in terms of probable intended meaning, it is also used being used in a circular reasoning process (as I am sure you are aware). One must also take note of the fact (as one fundamentalist minister admitted to me) that "all scripture" can, in this case, mean nothing more than "all writing." Thus, 2 Tim. 3:16 becomes completely worthless in supporting the notion of biblical inspiration!

In response to questions such as: "Why do you go to such great lengths to prove the Bible wrong?" I respond that I consider it my DUTY to expose the true nature of the Bible in order to offset those who go to such great lengths to prove that the Bible is the word of God. I point out that a perfect being WOULD BE APPALLED to be associated in any way with such an imperfect book.

In addition (and you can tell "Ray" about this), I was once a born again, Bible believing, God fearing, fundamentalist Christian (See: Letter #3 in Issue #3-ed.). "God" gave me a reasonably good set of brains. I could not help but notice, in my on-going Bible studies, that there were problems with the Bible that were more than apparent. I gingerly began investigate. One thing led to another. What started as a timid investigation became a full-blown hobby, which has constantly occupied my time for almost six years, and I am now a born-again agnostic/atheist. I contend that ANYBODY who looked into the Bible as I have done would either: 1) become an agnostic or atheist, or 2) keep his "faith" only by subverting his own reasoning and denying reality.

Editor's response to Letter #11

Well, said, Don! Many scholars have stated the points you have made about 2 Tim. 3:16. Whether it should be translated, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (KJV) or "Every scripture which is inspired by God is also..." (Many Greek scholars) makes a tremendous difference. The latter translation implies some scripture is not inspired and would destroy the strongest verse fundamentalists use to prove the Bible's inerrancy. Incidentally, it really isn't necessary to go to "great lengths" to disprove the Bible. One need only open the Book and read with a critical eye.

Letter #12 from S.B. of Portland, Oregon

Dear Dennis: To put my reaction to Biblical Errancy in today's vernacular, "totally awesome!" Herein (I'm a ... student and we all talk with words like that), please find my check for $3 for the next six issues of BE, as per your offer on page six of issue #3. Are Issues #1 and #2 possible to obtain? If they're as good as #3, I ought to start keeping a set of these things...

Editor's Response to Letter #12

Dear S.B. Any back issue of BE is available. Just send 75¢ for each issue you desire.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

(a) Any letter sent to the editor may be published unless the author stated he/she does not want it put into Biblical Errancy. (b) The name of any individual submitting a letter to BE will no longer be revealed when the letter is published. Only initials will be used unless the source says he/she wants to be identified. Letters to BE are always welcome and will be encouraged (c) Anyone not wanting his initials and/or address revealed should so state.

COMMENTARY

The Virgin Birth--The Virgin Birth is among those concepts that are crucial to an adequate understanding of Christianity, one of the stones in the ideological foundation. Yet, like other stones, it is premeated with problems and contradictions that need to be exposed. Apologists contend the miraculous nature of the event could only be associated with the birth of a divine being, namely Jesus Christ. But what is so miraculous about a virgin birth? Webster's Dictionary defines it as a birth in which the mother retains her virginity by having no contact with a male. But this isn't a miraculous event. An egg can easily be taken from a virgin, united with a sperm in a test tube and re-inserted into the uterus without any physical contact being involved. Indeed, the parents that eventually emerge from this union don't even need to know one another. Where is the miracle? Webster defines miracle as, "an event or action that apparently contradicts known scientific laws and is hence thought to be due to supernatural causes, esp., to an act of God." But God doesn't need to act in this instance. It's not necessary. A fundamentalist apologist was correct when he said: "The Bible Believer should not defend the possibility of virgin births within the human race; rather he should argue that the virgin births cannot happen naturally or artificially, and that the only reason why Christ was virgin born was because of the miraculous ministry of the Holy Spirit." (The Virgin Birth, by Gromacki, p.96.)

Most of the difficulties associated with the Virgin Birth arise from within the Bible itself. To begin with, several statements contend Mary was a virgin at the time of the birth and that Joseph did not have contact with her until afterwards (Luke 1:34-35, Matt. 1:24-25, 1:18, 20), while other verses say Jesus was Joseph's son (John 1:45, 6:42, Luke 2:27, 41, 4:22, Luke 2:33,43 in NASB, Matt. 13:55, Luke 3:23). Even Mary said Joseph was the father of Jesus (Luke 2:48), and she ought to know. Several others verses show Jesus had a natural birth, according to the flesh (Rom. 1:3, 9:5). It's hard to believe the birth was natural if one of the parents was an Un-natural Holy Spirit.

A second major problem connected with the Virgin Birth arises from some of the previously-mentioned verses which allege Joseph was the actual father of Jesus. According to the genealogies in the first chapter of Matthew (1-16) and the third chapter of Luke (23-31), Joseph was a descendant of David. Therefore, Jesus was a descendant of David, which is required of one claiming the Messiahship (Jer. 23:5, 2 Sam. 7:12-13, Psalms 89:3-4, 132:11). But Joseph couldn't be the father of Jesus and Jesus couldn't be of David's seed (2 Tim. 2:8, Acts 13:22-23, Rev. 22:16) "according to the flesh" (Rom. 1:3, 9:5) if he emerged from a virgin birth. Christians must abandon one of two concepts, either the Virgin Birth or Messiahship of Jesus. They are incompatible. How could he be of David's descent "according to the flesh" if Joseph was not his physical father? A virgin birth would destroy the physical chain, the link between generations.

Apologists attempt to resolve this dilemma by alleging one of the genealogies (Luke 3) pertains to Mary, not Joseph. (See: Tough Questions Skeptics Ask by McDowell and Stewart). It allegedly shows he is a physical descendant of David, and since Jesus was from her flesh, he is also a physical descendant of David and can claim the Messiahship. However, there are several problems with this explanation. Although Joseph was from the house of David (Luke 1:27, 2:4), Mary appears to have been from the house of Judah since her cousin Elizabeth (Luke 1:36) was a daughter of Aaron, i.e. from the house of Judah (Luke 1:5). Moreover, Mary's name is never mentioned in the genealogy of Luke 3, and only arises incidentally in that of Matthew 1. Both genealogies clearly pertain to Joseph. Both clearly trace the descent of Joseph, not Mary. In fact, none of the genealogies in either the Old or New Testament trace the lineage of a woman. Women are never given a position of such importance in the Bible as to merit a genealogy, and there is no evidence Luke 3 provides an exception. The superiority granted men in the Bible would forestall any possibility of women being considered as equals. (More will be said about this in later issues of BE).

A third problem arising from the birth of Jesus lies in the fact that the Bible repeatedly says nothing pure can come from woman (Job 25:4, 14:4, Job 15:14 NIV), and anyone touching a woman within seven days after she has menstruated (Lev. 15:19) is impure. Mary had to be purified (Luke 2:22-24) according to the Old Testament law (Lev. 12:8), and it's difficult to see how Jesus could have avoided touching her during these periods. Mary was under the curse of Original Sin, like all of us, and thus was no purer than anyone else. Realizing the problem an impure Mary presents, Catholics tried to resolve this difficulty by proclaiming the Immaculate Conception in 1854. They alleged that Mary herself was conceived apart from sin: she was pure. But that does not resolve the problem; it's only removed one step. If this were true, how could Mary's sinful parents produce a pure daughter? Moreover, if Mary were sinless, like Jesus, then why would she say in Luke 1:47: "And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." If Mary had been sinless, holy, and the mother of God, why did she need a Saviour? According to Christianity, only sinners need saviours.

A fourth problem with the Virgin Birth arises from the wording of Isaiah 7:14, which supposedly prophesies the virgin birth of Jesus. According to the King James Version (KJV) the verse says: "...Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son and call his name Immanuel." Translators hotly debate the use of the word "virgin", which came from the Hebrew word "almah". Hebraic scholars say "almah" means a "young woman", not a virgin. They further contend that the real Hebrew word for virgin is "bethulah". They refer to Gen. 24:43 and Ex. 2:8 which show "almah" means a maid, not a virgin. Who knows Hebrew better, the Hebrews or the Christians? And the Hebrews say in their Masoretic text that "almah" should be translated as the young woman, not virgin. Some scholars further allege that "shall conceive" should have been translated as "is with" child, which is in the present tense and shows the prophecy pertains to a woman existing in Isaiah's time. Other critics claim "shall conceive" was translated from "harah" which actually means "has conceived". They say "harah" (conceived) is the Hebrew perfect tense, which represents past completed action in English. Additional evidence that Isaiah 7:14 does not pertain to Jesus lies in the fact that Jesus was never referred to as Immanuel in the New Testament, is never called Immanuel except by those who do so in order to fulfill the prophecy, and, according to Luke 1:31, was to be called Jesus, not Immanuel.

A fifth problem associated with the Virgin Birth is that some Christians allege Mary remained a virgin after the birth of Jesus. But this couldn't have occurred unless all of Jesus' brothers and sisters were products of virgin births also. Many verses show Jesus had brothers and sisters (Matt. 13:55-56, Mark 6:3, Gal. 1:15, Luke 8:19, John 2:12, 7:3-5, 7:10, Acts 1:14), that Jesus was only the first of several offspring (Luke 2:7), and that Joseph had no contact with Mary till she had brought forth her firstborn (Matt. 1:25).

Besides these major problems, there are also several difficulties related to the Virgin Birth. If Joseph was the natural father of Jesus, as some previously-mentioned verses allege, then Jesus was illegitimate, a bastard, since Joseph and Mary were engaged, not married. Luke 2:5 proves the latter quite clearly in the Revised Standard Version (RSV), the New American Standard Version (NAS), and the New International (NI) Version. Moreover, Jesus couldn't claim the throne of David. To quote the fundamentalists: "...if Jesus had been sired by Joseph, He would not have been able to claim the legal rights to the throne of David. According to the prophecy of Jeremiah 22:28-30, there could be no king in Israel who was a Descendant of King Jeconiah, and Matthew 1:12 relates that Joseph was from the line of Jeconiah. If Jesus had been fathered by Joseph, He could not rightly inherit the throne of David, since he was a relative of the cursed line." (Answers to Tough Questions, by McDowell, p. 56). Secondly, several other figures in the Old Testament also had miraculous births. Issac was born to an aged woman, Sarah, who no longer menstruated (Gen. 18:10-11), and Samuel was born to a woman, Hannah, whose womb had been closed by the lord (1 Sam. 1:5, 2:21). And thirdly, it's difficult to believe that the scruples of Jesus were far from those of his ancestors. Was his morality really that different from theirs? Abraham married his sister and seduced herhandmaiden; Judah committed incest with his daughter-in-law; David was a polygamist, an adulter, a robber, and a murderer; Solomon had a thousand wives and concubines; and Rehoboam, Abijam, Joram, Ahaziah, Jotham, Ahaz, Manasseh, Amon, and Jehoiachin were all described as purveyors of iniquity. Only four women are mentioned in Jesus' ancestry, besides Mary, and yet each was morally deficient. Tamar seduced the father of her late husband; Rahab was a common prostitute; Ruth went to bed with one of her cousins instead of marrying another cousin; and Bathsheba was involved in adultery. Despite this litany, apologists ask the world to believe these unprincipled malefactors gave rise to a perfectly sinless being, God himself.

Greek and Hebrew--In discussions with respect to the Bible's validity and meaning of verses (exegesis), apologists often say, "But you have to go to the original Greek and Hebrew to determine the meaning of words and phrases in order to see what the author meant." The implication, of course, is that if you don't know Greek and Hebrew, you can't really understand the Bible. There are several flaws in this tactic, however. To begin with, an apologist correctly stated: "With the various revised versions at hand, with an analytical concordance, with reliable commentaries, and with the help of dictionaries of the Bible language, the reader need not know Greek and Hebrew to verify the original meaning of a given passage. He has in his mother tongue the means whereby he may determine the correctness of most of the obscure translations." (Bible Difficulties, by W. Arndt, p. 20). Robert Ingersoll also made an appropriate observation in this regard: "It has been contended for many years that no one could pass judgement on the veracity of scripture who did not understand Hebrew. This position was perfectly absurd. No man needs to be a student of Hebrew to know the shadow on the dial did not go back several degrees..." (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 11, p.297-98). But equally important is the fact that returning to the "original" Greek and Hebrew doesn't really solve the problem, because thoroughly knowledgeable Greek and Hebrew scholars often can't agree on the translation of many words and phrases. They not only can't agree on the best translation of many terms, but they can't agree on which manuscripts are the best reproductions of the non-existent original manuscripts and, thus, which manuscripts the translations should come from. To make matters worse, they can't agree as to the authorship of many books in the Bible or when they were written. Disputes in these matters are never-ending and often boring. All of this disagreement has given rise to the many versions of the Bible that currently exist. Which is the best version? Who knows? They all claim validity; they all came from Greek and Hebrew scholars, often teams of individuals; and they disagree on significant points. For example, what is the correct translation of Isaiah 7:14? Should it say a "virgin" or a "young woman"? What is the correct translation of Luke 2:43? Does it say, "Joseph and his mother" (KJV) or does it say, "His parents did not know it" (RSV)? The distinction is crucial because the KJV implies a virgin birth, while the RSV shows a natural birth. To further complicate the problem, some manuscripts, which are felt by some scholars to be accurate reproductions of the originals (the autographa,) don't even include many verses in most current versions of the Bible. For example, some of the most ancient authorities don't even have the last 12 verses of Mark, which are quite important to critics of the Bible's validity.

These are only some of the major problems one will encounter if he thinks returning to the Greek and Hebrew will resolve problems. If there were unanimity among the scholars, this would be a wholly viable approach. But one need only compare the KJV with the RSV to see that it's still a matter of selecting whom you wish to believe. Any true believer in the Bible is really placing his bets and hoping for the best when he chooses a version. Apologists try their best to put a gloss of confidence over the whole situation. They confidently assure their followers that the latter are getting the truth straight from God's mouth, that there is nothing to worry about, they are receiving the words of God as originally written. "The text of the Bible has been translated accurately. We may rest assured that what we have today is a correct representation of what was originally given." (Reasons Skeptics Should Consider Christianity, by McDowell & Stewart, p. 77). "What of the New Testament? Again, based on the evidence, the conviction comes that there is a text which does not differ in any substantial particular from the originals of various books as they came from the hands of the human writers." (Know Why You Believe, by Paul Little, p. 42). But that's just the question, Mr. Little. What text? Scholars agree there is a text that "does not differ in any particular from the originals" but they can't agree on what that text says. "The number of manuscripts of the New Testament...is so large that it is practically certain that the true reading of every doubtful passage is preserved in some one or other of these ancient authorities." (Evidence That Demands a Verdict, by McDowell, p. 45). The question is not, has the "true reading" been preserved, but what is the "true reading". The many versions of today show scholars can't agree. Any layman walking into a bookstore to buy a version can only guess and take his chances. Anyone trying to reconcile the Living Bible(LB), the RSV, or the NWT with the KJV, for example, is destined for a migraine. Before one can discuss the Bible's validity with a fundamentalist, there must first be agreement as to the version to be discussed.

REVIEWS

A professor of the Bible and Greek and chairman of the department of Biblical education at Cedarville Bible College, attempted to resolve some of the problems related to the Virgin Birth. He alleged, for example: "Joseph and Mary were legally married or betrothed" (Matt. 1:18). She was called "his wife" twice (Matt. 1:20,24). He was called "her husband" (Matt. 1:19) (The Virgin Birth, by Robert Gromacki, p. 76). Obviously, Gromacki doesn't like the idea of believing his alleged Saviour was illegitimate. Of course, what he has done is opt for the Biblical version that suits his needs, a common ploy of apologists. The KJV of Matthew 1:18 says they were "espoused", which Gromacki equates with "being married," while the Modern Language (ML), the LB, the NWT, and the NI versions clearly say "engaged." There are no valid grounds for equating espoused with being married. Even the RSV and the NASB versions say they were betrothed, i.e. engaged. Gromacki uses the word "married." Although Matthew 1:20, 24 in the KJV strongly imply Mary is Joseph's wife, the ML, the LB, the NAS, and the NI versions show she is not his wife. And while the KJV of Matt. 1:19 says Joseph is Mary's husband, the ML and the LB versions refer to Joseph as her fiance. As stated earlier, the version people use depends on what they want to prove. Every Christian is putting his/her money on a Biblical version favored by one group of scholars and taking his/her chances. You could be an expert in Greek and Hebrew and still find scholars who would firmly disagree with your translation of many verses.

In trying to explain why Mary referred to Joseph as Jesus' father, Gromacki says, "In public, Mary had to refer to Jesus as Joseph's son in order not to arouse any suspicion about His origin." (Ibid. p. 75). this explanation is pure speculation, since Gromacki couldn't possibly know Mary's motives, and is also alleging the "Blessed Mother" lied. We are to believe the mother of God deliberately told a falsehood.

In a Life Magazine article Robert Coughlan took a position somewhat similar to that of BE. He said: "On the other hand, both Gospel writers (Matthew and Luke-ed.) give genealogies showing that Jesus was a descendant of King David through the male line--that is, the line of Joseph--an incongruity increased still more by the fact that the genealogies differ." (Life, Dec. 25, 1964, by Robert Coughlan, p. 90). Apologist Gromacki's response to this was: "If both genealogies did record Joseph's physical lineage, then Coughlan was indeed correct; however, no reputable evangelical embraces that position. Coughlan's rejection of the accuracy of the two genealogies was based upon his subjective equation of the two. He nowhere proved that they both belonged to Joseph." (The Virgin Birth, by Gromacki, p.151). Coughlan doesn't need to "prove it." All one needs to do is read the genealogies in Matt.1 and Luke 3 to see they pertain to Joseph. It's stated quite clearly. The burden of proof lies on the shoulders of Gromacki. He needs to prove the genealogy in Luke 3 pertains to Mary, which isn't possible unless some unwarranted assumptions are made. Her name never appears once in the entire third chapter of Luke. It's rather difficult to believe a genealogy pertains to someone who isn't even mentioned. Another apologist said: "The reason that Mary is not mentioned in Luke 3 is because she has already been designated the mother of Jesus in several instances." (Answers to Tough Questions, by McDowell and Steward, p. 60). Why would this be of significance? The point at issue is not whether Mary is the mother of Jesus, but whether the genealogy in Luke 3 pertains to Mary.

DIALOG AND DEBATE

Letter #4 from Michael Hauenstein of Dayton, Ohio (Part III)

You say, "Quoting from a work is fruitless unless you first prove the book is valid, truthful and reliable." Have you proved that the works of Ingersoll and Paine (atheists and infidels), that their work is more truthful, valid and reliable than the Bible? If so, please explain to us dumb, dumbs, how you so ingeniously accomplished this fact.

Editor's Response to Letter #4 (Part III)

To begin with, Mike, you haven't read the works of Thomas Paine. He was a deist, not an atheist. Read The Age of Reason and you'll see quite clearly he believed in God. Secondly, I use accurate statements from Ingersoll and Paine's writings; I'm not supporting everything they said. They never claimed the perfection for themselves that you claim for the Bible, and I wouldn't believe them if they had. Thirdly, quotes from these men are used to disprove the Bible's validity, not to propound a position. Are we discussing the "inerrant Bible" or the infallibility of Ingersoll and Paine? They don't have to be perfect in everything they wrote to prove the Bible is imperfect. They aren't on trial; the Bible is. It's claiming perfection, they aren't. Fourthly, Mike you are the infidel. You lack fidelity to logic, evidence, science, and reason. Infidelity depends upon one's perspective. And finally, I've never implied you or those of your persuasion are dumb, dumbs. Pejoratives only build walls. You just haven't been given a lot of vital information.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #13 from N.S. of Richman, Indiana Dear Dennis, LOVE IT! Received April issue, and now want Jan. and Feb. Don't want to miss a word! I'll let you do all the work and I'll have all the discussions with my Christian friends. This is just the fuel I've needed. I just haven't the patience to read that horrible book. Thanks again for a wonderful job-- well done.

Letter #14 from S.W. of New York

Dear Dennis, I just want to tell you how much I appreciate your publication. You certainly are a sharp and perceptive individual, and I admire you greatly for your work to expose the Bible for the fraud that it is... Keep up the good work and remember that there are a lot of people out here supporting you.

Editor's response to Letter #14

Dear S.W: I would appreciate any assistance you or others can provide in urging my supporters out there to contact me. Tell your friends and relatives. I always need publicity and more subscribers.

Letter #15 from Rev. E.E. of St. Louis

I am a retired pastor in the United Church of Christ, and for most of my career I have had to deal with and sometimes attempt to work with "Biblical Inerrancy" people. Aside from quoting a few unacceptable passages from Paul's epistles... I have found little help, like you are offering in BE, which I saw offered in the April issue of Progressive magazine. I would be very grateful to receive a copy of BE for one of my committees in my United Church of Christ denomination, Missouri Conference.

Letter #16 from D.W. of Dayton, Ohio

I can appreciate that yours is the only national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists; however, in future issues I hope that you will establish a balance between the Commentary section and the Dialog and Debate section. I realize that you are attempting to bend over backward in an effort to allow ample space for the apologists. If you give them the whole magazine, they still would not be satisfied. If you and Mike Hauenstein want to maintain a long-winded personal dialogue, fine; do it through your personal letters. Obviously he does not want to listen to the facts, and you will not change him. In the meantime, the work you do with the commentaries is excellent, and I, for one, do not want to see that cut short. I can go to the Christian bookstore and obtain all of the tracts that I could ever care to burn, but yours is the only place to get the objective commentaries. All I am asking is that in future issues the space be allocated more on a 50/50 basis.

Editors Response to Letter #16

Your point is well taken, D.W. A balance is important. However, Mike wrote BE a lengthy letter, replete with arguments often made and appropriate for this publication. Biblical Errancy is not meant to be an anti-Bible publication. It's intended to provide a forum for a dialogue on the Bible's validity, a platform for all points-of-view. Debate, argumentation, and polemics are an indispensable part of its overall philosophy. You seem to be quite intelligent and have probably discovered this for yourself. The April issue became overly involved with the correspondence between Mike and myself. I apologize. Who sent whom what publication can be rather confusing to outside observers. I think this was the real problem. Henceforth, I will make amends.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

A sizable number of BE critics seem to think the DIALOGUE AND DEBATE section is actually entitled HIT AND RUN. They write one critical letter and then vanish into the darkness of anonymity. Perhaps they are fearful; perhaps that is all they had to say. I don't know. I do know that if they aren't willing to engage in an open discussion over several months; if they aren't willing to defend the "perfect" book; if they don't have the courage of their convictions, then they are trying to circumvent the very purpose for which BE was created. Over the years I've talked to many ministers and other biblicists and found they, too, want to avoid additional discussions. Yet they continue making absurd claims about the Book's accuracy. I've even tried to get Mormons and Jehovah's Witnesses to return to my home. They won't.

Issue No. 7

July 1983

COMMENTARY

Original Sin-- In the fifth chapter of Romans Paul created a concept--Original Sin--that is crucial to Christianity. He alleged humanity is under a curse because of Adam's failings in the Garden of Eden. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned (Rom. 5:12)." "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive (1 Cor. 15:22)." (Also note Rom. 5:17-19). Yet, despite Paul's assertions it's difficult to see how the condemnations pronounced upon Adam, Eve, and the Serpent in the third chapter of Genesis (Gen. 3:14-19) condemned all mankind to eternal punishment. Paul's interpretation is just not warranted by the narrative. Gen. 3:14, for example, says:"And the Lord God said unto the serpent, 'Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life'". Clearly this bestows no curse upon Adam and doesn't materially affect the serpent. How did the serpent move before, if not upon its belly? It's difficult to imagine a serpent walking upright or finding one that eats dust. Even if he had walked on legs, the alteration is not germane to the issue. It is the curse on Adam that matters.

Gen. 3:15 (NIV) says: "And I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and hers (her seed- KJV, RSV); he will crush your head and you will strike his heel." These curses sound ominous but are of little consequence for several reasons. In the first place, the serpent, i.e., the Devil, didn't have offspring. According to Christianity the battle between good and evil is between the Devil and all others. Nothing is said about the Devil's children. Secondly, if "the woman" refers to Eve, then her offspring could refer to any person who lived. By what rationale can Paul say this verse is referring to one specific individual, Jesus, who lived hundred of years later in another part of the world? Her seed (RSV) must be referring to one person. If not, if it is referring to all of Eve's descendants, then to whom does "he" refer? Thirdly, the waters are muddied even further by the fact that the KJV and the RSV say "her seed" and seed is always plural in the Old Testament. It's never used to refer to a single individual, such as Jesus. And lastly, the "he" couldn't be Jesus, as Paul contends, because Jesus never crushed the head of Satan. If he had, then how could there still be "sinners" and how could the Serpent still be doing injury? Romans 16:20, which says: "And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly" and 1 Thess. 2:18, which says: "Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us" show that even after the death of Jesus, Satan still lived and exercised control over people. The best Christians can do with this problem is allege Jesus will destroy Satan when Christ returns. Assuming his return, however, is pure speculation, relying on hope and a promise.

Gen. 3:16 says: "Unto the woman he said, 'I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee'." Even if this verse were true, it would not mark the establishment of Original Sin, but only explain why women have pain during childbirth and have been dominated by men. "Thy desire shall be to thy husband" doesn't sound like a curse or punishment.

Gen. 3:17 says: "Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten of the tree of which I commanded you, 'You shall not eat of it,' cursed is the ground because of you; in toil you shall eat of it all the days of your life(RSV)." This verse does little more than condemn man to work for a living and curse the ground upon which he labors.

Gen. 3:18 says: "...thorns and thistles it shall bring forth to you; and you shall eat the plants of the field (RSV)." According to Gen. 1:29: "And God said, 'Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree with seed in its fruit; you shall have them for food'," the plants of the field were already bestowed upon man for food. It's difficult to see this as a curse, in any event.

Gen. 3:19 says: "In the sweat of your face you shall eat bread till you return to the ground...(RSV)." eating bread in the sweat of his face or working to produce food partly explains why man was created in the first place. Gen. 2:5, which says: "...and there was not a man to till the ground (RSV)" and Gen. 2:15, which says: "And the Lord took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it (RSV)" show man was put into the Garden of Eden to work and keep it up-- a blessing of healthful work instead of idle existence. Except for having to work for a living, this is no curse upon Adam or mankind.

In summary, much of the "Curse" is upon the helpless earth which Yahweh (God) had just created. There is not a single word or remotest hint at sin, at death, or eternal damnation. Every clause of the "curse" is no curse at all. God told Adam that because of what he did the ground is cursed, he must toil for food, thorns and thistles shall be brought forth to him, and he must eat the plants of the field. Where is the curse of Original Sin?

From the first curse in Genesis 3 to the end of Malachi, amid all the ravings threatening death upon the Chosen People, there is not the remotest reference in all the Old Testament to the Snake Story, the Curse of Adam, the Fall of Man, or the necessity of Redemption from "Original Sin" and the fires of Hell. Hell and its fires are totally non-existent in the Hebrew scheme. All the furies of God are temporal terrors and end with death of the accused. Jesus never once mentioned Adam or the pretended curse and fall. He never implied his mission was to undo what Adam had done. Not one of the gospel writers uttered anything about Adam, the Curse, or Redemption.

Messianic Prophecies--Christian apologists claim only one man in history, Jesus, fulfills the Old Testament prophecies with respect to the Messiahship. From their perspective he, and he alone, meets all of the requirements one must fulfill in order to be the prophesied Saviour of mankind. But do the facts confirm this claim? Can Jesus truthfully allege he is the Messiah outlined in the Old Testament? This question can best be answered by analyzing those prophecies which appear to provide the strongest support for such an assertion. Among those often discussed, none are more relevant to this issue than the prophecies in Isaiah 7, Micah 5, and Isaiah 53. If these can't withstand critical analysis, if they aren't applicable to Jesus, then what prophecies are? Since each is specific, detailed and rather lengthy, they will be discussed in this and subsequent issues of BE.

Micah 5-- The fifth chapter of Micah, one of the most quoted sections in the entire Old Testament, marks a fine place to begin an analysis of Messianic prophecy. Although touted as a fountain of truth and prediction, it's difficult to see its applicability to Jesus. Micah 5:2, for example, says: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephrathah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel." Apologists smile with glee over the fact that the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem appears to have been predicted hundreds of years before the event. But if they had read elsewhere they would have seen that Bethlehem was the name of a man whose father was Ephrathah. First Chron. 4:4 says: "These are the sons of Hur, the firstborn of Ephrathah, the father of Bethlehem." First Chron. 2:50 also shows Bethlehem was a man descended from Ephrathah. And since neither Bethlehem nor Ephrathah appears in the genealogies of Matt. 1 or Luke 3, they could not be ancestors of Jesus, and Jesus couldn't be the ruler referred to. Bethlehem refers to the name of both a man and a town. Another problem with Micah 5:2 lies in the fact that thousand of children have been born in Bethlehem, but that doesn't give each of them the right to claim to be the Messiah. Thirdly, Jesus was by no means a ruler in Israel. Quite the contrary, the people ruled over him, as is shown by his death. Micah 5:2 continues with: "...whose goings forth have been from old, from everlasting (KJV)." "Everlasting" is not a correct translation from the Hebrew. The Hebrew word actually signifies times long past as in Amos 9:11, Isaiah 63:9, Malachi 3:4, and Deuteronomy 32:7. No Jewish Old Testament writer ever taught that the Messiah was divine or his birthplace was eternity. The literal translation from the Hebrew is "from the days of ancient time." Not only the Jewish Masoretic text but several Christian versions--the RSV and the NIV--say "from ancient days." Although the writers of the RSV and the NIV have translated the Hebrew correctly, they have fallen into a dilemma. How could "from ancient days" refer to Jesus, since he is allegedly God, and God exists before ancient days? God is eternal and without beginning. Micah 5:4 (RSV) says: "And they shall dwell secure, for now he shall be great to the ends of the earth." This verse means the Messiah will bring peace and security to the world, as is stated in Isaiah 2:4. But if this verse is referring to Jesus, why did he not bring peace? Even more important is the fact that Jesus said he came not to bring peace but a sword (Matt. 10:34). But the really crucial verse is Micah 5:6, which says: "...thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian when he cometh into our land,...." If any verse proves the fifth chapter of Micah has nothing to do with Jesus, this is it. In the first place, Nineveh, the capital of Assyria, was destroyed and Assyrian power ceased to exist

606 years before Jesus was born. Secondly, Jesus never became a military leader. Thirdly, the Romans, not Assyrians, conquered the land of Judah during the lifetime of Jesus. Jesus struggled with Romans, not the Assyrians. And lastly, Jesus did not drive out anyone, especially the Romans. On the contrary, they signed the warrant for his execution. More will be said in subsequent issues of BE about other "sure-fire" prophecies of Jesus. Apologists often accuse their opponents of taking verses out-of-context, yet that's precisely what they did with Micah 5.

Biblical Inerrancy--On page 23 in Reasons Skeptics Should Consider Christianity, McDowell and Stewart provide a list of 8 commonly given reasons for believing the Bible is inerrant.

The evidence that the very words of the Bible are God-given may be briefly summarized as follows: (1) This is the claim of the classical text (2 Tim. 3:16); (2) It is the emphatic testimony of Paul that he spoke in Words...taught by the spirit (1 Cor. 2:13); (3) It is evident from the repeated formula, "It is written;" (4) Jesus said that which was written in the whole Old Testament spoke of Him (Luke 24:27, 44, John 5:39, Hebrews 10:7); (5) the New Testament coinstantly equates the Word of God with Scripture (Matt. 21:42, Rom. 15:4); (6) Jesus indicated that not even the smallest part of a Hebrew word or letter could be broken (Matt. 5:16); (7) The New Testament refers to the written record as the "oracles of God" (Rom. 3:2, Heb. 5:12); (8) And occasionally the writers were even told to "diminish not a word" (Jer. 26:2); John even pronounced an anathema upon all who would add to or diminish from this book. The fallacy in this above lies in the fact that all 8 reasons are making the same point in different words--the Bible is inspired because it says so, which, of course, is no proof whatever. Many writings in history have claimed divine perfection, but no prudent observer would accept them on this basis alone. McDowell and Stewart acknowledge as much on page 1 of Tough Questions Skeptics Ask. "...the Bible claims to be a record of the words and deeds of God, thus the Bible views itself as God's Word. The mere fact that the Bible claims to be the word of God does not prove that it is such, for there are other books that make similar claims."

The Resurrection--In Tough Questions Skeptics Ask McDowell and Stewart attempted to answer the following questions: How do you explain the contradictions in the Resurrection story? Their response is almost as unbelievable as the resurrection itself. They state:

A common objection to the...resurrection is that the four Gospel narratives contain hopeless contradictions. If the four accounts were placed in parallel columns a number of apparent differences would be highlighted. However, these apparent differences ultimately confirm the truthfulness of these accounts, rather than refute them. If all four Gospels gave exactly the same story, in exactly the same order, with exactly the same details, we would immediately become suspicious.

On the contrary, wisdom dictates that one become suspicious when they don't agree. Suspicion or not, if contradictions are to be avoided, they must give the same account. How contradictions, hidden under the euphemism of "differences," confirm truthfulness and agreement is difficult to fathom. McDowell and Stewart continue:

It is quite clear that all of the Gospels relate their portraits of Jesus differently. This is what we should expect. No four witnesses (or news reporters), all of whom witness a series of events, will write them up in exactly the same way, detail for detail. If they did, there would be obvious collusion.

Every time I have appeared on the radio, some caller has invariably made the "witness at a car accident" argument, which is no proof at all. Contending people always give conflicting reports of traffic accidents doesn't resolve anything. When there are contradictions, somebody isn't telling the truth, and that's all that matters. When witness A says there were 4 people in the northbound car and witness B says there were 2, when witness A says the accident happened at 2 o'clock and witness B says 3 o'clock, somebody's wrong. Collusion isn't even an issue. Whether it exists is of no consequence. All that matters is whether or not the stories agree. They either do or they don't. McDowell and Stewart's apologetic continues:

If the differences concerned the main points of the story, then there would be justification for doubt, but when the salient points are agreed upon by every witness, insignificant differences add to, rather than subtract from, the validity.

Any kind of differences major or minor, couldn't possibly add to a story's validity. But even more important is the fact that the accounts differ in nearly every major aspect. They don't agree on who went to the tomb, when they arrived, who was there, the status of the tomb, and so on. McDowell and Stewart then state: "It should be noted, too, that none of the details necessarily flatly contradicts any others, but in some plausible way they correlate together to supply the larger picture." If they really believed this, then I would challenge them to write one consistent narrative incorporating all four gospel accounts. The details are wholly incompatible and only confuse the overall picture. They continue:

One of the seeming contradictions that bothers people concerns the time the women came to the tomb, related differently by John and Mark. Mark's account has the women coming to the tomb at the rising of the sun, while John states that Mary Magdalene came to the tomb when it was dark. This difficulty is solved when it is realized that the women had to walk quite some distance to reach the grave, since they stayed in Jerusalem or Bethany. It was dark when they left the place in which they were staying, but when they arrived at the tomb the sun was beginning to shine. Therefore, Mark is speaking of their arrival, while John refers to their departure. McDowell and Stewart are apparently having difficulty reading the English language. So, for their benefit I'll quote the exact words of Mark and John. "And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun (Mark 16:2)." "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre,...(John 20:1)." Clearly both accounts are referring to the time of their arrival, and their time of departure is of no consequence.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #17 from J.S. of Santa Barara, California

Dear Dennis. In reading your Biblical Errancy periodical (Issue #2, Feb. 1983) I found some glaring mistakes in your line of reasoning. For example, in your explanation of apologists, you claim that, "...the witnesses-at-an-auto-accident argument...is quite irrelevant since two diametrically opposed and mutually exclusive versions of the same event cannot be simultaneous accurate. One or the other is false." (That's all J.S. said on this matter-ed)

Editor's Response to Letter #17

Yes, J.S. I did make such a statement. So where is my mistake? You forgot to say where I allegedly erred. I stand behind the statement and always will.

Letter #17 Continues

Furthermore, you claim that Matt. 8:1-2 supports the theory that the tomb was "closed when arrived." This, in fact, is not the case! A tomb is not even mentioned in either verse!! In your own line of reasoning, therefore, your periodical (or more directly you) must be a fallible source, and hence I should not use your "version" because it is false. Perhaps you will claim that it is a "copyist error," in which case, you owe an apology to the apologists and moreover to this Archer fellow; this is because in the four years I have taught Physics at College level, I have learned that it is at least as likely (if not more likely) to confuse 40,000 with 4,000 than 28 with 8.

Editor's Response Do you realize what you have done, J.S.? You have written an entire letter because I made a typing error in my February issue. You are correct. Matt. 8:1-2 does not support the theory that the tomb was "closed when arrived" but Matt. 28:1-2 does. My typist left off the "2" on the number "28." So what are you trying to prove, that I am fallible? Of course I am. Do you know anyone who isn't? I've never claimed infallibility, but the Bible does. As I stated in the last issue (June 1983) of BE, the Bible is under the microscope, not its critics. It's claiming perfection, they aren't. The context of Matt. 8:1-2 in the February issue clearly shows Matt. 28:1-2 was intended. Have I criticized you, J.S., because you misspelled "explanation," capitalized "physics," and omitted a "the" in front of the word "college"? Moreover, you falsely stated I have a "version". In truth, I analyze the versions of others, but I don't advocate one of my own. What is my "version"? I'd be interested in knowing, since every version in existence has hundreds of problems. You read my entire second issue and only mention one typing error. If that is the best you can do, J.S., you have practically endorsed the February issue.

Letter #18 from N.S. of Richmond, Indiana

Dear Dennis, First here's my three dollars for six issues of BE. I think it's wonderful! I'm an Agnostic, or Atheist, or whatever you wish to call me, but have had problems answering some of my Christian friends' arguments. I've always known they were wrong, and actually have pity on people who will not question what they read in the Bible. That's what first got me started. I never even opened a Bible till 4 or 5 years ago, and the more I read, the more I was astonished at the doubletalk and downright filth. I'm grateful to my parents, who weren't religious, that they weren't. Therefore I was able to see through this garbage (and I must call it this) for I had not been conditioned all my life. Incidentally, I'm no child, I'm 55. As you say, millions are only getting one side of the story, and what a pitiful story it is. Thanks again for something that's needed.

Editor's response to Letter #18

I see you agree with Thomas Paine, N.S. "Garbage," "filth," and "doubletalk" remind me of some of his comments: "Yet this is trash that the Church imposes upon the world as the WORD OF GOD; this is the collection of lies and contradictions called the HOLY BIBLE! this is rubbish called REVEALED RELIGION!"

The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p.201.

"...but if thou trust to the book called the Scriptures thou trust to the rotten staff of fable and falsehood."

Letter #19 from S.S. of Vienna, Virginia

I have long been aware of God's atrocities in the Bible. If people will only take the trouble to READ the damned thing and let it speak for itself, then there could be no lingering doubt that the so-called "Word of God" is among the most profane and repulsive collections of writing ever to exist. I refer to the human sacrifices of Leviticus, Judges, and 2 Samuel; the sanctioning of slavery in Exodus and Leviticus; the selling of one's daughter, the killing of witches, death for heresy and violating the sabbath, all to be found in Exodus. And for all those Bible-thumping sexists out there, for unchastity at the time marriage--a PENALTY IMPOSED ONLY UPON WOMEN (Deut. 22:20-21)

And so far as the New Testament is concerned--it is a compendium of both historical and logical contradictions (read: S.G.F. Brandon, Joel Carmichael, or G.A. Wells) filled with paganism and old time superstition. Easter is named after the old goddess of Spring. Christmas falls upon the winter solstice, which is when the Saturnalia was formerly celebrated.

I could go on and on, as any good amateur Bible critic could do. The point is that the more carefully one reads the Bible, the more absurd and utterly ridiculous it becomes. Anyone who believes that the Bible is the word of some god cannot claim to be at all rational (to paraphrase Clarence Darrow); and what future is there in store for mankind if there is to be this disdain for rationality?

Please enter my subscription for six months.... Please keep up the excellent work you are doing. This country needs more freethinking, independent-minded people like you. Is it any wonder that the Bible warns that "the simple believe anything (Prov. 14:15)? Indeed, it takes a simple mind to swallow such worn-out fables and mythology as are found in the unholy-as-can-be Bible.

Editor's response to Letter #19

I see you also agree with Paine, who said:

People in general know not what wickedness there is in the pretended word of God. Brought up in habits of superstition they take it for granted that the Bible is true, and that it is good; they permit themselves not to doubt it, and they carry the ideas they form of the benevolence of the Almighty to the book which they have been taught to believe was written by his authority. Good heavens! it is quite another thing, it is a book of lies, wickedness and blasphemy; for what can be greater blasphemy, than to ascribe the wickedness of man to the orders of the Almighty.

COMMENTARY

Slavery--The Indianapolis Star, one of the most conservative newspapers in the nation, has always quoted 2 cor. 3:17, "Where the Spirit of Lord is, there is liberty," on the front of each and every issue. Yet, if the Bible were, indeed, the Word of God, as apologists allege, it would be difficult to find a comment more at variance with the facts. All of the following verses show the God of the Bible sanctioned, indeed, instituted slavery--the absence of liberty. "Then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his ear unto the door, and he shall be thy servant for ever. And also unto thy maidservant thou shalt do likewise (Deut. 15:17, KJV)." (In order to minimize the Bible's support for slavery, the King James translators used "servant" instead of "slave" in this verse and others. The RSV translators used "bondman." Any knowledgeable authority knows slaves are being discussed, and several versions, e.g. the NWT and Living Bible, are honest enough to admit as much.)

But to continue: "Your male and female slaves are to come from the nations around you; from them you may buy slaves. You may also buy some temporary residents living among you and members of their clans born in your country, and they will become your property. You can will them to your children as inherited property and you can make them slaves for life, but you must not rule over your fellow Israelites ruthlessly (Lev. 25:44-46, NIV)." "If a man beats his male or female slave with a rod and the slave dies as a result, he must be punished, but he is not to be punished if the slave gets up after a day or two, since the slave is his property (Ex. 21:20-21, NIV)." "I (the Lord-ed) will sell your sons and daughters to the people of Judah, and they will sell them to the Sabeans, a nation far away (Joel 3:8, NIV)" (See also: Ex. 21:2-6, Deut. 15:12, 28:68, and Jer.27:8,12).

Apologists attempted to gloss over the situation by alleging these verses came from the God of the Old Testament and his laws, while the New Testament's God is supposedly one of love, liberty and compassion. If so, somebody forgot to tell Peter and Paul. The latter said: "Slaves, obey your earthly masters with respect and fear, and with sincerity of heart, just as you would obey Christ. Obey them not only to win their favor when their eye is on you, but like slaves of Christ, doing the will of God from your heart. Serve wholeheartedly, as if you were serving the Lord, not men....(Eph. 6:5-7, NIV)." "All who are under the yoke of slavery should consider their masters worthy of full respect, so that God's name and our teaching may not be slandered (1 Tim. 6:1, NIV)." "Slaves, obey your earthy masters in everything; and do it, not only when their eye is on you and to win their favor, but with sincerity of heart and reverence for the Lord (Col. 3:22, NIV)." "Teach slaves to be subject to their masters in everything, to try to please them, not to talk back to them,....(Titus 2:9, NIV)." Paul not only sanctions slavery but equates serving one's master with serving God. To serve one faithfully is to serve the other faithfully. Peter agrees with Paul: "Slaves, submit yourselves to your master with all respect, not only to those who are good and considerate, but also those who are harsh....Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you should follow in his steps (1 Peter 2:18,21, NIV)." Clearly, according to the Bible, the spirit of the Lord has little to do with liberty. If they were inseparable, God wouldn't be supporting the slavemasters. Confederate leaders during the Civil War were quite correct when they contended the Bible supported slavery. "...Let the gentleman go to Revelation to learn the decree of God--let him go to the Bible,.... I said that slavery was sanctioned in the Bible, authorized, regulated, and recognized from Genesis to Revelation.... Slavery existed then in the earliest ages, and among the chosen people of God; and in Revelation we are told that it shall exist till the end of time shall come. You find it in the Old and New Testament--in the prophecies, psalms, and the epistles of Paul; you find it recognized, sanctioned everywhere (Jefferson Davis by Rowland, Vol. I, p. 316-17)." The well-known reverend Alexander Campbell contended: "there is not one verse in the Bible inhibiting slavery, but many regulating it. It is not then, we conclude, immoral." However, biblical support justifies nothing. Slavery was no more right in 2,000 B.C. than in 2,000 A.D. Morality has not changed that much, regardless of cultural difference and time differentials.

Women--Any discussion of bondage and the Bible would be remiss if the Biblical role outlined for women was omitted. In both the Old and New Testaments women are assigned a position not appreciably different from that of domestic servants. Their status is demeaning, debilitating, and wholly incompatible with self-respect and confidence. Except for Mary, Eve, Ruth, Sarah, Rachel, and a few lesser figures, few biblical women have roles of significance, and even fewer are worthy of emulation. Eve, for example, is blamed for the creation of Original Sin. The Bible says as much: "For Adam was formed first, then Eve. And Adam was not the one deceived; it was the woman who was deceived and became a sinner (1 Tim. 2:12-14, NIV)." Is it any wonder that women's groups oppose this narrative? With his usual wit, Ingersoll once observed: "...nearly every religion has accounted for all the devilment in this world by the crime of woman. What a gallant thing that is! And if it is true, I had rather live with the woman I love in a world full of trouble, than to live in heaven with nothing but men (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. I, p.358)." One of the saddest and most perplexing dilemmas one can experience in modern society is confronting women who strongly believe and defend a book that so clearly assigns them a degrading and subservient status. How do you reach those who are defending a philosophy that is so totally opposed to their interests? To use the vernacular, the Bible is sexist and permeated with male supremacy, as the following verses show only too well: "...and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee (GEN> #:16)." "But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man;.... (1 Cor. 11:3)." "Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man (1 Cor. 11:9)." "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husband, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife.... Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husband in every thing (Eph. 5:22-24)." Anyone desiring more proof should read: Deut. 21:10-14, 24:1-4, Judges 5:30, Esther 1:20-22, Rom. 7:2, 1 Col. 3:18, Titus 2:4-5, 1 Peter 3:1, Lev. 12:2, 5, Gen. 3:20.

If these are not sufficient, there are more. The evidence is overwhelming. Apologists try to soft-pedal the entire matter, but facts are stubborn things. It isn't just Paul, but the entire Bible that's guilty. Is it any wonder that feminist Elizabeth Cady Stanton, once said: "The Bible and the Church have been the greatest stumbling-blocks in the way of woman's emancipation (Free Thought Magazine, Vol. 14, 1896)." "I know of no other book that so fully teaches the subjection and degradation of women (Eight Years and More, Elizabeth C. Stanton, p. 395)." Not to be outdone, Ingersoll again displayed his wisdom by saying: "...it (the bible-ed) is not the friend of woman. They will find that the writers of that book, for the most part, speak of woman as a poor beast of burden, a serf, a drudge, a kind of necessary evil--as mere property (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 12, p.43)." "As long as woman regards the Bible as the charter of her rights, she will be the slave of man. The Bible was not written by a woman. Within its lids there is nothing but humiliation and shame for her. She is regarded as the property of man.... She is as much below her husband, as her husband is below Christ (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. I, p. 396)." But, perhaps, George Foote made the most poignant comment of all: "It will be the proud boast of woman that she never contributed a line to the Bible."

In closing, it should be noted that the Bible sanctions the subservience of woman far more than it sanctions the slavery of blacks. Indeed, although many verses support slavery, none clearly prescribes white dominance over blacks.

Coping with Apologists--Although BE rarely goes outside the Bible to make observations, an occasional exception is warranted. Throughout the years I have noticed differing philosophies employed by those seeking to cope with defenders of the Bible. Generally speaking, they can be grouped into nine broad categories with some overlap. Each is worthy of note.

- The first approach involves seeking to smother biblicists with humor and ridicule by asking such questions as: Surely you don't believe Jonah was swallowed by a whale, a donkey spoke, or a stick turned into a snake. How childish can one be!
- A second approach involves trying to alter beliefs by holding the Bible in contempt and its adherents worthy of profound pity. The problem with this tact is that biblicists respond in kind.
- The "bleeding heart" is the essence of the third approach, at least that is the label applied by the Bible's defenders. Its adherents make comments as: "How can you support, defend, and propound a book that has so much blood, gore, and immorality?" To this, the obvious and most common response is: "That's life, friend. The Bible deals with the real world."

- A fourth approach is not particularly effective either. Critics of the Bible will say, for example: "How can you support capital punishment when the Bible says, Thou shalt not kill?" Or, "How can you support warfare when the Bible says, love thy neighbor as thyself?" The Bible is made-to-order for criticisms of this sort. Everybody has heard the well-know maxim that you can prove anything you desire from the Bible. "...the Bible decides nothing, because it decides any way, and every way one chooses to make it (The Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, p. 196)." "It has often been said that anything may be proved from the Bible (The Age of Reason, Paine, p. 89)." One can easily find verses to justify capital punishment and warfare. The point is, it is difficult to take pot-shots at the Bible from a distance and hope to strike home. The more inconsistent a book is, the more it is able to cope with this tactic. And no book is more qualified than the Bible. It is truly unique in this respect.
- Scientific precision is the essence of the fifth strategy. Critics of the Bible attempt to compile so much data to disprove accounts, such as the Creation and Flood stories, that opponents are overwhelmed. Unquestionably, such information exists, but apologists have their "scientists" also. The Creation Research Society of California, for example, boasts of having 100 members with scientific degrees. But even more importantly, any reliance on extra-biblical evidence to disprove the Bible is doomed to failure. A fundamental aspect of the biblicist mentality is that no matter what information one can produce, no matter what data outside the Bible may show, if it contradicts that which is within, then it is false. And that is that!
- The core of a sixth approach to the Bible's defenders involves providing an alternative. Humanism, atheism, agnosticism, skepticism and so forth provide a far more rational view of the Bible. But why would biblicists accept another view of scripture when they are convinced they already have the truth? Why would someone abandon plan A and accept plan B when they have never been shown why plan A is erroneous?
- A seventh approach to biblicists entails a "live and let live" philosophy, as shown by: "If I can't change them, then I'll just ignore their nonsense." The fatal flaw in this approach lies in the fact that there is no response-in-kind. Biblicists, such as the "Moral Majority," are constantly devoting large amounts of time, money, effort, and personnel to inject their philosophy into the schools, the laws, the courts, social agencies and so forth. You may want to leave them alone, but anyone acquainted with current church-state issues knows their assaults are never-ending. You either struggle and protect or lose and succumb. They are not going to leave you alone, regardless of what you do. Their evangelical thrust is incessant. Ingersoll aptly stated: "Churches are becoming political organizations.... It probably will not be long until the churches will divide as sharply upon political, as upon theological questions; and when that day comes, if there are not liberals enough to hold the balance of power, this government will be destroyed. The liberty of man is not safe in the hands of any church. Wherever the Bible and sword are in partnership, man is a slave (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p.)." Ingersoll proved to be quite a prophet in light of the fact that that day has already arrived.

- An eighth approach, accepted by those who recognize the weakness of the seventh, involves unending court battles, legal struggles, constitutional decisions and popular pressures. Undoubtedly, if you can't change your opponents's mind or weaken his resolve, this is a viable alternative.
- A final strategem marks an attempt to solve the weakness in the sixth. If defenders of the Bible are not going to accept an alternative to the Bible until they first realize it's not inspired, then, logically, they must be shown its weaknesses. Biblical Errancy was created to fill this need, to reveal the nuts and bolts of biblical fallacies. It rarely goes outside the Bible for evidence; it doesn't make emotional appeals to the heart; it doesn't throw rocks at a distance; it doesn't propose an alternative; it doesn't laugh at or belittle the Bible and its defenders; it doesn't ignore the Bible's proponents or act as if they weren't a major force in society; it doesn't discount the opposition with pity and contempt; and lacking financial resources, it doesn't rely on the courts. Instead, BE goes within the Bible, makes comparisons, and draws conclusions. It seeks to know the Bible and work with apologists on their own turf. BE operates on the principle that more than enough information exists within the Book to undermine its foundation. The overriding problem with this approach, or any strategy appealing to rationality and common sense, however, is what do you do with those who say; "My mind is made up, don't confuse me with any facts"? What do you do with people who won't engage in any critical discussion of the Bible, whose minds are closed? When Jesus assumes control, many seem to enter another dimension, which is not so much a twilight zone as one of pure darkness.

Paul, the Deceptive Disciple--No discussion of devious activity with respect to biblical figures would be complete without an extensive analysis of Paul. If, in fact, Paul wrote the Epistles, then no individual, other than Jesus, has had greater influence on the development of Christianity. Yet, his tendency to operate on expediency was unexcelled. He often made false statements, misquoted, and proved himself unworthy of trust. The following examples are only a fraction of those available. In 1 Cor. 2:8 Paul said: "Which none of the princes of this world know; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." What princes crucified Jesus? He was killed by a mob and some soldiers. In Col. 1:23 Paul said: "...from the hope of the gospel which you heard, which has been preached to every creature under heaven, and of which I, Paul, became a minister." Come now, Paul. At no time has every living person heard the gospel. Indeed, millions of people have come and gone without having had any contact whatever with the Bible. One of the great misquotes of Paul is found in Acts 20:35 where he says: "...ye ought to support the weak and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Nowhere in the New Testament did Jesus make such a statement. Paul's oratory apparently got away from him.

Paul, like Jesus, often ignored his own advice. For example, in Rom. 12:14 he said: "Bless them which persecute you: bless and curse not." Yet, in Acts 23:3 he denounced someone by saying: "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." In 1 Thess. 2:3 Paul says: "For the appeal we make does not spring from error or impure motives, nor are we trying to trick you." Yet, in 2 Cor. 12:16 he said: "Yet, crafty fellow that I am, I caught you by trickery. In 1 Cor. 6:12 and 10:23 Paul says: "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient." The allegedly moral Paul views himself as being a law unto himself. A different kind of problem is found in 1 Cor. 15:5, where Paul says: "And that he (Jesus-ed) was seen of Cephas (Peter-ed), then of the twelve." If true, this would mean there were 13 apostles, unless Peter was not an apostle. In 1 Cor. 10:8 Paul referred to a plague described in the Book of Numbers. He Stated: "...and fell in one day three and twenty thousand." Yet, Num. 25:9 clearly says the number was 24,000. "And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousand (Numbers 25:9)." More will be said later about Paul's shortcomings.

In The Bible Has the Answer, apologist Henry Morris of the Creation Research Society in San Diego, California, attempted to justify the role assigned to women by the Bible. Never one to mince words, he confronted the issue head-on, by stating at the outset: "Some go so far as accusing the Bible of perpetuating female bondage through its archaic teachings. This unfortunate charge is ironic, for the Bible alone offers the only true freedom for women or men. While pagan cultures contemporary with Old Testament Israel treated women as the lowest form of chattel property, the Bible exalts women who found fulfillment in many ways. For instance, Hannah's life centered on her family (1 Sam. 1-2); Miriam excelled as a prophetess (Ex. 15:20); Deborah achieved greatness as a judge, military leader and poet (Judges 5); Esther successfully led her people through intriguing political conspiracies (Esther 4-7); and Naomi and Ruth sold real estate (Ruth4:3-9). Women aided in the defence of Thebez, an unnamed woman turned the tide of that battle against the wicked aggressor, Abimelech (Judges 9:50-55)." (The Bible has the Answer, Henry Morris, p. 239-240). The weakness of Morris's position lies in the fact that the individuals selected not only have minor roles in the overall biblical scheme of things, but have been inaccurately portrayed. The biblical descriptions associated with each of those cited don't exalt women as much as they describe their actions. Hannah was a maid. She wasn't exalted but merely wanted to become pregnant. Miriam didn't prophesy anything; she merely played a timbrel and sang (RSV). Deborah was a judge, but nowhere does it say she was out of the ordinary. She wasn't a military leader either; she merely gave some advice to one. Esther's role resembled that of a soap-opera heroine rather than a leader of her people. Naomi not only sold real estate, but sold Ruth as well! (This was an exceptionally poor example for Morris to chose). And the unnamed woman merely killed the attacking general; she didn't turn the tide of battle, like Samson with a jawbone. The groping-for-straws aspect of Morris's examples only highlights the rather pathetic portrayal of women by the Bible. Two of the most famous biblical women, Eve and Mary, are assigned less than commanding roles. Eve is given the distinction of having brought sin into the world, hardly a worthy role-model, while Mary was little more than a conduit for Jesus' entry. As this month's Commentary showed, there is no basis whatever for Morris's contention that "the Bible alone offers the only true freedom for women." Indeed, the evidence clearly proves the contrary. Can he produce one biblical verse that exalts or elevates womanhood per se, that is, without making the elevation dependent upon the performance of an act of subservience? Morris continues: "Furthermore, there are no distinctions of sex regarding salvation by faith in Christ or one's position before God (Ibid. p. 240)". Although the Bible doesn't appear to make a distinction between males and females with regard to who is "saved," it clearly makes a distinction with regard to one's gender before God. Morris attempts to downplay the force of Paul's admonitions by quoting 1 Cor. 11:3, which states: "Within the Christian home, the man is the head of the woman (Ibid. p. 240)." But 1 Cor. 11:3 says nothing about a home, Christian or otherwise. Male superiority is not restricted to home; males are superior as shown by: "But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God (1 Cor. 11:3)." Morris continues with: "Yet, the husband violates the Bible's instruction if he treats his wife as an inferior (Ibid. p.240)" and states this is found in 1 Cor. 11:11-12. In truth, the latter merely states man is born from a woman; nowhere is the husband told not to treat his wife as inferior. Morris's apologetic continues with an eye opener: "The wife has no less important or exalted a position than the husband, but hers is not as head of the home. Subjection, in Scripture, does not carry the connotation of inferiority (Ibid. p. 240)." How could subjection not mean inferiority? To prove this point, Morris quotes Eph. 5:22-25, which proves precisely the opposite! Wives are to be subject to their husbands: "the husband is head of his wife (Eph. 5:23)" clearly putting her in an inferior position. Morris then moves his apologetic to another defense with: "As in the home, so in the local church, women have a definable role (Ibid. p. 240)." It certainly couldn't amount to much in light of 1 Cor. 14:34, which says: "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak." Morris attributes their demotion to Eve's duplicity. "The prohibition against women in church leadership seems to come as a judicial result from Eve's complicity in the first sin in Eden (Ibid. p. 241)." In other words, women are being denied leadership roles today because of what Eve did years ago. The innocent are being punished for what an ancestor did long ago. Again shifting the focus, Morris states: "Some have even called Paul an antiquated sexist, and have implied that his teachings on women's roles reflect his own sexual insecurity and misinformation. Obviously, those making such charges have a very low view of Scripture (Ibid. p. 241)." Regardless of what view critics may have of Scripture, where are they wrong in this analysis? Unless Morris has evidence to the contrary, he should not laugh off this view. It could be correct. Morris concludes his apologetic with a comment that merits little serious consideration: "The Bible does not prohibit women from enjoying equal opportunity legally, socially, or economically, nor does the Bible require Christian women to be submissive to all men (Ibid. p. 242)." To this, one can only say, Don't be absurd, of course it does. "...women should feel perfect liberty to take positions of authority over men in professional, business, or social contexts (Ibid.)." Before making this statement Morris should have read 1 Tim. 2:12, which says: " permit no woman to teach or have authority over men; she is to keep silent (RSV)." Virtually every aspect of Morris's apologetic is in direct opposition to biblical teachings.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

A couple of readers questioned the use of "apologists," "apologetics." and "errancy." They should rest assured, however, that these are well-known terms in the realm of biblical analysis, and have not been manufactured by BE for pejorative purposes. Webster defines "apologetics" as: "the branch of theology having to do with the defense and proofs of Christianity", while an "apologist" is defined as "a person who writes or speaks in defense or justification of a doctrine." Both terms are appropriately followed by the word "apologize", which means to express regret for a fault, wrong, etc." Webster defines "errancy" as "the state or instance of erring, a tendency to err" while "inerrant" is defined as "making no mistakes; infallible." All three terms have been used for years. Indeed, Christian bookstores often have a section entitled "Apologetics" and a group of conservative biblical scholars calls their organization The International Council on Biblical Inerrancy.

COMMENTARY

Biblical "Science"--The question of whether or not the Bible is scientifically valid has been debated for hundreds of years by critics and supporters alike. Biblicists have contended the book not only supports science but contains many statements that are ahead of their time. The Bible supposedly has great scientific wisdom and only now are we beginning to realize as much. Critics, such as myself, believe the Bible is its own worst enemy. From our perspective there are more than enough statements contained therein to forestall any claims to scientific precision. Indeed, many statements clearly belong in the realm of mythology and folklore, while others are simply false. Some are so vague it's difficult to know what is meant, so naturally, biblicists choose the more scientifically oriented interpretation. Those believing the Bible to be scientifically precise and wise beyond its years should read, digest, and remember the following assertions contained within its covers:

- (a) the bat is a bird (Lev. 11:19, Deut. 14:11, 18);
- (b) Some fowls are four-footed (Lev. 11:20-21);
- (c) Some creeping insects have four legs. (Lev. 11:22-23);
- (d) Hares chew the cud (Lev. 11:6);
- (e) Conies chew the cud (Lev. 11:5);
- (f) Camels don't divide the hoof (Lev. 11:4);
- (g) The earth was formed out of and by means of water (2 Peter 3:5 RSV);
- (h) The earth rest on pillars (1 Sam. 2:8);
- (i) The earth won't be moved (1Chron. 16:30);
- (j) A hare does not divide the hoof (Deut. 14:7);
- (k) The rainbow is not as old as rain and sunshine (Gen. 9:13);
- (l) A mustard seed is the smallest of all seeds and grows into the greatest of all shrubs (Matt. 13:31-32 RSV);
- (m) Turtles have voices (Song of Sol. 2:12);
- (n) The earth has ends or edges (Job 37:3);
- (o) The earth has four corners (Isa. 11:12, Rev. 7:1);
- (p) Some 4-legged animals fly (Lev. 11:21);
- (q) The world's language didn't evolve but appeared suddenly (Gen. 11:6-9; and
- (r) A fetus can understand speech (Luke 1:44).

Some statements are so vague that apologists can often evade dilemmas by creative rationalizations. As Ingersoll said: "If the holy writer uses general terms, an ingenious theologian can harmonize a seemingly preposterous statement with the most obdurate fact. (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 37). For instance, Gen. 1:7-8 says: "And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament;... And god called the firmament Heaven."

Realizing the scientific implausibility inherent in this narration, some apologists attempt to portray the firmament as nothing more than the atmosphere separating the moist clouds above from the oceans below. Some biblical allegations are not only erroneous but have been fatal to their adherents. For instance, Mark 16:17-18 says: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils;.... They shall take up serpents and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them." Not many believing Christians are willing to drink poisons or handle rattlesnakes to prove the Bible's accuracy, although some have tried. Many individuals have died because they put their trust in the Biblical injunction to pray ("And the prayer of faith shall save the sick," James 5:13-15) and, not wanting to make Asa's mistake (2 Chron. 16:12), shunned physicians.

The unscientific aspect of biblical teachings is also shown in the fact that many mythological creatures are spoken of as if they were, in fact, real. The manner in which they are described and the context within which this occurs show biblical writers felt they actually existed. Some of the prominent examples are:

- cockatrices (Jer. 8:17, Isa. 11:8 59:5),
- unicorns (Deut. 33:17, Psalms 22:21. 29:6, Job 39:9-10),
- satyrs (Isa. 34:14, 13:21)
- fiery serpents (Num. 21:6),
- and flying serpents (Isa. 14:29, 30:6).

Last, but not least, one should note the hundreds of miracles contained within the Bible. Perhaps more than anything else they prove the Book lacks scientific validity. Miracles, by definition, have supernatural causes, and science, by definition, doesn't work with the supernatural. In order to avoid an extended discussion as to the existence of miracles, I will simply say that nearly all reputable scientists deny their existence and feel all events have a natural, material cause. Believers in miracles can never produce a supernatural event when asked to do so. Challenges are invariably left unanswered. Any book claiming a woman turned into a pillar of salt (Gen. 19:26), the sun went backward 10 degrees on the sundial (2 Kings 20:11), and quails came from the sea (Num. 11:31) is going to have great difficulty demonstrating its scientific precision to any reasonably scientific mind. One can't help but recall the humorous instance in which an eight year old lad was asked by his mother what he had learned at Sunday school. "Well," he said, "our teacher told us about when God sent Moses behind enemy lines to rescue the Israelites from the Egyptians. When they came to the Red Sea, Moses called for engineers to build a pontoon bridge. After they had all crossed, they all looked back and saw the Egyptian tanks coming. Moses radioed headquarters on his walkie-talkie to send bombers to blow up the bridge and save the Israelites."

"Bobby," exclaimed his mother, "is that really the way your teacher told you that story?"

"Not exactly, Mom, but if I told it her way you'd never believe it."

Virtually every child has heard about the parting of the Red Sea, the whale swallowing Jonah, the stick turning into a snake, and Jesus' walking on water. In fact, many people begin their critical analysis of the Bible by doubting the authenticity of these stories. Logic, reason, and skepticism accompany a scientific mentality; not one of faith and uncritical belief.

In recent years the conflict between science and the Bible has become especially pronounced with respect to the struggle between evolution and Creationism. The battle has been, and is being, fought in many forms--e.g. the schools, libraries, and courts. BE will not enter the fray because the subject matter not only lies outside the Bible per se, but is highly technical and of little interest to many people. Few scientists and even fewer laymen really understand the intricacies of all the sciences that are involved in a really thorough discussion of evolution. Paleontology, geology, biology, astronomy, archeology, chemistry, and anthropology are some of the disciplines one must comprehend in order to proceed wisely. However, it is interesting to note how the struggle between science and the Bible has evolved. Originally, scientific findings were denounced as blasphemous lies. But as science has expanded and the evidence has mounted, many apologists have adopted a more realistic stance. They have increasingly rewritten the Bible by either changing literal statements to figurative meanings or alleging, "What the Bible really meant was..." For example, they assert the seven days of Creation weren't really days; they were eras or epochs. When the Bible describes miracles it doesn't mean to imply they exist. It is merely relating instances in which naive people were fooled by trickery and other mechanisms. With characteristic wisdom, Ingersoll took note of this slow evolutionary change: "The church disputed every step, denied every fact, resorted to every device that cunning could suggest or ingenuity execute, but the conflict could not be maintained. The Bible, so far as geology was concerned, was in danger of being driven from the earth. Beaten in the open field, the church began to equivocate, to evade, and to give new meanings to inspired words. Finally, falsehood having failed to harmonize the guesses of barbarians with the discoveries of genius, the leading churchmen suggested that the Bible was not written to teach astronomy, was not written to teach geology, and that it was not a scientific book,...(Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 11, p.220)." "In matters of fact, the Bible has ceased to be regarded as a standard. Science has succeeded in breaking the chains of theology. A few years ago, Science endeavored to show that it was not inconsistent with the Bible. The tables have been turned, now, Religion is endeavoring to prove that the Bible is not inconsistent with science. The standard has been changed." (Ibid. Vol. 2, p. 242). "In other words, the standard has been changed; the ancient is measured by the modern, where the literal statement in the Bible does not agree with modern discoveries, they do not change the discoveries, but give new meanings to the old account. We are not now endeavoring to reconcile science with the Bible, but to reconcile the Bible with science. (Ibid. Vol. 8, p. 151). Only staunch fundamentalists continue trying to erase the handwriting on the wall. In the 5th chapter of Daniel, Belshazzar didn't try to erase the unpleasant handwriting on the wall. He listened and acted accordingly. One would think believers in the Bible would learn from his experience. In summary, the Bible is not inerrant with respect to science. Many statements reflect the era in which they were written and assertions to the contrary are weak at best.

Jesus, the False Messiah--As stated in prior issues of BE, Jesus often made statements and committed acts which invalidate any claims he made to the Messiahship. Additional examples, such as the following, are worthy of note. Mark 9:25-26 says: "...he (Jesus-ed) rebuked the foul spirit, saying into him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him. And the spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him;..." Jesus' statement is false, because if the spirit was deaf, how could he have heard Jesus and come out? If he was dumb, how could he have cried out?. In Mark 10:19 Jesus said: "Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, do not steal, do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother." Jesus needs to re-read the Ten Commandments. There is no Old Testament commandment against defrauding. The only relevant statement about defrauding is in Lev. 19:13, which says: "Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor." This is an OT law, but is not listed with the Ten Commandments. In Mark 8:35 Jesus said: "...but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's the same shall save it." How could Jesus have said this when there was no gospel when he live? The gospel did not appear until after his death.

REVIEWS

In some of their apologetic works, Josh McDowell and Don Stewart provide common responses to those who question the Bible's scientific qualifications: "The Bible is not a textbook on science. Its purpose is not to explain in technical terms the technical data of the natural world, but to explain God's purpose and relation to man, to deal with spiritual things. It is definitely not a technical textbook for scientists. The descriptions which the Bible gives concerning nature are neither scientific nor unscientific, but phrased in words that are non-technical and often general, so that even the common reader can follow the thought. This does not at all mean the statements are incorrect." (Answers to Tough Questions, P. 104) The problem with this explanation is that it's irrelevant. Whether or not the Bible is a scientific textbook or whether it's intended to be a technical work doesn't matter. The fact is, scientific statements contained therein are either true or false. They are either correct or they aren't. That's all that matters. And any book alleging a bat is a bird and some fowl are four-footed is incorrect. The assertion that "The descriptions which the Bible gives concerning nature are neither scientific nor unscientific" has no truth whatever. They definitely lie within the scientific sphere, and are false. McDowell and Stewart continue: "The Scriptures entertain no fanciful ideas of science and of the natural world,... It was Ptolemy who suggested that the earth was flat. We read statements such as these and laugh, but there are no absurd statements in the Bible similar to these." (Ibid. P. 105). Such comments hardly merit a response. The Bible is permeated with miracles and erroneous scientific comments, as this month's Commentary shows.

In The Bible is a Scientific Book apologist Gordon Lindsey not only defended the Bible, but asserted: "The Bible foresaw the great inventions of our day" (p. 8). He contends many biblical statements are nothing more than prophecies of scientific developments in the 19th and 20th centuries. For instance, Lindsey claims that Isa. 31:5 predicts Jerusalem would be defended by airplanes, as occurred in 1917 and during the Arab-Israeli War of 1967. Isaiah 31:5 says: "As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also he will deliver it, and passing over he will preserve it." Yet several parts of the verse show the Lord is the "Airplane" referred to, The "as birds flying" phrase applies to God himself. He will hover over and defend Jerusalem. There is no justification for assuming airplanes are intended. The phrase "And passing over head he will..." makes the same point. God is doing the flying and protecting. On page 16 Lindsey says: "Peter, quoting from Joel 2:30, apparently refers to atomic warfare: 'And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke' (Acts 2:19). It requires no imagination to see that this is an apt allusion to nuclear war." On the contrary, it requires great imagination to relate this verse to nuclear war, since any war has blood, fire and smoke. Lindsey contends the advent of radio is predicted in Job 38:35, which says: "Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we are?" But lightnings or electricity are not sent through the air by radio. Radio waves are sent, and they aren't electricity or lightnings. Lindsey refers to Psalm 90:10 as evidence the Bible foresaw a life expectancy of 70 years. The verse says: "The days of our years are three score and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off and we fly away." Lindsey concludes: "Some 3,500 years ago Moses,...said that a man's life would be 70 years.... It is amazing that Moses, living in a period when life expectancy had been rapidly dropping, should make this statement. For turn to your world almanac, and you will see that today, after every means of modern medical science has been exhausted, longevity is 70.2 years. Science, try as it may, is unable to break the barrier.... God has cut down the life expectancy of man to 70 years, and there it has stayed for 3,500 years. Another proof of the veracity of the Holy Scripture" (Ibid. p. 27-28). Anyone seeking evidence as to why the Bible and its evangelical proponents should not be allowed to dominate science in the classrooms need look no further than this line of thought. It's hopelessly inaccurate. In the first place, life expectancy in most countries of the world is far below 70 years. In India and Bangladesh, for example, people are considered old at 50. Only the more advanced countries have life expectancies approaching 70 years. Lindsey should realize most people don't live as long as his native Texans. Secondly, the life expectancy of the average American hasn't been as low as 70.2 years since 1965. So any assertion to the effect that science has reached an impassable barrier is false. Thirdly, the life expectancy of man has not stayed at 70 years for 3,500 years. Quite the opposite, constant improvements in medicine and nutrition have generated a steady lengthening of the life expectancy, and only recently has it attained an average of 70 years. Tendentious reasoning, such as that shown by Lindsey, can only lead to erroneous conclusions.

In Biblical Difficulties W. Arndt alleges the Bible does not say the earth is flat in Psalm 136:6 and Isaiah 11:12, or rests on pillars in 1 Sam. 2:8. After contending these are merely figures of speech in poetic jargon, Arndt says: "If no better arguments against the world view of the Bible can be presented than those looked at, the Bible has little to fear on this score." (Ibid. p. 165). To begin with, 1 Sam. 2:8 (RSV) does say the earth rest on four pillars, and Isaiah 11:12 does say the earth has four corners. It's difficult to see how anything could have corners without having flat sides. But if Arndt insists on giving a figurative interpretation to these imprecise statements, so be it. They are not definite enough for either side to make a conclusive argument. But what about comments that are definite? The Book of Leviticus, for example, has probably more inaccurate scientific comments than any other book in the Bible, but is ignored entirely by Lindsey and only lightly touched by Arndt. In response to the comment in Lev. 11:6 that hares chew the cud Arndt says: "It is true that modern naturalists affirm that the two latter--the hare and the hyrax--do not ruminate at all,...but they move the jaw sometimes in a manner which looks like ruminating.... The statement that it cheweth the cud is to be taken phenomenally, not scientifically.... Moses speaks of animals according to appearance, and not with the precision of a comparative anatomist...." (Ibid. p. 119-120). The fact is the statement is false. Lev. 11:6 says hares chew the cud. In truth, they don't. That's the bottom line. Rationalizing just won't save the day.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter from J.S. of Dayton, Ohio

In compliance with my recent request for a free copy of Biblical Errancy, you promptly sent me the June edition. I was amazed. Never before had I seen anything like it; I knew, of course, that many people had written essays attacking belief in the literal verity of scripture, even in books, but I scarcely thought that there was a periodical dedicated to providing a forum that discussed the Bible's validity. Neither had I met or heard of any skeptic (with few exceptions) who demonstrated such a thorough knowledge of the book itself. I was a sophomore at...University, and have waited for many years to find someone who understands my religious position. Most of the people I know, whether they are theists, agnostics, or atheists, all seem to share a common trait: dogmatism. With biblical apologists, of course, it is obvious. Most of the agnostics and atheists are as bad, despite the fact that they say they reject dogma. However, their agnosticism is, for the most part, a rebellion against parental religious indoctrination, not the result of critical thinking. In the case of both believer and unbeliever, a position is taken and then arguments are constructed to support the position. The critical thinker must follow where the arguments leads; the dogmatic thinker already knows where he wants to go, even if he has to go through the most elaborate verbal and intellectual gymnastics to get there. As Bertrand Russell points out in his History of Western Philosophy "The finding of arguments for a conclusion given in advance is not philosophy but special pleading."

No clearer has the attitude which Russell criticizes shown itself than in the orgy of book burning and censorship that is sweeping the country and fast becoming an American pastime. The awesome threat of the Religious Right is usually well publicized; nearly every day there is an article in the newspaper about a school in Oklahoma which threw thirty-two copies of Slaughterhouse Five into the furnace, or a revival which boasted a bonfire, fueled with the writings of Satan's ministers (e.g. Voltaire, Russell, Satre, etc.). What is rarely reported are the infractions of the Left, as in the case of the Unitarian Church service in which various parts of the Bible, Koran, and other works that were described as sexist or racist were ceremonially burned on the altar; the congregation was much edified. (For further examples read, "When Nice People Burn Books" in the February edition of The Progressive). This is the real lesson these people are teaching their congregations (whether rightist or leftist): the way you deal with ideas you don't like is to burn them.

I am glad that Biblical Errancy provides a sane alternative to this madness: open rational debate. I only wish that some of your more zealous subscribers would be a little less emotional and dogmatic, and a little more like you. I refer specifically to the person from Richmond, Indiana (See: Letter #3 in June, 1983 issue) who calls the bible "a horrible book" (a somewhat surprising reference in view of the occasional biblical statements on the importance of loving one another), and who acknowledges that he or she has never read it, while maintaining its falsehood. In fact, he or she is overjoyed to have found rational arguments for a position taken long ago, without the use of reason: "I'll let you do all the work and I'll have all the discussions with my Christian friends. This is just the fuel I've needed." And another person from my home town writes, "I can go to the Christian bookstore and obtain all of the tracts I could care to burn..." (See: Letter #16 in the June, 1983 issue). I guess all you can do is be a good example and avoid invective yourself. I think a great many of your readers respect you very highly, and would become more interested in truth than in "proving a point." So far it seems you have done a fine job in this respect.

Editor's response to Letter #20

Dear J.S. You demonstrate wisdom beyond your years. Although much of your commentary lies outside the Bible, per se, and, not within the normal scope of BE, I'd like to respond to some of your more salient points. First, your distain for book-burning is well-founded. As part of its response to such activity, BE not only doesn't burn writings of the opposition, but prints them. Secondly, your description of BE as a forum for open, rational debate is right on target. It's a forum for both sides, not a podium or pulpit for one. Thirdly, BE doesn't always agree with views expressed in letters-to-the-editor. They are printed to provide food for thought, not holy writ. And lastly, although BE avoids invective and pejoratives, they are by no means absent in letters BE receives. If and when such letters are published, BE will not join in with the language being used. Far too much needs to be said about the Bible to devote oneself to anything other than objective, dispassionate analysis. However, if some readers wish to express themselves more graphically, that's their prerogative.

Letter #21 from BLC of Green Bay, Wisconsin

Dennis. After careful reading of the free copy of your June issue I can say that I find your work fascinating and provocative. I would like to know if you would or have ever extended your publication to include debate about the authenticity of the Shroud of Turin. From what I have read, the Shroud appears to be proof positive that (a) Jesus Christ did live, (b) he was crucified in the manner stated in the N.T., and (c) most importantly, it appears that the only way the image could have been projected onto the cloth was by an instantaneous burst of radiation, emanating from the body. It appears that many scientists who examined the Shroud in 1978 are reluctant to admit this, because they cannot duplicate this feat in a lab, and because the scientific method precludes the possibility of a supernatural being. (BLC concluded by saying he feels the scientific evidence supports the Resurrection and quoted from Verdict on the Shroud, in which two scientists claim the odds "that the man on the shroud is not Jesus Christ are one in 82,944,000"-ed).

Editor's Response to Letter #21

Dear BLC. After an extensive and involved scientific analysis of this issue, two staunch defenders of the Bible concluded: "The evidence so far in no way supports the Shroud's authenticity as the burial cloth of Christ." (Answers to Tough Questions, by McDowell and Stewart, p. 169). I, too, find it difficult to believe this cloth could be traced back 2,000 years to a particular person. I can't help but feel the odds are one in 82,944,000 that it is the shroud of Jesus Christ. In any event, the subject lies outside the Bible and, thus, outside the purview of BE. The latter does not discuss extra-biblical subjects with any depth, unless they are unavoidable. The Bible can't be approached effectively by relying on subjects of this nature. One must go within. Extra-biblical discussions often become more entertaining than revealing or persuasive.

Issue No. 10

October 1983

COMMENTARY

Prophecy--Biblicists place great reliance upon the alleged accuracy of biblical prophecy to justify their position, and for this reason, several issues of BE will be devoted to this topic. In continuing the discussion begun in March, 1983 additional prophecies such as the following are worthy of note:

- In Jonah 3:4 (RSV) Jonah cried, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown!" But Jonah 3:10 shows that the prophecy materialized in a manner precisely opposite to that which was predicted. It states: When God saw what they did, how they turned from their evil way, God repented of the evil which he said he would do them, and he did not do it." It is no defense to say that they turned from their evil ways and, therefore, God was justified in changing his mind, i.e., the conditions under which Jonah had made his prophecy had changed. If he had been a true prophet, he would have seen this change coming. Even more important, the prophecy was not conditional. He flatly stated Nineveh would be overthrown in 40 days, which didn't occur.
- Isaiah says: "...put on thy garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean." Yet, the uncircumcised have never stopped traveling through Jerusalem.
- In John 14:12 Jesus says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth in me, the works that I do shall he also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." But what believer has ever done a miracle greater than those performed by Jesus?

- In John 14:13-14 Jesus stated: "And whatsoever ye ask in my name I do, that the Father may be glorified in the son. If ye ask any thing in my name, I will do it." In reality, millions of people have made millions of requests in Jesus' name and failed to receive satisfaction. This promise or prophecy has failed completely.
- In 2 Chron. 1:7, 12 God said the following to Solomon: "Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee: and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honour, such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like." This prophecy has also proved to be erroneous. There were several kings in his day, and thousands since, that could have thrown away the value of Palestine without missing the amount. The wealth of Solomon has been exceeded by many, and is small by today's standards.
- In 1 Thess. 4:16-17 Paul stated: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: And the dead Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air: And so shall we ever be with the Lord." Paul shared the delusion, taught by Jesus, in that he expected to be snatched up bodily into heaven with other saints then living, who would, thus, never taste death. The use of "we" clearly proves as much. It is difficult to deny that Paul was certain that the end of the world was coming in the lifetime of his contemporaries.
- First Samuel 27:1 says: "And David said in his heart, I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul:..." Whether stated in or out of his heart David erred decisively. He did not die by the hand of Saul as he predicted, but appears to have died of old age, according to 1 Kings 2:10, which says: "So David slept with his fathers and was buried in the city of David." Having died before David, Saul couldn't have been responsible.
- Gen. 15:16 predicted that: "In the fourth generation they (Abraham's descendants-ed) shall come hither again..." God told Abraham that his descendants would return in the fourth generation. Yet, if Abraham is excluded, it actually occurred during the sixth generation. The generations were
 - (1) Abraham,
 - (2) Issac,
 - (3) Levi-Ex. 1:3,
 - (4) Kohath-Ex. 6:16,
 - (5) Amram-Ex. 6:18, and
 - (6) Moses-Ex. 6:20.
- Jer. 34:4-5 predicted that Zedekiah would experience a peaceful death: "Yet hear the word of the Lord, O Zedekiah king of Judah; Thus saith the Lord of thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword: But thou shalt die in peace...." Yet Jer. 52:10-11 shows that he died in something less than a peaceful manner: "And the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: he slew also the princes of Judah in Riblah. Then he put out the eyes of Zedekiah; and the king of Babylon bound him in chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in prison till the day of his death."

- John 7:52 says: "They answered and said unto him, Art thou also of Galilee? Search, and look: for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet." The inaccuracy of this prophecy lies in the fact that several of the most distinguished Jewish prophets--Jonah, Nahum, Hosea, Elijah--were from Galilee.
- The final prophecy that will be noted in this month's commentary is found in Gen. 49:13, which predicted that "Zebulun shall dwell at the shore of the sea; he shall become a haven for ships, and his border shall be at Sidon." Two aspects of this prophecy clearly failed. The borders of Zebulun never extended to the sea, and they never encompassed Sidon. In the Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties Gleason Archer attempted on page 104 to remedy this problem:

Gen. 49:1 foretells the location of this tribe (Zebulun-ed) near the shore, affording a convenient passage for the cargoes of ships unloading at the docks of the Mediterranean coast for transport to the Sea of Galilee and transshipment up to Damascus and beyond. While Zebulun was located on neither coast, the Valley of Jezreel afforded an excellent highway for imported goods to be conveyed to the most important inland markets. Its northern border would point in the direction of the great commercial cities of Phoenicia, of which Sidon was then the leading emporium.

In effect, Archer admits that Zebulun was on neither coast and never encompassed Sidon. The connecting link afforded by the Valley of Jezreel is irrelevant. The fact remains, Zebulun did not touch either sea. The fact that Zebulun's northern border "pointed" in the direction of Sidon is also immaterial. The prophecy clearly states Zebulun's border shall be at Sidon on the sea.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #22 From SBJ of Albany, New York (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey,

Thank you for your prompt reply to my request for a copy of your latest "Biblical Errancy" publication (Issue #8, Aug. 1983). Let me make my position clear to you at the outset: I am a Christian. I requested your material, because I always am interested to see what critics of the Bible have to say. What I have discovered is that, invariably, the arguments used by biblical critics reinforce, and strengthen, my Christian faith because these arguments are themselves easily proved to be erroneous. Your publication was no exception. My purpose in writing to you is not to gain one-upmanship in an intellectual debate, or game. I will explain my purpose later. But first I shall address your arguments. To begin with, I was quite surprised to discover such a large portion of your literature addressed to the issue of slavery and women. These issues have nothing to do with errancy, in the strict sense of the term. One may not agree with the biblical teaching on these topics, but such disagreement is simply an opinion and is unrelated to the validity of the Bible.

Editor's response to Letter #22 (Part a)

Dear SBJ,

I appreciate your lengthy letter and commend the relevance of your presentation. Your commentary stayed on the topic--the Bible--and for this reason will be discussed in subsequent issues of BE as well. Having read all 12 pages of your handwritten letter, one overriding conclusion is quite obvious. You have a strong urge to leap to conclusions after a rather perfunctory analysis of the facts, a tendency no doubt arising from your exuberance for a cause. You lectured and admonished a great deal and tended to switch from "prover" to "preacher" as you proceeded. Your propensity for immediate conclusions is readily apparent in your second paragraph. You stated a large portion of my literature is addressed to the issue of slavery and women. Quite the contrary, these issues were brought up only in the August issue and compose only a fraction of my literature. You have made a broad generalization based upon an analysis of only one issue. I suggest you might want to read issues to get a much better idea of what BE entails. Secondly, you alleged the issue of slavery and women have nothing to do with errancy. Apparently you missed the point of the commentary. Second Cor. 3:17 says: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." (Also note Isa. 58:6, Ex. 22:21, 1 Cor. 7:23, Gal. 3:28, 5:11,13). Other verses also link the spirit of God with liberty. Yet, the Bible shows God's spirit to be one of fostering and promoting slavery and sexual subservience in scores of situations. According to the Bible, the Lord's Spirit is often one of enslavement and oppression, diametrically opposed to liberty. "Simply an opinion" is an inaccurate description of the situation.

Letter #22 continues (Part b)

Your section on "Paul, the Deceptive Disciple" is more what I expected to find throughout your publication. In this section, you cite 8 "errors" or misquotations in Paul's sayings, citing 12 specific biblical references in the process. In all 8 cases, you are wrong. Let me show you: (1) You quote 1 Cor. 2:8 as, "which none of the princes of this world know; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory." Then you claim that the statement is wrong, because Jesus was not crucified by any princes but by a mob and some soldiers. The translation which you used is the KJV. The problems which you fail to recognize is that the Greek word translated as "princes" in the KJV is from (a Greek word-ed) which means "ruler, official, authority" etc. Reliable modern Bible translations, such as the NASB and RSV translate this same word as "rulers." The very simple fact concerning Jesus' crucifixion is that it resulted from the authoritative judgment of the Jewish and Roman rulers. For example, Matthew 27:1 states, "Now when morning had come, all the chief priests and elders of the people (i.e., the rulers) took counsel against Jesus to put Him to death;" In John 19:16, speaking about Pilate, John writes, "So then he (Pilate) delivered Him (Jesus) to be crucified." In other words, the mob and soldiers executed the crucifixion, but their authority to do so came from their rulers.

Letter's Response to Letter #22 (Part b)

According to Strong's Concordance either "prince" or "ruler" is a correct translation. It means "the highest authority." Regardless of whether "ruler" or "prince" is used, your problem remains. Name one Roman ruler that initiated the Crucifixion. The elders or local leaders of the people were not the rulers. The entire region was under a Roman dictatorship, and only Romans were rulers. What biblical verse justifies equating the people's elders with their rulers? Pilate was the ruler and, not wanting to be involved, washed his hands of the entire matter. He only turned Jesus over to the mob when their clamor became strident. Pilate wanted to release Jesus, as John 19:12 shows: "And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him" and even said he wanted to wash his hands of the entire affair: "When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person." Pilate turned Jesus over to them in John 19:16, but he did not approve their subsequent acts, nor does any verse show he granted them any authority to act. Even if Pilate had instigated the Crucifixion, Paul's statement is still inaccurate because he said "rulers" not "a ruler" killed Jesus. So, again, I ask what rulers killed Jesus?

Letter #22 continues (Part c)

You quote Col. 1:23 as "...from the hope of the gospel which you heard, which has been preached to every creature under heaven, and of which I, Paul, became a minister." You then make the condensing remark, "come now, Paul. At no time..." etc. Your translation is the same as the RSV. The NASB translates the Greek a bit differently: "...which was proclaimed in all creation under heaven..." Again, one must return to the original language (Greek) to get true meaning here. The Greek reads... "proclaimed in all creatures" is an accurate translation. As such, it is a term that is difficult to understand precisely, but by no means erroneous. Perhaps it is poetic, perhaps literal.

Editor's Response to Letter #22 (Part c)

The KJV, the RSV, the New International and Modern Language versions all say "proclaimed to every creature." Your NASB version appears to be expedient to escape from the dilemma. But even if your version is correct, you have merely leaped from one problem to another. If you are going to keep going back to the Greek, SBJ, you'd do well to first make sure you're going to gain thereby. When was the gospel "proclaimed in all creation"? Even today, much less in Paul's time, many areas do not have preachers of the gospel. The gospel was a relatively recent introduction to the Western Hemisphere, and is virtually non-existent in China. You state that "proclaimed in all creation" is "difficult to understand precisely, but by no means erroneous." If you don't understand it, how do you know it is not erroneous? Incidentally, in Part B you said the RSV was a reliable modern Bible translation."

Letter #22 continues (Part D)

(After noting the fact that one must realize the Bible often uses poetry and metaphors that should not be taken literally, SBJ says-ed) Next, you quote Acts 20:35 and victoriously claim that "Nowhere in the NT did Jesus make such a statement." Where does the Bible ever state that the only words which Jesus ever spoke are those recorded in the NT? To claim that Paul is in error here because these words of Jesus are not in the NT is the height of irony: your whole point is to prove the Bible's lack of validity, yet you then claim that only the statements of Jesus contained in this invalid source can be used by Paul! In your desperate effort to prove the Bible erroneous, you have truly taken flight from reason.

Editor's Response to Letter #22 (Part D)

I have no objection to this comment as long as you agree to the following. First, all who hear this verse are told that nowhere in the Bible did Jesus make this statement. Deception is quite common with this verse. Secondly, Paul could not have heard this statement himself, since he circulated when Jesus was no longer present. At best, Paul is quoting hearsay. Thirdly, there is no evidence, whatever, that Jesus ever made the statement. All we have is Paul's word. Where did I claim that "only statements of Jesus contained in this invalid source can be used by Paul"? Paul can quote Jesus anytime he desires. As long as he or his followers don't attempt to give people the impression that alleged quotes from Jesus, such as that found in Acts 20:35, are supported by Scripture, there is no problem. "Desperate effort" is a judgmental comment. Let's allow outside observers to determine whose position is becoming progressively more desperate with greater analysis. Letter #22 continues (Part E) You claim a contradiction between Rom. 12:14 and Acts 23:3, saying that the latter reveals that Paul is ignoring his own advice (in the former). In the latter, Paul is not "cursing" Ananias; he is simply presenting the facts. Ananias is unjustly condemning Paul, and if he doesn't straighten up fast, God will strike him at some point.

Editor's Response to Letter #22 (Part E)

What did Paul say, SBJ? He said: "Bless them which persecute you: bless and curse not." He didn't say it's permissible when the denunciation is justified. He said don't curse, period. Paul called a man "a whitewashed wall" (RSV) and you would have us believe that this is not cursing, just "simply presenting the facts." Surely you don't mean the man really is a whitewashed wall. You were the one who used the phrase "flight from reason."

Letter #22 continues (Part F)

You claim another contradiction between 1 Thess. 2:3 and 2 Cor. 12:16. You fail to recognize that Paul is speaking sarcastically in the latter. Amazing though you may find this to be, but it is also a superb piece of literature and employs poetry and subtle literary tones (sarcasm, anger, humor, irony) throughout.

Editor's Response to Letter #22 (Part F)

There is no reason whatever to assume that Paul is speaking sarcastically in 2 Cor. 12:16, other than to extract one from the dilemma. You are fond of the NASB version, SBJ. Read 2 Cor. 12:16, which says: "crafty fellow that I am, I took you in by deceit." The statement is either true or false. If it's true, then Paul condemned himself and contradicted what he said in 1 Thess. 2:3. If it is false, then he lied and stands condemned. Poetry and subtle literary tones aren't the problem. A crafty religious figure changing according to expediency is the difficulty.

Letter #22 continues (Part G)

In 1 Cor. 6:12 and 10:23 Paul is not viewing himself as a law unto himself. He is trying to explain that our decisions about what to do in various situations should always be based upon what is best for the other people involved. To a non Christian (such as yourself), this would require a lengthy explanation--and even then he (or you) may either reject or not understand it. Consequently, I won't bother offering this explanation here.

Editor's Response to Letter #22 (Part G)

How can you say that "Paul is not viewing himself as a law unto himself"? In 1 Cor. 6:12 he twice states: "All things are lawful for me." If that doesn't mean he is a law unto himself, what does? There is nothing in that verse or the surrounding information that would lead one to conclude that Paul means decisions "should always be based upon what is best for the other people involved." The welfare of others isn't even mentioned, either explicitly or implicitly. You need to read more and interpret less. Weren't you the one who also used the phrase "desperate effort to prove"? You are correct in saying I may reject your interpretation. There is nothing in the verse or its context that would justify your rationalization.

(Letter #22 will be Concluded in next month's issue)

Letter #23 from KEH of Sacramento, California (Part A)

Dear Dennis. Thank you for another provocative issue of BE.... You made some good points in the Sept. '83 "Commentary," but several of your other statements were rather weak. Refer to item (a) of the first paragraph. In the King James translation, I believe that "bird" was a more generic term than it is today, an idiom referring to almost any variety of flying creature. And in the original cited passages of the Pentateuch, I suspect that the Hebrew word used had the same general application.

Editor's Response to Letter #23 (Part A)

Dear KEH. I always appreciate constructive criticism, even though it's sometimes inaccurate. Item (a) of the first paragraph of the Sept. '83 commentary rightly alleged the Bible considers the bat to be a bird. The evidence is clear. Lev. 11:13 says: "And these are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls." The text then list nineteen animals, all of which are clearly birds. So there is no doubt that birds and only birds are being referred to. The problem arises from the fact that the twentieth, and only the twentieth in the list, is not a bird. The bat is a mammal. You used two qualifiers-"I believe" and "I suspect"--which aren't justified by anything in the text. Is there any reliable evidence to justify your suspicions, or does it just seem that this could be a reasonable explanation? Do you know of any version that has a significantly different translation? We have to go by what the text says, not by what it seems reasonable to assume it could have meant.

Letter #23 continues (Part B)

Referring to item (k), fundamentalist apologists have often stressed--and the Bible quite clearly states (Gen. 2:5-6)--that the phenomenon of rain did not occur prior to the Flood. Hence, no rainbows. I'm surprised if you were not already aware of this argument. Item (m) has the same weakness as item (a). In the English prose of the King James era, a "turtle" was a kind of dove or pigeon. In point of fact the usage is still with us, as "turtle-dove." You might check the equivalent passage in the New American Bible to see a more accurate translation.

Editor's Response to Letter #23 (Part B)

With respect to item (k), let me repeat what I said: "The rainbow is not as old as rain and sunshine." Gen. 9:13 shows as much. It says: "I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth." This statement was made after the Flood, and after the rains associated with same. Clearly, rain and sunshine existed before the first rainbow. Gen. 2:5-6 isn't really relevant. All it is stating is that it hadn't rained yet. I never said it rained prior to the Flood. At the time the statement in Gen. 2:5-6 was made, it could have been true. But that has no bearing on what we are discussing. The statement in Gen. 9:13 was made after the Flood, after it had rained for 40 days, after rain and sunshine had appeared. Your point with respect to "turtles" and "turtle-doves" is well taken. The King James Version could have been mistakenly translated, although, it is difficult to believe its translators incorrectly used the word "turtle" when "dove" or "turtle-dove" should have been employed. The animals are just too dissimilar.

Letter 23 continues (Part C) Finally, in response to the first item about Jesus in paragraph 5 of your "commentary," I can easily imagine an apologist suggesting that a "dumb and deaf" spirit is a spirit that causes dumbness and deafness, in the same way that an influenza virus causes the flu.

Editor's response to Letter #23 (Part c)

With all due respect, KEH, I think the text itself shows your interpretation is inaccurate. I don't think there is much doubt that Mark 9:25-26 shows Jesus is calling the spirit deaf and dumb. It isn't causing deafness or dumbness; it is deaf & dumb.

Letter #23 concludes (Part d)

BLC of Green Bay might benefit from reading a few more books about the Shroud of Turin. Ample evidence exists, in fact, that the Shroud is a forgery. The linen cloth is in much too good a condition to have the reputed age; it is of a complex, three-to-one herringbone twill weave, foreign to the first century; the "dried blood" is suspiciously picturelike and the wrong color--red, not brown; pollen particles found impregnated in the cloth, despite popular reports, are not particular to first century Palestine; and chemical tests of the bloodstains have revealed no signs of hemoglobin but a considerable amount of iron oxide, a common ingredient of earth pigments. Other evidence exists, much of which has been downplayed or misreported by some of the partisan scientists who have examined the Shroud. I refer BLC to the excellent Shroud issue of Skeptical Inquirer (Spring, 1982), and to Inquest on the Shroud of Turin by Joe Nichell, an excellent analysis of this muddy topic.

November 1983

COMMENTARY

The Flood (Part One of a Two Part Series)--A topic that has always been of great interest to students of the Bible is the Flood, an alleged event more cataclysmic than any other natural disaster in history. BE will not discuss the scientific data used by proponents to support their beliefs. Instead, two kinds of information will be used to show the Flood Theory lacks credibility. The Commentary in next month's issue will discuss the large number of contradictions between verses with respect to what occurred; while this month's Commentary will concentrate on the great number of difficulties, impossibilities, and unanswered questions accompanying the Biblical account. Anyone believing in the Flood must provide rational answers to the following questions:

- (a) Gen. 6:16 says, "A window shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above;...." How could so many creatures breathe with only one small opening which was closed for at least 190 days--150 days plus an additional 40 days (Gen. 8:3-6)?
- (b) Gen. 6:15 says, "The length of the ark shall be 300 cubits(450 feet-ed), the breadth of it 50 cubits (75 feet-ed.), and the height of it 30 cubits (45 feet-ed.)." How could two of every animal survive for approximately 10 months on a boat encompassing 1,518,750 cubic feet? The food alone would absorb tremendous space.
- (c) Gen. 6:17 says, "I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and everything that is in the earth shall die." Gen. 7:4 reinforces this point, "...and every substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth." Yet, how would a flood destroy sea animals, such as whales, porpoises, sea snakes, dolphins, amphibians, and all animals entirely underwater?
- (d) Gen. 7:8-9 says, "Of clean beasts, and of beast that are not clean, and fowls of every thing that creepeth upon the earth, There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and female, as God had commanded Noah." The problems associated with this account of the creatures entering the Ark are particularly interesting. How did animals that are restricted to certain parts of the earth get to the Ark? Penguins, kangaroos, polar bears, koala bears, and many others would have to have crossed vast oceans. How animals from other continents managed to cross the seas can only be surmised. How did many of the animals withstand climatic changes? Many of those from polar regions could not have withstood the heat of the Middle East. How were animals prevented from killing their natural prey? Slow animals from other continents--snails, sloths, turtles, and so forth--must have started their journey to the Ark before the earth was created! How did only 8 people feed and water the world's greatest zoo for many months? How was the Ark kept sanitary, since there was only one window and one door? How did the animals know where to go when the time arrived to enter the Ark? After being released, how did they return to their respective regions of the world? The vegetation which many animals eat only grows in certain parts of the world. How was it brought to the Ark for storage? Are we to believe that two of every species--two dogs, two cats, two elephants, two snakes, and so forth--entered the Ark? If so, then are we to also believe, for example, that the tremendous variety of dogs in the world today, from the great dane to the chihuahua, descended from two of the species? This would mark a tremendous evolutionary change in only a few thousand years. Yet, biblicists are the ones who denounce the theory of evolution. And how did the animals know when to seek the Ark? The text implies they just came voluntarily.

- (e) Gen. 7:15 says, "And they went in unto Noah into the Ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life." How did water creatures such as whales, porpises, sea snakes, dolphins, and so forth enter the Ark? Moreover, since millions of species of animal exist throughout the world, how could a pair have been taken from each? There are over 500,000 separate species of insects alone.
- (f) Gen. 8:4 states, "And the ark rested in the 7th month on the 17th day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat." How could the Ark have rested upon several mountains at once?
- (g) "Also he sent forth a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground (Gen. 8:8)." Why did Noah send a bird to learn what was clearly evident?
- (h) Gen. 8:11 says, "And the dove came in to him in the evening; and lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off." It's difficult to believe a dove could have found an olive leaf to freshly pluck in a world that had been submerged for nearly a year.
- (i) Gen. 8:20 states, "And Noah builded an alter unto the Lord; and took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the alter." Killing animals of which only two remain after the Flood seems absurd.
- (j) Gen. 7:13 states, "In the selfsame day entered Noah, and Sham, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark." If the human race began anew from Noah and his sons, are we supposed to believe the wide variations among the earth's people developed in short period since the Flood? Are we supposed to believe that the fair-haired Swede, the brown-skinned, dark-haired Indian, and the black-skinned native came from the same ancestors?
- (k) Gen. 7:4 says, "For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from the face of the earth." But what had the beast and the creeping things done to excite God's anger? They had committed no sin; they had eaten no forbidden fruit, and they had not tried to reach the tree of life.
- (l) Gen. 8:5 and 8:13 state the Flood covered the earth and its mountains. If so, where did all the water go?
- (m) Lastly, the questions raised by Gen. 8:19 must be answered. The verse says, "Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepth upon the earth, after their kinds, went forth out of the ark." How were the animals preserved after leaving the Ark? There was no grass except such as had been submerged for a year. How were the herbivores taken care of until the earth was again clothed with vegetation? There were no animals to be devoured by the carnivores, except those which were on the Ark. From whence came their food? Apologists will be asked in next month's issue to address an equally large number of contradictions between the verses themselves.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #22 continues from Issue #10, page 5 (Part H)

You claim that Paul's statement in 1 Cor. 15:5 can only be interpreted to mean that either there were 13 apostles or Peter was not an apostle. In fact, the explanation for this verse is childishly simple: the Lord appeared first to Peter alone (See: Luke 24:34) and then to the full group of apostles, including Peter.

Editor's Response to Letter #22 (Part H)

In 1 Cor. 15:5 Paul stated: "And that he was seen of Cephas (Peter-ed.), then of the twelve." You claim that Peter was in the group of twelve and quote Luke 24:34 to prove your point. You should have read Luke 24:33-34 which says: "And they (two men on the road to Emmaus-ed.) rose up the same hours, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon." Verse 34 strongly implies that Peter was not present, because he was the subject of the conversation. But even more importantly, the inaccuracy of Paul's "twelve" in 1 Cor. 15:5 is shown in the fact that Luke 24:33 says eleven, not twelve, apostles were present when Jesus appeared in Luke 24:36. Incidentally, it should be noted that if there were, in fact, twelve apostles as Paul alleged, then Judas must have come back to life. He died before Jesus appeared to the Apostles, and his replacement, Matthias, was not elected to the Apostles until after the Ascension.

Letter #22 Continues (Part I)

Finally, you say that Paul's statement in 1 Cor. 10:8 contradicts Num. 25:9. In fact, however, it doesn't. Paul states that 23,000 fell in one day; Numbers 25:9 states that "those who died by the plague were 24,000. It does not state that all of the 24,000 died in one day, as Paul does. Technically, therefore, there is no contradiction. But beyond this, even if Paul had used the number 23,000 to refer to an event in the O.T., specifying 24,000, there would still not really be an error. Paul was simply making a point--whether he recalled the number of people that died perfectly accurately is not really important.

Editor's Response to Letter #22 (Part i)

You have given the common response to this problem, but have failed to note that Numbers 25:5-9 is referring to what occurred in a single day. The narrative of events is quick, brief, and consecutive. Moses gave an order to slay the offenders. Immediately thereafter an Israelite took a Midianite woman into his tent and was slain by Phineas for doing so. Immediately following this the plague was stopped, but only after 24,000 had died. The actual verses in Numbers 25:5-9 show the plague was confined to one day: "And Moses said to the judges of Israel, 'Every one of you slay his men who have yoked themselves to Baal of Peor.' And behold, one of the people of Israel came and brought a Midianite woman to his family in sight of all the congregation.... And when Phineas...saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand. And he went after the man of Israel into the tent, and thrust both of them through.... So the plague was stayed from the children of Israel. And those that died in the plague were twenty-four thousand.

Your final statement is little short of amazing, in light of the fact that it's diametrically opposed to the very premise upon which inerrancy is based. In effect, you are stating that if Paul's figure is incorrect, so what. One might just as well say: if Jesus is not God, so what; if salvation does not exist, so what; if Jesus is not the Messiah, so what; if Adam and Eve did not sin, so what. All of these concepts, including the number that died during the plague, came from the same book--the Bible. And if it can be mistaken with respect to one belief, it can be false with respect to all. How do you know what is true when you admit certain parts are false? Surely you must realize that if it's God's book it can't have one scintilla of imperfection. A perfect being can't produce a book with even a minor error. John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, said it well: "If there be any mistake in the Bible, there may well be a thousand. If there be one falsehood in that book, it did not come from the God of truth." (Journal, Wed., July 24, 1776). It becomes nothing more than another book on the shelf.

Letter #22 concludes (Part J)

So, Mr. McKinsey, in one section of your publication that really deals specifically with biblical "inerrancy" your "score" was 0 for 8. Perhaps you will not agree with my position on these issues. I really wouldn't expect you to. But I hope that you have some faint recognition of the fact that I do know whereof I speak on these matters, that I have investigated them more thoroughly than you have, and that your arguments remain completely unconvincing to me. I now have arrived at the purpose of my matter. The section of your publication just prior to "Paul, the Deceptive Disciple" is "Coping with Apologists". It closes with the remarkable statement: What do you do with people who won't engage in any critical discussion of the Bible, whose minds are closed? When Jesus assumes control many seem to enter another dimension, which is not so much a twilight zone as one of pure darkness." I have only been a Christian for less than five years, but I have read through the entire Bible at least three times, and spent countless hours studying it and reading other books about it. I attended seminary at the graduate level for a year, after being out of college for almost 12 years (I received my B.A. from Williams College in 1967), achieving a 4.0 average in the process. The deeper I become involved in Christianity, the clearer it becomes to me that, just as you say, Christians do live in a world that is in many ways radically different from non-Christians. The problem with your perception of this fact is that it is non-Christians that live in the world of darkness. (SBJ then quoted John 3:19-21 - ed). I am confused by people such as yourself, Mr. McKinsey. Do you actually know that the so-called "errors" which you point out are actually not errors at all (as I have demonstrated)? (Are you, in other words, simply trying to turn people against the Bible using whatever means are necessary?) Or, do you actually believe that these things which you have alluded to are errors?....

Editor's response to Letter #22 (Part J)

You have made several points, SBJ. Let's take them one at a time. In the first place, BE works with biblical errancy, not inerrancy. Whether the latter even exists is a matter of dispute. Second, you said my score was 0 for 8, which reminds me of the polling booth official who told his leading political opponent: "It isn't who has the votes my friend, it's who counts them." Third, you stated you know whereof you speak and have investigated these matters more thoroughly than I. I suggest we leave this determination to the readers. Fourth, it would be difficult to convince someone of anything if he insisted upon leaping to premature conclusions and engaging in braggadocio. You ignored the advice of the book which you defend with such conviction. Proverbs 27:2 says, "Let another praise thee, and not thine own mouth." I suggest you hear-out your opposition before drawing conclusions. Fifth, the relationship between your educational background and the Bible's "validity" is difficult to fathom. Higher institutions have hundreds of biblicists with innumerable degrees. Many have devoted not 5 but 50 years to scripture. Yet, I doubt if many would claim their assertions are true because of the years involved. Sixth, I take exception to the comment that I use "whatever means are necessary." You are impugning the integrity of someone about whom you know little. I have not questioned your character and would ask that you respond in kind. Let's restrict ourselves to the issue and let others render the verdicts. Seventh, I don't have to "turn people against the Bible." Many make that choice themselves once they have the data and have heard the arguments. At this point in your letter, SBJ, you proceeded to describe the errors of my ways and urge repentance. You switched from "prover" to "preacher". I only wish you had other issues for BE instead of writing four final pages permeated with premature judgmental comments and a patronizing attitude based on Issue #8 alone. Criticizing points with BE is quite acceptable, but any attempt to summarize to the jury before the opening remarks have been concluded is quite unwise, if not juvenile. Remember your phrase "childishly simple".

Letter #24 from FM of Novato, Claifornia

Dear Dennis I've enclosed a page of our local newspaper with your ad. (FM kindly bought an ad for BE in his local town paper-ed). The ad ran twice, but it's a small ad in a small weekly, so you may not get any responses. The city council recently approved having a prayer before council meetings, which I argued against to no avail, so your ad is a last gesture of defiance. Being a 63-year-old printer...I do believe in the value of advertizing. However, as much as I would like to do more, I am still waiting for my ship to come in . When and if she ever does, you can be assured you will get more publicity. I am also enclosing an issue of Basis containing the story on how to make a Shroud of Turin, which may be an answer to letter 21 from BLC in BE issue #9.

Editor's Response to Letter #24

Dear FM,

Any advertising you can render BE is certainly appreciated. I have many 3"x3" fliers that can be posted on bulletin boards. Each card says:

BIBLICAL ERRANCY
ONE FREE COPY
23 FAY DRIVE
ENON, OHIO 45323

. If you would like to aid the effort by posting some around your area, please let me know how many you want and I'll mail them. Anyone who would be willing to assist BE in this manner need only write. Advertizing: if you know of any publications in which I could advertize effectively, but inexpensively, please let me know. So far I've relied mostly on the Humanist, the Progressive, the Guardian, the Churchman, Free Inquiry and In These Times.

Letter #25 from JLC of Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Dennis,

Sample copy of BE received and much appreciated. I would like to know if the following subjects are within your range of consideration--The bullet stopping power of the Bible. I have read much of the WWI literature and have found repeated instances where a bible in a soldier's breast pocket saved his life by stopping a bullet or shell fragment. I have not read the literature of WWII and so do not know if this useful effect has been the same as in the first biggest war, or even if Bibles were carried in WWII. But surely this is a subject of great interest.... And of course there are Bibles and Bibles. I have one published by the U.S. Gov't in 1904--Jefferson Bible and then there is the Koran. Do you limit yourself to one certain edition?

Editor's Response to Letter #25

Dear JLC,

Bibles stopping bullets are not within the normal scope of BE, although I've occasionally fired a volley that has penetrated the Book and struck the heart of the matter. Seriously, I wouldn't put too much credence in the implication of these stories. They rank right up there with witches, visions of God, and bouts with the Devil. A Bible may have stopped a bullet, but why would that be of significance? Did they tell you about other books that did the same? Did they tell you about the instance in which a bullet went through a Bible and caused a death? Did they tell you about the instance in which the bullet completely missed a Bible in a man's breast pocket and he died? Did they tell you about the man who died in a trench because he was reading a Bible rather than staying alert? And did they tell you about the wounded who died because they sought relief in biblical verses rather than adequate medical attention? Bibles were carried in breast pockets during WWII, and no doubt similar results ensued. I didn't know the US Gov't published a Bible in 1904. Are you sure? This would create a church-state issue. I don't restrict myself to any edition or version of the Bible, although the KJV is, paramount.

Letter #26 from JRS of Ambler, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis,

I've come to the conclusion that many, if not most, Christians preachers structure sermons around specific opinions that they hold in any given week. They then search their bibles for "scripture" that supports those opinions and which provides convincing sermon material. I know that you could produce splendid "sermons" based on any given bible. Would you consider including in your periodical a column devoted to a selected current topic of controversy (such a parents against medical treatment for their children) and supply references to "scripture" in defense, or offence to, those who use "scripture" in support of their actions? I know you are very busy as it is, so you couldn't be expected to give much detail, but just a few sentences would be appreciated. One effective neutralizer of scripture quoters is the counter-quote, even if it is equally out of context. I can't think of anyone as qualified as you to offer such a needed education in the name of objectivity. Here are a few month's supply of topics for your consideration: abortion, euthansia, life support means (or their withdrwal), in vitro conception, genetic engineering, political sermons, prayer in public schools, co-habitation, and creation "science" findings. Perhaps, if you find such material unprofessional or inappropriate for your publication, you might rather not entertain such thoughts. I would understand your reluctance if that be so. Incidentally, I demolished a Jehovah's Witness at my doorstep by recalling several of your back issues. She was so anxious to leave, she didn't wait for a contribution for the magazine. She left.

(In an earlier letter JRS stated-ed.) BLC of Wisconsin (See:Letter #21 in the Sept. issue) will find a relevant report on the Shroud mystery in the Summer, 1981 issue of Free Inquiry, Box 5, Central Park Station, New York, New York 14215.

Editor's response to Letter #26

Dear JRS. Your suggestion merits thoughtful consideration; however, I've avoided this approach because of the risks you mentioned. Taking verses out of context and searching scripture for words that buttress a particular opinion or philosophy have been the hallmark of most apologists throughout history. It's a fate I've sought to avoid. However, some verses seem to so clearly bear on current social issues that offering an occasional opinion isn't out of place. For this reason a new heading entitled "The Bible's Influence" could very well appear in some future issues and discuss topics such as the following.

The national news media is currently reporting a case in which a fundamentalist minister will not allow his daughter to receive medical treatment for her cancerous condition because of his interpretation of the Bible. It would be difficult to imagine a more clear-cut example of the deleterious effects which can easily accompany adherence to biblical teachings. A child's life is being threatened because of her father's beliefs. Many Christians taking a more liberal, more flexible approach to biblical interpretation, tend to view the child's father as narrow, dogmatic, childish, and inaccurate. From their perspective, he has misread and misapplied the Bible. In reality, he had done neither, but they have. One need only read James 5:13-15 to see scripture supports his position. The "Commentary" in Issue #9 stated, "Many individuals have died because they put their trust in the biblical injunction to pray (And the prayer of faith shall save the sick-James 5:13-15)." It's interesting to note that CNN news reported this was precisely the verse used by the child's father to justify his position. His belief is thoroughly in line with biblical teaching, and in opposition to his child's continued existence. Depending on the capabilities of medical personnel, a child could very well die because someone got hold of a Bible. Just imagine! Fate could have dealt us such a father. My heart goes out to the child, although I fear the worst.

EDITOR'S NOTE

- (a) Efficient utilization of space is always a concern of this publication. For this reason, abbreviations and contractions are employed and paragraphs are combined, even though grammarians frown on these practices. We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause.
- (b) We are often required to shorten letters to the editor when they are published. Only the essence of many letters can be inserted. Moreover, it just isn't practical to publish every letter sent to BE or send replies to those letters that aren't published. Please don't feel ignored if we don't print or respond to your comments. Rest assured, however, that every letter or piece of literature bearing on the Bible's accuracy is read completely.
- (c) From now on readers will be able to subscribe to BE for a year as well as six months. Many readers seem to prefer this approach.

Issue No. 12

December 1983

COMMENTARY

The Flood (Part Two of a Two-Part series)--Last month's commentary stressed the problems which must be addressed by anyone contending a Flood occurred. Still to be analyzed are those contradictions within Genesis with respect to what allegedly happened. The following are prime examples:

- (a) Gen. 6:19 says, "And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark,...." (Also note Gen. 7:8-9, 14-15). Yet, Gen. 7:2 says, "Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, the male and his female: and of beasts that are not clean by twos, the male and his female." Are clean beasts to enter by 2's or by 7's?
- (b) Gen. 6:20 says, "Of fowls after their kind...two of every sort shall come unto thee,...." Yet, Gen. 7:3 says, "Of fowls also of the air by sevens, the male and the female;...."
- (c) Gen. 7:2 says "Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, male and his female;...." Yet, clean and unclean animals were not delineated until the eleventh chapter of Leviticus. The Mosaic law arose 600 years after the Flood. There were no Jews, Israelites, or clean vs. unclean animals in Noah's time.

- (d) Gen. 7:7 says, "And Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife, and his son's wives with him, into the ark, because of the waters of the Flood...." Later, Gen. 7:13 says, "In the same day entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark...." In other words, Gen. 7:13-17 recapitulates Gen 7:7-12. Apparently they entered two times for the "take-off."
- (e) Gen. 6:17 says, "all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and everything that is in the earth shall die." Yet, Gen. 7:21-22 says, "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died." Did every living thing die or just those that creepeth on the land?
- (f) Gen. 8:3 says, "And the waters returned from off the earth continually: and after the end of the 150 days the waters were abated." Yet, two verses later the text says, "And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month." According to the third verse the waters had already disappeared after 150 days (5 months-ed.).
- (g) Gen. 8:9 says, "...for the waters were on the face of the whole earth:...." Yet, 8:3 already said, "And the waters returned off the earth continually: and after the end of the 150 days the waters were abated." According to the third verse the waters had already vanished. (It should be noted that if "abated" means lessened rather than vanished, then why would the text say, "after the end of 150 days the waters were abated"? In reality, this interpretation would mean the waters were abated the moment they began to recede. They would have been abated at the beginning of the 150 days, not at the end.)
- (h) Gen 8:5 says, "And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month: in the tenth month, on the first day of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen." Yet, verse 4 just finished saying, "And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat." Why would the tops of the mountains not be visible until the tenth month when the ark had already come to rest on the mountains of Ararat in the seventh month?
- (i) Gen. 8:13 says, "And it came to pass in the 601st year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth... and behold, the face of the ground was dry." Yet the next verse says, "And in the second month, on the 27th day of the month, was the earth dried." Was the earth dried on Jan. 1st or Feb. 27th? If it was dry on Jan 1st, then they stayed in the ark 58 days longer than needed. (j) The Lord promised Noah in Gen. 8:20, "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." This promise is contradicted by three subsequent verses: "and the seven years of dearth began to come,... and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread (Gen. 41:54)." "And the famine was over all the face of the earth...(Gen. 41:56)." "For these two years hath the famine been in the land..."

- (k) Gen. 9:3 says, "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you (Noah-ed.)." Yet Deut. 14:7-19 lists many animals that are not to be eaten. Either God changed his mind (contra. Mal. 3:6), a new code of morality was instituted, or the verses are contradictory.
- (l) In Gen. 9:6 God told Noah, "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed for in the image of God made he man." Yet, God broke his own rule by releasing Cain and providing him protection after he killed Abel. As Gen. 4:15 says, "And the Lord said unto him (Cain-ed.). Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him seven-fold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him."
- (m) Gen. 6:7-9 says, "And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth;.... But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord.... Noah was a just man and perfect in his generation, and Noah walked with God." But according to Gen. 7:7, others joined Noah on the Ark. "And Noah went in, and his sons and his wife, and his son's wives with him, into the ark,...." Noah was the only perfect person, yet other people were also spared. If seven imperfect people received special treatment, then why didn't thousands of others?
- (n) And lastly, God made a decidedly inconsistent statement in Gen. 8:21. "...and the Lord said in his heart, 'I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; neither will I again smite any more every thing living, as I have done.'" God said he would not any more curse the ground for man's sake. His reason is not that man is, or will be good, but because the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth. God destroyed man because of his wickedness. Now he promises not to destroy him again for the same reason, his wickedness.

REVIEWS

In Answers to Tough Questions (p.92) McDowell and Steward address the problems associated with the number of animals entering the Ark.

At first reading, the statements appear to be contradictory. First (Gen. 6:19-20) Noah is commanded to bring two of every kind into the ark, then in Gen. 7:2-3 seven of some animals and birds, and later in Gen. 7:8-9, the Scriptures speak of animals going in by two's. However, Gen. 7:8-9 does not speak of the numbers of animals going in, but the manner. Seven of each clean animal (three pairs, with another animal to be used for sacrifice) marched into the ark by two's, and the other animals also went in by pairs.

Several difficulties accompany this explanation. First, Gen. 7:8-9 clearly stated the number of animals entering the ark. They went in by pairs. The manner in which they entered is not discussed, the number seven is not mentioned in either verse, and nothing is said about animals to be used for sacrifice. Second, Gen. 7:2-3 (RSV) says, "Take with you seven pairs of all clean animals, the male and his mate; and a pair of the animals that are not clean, the male and his mate." Seven pairs of clean animals, not merely seven clean animals, were to enter the Ark. And lastly, regardless of whether the number should be seven or seven pairs, Gen. 7:2-3 still contradicts Gen.6:19-20. The latter says, "And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark... Two of every sort shall come unto thee,...." They are to enter by pairs with no distinction between clean and unclean. All flesh means all flesh.

In the Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties (p. 81) Gleason Archer attempted to reconcile Gen. 6:19 with Gen. 7:2. He stated,

Some have suggested that these diverse numbers, two and seven, involve some sort of contradiction and indicate conflicting traditions later combined by some redactor (an editor or reviser-ed.) who didn't notice the difference between the two. It seems strange that this point should ever have been raised, since the reason for having seven of the clean species is perfectly evident: they were to be used for sacrificial worship after the Flood had receded (as indeed they were, according to Gen. 8:20)... Obviously if there had not been more than two of each of these clean species, they would have been rendered extinct by their being sacrificed on the altar.

The fallacy in this explanation lies in its avoidance of textual precision. Gen. 6:19 says, "...every living thing of all flesh, two of each sort shalt thou bring into the ark..." The words "all" and "every" are absolutes, allowing no exceptions. If some animals went in by seven's then they didn't go in by twos's. They were an exception, and violated Gen. 6:19.

In the same book Archer attempted to answer another unrelated question on the book of Genesis. On page 77 he turned his attention toward the following query:

Gen.5:4 tells us that during Adam's long lifetime of 930 years (800 after the birth of Seth), he had other sons and daughters...as for Cain and Seth and all the other sons of Adam who married, they must have chosen their sisters as wives.

The problem is that Archer started talking about Gen. 5:4 in order to bring in the subject of daughters and, yet, Cain got his wife in Gen. 4:17 when only he and Abel had been mentioned. There is nothing in Genesis showing Cain married his sister or, indeed, that he even had a sister at the time of his marriage.

One of the most controversial verses in the Bible is Ex. 20:13--Thou shalt not kill. In Answers to Questions About the Bible Robert Mounce attempted to answer the question: "Does the commandment, 'You shall not kill' mean that Christians are not to go to war?" His response was:

That the sixth commandment is to be understood as a prohibition against murder and is not a blanket condemnation of taking life under any circumstances is seen by the fact that God not only authorized capital punishment (Gen. 6:9)...but also sent his people into war (1 Sam. 15:3)...that armed resistance is a permissible ingredient in the unhappy history of man is acknowledged by Scripture.

But the verse said nothing about murder. It said, Thou shalt not kill. Killing is a broader term, encompassing murder. The fact that the biblical God killed and ordered killing only highlights the inconsistency of God ordering man not to do that which he, himself, commits. The societal difficulties that have risen over this verse, especially during wartime, have caused proponents such as Mounce to change the word "kill" to "murder" in many versions. Although the KJV, the RSV, and the Catholic New American Bible use "kill," translators of such versions as the NASB, the NWT, the NIV and the Masoretic text opted for the more expedient term "murder". It would be rather difficult for military and law enforcement agencies to function if their members really believed the KJ maxim, Thou shalt not kill.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #27 from SBJ of Albany, New York (Part A)

Dear Dennis,

I appreciate the time you took to write me in early September. (SBJ was sent a personal letter-ed.). I have hesitated to respond, because, unfortunately, I suspect that the gulf which separates our perspectives on the Bible is, perhaps, too great to allow for any reasonable dialogue. For example, in your latest issue (#10, Oct. 1983), you counter several of the arguments I presented regarding your earlier arguments for the "deceitfulness" of Paul. Apparently, you were not swayed in the least by anything I said. Similarly I am not swayed by any of your counter-responses. Aware of the probable futility of my effort, I will, however, briefly address your counter-responses... The simple fact is that a great many of the greatest minds in history of mankind were either devoted Christians or avowed theists: Copernicus, Kepler, Galileo, Hershel, Newton, Plank, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, Aquinas, Luther, Calvin, Schweitzer--all of these and countless others fall into this category. The claim that a belief in the Bible, or a creator in the universe, is only for the ignorant or unreasonable is a foundless myth-but one that, due to efforts by people such as yourself, will not die.

Editor's response to Letter #27 (Part a)

Dear SBJ,

I appreciate your letter but take issue with several points. First, you forgot to put Mussolini, Franco, Hitler, Al Capone, George Lincoln Rockwell, KKK leaders, and other great minds in your list of devoted Christians. Secondly, you forgot to mention the many great minds who were eliminated because they refused to bow to the biblically-based beliefs of others. Thirdly, when did BE take a position on God's existence or refer to theists as ignorant? Abstract theological discussions should be left to theologians and philosophers. Fourthly, thousands of people have viewed the evidence and accepted the conclusions you denounce. The "effort" of people such as myself weren't the prime factor.

Letter #27 continues (Part B)

In regards to 1 Cor. 2:8 and the issue of who was responsible for Jesus' death, you point to John 19:16 as proof that Pilate did not ever grant his authority for the crucifixion. Actually, this very verse demonstrates exactly what you claim that it doesn't. It reveals that Pilate did, indeed, grant his authority for Jesus' death. Matt. 27:26, Mark 15:15 and Luke 23:24-25 corroborate this detail. The Luke passage is particularly clear: "And Pilate pronounced sentence that their demand should be granted. And he released the man they were asking for who had been thrown into prison for insurrection and murder, but he delivered Jesus to their will." Furthermore, it was very clearly not the unruly mob that nailed Jesus to the Cross, but the Roman soldiers acting under the authority of Pilate (See Matt 27, Mark 15, etc.). Finally, it was the rulers of the Jews (the Sanhedrin, made up of the "chief priests and elders of the people") that pressed Pilate to sentence Jesus to death: "Now, when morning had come, all the chief priests and the elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put Him to death; and they bound Him, and led Him away, and delivered Him up to Pilate the governor." (Matt. 27:1-2). That the rulers of the day, both Jewish and Roman, were responsible for Jesus' death is simply and perfectly clear....

Editor's response to Letter #27 (Part B)

You discussed three points, SBJ--Did Pilate grant authority; who killed Jesus, a mob or some soldiers; and did some rulers kill Jesus. In regard to the first, you stated I erred by quoting John 19:16 because it shows "Pilate did, indeed, grant his authority for Jesus' death." But, John 19:16, Matt. 27:26 and Mark 15:15 do not say Pilate granted his authority. They merely say he delivered Jesus to them to be crucified. We don't know if Pilate granted authority. That can only be inferred. Remember, Pilate had just washed his hands of the affair and said, "I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him."

According to your interpretation, SBJ, Pilate pronounced a death sentence after just declaring the man innocent. If Pilate did grant authority for an execution, then he did not wash his hands of the affair. You referred to Matt. 27:26, but ignored the prior two verses, which show Pilate felt he was innocent. You quoted Mark 15:15, but ignored the 14th verse, which shows Pilate wasn't convinced Jesus was a wrongdoer. You referred to Luke 23:24-25, which says, "pronounced sentence". If Pilate did sentence Jesus to death, then he acted in opposition to his will and beliefs. He merely yielded to the mob's demands. Consequently, it's misleading to give people the impression, as Paul does in 1 Cor. 2:8, that Jesus was persecuted by the government, and princes of this world crucified him.

Your second point, SBJ, is that Roman soldiers, not an unruly mob, nailed Jesus to the cross. But that's not what I said in the August, 1983 issue on page 4. My words were, "He was killed by a mob and some soldiers." They all participated in the execution. As far as who actually did the nailing, that's immaterial. It probably was done by some soldiers. But everyone in the crowd was an accomplice. Mark 15:11-15, Matt. 27:20-26, and Luke 23:13-25 show the chief priests, rulers, the people, and some soldiers contributed to the execution.

Your third point hinges upon the word "rulers." What does one normally mean by the word "rulers"? Most people think of a king, a queen, a governor, a pharaoh, a province chief, or a figure of comparable stature when they hear the word "ruler". And that's precisely the sense given in nearly all the O.T. and such N.T. verses as Mark 13:9 and Luke 21:12 where Jesus says, "...being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake." Here rulers and kings are comparable. However, additional research shows there are other verses which Paul could say he is referring to if he wished to escape his dilemma. Luke 23:13, 24:20 and Acts 4:5 equate rulers with lesser officials such as chief priests, elders, and scribes. If this interpretation is used, then Jesus was indeed, killed by the "rulers" of his day. But, again, Paul is deceiving his readers. Governmental officials such as kings, princes, and rulers weren't really responsible. Biblicists have often exaggerated the extent to which they have been oppressed. You stated that, "it was the rulers of the Jews (the Sanhedrin, made up of the chief priests and the elders of the people) that pressed Pilate...." The word "Sanhedrin" never appears in the Bible. How do you know it was responsible? Moreover, you said the rulers of the Jews were made up of "chief priest and elders of the people." But Luke 23:13 and Acts 4:5 show the "rulers" are separate from the chief priests and elders. They may be equal, but they are not identical, as you claim.

Letter #27 continues (Part C)

(After some additional preaching, SBJ said -ed.) One thing I wonder about: if you are so convinced that the Bible is essentially an overblown book, full of contradictions, half truths, and lies, why in the world do you expend so much energy on it? If I felt the way you do about it, I wouldn't waste my time on it. History is full of people who have been devoted to it, and our present age is no different. You aren't going to change history in any significant way, so why do you bother? Do you believe that the "untruths" of the Bible--or at least people's belief in them--are an obstacle in the way of progress? That the world would be far better off if it was rid of this book once and for all?

Editor's Response to Letter #27

You ask why I spend so much time reading literature I find erroneous. Why do American and Soviet scholars spend so much time reading each others' literature? Is it because they believe the others' writings are truthful and convey the answers to mankind's problems? No, it's because one must understand in order to cope effectively. You falsely stated you wouldn't waste your time. If that were true, why are you writing BE? History has had many people devoted to oppression and tyranny, too. Surely you aren't saying that makes it right. You allege I am not going to change history in any significant way, which is probably correct. But to do nothing is to leave the biblicists without meaningful opposition. Do I believe the Bible is an obstacle to progress? It's difficult to see how any book as flawed as the Bible could promote the advancement of man.

Letter #27 concludes (Part D)

Sadly, I'm well aware that you will probably go to your grave firmly committed to your crusade against the Bible. In the course of your effort, however, I'm sure that you will be confronted with many Christians who try to convince you of the folly of your ways (as I'm sure you already have been)....

Editor's Response to the Conclusion of Letter #27 (Part D)

Unfortunately, SBJ, you will probably go to your grave believing the Bible is the word of God. If I were on a crusade, do you think I would give opponents, such as yourself, a hearing? How many crusaders allow opposing voices a major role in their publications?

Letter #28 from EEB of Amarillo, Texas

I have enjoyed every issue of BE and was especially interested in the latest issue (Aug. 1983-ed.) in which you take the apostle Paul to task. It hardly seems fair to hold him responsible for what the author of Acts makes him say. When that "book" was written Paul was long dead. Now concerning who Paul believed crucified Jesus: Paul's epistles do not show any way that he ever heard of Jesus, the star of Bethlehem, the wise men, the slaughter of innocents, the flight into Egypt...or any other things in the gospels.... It seems that Jesus of the gospels was created to combat the belief that the savior was a phantom. The early church saw to it that all "scripture" contrary to the church's doctrine was destroyed.... Paul never heard of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John (they may not have heard of each other) or of the things they relate.... Keep up the good work, but please be careful about equating what the gospels and Acts say with what we know Paul wrote.

Editor's Response to Letter #28

Dear EEB,

Your compliments and observations are appreciated. However, I have a couple of problems with your letter. You stated: "It hardly seems fair to...." I don't see how I'm being unfair. Either Paul did or did not say which is attributed to him by the author of Acts. If he did, there is no problem. If he didn't, then the author of Acts is a deceiver; he is being unfair, not I. I have no idea what Paul said and can only report what the author of Acts attributed to him. If you can prove the author of Acts quoted him incorrectly, then you should rightly hold him responsible. Second, I don't understand why you feel the author of Acts could not have quoted Paul accurately because Paul died years earlier.

Letter #29 from GM of Asheboro, North Carolina

Dear Dennis,

Your emphasis on the errancy of the Bible is interesting and convincing. But let me ask you this. With what would you replace the Christian beliefs of so many people? The ten commandments and golden rule seem like a noble creed. While the abuses, even with noble creeds, seem inherent. While the "errancy" of the Bible is significant, why throw the "baby out with the bathwater?" A replacement not likely any better may be difficult to determine. Enough time is not available to experiment with all the possibilities--one must pick and forge ahead--keeping your eyes wide open. Errors seem to be there--but where do you go from there?

Editor's response to Letter #29

Dear GM,

Your meaningful question merits a thoughtful response. You implied the Bible is the fountain from which morality flows. Yet, I know of no evidence showing those adhering closest to this book are more moral, more decent, more concerned about the welfare of others than those who don't. Nor am I aware of any information proving those attending biblically-oriented schools become better, more honest individuals than those who don't. My experience has been to the contrary. Second, which position is the result of moral teachings--doing that which is right because it's the decent thing to do, or doing that which is right because one expects a reward, a kickback, a payoff, someday? Third, if you are going to teach morality via the Bible, then a substantial portion of the entire book will have to be ignored or soft-peddled. (See next month's issue on the patriarchs and the April 1983 commentary, for example). Fourth, not only are many biblical heroes and role-models disreputable characters at best, but many biblical teachings are certainly not in the tradition of the Ten Commandments and the golden rule. The Bible's support of slavery and denunciation of all opposition to oppressive rule are notable examples. Fifth, many books contain moral teachings. Why adopt the Bible instead of the Koran, for instance? Sixth, do you really need a book to tell you right from wrong, to tell you lying, stealing, and cheating are abhorrent? Contrary to apologetic teachings, the Bible is not holding the immoralists at bay. A book to replace the Bible isn't needed. And lastly, you ask if I have a replacement for Christian beliefs. Are you saying it's better to believe that which is erroneous than to have no position? It's better to believe Jesus is God and the door to salvation, for example, than believe otherwise? As I recently told a caller on a radio station: You don't really care whether the Bible is true or not. As long as it looks good, feels good, and seems to make sense, that's all that matters. Remember, a wide variety of chemicals will provide a comparable euphoria.

January 1983

COMMENTARY

The Patriarchs--Millions of people throughout the world, especially children, often adopt certain figures as role models to idolize and emulate. This is true not only in sports, politics, and acting, but also in religion and the arena of ideas. And nowhere in religion are role-models more numerous than in the Bible. From Genesis to Revelation, prominent individuals abound. But are they really worthy of respect and admiration? Was their behavior such that you would want to awaken your children on Sunday morning to read about their exploits? What better way to answer this question than by describing the activities of each. First are those figures whose machinations are somewhat limited in scope:

- ABSALOM--ordered killings (2 Sam. 13:28-29 RSV) and had sex in the open (2 Sam. 16:22 RSV);
- AMON--raped his sister, Tamar (2 Sam. 13:11-14 RSV);
- ABIMELECH--killed a city's inhabitants (Jud. 9:45 RSV); and murdered wantonly (Jud. 9:5);
- EHUD--murdered king Eglon (Jud. 3:21-22 RSV);
- ELIJAH--committed murder (1 Kings 18:40);
- ELISHA--lied (2 Kings 6:19), told a man a lie (2 Kings 8:10 RSV), cursed 42 small boys to be torn apart for mocking his bald head (2 Kings 2:23-24 RSV);
- GIDEON--killed (Jud. 8:16:17 the Living Bible), murdered prisoners (Jud. 8:21 RSV), engaged in polygamy (Jud. 8:30);
- ISSAC--lied (Gen. 26:6-7 and attempted to sacrifice his wife to save himself (Gen. 26:9);
- JACOB--swindled Esau out of his birthright (Gen. 25:31-33 RSV), cheated and lied (Gen. 27:19, 30:40-43 RSV) and lied to Rachel (Gen. 29:12);
- JEHOIDA--ordered a murder (2 Kings 11:15-16 RSV);
- JEHU--killed (Kings 9:24, 27, 10:11, 17), ordered killings (2 Kings 10:6-7, 14, 25 RSV), and deceptively lied (2 Kings 10:18-19);
- JEPHTHAH--slaughtered people (Jud. 11:33), and killed his own daughter (Jud. 11:39 RSV);
- JEREMIAH--lied (Jer. 38:24-27 NIV);
- JOAB--killed (2 Sam. 3:27, 18:14, 20:10);
- JONATHAN--killed (1 Sam. 14:13-14 NASB), and lied (1 Sam. 20:28);
- JOSEPH--deceived his brothers (Gen. 42:7 NASB) and committed nepotism (Gen. 47:11 RSV);
- JOSHUA--killed and slaughtered without letup (Joshua 6:21, 8:25-28, 10:1, 20, 26-28, 30, 32-33, 35, 37, 39-41, 17-18, 21, 12:7), murdered prisoners (Josh. 8:29), and hamstringed horses, (Josh. 11:9 RSV);

- LABAN--lied (Gen. 29:15) and deceived (Gen. 29:20-25);
- LOT--offered his virgin daughters to a crowd (Gen. 19:8);
- SAMSON--killed (Jud. 14:19, 15:8, 15), and had sex with a harlot (Jud. 16:1) and lied to Delilah (Jud. 16:10, 13), and
- SAMUEL--murdered (1 Sam. 15:33).

Second are those individuals who are not only well known but committed a wider assortment of nefarious activities:

- ABRAHAM--told his wife to lie (Gen. 12:13), debauched Hagar, his maidservant (Gen. 16:4), sent his maidservant and her child into the wilderness (Gen. 21:14), lied (Gen. 20:2), and married his half-sister (Gen. 20:11-12);
- SAUL--used his daughters as a snare (1 Sam. 8:20-21 NIV), ordered gambling (1 Sam. 14:42), killed (1 Sam. 15:7-8, 20, 22:18-21), stripped himself and acted unstable (1 Sam. 19:24), admitted he sinned, played the fool and erred (1 Sam. 26:21), gave David's wife to another man (1 Sam. 25:44), and transgressed God by consulting a medium and being unfaithful (1 Chron. 10:13-14 RSV),
- and SOLOMON--ordered murders (1 Kings 2:25 RSV, 2:34, 46), tried to kill Jeroboam (1 Kings 11:40), enslaved people (1 Kings 9:21 RSV), did not keep God's statutes or covenant (1 Kings 11:11 RSV), did evil (1 Kings 11:6), and lied to his mother (1 Kings 2:20-21 RSV, 2:25).

Lastly, are two famous or infamous individuals--Moses and David--who occupy special places among Old Testament leaders. According to 2 Chron. 30:16 Moses was the Man of God; yet, he...

- murdered an Egyptian (Ex. 2:12),
- ordered an armed attack (Num. 31:3, 6),
- ordered the murder of prisoners (Num. 31:17),
- ordered the keeping of young female prisoners for several reasons (Num. 31:17),
- led mass killings of women and children (Deut. 2:34, 3:3, 6),
- ordered killings (Deut. 13:15, 20:13),
- blasphemously wrote he was a greater prophet than Jesus (Deut. 34:10 NASB),
- had a son out of wedlock (Ex. 2:21-22),
- and was excluded by God from Canaan for four different reasons:
 - unbelief (Num 20:12),
 - rebellion (Num. 27:12-14 RSV),
 - trespassing (Deut. 13:51-52),
 - and rash words (Psalm 106:32-33 NIV).

And, finally, there is David. Despite all of the above, no individual in the Bible had a more disreputable, more scandalous career. Although the recipient of numerous accolades--never doing evil (1 Sam. 25:28), following God fully (1 Kings 11:6), being an angel of God (2 Sam. 19:27), keeping his commandments of God (1 Kings 3:14), and having a perfect heart with the Lord (1 Kings 15:3)--David exhibited exceptionally corrupt behavior.

- He killed (1 Sam. 17:50-51 RSV, 18:7, 27, 19:8, 23:5, 30:17, 2 Sam. 8:1, 2, 5, 13),
- ordered murders (2 Sam. 1:15, 4:5-12),
- ordered prisoners to be killed (2 Sam. 12:29-31, 1 Chron. 20:3, 2 Sam. 8:1-2),
- committed unprovoked aggression and mass killing (1 Sam. 27:8-11, 2 Sam. 5:20, 25),
- gave up seven of Saul's descendants to be killed (2 Sam. 21:1-6, 9),
- requested that Joab be killed (1 Kings 2:5-6),
- intentionally arranged for Uriah to be killed in order to seize his wife (2 Sam. 11:14-17),
- displeased the Lord (2 Sam. 11:26-27),
- impregnated another man's wife, committing adultery in the process (2 Sam. 11:2-5),
- wasn't allowed to build God's house because he was a man of war and bloodshed (1 Chron. 22:7-8),
- lied (1 Sam. 21:1-2, 27:8-10),
- told Jonathan to lie (1 Sam. 20:5-6),
- admitted he sinned by taking a census (2 Sam. 24:10, 17, 1 Chron. 21: 8, 17)
- committed extortion (1 Sam. 25:2-8),
- prophesied incorrectly in his heart (1 Sam. 27:1),
- sent out a spy (2 Sam. 16:36),
- hamstrung horses (2 Sam. 8:4),
- locked up 10 concubines for life for no apparent reason (2 Sam. 20:3),
- committed bigamy (2 Sam. 3:2-3),
- committed polygamy (2 Sam. 5:12),
- despised the word of the Lord (2 Sam. 12: 9-11),
- admitted he sinned by causing Uriah's death and taking his wife (2 Sam. 12:13-14),
- and exposed himself like a pervert (2 Sam. 6:20).

Yet, despite all of this we are supposed to believe this is a man after God's own heart (Acts 13:22). Anyone approaching the Bible for goodness, decency, role models, and morality, enters at his own peril.

Radio Appearances--On Sunday, July 20, 1983, the editor of BE appeared on radio station WING in Dayton, Ohio, for 2 1/2 hours. The call-in format provided an excellent forum by which the Bible's fallacies could be revealed and discussed before a large audience. Although I don't have space to present everything discussed, one point dominated all others, i.e., the Christian interpretation of the Bible has major philosophical difficulties. To show an apologist the error of his or her ways one need only ask questions such as:

- (a) If God is just and fair, why is humanity being punished for what one man, Adam, did thousands of years ago?
- (b) If God is perfect and everything he does or creates is perfect, then Adam must have been perfect. How, then, could Adam, a perfect being, have committed sin? Whether or not he had free will is irrelevant. It's impossible for him to have committed an imperfect act. Perfect beings can't commit imperfect acts;

- (c) And if one must have Jesus to be "saved," what about the millions of people who have come and gone and never had any contact whatever with Jesus, the Bible, or Christianity? How could God be just, since they are condemned simply because of where they are born? They were provided no opportunity to obtain "salvation". Missionaries have missed millions. Indeed, millions of people died before Jesus was ever born.

These are only some of the questions that generate intense, yet productive, dialogue. Try as they may, biblicists can't cope with these problems. All of my radio appearances have been taped, and I've considered making them available. Unfortunately, the time needed to adequately record and edit would probably be prohibitive.

REVIEWS

Biblical Errancy recently received a leaflet entitled, Science, The Bible and God from M.B. of Ohio. The author contends the Bible is not only scientific but "far ahead of its time". The verses employed to prove as much are weak at best. For instance, Job 38:33: "Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven." The author concludes from this: "God asked Job if he knew the numerous laws of nature. Think of it--more than three thousand years ago the inspired Word was telling man that the universe is operated on natural law. And science today is still investigating the 'ordinance of heaven' or natural law." By what rationale the author reached this conclusion one can only surmise. The O.T. is replete with the ordinances of heaven or God, and almost nothing would lead one to believe they are synonymous with natural law. Most are moral, social, religious, and ceremonial in tone, and of little scientific value. To further make his point, the author related the following biblical verses and the "scientific" facts proven by each. Psalm 19:6 says: "His (the sun-ed.) going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it" which allegedly echoes the scientific fact that the sun has its circuit with a circumference of about 338,000 light-years. In the first place, the heaven has no ends from which the sun emerges or to which it is approaching. Secondly, the author, in Paulinist tradition, conveniently omitted the rest of the verse, which says: "and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof." How the sun's heat could be reaching every object in an infinite universe is difficult to fathom. Job 26:7 says: "He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing." If this is scientifically precise and proves the earth is floating freely in space, then how could the earth also have foundations, as alleged in Psalm 104:5, which says: "Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever"? Ecclesiastes 1:6 says the winds flow in a circular world pattern which is scientifically correct, although not particularly profound. Why doesn't the author quote the next verse, which says: "All of the rivers run into the sea...." Perhaps because hundreds of the world's rivers flow into lakes and other inland bodies of water. It's important to note that the author, also, relies upon verses that are so nebulous as to allow any interpretation expediency dictates. For example, he contends that Job 38:14 states the earth rotates upon its axis; Job 38:31 teaches the laws of planetary attraction; and Job 28:25 says air has weight. These parts of scripture are just too vague to know what was intended.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #30 from DRM of Wilberforce, Ohio

Dear Dennis,

In a response to a letter you stated that the Bible is claiming perfection. Could you document your claim? It would be helpful if you first define "perfection" and then support your statement. Also, I would debate the claim that "two diametrically opposed and mutually exclusive versions of the same event cannot be simultaneously accurate." (See: Feb. 1983, p.2). If the event is a ball following the laws of gravity and one person on top of a ten story building claims "I have dropped the ball," and another person on ground level claims "The ball will hit me" one could argue that you have two diametrically opposed, mutually exclusive and simultaneously accurate versions of the same event. These are opposed, "dropped" versus "will hit", since one is past and the other is future. They are mutually exclusive. Try to drop and hit at the same time! They are both accurate descriptions of the event.

Finally, I would speculate that you are asking the wrong questions of scripture. Scripture is a recorded meaning system for a people over a long period of time. For people who find themselves with that tradition of meaning, Scripture continues to be a source of inspiration and truth. Inspiration in terms of what is meaningful in life. Truth in terms of the ultimate questions in life. If we reduce truth to be only verifiable claims advocated by logical positivists, then the Declaration of Independence has lied when it claimed "All men are created equal" and the husband lies to his wife when he says "I love you." Thank you for the free copy of BE.

Editor's response to Letter #30

Dear DRM.

Three of your comments need to be addressed. To begin with, your initial question is directed towards the wrong party. Apologists for the Bible, not I, allege the Book claims perfections. They employ 2 Peter 1:21, 2 Tim. 3:16 and other verses to prove as much. Your quarrel is with them, not me. I merely provide evidence the Bible is not inerrant, as they allege. They define "perfection" as without error or flawless. Secondly, your second comment is permeated with poor logic. After relating two observations about a ball falling you stated: "one could argue...." To begin with, they are neither diametrically opposed nor mutually exclusive. The person on top of the building is not making two statements simultaneously which are in opposition. Any comment by the person on the ground is irrelevant, since his perspective is quite different. He is referring to what will happen while the individual dropping the ball is stating what has happened. In no way are the comments mutually exclusive, Both are correct because the passage of time changed conditions, and two different perspective are involved. The statements are complementary, not opposed. Thirdly, I am not asking any questions of Scripture other than its basis for claiming inerrancy. It may be a source of inspiration for many, but it is by no means a fountain of truth for all. You assert the Bible provides "truth in terms of the ultimate questions of life." If the Bible is really a source of truth, then how do you account for the tremendous number of problems contained therein? Glittering generalities, such as yours, aren't proof; they are merely assertions. The Declaration of Independence would be inaccurate if it contended all men are physically equal. But we both know "equality before the law" is intended.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #31 from FM of Novato, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey,

Please send six back issues. We have number 7.... In issue #7, Letter 19, the writer (SS-ed.) Mentions human sacrifices in Leviticus, Judges and 2 Samuel. So far, in a hurried reading of the first two books I have not been able to find what SS refers to. Is it possible you could quote chapter and verse?

Editor's response to Letter #31

Dear FM,

References to human sacrifices may be in Judges and 2 Samuel, but I can only find them in Exodus, Leviticus, and Ezekiel. Perhaps SS will aid both of us. BE does not vouch for the accuracy of that which is contained in Letters to the Editor.

Letter #32 from BAY of Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Mr. McKinsey,

I am finding your publication to be very educational, but I have one major complaint. Since the title is Biblical Errancy, I feel that topics discussed in your publication, whether your own writings or the letters you print should (only-ed.) deal with the Bible. Of course, related topics will naturally enter into discussions, and when this happens, I feel you have an editorial responsibility to identify non-Biblical concepts when it is not clear. The reason for this letter is Letter #19 from SS of Vienna, Virginia. In the second paragraph, SS talks about the New Testament as "a compendium of both historical and logical contradictions...filled with paganism and old-time superstition. Easter is named after the old goddess of spring. Christmas falls upon the winter solstice which is when Saturnalia was formally celebrated." You and SS are probably both aware that the words "Easter" and "Christmas" do not appear in the New Testament, nor does the date of Jesus' birth. Since the context of the letter strongly implies that these are problems with the Bible, you should have pointed out this false information....

Editor's Response to Letter #32

Dear BAY,

Your point is well taken. Material within BE should be confined to that which is contained within the Bible. But many letters discuss extra-Biblical subjects. They seem to be of great interest to many people and I don't want to exclude information of this nature if there is strong interest. Personally, I agree with you. Easter, Christmas, the Shroud of Turin, the winter solstice, the Saturnalia, and other topics that are not within the Bible are not germane to this publication. I often receive extensive letters on the history of early Christianity, the canon's formation, Free Masonry, the political machinations of popes, and so forth which, although informative and entertaining, are not really relevant to the Bible's "inerrancy." We differ on a couple of points, however. I don't feel I have a responsibility to identify non-Biblical concepts, nor do I feel obligated to tell others these topics are not in the Bible, unless the Bible's inaccuracy would be further exposed. If information about extra-Biblical topics is inaccurate, then I am no better off than the readers of BE. I can't be all-knowing on all topics, and I, like you, read all letters to the editor with a critical eye. If someone feels a letter is inaccurate, I'll try to publish thoughtful rebuttals. As we both know, newspapers can't vouch for the accuracy of that which is contained in letters to the editors.

Letter #33 from RR of Murphy, North Carolina

Dear Mr. McKinsey,

Many thanks for the sample copy of BE you sent me so promptly. Obviously your heart is in the right place, but, if #8(slavery and the degradation of women-ed.) was fairly typical of your approach, then I fear you are intellectually barking up the wrong tree. If you wish to demonstrate the errancy of the Bible, merely pointing out that its doctrines and social customs are morally repugnant to modern Americans of enlarged views simply won't work. "Repugnant" does not prove "errant." On the contrary, the more repressive, neurotic, and anti-human these doctrines are, the more they appeal to those Moral Majority types whose basic motivation is hatred of human freedom and a ravaging desire to condemn, punish and control anyone who is not exactly like themselves.

Editor's Response to Letter #33

Dear RR,

We are in agreement. "Repugnant" does not mean or prove "errancy." That is why BE doesn't concentrate on sex, immorality, or blood and gore in the Bible, as do many critiques. The latter appeal more to the heart than the head. After years of experience, apologists have been able to develop a wide assortment of responses to the "repugnancy approach". Primary reliance on this method is doomed to failure, and that's why BE encompasses a wider variety of problems. You've made an astute observation which merits a thoughtful reply. Issue #8 dwelt on slavery and subservience of women, not out of concern for the deplorable aspects of oppression, but because they are sanctioned by the Bible, in clear violation of such verses as 2 Cor. 3:17. The general tenor of the discussion was based on logic, reason, and evidence, not on emotion or morality. You might want to read other issues, especially numbers 1, 2, 3, 6, and 7, as they are decidedly lacking in moral or emotional appeals. It's difficult to form an accurate opinion after having read only one issue.

Letter #34 from AIC of San Francisco, California (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey,

I have very much appreciated the 5 issues of BE you have sent me.... May I make some comments on this issue received so far? In the first page of Issue #6 you write: "An egg can easily be taken from a virgin, united with a sperm in a test-tube, and reinserted into the uterus without any physical contact being involved." This a very recent technique and couldn't have been considered in Biblical times....

Editor's Response to Letter #34 (Part a)

Dear AIC,

I appreciate your scientific approach, but you missed my point. The question is: Is a virgin birth a miracle? Is it an event contrary to natural law, i.e., supernatural and worthy of awe? Science has shown that it's not a miracle. And if it isn't a miracle now, it wasn't a miracle then. Women can have children without ever having had contact with a male. Sticks turning into snakes and women turning into salt are miracles because they can't occur at any time. But if a woman can have children now, without contact, then they could have done so then. The mechanics by which it occurred are quite secondary. The fact is it could have happened. It is possible.

Letter #34 concludes (Part b)

(After an extensive analysis of pregnancy and reproduction AIC continued-ed.). On page 4 of issue # 7 you write: "If they believe this (the 4 versions of the Resurrection agree-ed.), then I challenge them to write one consistent narrative incorporating all four gospel accounts." This has been done. It is a big book called "The Nazarene Gospel" by Robert Groves and Joshua Podro.... It is a work of scholarship and not just a wild theory. Look it up and get a copy for your library if you can. But the challenge you flung out in the sentence quoted at the beginning of this paragraph was met before you made it. Other than this I have no criticism of the 5 issues I have seen.... All in all, I must say that you have produced an ACHIEVEMENT. You are entitled to feel very proud of "Biblical Errancy".... I have never heard of Enon, Ohio. What part of the state is it in?

Editor's Response to Letter #34 (Part b)

Dear AIC. Defenders of the Bible often recommend books I should read, and I've never found one that lived up to its billing. I thank you for your compliments and realize you are trying to be of assistance, but no book can reconcile the gospel accounts. The chronologies, the prophecies with respect to when the cock should crow, and the time the women arrived at the tomb are only some of the problems that no amount of rationalization and justification can reconcile. Thomas Paine said it well: "...it is, I believe, impossible to find in any story upon record with so many and glaring absurdities, contradictions and falsehoods, as are in those books (Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John). They are more numerous and striking than I had any expectation of finding, when I began this examination,...." (The Age of Reason by Thomas Paine, p. 67). If you will send me some specific reconciliations of gospel contradiction that BE has mentioned, I will gladly discuss them in future issues. Biblicists never cease assuring their critics that all problems have been resolved and future assaults on Biblical inerrancy are futile. It's a common ploy and only deceives those who aren't sufficiently versed in scripture. Anyone who does not know the Book is obviously not going to know its weaknesses. Enon, Ohio is northeast of Dayton near Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

Letter #35 from MJG of Ottawa, Canada

Dear Dennis.

Thanks for the sample copy. I enjoyed reading it, though it did not shake my faith in the Scripture. You seem to be quite level-headed, unlike some agnostic/atheists, whose material I have read. Therefore, I would be interested in a subscription; enclosed is my money order. I feel one should not be afraid of the truth, even if it is not what you would like it to be. I hope you feel the same way. We have all got a lot to learn and understand.

Editor's Response to Letter #35

Dear MJG.

If only all believers in scriptures were as open-minded as you! All BE asks is a fair hearing in an open form. I couldn't agree with you more. We all make mistakes; we all have a lot to learn, and I am no exception. But what better way to proceed than through an open dialog, encompassing all points of view. Preaching to the converted--witness most religious meetings, from fundamentalist to atheist--may "soothe," but it doesn't "solve." One doesn't convert people from the Bible overnight. A long, slow, methodical process of re-education is required. People accept the Bible as God's word after months, even years, of teaching; and equally long period is required to reverse the process.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

If your comments on BE have not been addressed, we apologize. The volume of mail--pro and con--far exceed what can be published. Many people have a lot to say.

COMMENTARY

This month's BE marks the beginning of a policy of devoting one issue every year or so to answering letters and commentaries submitted by readers.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #36 from REH of Hubbard, OH Dear Mr. McKensey.

I studied under, perhaps, the greatest N.T. scholar in the past several decades, Prof. M.S. Enslin. I remember one remark he made in his course in "Christian Beginnings." "There isn't enough about Jesus of Nazareth to write a decent obituary." No question that Paul is the founder of Christianity. But he also said, "The more you understand the Bible, the more you love it." I think both statesments are true. Knowledge is key to freedom. I think Socrates would attest to that.

Editor's Response to Letter #36

Dear REH.

Although unaquainted with Prof. Enslin, I agree with his obituary comment. However, I assure him that the greater knowledge of the Bible on my part has not created greater love. Indeed, precisely the opposite has occurred and, undoubtedly, countless others have experienced the same feeling. Perhaps someday people will stop making exaggerated claims of this nature.

Letter #37 from KEN of Sacramento, California

Dear Dennis.

I've been meaning to comment on the last few issues of BE and respond a bit to your interesting reply to my other letter (Letter #23, Issue #10). Vagaries of life being what they are however, I simply didn't have the time until now. I read with interest the excerpts from SBJ's long letter (Letter #22, Issues 10 and 11) in defense of the inerrancy of the Bible. I'm not sure what to think of SBJ. He says some intelligent things and makes some monstrous blunders. I was particularly surprised by his claim that any disagreement with the Biblical attitudes toward slavery represent an "opinion" and has no bearing on the Bible's validity (Part a). Would SBJ please elaborate on this? It seems to me that if Biblical inerrancy means anything at all, it means that doctrinal and moral statements in the Bible are just as valid as its factual statements. Now clearly, the Bible explicitly and implicitly endorses the institution of slavery; SBJ made no attempt even to dispute this. So let us ask: How does SBJ regard slavery? If he opposes it, he effectively admits the Bible is wrong. If he straddles the issue, claiming that slavery was moral in Biblical times but immoral in post-Biblical times, he is effectively saying that the moral teachings of the Bible are not absolute, that "right" and "wrong" may change over time. This is pure moral relativism, a doctrine that Christians have regarded as repugnant for centuries. Finally, if SBJ actually supports slavery, let him have the courage to say so--let him justify it, if he can, in the face of history,...

Editor's Response To Letter #37 (Part a)

Dear KEN.

SBJ has not responded to my comments; perhaps he will reply to yours.

Letter #37 continues (Part b)

(After discussing the degree of governmental responsibility for Jesus' death which was covered in the Dec. 1983, issue, KEN stated--). I had other comments on SBJ's letter of the same ilk, but I'll pass over them. Basically I found myself agreeing somewhat with both of you. You were both honest, but you both tended to obfuscate a little, and to try to win points by redefining terms. Your reply to my own letter #23 (In letter #23, Issue 10, KEN stated BE erred in Sept. 1983 commentary by claiming the Bible asserts turtles have voices--ed.) in the tenth issue was enlightening in many respects, but I must take issue with parts of it. In Part (b) response, for example, you at first seemed to understand my contention that in the parlance of the King James era, turtle was an acceptable idiom for turtle-dove.... Remember, the translators of the KJ Bible were translating, not for the 20th century American readers, but for the folk of 16th century England, who used the word turtle in just that way (i.e., a "turtle" was a bird--ed.). Please reference, for example, Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale," IV. 4. It seems that I'm quibbling, but this point is important because it keys with an error you often make in Biblical criticism: you have a tendency to impose modern definitions on archaic words in archaic contexts. Another example will be evident in just a bit. I hope you will accept my comments in the spirit they are intended. I am basically on your side and have a high opinion of Biblical Errancy, but sometimes you seem to try awfully hard to wring inappropriate meanings out of certain passages of the Bible, and this convinces no one. In fact it leaves you wide open to contempt and ridicule from Fundamentalist circles.

Editor's Response to Letter #37 (Part b)

You might be interested in knowing,, KEN that no statement has generated more criticisms than my assertion on page one of Issue #9 that turtles have voices according to Song of Solomon 2:12. "Turtles" in this context, according to many, means a "turtle-dove," not a reptile. I don't mind specific and detailed corrections such as this, but I do take exception to broad, vague generalizations such as: "you have a tendency to...." and "sometimes you seem to try to awfully hard to wring...." Please be specific. If you feel I've erred, cite chapter and verse. Generalizations are like phantoms; you can't address what you can't see.

Letter #38 from WTF of Spanaway, Washington

Dear Mr. Mckinsey. I am certainly no Christian, and do in fact enjoy your publication. Although it is beyond me as to how I might get a Christian to read it. Your part (a) discussion in letter #22 is founded on essentially wrong premises. A full discussion of the subject of liberty, in the Bible, can only be broached if one wants to open a Pandora's box. Since I am reckless then let me do so. In defense of SBJ (and to his undoubted amazement) 2 Cor. 3:17 (Where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty--ed) does not contradict references to slaves and the subservience of women IF ONE CONSIDERS IN TOTAL CONTEXT TOTAL JUDAIC TEACHINGS. The case has been made to my satisfaction that the Bible (O.T.) is a hodgepodge of compilations and modified borrowings of the more appealing myths, fables, and teachings of various peoples and nations by a nomadic, rootless tribe. The code of Hammurabi becomes the ten commandments, the Epic of Gilgamesh becomes the Flood et al, ad nauseum. One cannot understand the most Holy Bible unless one has also read the Talmud. According to Rabbinical authorities the Torah (Pentateuch or first five books of the bible) is water, but the Talmud, ah, that is the wine. The Talmud clearly states that the gentile or goyim is a beast, a non human, and that woman does not exist outside her husband. Both the Jewish woman and the gentile exist only to serve the male Jew. According to the Talmud, it is not a crime or sin to murder, rob, betray, or harm a gentile (we are merely beasts). A jew could not enslave another Jew, hence only gentiles were slaves.... If one considers Judaism in its totality and realizes that the Bible is derived from the Talmud, then there is no contradiction, only a lack of proper definition. Christ stated that he did not come to overthrow the law (tradition), but to fulfill it. He did not repudiate the Talmud, but acted according to its precepts when he spurned the Samaritan women. One must take everything in context.

Editor's response to Letter #38 (Part a)

Dear WTF. You stated, "2 Cor. 3:17 does not contradict references to slaves....," but proves the opposite. Remember, we aren't discussing the Talmud, which is little more than a compilation of Jewish writings and commentaries on the Pentateuch. The Talmud is not scriptural, is not alleged to be the word of God, and can't be used to rewrite the Bible. What is water and what is wine doesn't matter. It's what is allegedly inspired that counts. But even if it were "divinely inspired", you have only shown that the Talmud also supports slavery and subservience of women. Not only many biblical verses, but the Talmud as well, contradicts 2 Cor. 3:17. You don't really support SBJ's position; you have only broadened the context and provided additional evidence to corroborate the Aug. 1983 commentary. The spirit of God in the Talmud, if indeed, the Talmud represents God's spirit, is certainly not one of liberty. Secondly, could you tell me where Jesus spurned some Samaritan women? Doesn't the fourth chapter of John show the opposite? And finally, I noticed you put the word "most" in front of "Holy Bible" when it wasn't needed. Am I wrong in detecting Christian proclivities?

Letter #38 concludes (Part b)

The rulers that killed Jesus were the Sanhedrin (Seventy), which were rulers over the Jews. Pilate recognized their authority and acceded to it for fear of a revolt.

Editor's Response to Letter #38 (Part b)

I hope you accept my comments in the spirit intended, but could you cite chapter and verse for the following. What verses say: (a) the Sanhedrin killed Jesus, (b) the Sanhedrin ruled the Jews, (c) and Pilate recognized its authority? The Sanhedrin receives a lot of attention in literature. But why? The word "Sanhedrin" never appears once in the KJ Bible. The word "seventy" only appears three times in the N.T. and none has anything to do with rulers. One pertains to the number of times a person should forgive others, and the remainder pertain to some disciples being sent out. Perhaps the Sanhedrin was responsible, but the Bible is silent.

Letter from MJ of Ferndale, Washington (Part a)

Dennis

. I wish to make a few comments on the Nov. issue dealing with the Flood. First you quoted Gen. 8:4 and then commented, "How could the ark have rested upon several mountains at once?" I personally had no problem with that verse--as many elements of our modern language use identical usage. If you interpret many of our statements today, literally, word for word, you would have a difficulty functioning normally. As children, we would often interpret our brothers' and sisters' comments and/or commands literally-- word for word--to render their statements useless, or create nonsense out of commonly used phrases. Please let's leave that method to pranksters and comedians.

Editor's Response to Letter #39 (part a)

Dear MJ. Gen. 8:4 says "mountains", plural, not "mountain", singular. Translators should have left off the "s" if only one mountain was intended. You're speaking as if the "s" didn't exist. Apologists repeatedly say one should read the Bible as one reads a newspaper, which is what I'm doing. I assume the book says what it means and means what it says. If you are going to change a plural to a singular because it sounds absurd, are you going to deny the miracles of the Bible because they are absurd also? The Bible says a woman turned into a pillar of salt, for example. Is that any more or less incredible than a ship landing on several mountains at once? If you are going to rewrite an incident because it makes no sense, then you might as well rewrite others. And, of course, if you rewrite the Bible's miracles in such a manner as to make them appear natural, then you will "gut" the Book in the process. The Resurrection will vanish; Jesus will no longer be God and man; Peter and Paul will not have resurrected anyone; God will not have carved the Ten Commandments in stone, and Jesus will not have had miraculous powers. In essence, if you are going to start rewriting the text because verses don't make sense, you face the problem of deciding where this will end, and what's left when you are through.

Letter #39 continues (Part b)

I wish also to respond to another comment you made. You stated, "Killing animals of which only two remain after the Flood seems absurd." Note, they only sacrificed "clean creatures," and in Gen. 7:2, God instructed Noah to take seven each of the "Clean beasts," and two each of unclean beasts.... Also I'd like to point out that within a year's time many animals could have been actively reproducing within the ark during the flood.

Editor's Response to Letter #39 (Part b)

I received your letter on November 8th, MJ. The December commentary addressed the first part of your question, i.e., the Bible can't agree on how many animals entered the Ark, and no law delineating clean from unclean animals existed at the time. Your second point is vitiated by the fact that in Gen. 8:17 God told Noah to take the animals off the Ark so that, "they may breed abundantly in the earth and be fruitful and multiply upon the earth." Why make this statement if they were already doing so on the Ark?

Letter #39 concludes (Part c)

I have a few other things to point out from past issues, but I am so busy.... Apparently I see a perspective you do not, as I was a devout and serious christian in my early childhood, but now a devout agnostic. It appears you never were a christian in the past (am I wrong?), and that puts you at a slight disadvantage. Keep up the good work though! We need more of you! I've underlined many of your statements with laughter; some of them are real killers! I just wish my christian relatives and friends would let me show them. I really thought by using their medium (the Bible) that there would be an open line of communication, but I was dead wrong! I nearly got thrown out on my ear! When they caught the drift of my intentions, they refused to read any more of the scriptures I had opened to and told me to close the book! I'm afraid many (a majority) of christians are like that, and it's a battle we can hardly win! Are you the only one working on this periodical? What is your circulation up to now? I have a lot more to say, but I must stop rattling on, as both our time is extremely limited. Again I wish to praise you for your efforts, and hopefully we can tie your achievements with others in related areas into one powerful light beacon, and alter the course of humanity from the gloomy prophecies of christianity....

Editor's concluding response to Letter #39 (Part c)

You are a thoughtful individual, MJ. Let me respond to your comments one at a time. You are correct. I never was a Christian in that I never accepted Jesus as a savior, but that's a decided advantage. I by-passed all the subtle inculcation that an outside observer notices more easily. In regard to your expectations about using "their medium," I've often had the same experience. I've been told to leave Bible study sessions on several occasions. Biblicists not only want to close the Book, but close me out as well. We will win the struggle, however; don't worry. It will just take time. My wife handles the more mundane affairs of BE, such as record-keeping. Scores of people have subscribed so far.

Letter #40 MA of Tulsa, Oklahoma
See Acts 12:4 for the word Easter.

Editor's Response to Letter #40

In letter #32, December, 1983 issue, BAY stated the word "Easter" did not appear in the New Testament, and I agreed. I was using the NASB. I'm not sure what version BAY used. In any event, there really is no problem. Not one version in my library--the RSV, NASB, NIV, Modern Language, Living Bible, NAB, and the NWT--uses "Easter" in Acts 12:4. Only the KJV does.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Letter #41 from SS of Vienna, Virginia

(In Letter #19, Issue #7 SS stated there were human sacrifices in Leviticus, Judges, and 2 Samuel. The author of Letter #31, Issue #13 asked him to quote chapter and verse. The following is the reply of Ss--ed.) In Judges 11:29-40 Jephthah is forced to burn his daughter only as a sacrifice to God "according to his vow which he had vowed." (Judges 11:39). See also Bible Handbook, pp. 109-110 by G.W. Foote and W.P. Ball; Asimov's Guide to the Bible, Vol. I, pp. 246-247 for instance. The Jewish historian, Josephus, also reports the girl as having been burnt and not merely condemned to perpetual virginity, as some modern Fundamentalists have tried to argue. In 2 Sam. 21:1-9, David sent seven innocent men to their deaths "whom the Lord did choose" (2 Sam. 21:6) in order to appease God and end a three-year famine. In Lev. 27:28-29 human sacrifice is condoned by God, "No human being thus devoted (as an offering to God-SS) may be redeemed, but he shall be put to death" (NEB). In Gen. 22:2, 9-10 God commands Abraham to sacrifice Isaac. Other instances referring to the practice of human sacrifice include Jer. 7:30-31, Ezek. 20:25-26, Micah 6:7. All of this would seem contrary to the injunction in Ex. 20:31, "Thou shalt not kill"; but how can this be if the Bible is truly inerrant?....

Letter #42 from Dr. TSC of Brockport, New York

...I have one comment to make concerning one of the points you raised on the first page of Issue #11. I refer to point (c) which raises a criticism of Gen. 6:17. There you ask, "Yet, how would a flood destroy sea animals such as...." The fact is, however, that if there had been such a flood--one supposedly involving enough water to cover all but the highest mountains--the amount of water required would greatly dilute the salinity of the seas. Sea animals are in isotonic balance with their saltwater environment. Hence, a greatly reduced salt concentration in the environment would, through osmosis, cause them to die. Which means, of course, that if the story of Noah and the ark were true, Noah's task would be even more impossible--since, in that case, he would have to take ocean animals (which are very numerous and diversified, requiring extremely varied conditions such as tremendous or slight pressures and depths) aboard the ark, as well as the land animals. Keep up the good work.

Letter #43 from SK of Tucson, Arizona

Dear Dennis, I'm an atheist and I'd like to make a comment on a statement on page 3 of your Aug. 1983 issue. In the article "Coping with Apologists", the third approach listed was to mention the sick, perverted aspects of the bible, and you said that a logical response from apologist would be, "That's life, Friend. The Bible deals with the real world." Frankly, I think that this would be a logical response if all the rotten things in the bible were done by the "villians" of the bible, such as the Babylonians, the idol-worshippers, etc. But I think that what's so insidious about the bible isn't the fact that evil is mentioned and discussed, but that it's the heroes and role-models of the bible that do the evil! It wasn't one of the perverts of Sodom who had sex with his daughters, but Lot, who had just fled Sodom because he was the godly, upright antithesis of what went on in Sodom. It wasn't a leader of the Babylonian army who told his soldiers to kill everyone but the young virgins and to keep them for themselves, but it was the most exalted character of the O.T., Moses. These are just examples.... If all the bible did was "deal with" these things and call them "evil," that would be one thing. But to have the "good guys" of the bible do them, and usually not be punished or labeled "evil" for them...is quite different.

Editor's Response to Letter #43

The commentary in Jan. 1984 issue substantiates your position. This is the reason biblicists would rather concentrate on N.T. figures.

Letter #44 from VG of McCalla, Alabama

Almost seven years ago I was ordained as a deacon at a local Baptist church after "going through the motions". I found myself engaged in heated debate concerning and defending the inerrancy of the Bible. After coming to grips with the fact that I really wasn't sure the Bible was inerrant, I began a self-study of the subject. In one evening I found a dozen "problem passages" that troubled me at the time. Since my ordination, I have restructured my thinking and have come to the conclusions that are not popular with those here in the Bible-belt. Thanks for your efforts and research, it is greatly appreciated and needed.

Letter #45 from FAW of Eufala, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis

.... I might say I was raised as a missionary child in north India before independence. Have never been able to personalize Christianity tho have gone thru routine church membership. Any uplift I've needed has been thru church music in which I've been a lifelong active participant as choir member/director. For many years in San Diego in mainline churches I was able to sing without confrontation, but a recent 1980 move to this fundamentalist area has brought close beliefs in/with which I cannot agree and I'm examing things much more actively than ever before.

Letter #46 FS of San Rapael, California

Dear DM/BE

.... I appreciate receiving your free issue, and also your attempt to add some critical thinking to an uncritical field. It may be a contradiction in terms to bring rationality to bible study, but what you are doing may be helpful even if it proves that point. When you indicate biblical support for slavery and oppression of women, you help those who already have some critical sense to advance further in their knowledge; but when you try to use the bible in order to contradict the bible, I believe you are on shakier ground....

Editor's Response to Letter #46

Dear FS. Your letter is praiseworthy, although a couple of points should be addressed. First, I believe you can bring rationality to the study of any subject, including the Bible. Mythology, folklore, mysticism, superstition, and fairy tales can all be studied in a reasonable manner. The matter discussed need not be sensible in order for the analysis to be rational. Secondly, you doubt the Bible can be used to contradict itself. Quite the contrary, what source would you use to disprove the Bible? Would you marshal a mass of scientific data? Would you discount miracles as childish nonsense? Would you belittle the entire book as little more than a fairy tale worthy of immature minds? The problem with these is that most people who put credence in the Bible are going to respond, "I don't care what evidence, proofs, or logic you muster; if it contradicts the biblical teachings, then it's wrong." The best way to cope with such mentality is to show that not external evidence, but internal data as well, says the Bible is in error. When one part of the Book says another part is false, that's a problem even the staunchest defender finds unsettling. It's one thing for science to say the Bible is fallacious; it's quite another for the Bible, itself, to say so.

Letter #47 from JG of Cloverdale, New York

Dear Dennis

.... Keep punching. I have one question: In Jan. 1984 issue, you said Moses blasphemed by saying he was greater than Jesus. How could he say this since Jesus lived hundreds of years after Moses?

Editor's Response to Letter #47

Good question, JG. It's the kind of query we like--relevant, significant, material, and directly applicable to the Bible's validity. As you probably know, apologists allege Moses wrote the first five books of the O.T. The following statement is near the end of the fifth book: "There has not arisen a prophet since in Israel like Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face." (Deut. 34:10 RSV).

COMMENTARY

The Trinity--The Trinitarian belief that God is Unity, subsisting in three persons: The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost--all three are one God, equal in power and glory--represents one of the most incredible, albeit crucial conceptions in all of Christendom. Many observers throughout history have stressed the irrational involved.

- "One may say with one's lips: 'I believe that God is one, and also three'--but no one can believe it, because the words have no sense." (What is Religion by Leo Tolstoy).
- "When we shall have done away with the incomprehensible jargon of the Trinitarian arithmetic, that three are one, and one is three;...." (Jefferson's Works, Vol. 7, p. 210 by H.A. Washington).
- "It is too late in the day for men of sincerity to pretend they believe in the Platonic mysticism that three are one, and one is three; yet that the one is not three, and the three are not one;...." (Jefferson's Works, Vol. 6, p. 192 by H.A. Washington).

In discussions with biblicists I've often asked the question, "When Jesus said on the Cross, 'Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do' (Luke 23:34), to whom was he speaking?" To which they usually replied, "God." To this I responded, "But I thought he was God." To which they usually reply, "No, he is the son God." "In other words, we have two Gods," I said. "No," they replied, "just one God but three persons." Now let's pause and think, my friend, "I said, "we have one being, one source of intelligence--God--speaking to another being, another source of intelligence, which is also God; and yet, we are to believe there is only one God." This simple dialogue highlights quite well the incongruity of the problem. Clearly, logic and reason have nothing to do with understanding the Trinity. There is little rhyme or reason involved and, indeed many apologists will admit as much, since any other approach would border on naivete. Many don't even attempt a rational defense. They merely assert that, although opposed to sensible thought, it's true, nevertheless. "It's a mystery." That's the common refrain.

Apologetic beliefs that violate the rules on logic and common sense are often described as mysteries, unfathomable by the human mind. Faith, which H.L. Mencken defined as "an illogical belief in the occurrence of the improbable", is mandatory. As one defender candidly stated, "The Trinity, that is three persons in one, is a mystery which is revealed by Bible, but cannot be understood by the human mind....this is one of those things which must be accepted by faith, even though it cannot be reasoned out. The Trinity cannot be explained but it must be believed." (508 Answers to Bible Questions, p. 168 by M. R. DeHaan). Thomas Jefferson summarized the situation quite well by stating,

"No historical fact is better established, than that the doctrine of one God, pure and uncompounded, was that of the early ages of Christianity;.... The hocus-pocus phantasm of a God like another Cerberus, with one body and three heads, had its birth and growth in the blood of thousand and thousands of martyrs.... In fact, the Athanasian paradox that one is three, and three but one, is so incomprehensible to the human mind, that no candid man can say he has any idea of it, and how can he believe what presents no idea? He who thinks he does, only deceives himself. He proves, also, that man, once surrendering his reason, has no remaining guard against absurdities the most monstrous,... With such persons, gullability, which they call faith, takes the helm from the hand of reason, and the mind becomes a wreck." (Jefferson's Works, Vol. 7, p. 269-70 by H.A. Washington).

NO doubt many apologists agreed with Ingersoll when he said, "In order to be saved it is necessary to believe this. What a blessing that we do not have to understand it. (Ingersoll's Works, Vol.1, p. 496) Or to quote Thomas Paine, "Where is the evidence that the person called Jesus Christ is the begotten Son of God? The case admits not of evidence either to our senses or our mental faculties; neither has God given to man any talent by which such a thing is comprehensible." (The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 9, p. 294).

Opposition to the Trinity comes not only from outside the Bible but from within as well. One only need not rely upon external critics alone. The Bible is replete with statements to the effect that God is a Unity; he is one: there is none like him. The following are a few that could be mentioned: "...the Lord he is God; there is none else beside him" (Deut. 4:35); "...for there is none like thee, neither is there any god beside thee" (2 Sam. 7:22); "I am God and there is none like me" (Isa. 46:9). Apparently Jesus and the Holy Ghost are like him, since they are God also. (See also: Deut. 4:39, 6:4, Mark 12:29, Isa. 45:5-6, 1 Chron. 17:20, 1 Sam. 2:2 and Kings 8:60). Despite these verses and many others, apologists continue to rely upon four major verses to justify their beliefs in the Trinity: 1 Peter 1:2, the forged 1 John 5:7(...for there are three that bear record in heaven), 2 Cor.13:14, and Matt. 28:19 (baptising them in the name of the Father, Son, and of the Holy Ghost). If these four verses justify belief in the Trinity, then they contradict many other comments that do not. If they do not justify belief in the Trinity, then there is little else of real substance to rely upon, and the issue becomes moot. Incidentally, the word "Trinity" appears nowhere in the Bible.

Besides numerous statements asserting the unity, the indivisibility of God, the Bible also provides additional information in opposition to the Trinity. First, Gen. 6:3 states God would never become flesh. Jews interpret the verse as saying, "My spirit shall never more abide in man, since he too is flesh." But, if Jesus was God and man simultaneously, then divinity would have rested in a man, i.e., flesh. Second, 2 Chron. 6:18 and 1 Kings 8:27 state God (i.e. Jesus) would never dwell on earth. Third, although called God by others, Jesus never directly said he was God. According to one Christian denomination called a cult, Satan, too, was called God (2 Cor. 4:4). Fourth, if the Holy Ghost was a person, as Trinitarians allege, then how could he have filled 120 people simultaneously (acts 2)? Fifth, how could the Son, who is God eternal, be equal in age to the Father who is God Eternal? By definition, a son must be younger than the father; in which case they can't be equal. Sixth, how could Jesus be God, i.e. eternal, when several verses show he was created at a particular point in time: Rev. 3:14, Prov. 8:22-23 RSV, Col. 1:15 RSV. And lastly, if Jesus and the Holy Ghost are God, if the Trinity is valid, then Jesus' relationship to Mary is utterly paradoxical:

- (1) If he was born of Mary, she was his mother;
- (2) She "being with child by the Holy Ghost," and Father, Son and Holy Ghost being one, she was his wife;
- (3) God, being the Father of all mankind, and God and Christ being one, she was his daughter;
- (4) She, being the daughter of God, and Jesus being the Son of God, she was his sister.

Ingersoll probably summarized the Trinitarian enigma as well as anyone when he said, Christ, according to the faith, is the second person in the Trinity, the Father being the first and the Holy Ghost third. Each of these persons is God. Christ is his own father and his own son. The Holy Ghost is neither father nor son, but both. The son was begotten by the father, but existed before he was begotten--just the same before as after. Christ is just as old as his father, and the father is just as young as his son. The Holy Ghost proceeded from the Father and Son, but was equal to the Father and Son before he proceeded, that is to say, before he existed, but he is of the same age as the other two. So it is declared that the Father is God, and the Son and the Holy Ghost God, and these three Gods make one God. According to the celestial multiplication table, once one is three, and three time one is one, and according to heavenly subtraction if we take two from three, three are left. The addition is equally peculiar: if we add two to one we have but one. Each one equal to himself and to the other two. Nothing ever was, nothing ever can be more perfectly idiotic and absurd than the dogma of the Trinity." (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 4, p. 266-67).

Why, then, in light of the above, do biblicists cling so stubbornly to a belief that is so irrational as to all but destroy their intellectual credibility? Why do they insist that Jesus is both fully man in every sense of the word and fully God in every sense of the word? Why? Because the alternative is even worse. They are trapped between a wall and a cliff. Unless Jesus is God and man simultaneously, all of the following problems have no solutions. To begin with the Bible repeatedly says that only God can be mankind's savior: "I, even I, am the Lord; and besides me there is no savior" (Isa. 43:11). (Also Hosea 3:4, Psalm 3:8, and Isa. 43:3). Obviously Jesus must be God if he is to save mankind, since no mere mortal can fulfill that role. If Jesus is not God and man simultaneously, then he is no more divine than Mohammed or any other religious figure. His death could not be the stepping stone to salvation for everyone.

But even more importantly, the Trinity provides the only escape available for the tremendously large number of contradicting statements made by Jesus himself with respect to his nature and capabilities. The trinity is Christianity's "Great Backdoor". On several occasions Jesus equated himself with God, although he never directly said he was God:

- (a) "I and the Father are one" (John 10:30);
- (b) "...he that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 17:22);
- (c) "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the word was God" (John 1:1). (See also: John 10:38, 14:9-11, 17:11, 21-23, Col. 2:9)

Yet, a far larger number of statements clearly shows Jesus did not equate himself with God, in which case he couldn't be mankind's savior:

- (a) "Why callest me good? There is none good but one, that is God" Matt. 19:17);
- (b) "for my Father is greater than I" (John 14:28);
- (c) "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me" (John 7:16);
- (d) "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. 27:46);
- (e) "Who has gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God" (1 Peter 3:22); (See also: Mark 13:32, 1 cor. 11:3, John 5:19, 20:17, Matt. 26:39 and many others).

Biblical supporters use the escape mechanism rather freely by alleging the former comments were made by Jesus-the-God; while the latter were made by Jesus-the-man. So, depending on the dictates of expediency, the inconsistent comments by Jesus can be reconciled. Without the Trinity, Jesus would appear to be a hopelessly confused young man, more sick than savior. The Trinity also provides the only means of escape from such imbroglios as Ingersoll's earlier comment on celestial arithmetic and Mary's confusing relationship to Jesus.

But even if the Trinity existed, and even if it provided a satisfactory resolution to a myriad of dilemmas, there are several problems that lie beyond even its purview. First, the question would remain of who or what died on the cross. Was it Jesus-the-man or Jesus-the-God? If Jesus-the-man died, then no one was saved, since the death of a man could not rescue anyone. If, on the other hand, Jesus-the-God died, then we have an impossibility. God can't die. He is eternal, as many verses show. So the question remains: Who died on the cross? Who or What made the sacrifice? As One Christian group correctly stated, "If Jesus were God, then during Jesus' death God was dead in the grave." But it had to be God or Jesus God that died, since only God can save mankind. Second, "Orthodoxy has always held that Jesus Christ was fully God and perfect man, and that these two natures were united in one person...." (Answering Christianity's Most Puzzling Questions, Vol. 2, p. 14 by Richard Sisson). But how could Jesus-the-man be sinless, since all men have sinned and come short of the glory of God (Rom. 3:23)? If Jesus is sinless, as many verses show (1 Peter 2:22, 1 John 3:3, 5, 7, 2 Cor. 5:12, Heb. 4:15, 7:26), then he wasn't human, for all have sinned; he was only God. And if he was only God, how could he say, "My Father is greater than I"? On the other hand, if these "sinless" verses only refer to Jesus-the-God, while Jesus-the-man did sin, then he needs salvation as much as anyone. Who died on the Cross to save him? And lastly, having an innocent individual suffer punishment on a cross in order to atone for acts of mankind makes no more sense than having all mankind suffer for the acts of one man--Adam. To use a simple example: If I robbed a bank and my father volunteered to serve my sentence, justice would not exist, even though he agreed. Punishing the innocent for the deeds of the guilty or accepting punishment of the innocent as atonement for the guilty's behavior, has nothing to do with justice, regardless of who agrees. It isn't even revenge, since the guilty are unscathed. It's wanting blood merely for the sake of blood. It's as if someone took my wife's life during the night and I immediately went out and shot the first passer-by.

"The absurdity of the doctrine known as 'The Fall of Man,' gave birth to that other absurdity known as 'The Atonement.' So that now it is insisted that, as we are rightfully charged with sin of someone else, we can rightfully be credited with the virtues of another." (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 370)

REVIEWS

Apologists often use verses other than those already discussed to substantiate biblical support for the Trinity. They are much weaker, however, due to the imprecision of that which is being discussed. For instance, writers McDowell and Steward use God's statements in Gen. 1:26 (Let us make in our image) and Gen. 3:22 (Behold, the man has become like one of us) to prove the Trinity. On page 71 in Answers to Tough Questions they state, "God's plural nature is alluded to here, for He could not be talking to angels in these instances, because angels could not help God create. The Bible teaches that Jesus Christ, not the angels, created all things (John 1:30, Col. 1:15)." Other apologists, however, reject this argument. For instance, in the Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties Gleason Archer states, "Who, then, constitutes the 'us' referred to in Gen. 3:22? Conceivably the three persons of the Trinity might be involved here, but more likely 'us' refers to the angels surrounding God's throne in heaven.... There are a few passages in the Old Testament where the angels are referred to as 'bene elohim' (sons of God), e.g. Job 1:6, 2:1, 38:7...." The Bible relates numerous instances in which angels assisted God and carried out assignments. God could have done the "making" while the angels merely assisted. The words are too vague, too nebulous, as are the phrases "our images" and "like one of us" to provide definite confirmation of the Trinity. One can only speculate as to whom "us" and "our" refer. The Bible provides no definite answer.

Turning from the Trinity, this month's review of books will conclude with an analysis of some interesting rationalization with respect to ethical dilemmas in the Bible. In the classic apologetic defense, Alleged Discrepancies of the Bible, John Haley constantly employed his favorite tactic--adding to the text--in clear violation of Rev. 22:18 ("If any man shall add unto these things, god shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book") to resolve problems. He freely used the very ploy which is repeatedly attributed to those exposing the Bible. His resolutions of several contradictions show as much.

- (1) Luke 6:37 says, "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged; condemn not, and you shall not be condemned," while John 7:24 says, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgement." Are we or are we not to judge? Haley attempted to reconcile this contradiction by saying, "The text from Matthew forbids harsh, conscious judgement, but does not preclude the giving of judicial decisions, not the expression of our opinions in a proper manner (Ibid. page 284)." Yet, there is nothing whatever to prove only "harsh" punishment is forbidden. He made a distinction wholly unsupported by the text.
- (2) Prov. 22:15 says, "Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child, but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him," while Prov. 27:27 says, "Though you pound a fool in a mortar with a pestle along with crushed grain, Yet his folly will not depart from him (NASB)." Are we or are we not to punish the foolish child with a rod? Haley rationalized this dilemma by saying, " These passages refer to entirely different persons. 'foolishness,' in the first text, is the incipient waywardness which belongs, in a greater or lesser degree, to children, and may be corrected by suitable discipline. The 'fool' in the second text, is the grownup fool, whose folly is past cure (Ibid. p. 278)." Of course, nothing whatever justifies attributing the second text to adults only.

- (3) Exodus 20:17 says, "Thou shalt not covetanything that is thy neighbor's," while 1 Cor. 12:31 says, "Covet earnestly the best gifts." So, are we or are we not to covet? Haley "explains" this dilemma by saying, "covet" in the second text, "implies an earnest desire for that which is legitimately within our reach; in the first, it denotes an unlawful craving for that which properly belongs to another (Ibid. p. 249)." In truth, neither verses says anything about that which is "legitimately" within our reach. Exodus 20 says don't covet, period. It doesn't allow for exceptions. An "unlawful craving" isn't even mentioned. Haley adds to the text in violation of Rev. 22:18 by arbitrarily creating a wholly unjustified distinction. It would be nice from his perspective, and certainly a lot easier to defend, if the Bible did make such a distinction; but alas, it is nowhere to be found.

The Bible's propensity for absolutes is undoubtedly one of its greatest weaknesses. By not acknowledging exceptions, the Bible seriously undermines its credibility. "Black and white" describes far fewer situations than "shades of gray".

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #37 from KEN continues from Issue #14, Page 2 (Part c)

(In the Sept. 1983 commentary BE stated that the bat is a bird according to Lev. 11:13 & 19 and Deut. 14:11 and 18. In the following October issue KEN said he believed "bird" was a generic term in Leviticus and referred to any variety of flying creature. BE's response was that Lev. 11 listed 20 animals as fowls. "So there is no doubt that birds and only birds are being referred to." KEN continues--ed.) ...You insisted that because modern ornithology does not classify a bat as a "bird" or "fowl;" the classification in Lev. 11 is a clearcut error.... As far as I can tell, you based your conclusions on two assumptions. (1) In modern vernacular, a bird is a warm-blooded vertebrate having a body covered with feathers and forelimbs converted entirely to wings. (2) In the Leviticus passages, all the other examples of fowls cited were also birds in the modern sense. Thus, you conclude, a bat is not a bird in the Biblical sense either; the text is wrong. Both your assumptions are untenable. In the first case, authors and translators of the KJV had no conception of modern zoology and phylum classifications. Thus we cannot honestly assume they would use modern classification. Elementary logic will tell you that a set is not defined by a subset, even a majority subset. The fact that most of the "fowl" listed in Lev. 11 were birds in a modern ornithological sense does not imply they all must be. As an example, suppose you prepared a list of arachnids, and the list fell into the hands of someone who was not familiar with the term. This person examines the lists and notices that it contains 10 species of spider and a species of scorpion. May this person correctly assume you made a mistake, merely because most species on the list were web-builders, and one was not? No... The truth is, I simply don't know what the authors/translators of the Pentateuch meant by "fowl." Any semanticists...will tell you that in cases of semantical uncertainty, the honest critic will give the text the benefit of the doubt. In effect, the text is innocent until proven guilty...

Editor's Response to Letter #37 (Part c)

All you have done, KEN, is repeated and refurbished the common apologetic defense that the Bible was not meant to be a scientific textbook, If so, then it should have avoided the subject. You made several noteworthy mistakes. First, whether or not they are operating by the rules of modern zoology is irrelevant. The fact is the Bible used the word "fowl" and listed 20 animals as members of this group. What does the last one listed--a bat--have in common with the other 19? The Bible must have had some meaning for the word "fowl"; otherwise, it wouldn't have used the term. And regardless of the meanings used, the bat could not have been included, unless many non-fowl were included and many birds were excluded. If the Bible defined a fowl as that which has the ability to fly, then millions of insects would have to be included, while the ostrich and kiwi would have to be excluded--highly inaccurate science. If the Bible defined a fowl or bird as that which has two legs, then many primates would have to be included--again, inaccurate science. The point is, regardless of the Bible's definition of fowl, the bat can't be listed with the other 19 in Leviticus 11. The first 19 only have characteristics which distinguish them from all other animals as long as the bat is omitted. The Bible must have had some kind of definition for the word "fowl", and no definition can have any scientific validity if the twenty listed in Lev. 11 are included together. Secondly, your analogy with respect to arachnids is inaccurate for several reasons:(1) A list of fowl, not arachnids, fell into our hands and we are familiar with the term "fowl." (2) Arachnids, are defined as 8-legged creatures, not web-builders; therefore scorpions can be correctly included. Fowl are defined as warm-blooded vertebrates with feathers and without mammary glands; therefore bats can't be included. To answer your question: If arachnids were defined as web-builders, one could assume you made a mistake. But they aren't. You admit that "most" (i.e. 19) of the fowl listed in Lev. 11 are birds in the modern ornithological sense.... Why try to rationalize the twentieth? (3) Your "elementary logic" with respect to subsets is inaccurate in that a set was not defined by a subset. Instead, a set, fowl, was employed to which all subsets had to conform. Although not directly defined by the Bible, the set had to have some kind of definition. And, as shown, there is no definition one could use that would make sense, if bats are included. Leviticus 11 is an example, not of poor science, but of not science. With hair, ears, fangs, and a preference for hanging upside-down, the bat doesn't even have the superficial appearance of a bird.

Letter #37 continues (Part d)

Why am I adamant about this? Because as I said earlier, I am basically on your side. I do not believe the Bible is an accurate historical, scientific or moral guide. I am evangelical about this and would like to convince others, particularly the fundamentalists, who have been the authors of insufferable intellectual and social damage. And I believe that one of the best ways to do this, as you point out in Issue #8 of BE, is to publicize the many errors, cruelties and contradictions in the Bible. But remember whom we are dealing with. The typical fundamentalist has his feet set in concrete. Petty quibbles about the meanings of words like "fowl" or "turtle" will not impress him. Why waste your time? BE would be more effective if it avoided such picayune, equivocal issues--which fundamentalists and apologists simply regard as semantical gymnastics, and shrug off. BE should devote its pages to the more cutting contradictions, the major contradictions of doctrine and fact which fundamentalists cannot casually dismiss. There is no dearth of these, as you know.

Editor's response to Letter #37 (Part d)

The problem, KEN, lies with your phrase "petty quibbles". First, what is a petty quibble? One man's petty quibble is another man's major problem. Second, any investigation agency worth its name collects, stores, and uses every shred of evidence available. Watch lawyers in a courtroom, police on a case, or a forensic chemist in a lab and you'll learn what seeking after minutiae really involves. You can't ignore anything; it's all important. Imagine construction crews leaving out certain bricks in a building's wall because it seemed insignificant to the overall structure! If you want to fell a tree, you chop and chip, blow by blow. One powerful strike isn't enough. Third, who is going to separate the petty from the weighty? Not I. I'd rather present the data and let others decide. And lastly, the phrase "inerrant" means perfect. God's perfect Book can't have imperfections. How can a perfect being create an imperfect volume? Millions of people don't seem to understand the full import of this fact. If it isn't perfect, it isn't God's. And if it isn't God's, then it's man's. And if it's man's, it could easily have been written by people no better than our leaders of today.

Letter #37 concludes (Part e)

One of the first rules in psychology of debate is to court your opponents, to be as reasonable as you possibly can. Give them the benefit of the doubt at each turn, concede every questionable point on every questionable issue; don't split hairs, don't quibble over word meanings. And in spite of this, in the face of every concession, show them they are wrong. If BE used this approach, the effect could be devastating.

Editor's Response to the conclusion of Letter #37 (Part e)

Are you serious, KEN? Following your suggestion would bring devastation to the wrong party. Apologists have spent a great deal of time, money, and effort devising "plausible" answers to every point this publication has made. You don't concede anything out-of-hand. You make your opposition prove its case. I can see you have never been involved in labor negotiations, arms reductions talks, or writing draft resolutions at the United Nations. Participants often "quibble" for hours over one word. Remember the "shape-of-the-table" debate at the Paris Peace Talks on Vietnam.. If you are going to concede every questionable point, you might as well concede.

COMMENTARY

Ignored Teachings (Part One of a Three-Part Series)--For hundreds of years biblicists have been lecturing people on the importance of adhering to the Bible's teachings on ethics, manners, and morality. They quote Jesus and Paul profusely, with a liberal sprinkling of Old Testament moralisms. The problem with their approach lies not only in an oft-noted failure to practice what they preach, but an equally pronounced tendency to ignore what the Bible itself, preaches. Biblicists practice what can only be described as "selective morality". What they like, they expound; what they don't like, they ignore, even though the validity or strength of one is no less than that of the other. That which is palatable and acceptable is supposedly applicable to all; while that which is obnoxious, inconvenient, or self-denying is only applicable to those addressed 2,000 years ago. They enjoy quoting the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, and some of Paul's preachings, for example, but don't pretend to heed other, equally valid, maxims. The following examples show the selectivity of apologetic morality.

First, a true follower of Jesus would have to be extremely poor--as poor as the proverbial churchmouse. The Bible makes this quite clear:

- (a) "...none of you can be my disciple unless he gives up everything he has" (Luke 14:33);
- (b) "If you want to be perfect, go and sell all you have and give the money to the poor and you will have riches in heaven" (Matt. 19:21);
- (c) "Sell your possessions and give alms" (Luke 12:33);
- (d) "But give what is in your cups and plates to the poor, and everything will be clean for you" (Luke 11:41);
- (e) "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt,... But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.... for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also" (Matt. 6:19-21);
- (f) "How hardly shall they that have riches enter to the kingdom of God" (Mark 10:23);
- (g) "Truly, I say to you, it will be hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. Again I tell you, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God" (Matt. 19:23-24);
- (h) A certain ruler told Jesus that he had obeyed all the commandments from his youth up. But, Jesus said, "Yet lackest thou one thing: sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me" (Luke 18:22, Mark 10:21),
- and (i) Paul said, "For his sake I have suffered the loss of all things and count them as refuse, in order that I may gain Christ" (Phil. 3:8 RSV)

Imagine Billy Graham, Oral Roberts, Jerry Falwell, Jimmy Swaggart, Rex Humbard, Robert Schuller, Herbert W. Armstrong and thousands of other wealthy religious leaders heeding such pronouncements! It's much easier, and far less painful, to rationalize away clear-cut statements than surrender great wealth because of Biblical injunctions. Paul said, "And having food and raiment let us be therewith content" (1 Tim. 6:8). The lavish personal wealth of these men and many others bears witness to their avoidance of these teachings, as well as Luke 3:11, which says, "who has two coats, let him share with him who has none; and he who has food, let him do likewise." One can only speculate as to the number of coats they have in their closets. Jesus said, "Give to him who asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away" (Matt. 5:42). Asking any of the previously-mentioned individuals or any Christian denomination for a sizable portion of his or its wealth would be an exercise in futility. How many biblicists attempt to obey the biblical precept which says, "and from him who takes away your coat do not withhold even your shirt. Give to every one who begs from you; and of him who takes away your goods do not ask them again" (Luke 6:29-30 RSV)? They avoid Matt. 5:40, which says, "And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him also have thy cloak." Apologists don't mind quoting the prior verse (Matt. 5:39) about turning the other cheek, because it concerns attitudes and is not concrete; no direct physical denial is involved. Turning one's cheek is far less painful and tangible than turning in dollars. The former is more nebulous and subject to interpretation. Jesus commissioned his twelve disciples to, "provide neither gold nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, not yet staves, for the workman is worthy of his meat" (Matt. 10:9-10). If these were the morally right procedures for the disciples of Christ 2,000 years ago, then they should have some relevance to his disciples of today. But the entourage and wealth accompanying any well-known evangelist on his periodic journeys highlights the inconsistency involved.

Early Christian groups even practiced a form of communal ownership of property. "And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men, as every man had need" (Acts 2:44-45, also note Acts 4:34-37). Yet, except for a few isolated communities, today's biblicists preach the opposite.

In summary, it's not enough to avoid the accumulation of wealth; one must actively seek to eliminate whatever property may come into one's possession. (See also: Acts 20:35, Rom. 12:13, Col. 3:2, Matt. 6:24). In so far as wealth and property are concerned, Christian monks, ascetics, and some factions of the Amish, for example, are far closer to biblical teachings than any of the well-known clergymen or denominations of today. While engaged in dialogue with a minister several years ago, I noted that his Lincoln Continental parked nearby was wholly inconsistent with biblical tenets. After offering the usual apologetic rationalizations (e.g., I live a frugal life and the Bible does not require me to give away what I own), he denounced my motives and left. Neither of his excuses was accurate.

Second, a true follower of Jesus can neither divorce someone, (a) "So they are no longer two but one flesh. What therefore God has joined together, let no man put asunder"(Matt. 19:6, Mark 10:9), nor marry someone who is divorced, (b) "whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery" (Matt. 5:32, 19:9, Luke 16:18). There is an exception to the former, however. If the spouse commits adultery, divorce is permissible: "Whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery" (Matt. 5:32). The Bible also says that anyone who obtains a divorce and marries another is an adulterer: "...whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her" (Mark 10:11, Luke 16:18), which applies to women as well--Mark 10:12. In essence, according to Christ's teachings:

- (1) one can never obtain a divorce, except from an adulterous spouse;
- (2) one can never marry a divorced person, and
- (3) one who obtains a divorce and marries another is committing adultery.

One can only guess at the number of Christians who have ignored these maxims.

Third, current attempts to put prayer into schools run directly counter to biblical teachings. In one of his comments on the manner in which one should pray, Jesus said prayer should be a private affair devoid of public display: "And when you pray, you must not be like the hypocrites; for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and at the street corners, that they may be seen by men. Truly, I say to you they have received their reward. But when you pray, go into your room (or closet-Ed.) and shut the door and pray to your Father who is in secret...." (Matt. 6:5-6 RSV). Biblicists violate this on a regular basis and have no intention of correcting their behavior.

It's interesting to note that Paul's maxim that men should pray with their heads uncovered is generally followed because removing one's hat isn't particularly inconvenient. It is easy to follow. "Any man who prays or prophecies with his head covered dishonors his head,...."(1 Cor. 11:4 RSV). On the other hand, Paul's tenet that women must keep their heads covered with a veil during prayer is quite inconvenient and, for this reason, has either been rationalized away or ignored, although it is no less binding than any other moral law in the New Testament: "...but any woman who prays or prophecies with her head unveiled dishonors her head.... For if a woman will not veil herself, then we should cut off her hair: but if it be disgraceful for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her wear a veil.... Judge for yourself; is it proper for a woman to pray to God with head uncovered?" (1 Cor. 11:5-13 RSV)?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter # 38 from the American Atheist Center of Austin, Texas
(Near the end of Jan., 1984, BE was told by the American Atheist Center that it would be holding a convention in Lexington, Kentucky, in mid-April. We sent a letter to the AAC stating that we would not only like to attend but set up a booth to advertise and distribute BE. The following reply from Ms. O'Hair was received on February 15th--Ed.). Dennis McKinsey. Thank you for your inquiry. American Atheists feel it is reactionary to do battle on the grounds of the religious. The Bible needs to be thrown into the trash. Your continuing jousting with segments thereof gives authentication to that with which you do joust. One does NOT argue with one's nightmares. The exercise is as the French say, inutile. The Convention in Kentucky has no interest in this at all. Therefore, we will not authorize you to "set up a booth" to publicize and distribute copies of your publication, which drags Atheists back to the Bible--for no good reason. If you want to set up a booth, anywhere, you will need to pay your own way. You will not be permitted to use the facilities for which we have paid. We will not distribute your literature, or give it a place on our book stands. There is no personal or other animosity in this position which we take with respect to your BIBLICAL ERRANCY. There are tactics one uses in a battle and we decline to use these tactics. They take away from the positive thrust of Atheism and the programs which we are trying to use to give Atheists a voice in the culture, on their own, with their own weltanshaung--not in a religious framework. We have instituted an extensive educational program to wean Atheists away, as fast as we can, from that which you promote: a return to the Bible. Enclosed is a $6 check for a subscription to your letter, which will be filed in the American Atheist Library and Archives, Inc. here. Advise cost of back issues and if they have been bound. We keep all Atheist publications on file, no matter what the nature.

Editor's Response to Letter #38 which was mailed earlier to the AAC.

Madalyn Murray O'Hair,

We appreciate your prompt answer to our inquiry but are disappointed, indeed, surprised by the tenor of your response. BIBLICAL ERRANCY provides a reasoned, well-researched reply to claims of biblical infallibility and in no way could it be construed as "dragging Atheists back to the bible." This publication has been accused of many things, but no one has ever implied, much less stated, as much. You said the Bible "needs to be thrown in the trash." Unfortunately, something must first show people why this should be done. Merely asserting as much is not sufficient. BE provides an itemized refutation of the Bible's alleged "validity" and covers virtually every significant concept in the Book. Your belief that "continued jousting with segments thereof gives authentication to that with which you do joust" ignores the fact that there is little substance with which BE does not joust. Read all the back issues as well as those to come and you'll find little left worthy of authentication. Why would millions of people come to atheism when they feel they already have the truth? Before someone is going to adopt another philosophy, he must first be shown the falsity of that which he already possesses. You are saying "come to me or leave religion and the Bible" when those addressed have never been shown why their current beliefs are erroneous.

I've been to atheist meetings before and found that many of those attending are not really atheists in the true sense of the term. They aren't as radical as they think they are and have not left the Bible or religion to the degree they think they have. Their conversations reveal subtle indoctrinations from earlier years, and their attitudes toward biblical preaching represent a wide spectrum. I've learned from experience to be wary of any letter to BE that starts with, "I used to be a Bible-believing Christian, but I now reject the Book as nonsensical." Many are much more under the Book's influence than they realize, but support atheism for a wide variety of personal reasons. BE seeks to reach those with doubts, to reach those who feel the anti-religious viewpoint has noteworthy points, but the Bible, despite its faults, is still worthy of some credibility.

Our publications are not antithetical but complementary. BE provides a detailed explanation of why beliefs of the Bible's proponents are erroneous, and your publication, as well as others of a rational perspective, provides a rational alternative. It's analogous to building a modern structure on a city street. Before the new building can be built, the old must be razed. You can't build until something destroys that which occupies the space desired. BE seeks a mutually agreeable relationship with all rational publications and organizations. For instance, we have been advertizing the Society of Evangelical Agnostics and Crusade Publications for several months because they have been kind enough to advertize BE.

To just ignore the Bible or act as if it did not exist, borders on the absurd. The Book and its followers exercise an enormously negative influence on society. I don't like a lot of governments and administrations in the world today, but I still have to deal with their nonsense. How are people going to combat a Book they know little about and are told to avoid at all costs, when its pernicious influence is everywhere? I don't fear the Book in the least, and am not reticent about confronting its supporters whenever possible. Indeed, I seek dialogue and debate. As long as Falwell's minions are given little reason to doubt that God and His word are on their side, the fierce battles over praying in the schools and the teaching of evolution, the legalizing of abortion, the taxing of church property, etc. will continue unabated. The Bible is the base from which all fundamentalist assaults upon social issues are launched.

As in World War II, bombing the opponents' home base, his source of strength and sustenance, is more effective than concentrating on his armies in the field. A BE booth at the Convention in Kentucky would aid both of us.

Letter #39 from ELR of Long Beach, California (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey

....Enclosed find a check for $14.25.... Obviously (by subscribing--ED.) I am not implying that I agree with everything in your publication. On the contrary, I find quite a few things in the issue I received that I would disagree with. From time to time I intend to comment on points I disagree with.... I think you are rendering a unique service; being unique, it should be as perfect as possible (if there were 20 or 30 publications of this kind, improving one of them would not be nearly as important.... On bottom of page 3 in the Dec. 1983 issue you say that the person who wrote to you about devoted Christians "forgot to put Mussolini, Franco, Hitler, Al Capone, George Lincoln Rockwell, KKK leaders, and other great minds on the list." To say the least, your comment is ludicrous and outrageous. Hitler was no Christian by any stretch of the imagination (let alone "a devoted" one).... If Mussolini was a Christian, he successfully kept it a secret.... He was utterly ignorant about religion...disdainful toward the humanizing influence of Christianity, a womanizer whose extramarital affairs.... I don't know too much about George Lincoln Rockwell, but it's hard to believe that he could have ignored Hitler's anti-Christian attitude.... Al Capone was a habitual criminal, an occupation hardly compatible with being a "devoted Christian." As to KKK leaders, they are semi-secret figures, so its hard to see why you assume that Christianity has some kind of meaningful influence on their lives.... So the only one on your list who can be proven to have been a Christian in any meaningful sense is Franco... but he was no monster. Whatever his faults were, he deserves credit for resisting Hitler's entreaties to join Germany in WWII.... It should not be forgotten that Franco appointed a Prime Minister (Suarez) and provided for a successor to himself (King Jaun Carlos) who together led Spain back to democracy after the death of Franco....

Editor's Response to Letter #39 (Part a)

Dear ELR. Are you sure it's my views that are "ludicrous"? Let's see what Hitler, whom you deny is a Christian, said in this regard:

My feeling as a Christian points me to my Lord and Savior as a fighter. It points me to the man who, once lonely with only a few followers, recognized these Jews for what they were, and calling me to fight them, and who, so help me, was greatest not as a sufferer but as a fighter. With boundless love, as a Christian and as a man, I read the passages which relate how the Lord finally gathered His strength and made use of the whip in order to drive the usurers, the vipers, and cheats from the temple. Today 2,000 years later, I recognize with deep emotion Christ's tremendous fight for this world against the Jewish poison. I recognized this most profoundly by the fact that He had to shed his blood on the cross for his fight. As a Christian it is not my duty to permit myself to be cheated, but is my duty to be a champion of truth and of right.... As a Christian I owe something to my own people.... I am a veritable devil and not a Christian if I do not feel compassion and do not wage war, as our Lord did 2,000 years ago, against those who are pillaging and exploiting this poor people (the German people--Ed.).... Two thousand years ago a man was likewise denounced by this particular race which today is denouncing and blaspheming everywhere.... That man was dragged into court and they said then: He is arousing the people! So he also was "agitating." And against whom? Against "God," they cried. Yes indeed he was agitating against the "god" of the Jews, for that "god" is money. (Munich, April 12, 1922; Voelkische Beobachter, April 22, 1922).

The National Government will preserve and defend those basic principles on which our nation was built up. They regard Christianity as the foundation of our national morality and the family as a basis of national life. (Hitler to the German People: Feb. 1 1933).

I know that here and there the objection has been raised: Yes, but you have deserted Christianity. No, it is not we that have deserted Christianity, it is those who came before us who deserted Christianity.... National Socialism neither opposes the Church nor is it anti-religious, but on the contrary it stands on the ground of real Christianity. And we have no other desire than to be true to that position.... These are not anti-Christian, these are Christian principles. (Speech at Koblenz, Aug. 26, 1934).

Hitler was often asked why Nazis use the swastika and replied,

And when it is said to me as many have: How can you carry your heathenish symbol in the van of this struggle when the Christian Cross alone is called to lead it? To this I say: This symbol is not directed against the Christian Cross. On the contrary, it is the political manifestation of what the Christian Cross intends or must intend.... One should from the very beginnings preserve this Cross from any political contact until the structure of these political parties again becomes worthy of association with this symbol....(Munich, Oct. 25, 1930, Voelkische Beobachter, Oct. 28, 1930).

You stated Mussolini kept his Christian beliefs secret, was utterly ignorant about religion, and disdainful toward Christianity. Yet, at Ouchy he told the press:

My spirit is deeply religious. Religion is a formidable force which must be respected and defended. I am, therefore, against anti-clerical and atheistic democracy, which represents an old and useless toy. I maintain that Catholicism is a great spiritual power.... (Mussolini As Revealed in his Political Speeches, by Quaranta, p.XII). Moreover, how does being a womanizer prevent one from being a Christian? Beliefs, not deeds, make one a Christian.

As far as the Klan is concerned, their literature extols the Bible and Christ incessantly. Secrecy would no more prevent them from being Christians than it would exclude cardinals from being Christians because they choose the pope in secret.

You admit Franco was a Christian but deny he was a monster. You might want to tell that to the thousands of POW's who died before his firing squads and the thousands of political opponents and prisoners who resisted his dictatorship for nearly 40 years. Democracy returned to Spain despite Franco, not because of him. Those most conservative in matters of religion throughout the world are always the most conservative in matters of politics. And it would be difficult to find people more right-wing, more conservative, than Hitler, Mussolini, Franco and the Klan.

In any event, BE is not a political journal, and atrocious behavior does not prevent one from being a Christian. If bad behavior excluded people from being Christians, then no one would qualify. According to Paul we are all hopelessly corrupt: "For I know that in me dwelleth no good thing" (Rom. 7:18).

Letter #40 from DFS of Sandstone, Minnesota

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

I would like to thank you for all the back issues you sent me and for the current issue. BIBLICAL ERRANCY is one of the most interesting and informative publications I have ever read. I commend you for your excellent research and writing you have done. I am quite pleased with the modest investment I have made in your publication. Whatever it may lack in "slickness" it more than makes up in solid content....

Letter #41 from DFS of Sandstone, Minnesota

...a few days ago I got involved in a discussion with a few true-believers of the born again species, what I call Christfans. Your publication came in very handy.

Unfortunately, it seems that facts have no effect on them, not even from the Bible. The history of Christianity, which I am well researched in, they didn't believe either. They kept falling back on the same argument--which went something like this--The Bible has no contradictions, all secular material is wrong because its writers do not understand the Bible. You must believe in Jesus, and then the Holy Ghost will enter you and reveal all to you.... They said that one day the Holy Ghost would enter me and I'd understand and accept. How do you refute such nonsense? Arguing from the Bible does no good. I don't suppose you are out to convert true-believers, but in my position I need to come up with better arguments....

Dear DFS. You have asked an important question. How do you reach fundamentalists, apologists, and biblicists? I've also experienced this impasse on numerous occasions. After many encounters I've decided to direct my energies, not toward fundamentalists and evangelicals alone, but toward any group of people who will listen. You must thrust your beliefs forward via the media and any other viable mechanism. People won't come to you; you must go to them. Apologists will, then, rise out of the audience to defend the Bible. That's one way to obtain dialogue and expose the Bible. I realized as much while appearing on the radio. When biblicists realize people are hearing about the weaknesses within the Bible, they no longer have the option of remaining silent or walking off. Some will feel compelled to respond.

In summary, one must first learn the Bible's fallacies and then speak to those who will listen. Combine with, or try to create, groups of like-minded individuals and seek to force your views into the limelight. Find a platform, get an audience, step before heterogeneous groups and you'll have an opportunity to debate, expose, and convert. Try to use group pressure rather than working alone. It's not easy to obtain return engagements on the radio, for example, when your host is sympathetic with the opposition. Group pressure and organization is the best answer. Critics must demand a hearing and speak out when denied a voice. A determined, well-researched, aggressive program is sorely needed. Relying upon anti-religious humor, punctuated with descriptions of nonsensical acts and beliefs of religious devotees, and concluding with a well-written lecture on the importance of tolerance and separating church from state is not sufficient.

Letter #42 from Novato, California

Dear Dennis. I am enclosing copies of two recent letters of mine which were printed in our local paper. I hope they meet with your approval, as they are based on your work.... I just finished phoning radio station KGO in San Francisco, which has a talk show host, Rev. Tom Hunter, paid by the station to talk about religion.... I was going to mention how the Bible also supported forced labor, but was cut short before I had a chance. It would certainly be great if KGO would give equal time to someone with your knowledge to counter what Rev. Hunter has to say....

Editor's Response to Letter #42

Dear FM. You are to be commended. You tried to go within the Bible and challenge an apologist on his own ground. You didn't abandon the airways to the opposition. My presence is not really needed. You are on the scene and can do a lot yourself. Gather your data, marshal your arguments, read BE, Joseph Wheless, John Remsburg, Thomas Paine, Robert Ingersoll and the Bible and demand equal time. If you feel uncomfortable in this role, then find someone you can get support, or devise an alternative. Biblicists must be challenged when they proselytize, and be denied a privileged sanctuary to which they can retreat with impunity. As things stand, the Bible is virtually unopposed throughout most of the country. Many people don't even know there is another side. You'd be surprised at the number of people who defend the Bible with vehemence but are amazingly lacking in knowledge of its contents, and this includes some ministers. "The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know." (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2 p. 348). A lot of time and effort is needed, because a lot is at stake. Biblicists have been working relentlessly for decades.

COMMENTARY

Ignored Teachings (Part Two of a Three Part Series)--Last Month's Commentary noted several biblical teachings that are often ignored by Bible proponents. Many others also exist and can be divided into those which liberals ignore, those which conservatives ignore and those which both avoid. Although that which follows is, like the titles liberal and conservative, generally broad and gray on the edges, the underlying principles are valid.

The first category involves those tenets which many liberals ignore. One forbids men to have long hair ("Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?"--1 Cor. 11:14). Long-haired individuals are usually of a more liberal persuasion, although exceptions exist. One can't but wonder at the pictures and statues depicting Jesus as long-haired. Another tenet clearly prohibits women from being ministers or otherwise speaking in church ("Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak"--1 Cor. 14:34). It's difficult to see how Paul could support the current movement to ordain women. And a third tenet prohibits men and women from wearing each other's clothing ("The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God"--Deut. 22:5). Until recent years pants were generally viewed in this country as a man's garment. One can debate what is long hair or man's clothing, but every group of Christians has had a definition, and liberals have nearly always been the first to deviate.

A second category involves those maxims which conservatives and fundamentalists are often the first to shun. Rightists are usually stronger advocates of military involvement and capital punishment than liberals and, thus, the first to ignore 1 Cor. 3:16-17, which says, "Do you not know that you are God's temple and that God's spirit dwells in you? If any one destroys God's temple, God will destroy him." Conservatives also practice repetitious and monotonous praying in violation of Matt. 6:7, which says, "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking."

A final category encompasses those instructions which are ignored by liberals and conservatives alike: (a) Christians are not supposed to take their disputes before non-Christian courts or judges ("If any of you has a dispute with another, dare he take it before the ungodly for judgement instead of before the saints?"--1 Cor. 6:1 NIV); (b) Christian women are supposed to dress discreetly ("...that women should adorn themselves modestly and sensibly in seemly apparel, not with braided hair or gold or pearls or costly attire"--1 Tim. 2:9 RSV; and "Let not yours be the outward adorning of braiding of hair, decoration of gold, and wearing of fine clothing"--1 Peter 3:3).

Violations of these rules are too numerous to mention. Within the final category lie several teachings which are not routinely violated by all concerned but would be difficult to follow in any event.

- (a) Biblicists are not to judge others ("Judge not, that ye be not judged"--Matt. 7:1 and "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged, condemn not and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven"--Luke 6:37), despite the fact that judges, juries, voters, employers, teachers, etc. are constantly judging others.
- (b) Believers are supposed to hate their parents when they follow Jesus ("If any man come to me, and not hate his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sister, yet, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple"-- Luke 14:26).
- (c) They are not to oppose evil ("But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also"-- Matt. 5:39). If this were followed one might just as well abolish law enforcement.
- (d) Believers are not to use violence ("Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword"--Matt. 26:52). The degree to which Christians have ignored this maxim would fill volumes.
- (e) Biblicists are not allowed to call anyone "father" ("And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven"--Matt. 23:9). Not only is this rule ignored, but Catholicism uses "father" as a specific title.
- (f) Christians are not supposed to plan or prepare. God will provide ("Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or that ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on.... Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?"--Matt. 6:25-34 and Luke 12:22-31 inclusive).
- (g) Lastly, Jesus, who clearly is of greater importance than Paul, said the Old Law was to remain in force until heaven and earth passed away and all is accomplished ("For truly, I say to you, till heaven and earth pass away, not an iota, not a dot, will pass the law until all is accomplished. Whoever then relaxes one of the least of these commandments and teaches men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but he who does them and teaches them shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven"--Matt. 5:18-19 RSV). Heaven and earth still exist and many prophecies are not yet fulfilled. Consequently, biblicists should still be following the Old Law. More will be said in next month's final comments on Ignored Teachings.

Testing the Bible--One of great weaknesses of the Bible lies in the fact that it contains tangible mechanisms by which to refute its truthfulness. Within its pages are verses which can be used to test the book's validity. They can be generally grouped under two broad headings--those involving tremendous powers given to believers and those involving powers attendant to prayer and requests. The most prominent verses within the first category are Mark 16:17-18, which says, "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them: they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Many true believers have handled deadly snakes and drunk deadly poisons only to find the Bible is both erroneous and dangerous. Courts in Illinois, Tennessee, and elsewhere have repeatedly stopped practices of this nature because of the threat to life. Ask believers to drink poison or handle deadly snakes and one will quickly realize the extent to which even they do not take the book seriously. Mark 16:17-18 clearly states what they can do if they believe. Put them to the test, however, and you will witness a lot of rationalizing.

Other verses within the first category promise unbelievable powers to those with faith: "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible to you"--Matt. 17:20 and "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you"--Luke 17:6. Also note Matt. 21:21. Yet, despite promises of tremendous strength, those with the strongest faith are often the weakest, the most helpless individuals in society. They often resort to faith because all else has failed.

The second category involves verses which give unlimited powers to those who pray and ask God for assistance. Among these are comments as:

- (a) "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened"--Matt. 7:7-8, Luke 11:9-10;
- (b) "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you"--John 16:23;
- (c) "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive"Matt. 21:22.

Additional verses are: John 14:12-14, John 3:22, Mark 11:23-24, and James 5:15. In order to counteract the patent inaccuracy of these premises, apologists seek modification through James 4:3 and 1 John 5:14. The former says, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask remiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." In other words, the reason the prayers of the sick, the old, the infirm, the afflicted, etc. have not been answered is because they were based on lust, greed and other selfish motives. It's hard to believe even hardened apologists really believe this. On the other hand, 1 John 5:14 ("...if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us") represents a more subtle ploy. Prayers are not answered because they do not comply with God's will. The problems with this explanation are:

- (a) the earlier verses said nothing about God's will or the need to fulfill His desires, and
- (b) judging from many prayers which people feel were answered, one can't help but question God's morality. Praying, for example, that one's relative will die in order to inherit his wealth and having your wish materialize, does not speak well for God.

REVIEWS

Apologist Gleason Archer alleges that the previously-mentioned verses in opposition to war and capital punishment--1 Cor. 3:16-17--and opposed to violence--Matt. 26:52--"...pertain to the personal conduct of the Christian...But they have very little bearing on the duty of the state to preserve law and order and to protect the rights of all its citizens." (Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties, p. 341). A number of problems are associated with this explanation. Where do those verses say or even imply that they do not pertain to the state? Secondly, what is the state but a composition of individuals? Individuals compose the military and law enforcement. Each soldier does his own killing or assists others. Someone has to pull the switch on the convict. Nowhere do these verses say they are exonerated because they acted for the government. Moreover, even if Archer's distinction were valid, separating personal conduct from that which arose out of service to the state would be arbitrary. What is a government? If, for example, a military clique seized control and ordered A to take B's life, could A ignore 1 Cor. 3:16-17 and Matt. 26:25? On page 341 Archer says, "If Matthew 5:39 (Don't oppose evil) applied to the state and to human government, then the principle of "Resist not evil" would mean the abolition of all law enforcement.... All society would immediately fall prey to the lawless and criminal elements in society, and the result would be anarchy. Nothing could have been further from Christ's mind...." How Archer knows the mind of Christ is never explained. But even more importantly, apologists should spend more time noting what a verse actually says, and less time devising an interpretation that fits what they feel it should say. Matt. 5:39 says, "resist not evil, but turn the other cheek." Where do the words reveal an intent other than that stated? Because verses aren't applicable to today's society does not mean they weren't relevant when made.

Apologist Carl Johnson also attempted to alter some previously-mentioned biblical commands that are regularly ignored by Christians. He reconciled the prohibition on judging others (Matt. 7:1) by saying, "the judging that is forbidden by Jesus is unlawful judging of others, which judges presumptuously, hypocritically, hastily, unjustly, unfairly, and unmercifully. We are not to pass judgment on the motives of others" (So the Bible Is Full of Contradictions, p. 62). In truth, the verse says nothing about "unlawful" judging or judging hastily, unjustly, unfairly, and unmercifully. By what rationale Johnson feels justified in adding these qualifiers, one can only surmise. The "motives of others" aren't even implied. And yet, apologists such as Johnson accuse critics of interpreting as they see fit. Johnson's explanation for Luke 14:26 (Hate thy father and mother, and wife and children) is that,

The word 'hate' is sometimes used in the Bible to mean to love less. In the Old Testament it was said of Jacob, 'he loved also Rachel more than Leah, and served with him (Laban--Ed.) yet seven other years (Gen. 29:30.' The next verse says, 'Leah was hated' which meant that Leah was loved less than Rachel. Christ certainly was not telling us to hate our families in the sense of detesting and loathing them (Ibid.p. 77).

The weakness in Johnson's analysis lies in the fact that when Gen. 29:30 says, "he loved also Rachel more than Leah," it does not necessarily mean he loved Leah at all. Nowhere does this verse say that he had any love whatever for Leah. Love less could easily mean no love whatever, in other words, hate. If I say I love Tom more than Ed, why must that I have some love for Ed? Even more importantly, if Leah was hated by Jacob, then how could he have had any degree of love for her? If he loved her at all, then he didn't really hate her. Johnson wants to have it both ways.

Apologists M.R. DeHaan's explanation for the prohibition in Matt. 23:9 (Call no man your father) is quite simple and direct. "In regard to Matt 23:9, the reference here is definitely to religious life, and I do not believe that applies to family life. To call anyone else father in the spiritual sense is to deny the spiritual Fatherhood of God. For this reason the Catholic Church is in error" (508 Answers to Bible Questions, p. 115). Where does the verse restrict itself to religious affairs? "I do not believe that it applies to family life" is no proof whatever. "I believe" is merely an opinion. One could just as easily say, "I believe it only applies to family life."

Letter #39 from ELF in Last Month's Issue #16 Continues (Part b)

Another rather important criticism I have to offer: you seem to be working with English translations of the Bible, without even trying to ascertain whether they are correct.... Your comments on "Thou shalt not kill" are a classic example. How can you make such a rash statement as "the verse said nothing about murder. It said, Thou shalt not kill"?...a thorough analysis of the known meanings of the word shows that the Hebrew verb used in "Thou shalt not kill" is a verb that would usually be best translated with "to murder," with secondary meaning "to massacre." On the other hand, the verb that was not used is the nearest Hebrew equivalent of "to kill." Of course, the authority of the KJV on scholarly issues like this is practically nil, and RSV frequently shows an extreme reluctance to depart from the KJV. Modern Bible translations discard the KJV reading of the verse not because doing so is expedient, but because not doing so would be supporting tradition against scholarship.

Editor's Response to Letter #39 (Part b)

Dear ELF.

Your disagreement is with Hebraic scholars who translated the KJV, the RSV, the Catholic New American Bible, the Jerusalem Bible, the Geneva Bible, and the Douay Version. They chose "kill" rather than "murder" and obviously did not agree with those who made your argument that "the Hebrew verb used in 'Thou shalt not kill' is a verb that would usually be best translated with 'to murder'." Your comment that "the RSV frequently shows an extreme reluctance to depart from the KJV" is heatedly denied by many fundamentalists. With a degree of truth, they have written extensively on the frequent willingness of RSV translators to depart from the KJV. Indeed, one would be hard-pressed to find a prominent translation more at odds with the KJV. To repeat what I said earlier, the use of "murder" rather than "kill" in newer versions such as the NASB and the NIV is based more on expediency than research. Translations of the Bible are not exempt from political considerations and current social conditions.

Letter #39 Continues (Part c)

Incidentally, if "kill" were the correct reading, your argument would still be a "non sequitur". Long before the times of Jesus, principles existed to resolve real or apparent conflicts of laws. One of these principles is "the more specific law overrides (i.e. provides an exception to) the more general." In this light, it becomes clear that war and the death penalty would be explicitly authorized exceptions to the rule "Thou shalt not kill." At risk of belaboring the obvious, I have to point out that Judeo-Christian tradition...was unanimous in interpreting this commandment in the same sense I explained above.

Editor's Response to Letter #39 (Part c)

You have gone outside the Bible for man-made rules to modify that which is contained within "God's Word." This is the kind of act fundamentalists attribute to liberals and modernists. Where does the Bible affirm the principle of modification you allege? Where does it state some of its specific laws override some which are more general? The Bible is renowned for dealing in absolutes. Secondly, what verses specifically state that war and the death penalty are to be viewed as valid exceptions to the commandment against killing? One might just as well say murder is also an exception because Moses killed an Egyptian and was later God's choice for leadership. Thirdly, you say that war and the death penalty are valid exceptions. Then, am I to assume under your hypothesis that unintentional killing and killings in self-defense are not valid exceptions? Why do you restrict it to just two? And lastly, how can you propound Judeo-Christian unanimity when so many scholars prefer "kill" to "murder"? Surely you aren't implying they don't know one from the other. Christian pacifists, Quakers, and other groups don't agree with your interpretation of Ex. 20:13, and certainly are not conducive to unanimity.

Letter #39 Continues (Part d)

I am very unhappy with your constantly calling the Bible a "book". The name "Bible" comes from the Greek "Biblia," which means "books" (in plural). Calling it a "book" is an invention of the biblicists who believe in the common divine authorship of all of these books.... I see no reason why people like you and I, who don't believe in the common divine ownership of the books, should follow the biblicists' terminology.

Editor's Response to Letter #39 (Part d)

Is this really significant, ELF? Most people know the Bible is a collection of books written over a 1,500 year period. What name do you prefer? What would you have me call the Bible? "The Books"? What should we call an anthology? I think you are reaching.

Letter #39 Concludes (Part e)

- (a) You say "if you are going to teach morality via the Bible, then a substantial portion of the entire book will have to be ignored or soft-pedalled." True, but not very meaningful. Whenever anybody teaches anything, some parts are emphasized, some are not.

- (b) You refer to the Bible's "denunciation of all opposition to oppressive rule". From this I imagine you must be working with a Protestant Bible. The two books of the Maccabees, found in the Catholic Bible, are certainly an epic of a freedom fight against oppressive power.
- (c) You ask, "Why adopt the Bible instead of the Koran, for instance".... I am afraid the question is rather meaningless. Well over one billion people have adopted the Bible as their guide, however much the degree of their loyalty to the Bible may vary.... The Bible is well established as a common source of beliefs, so we have to consider whether the enormous effort needed to change this fact appears warranted.
- (d) You ask, "do you really need a book to tell right from wrong?" You bet we do! Beginning with Plato and Aristotle, volumes have been written on ethics.... I have a Ph.D. with specialization in ethics....

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #39 (Part e)

- (a) When a "substantial portion" of an allegedly perfect book, indeed, "God's book," has to be ignored or soft-pedalled, my friend, that's meaningful. We aren't dealing with just another compilation. We are working with what millions believe is inspiration.
- (b) Yes, I'm working mostly with protestant versions of the Bible because those who believe in inerrancy and attempt to convince others of its validity are usually protestants. I'm aware of the Maccabean Revolt, but it's an isolated exception in a relatively secondary writings.
- (c) You are partial to the word "meaningless", ELF, which appropriately describes your answer to my query. Instead of answering my question by explaining why the Bible should be adopted instead of the Koran, you stated a billion people have adopted it and asked why we should go through the effort needed to change the situation. That's analogous to lynch-mob mentality. If the majority is for it, how can it be wrong?
- (d) Primitive peoples such as the American Indians have existed throughout the world for thousands of years without books on ethics and yet corrupt behavior--lying, stealing, cheating, raping, murdering, etc.--is all but unknown in their societies. The Indians' comment about invaders speaking with forked tongues was not without merit.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #43 from DB of Ontario, California

Dear Dennis.

BIBLICAL ERRANCY has been very helpful to me. I just subscribed last month, bought your back issues, and devoured them all. I find I don't tire of re-reading them either, especially when I need ammunition. I have passed your address on to many interested people.

Two observations. First, you mentioned that, never having been a Christian could be an advantage to your perspective. Perhaps you are right. Yet I feel that the fact that I was a good Christian for many years gives me a certain insight into how the religious mind works. I am no longer a Christian. My conversion from faith was painful and slow, and I think I have learned some things about why religion is so powerful. Religious faith is an extremely powerful thing: It can dominate one's whole world view, one's total frame of mind, and one's ability to reason correctly. I was raised in a good Christian home. I had a positive and fulfilling Christian life. I felt fortunate to have been born into the truth. In fact, I decided it was worth a life commitment. I went to bible college, majored in Religion/Philosophy, became ordained to the ministry, spent two years in missionary work, a few more years in full-time evangelism, and went on to write Christian music which has been published by various Christian companies and is still reaching around the world. I used to be very proud of my work. I didn't feel oppressed or restricted. I felt a total freedom of life. I prayed daily, saw answers to prayer, saw people healed (once by my own pronouncement), was responsible for the conversion of literally hundreds of people to Jesus Christ, and motivated many young persons to consider full time Christian service. There is a large number of Christian workers who consider me largely instrumental in their encouragement to become ministers. I liked my Christian life. It had purpose, fun, travel, certain prestige, and most of all, the knowledge of being in the center of God's will, absolute truth.

But those days are gone. I have changed my mind. I can't tell the whole story here, but I can say that it was a difficult transformation. My whole frame of reality had to be restructured. The whole fabric of existence seemed to tear to shreds. Yet it was a very positive experience, motivated by reason and nothing else. I often grieve for my former life, for the comforts and reassurance of my prior beliefs. Most of my Christian friends and relatives (which are many) can't seem to grasp what has happened to me. They miss the point. They try to point their finger at some underlying reason why I should "stray". They suggest pride, disappointment, guilt, bitterness, attacks by Satan, and various other inventions. They never want to face the rational issues I raise, but instead want to find a way out through some "hidden" motivation on my part. I can't possibly be correct, they assume; so there must be some little sin hiding somewhere that, if we could find it, should be excised. But I understand them! I used to do the same thing! No amount of reasoning would have convinced me of the fallacy of Christianity, at the same time. Some people try to say I was never really a Christian or I would not have given up. If I had "really known God" personally, then it would be impossible to reject him. But I believe I did know him. And my life manifested the fruits of Christianity for 17 years. I wasn't the greatest Christian who ever lived, but I was no slouch. The Bible says by their fruits you shall know them. If I wasn't a Christian, then no one is.

One of the hardest things now is not to be taken seriously. Before, I was highly respected--now I am pitied. You would think that my experience would be central to the issues, yet I am not even put on trial--I am put on prayer lists. Well, not totally. There are a few Christian out there who are not afraid to face issues, but they are rare individuals. But my point is that I have put Christianity and Bible to the test, and they didn't hold up. Not without the props of blind faith.... I guess what I am trying to say that there is hope. If it happened to me, it can happen to others. It was hard, but I managed to reason my way up and out of a very strong faith, all the while resisting. If

I had been presented with your publication three years ago, I probably would not have read more than a couple of sentences before burning it. Now I keep them in a special file.

June, 1984

COMMENTARY

Ignored Teachings (Part Three of a Three Part Series)--One of the clearest expressions of selective morality by biblicists is shown in their approach to the Old Testament. They leap in and out of the Old Law like a porpoise in a ship's wake. If they like it, they quote it; if they don't, they won't. Among the scores of verses they enjoy and employ are those which teach the following:

- (a) Contact with mediums or wizards is forbidden ("Do not turn to mediums or wizards; do not seek them out to be defiled by them. I am the Lord your God"--Lev. 19:31 RSV, see also: Lev. 20:6, Deut. 18:10-12);
- (b) Infanticide is prohibited ("...for every abomination to the Lord, which he hateth, have they done unto their gods; for even their sons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods"--Deut. 12:31, see also: Lev. 18:21);
- (c) Neither sex should wear the other's clothing ("The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God"--Deut. 22:5);
- (d) People are not to worship celestial bodies ("And beware lest you lift up your eyes to heaven, and when you see the sun and the moon and the stars, all the host of heaven, you be drawn away and worship them and serve them...."--Deut. 4:19 RSV);
- (e) People should give one-tenth of their income to the Lord, which biblicists equate with church ("And all the tithes of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's...And concerning the tithes of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord"--Lev. 27:30-32);
- (f) Homosexuality is corrupt ("Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with woman: it is abomination"--Lev. 18:22, see also Lev. 20:13 and Gen. 19:5);
- (g) Tattoos are anathema ("You shall not make any cuttings in your flesh on account of the dead or tattoo any marks upon you. I am the Lord"--Lev. 19:28);
- (h) Killers must be executed ("Who sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man"--Gen. 9:6, see also Num. 35:30-33, Ex. 21:12).

Biblicists also quote other parts of the Old Law, such as the Ten Commandments and scores of teachings outside the Pentateuch. They employ verses at will and even go so far as to twist some into saying that which is desired. For example, fundamentalists and evangelicals vigorously oppose abortion, but have been hard-pressed to find a biblical statement to corroborate their position. In their determination they have been forced to rely upon an exceedingly weak section stating that if two men are fighting and one injures a pregnant woman in the process, he shall repay her according to the degree of injury inflicted on her, not the fetus. "When men strive together, and hurt a woman with child, so that there is a miscarriage, and yet no harm follows, the one who hurt her shall be fined, according as the woman's husband shall lay upon; and he shall pay as the judges determine. If any harm follows, then you shall give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth...."--Ex. 21:22-24

But despite all the above, the crucial question remains lingering in the background. What about the O.T. laws that are conveniently ignored, but of equal weight? Biblicists act as if many did not exist. The following examples are typical:

- (a) Money cannot be lent at interest to your brother, only to foreigners (Deut. 23:19-20);
- (b) Eating pork is forbidden (Deut. 14:8);
- (c) A man must marry and have relations with his dead brother's wife (Deut. 25:5-6);
- (d) A seducer must marry an unengaged virgin whom he seduces (Ex. 22:16-17);
- (e) A raped, unengaged virgin must marry her rapist and they can never divorce (Deut. 22:28-29);
- (f) Trials for adultery are to be by ordeal (Num. 5:28-29);
- (g) Eating rare meat with blood is forbidden (Lev. 19:26);
- (h) Beards can't be rounded (Lev. 19:27);
- (i) A newly married man can't go to war or be charged with business for one year (Deut. 24:5);
- (j) A guilty man can be beaten with as many as forty blows (Deut. 25:1-3);
- (k) A garment composed of wool and linen can't be worn (Deut. 22:11);
- (l) Punishment shall be administered on the basis of an eye for an eye (Deut. 19:21, Ex. 21:24);
- (m) One's nation can lend to other nations but not borrow from them (Deut. 15:6);
- (n) Bastards can't enter the Lord's congregation (Deut. 23:2);
- (o) First-born children should sometimes be sacrificed to the Lord (Ex. 22:29); and
- (p) Debtor brothers shall be released from their obligation every seven years (Deut. 15:1-3).

All of these rules are part of the Old Covenant and of equal import. Why quote the Ten Commandments and rules against infanticide, for example, while ignoring other tenets? A believer's obligations to one is no less than his obligation to all. In fact, if under the New Covenant Christians have stepped into the shoes of the Israelites and become, in effect, the new Chosen People, then they should inherit all the privileges and duties of that office. They seem to want the former but not the latter. As was stated at the end of last month's Commentary on Ignored Teachings, Jesus said the Old Law would stand until heaven and earth passed away. Not one jot or tittle was to be changed until all was fulfilled (Matt. 5:18-19 RSV). Paul disagreed, but, then, this is not the only topic upon which they clashed.

Apologists have also tended to ignore or minimize the Old Law's support for slavery and the subordination of women (See: Aug. 1983 Commentary) and failed to follow the Sabbath. Except for some sabbatarian groups such as the Seventh-Day Adventists, biblicists don't go to church on the correct day. Saturday, not Sunday is the Sabbath. There is no substantive biblical support for calling Sunday--the first day of the week--the Sabbath. As the text says, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work...." (Ex. 20:8-10, Deut. 5:12-14). Moreover, the prohibition against labor on the Sabbath is regularly violated since work occurs on every day of the week. With respect to labor, it wouldn't matter what day was the Sabbath. Apologist Gleason Archer stated in The Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties (p. 116-121) that several facts seem to teach that Sunday replaced Saturday as the Sabbath. He sought to justify the change by alleging:

- (a) Jesus rose on Sunday;
- (b) Jesus' first appearance to his disciples after the Resurrection was on Sunday;
- (c) The outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Church first occurred on a Sunday Pentecost;
- (d) Paul told the Corinthian church to put aside money and save on the first day of the week so that no collection would be needed when he arrived (1 Cor. 16:20);
- (e) Paul spoke to a group of Christians until midnight on a Sunday (Acts 20:5-12); and
- (f) The Lord's Day in Rev. 1:10 ("I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day and I heard behind me a loud voice like the sound of a trumpet") referred to Sunday.

Problems accompany each explanation.

- (a) Jesus rose on Sunday, but died on a Friday. His death was certainly as important as his Resurrection, if not more so. So why wasn't the Sabbath transferred to Friday?;
- (b) and (c) Why would the fact that Jesus first appeared to his disciples on Sunday or the Holy Spirit first fell on the church on Sunday be of such significance as to overrule God's commandment that the seventh day was to be the Sabbath? They are rather weak reeds to lean on, especially when Archer admits that, "After Pentecost it seems that the Christian community continued to celebrate the seventh-day Sabbath as before, by gathering with other Jews (both converted and unconverted) for the reading of the Torah, for preaching, and for prayer" (Ibid. p. 117). He immediately tried to regain his loss by stating, "But there is no demonstrable reference to Christians ever gathering on the Sunday Sabbath to celebrate the Lord's Supper or to hold a distinctively Christian assembly" (Ibid. p. 117). But, then, where is the evidence that they regularly gathered on Sunday to celebrate the Lord's Supper or hold distinctively Christian assemblies?;

- (d) and (e) 1 Cor. 16:2 and Acts 20:5-12, or delivering a sermon on Sunday evening hardly warrant changing the Sabbath; and
- (f) Archer's final contention that the Lord's Day in Rev. 1:10 is Sunday relies upon extra-biblical sources and is wholly unconvincing.

When all is said and done, the basic question remains. Where does the Bible specifically and clearly change the Sabbath to Sunday?

And finally, if biblicists are going to quote Old Law with respect to executing murderers, then why don't they quote verses which prescribe the death penalty for a wide variety of acts other than murder? All of the following warrant execution:

- (a) striking your father or mother (Ex.21:15);
- (b) kidnapping (Ex. 21:6 RSV);
- (c) cursing your father or mother (Ex. 21:17 RSV, Lev. 20:9);
- (d) touching a mountain (Ex. 19:12 RSV);
- (e) allowing your ox to gore someone (Ex. 21:29);
- (f) lying with a beast (Ex. 22:19) RSV, Lev. 20:15-16);
- (g) sacrificing to other gods (Ex. 22:20 RSV);
- (h) failing to observe the Sabbath (Ex. 31:14-15);
- (i) drinking strong drinks while in the tabernacle (Lev. 10:9);
- (j) committing adultery (Lev. 20:10 RSV, Deut. 22:22);
- (k) lying with your father's wife (Lev. 20:11 RSV);
- (l) lying with your daughter-in-law (Lev. 20:12 RSV);
- (m) committing homosexual acts (Lev. 20:13 RSV);
- (n) being a medium or a wizard (Lev. 20:27 RSV);
- (o) being a witch (Ex. 22:18);
- (p) being a priest's daughter and becoming a whore (Lev. 21:9 RSV);
- (q) Blaspheming the name of the Lord (Lev. 24:16);
- cursing (Lev. 24:14 RSV);
- (s) coming near the priesthood (Num. 3:10);
- (t) being a stranger who comes near the congregation's tabernacle (Num. 3:38);
- (u) gathering sticks on the Sabbath (Num. 15:32-35);
- (v) serving or worshipping other gods (Deut. 17:2-5 RSV);
- (w) showing contempt for the Lord's priest or judge (Deut. 17:12 NIV);
- (x) failing to obey one's parents (Deut. 21:18-21);
- (y) not being a virgin on your wedding day (Deut. 22:20-21 NIV);
- (z) being a betrothed virgin who did not cry out when seduced (Deut. 22:23-24);
- (aa) having relations with your wife and her mother (Lev. 20:14);
- (bb) telling people to seek other gods (Deut. 13:2,5); and
- (cc) being a false prophet (Deut. 18:20).

And these are God's rules. Imagine living in that era!

In summary, biblicists teach, preach, and attempt to reach others with many OT moralisms, but are not adverse to selectively using that which suits their interests. If they like an OT verse, they expound it; if they don't, they say that's from the Old Law and we aren't under the Old Law anymore. But aren't the Ten Commandments part of the Old Law? Yes, they say, but we are obligated to follow them because they are reported in the NT (Matt. 19:16-18, Mark 10:17-19, and Luke 18:18-22). People who assert as much should note that Jesus omitted half of the Ten Commandments. But even if they had been present, we would still be under all the Old Law, including the Decalogue, according to Christ ("And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of law to fail"--Luke 16:17, see also Matt. 5:18-19). If "sin is transgression of the law", as 1 John 3:4 says, then we should be following all of the Old Law.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #44 from ELF of Long Beach, California (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

Apparently our strong disagreements have deep roots. You constantly quote Robert Ingersoll, whom on page 2 of Issue #2 you call "one of the greatest Biblical commentators in American history".... I personally try to follow the principle that the name of R.I. should not even be mentioned among decent people, especially thinking people (I make an exception only because you brought up his name). Since we are on page 2 of issue#2, let's quote him: "No man in the OT stands by the dead and says, 'We shall meet again'." Of course, this is utter nonsense. In 2 Sam. 12:23 David says of his dead son "I shall go to him" (clearly, he did not mean the same grave, since this was not the custom, and he did not know anyway where he would be buried). In Gen. 37:35, Jacob says of Joseph, whom he believed to be dead, "I will go down to my son into Sheol mourning." Of course the word "Sheol" occurs in the O.T. 65 times: notwithstanding some untenable dissenting opinions, Sheol meant a place where the dead were alive.... As for R.I.'s ludicrous claim that the Old Testament "does not say a word about another world", I wish to point out the clear testimony to the contrary in Job 19:26-27 (which says, "...and after my skin has been thus destroyed, then from my flesh I shall see God, whom I shall see on my side, and my eyes shall behold, and not another"--Ed.) The above are a few minor samples of the reasons while (why--Ed.) I always considered R.I. a man hardly worth bothering with: merely listing his blunders would fill books. Incidentally, he was a complete jerk in politics, philosophy and religion alike. To his substandard intellectual qualities he added a remarkably obnoxious boorishness. Take e.g. the passage that you quote on page 2 of issue #15 "Nothing ever was, nothing ever can be more perfectly idiotic and absurd than the dogma of the Trinity". Obviously, no self-respecting author would write such a thing in a book: if he lacks the decency to refrain from spewing venom like that, at least you should have the decency not to publish it.

Editor's response to Letter #44 (Part a)

Dear ELF.

Are you sure you are justified in accusing others of "spewing venom"? Don't you think it would be more profitable for all concerned to avoid invective and go to the merits of the case? First, you quote David's comment in 2 Sam. 12:23 that he would go to his dead son. But why do you assume that he was alive when he arrived? We are all going to join our dead relatives eventually. Your example is rather weak, as the text is unclear. Secondly, you chose the word "Sheol" in Gen. 37:35 instead of the word "grave." The difference is significant in that Sheol is supposedly occupied by the living who have died, while the grave is not. The RSV, the NWT, and the new NASB use "Sheol" and support your position, while the KJV, the NIV, the Modern Language, and the Jewish Masoretic text support Ingersoll. It appears to be a case of what you choose is what you prefer. Thirdly, ambiguity is also associated with Job 19:26-27. On page 426 the Daily Bible Commentary states that verses 23-27 "are notoriously difficult to translate in detail... Commentators disagree over whether Job...has the concept of the resurrection of the body." A footnote to the RSV says, "the meaning of this verse (26) is uncertain." Also, "mine eyes shall behold, and not another (KJV)" could mean only Job would see God and no one else. Frankly, ELF, I'd like to know what the original authors of many biblical verses meant, as would many biblicists who are candid enough to admit as much. Honest men can honestly disagree. The Bible is vague in many key areas.

Letter #44 Continues (Part b)

Before going into other matters of substance, I would like to raise some issues of spelling. On the first page of issue #15, you attribute to Jefferson the use of the word "gullability", to Menken the use of the word "occurrence", and throw in the word "unfathomable" as your own contribution. Jefferson may not have been much of a speller; it may well be his fault that the Declaration of Independence ended up with the word "unalienable" instead of "inalienable", but I doubt that he would have used "gullability". You probably spend quite a bit of time writing your publication; could you spend a little time proofreading it...? Your comments in the paragraph starting with "Besides" on page 2 of the March 1984 issue degenerate into utter silliness (you don't even keep track of the numbering, you have, "Six" (sic) after "Fourth"). (In a second letter dated April 24, 1984 ELF continued his technical criticisms--Ed.). When you attempted to answer my letter (See: Letter #39, Issue #16, p.4), my initials were given as ELR. I don't know whether this was done to further protect my anonymity... (Later ELF complained about "Voelkischer Beobachter" being misspelled twice and incorrect spelling of "Weltanschauung" in the Editor's Response to 38th letter in the 16th issue--Ed.).

Editor's Response to Letter #44 (Part b)

Ordinarily ELF, I don't comment on the technical aspects of letters and responses, but since it seems to be an area of considerable interest to you, an exception is in order. First, let me acknowledge the errors. "Unfathomable" was a misspelling; the "r" was left off "Voelkischer"; "Fifth" was left out on page 2 of the March 1984 issue, and your initials were incorrectly typed as ELR. Typing is not my strongest suit. For this, I apologize. The other inaccuracies, however, were intentional. "Gullability," "occurrence," and "Weltanschauung," were spelt as viewed. In order to provide readers with more accurate comprehension of these who are being quoted, statements are usually copied with errors intact. What I see is what you get. It would be nice, ELF, if your comments on technical mistakes were offered in a spirit of friendly, constructive criticism instead of belittlement, especially in view of the fact that your own letters could be improved. For example, you ended several sentences with (..."), ("), ("), despite the fact that periods and commas are always placed inside end-quotation marks" according to the Essentials of English by Hopper and Gale. And (?") sure looks suspicious. Secondly, "could" is not spelt "c-o-l-d"; "teachings" is not spelt "t-e-a-c-h-i-g-s," and "why" is not spelt "w-h-i-l-e." Thirdly, "fascism," "humanist," and "polytheism" are not proper nouns and should not be capitalized. And lastly, all of the following words were incorrectly divided as follows at the end of sentences: Be-neath, auth-orites, resembl-ance, Christi-ans, Fath-er, critic-isms, e-ventually, co-pies, e-vidence, I-taly, ag-ree, Apost-les, and enfor-ced. Moreover, are you sure you can divide a word such that a single letter is left at the end of a sentence? In any event, don't you agree that it all seems rather secondary? Constructive technical comments on BE are welcome because they help to improve the format by eliminating problems which concern others. But is offering them in a destructive, demeaning atmosphere really necessary? I've always felt personal attacks build walls, not bridges.

Letter #44 Continues (Part c)

...In the second paragraph on page 2 you give a number of OT texts (Deut. 4:35, 39, 6:4, 2Sam. 2:2, 7:22, Isa. 45:5-6, 46:9, 1 Chron. 17:20, 1 Kings 8:60--Ed.) allegedly contradicting the Trinity. These texts take a position against Polytheism: even Jewish thinkers like Maimonides recognize that the Trinity implies no Polytheism, therefore your texts are irrelevant. Next you give four verses in favor of the Trinity, clearly implying that these are the only ones. You completely omit texts in favor of the Trinity of Jesus; such texts, without directly proving the trinity, definitely have a bearing on the issue. A quickie search for such passages shows text at Phil. 2:5-6 (...in Christ Jesus: Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God--Ed.), Col. 2:9 (For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the godhead bodily--Ed.), Titus 2:13 (Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ--Ed.), 1 John 5:20, and Roman 9:5 (of course, they don't prove anything beyond the opinion of their authors, but that is relevant to our discussion). I should add OT reference to Zech. 12:10, where God says Himself "Me, whom they have pierced": unless Jesus is God, mankind does not get many opportunities to pierce God. (To be Continued)

Editor's Response to Letter #44 (Part c)

The OT texts I cited have always been used in opposition to the Trinity, especially by Jewish scholars. Surely you are aware of this, ELF? Second Samuel 7:22 (Wherefore thou are great, O Lord: for there is none like thee, neither is there any God beside thee) and Isa. 46:9 (...for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me), for example, have always been used to refute not only polytheism but the Trinity as well. You are the first person I have read who feels they are irrelevant. Secondly, you quote several texts (Phil. 2:5-6, Col. 2:9, Titus 2:13 etc.) "in favor of the Trinity" but they don't directly prove the Trinity. I agree; so why mention them and why say they, "definitely have a bearing on the issue" when they don't even discuss the three persons of the Trinity? Verses equating Jesus with God--a duality-- are not proving a trinity. The verses you cited not only "don't prove anything beyond opinion of their authors," but they don't prove anything relevant to our discussion. Weren't you concerned with relevance? Thirdly, you used the King James Version of Zeck. 12:10. Why did you use its interpretation in light of your comment on page 4 (Part b) of May 1984, issue that "the authority of the KJV on scholarly issues is practically nil?" Could it be because the RSV, the Modern Language Version, the Jewish Masoretic text, the Living Bible, the NWT, the NAB, and the Catholic Confraternity Version say, "when they look on him (Not Me--Ed.) whom they have pierced." Since Jehovah is speaking, someone else is being pierced. The NIV and NASB agree with the King James Version and support your position. So, again, what you seek to prove determines what you choose. Letter #45 from SO of Santa Barbara, California

Please enroll me in a 6 months subscription.... I would like to leave you a little comment that may be of assistance. Your COMMENTARY sections are very strong. Your DIALOGUE and LETTERS portions clearly leave you with the last word in that issue. To come over as a fair host to dissenting readers, you might take care to afford your rebuttals the same number of lines as what you are rebutting. You could still handily best your adversaries in most exchanges. Giving yourself more lines I feel makes BE a bit less persuasive. Love your important work.

Editor's Response to Letter #45

Dear SO,

I'm grateful for your thoughtful comments, but have to dissent to some degree. I really don't think the COMMENTARY sections are any stronger than those in other rational publications dealing with similar material. Indeed, in comparison with much that is available today, they are rather mild. Moreover, you might want to read many writings of biblicists on agnosticism, humanism, atheism, and rationalism. "Vitriolic" is an apt description. Secondly, as long as an individual keeps sending me critical letters, neither of us will have the last word, unless I'm swamped with mail. Critics can always write answers to my rebuttals. You might want to note the running debate I had with SBJ in Issues 10-12. It was he who abbreviated the exchange. And lastly, correcting one comment often requires many more words, as you have probably noticed from political discussions. I try to be as concise and accurate as possible.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #46 from KEN of Sacramento, California

Bravo for another excellent issue (April 1984) of BE. This one contained some very telling points with regard to selective Biblical morality. Great ammunition for debates! Your reply to ELR (Letter #39) was also very much to the point. I confess I was surprised by ELR's assertions. Mainstream Christianity has held for centuries that being Christian is a matter of "faith" not "works"; in point of fact, the doctrine of the sufficiency of Faith in Christ is one of the few upon which nearly every denomination will agree. Why, then, would ELR attempt to equivocate on this? (ELR claimed that Hitler, Mussolini, et. al., were not Christians because their "works" were evil.)

Moreover, ELR was begging the question! He was hoping, perhaps, that no one would recall that the issue arose because of Letter #27 in BE #12 (Dec. 1983). The author of Letter #27, ostensibly a Christian, defended the Bible and Christianity on the grounds that many believers were good people. Now ELR suggests that evil people by definition, are not Christian. The argument runs in a perfect circle. You could use the same kind of reasoning to prove that all atheists are great philosophers--or that all plumber are talented ice-skaters.

Letter #47 from Jeff Frankel, Columnist, AAM, Decatur, Illinois
Dennis.

In February issue of BE you mentioned that biblicists would rather concentrate on NT figures because of the inherent sadism of the principle figures of the OT. Yet the central figure of the NT, Jesus Christ, preached a concept far more sadistic than anything in the OT, the concept of eternal suffering. I have checked all of the passages I could find in the OT mentioning hell. None link hell with eternal torture....

Letter #48 from AB of Ontario, Canada
Dear Dennis.

Thank you for the sample issue of BE (#11) that you sent me. I congratulate you for your efforts and hope that this periodical becomes a large circulation magazine one day.... To your answer to letter #25 (the bullet-stopping power of the Bible), I would like to add the following true story: In 1940, I was a political prisoner in the jail of Doftana (Romania) together with another 500 victims of the fascists' laws. In October it happened, the first earthquake of the 4th degree which gave us only a big scare. Afterward, we discussed it and resolved that the best place to shelter in such case is under the steel threshold of our cell. Sure enough, the second earthquake followed after a few days, this time of the 10th degree, the jail collapsed on us and we were buried under the debris. Those who sheltered under the steel doors saved their lives, but about 35 people who chose instead to kneel and pray were killed. We found them all with Bibles in their hands.

COMMENTARY

Moses and the Pentateuch (Part One of a Two Part Series)--Many defenders of the Bible vehemently contend that Moses wrote the first five books of the OT (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy), commonly known as the Pentateuch. They base their belief not only upon historical information but statements by Jesus to the effect that Moses authored the Law, i.e., the Pentateuch, "Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law (John 7:19)" and "For the law was given by Moses,...(John 1:17)." Moses could not have been the author, however, because of the large number of verses demonstrating the contrary. The following are prime examples:

- (a) "And Abram passed through the land unto the place of Sichem,...and the Canaanite was then in the land (Gen. 12:6)," "...and the Canaanite and the Ferizzite dwelled then in the land (Gen. 3:17)." Both verses state that the Canaanites were then in the land. The work of expelling the Canaanites did not begin until the days of Joshua, after Moses, and did not end until the days of David. Since Gen. 12:6 and 13:7 could not have been written until after they had left the land, which was 450 years after Moses, Moses could not have been the author;
- (b) "And these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Israel (Gen. 36:31)." This passage could only have been written after the first king, Saul (See: 1 Sam. 10:24-25) began to reign over the Israelites. It had to have been written after Saul began to rule, and thus could not have been written by Moses;
- (c) "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come (Gen. 49:10)." These words could not have been written before Judah received the sceptre, which was not until David ascended the throne nearly 400 years after the death of Moses;
- (d) "Moreover the man Moses was very great in the land of Egypt...(Ex. 11:3)." People are usually spoken of as great only after their death, and Moses would hardly have made such a statement about himself;
- (e) "And the children of Israel did eat manna forty years, until they came...unto the borders of the land of Canaan (Ex.16:35)." Moses died in the wilderness before they crossed over into the land of Canaan. How could he have known what would happen after they crossed over? How could he have known when they would stop eating manna? Moreover, according to Joshua 5:12, they were still eating manna after they crossed the Jordan River and were encamped in Gilgal;
- (f) "The first of the firstfruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the Lord thy God (Ex. 23:19)." This could not have been written before the time of Solomon, for God had no house prior to the erection of the temple 447 years after Moses. When David proposed to build God a house, God forbade it and said that he had never lived in a house since they left Egypt ("Whereas I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle"--2 Sam. 7:6);
- (g) "That the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you (Lev. 18:28)." How could Moses have written this, since he never saw the promised land and the other nations were not driven out until David's time?
- (h) "And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the sabbath day (Num. 15:32)." How could Moses have written this, since it presupposes the Israelites were no longer in the wilderness? This verse says they were in the wilderness. The author of this wrote after they had left the wilderness and, thus, could not have been Moses, who died in the wilderness;

- (i) "And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the sabbath day. And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation. And they put him in ward, because it was not declared what shall be done with him (Num. 15:32-34)." This says they did not know what to do with a man who gathered sticks on the sabbath because it had not been declared what to do. Yet, in truth, Ex. 31:15 ("whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death") declared what should be done, and Moses, himself, received this law. Thus, Moses could not have written Numbers 15;
- (j) The following verses appear to have been written by someone other than Moses:
 - "And if ye have erred, and not observed all these commandments, which the Lord hath spoken unto Moses, Even all that the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the Lord commanded Moses,....(Num. 15:22-23),"
 - "...as the Lord commanded Moses (Ex. 39:57, 40:19, 27, 29, 32);"
- (k) Moses is often referred to in the third person, which shows the Pentateuch is a biography, not an autobiography. "And the Lord spoke unto Moses....(Num. 2:1, 5:1, 31:1)," "and this is the blessing, wherewith Moses, the man of God, blessed the children of Israel before his death (Deut. 33:1),"
- (l) "To drive out nations from before thee greater and mightier than thou art, to bring thee in, to give thee their land for an inheritance, as it is this day (Deut. 4:38)." This verse must have been written after Moses died, since they did not possess the land as an inheritance until after his demise;
- (m) "Thou shalt eat it within thy gates....(Deut. 15:22)." The phrase "within thy gates" occurs in the Pentateuch about 25 times. It refers to the gates of the cities of the Israelites, which they did not inhabit until after the death of Moses;
- (n) "And the Lord shall bring thee into Egypt again with ships, by the way whereof I spoke unto thee....(Deut. 28:68)." How could Moses have written this when he said earlier in Deut. 17:16 that "You shall never return that way (toward Egypt--Ed.) again?" If Moses wrote all of Deuteronomy, then he contradicted himself;
- (o) "And this the blessing, wherewith Moses the man of God blessed the children of Israel before his death (Deut. 33:1)." In this verse Moses is not only spoken of in the third person, but in laudatory terms. Moreover, his death is referred to as an event already accomplished;
- (p) "This they shall give,...half a shekel after the shekel of the sanctuary....(Ex. 30:13, 24)." Ingersoll noted that Moses could not have written these verses, since there was no such thing as a "shekel of the sanctuary" until long after Moses lived. (To be Continued)

REVIEWS

In 508 Answers to Bible Questions (p. 120-121) M.R. DeHaan addresses the problems created by Mark 16:15-18, which alleges believers can take up serpents, drink any deadly thing, and cure the sick by laying on of hands.

This, of course, is a rather difficult passage, but I believe that when we learn to rightly divide the Word of truth, we should have no difficulty at all. I believe that verses 15 and 16 are a general commission which the Lord Jesus Christ gave unto us for this entire dispensation (or era--Ed.). However, verses 17 and 18, which have to do with the signs of the apostleship, were for a particular period only.... After the canon of Scripture was completed and all the books of the New Testament had been written, God expects us to believe His promises rather than to look for signs and miracles, so we believe that today signs and miracles as recorded in the 16th chapter of Mark are past....

DeHaan claims the believer's ability to pick up serpents and drink any deadly thing pertained to the period of the apostles only, although there is nothing to justify this assumption. Where is the evidence? He says "we believe," but there is no scriptural support for his belief. Where does the Bible say that the powers granted in Mark 16:16-18 applied only to people at that time? DeHaan proceeds with, "Whenever it pleases the Lord to perform these miracles or to give these gifts, He is still able to do so (Ibid. p.121)." We aren't discussing the Lord's ability to take up serpents and drink poison; we are discussing the ability of believers to do so, and the difficulty of finding someone who has been given these gifts. DeHaan then states, "I do not believe that we ought to tempt God by taking up rattlesnakes or by drinking poison just in order to test the word of God. That is presumption; and is tempting the Almighty and God cannot be tempted. ...nothing pleases Him more than when His children are willing to trust His word and His promise without any other evidence whatsoever (Ibid. p. 121)." How is one tempting God by merely asking believers to drink any deadly thing? During a 4-hour appearance on WING Radio (Dayton, Ohio) on June 4 1984, the editor of BE was accused of tempting God by asking callers to prove Mark 16. Is the Bible so sacrosanct as to be above testing? That's hard to believe, since the Book, itself, says, "Prove all things (1 Thess. 5:21)" and proof is all that was sought. DeHaan concludes, "If Mark 16:15-18 is all for us, then it must always succeed, and such is not the case, as you will soon find out, if you drink poison and handle snakes (Ibid. 121-22)." The promise fails not because Mark is speaking only to those in the apostolic age, but because the verse is simply false.

On page 111 in 508 Answers to Biblical Questions DeHaan was asked if faith can literally move mountains, as taught in Matthew 17:20 ("If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible to you"). He responded with, "Yes, I believe with all my heart that if we had enough faith we would be able to move literal mountains if it was for the glory of God. Of course, we must remember that merely moving mountains for the sake of making a demonstration is not pleasing to the Lord, but if it is to His glory and for the help of others, I believe it would be possible." In order to escape from the dilemma presented, DeHaan utilized some common ploys. First, he discussed a verse which has a qualifier--the faith must be as a grain of mustard seed. If the wish fails, apologists can always say the faith did not measure up to the proviso. Why didn't he address Mark 9:23 ("If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth"), John 14:12 ("He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do"), and Matt. 21:21, which has no provisos, which says one only have faith, period. Second, surely any believer would have as much faith as a grain of mustard seed since the latter is so small. So why can't all believers move mountains? Third, where do any of these verses say it can't be done unless it is for the glory of God? This gratuitous qualifier is unsupported by anything in the text. Fourth, why does DeHaan assume people only want to make "a demonstration" by moving mountains? Perhaps some believers really do want some mountains moved. Are we to believe that it could be done by faith? Fifth, where does the Bible say a demonstration would not be pleasing to the Lord? Doesn't it say, "Prove all things (1 Thess. 5:21)"? And lastly, where do any of these verses say it must be done for God's glory and to aid others? The verses say you can move mountains if you believe. Limitations aren't even mentioned.

When asked if we can receive anything we want if we follow Matt. 18:19-20 RSV ("if two of you agree on earth about anything they ask, it will be done for them by my Father in heaven. For where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them") DeHaan said, "Jesus here is speaking about the ministry of believers, especially in the assembly. If we ask anything in the name of the Lord Jesus and agree with some other believer and trust the Lord, He gives us what we ask for upon condition; namely, that we ask according to His will (Ibid. p. 112)." Leaving aside the fact that the quotation says nothing about asking "in the name of Lord Jesus" or having to "trust in the Lord," the key question remains unanswered. Where is a condition attached? Where does the verse say anything about asking according to God's will?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #44 ELF Continues from Last Month's Issue (Part d)

Going back to the four verses you cite in favor of the Trinity (1 Peter 1:2, 1 John 5:7, 2 Cor. 13:14, Matt. 28:19--Ed.), they don't prove very much either. Take e.g. the passages of baptizing in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. In American history we have the famous incident of Ethan Allen demanding the surrender of Fort Ticonderoga "In the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress". Would anybody argue that Ethan Allen claimed that Jehovah and the Continental Congress were identical or part of some divine "duality"?

Editor's Response to Letter #44 (Part d)

You aimed your criticism at the wrong party, ELF. Biblicists cite these verses to prove the Trinity, not I. On page 2 of the March 1984 issue I said, "apologists continue to rely upon four major verses to justify their belief in the Trinity." Your criticism supports my position, not theirs.

Letter #44 Continues (Part e)

Here and there you manage to insert some little dirty remarks such as calling 1 John 5:7 ("For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one"--Ed.) forged. Interestingly, the evidence against it being forged is overwhelming. The passage was never used in the Arian debates by the Trinitarians (who would forge something for no good reason, without intending to use it?) Neither did the Arians ever complain about it being forged, even though the passage definitely goes back at least to the era of the Arian debates. What probably happened was that someone wrote a note on a margin of a manuscript, indicating the exact spot in the text he was referring to; much later the next copyist, not having other manuscripts to compare it to, thought it was part of the text, and copied it that way. Incidentally, this happened to many other Biblical texts, most of them of no importance; in most cases, comparison with other manuscripts enabled scholars to eliminate the added words.

Editor's Response to Letter #44 (Part e)

You say the evidence against 1 John 5:7 being forged is overwhelming but, then, proceeded to prove the opposite. You are correct, ELF; it was not used in the Arian debates, and the Arians did not complain about it being forged. Why? Because it did not exist until centuries later. You say the verse "definitely goes back at least to the era of Arian debates" but, then, showed that it was probably inserted into the text erroneously by a copyist who mistook a marginal note for part of the text. And you concluded by saying, "this happened to many other Biblical texts..., in most cases comparison with other manuscripts enabled scholars to eliminate the added words." Precisely! And that's why the modern versions (RSV, Modern Language, NWT, NASB, NIV, NAB), which you referred to as scholarship rather than tradition (May 1984, p. 4) have discarded 1 John 5:7 of the King James Version.

Letter #49 from KN of Dallas, Texas

An atheist friend of mine gave me your issue #17 to read. I found your response to ELF appalling. You do not cite even one primary source, yet you tell us unequivocally that the O.T. Hebrew word "ratsach" found in Ex. 20:13 ("Thou shalt not kill"--Ed.) does not mean "murder" (i.e. "you shall not murder") but only means "kill", and you use the RSV as a main support for your position. However, the issue can be quickly resolved by turning to the standard Hebrew lexicon in use today entitled, Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament by Brown, Driver, and Briggs. Now there are three basic words in the Hebrew OT that in a general sense mean "to kill." They are: ratsach (murder, slay), harag (kill, slay) and shachat (slaughter, beat). Although it is true that all three of the above words could be translated with the general term "kill," a more refined and accurate examination of these Hebrew words yields the various shades of meaning given above. And in Exodus 20:13 "ratsach" is used. Your basic error, Mr. McKinsey, is with your preoccupation with the RSV and other selected English translations, which is unwarranted. Indeed, I find it incredible that you think that such versions as the NASB and the NIV are "based more on expediency than research" (an insult to over a hundred linguistic scholars), while upholding, apparently, the exclusive impeccability of the RSV. What nerve....

To summarize, Mr. McKinsey, you clearly have not researched the matter to a satisfactory degree. To merely say that the word in Ex. 20:13 ONLY means "to kill" is wrong. A detailed comparison with other Hebrew words which also convey the general sense of "to kill" delineates the various connotations each word can further convey, and in Ex. 20:13 there is no exception.

Editor's Response to Letter #49

Dear KN.

So you feel translations of the Bible, especially newer versions, are not influenced by expediency and my research is weak. Needless to say, we disagree. First, you cite a lexicon to prove there are three basic words (ratsach, harag, and shachat) in the Hebrew OT that in general sense mean "to kill." What happened to "nakah," "muwth," "tabach," "chala," and "naqaph"? Weren't you concerned with accurate research? Secondly, the RSV was only one of many versions I cited which translated Ex. 20:13 as "Thou shalt not kill." As I told ELF, "Your disagreement is with the Hebraic scholars who translated the KJV, the RSV, the Catholic NAB, the Jerusalem Bible, and the Douay Version." How you concluded that I used "the RSV as a main support" for my position is hard to tell! Thirdly, you prefer to translate the Hebrew word "ratsach," as "murder" and cite the newer NASB and NIV translation as your sources. If ratsach means "to murder" then why do the NIV and the NASB translate "ratsach" as "kill" in Deut. 4:42 and Num. 35:27 respectively? And why does the Jewish Masoretic text translate it as "kill" in 1 Kings 21:19 and Hosea 4:2? Even your own authorities admit that "ratsach" can mean "to kill." Fourthly, you accuse me of insulting "over a hundred linguistic scholars." Yet, the number of scholars throughout the past 500 years who have chosen "kill" over "murder" is well in excess of 100. You have impugned their knowledge of Hebrew and opted for the translation of a smaller group. If effect, you claim to have a body of scholars who know Hebrew better than a much larger group. And lastly, where did I imply, much less state, the "exclusive impeccability of the RSV"e;?

Letter #50 from GLF of Uxbridge, Massachusetts

...In regard to letter #43 in the May edition of BE I would like to ask how can DB state that he no longer believes in God and then state that he did know God personally? I am perplexed! I find DB's letter the most contradictory writing in this entire publication.

Editor's Response to Letter #50

DB's letter seemed consistent to me, GLF. He believed in God and later chose to reject him. I did not interpret that as meaning he no longer believed in God after having what he described as a personal relationship. Perhaps DB might want to respond to you.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #51 from FM of Novato, California

Judging by the spelling complaints of EFL of Long Beach concerning "gullability"

(See: Letter #44, Part (b), Issue #18, page 4) and of Thomas Jefferson using "unalienable", it appears that ELF was just a little fast on the trigger and shot himself in the foot. If he will consult Webster's New Collegiate, he will find both "gullability" and "gullibility," and "unalienable" synonymous with "inalienable."

Letter #52 from MEP of Tulsa, Oklahoma

...a couple of yars ago a Ph.D. computer scientist who teaches at the University of Tulsa told me in all seriousness that the Second Coming is imminent. That made me realize we are losing generations of people in this country to obscurantism. That is why I love your hard-hitting magazine; somebody has to challenge Christians on their own ground. (In another letter MEP asked the following--Ed.). If we are saved either through faith, predestination, or God's election, why did both Jesus and Paul give us all those rules to live by? The multiplicity of rules is consistent only with salvation through works, a doctrine which most Christian sects repudiate.

Letter # 53 from JK of Poplar Bluff, Missouri

...I was raised in an environment similar to the situation described in your May 1984 "Letters to the Editor" (the last letter in the issue). It's right (as you recently said) to expect "Born Again Christians" of long standing to have a great deal of trouble accepting views espoused in BE. The effects of being raised in a fundamentalist environment are difficult to shake, but not impossible.... I appreciate your work and hope that you will continue. It is most interesting when you quote various biblical supporters in explaining away "difficult passages." This was a common occurrence in the church in which I was raised. Fundamentalists sort of take a "mental vote" on which explanation they will accept. On page 3 of the recent May issue, I loved the comment on "knowing the mind of Christ". That revived old memories for me, as I've heard that phrase many times before. ...No wonder the fundamentalists advocate "faith" so much, as their views certainly do not stand up to the test of logic and reason. But that's the great thing about faith, it needs no logic or reason, and in fact, prefers not to have it.

Letter #54 from BBH of Miramar, Florida

I thought I would mention that quite frequently a couple of these "Mormon Elders", (they always travel in pairs) stopped by my home to sell me on Mormonism, or whatever they are selling.... They are all well educated young men and are most enjoyable to engage in conversation. What starts out planned as only a few moments' sales pitch ends up in many hours.... it usually takes all they can muster to defend their viewpoints.... I was wondering if there is a book of some kind on the refutation of the Book of Mormon....

Editor's Response to Letter #54

When people come to me with the intent to proselytise, I view this as an opportunity to provide them with information and assistance they don't realize they need. It becomes a question of who is persuading whom. Too many rational individuals are content with merely fending off evangelists and maintaining a successful defense posture. That accounts for much of the latter's strength and numbers. Fundamentalists, such as Falwell, are on the offensive, and their influence is all too pervasive, as recent events have shown. Although BE does not focus on particular denominations, my notes on the Book of Mormon could very well be addressed in a future issue. Books criticizing Mormonism as a cult are quite prominent in Christian bookstores, if you simply want a critical writing. Of course, they are written from a Christian perspective.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

- (I) A couple of readers questioned the three-part series on Ignored Teachings in the April, May, and June issues feeling that, "In these issues you have merely pointed out contradictions in the lives of Christians." One must realize that BE is not a narrow, technical journal devoted merely to comparing verse with verse, although that is an integral part of the overall approach. It's a broadly based philosophical analysis of any and all internal problems having to do with the Bible's validity. This could involve not only technical errors, contradictions, fallacies, and philosophical quandries, but circumstantial evidence as well. When millions of the Book's most devoted proponents ignore many biblical teachings, significant evidence exists to the effect that the Book is not as sacrosanct as they claim. If it is, then why don't they adhere more clearly to its tenets? When people whose ethics are in doubt cite one book as the source of their morality, one can't help but question the book's reliability. If character witnesses during a trial are of dubious character themselves, that doesn't say much for the defendant.
- (II) We wish to extend a heartfelt thanks to those readers who have seen fit to aid BE by purchasing ads in local papers throughout the country. From our perspective you are unsung heroes. Our awareness of your support arises from the fact that we receive inquiries from people responding to ads in periodicals about which we know little. A special note of gratitude goes out to FM of Novato, California who not only designed an attractive ad for BE and funded its publication, he called a local call-in program and wrote letters about BE to a local newspaper editor. We would also like to thank Don Morgan of Crusade Publications, Dept. L, Box 200, Redmond, Washington 98052 for his continued advertising of BE. Don issues some interesting literature himself.

COMMENTARY

Moses and the Pentateuch (Part Two of a Two-Part Series)--Last month's commentary noted a couple of verses (John 1:17 & 7:19) which are often used to prove Moses wrote the Pentateuch, i.e., the Law or Torah. Additional prominent examples are Joshua 8:32 ("And Joshua wrote there upon the stones a copy of the Law of Moses, which he wrote in the presence of the children of Israel"), Mark 12:19 ("Master Moses wrote unto us,..."), Rom. 10:5 ("Moses writes...."), John 1:45 ("...of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write...."), and John 5:46-47 ("For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me (Jesus--Ed.): for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not in his writings, how shall ye believe my words?").

But just as these verses and many others are cited to prove Moses was the author, substantial evidence exists to prove he was not. Sixteen reasons were given last month, and the following are offered in conclusion:

- (q) "the book of the law of Moses" (Josh. 8:31, Neh. 8:1). This verses shows that Moses wrote one book, if any, not five;
- (r) "And keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statues, and his commandments, and his judgements, and his testimonies, as it is written in the Law of Moses,...." (1 Kings 2:3). This verse refers to the laws and commandments of Moses, but doesn't say he wrote the entire Torah. Moreover, "written in the law of Moses" does not mean Moses did the writing himself;
- (s) "But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son,...nor stranger that is within thy gates" (Ex. 20:10). How could Moses have written this when it implies the author was in Palestine? "Gates" are not applicable to prior wanderings in the wilderness when Moses lived;
- (t) "The Horims also dwelt in Seir beforetime; but the children of Esau succeeded them, when they had destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their stead; As Israel did unto the land of his possession, which the Lord gave unto them" (Deut. 2:12). How could Moses have written this when the words presuppose a time when the Israelites were already in possession of Canaan, having expelled its former inhabitants?;
- (u) "By these were the isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands" (Gen. 10:5). There were no gentiles until after the Jews became a nation when Israel split off from Judah and became an independent kingdom under Rehoboam, the son of Solomon. The Jews had no distinctive religion until after the days of Solomon;
- (v) "And Rachel died and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem. And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave: that is the pillar of Rachel's grave unto this day" (Gen. 35:19-20). Moses never saw Rachel's tomb, and there is little likelihood he knew it was standing. Until his dying day he could never look over from the mountain and see the country in which Rachel was buried;

- (w) "And Sarah died in Kirjath-arba; the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan" (Gen. 23:2). Moses couldn't have written this because the city was not called Hebron (a modern name) till Caleb received it after the division of the land and named it Hebron after one of his sons. As Josh. 14:13-15 says, "And Joshua blessed him, and gave unto Caleb...Hebron for an inheritance.... And the name Hebron before was Kirjath-arba...";
- (x) "and Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua" (Ex. 24:13). These don't sound like words Moses would have written:
- (y) "And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants...and pursued them into Dan" (Gen. 14:14) and the Lord shewed him [Moses--Ed.] all the land of Gilead, unto Dan" Deut. 34:1). There was no place called Dan until many years after Moses lived. Dan was built after the death of Samson, who died 350 years after Moses. The city was originally called Laish. "And they called the name of the city Dan, after the name of Dan their father,...howbeit the name of the city was Laish at the first" (Judges 18:29);
- (z) "For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews" (Gen. 40:15). Moses could not have written this verse, since there were no "Hebrews" in the days of Joseph or of Moses. "Hebrews" could not be applied until they possessed Canaan late in Joshua's time;
- (aa) "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all men which were upon the face of the earth" (Num. 12:3). If Moses wrote this, then he couldn't have been very meek. Moreover, Num. 31:17 ("Now therefore kill every male among the little ones and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him") hardly sounds like the command of a meek person;
- (bb) "And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face" (Deut. 34:10). This verse not only demonstrates an amazing lack of meekness on the part of Moses, in clear violation of Num. 12:3, but appears to have been written after Moses died. In addition, it's difficult to see how Moses could truthfully say he saw God face to face and also write Ex. 33:20 ("Thou canst not see my (God's--Ed.) face: for there shall see no man and live");
- (cc) Probably the most compelling argument that Moses did not author the Torah is found at the end of the last book. "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab.... And he buried him in a valley...but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day" (Deut. 34:5-6). How could Moses have described his own death and burial? Some scholars attempt to escape from this dilemma by alleging Joshua wrote the final verses of Deuteronomy. Unfortunately for them this would include Deut. 34:9, which says, "Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of Wisdom." It's difficult to see how Joshua could have authored this in light of the fact that if he was full of the spirit of wisdom, he certainly did not have the spirit of modesty. Just as important is the fact that by attributing the final verses of Deuteronomy to Joshua, apologists are admitting Moses did not write the entire Torah.

Other evidence of an even more technical nature could be presented, but isn't necessary. Instead, some general observations are in order. First, Moses nowhere claims to have written the Pentateuch, nor does the Bible impute the Torah to him. Only the "law" is attributed to Moses. Secondly, the books are written in the third person. Moses never says, "I did," except when making a speech. Thirdly, the books of the Pentateuch are never ascribed to Moses in the inscriptions of Hebrew manuscripts or in printed copies of the Hebrew Bible; nor are they styled the "Books of Moses" in the Septuagint or the Vulgate. This only occurs in modern translations. Fourthly, the great amount of repetition in the Pentateuch tends to prove there was more than one author. Things are often introduced as if they had not been referred to before, and show different peculiarities of language. And lastly, there is no important difference between the language of the Pentateuch and that of books written shortly before the return from the Babylonian Captivity. If there was an interval of 1,000 years, these writings would present an unparalleled event in history of languages: no change in 1,000 years!

REVIEWS

In the Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties Gleason Archer replied to those doubting the Mosaic authorship of the Torah by emphatically stating, "The entire Pentateuch is the authentic work of Moses, under the inspiration of God and the Holy Spirit." (p. 45). His lengthy defense, however, is not directed toward those problems prevented in BE, but toward those critics who contend the Pentateuch was written by several authors hundreds of years after Moses--The Documentary Hypothesis. Because their debate involves a good deal of extra-biblical data, only Archer's points need be mentioned.

First, he contends the Pentateuch must have been written while in Egypt, and not hundreds of years later in Palestine, because (a) "the climate and weather referred to in Exodus are typically Egyptian, not Palestinian," (b) "the trees and animals referred to in Exodus through Deuteronomy are indigenous to Egypt or the Sinai Peninsula, and none of them are peculiar to Palestine," (c) "the geographical references betray the perspective of one who is personally unfamiliar with Palestine, but is well acquainted with Egypt." (Ibid. p. 46-47). Even if the above were true, which many deny, Archer has proved little. Any contemporary of Moses or anyone living in Egypt or the Sinai, even hundreds of years later, could have been the source. Secondly, Archer argues that "a far greater number of Egyptian names and loan words are found in the Pentateuch than any other section of Scripture. This is just what we would expect from an author who was brought up in Egypt, writing for a people who were reared in the same setting as he" (Ibid. p. 48). After being in Egypt for hundreds of years, the Hebrew language would undoubtedly have incorporated many Egyptian terms, and any subsequent Hebrew writer, Moses or otherwise, would have reflected that influence. This would not justify assuming Moses was the author. Thirdly, on page 48 Archer contends that if the Pentateuch was written hundreds of years after Moses, when Jerusalem was the Israelite capital (as the Documentary Hypothesis maintains), then Jerusalem should have been mentioned on many occasions. "A careful examination of the entire text of Genesis through Deuteronomy comes up with the astonishing result that Jerusalem is never once mentioned by name." Surely Archer isn't suggesting that an American historian describing the Napoleonic Era, for example, must mention Washington D.C. because of its prominence today. Why should a 6th century B.C. writer, describing 14th century B.C. Egypt, have to mention Jerusalem because of the latter's significance in 6th century B.C. Palestine? And finally, Archer contends that Moses was the author because "he had just the right qualifications to compose just such a work as the Torah." "He had a fine education as a prince"; "he must have received a knowledge of the oral law"; he must have had "a full knowledge of the experiences of the patriarchs," and "as a lifelong resident of Egypt and the land of Midian in the Sinai, he must have acquired a personal knowledge of the climate, agricultural practices, and geographical properties of both Egypt and the Sinai, such as is obvious throughout the text of these four books (Exodus through Deuteronomy)." Archer concludes by saying, "Moses had, then, every incentive and every qualification to compose this remarkable production" (Ibid. p. 51). He neglected to mention that this could be applied to hundreds of his contemporaries. Archer acts as if Moses were the only educated Israelite among thousands.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #55 from KHB of Los Angeles, California

(KHB sent BE a page from the Catholic newspaper, Our Sunday Visitor. A spokesman for the Catholic Church was asked how priests could be addressed as "father" in light of Matt. 23:9 ["And call no man your father upon earth: for one is your father, which is in heaven"]. His response was as follows--Ed.). In reading the Bible we have to understand what is behind the words, otherwise what we read is subject to misinterpretation. The verse you cite is part of a passage in which Jesus is rebuking the Jewish religious establishment,.... He condemns their use of three titles: rabbi (master), abba (father) and morah (teacher), implying that they are not worthy of these titles. He also doesn't mean that you shouldn't call your dad your father, or refer to a teacher in school as teacher. Christian tradition from the first days has interpreted this verse in its restricted sense, that Christians should not crave worldly honor and that they should be servants of one another....

Editor's Response to Letter #55

Dear KHB,

According to my sources the word "father" comes from the Greek word "pater" not "abba." In any event, the problem with the spokesman's explanation lies in his unwarranted assumptions. He said we must "understand what is behind the words" and immediately inserted something that isn't there. On what basis does he conclude that the verse does "not mean that you shouldn't call your dad father"? It says, "call no man your father." Using Christian tradition as one's final interpreter is about as reliable as using the Supreme Court to determine what the Founding Fathers really had in mind when they wrote the Constitution and its Amendments. Opinions are many and vary considerably on many points. In this instance, tradition may say it's permissible, but the Bible says it isn't. There is nothing justifying Christian tradition interpreting this verse in its "restricted sense" other than a need for plausibility. But if the latter becomes the criterion, then a substantial portion of the Bible will have to be modified. The verse says "Don't call anyone your father" and until a more substantive and authoritative source than tradition modifies my conclusion, I will have to assume the Book says what it means and means what it says.

Letter #56 from EMM of Lakewood, Ohio (Part a)

...I have a few questions for you. For I would like to know you better. Are you an agnostic or an atheist? Are you a skeptic or a flat out Bible rejecter? Concerning your questions. Do you ask questions because you don't know and want to know the truth? Or do you ask questions just to ask questions? If you received enough answers to your questions would you humble yourself and receive the Lord Jesus Christ as your savior? If so, do you require answers to all your questions or to certain vital ones?

Editor's Response to Letter #56 (Part a)

Dear EMM.

Your tendency to not only pose questions in multiple choice fashion but select options is rather devious. I suppose you could call me an agnostic, although BE is much more concerned with Bible's accuracy than nebulous theological questions on God's existence. "Yes, He exists; no, He doesn't" discussions generally persuade no one, and are decidedly lacking in solid evidence. You ask if I am a skeptic. "Skeptic" is an insidious term of approbrium applied by Christians to their opponents so as to give people the impression that the Bible is true, while its opponents are nit-picking, closed-minded doubters, who refuse to recognize scriptural "truths." From my perspective those holding to biblical inerrancy are skeptics because they refuse to recognize the irrationality of their position. They are skeptical of the wisdom inherent in a path of objectivity, logic, and reason. Am I a flat-out Bible rejecter? By no means! I don't flatly reject anything until it's been given a hearing. Virtually every book on a library shelf has some truth inside. I do, however, view the Bible in perspective and believe the evidence clearly shows it's neither inerrant nor God's word. I don't ask questions merely to know the truth or just to ask questions. I ask so that all within hearing will receive a more accurate perception of issues involved. I ask in order to inform. You ask if I would receive Jesus if I received answers to all my questions? My friend, I'd believe in Santa Claus and the tooth-fairy if sufficient evidence were provided. And there is about as much chance of that as Jesus being proved the Savior and the Bible being proved inerrant. Since you have asked me some questions, let me ask you one. How much evidence would I have to present to convince you that Jesus and the Bible are not worthy of the images portrayed?

Letter #56 Concludes (part b)

...I don't believe I will get to read all of your back issues but I will take your suggestion and purchase them.... One topic that caught my eyes is No. 16, May 1984. "Hitler, Mussolini, and the Klan as Christians." I realize that sometimes titles can be misunderstood. It looks to me as though you believe that those two people are Christians. You don't believe that do you? Hitler and Mussolini were both Roman Catholic,....

Editor's Response to Letter #56 (Part b)

You have touched upon a topic, EMM, that untold numbers of people continue to misunderstand. Let's take two individuals whom we will call Bob and Bill. Bob is one of the most considerate persons who ever lived. He exhibits virtually every positive trait imaginable. He is kind, moral, loving, generous, honest, loyal, cooperative, trustworthy, clean, punctual, reliable, hardworking, and patient. By any standard one can devise he is a thoroughly decent fellow. But he never accepted Jesus as his personal savior. Bill, on the other hand, is the epitome of degeneracy. His entire life has been devoted to lying, stealing, cheating, beating, dishonesty, greed, egotism, raping, and murder. He is a savage killer who has enjoyed merciless brutality on hundreds of occasions. However, just before being executed he repented of his acts and accepted Jesus Christ as his personal savior. The question then becomes: Which man will live in eternal bliss of heaven with Jesus? Bob, you say. Not a chance! Which man will spend an eternity in hell fire? Bill, you say. Wrong again! Bob will languish in hell and Bill will enjoy heaven for all eternity. Why? Because one's behavior has nothing to do with being saved or being a Christian. One is a Christian and saved by virtue of beliefs. Therefore, anyone who has accepted Jesus as his savior is automatically saved and a Christian. And this includes such despicable characters as Hitler, Mussolini, and the klansmen. On the Klan's membership application are the following words: "I am a white person...and I believe in the Christian faith.... I hereby swear that I am a white person of Christian ancestry." As Catholics, Hitler and Mussolini must have accepted Jesus as their savior. And once saved, always saved. Just as you can't be saved by good behavior; you can't be lost by bad behavior. That is basic to nearly all of Christianity. You deny Hitler and Mussolini are Christians, but admit they are Roman Catholics. Are you seriously contending Roman Catholicism is not Christian? You ask if I believed Hitler, Mussolini, and klansmen are Christian. Of course I do. Being good has nothing to do with being a Christian. It is neither a requirement nor a necessary by-product.

As far as I am aware Christianity is the only major religion that believes salvation is based on faith rather than works. All others teach you can earn your way to the promised land. The irrationality of salvation by faith is hard for many biblicists to understand, and has caused them to gravitate toward the more rational belief that better deeds produce greater rewards. Why biblicists are so concerned with having a good record on Judgement Day is difficult to comprehend, since the major decision is sealed at the moment of death. Everything else is anticlimactic. Moreover, if one really believed salvation came through acceptance of Christ as one's savior, then one could engage in all kinds of disgusting activity after submitting to Jesus, with full assurance of ultimate salvation. Subsequent immoral behavior would nullify nothing. As a defense, apologists contend that once one has made a sincere commitment to Jesus, one's beliefs and behavior will change accordingly. If this were true then why do saved and born-again Christians continue to willingly sin? Surely they aren't claiming perfection! And because they continue to intentionally sin, they are little better than someone who is taking advantage of his saved status to sin at will. At best, the difference is one of degree, not kind.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #57 from Vacaville, California

I realize your monthly letters deal with contradictions, errors, and fallacies of the Bible, but would it not be appropriate to print eight reasons why Jesus Christ never existed and is merely a mythological character? It would be interesting to see the reaction....

Editor's Response to Letter #57

Although the historicity of Jesus is an extra-biblical topic and doesn't relate directly to inerrancy, it does merit consideration and will be addressed eventually.

Letter #58 from MP of Tulsa, Oklahoma

Assume for the sake of argument that "Jesus is God" is a true statement. In Num. 31 God ordered Moses to kill the Midianites. What responsibility does Jesus have in all this?

Letter #59 from DWM of Dayton, Ohio

Have a question for you, if I may. On page 5, of issue 3, 13 lines from the bottom of the page, you state, "He (God--Ed.) punished a bastard for being illegitimate, DEUT 32:2." I have a Scofield Reference Edition, and looked up that verse, and for the life of me, cannot get that interpretation out of it. Is that the correct verse? If not, which is?

You sure have done some digging. Thank you for doing all this. I still cannot get over what some people do in the "name of their religion"--refuse blood and stay away from all politics; beat children; handle and get bitten by poisonous snakes; refuse doctors; call vaccines monkey pus; refuse pre- and post-natal care, resulting in excessive deaths to the babies and mothers; the Irish problem; marxist "minister" of all faiths; homosexual marriages," and other quirky things. Makes me glad to be an agnostic.

Editor's response to Letter #59

You are correct, DWM. Deut. 32:2 should have been Deut. 23:2

Letter #60 from JW of Mobile, Alabama (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey

I find your work nothing short of impressive and amazing. I've read most of what you write about but I've not been able to put it together as you have. ...I know there are times I read the Bible and don't really think about what's being said. It's kind of hard sometimes when you have been reared with the Bible pushed at you your entire life, because you learn a lot of the verses by rote and don't think about the words you are saying or what they mean. I sometimes listen to the TV preachers for entertainment. I listen to their sermons and pick out the fallacies, non sequiturs, and incongruencies that they so often preach. They are just full of platitudes and anecdotes that actually have very little to do with the contents of the Bible. One that stands out is the time I was listening to Jimmy Swaggart regarding the verse in Genesis that says "Let us make man in our own image." He was saying that a man he was talking to said God had a wife and this verse proved it. Well, Swaggart said, "No, it's talking about Jesus." Tell me, how did he come up with this conclusion? You can no more assume the verse is talking about Jesus than about a wife. It does not specify who "us" is. It could be anybody or anything. Just because it disagrees with what Jimmy has been taught, he automatically dismissed it as wrong. I don't see how Swaggart thought he was more right than the person who said God had a wife; but if you want to be logical...it would seem God would have to have a wife (or at least a woman) if he had a son, because he made man in "their" image and men can't have sons physically--so there would have to be a female of the species. (But that is not in the Bible either). So if he is going to assume "us" meant Jesus and only Jesus, than why can't we assume "us" meant wife? Does the list limit "us" to two people? I think its amazing how people can assume so much from so little. The person you spoke of that wrote of certain verses proving the earth rotated on its axis, etc. (Issue #13) was certainly reading a heck of a lot into those verses.... Apologists always have a way out, though. If they don't understand it (the Bible) then it's not God's will for us to know. God can do no wrong and they bend the facts to suit the situation. ...There are so many people who won't even consider what is written right in the Bible black and white. They dismiss it out of hand without question. Because it is supposed to be perfect they have to insist it is that way. I would also like to know if anybody who reads you and writes to you has written to say they have changed their viewpoint form Bible inerrancy to Bible errancy.... (To Be Concluded)

Editor's Response to Letter #60 (Part a)

Dear JW.

I appreciate your kind remarks and would like to respond to your last comment. Leaving the Bible is not an instantaneous act but the result of a long series of revelations over a period of time. People are somewhere on a spectrum, ranging from inerrancy to errancy. At what point someone is no longer a believer in the Bible is difficult to determine, and varies from person to person. So we have no way of judging if or when somebody has changed his or her viewpoint. Indeed, I'm not sure many people know themselves. I do know that providing information such as that found in BE facilitates the movement of many people along the spectrum. We provide information. How it is employed by others is their decision to make. BE doesn't seek to convert people to atheism, agnosticism, humanism or any other -ism. It's merely a forum in which to discuss the Bible's validity. If people discover and adopt another philosophy after rejecting the Bible, BE was not the source.

COMMENTARY

The Creation Accounts

(Part One of a Two Part Series)

Few topics in recent history have generated more controversy than the question of how the earth and its environs were created. For years two major positions--Evolution and Creationism--have been locked in an on-going struggle for influence in the schools, the media, and elsewhere with little chance of immediate victory for either. BE will not enter the fray directly because the issue involves a tremendous amount of technical information lying outside the Bible per se. Creationism is, for all practical purposes, an assault upon the integrity of nearly every physical science, and in order to cope effectively with such organizations as the Institute for Creation Research one would have to become quite knowledgeable with respect to geology, paleontology, anthropology, astronomy, biology, archeology, physics, chemistry, and other physical sciences. Few individuals on either side are sufficiently informed to conduct an impressive presentation. Nevertheless, some general points of disagreement between evolutionists and creationists are worthy of note, and can be discussed with confidence. Creationists obtain their philosophy from biblical accounts related in the book of Genesis, and refer to it as "Scientific Creationsim". But if their position is as scientific as alleged, then why does it clash with science on so many points? Prominent examples are the following:

- (1) "And God said, Let there be light" (Gen. 1:3) and "...And the evening and the morning were the first day" (Gen. 1:5), versus "And God said, 'Let there be light in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night....' "And God made two lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also.... And the evening and morning were the fourth day" (Gen. 1:14-19).
 - (a) God created light on the first day; yet there were no moon, sun or stars until the fourth day;
 - (b) how could it be known when the first three days ended if there was no sun until the fourth day?; and
 - (c) How could morning be distinguished from evening, if the sun and the moon were yet to be created?
- (2) "And God said,'Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yeilding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind.... And the evening and the morning were the third day" (Gen. 1:11-13), versus "And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day and the lesser light to rule the night; he made the stars also" (Gen. 1:16), and "the evening and the morning were the fourth day"

- (Gen. 1:19). Vegetation was created on the third day; yet there was no sun for the photosynthesis until the fourth day.
- (3) " In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1), and"... the evening and the morning were the first day" (Gen.1:5), versus "And God made two great lights; and the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night; he made the stars also" (Gen. 1:16) and the evening and the morning were the fourth day" (Gen. 1:19).
 - (a) According to biblical "science", the earth was created 3 days before the sun, the moon and the stars;
 - (b) Scientists say there are many stars whose light takes millions of years to reach the earth. How, then, could they be 6,000 to 8,000 years old as many Christians allege?
 - (4) "And God said, 'Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind...' And the evening and the morning were the third day" (Gen. 1:11-13), versus "And God said, 'Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life... And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly.... And the evening and the morning were the fifth day" (Gen.1:20-23). Genesis says that life existed first on the land as plants and later the seas teemed with living creatures. Geological science says that the sea teemed with animals and vegetable life long before life appeared on land.
 - (5) " So God created the great sea monsters and every living creature that moves, with which the waters swarm, according to their kinds,and every winged bird according to its kind.... And there was evening and there was morning, a fifth day" (Gen. 1:21-23 RSV). Geological science says fishes appeared long before the birds. They were not created during the same day or period.
 - (6) "And God created...every winged fowl after his kind...." (Gen. 1-21) and "And the evening and the morning were the fifth day" (Gen. 1:23), versus "And God made ther beast of the earth... and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind...." (Gen. 1-25), and "... the evening and the morning were the sixth day" (Gen. 1:31). Science says creeping reptiles appeared on the earth before the fowl, not afterwards.
 - (7) "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, the beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so. And God made...every thing that creepth upon the earth after his kind...." (Gen. 1:24-25). Science contends that reptiles were created long before mammals, not simultaneously. While reptiles existed in the Carboniferous Age, mammals did not appear until the close of the Reptilian Age.
 - (8) "And God said, 'Let the water bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven" (Gen. 1:20). Birds did not emerge from water.
 - (9) "So God created man in his own image,...male and female created he them" (Gen. 1:27), and "the evening and the morning were the sixth day" (Gen. 1:31). If Adam was created on the 6th day, approximately 6,000 years ago (Bishop Usher's calculations), then nobody lived before 4,000 B.C. Prehistoric men would be fictitious. By tracing the genealogy of Jesus back 77 generations to Adam, the third chapter of Luke also supports belief in a very young earth. If each man had lived approximately 100 years, then the world would be no more than 9,684 (7,700 + 1984) years old. If each of Jesus' ancestors had lived to be 1,000 years old (an age not even reached by Methuselah), the earth would still be only 78,984 (77,000 + 1984) years old, according to creationists.

- (10) "And to every beast of the earth, and every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was so" (Gen. 1:30). Carnivorous beasts and fowl do not eat green herbs.
- (11) "And God saw everything that he had made...." (Gen. 1:31) and "on the seventh day God ended his work" (Gen. 2:2). Scientifically speaking, unless God had male organs or attributes, it is difficult to see how God could be masculine.
- (12) "And out of the ground the Lord formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and brought them to Adam to see what he would call them: and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof" (Gen. 2:19). Environmentally speaking, how could every living creature be brought to any spot in the Middle East or elsewhere without many animals dying because of climatic changes and other factors?
- (13) "And Lord God said unto the serpent, 'Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt eat all the days of thy life'..." (Gen. 3:14). If the serpent was a snake, snake-like, or reptilian in character and condemned to crawl upon its belly, how did it move before? And does science know of any serpent that eats dust?

In order to extricate themselves from the problems associated with a six-day creation approximately 6,000 years ago, many apologists assert that each day represents an age or era ,encompassing millions of years. In other words, literal days composed of 24 hours each were not intended. Their belief, however, is erroneous for several reasons:

- (1) The word translated as "day" is "yom" in the Hebrew, which means a definite 24-hour period from sunset to sunset;
- (2) Starting evening and then morning shows a 24-hour period was intended. This was how Jews computed a day;
- (3) If a day is an era, why are an evening and a morning even mentioned?;
- (4) Actual days must be intended; otherwise, men who lived hundreds of years, e.g., Seth and Noah, would really have lived millions of years. If a day is an era, then a year must be tremendously long, perhaps encompassing hundreds of millions of years;
- (5) If a day is an era, then much of the Old Testament becomes chaotic. For example, in each of the following verses the same Hebrew word "yom" is employed: "And the flood was forty days upon the earth" (Gen. 7:17), "And he (Moses--Ed.) was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights" (Ex. 34:28), and "Thus I fell down before the Lord forty days and forty nights..." (Deut.

9:25). If "yom" means era instead of a 24-hour period, Moses was "there with the Lord" for a long time.

- (6) If a day means more than 24-hour period, then how are we to interpret the following verses, as well as scores of others. "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath.... in it thou shalt not work.... For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth...and rested the seventh day" (Ex. 20:9-11).
- (7) Gen. 1:16 ("And God made two great lights: The greater light to rule the day and the lesser light to rule the night") states the sun rules the day and the moon rules the night. This obviously is referring to time as we know it--time with days that are 24 hours long, with daylight ruling half of each.
- (8) And lastly, Adam was made on the sixth day (Gen. 1:26, 31), which was supposedly thousand of years long. This was followed by the 7th day which was also thousands of years long. Following the 7th day, Adam fell into sin and was expelled from the Garden. This would mean Adam lived thousands of years, which is false, since he died at age 930 (Gen. 5:5).

What is Science

At this point in the commentary an extra-biblical discourse is in order. Not long ago the editor of BE heard some creationists denounce the theory of evolution and its foremost proponent, Carl Sagan, in no uncertain terms. They accused evolutionists of having a theory with scores of unanswered questions, for which God was the only rational explanation. From these discussions it became evident that two major problems are indelibly written into their approach. First, it exposes a misconception about the nature of science. Physical scientists gather data and formulate theories or laws based upon the information collected. As additional information is gathered, the theories and laws are improved and perfected in a never-ending, on-going process. Physical scientists never arrive at a point where they can say they have a theory or law that is good for all time and under all conditions. They can never say they have an absolute truth that will be true forevermore. What they say is that, based upon all known data and information, a particular theory or law is valid. They are not saying the theory or law will never have to be modified. For the present, however, it's the best explanation available.

When creationists denounce Carl Sagan for calling evolution a proven fact, they are actually attacking all physical scientists, because no scientist can prove any physical law or theory will be eternally true. Creationists want absolutes, which science will never generate. Science does not provide the kind of eternal verities creationists seek. Every law or theory in science is a temporary truth, a relative truth. It works for now; it is true for now. But that is not to say it will never be enhanced. Scientists gather data and formulate theories based on what they have. As new information is collected, the theory is modified and improved, to take account of new facts. Creationists, on the other hand, formulated theories based on the book of Genesis, gathered data to corroborate them, and discarded all information to the contrary. Facts were made to fit beliefs, rather than vice versa. Secondly, there are always going to be questions in the physical sciences for which current theories or laws have no provable explanation. That is inherent to the nature of science. And because scientists don't know all, creationists and others of an anti-science propensity will always have a void to exploit. And, of course, historically they have done just that. Quick to provide supernatural explanations for unknown causes or phenomena, they have specialized in focusing on the weakness of science and asking questions for which scientists had no conclusive proof. The history of the struggle between scientists and supernaturalists has been, and will continue to be, a perpetual process in which supernaturalists are retreating, while naturalists are advancing. Every time naturalists have found answers to the questions of supernaturalists, the latter have moved to new questions. And until naturalists can provide satisfactory explanations for everything, supernaturalists will always have an opening for divine intervention. The theory of evolution provides a prime example. Yet, it is a theory for which no absolutely conclusive proof is available. But, then, that is true of every law or theory in the physical sciences. If one seeks absolutes, statements which are true at all times, under all conditions, then he should stay with supernaturalists such as the creationists. They, alone, provide absolutes: absolutes which are absolutely wrong. They ignore or discount that which doesn't comply with a predetermined, eternal "truth," which is undoubtedly one of the greatest weaknesses of the entire Bible. It deals in absolutes. By saying "All have sinned" or all must die, it boxes itself into a corner, because exceptions aren't difficult to find in the Book itself.

True, evolutionists can't provide provable explanations for some questions; but creationists provide readily disprovable explanations for most questions. Originally, naturalists held sway 5% of the time and supernaturalists 95%. As naturalistic explanations have grown throughout history, as frontiers of science have expanded, supernaturalistic explanations have been forced to retreat. The percent of naturalistic influence has grown immeasurably, while the percent of supernaturalistic influence has decreased dramatically. But the former will never totally eradicate the latter until a provable natural explanation can be provided for every event, including those of the bygone ages. As Ingersoll once noted:

"At one time it was believed that a race of men existed with their heads beneath their shoulders. Returning travelers from distant lands were asked about the wonderful people and all replied that they had not seen them. Oh, said the believers in the monsters, the men with the heads beneath their shoulders live in a country you did not visit. And so the monsters lived and flourished until all the world was known. We cannot know the universe. We cannot travel infinite distances, and so, somewhere in shoreless space there will always be room for gods and ghosts, for heaven and hell." (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 2, p. 480).

One would think, though, that creationists and other supernaturalists would learn from history and admit they are fighting a losing battle. They are correct in feeling they can never be eradicated, because science will never know all, it will never become God; but they must realize their losses will grow with every scientific advance. Indeed, increasing numbers of biblicists are wisely abandoning the ramparts and leaving fundamentalists to cover the retreat.

REVIEWS

Interestingly enough, evangelicals, fundamentalists, and creationists don't agree with one another with respect to the original creative process. The Jehovah's Witnesses, for example, argue that each of the six days encompasses thousands of years.

"... some may say even the idea of this planet passing from a 'formless and waste' condition to its present form with continents, forests, plants, animals, and men, all in just six 24-hour days--this still is incredible! But where does the Genesis account say that the 6 days were 24-hours each? Though some religious groups teach this, the Genesis account does not say it. You yourself use the expression 'day' in a broad sense of your 'grandfather's day.' Likewise the Bible often used the word 'day' in a broad sense-Gen. 2:4. Keep in mind that the works spoken of in the first chapter of Genesis are those of God, not of man... Are God's 'days' of work controlled by the rotation of this globe? Obviously not. Of God, the Bible says:'One day is with Jehovah as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day'(2 Peter 3:8). And that even to God a 'day' can have more than one meaning is seen when comparing this text with Psalm 90:4 which says: 'A thousand years are in your eyes but...as a watch during the night.' So it is plain that the word 'day' can be used to refer to a 24-hour day, a person's lifetime, 1,000 years or even longer" (Is the Bible Really the Word of God, p. 18-19).

On pages 62 and 63 in the Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties Gleason Archer argues against 6 literal days of 24 hours each.

On the other hand, Henry Morris, one of the foremost creationists and Director of the Institute for Creation Research, supports six 24-hour periods. "The Hebrew word for'day' is 'yom' and this word can occasionally be used to mean an indefinite period of time, if the content warrants. In the overwhelming preponderance of its occurrences in the O.T., however, it means a literal day... Still further, the plural form of the word (Hebrew 'yamim") is used over 700 times in the O.T. and always, without exception, refers to literal 'days.' (The Bible Has the Answers, Henry Morris, p. 94). In denouncing the idea that each day represented an era, creationist Morris made a surprising admission. "Not only is the day-age theory unacceptable scripturally, but it also is grossly in conflict with the geological position with which it attempts to compromise. There are more than 20 serious contradictions between the Biblical order and events of the creative days and the standard geological history of the earth and its development, even if it were permissible to interpret the 'days' as 'ages.' For example, the Bible teaches that the earth existed before the stars, that it was initially covered by water, that fruit trees appeared before fishes, that plant life preceded the sun, that the first animals created were the whales, that the birds were made before insects, that man was made before woman, and many other things, all of which are explicitly contradicted by historical geologists and paleontologists." (Ibid. p. 94).

Jerry Falwell's mentor, fundamentalist John R. Rice, also discounted the day-age theory. "Gen. 1:5 surely spoke of literal day and literal night, and the inference from the statement, 'And the evening and the morning were the first day,' is that it was a literal day of evening and morning, 24-hours... There is no Bible evidence that the days of this chapter were longer periods." (Dr. Rice, Here is My Question, John R. Rice, p. 259).

In order to resolve the conflict between a 6 day creation and one involving millions of years, some biblicists devised the gap-theory. Heaven and earth were supposedly created as related in Gen. 1:1 and the earth proceeded to evolve over hundreds of millions of years, if not billions. Then a cataclysm destroyed the earth and returned it to its former state. Then with Gen. 1:2 the 6 days of creation began. In other words, hundreds of millions of years, a gap, existed between Gen. 1:1 and Gen. 1:2. The gap-theory attempts to satisfy both evolutionists and creationists. Creationist Morris gave the following appropriate response: "...the pressures...have been so heavy during the past century that many Bible scholars have felt desirable to reinterpret Genesis in some way that would accommodate the supposed geologic ages. Two such theories have been advanced, one placing the geologic ages 'during' the 6 days of creation (thus making the 'days' into 'ages'), and the other placing the ages 'before' the 6 days (thus turning the 6 days into days of 're-creation' following a great cataclysm which had destroyed the primal earth)..." (Ibid. p. 90). After discussing "numerous serious fallacies" in the gap-theory, Morris concludes: "The gap theory therefore really does not face the evolution issue at all, but merely pigeonholes it in an imaginary gap between Gen. 1:1 and 1:2. It leaves unanswered the serious problem as to why God would use the method of slow evolution over long ages in the primeval world, then destroy it and then use the method of special creation to re-create (in 6 days--Ed.) the same forms He had just destroyed. Furthermore. there is no geologic evidence of such a world-wide cataclysm in recent geologic history.... (During the Glacial Age--Ed.) ice sheets only extended into the middle latitudes, and certainly did not destroy all previous life. There is no Biblical evidence of such a worldwide pre-Adamic cataclysm either. A few tests, isolated from the contexts, may possibly be interpreted to fit in with the gap theory, but nowhere in the Bible is there a clear, straightforward account of the supposed primeval creation and the character of the hypothetical pre-Adamic cataclysm. This is strange in light of the importance which this theory has come to hold in the theologies of many Bible teachers and in the much-too-easy answers which they offer for this basic issue in the foundational history of the cosmos." (Ibid. p. 91-92)

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #61 from DB of Ontario, California

(In letter #43 in May 1984 issue, DB described his evolution away from God and was criticized by GLF in Letter #50 in the July Issue--Ed.). It's your fault! GLF's confusion (letter #50) probably comes from a typo you made in reproducing my letter #43. My original letter has the sentence, "But I believed I did know him." You omitted the "d" in the "believed" which changes to the present tense. As it stands, I would agree with GLF that the statement appears contradictory. I do not presently believe that I did know God personally, but I did at one time hold such a belief. My point was to show how a belief can bias one's interpretation of the Bible. My former beliefs were very strong, but false nonetheless. Perhaps GLF presently believes he-she has a special relationship with God and can not conceive of ever rejecting something so precious. Or perhaps he is afraid to admit that my defection from Christianity touches that close to home. I often hear from concerned friends, "If you had really known God you never would have rejected him." Or "Satan has led you astray from your first love." At one time in my life I did sincerely believe that I knew God personally; but now I can see where I was experiencing a common delusion, bolstered by irrational acceptance of ancient, absurd, and contradictory superstitious documents, the Bible. Most of my Christian friends try to ignore the facts of Biblical errancy. Instead, they try to attack me through psychological intimidations and emotional appeals. It would be interesting to hear how GLF responds to some of the specific textual problems presented in BE.

Editor's Response to Letter #61

Dear DB.

Please accept my apology for leaving the "d" off of "believed." I thought you inserted it accidentally.

Letter #62 from LM of Springfield, Missouri

Dear Mr. McKinsey.

After receiving and reading my first issue of BE (Nov. 1983), I must write, mostly because of 1 Peter 3:15. My second reason would be to compliment you on possessing a logically functioning mind with the insight to develop questions of interest.... The questions you ask regarding the flood do not disturb or even interest me, because with God all things are possible (Matt. 19:26). Also, the Christian is not to be a disrupter or fighter with questions and disputes of words (1 Tim. 6:3, 4, 20) but rather to keep themselves in the love and peace of God (Jude 21-23), to show forth what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God....

Editor's Response to Letter #62

Dear LM.

I appreciate your thoughtful compliment, but find your letter to be typical of others I have received. In essence, you sent me a critique of those who believe as I, liberally sprinkled with biblical quotations which I generally omitted. But what have you proved? Let me repeat! What have you proved, LM? The fallacy inherent in your reasoning, which is so indicative of biblicists, is that you assume the very point in dispute. You assume the Book is the word of God, and then quote it to prove points. You feel that if you have belief and can find a verse to support it, then you have proven your case. Yet you never substantiated your original premise. You ignore the biblical injunction to "Prove all things" (1 Thess. 5:21). You never prove the Bible is the word of God. Indeed, BE provides evidence to the contrary. If you could prove it's God's word or if you could provide evidence independent of the Bible that verses are accurate, then your commentary would carry some weight. As it is, it's a series of unfounded opinions, buttressed by nothing more than quotes from an errant writing. How could the Bible accurately reflect, agree with, or mirror the real world, when it doesn't even agree with itself?

A few of your specific points also need to be addressed. You stated you weren't bothered by my questions with regard to the Flood because God can do anything. A comment of this nature reflects the ultimate in closed-mindedness. In essence, you're saying, "I don't care what kind of facts, evidence, logic, or proof you have, if it conflicts with what I have already been told, then it's wrong." Can God abolish himself and then bring himself back into existence? Can God create an all-black white horse? Can God commit evil which will nullify his very definition? Can God make something that is both itself and not itself? Can God make a statement true and false simultaneously from the same perspective? Can God create something older or more powerful than himself? Secondly, you conveniently chose 1 Tim. 6 to show Christians should avoid disputes with people such as I, and ignored 2 Tim. 4:2 ("...convince, rebuke, and exhort, be unfailing in patience and in teaching"), 1 Peter 3:15 ("Always be prepared to make a defence to any one who calls you to account..."), and 2 Tim. 2:24-25. Aren't you selectively choosing which verses to follow? And lastly, if you believe the god of the Bible has a "good and acceptable and perfect will" exuding "love and peace," please read page 5 in the March 1983 issue of BE.

COMMENTARY

The Creation Accounts (Part Two of a Two-Part Series)

Last month's commentary on the scientific problems associated with the biblical account of creation noted there is one more version which occurred. There are actually two--the first beginning with Gen. 1:1 and concluding with Gen. 2:3, the second beginning at Gen. 2:4 and concluding the chapter. These are noteworthy in that they not only disagree with one another in numerous instances, but are internally plagued as well. Many examples of the former can be given.

- (1) "And God made the beast of the earth" (Gen. 1:25) and "So God created man in his own image" (Gen. 1:27), versus "God formed man of the dust of the ground" (Gen. 2:7) and "God formed every beast of the field and every fowl of the air, and brought them unto Adam"(Gen. 2:19). According to the 1st account man was created after the beasts. According to the 2nd he was created before them. In the latter instance, he had to have been created before the other beasts; otherwise, how could they have been brought to him? (
- 2) "And God created...every winged fowl" (Gen. 1:21) and "So God created man in his own image" (Gen. 1:27), versus "God formed man of the dust of the ground" (Gen. 2:7) and "...God formed...every fowl of the air (Gen. 2:19). In the 1st creation God made the fowl, then man. In the 2nd he made man, then the fowl.
- (3) "And the earth brought forth...the tree yeilding fruit...the third day" (Gen. 1:12-13) and "God created man in his own image...the sixth day" (Gen.1:27, 31), versus "God formed man of the dust of the ground" (Gen. 2:7) and "Out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is...good for food..." (Gen. 2:9). In the 1st creation God made the fruit trees on the third day and created man three days later. In the 2nd creation God made man before the fruit trees.
- (4) "And God said, 'Let the waters bring forth abundantly...fowl that may fly...'" (Gen. 1:20), versus "And out of the ground the Lord God formed every...fowl of the air..." (Gen. 2:19). According to the 1st creation all winged fowl were created out of the waters. Yet, the 2nd account says that every fowl of the air was created out of the ground.

- (5) "And God created...every winged fowl...the fifth day" (Gen. 1:21, 23) and God made the beast of the earth...the sixth day" (Gen. 1:25, 31), versus "And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every fowl of the air..." (Gen. 2:19). According to the 1st creation, fowl were created on the 5th day and beast on the 6th. Under the 2nd creation, fowl and beast were created at the same time; they formed one creative act.
- (6) "And God said, 'behold, I have given you...every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat'" (Gen. 1:29), versus "...of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it" (Gen. 2:17). In the last creation Adam may eat from any fruit tree; while in the second he may not eat the fruit of all trees.
- (7) "So God created man in his own image" (Gen. 1:27), versus "For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil" (Gen. 3:5) and "the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become one of us, to know good and evil" (Gen. 3:22). In the 1st creation man is made in the image of God; in the second, likeness is acquired by learning of good and evil.
- (8) "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created him; male and female created he them" (Gen. 1:27), versus "...but for Adam there was not found a help meet for him. And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam and he slept: and he took one of his ribs...and the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman" (Gen. 2:20-22). In the first creation man and woman appeared on earth together; in the second, man came first and later his rib was taken to make a woman.
- (9) "And the earth was without form, and void.... And the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters" (Gen. 1:2 and "God said, 'Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear': and it was so. And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas..." (Gen. 1:9-10), versus "...in the day that the Lord God made the earth...for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not to till the ground. But there went up a mist from the earth and watered the whole face of the ground" (Gen. 2:4-6). In the 1st creation the earth, when created, was covered with water and the land did not appear until the 3rd day. In the 2nd creation there was no water at first; the earth was dry land.
- (10) "And God said, 'Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind...upon the earth..." (Gen. 1:11) versus "...in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens, And every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew..." (Gen. 2:4-5). In the 1st. creation plants were created from the earth: they were a product of the earth. In the 2nd creation were created independent of the earth and then transferred to the earth. "Before it was in the earth" shows plants were created before they had contact with the earth.

- Although not necessarily contradictory, two additional inconsistencies are noteworthy. (11) "And God blessed them, and said unto them, 'Be fruitful, and multiply...and have dominion over...every living thing that moveth upon the earth'" (Gen. 1:28), versus "And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress and to keep it." (Gen. 2:15). Under the first creation God gave man and woman dominion over all things, and they were ordered to subdue the earth. Under the 2nd creation they were confined to the Garden and ordered to keep and dress it.
- (12) In the 1st creation account God is always called "God"; in the second he is always called "Lord God."

Besides contradictions and inconsistencies between the accounts, there are also problems within each. With respect to the first, the following are noteworthy:

- (1) "And God saw the light, that is was good: and God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night...the first day" (Gen. 1:4-5) versus "And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heavens to divide the day from the night....' And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night...the fourth day" (Gen. 1:14-16, 19). Why would God need to divide the day from the night on the 4th day when it was already done on the 1st day?
- (2) "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth...the 1st day" (Gen. 1:1, 5), versus "And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night...the 4th day" (Gen. 1:16, 19). According to science the earth was created after the sun, not before. Yet, Genesis says the sun was created three days after the earth.
- (3) "And the earth brought forth grass...and the tree yielding fruit...the third day" (Gen. 1:12-13), versus "And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly...the fifth day" (Gen. 1:21, 23). There are few reputable scientists who would say that the earth was covered with fruit-bearing trees before animal life appeared in the seas.
- (4) "And God called the firmament heaven" (Gen. 1:8), versus "...in the firmament of heaven" (Gen. 1:14,17). Are heaven and the firmament identical? The phrase "firmament of the heaven" implies they are not.
- (5) "And God blessed them, and said unto them, 'Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth...'" (Gen. 1:28). "Replenish" means that men or people must have existed before Adam.
- (6) "And on the 7th day God ended his work...and he rested on the 7th day..." (Gen. 2:2). If God ended his work on the seventh day, then he must also have worked on the 7th day. Unless he was working on the 7th day, he could not have stopped working on the 7th day. Therefore, God worked on all seven days. He worked on the sabbath.
- (7) "And God saw every thing that he made, and, behold, it was very good" (Gen. 1:31). How then could evil have entered a world which was good, yea perfect, when the work of creation was completed?

- (8) "And God said, 'Let us make man in our image, after our likeness...So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them" (Gen. 1:26-27). Is God one or many?
- (9) Gen. 1:26 ("God said, 'Let us make man in our image, after our likeness'") appears to contradict Isaiah 40:25, which says, "To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One."

The second account is also not without internal problems. For example, "But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:12) versus "...the serpent said unto the woman, ye shall not surely die" (Gen. 3:4) and "all the days that Adam lived were 969: and he died"(Gen. 5:5). Adam ate the forbidden fruit and did not die. The serpent told the truth and God didn't. If a spiritual death was intended, as many allege, then why wouldn't that also be the intent of the following verses. "And David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against the Lord. And Nathan said unto David, The Lord also hath put away thy sin: thou shalt not die. Howbeit because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord..., the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die" (2 Sam. 12:13-14). As the following verse shows, he certainly was not referring to a spiritual death. "And it came to pass on the 7th day, that the child died" (2 Sam. 12:18).

The narrative of events in the Garden of Eden, which is introduced in the second account, is not without problems either.

- (1) "...she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat and gave also unto her husband with, and he did eat" (Gen. 3:6), versus "God is the Rock, his work is perfect" (Deut. 32:4). If God's work is perfect and he created Adam and Eve, then they were perfect. How, then, could they have sinned?
- (2) "And the serpent said unto the woman...For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil" (Gen. 3:4-5) and "the Lord God said, 'Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil'" (Gen. 3:22). In effect, in Gen. 3:22 God is saying the serpent told the truth when he said that man would learn good and evil. But in the Book of John we are told the Devil is incapable of telling the truth. "You are of your father the devil, and your will is to do your father's desires. He was a murderer from the beginning, and has nothing to do with the truth, because there is no truth in him...for he is a liar and the father of lies" John 8:44 RSV).
- (3) "...Adam and his wife (Genesis relates no marriage--Ed.) hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God...and the Lord God called unto Adam and said unto him, Where art thou?" (Gen. 3:8-9), versus "There is no darkness...where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves" (Job 34:22). Apparently, either the workers of iniquity can hide themselves, or God is practicing deception.

Pascal's Wager

While engaged in a debate with a couple of ministers some time ago, the editor of BE again heard a familiar refrain, similar to that created by the 17th century French philosopher, Blaise Pascal. The latter asserted one should believe because it might be true. If it isn't, you have lost nothing; if true, you have gained everything, so why not believe and "play it safe"? A major problem with this is: Believe in what? Members of nearly every denomination and every religion contend one must believe their way in order to reach the promised land. Some believe that in order to reach heaven, one must merely accept Jesus as one's savior; others believe various sacraments are required; the Church of Christ, for example, believes baptism is obligatory. The "play it safe" approach would force one to adopt the beliefs of nearly every denomination or religion in existence. Once you chose the beliefs of one religion or denomination over another, you are no longer "playing it safe." You are gambling; you are betting that you have selected the correct road to salvation out of hundreds available. If baptism is a necessity, as some maintain, or other sacraments are a must, as others contend, then millions of people, including Christians, are lost. Even if you decide to "play it safe" by accepting the beliefs of everyone, you would become involved in an impossible situation, since many beliefs are mutually exclusive. From the Muslim perspective, for instance, all believers in the Trinity, which would include most Christians, are doomed to perdition and guilty of the grossest blasphemy. "In blasphemy indeed are those that say God is Christ the son of Mary." (Sura 5:17 in the Koran). "They do blaspheme who say: God is Christ the son of Mary.... Whoever joins other gods with God, God will forbid him in the Garden, and Fire will be his abode. There will for the wrongdoers be no one to help. They do blaspheme who say: God is one of three in a Trinity: for there is no God except One God. IF they desist not from their word (of blasphemy), verily a grievous penalty will befall the blasphemers among them. Why turn they not to God, and seek His forgiveness?...Christ the son of Mary was no more than an apostle." (Sura 5:72-75). "They say: God has begotten a son! Indeed ye have put forth a thing most monstrous! At it the skies are ready to burst, the earth to split asunder,...for it is not consonant with the majesty of God...that he should beget a son." (Sura 19:88-92). "In blasphemy indeed are those that say God is Christ the son of Mary" (Sura 5:17)

Christians who believe they are "playing it safe" are actually engulfed in many gambles. They are betting their particular denomination's requirements are correct, out of hundreds that exist; they are betting the Muslims are wrong in consigning them to hell for belief in the Trinity; they are betting some sacraments are not required; they are even betting the Bible is God's book, despite its degradation of Him. They are taking more chances than an investment banker on Wall Street. If it's not God's work and God does exist, one can only pity their fate. If a group of people were selling a book which described you as "a false friend, an unjust judge, a braggart, a hypocrite, a tyrant, sincere in hatred, jealous, vain and revengeful, false in promise, honest in curse, suspicious, ignorant, infamous and hideous" (Some Mistakes of Moses by Ingersoll: See also March 1983 issue of BE) and claimed the work was written and approved by you, how would you treat them if given the opportunity? Any believer, Christian or otherwise, who thinks he isn't making a lot of wagers, that somehow he "playing it safe," is only deluding himself.

REVIEWS

In Answers to Tough Questions Josh McDowell presented two major defenses that are usually offered to explain the "Two Creation" dilemma--the accounts are complementary and the second is not chronologically arranged. "It is a mistake to assume that the two Genesis narratives are duplicates, for they actually complement one another. The first outlined the broad processes of creation...while the second paid greater attention to the creation of man and set him with his mate in a specific geographical location" (Page 177). "Much of the problem results over the assumption by the critics that the sequence of chapter 2 is chronological, when it never was meant to be understood in that manner." (Ibid. p. 185).

Several problems accompany these explanations. First, out of 34 verses in the first account (KJV), 31 begin with the word "And", which is clearly used to denote sequence and chronology. This happened and, then, that happened. Out of 22 verses in the second account, 17 begin with "And" and serve the same function. There is nothing to justify the apologetic assumption that the first group of "Ands" denote sequence while the second do not. Secondly, one need only read chapter 2 beginning with verse 4 to see the events are arranged sequentially. Verse 7 (man's creation) would logically follow verse 5; verse 8 would logically follow verse 7; verse 9 would follow 8 (the Garden); verse 15 would follow verse 7 (the creation of man) and 8 (the Garden of Eden); 17 would follow 16; 20 would follow 19 (the naming of animals); 22 would follow 21 (the rib); and 23 would follow 22 (the woman). Indeed, understanding the 2nd version would be rather difficult if the events were not viewed sequentially.

Thirdly, Gen. 2:19 ("And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them") would present a contradiction, even if the second account were not sequential. As stated earlier, how could the animals be brought to Adam for naming unless Adam already existed? But according to the first account, man was the last being created. McDowell seeks to escape this problem by changing the verb "formed" to "had formed." He asserts that "in Gen. 2:19 there is not explicit warrant in the text for assuming that the creation of animals here happened immediately before their naming.... The proper equivalent English for the first verb in Gen. 2:19 is the pluperfect ("had formed")." (Ibid. p. 186). Apparently McDowell feels he knows Hebrew better than the scholars who translated all the following versions:KJV, RSV, LB, NASB, NAB, ASV, and the Jewish Masoretic text. Not one says "had formed." They all say "formed." Fourthly, even if the 2nd account is less general and focuses more on man specifically, that has little bearing on the chronological disagreements.

When the accounts discuss the same events, the sequences must agree. Both mention man, fowl, beast, fruit trees, woman, and plants.

One of the specific differences addressed by McDowell involves the creation of man and woman. "The sequential differences with regard to the creation of man and woman are also a major point of contention, but if properly understood the problem vanishes.... By the simple phrase "male and female created He them," we are not told how they were made or if they were created at the same time. There is only the indefinite statement that they were created. In the second account, when the writer elaborates the story of mankind's origins it is explained in detail how man and woman were formed respectively. This is not a matter of inconsistency, but of a general statement followed by a detailed account..." (Ibid. p. 184). McDowell conveniently ignored the verse immediately after 1:27. Gen. 1:27 says, "...male and female created he them" which is followed by "And God blessed them and said unto them, 'Be fruitful, and multiply...'" (Gen. 1:28). They were created simultaneously and blessed by God immediately thereafter and told to multiply. Not only does the "And" at the beginning of verse 28 denote sequence, but the blessing would logically immediately follow their creation. Moreover, the order to "be fruitful and multiply" is written in such a manner as to not only be the first comment of God to Adam and Eve, but one addressed to both of them. Whereas, Gen. 2:16-18 shows God conversed with Adam alone before Eve even existed. In other words, unlike that which is related in the 2nd account, the first account shows they were created together, as part of one act.

In Bible Difficulties apologist Arndt stated, "To all of the attacks made upon the account of Creation as presented by Moses the Christian can reply, in the first place, that the pronouncement of his God on the origin of the world is more important to him than the dicta of scientists. In the second place,...none of the critics was present when the universe was created..." (Page 109). Arndt's first comment demonstrates the close-mindedness that is so indicative of the apologetic mentality. "I don't care what evidence you have, if it contradicts the Bible then it's false." BE confines itself primarily to an internal analysis of the Book for this very reason. Secondly, Arndt claims none of the critics was present when the world was created. True, but then, neither was Moses. At least scientific critics can provide rocks, fossils, and other material evidence, which were present upon which to make judgements. Moses gave us nothing more than a book, assuming he wrote it.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #63 from VT of Huron, California (Part a)
(After criticizing Paine and Ingersoll, VT writes--Ed.) If one could destroy the Bible, in one broad sweep you would in effect destroy the Christian Church. This has long been the aim and purpose of all anti-Christian encounter groups. Destroy and divide and disarm might be called the battle cry of those that would apostate the Bible. The goal of the secular humanism is to dethrone God and elevate man. If you don't call yourself a humanist, you certainly fill the void for one. The humanists think, talk and respond to the Bible just as you do. They disavow any belief in or association with the God of the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #63 (Part a)

Dear VT.

There are several points in your letter that need to be addressed. First, how do you know the motives of others? You mean everyone opposed to the Bible has an ulterior motive and actually seeks to destroy Christianity? What is your evidence for this? A survey? Motives vary widely, and for you to say this applies to "all" is presumptuous at best. BE, for one, intends to expose the Bible to critical analysis and refutation. If the abolishment of Christianity would be an unavoidable outcome, then Christianity is no more valid than the Book upon which it rests, and merits the same fate. Secondly, the battle cry of those in opposition to the Bible could more accurately be referred to as "Read, Refute, and Reveal." Your apologetic education has created an unwillingness to accept any critic of the Bible as a fair and honest questioner with valid and justifiable evidence. Thirdly, secular humanists are capable of speaking for themselves, but I take exception to your implied comment that I seek to dethrone God and elevate myself. You have dethroned God by attributing a Book to him that not only puts his character in the worst light imaginable, but attributes an incredible number of contradictory and inaccurate statements to him. Indeed, the entire history of this publication has been devoted to an itemized refutation of that which you assert without evidence. Don't just say the Bible is God's word, prove it; prove it as you would in a court of law. By what rationale did you conclude that I have been elevating myself by exposing the Bible? Are you saying the information BE has brought out should not be made available to people? Is that what you want? Are you saying the clergy will perform the task as well? After giving a speech to 50 people recently, I was told by a lady that my teachings would shake or destroy the faith of people and leave them nothing to believe in, nothing to hold on to. I asked her, "Are you saying people should not be told about the myriad of problems within the Book, that they should be kept in the dark, that they should not be given an opportunity to judge for themselves what is valid and what is not? Is that what you want? Are you saying others should do the thinking for them? Are you saying it is better for people to believe that which is false than believe in alternatives, or nothing? Are you saying as long as believers are content and well-behaved, accuracy is of little concern? Are you saying the end justifies the means? Pacific, orderly, controlled individuals (often referred to in the Bible as slaves and sheep) justify deception, falsehood, and rationalization? Is that what you prefer?

Hundreds of clergymen and theologians throughout history have noticed the tremendously large number of problems in the Bible. They can read as well as anyone, and aren't ignorant or unintelligent. But they have ignored, rationalized, and distorted the meaning of verses beyond recognition. Why? Mainly because they have sincerely believed the alternative is even worse. From their perspective, the only alternative is moral chaos--no Bible, no controls, no morality. So they have accepted the Book, fully cognizant of its imperfections, out of a misguided belief that morality arises from the words one hears rather than the environment in which one lives. And finally, not only do humanists and I "disavow any belief in...the God of the Bible," but no doubt God does as well. You would be wise to follow suit.

Letter #60 from the August, 1984 Issue Concludes (Part b)

I was reared in the fundamentalist baptist religion and went to a non-denominational "Christian" school and believed all these things fervently--now that I think back on it I remember questioning lots of things in my mind, but pushed them back because of what I was taught--that it is perfect. So any questions I might have had were because God was so intelligent and far above me that I couldn't understand what he was saying. I only began soul-searching when my friend (now husband) began asking me questions that I couldn't answer. And together we slowly came to the same conclusion. For instance, he asked me about the order of creation--the grass was created before the sun--how did the grass photosynthesize? Gradually the more I studied the more I learned--really learned and I've drawn my own conclusions.... In fact the Bible is a far more interesting subject now than it was when I considered myself a "born-again Christian." And I was very devout.... It has taken me 6 or 7 years to come this far. I'm 26. The biblicists say. "The truth shall set you free" and they are correct. I'm far freer and happier than I was in my guilt-inducing Bible days.... I feel you have put the "study" in Bible study. Your work is much appreciated by us. Keep it up.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

Some readers have asked if there is any way they can aid BE. By all means! Most areas in the United States and Canada have call-in radio programs. The Editor of BE has been on several programs recently and found the dialogue and debate aspect of a call-in format to be highly effective. We would greatly appreciate assistance in this regard. You need only call stations with call-in programs and tell them you have an editor of a periodical who would be willing to go on-the-air and provide a much more balanced presentation of the Bible. Stress the importance of fair play and a responsible alternative to evangelists. This should be particularly effective if you can relate instances in which evangelists and other apologists have been provided an opportunity to express their views. Persistence helps! If the station sounds interested, please have them write us or call (513) 864-1268 any day after 5:00pm (EST) or on weekends. A three-hour long distance dialogue on WKBN (Youngstown) and a 4-hour discussion on WING (Dayton) recently were quite beneficial. Every appearance has resulted in a wider audience, additional subscribers, and more reflective populace.

COMMENTARY: Biblical "Math"

From a scientific perspective, one of the more interesting aspects of the Bible concerns the number of times numerical calculations are inaccurate. Poor addition, erroneous measurements and fallacious counting are all too evident. Several examples are noteworthy:

- (a) "... and the sons of Zerubbabel; Meshullam, and Hananiah, Jusha-bhesed, five." (1 Chron. 3:19-20). How can there be five sons of Zerubbabel when 7 males and one female are listed?
- (b) "And it had for its inheritance Beer-sheba, Sheba, Moladah, Hazar-shual, Balah, Ezem, Eltolad, Bethul, Hormah, Ziklag, Beth-marcaboth, Hazarsuah, Beth-lebaoth, and Sharuhem- thirteen cities with their villages" (Josh. 19:2-6 RSV). Fourteen cities are listed, not 13.
- (c) "The cities belonging to the tribe of the people of Judah in the extreme South, toward the boundary of Edom, were Kabzeel, Eder, Jagur, Kinah, Dimonah, Adadah, Kedesh, Hazor, Ithnan, Ziph, Telem, Bealoth, Hazor-hadattah, Kerioth-hezron (that is Hazor). Amam, Shema, Moladah, Hazar-gaddah, Heshmon, Bethpelet, Hazar-shual, Beer-sheba, Biziothiah, Baalah, Iim, Ezem, Eltolad, Chesil, Hormah, Ziklag, Madmannah, Sansannah, Lebaoth, Shilhim, Ain, and Rimmon; in all twenty-nine(29) cities, with their villages" (Josh. 15:21-32 RSV). Thirty-six cities are listed, not 29.
- (d) "...and the sons of Shemaiah; Hattush, and Igeal and Barial, and Neariah, and Shaphat, six" (1Chron. 3:22). Five names don't total six.
- (e) "...the sons of Jeduthun; Gedaliah, and Zeri, and Jeshiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, six, under the hands of their father Jeduthun,..." (1 Chron. 25:3). Again, five names do not total six.
- (f) "And in the lowland, Eshtaol, Zorah, Ashnah, Zanoah, En-gannim, Tappuah, Enam, Jarmuth, Adullam, Socoh, Azekah, Sha-araim, Adithaim, Gederah, Gederothaim: fourteen cities with their villages" (Josh. 15:33-36 RSV). Fifteen cities are listed, not 14. Biblical authors not only counted inaccurately but often added with comparable precision.
- (g) "The whole congregation together (those who returned from the Captivity-Ed.) was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore (42,360)" (Ezra 2:64). The number of people in each tribe that returned from the Captivity are listed from Ezra 2:3 to Ezra 2:60. One need only total the figures to see that 29,818 returned, not 42,360- an error of 12,542.
- (h) A similar problem is encountered in Neh. 7:66, which says, "the whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore (42,360)." One need only add the figures between Neh. 7:8 and Neh. 7:62 to see that the total for all the tribe should have been 31,089, not 42,360-- an error of 11,271. Besides adding inaccurately, Ezra and Nehemiah can't agree on what the total should be. The former supports 29,818 while the latter asserts 31,089.

- (i) "And this is the number of them: Thirty (30) charges of gold, a thousand (1,000) charges of silver, nine and twenty (29) knives, Thirty (30) basins of gold, silver basins of a second sort four hundred and ten (410), and vessels a thousand (1,000). All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred (5,400)" (Ezra 1:9-11). Even if all these items were composed of silver and gold, they would not total 5,400 ($30 + 1,000 + 29 + 30 + 410 + 1,000 = 2,499$ not 5,400).
- (j) "And these were the sons of Levi by their names; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari" (Num. 3:17) and "Those that were numbered of them (the Gershonites-Ed.)...were seven thousand and five hundred (7,500)" (Num. 3:22) and "...these are the families of the Kohathites...eight thousand and six hundred (8,600)" (Num. 3:27-28) and "...these are the families of the Merari. And those that were numbered of them,...were six thousand and two hundred (6,200)" (Num.3:33-34), versus "All that were numbered of the Levites,...were twenty and two thousand (22,000)" (Num. 3:39). The author of Numbers added inaccurately, since $7,500 + 8,600 + 6,200$ equals 22,300, not 22,000.

Besides fallacious counting and adding, biblical authors had difficulty measuring and computing.

- (k) "And he made a molten sea, ten cubits from one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about" (1 Kings 7:23). How could a circle be 10 cubits in diameter and 30 cubits in circumference? Since pi is 3.14, the circumference must be 31.40 (3.14×10) cubits.
- (l) "Thirty and two years old (32) was he (Jehoram-Ed.) when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight (8) years, and departed without being desired. Howbeit they buried him in the city of David,... And the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead:... So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned. Forty and two years old (42) was Ahaziah when he began to reign..." (2 Chron. 21:20). If Jehoram began to reign at age 32 and ruled 8 years, he died at age 40. Yet his son took over immediately and was 42 years old. The son, Ahaziah, was two years older than his father, Jehoram.
- (m) Ezek. 40:27 is translated as followed in three different versions: "...and he measured from gate to gate the south an hundred (100) cubits" (KJV). "He measured from gate to gate one hundred and seventy-five (175) feet" (Modern Language). "And the distance between the passageway was 175 feet" (Living Bible). If 100 cubits equals 175 feet, then one cubit equals $1 \frac{3}{4}$ feet. On the other hand, these versions translate Gen. 6:15 as follows: "...The length of the ark shall be three hundred (300) cubits, the breadth of it fifty (50) cubits, and the height of it thirty (30) cubits" (KJV). "...The length of the ark four hundred and fifty (450) feet; its width seventy-five (75) feet and its depth forty-five (45) feet" (Modern Language). "Make it 450 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 45 feet high" (Living Bible). If 300 cubits equals 450 feet, then 1 cubit equals 1 1/2 feet. The authors of the various versions of the Bible can't agree on the length of a cubit. Is it 1 3/4 or 1 1/2 feet long?

The Matriarchs

The January, 1984 issue of BE discussed the immoral character of many well-known Old Testament patriarchs. It should be noted, however, that many OT patriarchs exhibited immoral proclivities as well. For example:

- (1) Michal lied to Saul-"And when Saul sent messengers to take David, she said, He is sick" (1Sam. 19:14);
- (2) Jael murdered Sisera-"Then Jael Heber's wife took a nail of the tent, and took an hammer in her hand, and went softly unto him and smote the nail into his temples, for he was fast asleep and weary. So he died" (Judges 4:21);
- (3) Rachel deceived her father-"Now Rachel had taken the images and put them in the camel's furniture, and sat upon them. And Laban searched all the tent, but found them not. And she said to her father, Let it not displease my lord that I cannot rise up before thee; for the custom of women is upon me. And he searched, but found not images" (Gen. 31:34-35);
- (4) Instead of marrying one of her cousins, Ruth went to bed with another of them- "He (Boaz-Ed.) said, Who are you? And she answered, I am Ruth, your maidservant: spread your skirt over your maidservant, for you are next of kin" (Ruth 3:9 RSV);
- (5) Sarah lied when she claimed she did not laugh-"But Sarah denied, Saying, I did not laugh; for she was afraid. He said, No but you did laugh" (Gen. 18:15 RSV);
- (6) Tamar seduced the father of her late husband (Gen. 38:6-19);
- (7) Rahab was a common prostitute- "And they went, and came into an harlot's house, named Rahab, and lodged there" (Josh. 2:1)
- (8) And Bathsheba was an adulteress, since she appears to have gone to David willingly- "Then David sent for her and when she came he slept with her" (2Sam. 11:4 LBV). Four of these women are listed in the genealogies of Jesus-- Tamar (Matt. 1:3), Rahab (Matt. 1:5), Ruth (Matt. 1:5), and Bathsheba (Matt. 1:6)--which certainly doesn't say much for his pedigree.

The Book of Mormon

Although BE does not normally engage in extra-biblical discussions, and occasional digression is appropriate. Some topics are so relevant to the Bible's validity, or of such importance that their omission would be a significant oversight. The Book of Mormon is a good example. Because it is viewed by many as comparable in weight to the Bible, and we have all been contacted by its adherents, an abbreviated analysis of its contents is in order. Points one might want to mention when Mormons come to visit are the following:

- (a) According to Alma 7:9-10, Jesus was supposed to have been born in Jerusalem, not Bethlehem-- "...for behold, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and the Son of God cometh upon the face of the earth. And behold, he shall be born of Mary, at Jerusalem..., she being a virgin...who shall be overshadowed and conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost;"
- (b) According to Moriah 26:23, God created sin. "For it is I that taketh upon me the sins of the world; for it is I that hath created them...:"
- (c) The list of the 12 disciples in the Book of Mormon in no way resembles that of the Bible. "...behold Nephi and his brother whom he had raised from the dead, whose name was Timothy, and also his son, whose name was Jonas, and also Mathoni, and Mathoniah, his brother and Kumen, and Kumenochi, and Jeremiah, and Shemnon, and Jonas, and Zedekiah, and Isaiah--now these are the names of the disciples whom Jesus had chosen...." (3 Nephi 9:4);
- (d) While the Bible promotes the subservience of women and slavery, the Book of Mormon also buttresses racism. "And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which was a curse upon them because of their transgression and their rebellion..." (Alma 3:6). "...wherefore, as they were white, and exceedingly fair and delightsome, that they might not be enticing unto my people the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them.... And cursed shall be they seed of him that mixeth with their seed" (2 Nephi 5:21-23). "And their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white like unto the Nephites; And their daughters became exceedingly fair..." (3 Nephi 2:15-16). "O my brothers, I fear that unless ye shall repent of your sins that skins will be whiter than yours, when ye shall be brought with them before the throne of God" (Jacob 3:8).
- (e) Most interesting is the fact that Christians condemn polygamy, which the Bible does not denounce, except possibly in Deut. 17:17, while Mormons practiced polygamy, which the Book of Mormon does denounce. "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord" (Jacob 2:24). "For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none; For I, the Lord God, delight in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination to me..." (Jacob 2:27-28). "...Riplakish did not do that which was right in the sight of the Lord, for he did have many wives and concubines..." (Ether 10:5). "For behold, he (Noah--Ed.) did not keep the commandments of God, but he did walk after the desires of his own heart. And he had many wives and concubines. And he did cause his people to commit sin..." (Mosiah 11:2). "...and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old desiring many wives and concubines..." (Jacob 1:15).
- (f) Anti-semitism is also a significant factor in the Book of Mormon. "Wherefore, as I said unto you, it must needs be expedient that Christ...should come among the Jews, among those who are the more wicked part of the world; and they shall crucify him...and there is none other nation on earth that would crucify their God?" (2 Nephi 10:3). "For I, Hefhi, have not taught them many things concerning the manner of the Jews; for their works were works of darkness, and their doings were doings of abominations" (2 Nephi 25:2). (See also: Jacob 4:14).

- (g) "And lastly, like the Bible, the Book of Mormon contradicts itself with respect to how one is saved, assuming salvation exists. Is it by faith or works? "And whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the Kingdom of God. And whoso believeth not in me, and is not baptized, shall be damned" (3 Nephi 11:33-34) and "...for he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Ether 4:18), versus "...if ye keep the commandments of God ye shall be saved" (Mosiah 12:33) and "if ye shall be obedient to the commandments, and endure to the end, ye shall be saved..." (1 Nephi 22:31).

REVIEWS

In the Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties Gleason Archer sought to answer the problem presented in section (k) of this month's commentary on biblical "math."

"While it is true that the more exact calculation of pi is essential for scientific purposes, or for the manufacture of precision parts in a factory the use of approximate proportions or totals is a familiar practice in normal speech, even today. If the statistical statements concerning the population of cities or nations were subjected to the same stringent standard as that leveled at 1 Kings 7:23, then we would have to say that all population statistics are in error...any exact sum that might be true at 1:00AM on a given day would be inaccurate by 1:00PM that same day. It is perfectly proper to speak of the circumference of any circle as being three times its diameter if we were speaking approximately.... The Hebrew author here is obviously speaking in the approximate way that is normal practice even today" (Ibid.p. 198-199).

Professor Archer is on the Executive Board of the International Council on Biblical Inerrancy and one of the foremost proponents of an errorless Scripture. Yet, he admits the mathematical calculation in 1 King 7:23 is inaccurate. The analogy drawn between the computations of biblicalists and those of demographers has no relevance, since perfection is at issue, not varying degrees of accuracy. Population experts aren't attributing perfection to their figures, while inerrantists do attribute perfection to theirs. An "approximate" figure is not a perfect figure. The Bible is either perfect, i.e. inerrant, or it isn't. There is no in between. To admit a calculation is only "approximate" is to admit that insofar as perfection is concerned, the calculation is false. There is no evidence the Hebrew author was "obviously speaking in the approximate way." The analogy is also inappropriate because population figures are fluid and ever-changing, while the value of pi and the bowl's size are static.

Archer also contends that "if the rod used to mark out a length of five cubits for the radius (10 cubits in diameter--Ed.) were used to measure the inside circumference of the same bowl-shaped vessel here described, then it would take exactly six of those five-cubit measures to complete the circumference" (Ibid. p. 199). The major flaw accompanying this explanation arises from the fact that only one circumference is mentioned. Nothing is said about an inside circumference, nor is the thickness of the brim even mentioned. Archer arbitrarily assigned it a degree of thickness which would allow the outside diameter to measure 10 cubits while the inside circumference measured 30 cubits, which is slightly less than 31.40 (3.14 x 10), the true circumference. One can't help but question the veracity of apologetic scholarship when rationalizations of this nature are freely employed.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #63 from VT of Huron, California Continues from Last Month's Issue (Part b)

There are two faiths: One that fails and one that triumphs. One that affirms death, and one that affirms life. One that rejects authentic human existence, and one that exalts it. One that denies God and man, and one that praises God and serves His people.

Editor's Response to Letter #63 (Part b)

The problem with this kind of commentary, VT, is that, except for your comments on God, humanists, agnostics, and atheists couldn't agree with you more. Religion, which they equate with superstition, fails; rationality triumphs. Faith affirms death; reason affirms life. Religion rejects authentic human existence, while humanism exalts it. Religion denies; humanism serves the people best. This is the kind of blind alley one encounters by asserting without proof, and is indicative of many publications on the market. After reading much that is available, one can't help but ask: What have I read that I can use, and what have I covered that's been proved? Opinions abound but proofs do not, and unfortunately too many people can neither distinguish between them nor exercise the self-discipline necessary to collect a convincing body of the latter. It's easier and more enjoyable to summarize to the jury than present evidence that would logically lead to the summation.

Letter #63 Concludes (Part c)

Why is it you want to exert so much energy talking and writing about something you consider total error? Is it because of your love and concern for your fellow beings? What is it that makes all the humanists, atheists, and agnostics want to spend so much time on something that they consider blatantly absurd? Could it be because Jesus is alive? Could it be because the Bible is still God's word in all its power and conviction? The Bible points to God but the unbeliever wants to dethrone God and place man at the center of life. I'll not quote scripture since (of course) you don't believe it to be true. As a nation will get the kind of government it deserves, a person will get the kind of god he deserves.

Editor's Response to Letter #63 (Part c)

Several of your points are misleading, VT. First BE has never claimed the Bible is "total error." Virtually any book available on a library shelf has some truth therein. The question is one of degree, not kind. Second, the very fact that the Bible is permeated with error while tenaciously believed by so many is all the more reason to read, reveal and refute its contents. One shouldn't run from error when so many people are adversely affected by its presence. Indeed, one should proceed in the opposite direction. Otherwise, biblicists will always have a privileged sanctuary to which they can retreat with impunity, whenever engaged in controversy. Third, surely you aren't contending Jesus is physically alive today. If, on the other hand, you are referring to a "spiritual" presence, then one could say as much of Mohammed, Buddha, and others, since they are alive in the minds of millions. Fourth, your unsubstantiated assertions that the Bible is God's word and opponents seek to dethrone God and elevate man were answered last month. Fifth, could your reluctance to quote scripture be attributable to the fact that verses to support your position are easily counteracted? For purposes of dialogue, whether you or I believe a biblical verse to be true is not as important as whether or not another part of the Bible believes it to be correct. And lastly, your statement to the effect that people will get the kind of god they deserve is superficially profound but wholly inaccurate, since there is only one kind of god, according to biblicists. If, on the other hand, you mean god exercises different kinds of behavior appropriate to one's activities, then you face the unenviable task of explaining why so many moral people are plagued like Job, while corrupt individuals often experience the least discomfort. Incidentally, if a nation gets the kind of government it deserves, then millions of people must be asking themselves where their nation went wrong.

However, it must be said in your favor, VT, that your willingness to repeatedly purchase, read, weigh, and respond to BE shows you are open-minded and sincerely seeking the truth. For this you are to be applauded.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Letter #64 from MP of Tulsa, Oklahoma

I got the Oct. 1984 issue today. I'd like to comment on your response to Letter #63. The biblicist who asserts both salvation-through-faith (fideism) and the necessity of Bible belief for morality, puts himself in a logical bind. According to the fideistic position, you are saved not by being moral, but by having faith. In that sense the biblical fideist assumes amorality, since he holds that in the end morality doesn't count. One can have faith and be immoral at the same time, and the result is still salvation. So you can respond that the Bible does not need to be "replaced," since it is not even responsible for morality now.

As for my local efforts to spread the word: I've put up a number of your 81-2 x 11 announcements around the campus of the University of Tulsa,.... As for call-in programs, I'm sorry to inform you that they don't do well.... Tulsa is not a cerebral town, so the call-in show does not prosper. However, I shall continue to cast about for more avenues....

Editor's Response to Letter #64

Dear MP.

We greatly appreciate your efforts to obtain a hearing for BE, especially on a radio talk show. Hopefully others will follow your lead and contact stations in their areas. BE needs assistance, and this is an excellent way for people to become actively involved in opposing evangelicals, fundamentalists, TVpreachers, and the "Moral Majority."

Letter from ET of Indianapolis, Indiana

Dear Sir.

In the BE issue No. 21 in response to Letter #62 from LM ,when he says, "With God all things are possible" (Matt. 19:26), you should have referred him to Judges 1:19, which says, "And the Lord was with Judah, and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain, but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley because they had chariots of iron." Ha! If the Lord is that weak, what would he do if put up against a troop of Boy Scouts with .22 rifles?

And on the evolution issue...long ago I came to the conclusion that evolution is a universal cosmic law. Just the same as gravitation, centrifugal force, momentum, etc. Evolution is chnge, evolution is an arrow in flight, a tree growing.... One of the old Greek philosophers put it well when he said, "You cannot step into a river at the same place twice." Without evolution nothing would or could happen (change).... Without the cosmic law of evolution NOTHING could happen, the atom would be frozen. Evolution is not a theory. It is an ABSOLUTE FACT! The Bible thumpers cannot deny this!

Editor's Response to Letter #65

Dear ET.

I couldn't agree with you more. Long ago, I, too, concluded that evolution is a fact, but the point I tried to make in Issue #21 is that it's going to take more than just stating we have come to that conclusion to convince people such as Duane Gish and Henry Morris. We have to do our homework. We have to validate evolution because, believe me, those you call Bible-thumpers most assuredly do deny it.

Letter #66 from AR of New York, New York

Dear Dennis...

I have just finished reading the sample issue of your periodical and loved it. It is so nice to hear the voice of reason among the clamor of irrational whimworshippers. I have had the honor of taking up the sword of reason and debating against the christian fundamentalists. It has been no difficult task once you understand the crux of their position. They can be a slippery lot, however, and I have always found it helpful to focus on key issues.

- (1) Faith verses Reason, make them explain faith, show them the differences, write out the definitions etc. Everything hinges on this. Their blind overriding "Faith" in the face of all evidence to the contrary.
- (2) Keep the burden of proof on them. Ask them the question, jot down their answer, investigate their responses. They are easier led than pushed.
- (3) Take it literally. You are very keen on this and I agree totally. Once they begin interpreting the Bible, they will try to make it say anything they want it to. They don't have firm grasp on reality anyway. It is important to keep them grounded.... Suffice it to say that I admire your style and integrity. I agree with what you are doing. Thomas Paine would, I am sure, appreciate your work.

Editor's Response to Letter #66

Dear AR.

Several other readers of BE have also engaged biblicists and would like to know what tactics and strategies people have found most effective. BE would like to offer an open forum over the next few months on this topic. Readers are asked to send letters describing what they feel are the most effective measures one can employ to counteract biblicists, ranging from Falwell and Swaggart to neighbors and acquaintances.

Letter #67 from MF of New Haven, Connecticut

Dennis.

Thanks for a wonderful viewpoint. Thank god for freedom of speech here in Amerika. Last spring in a Renaissance Lit class, I had the pleasure of doing a nifty little experiment which simply reinforced all my earlier assumptions. Yes, the bible has many holes, and our experiment showed some of them. What we did was translated a portion of the RSV into French, then later into Spanish, than back to English. We stuck with the 23rd Psalm, Acts, and a bit of Exodus. My team was in charge of moving 23rd towards what you might call a french translation. We literally fished for French equivalents to the English words. I can't tell you what a mess things became. There were some words that had more than three French words, so we had to "toss the coin." Sometimes there was no word at all, so we just found something close. When another team finally read the "new" English version in class, we got quite a laugh. Many of us could remember just what we did add to the confusion. Psalm 23 came out like this. "God is quide, but I don't want. He brings me downs in grassy fields. He brings out my spirits, and leads me to still waters. He sends me the right way; his way." This being just three translations, imagine what may have happened from early scripture to now....

COMMENTARY

Jesus, the Imperfect Beacon (Part One of a Four Part Series)

In issues 2, 3, and 9 BE discussed some of the reasons Jesus is unqualified to act as the perfect light to lead mankind on the road to morality and "salvation." A much more extensive, if not exhaustive, listing is now in order. The Bible, itself, independent of outside sources, provides more than enough data to prove Jesus is not worthy of the emulation accorded him by millions. In addition to reasons mentioned in prior issues, the following statements by Jesus are noteworthy:

- (1) " And Jesus said, 'Go to the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples'(Matt. 26:18). Jesus should have displayed better manners. You don't invite yourself into someone's home. First you receive an invitation.
- (2) "And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do" (Luke 12:4). Jesus advised others to show courage when threatened, but often backed down, fled, escaped, or hid when faced with similar situations. "After these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill him" (John 7:1) and "Then they took up stones to cast at him: but Jesus hid himself, and went out of the temple, going through the midst of them, and passed by" (John 8:59) and "Then the Pharisees went out, and held council against him, how they might destroy him. But when Jesus knew it, he withdrew himself from thence: and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all; and charged them that they should not make him known..." (Matt. 12:14-16) and "Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death. Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews..." (John 11:53-54) and "Therefore they sought again to take him: but he escaped out of their land..." (John 10:39) and "...Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter" (Mark 1:45). (See also: John 6:15). Jesus not only fled but advised others to follow his example. "But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another" (Matt. 10:23). He apparently felt discretion was the better part of valor. Bravery was not one of his strongest attributes.
- (3) "...but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.... Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Matt. 19:17,19) and "the second (great commandment) is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Matt. 22:39) versus "A new commandment I give to you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another" (John 13:34). If loving thy neighbor as thyself was an OT commandment, how could it be a new commandment?

- (4) "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; ...and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. 11:29-30) versus "But beware of men: for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues; and ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake..." (Matt. 10:17-18) and "ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake:...But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye to another,,"(Matt. 10:22-23) and ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake" (Luke 21:17) and "In the world ye shall have tribulation" (John 16:33). Being scourged, hated, and persecuted does not sound like a "light" and "easy" burden.
- (5) "I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star" (Rev. 22:16). The genealogies in Matt. 1 and Luke 3 trace Jesus' descent from David to Joseph. If Jesus came from a virgin birth, then Joseph was not his physical father and he could not be a physical descendant of David. As mentioned in the June 1983 issue, Mary's lineage is not even discussed.
- (6) "For I am with thee (Paul-Ed.) and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee" (Acts 18:10) versus "...and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul" (Acts 21-32) and "And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth" (Acts 23:2) and "...I (Paul-Ed.) am more; in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned..."(2 Cor. 11:23-25). Is Jesus the kind of friend one can trust?
- (7) "And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness..." (Luke 16:9) versus "Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Luke 16:13).
- (8) "How much then is a man better than a sheep?" (Matt. 12:12) versus "...and I lay down my life for the sheep" (John 10:15) and "I am the sheperd, and know my sheep" (John 10:14) and "Feed my lambs" (John 21:15) and "Feed my sheep" (John 21:16). (See also: John 10:11,26,27 Matt. 10:16 and Mark 6:34). Jesus says men are better than sheep, yet repeatedly calls his followers sheep.
- (9) " If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true" (John 5:31) versus "Though I bear witness of myself, yet my record is true" (John 8:14).
- (10) "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works" (Matt. 5:16) versus "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your father which is in heaven" (Matt. 6:1).
- (11) "...that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed on the earth from the blood of innocent Abel to the blood of Zechariah the son of Barachiah whom you murdered between the sanctuary and the altar" (Matt. 23:35 RSV) versus "the spirit of God took possession of Zechariah the son of Jehoida the priest, and he stood above the people,... they conspired against him, and... stoned him with stones..."(2 Chron. 24:20-21 RSV). As the latter verses show, Zechariah was the son of Jehoida, not Barachiah. The name Barachiah is nowhere to be found in the OT.

- (12) "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy" (Matt. 5:43). This statement does not exist in the OT either. In fact, Prov. 24:17 says, "Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth..."
- (13) "And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her" (Mark 10:11, Luke 6:18), versus "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery" (Matt. 19:9). In the book of Matthew, Jesus said a man could put away his wife if one factor--fornication--is involved. In Mark and Luke he allowed no exceptions.
- (14) "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20), versus "For ye have the poor always with you; but me ye have not always" (Matt.26:11), Mark 14:7, John 12:8) and "Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am thither ye cannot come" (John 7:34). Is this the kind of friend one can rely on?
- (15)"Judge not, and ye shall be not judged; condem not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive,and ye shall be forgiven" (Luke 6:37, Matt. 7:1), versus "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment" (John 7:24). Jesus stated men are not to judge but, then, allowed it under certain conditions. As in the case of divorce, he can't seem to formulate a consistent policy.
- (16) "...I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit" (John 12:21). Jesus exhibited rather weak comprehension of science. How can the dead produce anything?
- (17) "Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it?" (Mark 9:50). Again, poor science! Indeed, poor logic! How could salt lose its saltness? If it lost its saltness, it would no longer be salt.
- (18) "And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven" (John 3:13). If Jesus is in heaven, how can he be down on earth speaking? Moreover, according to 2 Kings 2:11 ("and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven') Jesus was not the only person to ascend into heaven, nor was he the first. Elijah preceded him and apparently Enoch did also ("And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him"--Gen. 5:24).
- (19) "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. 24:23-24). Jesus' criteria for false Christs and false prophets could easily be applied to himself. Judging by his standard, how do we know he is genuine?
- (20) "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? (Matt.27:46), versus "Now is my soul troubled. And what shall I say? 'Father, save me from this hour?' No, for this purpose I have come to this hour" (John 12:27 RSV). Jesus can't seem to decide whether or not he wants to die. One moment he is willing; the next he isn't.

- (21) "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God" (Matt. 19:17). This obviates any possibility of Jesus being the perfect man, much less God.
- (22) In Luke 23:30 ("Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us, and to the hills, Cover us") Jesus quoted Hosea 10:8 ("...and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us"). And, like Paul, he often quoted inaccurately. In this instance, he confused mountains with hills.
- (23) "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they know him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist" (Matt. 17:11-13). John the Baptist was beheaded, but Jesus was not. And what did John the Baptist restore? Nothing!
- (24) "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it" (Luke 16:16). Certainly every man is not pressing to enter the kingdom of God.
- (25) "Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?" (Matt. 12:5) Nowhere does the OT state that the priests in the temple profaned the sabbath and were considered blameless.
- (26) "Yea; have ye never read, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise" (Matt. 21:16). Jesus is quoting Psalm 8:2, which says, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies...." "Perfect praise" has little to do with "ordaining strength because of thine enemies." Another misquotation!
- (27) "But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him" (Mark 9:13). There are no prophecies in the OT of things that were to happen to Elijah.

Messianic Prophecy (Isaiah 7:11-20, 8:2-8)

Few OT messianic prophecies carry more weight with apologists than the 7th chapter of Isaiah. Yet, like the 5th chapter of Micah (See: Issue #7) it is not applicable to Jesus for many reasons, which an itemized analysis of each verse will show:

- (a) "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel" (Isa. 7:14). In Hebrew this actually reads: "Behold the young woman is with child and bareth a son and calleth his name Immanuel." Christians changed "almah" which means "a young woman" in Hebrew to "virgin." The actual Hebrew word for virgin is "bethulah." Wherever the word "virgin" appears in the KJV of the OT, it comes from "bethulah." Isa. 7:14 and Gen. 24:43 are the only exceptions. Almah means maid, damsel, or a young woman, which is how it is translated in Ex. 2:8, Prov. 30:19 and Psalm 68:25 of the KJV. The RSV and the Jewish Masoretic texts correctly translate Isa. 7:14 as "a young woman." Mistranslators also changed "harah" from its correct meaning of "has conceived" (i.e. is) to "shall conceive." The word "harah" (conceived) is the Hebrew perfect tense, which in English represents past and completed action. There is not the remotest hint of future time. The correct translation, "is with child," is in the present tense and shows it pertains to a woman then existing.

- (b) "...and shall call his name Immanuel" (Isa. 7:14). Jesus was never called Immanuel except by those who do so in order to fulfill the prophecy. Never was Jesus referred to as Immanuel in the NT, except in Matt. 1:23 ("and they shall call his name Immanuel"). Nowhere in Isaiah does Isaiah call Immanuel a Messiah or Jesus Christ the son of God or Savior or Holy Redeemer. They are never equated or related in any way. Moreover, according to Luke 1:31 ("And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS") he was to be called Jesus, not Immanuel.
- (c) "Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know how to refuse the evil and choose the good" (Isa. 7:15). Applying this to Jesus seems irrational. How much sense would it make for Jesus (God) to learn to refuse evil and choose good?
- (d) "For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings" (Isa. 7:16). It would make no sense for Ahaz to be concerned with a sign--the birth of Jesus--that wouldn't be realized until centuries after the death of Ahaz. This verse shows that the prophecy is not referring to a future child, but to a child then conceived, a child then existing, on the way to being born. The reference to the kings of Syria and Israel further shows the verse is referring to a child back then.
- (e) "And I (Isaiah--Ed.) got reliable witnesses, Uriah the priest and Zachariah the son of Jeberechiah, to attest for me. And I went to the prophetess and she conceived and bore a son. Then the Lord said to me, Call his name Maher-shalal-hashbaz; for before the child knows how to cry 'My Father' or 'My Mother,'..." (Isa. 8:2-4). Maher-shalal-hashbaz means "Make speed spoil, hasten to the prey." Some biblicists have concluded that Maher-shalal-hashbaz, like Immanuel, is referring to Jesus. John Calvin correctly denied the validity of this belief by stating, "Isaiah having prophesied about the coming of Christ in the former chapter (Isa. 7:14) many improperly explain this (Maher-shalal-hashbaz--Ed.) also as relating to the same subject, that, endued with heavenly power, he (Jesus--Ed.) came to spoil 'the prince of this world' (John 12:31) and therefore 'hastened to the prey.' This ingenuity is pleasing enough but cannot at all harmonize with the text;..." (Calvin's Commentaries, on Isaiah, Vol. I, p. 262). Several aspects of these verses show they are referring to a child born hundreds of years before Jesus:
 - (1) Isaiah clearly states Maher-shalal-hashbaz is his son.
 - (2) The birth must have occurred when the two witnesses lived, which was in the time of Ahaz; otherwise, how could they be witnesses?
 - (3) Past tense verbs such as "conceived" and "bore" show it occurred in the time of Ahaz.

- (4) Where and when was Jesus ever called Maher-shalal-hashbaz, especially in the NT?
- (5) Where in the Bible was Mary shown to be or ever called a prophetess?
- (6) Many theologians, such as the Jewish scholar Troki, even feel Immanuel and Maher-shalal-hashbaz are the same child, because both names are followed by, "For before the child shall...." which are in perfect consonance.
- (f) "And he (the king of Assyria) shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over,...and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel" (Isa. 8:8). Jesus never owned any land, so how could he be Immanuel? Moreover, the Assyrians stopped passing through Judah hundreds of years before Jesus was ever born. The verse implies that Immanuel was either a king or the son of a king, which Jesus was not.

Messianic Prophecy (Psalm 22)

Another part of the OT often viewed as a prophetic commentary on Jesus is the 22nd Psalm. But as in the case of Isaiah 7, many aspects thereof refute this thesis:

- (a) "my God, my God why hast thou forsaken me? Why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring" (Psalm 22:1). Asserting that comparable statements by Jesus in Matt. 27:46 and Mark 15:34 are prophetic creates problems. First, Jesus would be contradicting Psalm 46:1, which says, "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." Second, was Jesus praying for salvation of his flesh or of his divinity? If his flesh, then his prayers were unanswered. If his divinity, the divine needs no salvation.
- (b) "I cry in the daytime, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and am not silent" (Psalm 22:2). This verse contradicts Isa. 42:2 ("He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street"), which is also applied to Jesus. Moreover, the sufferings of the speaker in Psalm 22:2 continued for a time. He cried in vain to God for help by day and night, whereas Jesus cried for a short period.
- (c) "But I am a worm (a "maggot" according to Strong's Concordance)..." (Psalm 22:6). Would Jesus call himself a worm or maggot?
- (d) "Be not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is none to help" (Psalm 22:11). This indicates that if there were someone to help, he (Jesus) would gladly agree to be saved, which would have meant his death occurred against his will. How then can Christians say he willed it?
- (e) "...my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels" (Psalm 22:14). Why was Jesus afraid, since events were allegedly moving as he desired? Some critics have facetiously contended Jesus again failed as a scientist, since he apparently didn't know there was a diaphragm.
- (f) "...they pierced my hands and feet" (Psalm 22:16). Nowhere in the gospels does it say the feet of Jesus were pierced or nailed to the cross. According to some authorities, crucified persons did not have their feet nailed to the cross. Moreover, some scholars claim this verse should have been translated, "They cling like a lion to my hands and feet." What group clung to the hands and feet of Jesus? The Jewish (Hebrew) Masoretic text translates the verse as: "Like a lion they are at my hands and feet" (Psalm 22:17).

- (g) "They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture" (Psalm 22:18). "Part" and "cast" are present tense verbs that couldn't apply to Jesus. "Vesture" does not always mean clothing of any kind or property. As used here it appears to represent property, which Jesus did not have, according to Matt. 8:20.
- (h) "Deliver my soul from the sword;...." (Psalm 22:20). The description of his distress in the prospect of deadly peril, his worry in prayer, and his desire to be delivered from death and saved alive are unsuitable to Christ, who supposedly gave himself up to death freely. In addition, technically speaking, when was Jesus threatened with the sword? He was threatened with cross and crucifixion.

Micah 5, Isaiah 7, and Psalm 22 are only three OT chapters out of scores that are improperly applied to Jesus by apologists. Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll analyzed the situation with their usual acuity: "In the following treatises I have examined all the passages in the NT quoted from the Old, and so-called prophecies concerning Jesus Christ, and I find no such thing as a prophecy of any such person, and I deny there are any.... I have given chapter and verse for everything I have said, and have not gone out of the books of the Old and New Testament for evidence that the passages are not prophecies of the person called Jesus Christ" (The Life and Works of Paine, Vol. 9, p. 206). "The practice which the writers of the books (gospels--Ed.) employ is not more false than it is absurd. They state some trifling case of the person they call Jesus Christ, and then cut out a sentence from some passage of the OT and call it a prophecy of that case. But when the words thus cut out are restored to the places they are taken from, and read with words before and after them, they give the lie to the NT" (Ibid. p. 269). "There is no prophecy in the OT foretelling the coming of Jesus Christ. There is not one word in the OT referring to him in any way--not one word. The only way to prove this is to take your Bible, and whenever you find the words: 'That it might be fulfilled' and 'which was spoken' turn to the OT and find what was written, and you will see that it had not the slightest possible reference to the thing recounted in the NT--not the slightest" (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 277). Many additional examples of the misapplication of OT verses to Jesus will be discussed in future issues of BE.

REVIEWS

On Page 80 in So the Bible is Full of Contradictions, Carl Johnson sought to answer some of the previously-mentioned problems with respect to comments by Jesus. The ninth problem in this month's commentary dealt with the validity of Jesus' witness, to which Johnson responded, "On the surface this looks like a contradiction. In the first verse ("my witness is not true") Jesus meant that if He bore witness of Himself the Jews would call the witness untrue, because the Law required two or three witnesses before any evidence could be accepted as true (Deut. 19:15)." Johnson, unfortunately, ignored several facts. First, Jesus said his witness was not true, period. Nowhere did he mention Jews or the Old Law. Second, Johnson says, "Jesus meant." How does he know what he meant, especially when that's not what he said? Third, John 8:14 (Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true") shows Johnson's theory is weak. Jesus alone is bearing record of himself, and feels he alone is sufficient to make his witness true. No other witnesses are needed.

On page 144 in Does the Bible Contradict Itself, W. Arndt confronted the problem mentioned in the 10th example in this month's commentary. Are good works to be done openly or in secret? Arndt says, "In Matt. 5:16 Jesus says, 'Do good works; they will be seen and will help to exalt the name of your great God.' In Matt. 6:1 He says: 'Do not do good works in order to be seen doing them.' In that case they would lose all ethical value.--Putting it tersely, we might say: In one passage Jesus precribes good works, in the other He warns against the wrong motive for doing good works." Although Arndt wishes this were the case, close examination of Matt. 5:16 shows otherwise. The latter says, "let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works..." The word "that" means "so that." In fact, the NAB, the Modern Language Bible, and the Living Bible translate it as "so that." In other words, Matt. 5:16 says we are to do good deeds so that others will see us, which violates Matt. 6:1. In good apologetic style, Arndt created a subtle shift in meaning. Matt. 5:16 did not say "do good works; they will be seen and help exalt...." It said, "Do good works so that they will be seen". In the former we are told to do good works per se. As a by-product they will unavoidably be seen by others. In the latter we are told to do good works because they will be seen by others. The motive has shifted. Matt. 6:1 rules out doing good deeds because they will be seen by others. Subtle and often insidious shifts in words and phrases are one of the most common ploys of the most creative apologists. The mileage one can obtain by ingeniously altering, inserting, or omitting a word or punctuation mark is truly amazing. Where the comma should be in Luke 23:43 is a prime example. Should it be before the word "today" or after as it in the NWT? Changing its position completely alters the meaning.

An intriguing question that has often occurred to many people reading the Bible is: Where did Cain get his wife? On pages 98 and 99 in Answers to Tough Questions, McDowell and Stewart seek to allay these concerns with the following reply: One of the most frequent questions asked by Christians and non-Christians alike is where did Cain's wife come from. This question also involves a larger question: what population existed at the time Cain built his city, and what of incest? ...The Bible also records...that Cain obtained a wife at some point (Gen. 4:17) and built a city (Gen. 4:17). One theory that has been put forth to explain the existence of sufficient numbers of people is directly contradictory to Scripture and posits a "pre-Adamic" race dwelling in the neighborhood of the Garden of Eden from which Cain could take a wife. This is not a tenable solution, however, for the Scriptures clearly teach that Adam was the first man (1 Cor. 15:45) and that his wife, Eve, was "the mother of all living" (Gen. 3:20). In this instance, McDowell is correct. The pre-Adamic theory is fallacious, although it answers another problem which many biblicists discreetly evade. When God told Adam in Gen. 1:28 to "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth" (KJV, ASV, and the Masoretic text) and gave Noah the same instructions in Gen. 9:1, the question became: How can you replenish if people did not "plenish," i.e. live, earlier. McDowell continues, "Gen. 5:4 tells us that Adam had sons and daughters...Cain probably married a sister or niece or grand niece." Married? There is nothing said about marriage in the creation accounts. Indeed, marriage isn't even mentioned until the 19th chapter of Genesis. The word "wife" is used, but there is no more evidence of a marriage between Cain and his wife than between Adam and Eve. McDowell says Cain "probably" married a sister or grand niece. In other words, he doesn't know and is merely guessing. If he is correct and Adam's children mated, then we are all products of incest. McDowell's solution for this embarrassment is that "God forbids incest on moral grounds,...(and--Ed.) after God's ordained family structure stabilized, incest was sin." How could incest be sinful now and not originally? Is morality that fluid? This reminds me of "situation ethics", which evangelicals so vehemently denounce. Moreover, what part of the Bible supports McDowell's contention that incest was permissible and later became anathema?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #68 from MP of Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis.

...I used your anti-Resurrection argument on a Christian a few weeks back (the argument on page 1 of BE #2), and he countered by saying that whereas all those other people were raised in their old, cruddy bodies, Jesus was raised in a "glorified" body--whatever that means. I did not have a good response at the time, but now I do.

- (a) How could Jesus' body have changed, since he is "the same yesterday, and today, and forever" (Heb. 13:8)?
- (b) Acts 26:23 says that Jesus was the "first" to rise from the dead. If this means simply coming back to life, then it is false, because of 1 Sam. 28:7, 11, 15 etc. But if it means that Jesus was the first to resurrect in a "glorified" body (which is undefined), then again this is false, because the dead Moses and Elijah "appeared in glory" (Luke 11:31) at the time of the transfiguration; so it seems that they were raised in glorified bodies before Jesus....
- (c) If Christians are supposed to respect all secular authority because it comes from God (Rom. 13:1-7, Titus 3:1, John 19:11, 1 Peter 2:13-14) and if the anti-Christ is to come with "all power" (2 Thess. 2:9), then should Christians in the Tribulation accept the mark of the beast? If they do, they face damnation (Rev. 14:9-10). If they do not, then they are resisting authority, and "he who resists the authorities resists what God has appointed, and those who resist will incur judgment" (Rom. 13:2)

Jesus, The Imperfect Beacon (Part Two of a Four Part Series)--Last month's commentary noted some of the reasons Jesus of Nazareth is unqualified to act as a model for all mankind, much less its savior. Continuing in that vein are the following: (28) "While he (Jesus--Ed.) was speaking, a Pharisee asked him to dine with him; so he went in and sat at table. The Pharisee was astonished to see that he did not at first wash before dinner. And the Lord said to him, `Now you Pharisees cleanse the outside of the cup and of the dish, but inside you are full of extortion and wickedness. You fools! Did not he who made the outside make the inside also?... woe to you Pharisees! for you tithe the mint and rue and every herb, and neglect justice and the love of God; these you ought to have done..." (Luke 11:37-44 RSV). Jesus showed rudeness, crudeness, and insensitivity. Imagine talking like this to someone in his house after he invited you to dine with him. Even if it were true, common decency dictated a more refined approach. (29) "...and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus answered him, Thou sayest" (Matt. 27:11) and Jesus answered him, `sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?" (John 18:34) and "Pilate therefore said unto him, `Art thou a king then?' Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king" (John 18:37) and "And went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? But Jesus gave him no answer" (John 19:9). Jesus often gave insolent replies and evaded questions. A civil response or a simple yes or no would have been more appropriate, not to mention polite. (30) "And the Lord said unto the servant, Go out unto the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled" (Luke 14:23). In this parable the lord, who represents God, compelled people to enter his house. Would God compel people to enter heaven. The just and peaceful Jesus is sanctioning compulsion! (31) "So the devils besought him (Jesus--Ed.) saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. And he said unto them, Go. And when they were come out they went into the herd of swine; and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters" (Matt. 8:31-32). What had the owner or owners done to have their property destroyed by Jesus? What had the animals done to deserve such treatment? The French philosopher, Voltaire, asked why swine were there at all since the keeping of swine was prohibited in ancient Judea and Galilee as in modern Israel. (32) "Woe unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them" (Luke 11:47). Jesus is condemning people for having ancestors who killed prophets, yet, he had such ancestral killers as David and Solomon. (33) "but he answered her not a word" (Matt 15:23). Jesus seems rude. Politeness required a response. (34) "Jesus said, ... `Thou shalt not steal... (Matt. 19:18) versus "Go ye into the village over against you; in the which at your entering ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat: loose him, and bring him hither. And if any man ask you, why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him. And they that were sent went their way, and found even as he had said unto them. And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?" (Luke 19:30-33). Are we to believe this isn't theft? Imagine seeing a stranger driving your car away while claiming the lord needed it. (35) "For as yet they know not the scriptures, that he must rise again from the dead" (John 20:9). There is no OT statement that he (Jesus--Ed.) must rise from the dead. Moreover, "again" means that he was to rise a second time. And since Jesus allegedly rose from the dead only once, it couldn't apply to him anyway. (36) "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Matt 19:19) versus "Jesus saith unto her, "Woman, what have I to do with thee" (John 2:4). Jesus' love seems to have escaped him. (37) "and it came to pass on the second sabbath after the first, that he (Jesus--Ed.) went through the corn fields; and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands. And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the sabbath days? And Jesus answering them said, Have ye not read so much as this, what David did, when himself was an hungered, and they which were with him. How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him; which it is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone" (Luke 6:1-4)? Jesus and his disciples not only violated the sabbath but also stole property. The ears of corn were not theirs to consume any more than the Gadarene swine were theirs to destroy (Luke 8:33). Moreover, very little support can be obtained by relying upon David's acts as a defense, since he not only violated the sabbath and many other laws but also stole the priests' shewbread. (38) "...for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance" (Matt. 9:13) versus "and Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God" (Mark 10:18). How could some be righteous if only God is good? (39) "As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world" (John 9:5) versus "ye are the light of the world" (Matt. 5:14). Who, then, is the light of the world? (40) "...The Kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and sowed in his field: Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof" (Matt. 13:31-32). Poor knowledge of science is again evident in the fact that a mustard seed is not the least of all seeds, is not the greatest among herbs when grown, and could not give rise to a tree. (41) "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath" (Matt. 13:12). The latter is impossible since from nothing, nothing can come (Ex nihilo, nihil fit). (42) "Verily, I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecution, and in the world to come eternal life" (Mark 10:29-30). This teaching is not only immoral, but inaccurate. Jesus is saying that the reward for giving up your wealth and following him is far greater wealth; i.e., people should do right in order to obtain personal gain, not because it is the right deed to do. Selfaggrandizement is not a decent basis for morality. Moreover, people who give up everything for the gospel's sake rarely "receive an hundredfold now in this time." Indeed, precisely the opposite is often the case. (43) "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened" (Matt. 7:7-8) versus "Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth" (John 9:31) and "The Lord is far from the wicked: but he heareth the prayer of the righteous" (Prov. 15:29). Everyone who asks receives; yet, God doesn't hear sinners and is far from the wicked. (44) "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar, and the father of it" (John 8:44) versus "And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God" (Luke 4:41). Jesus refuted his own divinity, unless some devils are more honest than "the devil." (45) "Then said Jesus to him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt 26:52) versus "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. 10:34) and "...and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one" (Luke 22:36) and (Luke 22:38). (46) "And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him..." (Matt. 20:19) and "...and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles: And they...shall kill him..." (Mark 10:33-34) versus "And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he (Pilate--Ed.) saith unto the Jews, Behold your King! But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him... Then delivered he (Pilate--Ed.) him therefore unto them to be crucified. And...they crucified him..." (John 19:14-18). Although Jesus prophesied he would be crucified by Gentiles, the Book of John says he was killed by Jews. (47) "Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword" (Matt 26:52) versus "I saw the Lord standing upon the altar:

and he said...I will slay the last of them with the sword" (Amos 9:1) and "And I (God) will bring a sword upon you..." (Lev. 26:25). According to Jesus, God (i.e., Jesus himself) must perish since he took up the sword. (48) "...for verily I (Jesus) say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you" (Matt. 17:20). The inaccuracy of Jesus' statement is shown in the fact that nobody, with or without faith, has ever successfully ordered a mountain to move. (49) "and these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (Mark 16:17-18). Clearly a false statement by Jesus! Few Christian believers would be willing to test its validity by drinking poisons, such as arsenic, handling deadly snakes, or emptying local hospitals with touches of the hand. It's far more practical to rationalize the verse away. (50) "And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, `Thou art Christ the Son of God.' And he rebuking them suffered them not to speak: for they knew that he was Christ" (Luke 4:41) and "unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God" (Mark 3:11). It's interesting to note that the first beings to recognize the messiahship of Jesus were devils, the most corrupt and deceitful of all beings.

REVIEWS

The Suffering of the Innocent--On pages 259 to 261 in The Bible Has the Answer apologist Henry Morris of the Creation Research Institute sought to answer one of the most common questions asked of theists: Why does God allow innocent people to suffer. His opening comments were as follows: "This is one of the most difficult questions for Christians to answer. The `problem of pain' as the well-known Christian scholar, C.S. Lewis, once called it, is atheism's most potent weapon against the Christian faith... they say, how can a God of love permit such things in His world as war, sickness, pain, and death, especially when their effects often are felt most keenly by those who are apparently innocent? Either He is not a God of love and is indifferent to human suffering or else He is not a God of power and is therefore helpless to do anything about it. In either case, the Biblical God who is supposedly one of both absolute power and perfect love became an impossible anachronism. Or so they claim." Having made these opening remarks, Morris then presented the following arguments which are permeated with the intellectual dishonesty so typical of Christian defenses. (1) "People continue to believe in their deepest hearts that somehow, ultimately, right will prevail over `wrong.' These innate beliefs are in themselves evidence that there is a God who is a moral being and who has implanted these hopes in the human soul." Surely Morris realizes this is an emotional appeal, not an argument based on proof. Millions of people--theists and non-theists-- believe "right" will prevail in the end but there is no evidence this is inherent. (2) "...it is utterly presumptuous for us to use our minds to question His motives... We need to settle it, in our minds and hearts, whether we understand it or not, that whatever God does is by definition, right." Again, this is not an argument based on evidence, Biblical or otherwise. It rests on belief alone and is nothing more than another way of saying, "Although it looks bad; it isn't." The following arguments, however, are of greater concern to BE because they rely on the Bible itself rather than theological beliefs in a God. (3) "There is really no such thing as the `innocent' suffering. Since `all have sinned and come short of the glory of God' (Rom. 3:23), there is no one who has the right to freedom from God's wrath on the basis of his own innocence. As far as babies are concerned and others who may be incompetent mentally to distinguish right from wrong, it is clear from both Scripture and universal experience that they are sinners by nature and thus will inevitably become sinners by choice as soon as they are able to do so." Any resemblance between this reasoning and justice is purely coincidental. We are to believe babies at Dachau and Buchenwald justly died because of a nature which they inherited from one man's transgression and acts which they allegedly would have committed if they had been given an opportunity. (4) "The world is now under God's Curse (Gen 3:17) because of man's rebellion again God's Word. This 'bondage of corruption,' with the 'whole world groaning and travailing together in pain' (Rom. 8:21-22) is universal..." Not "man's" rebellion but one man's rebellion! Mankind didn't rebel; a man did. It's his problem and he should pay the penalty. (5) "The Lord Jesus Christ, who was the only truly 'innocent' and 'righteous' man in all history, nevertheless has suffered more than anyone else who ever lived." This comment is not only wholly inaccurate but quite irrelevant. Not only do some biblical verses attribute perfection to Noah (Gen. 6:9) and Job (Job 1:1) as well, but the pain of many people throughout history has exceeded that experienced by Jesus. Even more important is the fact that the death of an innocent man on a cross, God or otherwise, voluntarily or otherwise, does not justify the torture, pain, and suffering of innocent people. Just because he suffered is no reason others should suffer as well. (6) "The sufferings of unsaved men are often used by the Holy Ghost to cause them to realize their need of salvation and to turn to Christ in repentance and faith. The sufferings of Christians should always be the means of developing a stronger dependence on God and a more Christ-like character..." Adversity may build character at times but that does not explain why many experience excessive travail while others hardly know the meaning of the word. In addition, it's difficult to understand how an unjustified demise could improve the deceased's character. Sickness, suffering, and pain also encompass death.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #69 from ET of Greenville, South Carolina

Dear Dennis. I was considering the problem in Lev. of the grasshopper, cricket and locust having only "four feet." I don't think the Hebrews were blind. So perhaps they merely considered the moremost two appendages on those insects to be their "arms," i.e., with "four feet" lying behind them? When a locust eats it does appear to hold its food with its two foremost "arms." Maybe the "four feet" idea originally came from the Hebrew categorization of "four feet" as a symbolic number for most beasts to have. That would also explain why mention of the locusts' "two arms" would be made, after all why elongate a symbolic number that fits so many other animals as well?....

Editor's Response to Letter #69

Dear ET. Your explanation for the "four-footed insects" problem created by Lev. 11:22-23 is a variation on the common apologetic theme that the Bible was not meant to be a scientific text. If the authors felt the two front appendages were "arms," then they were wrong. What a locust "appears" to be doing is immaterial. If your assumption--"the four-feet idea originally came from the Hebrews categorization of 'four-feet' as a symbolic number for most beasts to have"--is correct, then Hebrews were even worse scientists than is often imagined, since many animals travel on something other than four legs. Why should we elongate a symbolic number, you ask? Because accuracy requires it and the Bible is allegedly the epitome of truth.

Letter #70 from GL of Uxbridge, Mass. (Part a)

Dennis, Concerning your commentary in November 1984's issue of BE, are you suggesting that the errors in numbers are because of copyist errors or that the author of the book has made the mistake? I think it would be illogical to assume that the author--after listing the persons, places, etc.--would err in his count. Of course we can not know this for certain but I think that the authors were mathematically competent.

Editor's Response to Letter #70 (Part a)

Dear GL. The primary concern of BE is to reveal problems in the Bible. How they came about is for others to speculate and of secondary importance. Apologists often attribute errors to copyists' mistakes but have no way of proving their hypothesis since the original writings no longer exist. It's difficult to see why you feel an inaccurate count would be illogical in light of the multitude of other errors in the Book. We do not know that the original authors were mathematically competent. If you are going to assume they were, however, then you are also assuming later copyists were incompetent and couldn't duplicate that which was in front of them. The Bible is replete with miracles and other impossibilities. Why would errors in numbers and addition be unreasonable while sticks turning into snakes and people rising from the dead be plausible. The former are much more common and feasible than the latter. In any event, we agree that errors do exist.

Letter #70 Continues (Part b)

In your commentary on the matriarchs you portray the women very well. But what was your point? The Bible does not condone these actions; it simply records them as they happened. Also the genealogy of Jesus has nothing to do with his character.

Editor's Response to Letter #70 (Part b)

Actually GL, several points were intended. First, as in the case of the patriarchs (See Jan. 1984 issue), are these the kinds of individuals you would want to awaken your children on Sunday mornings to read about. Secondly, you said the Bible does not condone their actions; but, it doesn't condemn them either. How were Michal, Jael, Rachel, Ruth, Sarah, Tamar, and Bathsheba punished for their immoral behavior. The Song of Solomon says, "Blessed above women shall Jael (a murderess--Ed.)...be, blessed shall she be above women in the tent" (Judges 5:24) and the Book of James says, "...was not Rahab the harlot justified by works..." (James 2:25). You don't feel their acts are being condoned? Thirdly, my comment with respect to the genealogy of Jesus was that "certainly doesn't say much for his pedigree." And it doesn't! It's difficult to believe God-incarnate could have such a disreputable ancestry. His personal character wasn't even mentioned. Apparently you read more into them statement than was there.

Letter #70 Continues (Part c)

In your response to Letter 63 from VT you state that "Religion rejects authentic human existence, while humanism exalts it." Could you explain what "religion" rejects authentic human existence, what exactly is authentic human existence, who determines what this authentic existence is and why is humanism outside the realm of religion?

Editor's Response to Letter #70 (Part c)

Since VT chose to embark upon a flurry of grandiloquent rhetoric, my response was in like form. Neither of us provided corroborative evidence, which accounts for BE's propensity to avoid discussions of this nature. To answer your query, religion in the generic sense, rejects authentic human existence by dealing more in the realm of fantasy and mythology, while humanism does not. However, that's an extra-biblical controversy that you might want to debate the the humanists.

Letter #70 Continues (Part d)

In response to letter #65. The "he" that could not drive out the inhabitants of the mountains was not God, it was the tribe of Judah. The text (Judges 1:19) simply states that God is with Judah; it does not state that God promised him (Judah) victory. You are assuming more than is advisable. Also, I do not think any creationist would disagree with your simplistic view of evolution: an arrow in flight, or a tree growing. But I have failed to observe an arrow in flight which did not land as an arrow; or a tree growing into something else. And finally, which version of evolution is fact? And when did it move into the realm of fact? I suggest you consult a dictionary before answering. You are assuming that because you have been convinced that it is the best alternative to answering the question of origins, that it must be fact. Certainly a man of your intellectual capacity could not possibly be mistaken. I regret to inform you that you are as mistaken as the creationist who defends his position by announcing that it is a fact. Neither of these theories is a fact. They are presuppositions supported by some facts. Facts can be proven beyond a shadow of a doubt right now!!

Editor's Response to Letter #70 (Part d)

I think you should reread Letter #65 and my response GL. You have confused my reply with the comments of its author, ET. Your quarrel is with him, not me. He used Judges 1:19 ("And the Lord was with Judah; and he drove out the inhabitants of the mountains; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron") to prove the impotence of God. I've never used this verse as do many critics of the Bible because "he" does appear to refer to Judah and not God. The statement doesn't clearly prove God is powerless. The only thing it appears to substantiate is that the Lord wasn't with Judah very much. Second, you described my view of evolution as simplistic. Again, if you will reread the letter you'll see ET, not I, mentioned an arrow in flight and a tree growing. I think you missed ET's point, however, which was that evolution follows a lineal progression according to inexorable laws. ET may wish to reply in a later issue. Third, I didn't know there were versions of evolution. But even more important, I think you missed the gist of the discussion between ET and myself. ET was indirectly criticizing my comment in What is Science (Sept. 1984 issue) that science could not provide absolute, i.e. eternal truths. If you'll read What is Science GL you'll see it described the theory of evolution as a relative truth, i.e., the best explanation possible. In that sense, it is fact. It was not described as an absolute truth which can never be modified. That's the view biblicists have of creationism. The theory of evolution is a relative truth; it is not an absolute truth. That was the point intended in issue #21 and again in #23. If I have a theory which the vast preponderance of the evidence tends to substantiate, then I have a relative truth viewed as a fact. That does not mean I have a truth which will be viewed as a fact thousands of years from now. Additional data may arise which will necessitate modification or abolishment of the theory. But for now it's a fact and one can only pity he who operates on any other assumption. That's the essence of science. Lastly, you subtly put the facts provided by creationists on a par with those provided by evolutionists. The evidence is decidedly opposed to this; but, then, BE is not concerned with the evolutionist/creationist debate which involves a tremendous amount of extra-biblical data.

Letter #70 Conclusion (Part e)

In response to letter #67. Assuming that your "nifty experiment" was carried out by conscientious experts in the French and Spanish languages--good job.

Editor's Response to Letter #70 (Part e)

Your compliment is appreciated GL; however, MF conducted the experiment, not I. His team translated the 23rd Psalm from English to French and back into English with the resultant evidence that translations are fallible. His team mates are the ones to whom you might want to direct your applause.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #71 from Ken Bonnell of Los Angeles, California

Dear Dennis. Here is a case of "biblical errancy" for your file and future use. Mark 9:14-29 contains the story of Jesus' "exorcism" of a "dumb spirit." It concludes curiously. The disciples ask why they could not cast it out, and Jesus says, "This kind cannot be driven out except by prayer and fasting." But the story had not a whit of prayer or of fasting. The absence of fasting from the story has caused the reference to be edited out of certain families of manuscripts, so that "and fasting" does not appear in all translations we read..

EDITOR'S NOTE: Because next month's issue will be devoted to letters from readers, the four-part commentary on Jesus, The Imperfect Beacon will resume in the March, 1985, issue.

COMMENTARY

Extra-biblical Subjects-- We are occasionally asked why extra-biblical subjects are not an integral part of BE since they comprise a substantial amount of many other publications. The reasoning behind this is threefold. First, the best evidence one can use against the Bible is the Book itself. There is more than enough data contained therein to convince any reasonably objective person that it could not be God's word. Amassing a vast amount of external data and bringing it to the Book to refute its contents is essentially ineffective. Biblicists will counter with assertions to the effect that regardless of what the evidence shows, if it says the Bible is false then it's inaccurate. External sources will be viewed as less authoritative than the Bible. Comparing one part of the Book with another, however, is a different matter. In such instances, we don't have external data saying the Bible is false; we have the Bible saying the Bible is false. And that's a decidedly different situation which apologists find hard to counter. It's one thing for external information to say the Bible is erroneous; it's quite another for the Bible itself to say so. I've made this point repeatedly on radio appearances. Of course, a strategy of this nature requires one to know the Bible as well as, if not better than, its proponents, something many agnostics, rationalists, humanists, and atheists refuse to do. Their disdain for the Book and propensity to strike-at-a-distance has provided biblicists a sanctuary to which they invariably retreat when confronted with criticisms. Critics seek to pull biblicists out of the Bible rather than pursue them into its narrative and fight on biblical grounds. Allowing apologists a sanctuary from which to launch their incessant forays is unwise while hot pursuit into their arena has greater potential. Knowledge of the Bible's weaknesses and an ability to present them in a persuasive manner is crucial. Any weakening of the opponents' resolve is progress. We engage biblicists at every opportunity and always receive Mormons, Baptists, and Jehovah's Witnesses with a certain degree of enthusiasm. Believing they have come to convert, they leave with a substantial body of new information. It becomes a question of who is influencing whom. If we don't provide these people with a far more balanced presentation of the Bible, who will? Certainly clergymen and theologians won't. BE teaches a kind of Sunday-school-in-reverse. People are told all the things they should have heard in Sunday school but didn't. It's also important to note that liberal Christians such as those in the World Council of Churches also need to know the Bible's problems, since many are far more under its influence than they realize. A second reason for concentrating on the Bible, per se, is that millions of believers tend to discount or ignore extra-biblical data. Although hard to believe, most have little interest in the Babylonian influence on the Pentateuch's formation, the scientific data discounting the Flood, the evidence in opposition to the six days of creation accounts, the history of papal corruption, the fraudulent Shroud of Turin, the multitude of pagan influences on the formation of Christianity, the similarities between Christianity and earlier religions, the history of the Canon's formation, the resemblance between Jesus and other gods and saviors, etc. Certainly these issues are of significance and should be discussed, but they are of secondary importance. They can be used to disprove the validity of the Bible and Christianity, but the real question is whether or not they can be effectively utilized to weaken people's resolve. They're useful in winning debates but winning people is another matter. A third and final reason for concentrating on the Bible rather than religion in general is that millions of people, especially evangelicals and fundamentalists, derive their political and social views on abortion, civil rights, sexual equality, justice, punishment, free speech, military involvement, criminal activity, and so forth from biblical teachings. Their beliefs come straight out of the Bible. Consequently, court battles over school prayers, nativity scenes, "In God We Trust," chaplains in the military, creationism in the schools, textual censorship, and other current issues represent little more than superficial struggles over more basic concepts. As long as the foundation upon which biblicists base their beliefs remains unshaken, the secondary struggles will continue unabated. If I believed the Bible was the inerrant word of God and Jesus was my Savior, I'd be supporting nativity scenes and prayers too. Interesting, indeed, is the fact that we hear all kinds of political debates on a wide variety of subjects but we almost never witness conflicts over the validity of the source from which millions of people approach these secondary issues.

DIALOGUES AND DEBATES

Letter #72 from GL of Uxbridge, Mass. (Part a)

Dennis. I would like to offer some solutions to a few of the alleged contradictions mentioned in the Dec. 1984 issue of BE. (Jesus invited himself into someone's home without first receiving an invitation--Ed.) There is a possibility that the man had already invited Jesus and the disciples to keep the passover with him. (Mark 14:13-15) and (Luke 22:10-12) seem to indicate that the man expected them--he had a room furnished and ready.

Editor's Response to Letter #72 (Part a)

Dear GL. You are using what I call the behind-the-scenes apologetic defense by assuming events for which there is no evidence in order to resolve an imbroglio. It's one of the more sophisticated, although usually intellectually dishonest, stratagems. In this instance, there is no evidence, stated or implied, that Jesus had been invited earlier. If you are going to assume Jesus had been invited, although there is nothing stated to this effect, then I am going to assume he stole the silverware as he left. If you are going to make gratuitous assumptions to enhance his image, then I'm going to assume the opposite. The sky is the limit for both sides once we start down this road. As for the guest rooms being prepared in Mark 14 and Luke 22, my grandmother always had the guest room ready whether someone was coming or not.

Letter #72 Continues (Part b)

The verses you have indicated do not show that Jesus was afraid of men. Jesus himself tells us why he was evading his persecutors. (John 7:6)--"The right time has not yet come." I can not understand how you could imply that Jesus was a coward. You may not believe that he was God or had any divinity in his character but you cannot deny that he believed wholeheartedly in what he was doing. In Matt. 10:23 Jesus tells his disciples to flee persecution, not because of the fear of men but in order to preach the message.

Editor's Response to Letter #72 (Part b)

You want us to believe, GL, that every time Jesus sneaked away or hid from his captors he was saving himself for the day he could die on the cross for our sins. This legend continues to be perpetrated, despite the fact that when Jesus was on the cross he clearly stated, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Does this sound like someone who gladly died for your sins? Those are the words of a man who can think of a hundred places he would rather be. Secondly, in Matt. 10:23 Jesus told his disciples to flee. Why they were to flee is not material. The fact remains that in Luke 12:4 he told them, "Be not afraid of them that kill the body." Why run at all if fear is not involved? Thirdly, the amount of "heart" Jesus had in what he was doing does not prove bravery. The fact is he fled on numerous occasions. Any cowardly soldier could say he fled because it was not time for him to die.

Letter #72 Continues (Part c)

This new commandment ("A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye love one another"--John 13:34) differs from its Old Testament counterpart in that this love for one another is to resemble the love Jesus had for them. It is a new commandment because it is a modification of the old.

Editor's Response to Letter #72 (Part c)

How does the love Jesus had for them differ from the love they had for one another? But even more important is the fact that stiff penalties await anyone who modifies, increases, or diminishes the Old Law. "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it" (Deut. 12:32) and "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar" (Prov. 30:6). But the strongest condemnation of Jesus is to be found in Rev. 22:18-19 if, in fact, he did modify an OT commandment. "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things that are written in this book."

Letter #72 Continues (Part d)

In Matt. 11:30 ("For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light") Jesus is not offering physical rest. He is offering spiritual rest to those who are weary from trying to achieve spiritual rest but are burdened by futile rituals and obligations. It is rest for the soul that Jesus is offering. Matt. 11:29 says, "Take my yoke upon you,...and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

Editor's Response to Letter #72 (Part d)

What does Matt. 11:30 have to do with rituals and obligations and why do you limit the rest he promises to the spiritual realm only? The biblical word soul is used in reference to both physical and spiritual beings. In any event, if only a spiritual rest was intended, then why did a righteous soul experience turmoil according to 2 Peter 2:8 (RSV): "...for what that righteous man saw and heard as he lived among them, he was vexed in his righteous soul day after day with their lawless deeds" and some spiritual souls who followed Jesus couldn't help but be troubled and restless according to Rev. 20:4 (RSV): "Also I saw the souls of those who had been heheaded for their testimony to Jesus and for the word of God, and who had not worshipped the beast or its image...." This is spiritual rest?

Letter #72 Continues (Part e)

(In Part 5 of the Dec. 1984 issue BE stated the genealogies in Matt. 1 and Luke 3 trace Jesus' descent from David to Joseph and since Jesus allegedly came from and virgin birth, he couldn't be a physical descendant of David through Joseph--Ed.). I agree that Mary's genealogy is not mentioned, but assuming that Jesus is not a physical descendant of David because he is not a physical descendant of Joseph is narrow-minded. Mary could be of the lineage of David. We can not assume that she is not simply because her genealogy is not given.

Editor's Response to Letter #72 (Part e)

As in Part A, GL, you are basing your position on an extra-biblical assumption. I have no obligation to your comment as long as you don't forget to tell people there is no biblical evidence whatever that Mary descended from David; indeed, as was mentioned on page 2 of the sixth issue of BE, Mary appears to have been from the house of Judah, not David, since her cousin Elizabeth (Luke 1:36) was a daughter of Aaron, i.e., from the house of Judah (Luke 1:5). Secondly, by denying the common apologetic theme that the genealogy in Luke 3 is that of Mary you are re-igniting the contradiction between Matt. 1:16 and Luke 3:23 which say Joseph's father was Jacob and Heli respectively. (To Be Continued Next Month.)

Letter #73 from VT of Huron, California (Part a)

(In letter #63 of the 22nd issue was the following comment by BE's editor: "Don't just say the Bible is God's word, prove it as in a court of law"--Ed.)...The proof of the Bible being God's word is born out in the lives of those that accept God as their Father and Jesus as their savior. Christians accept the Bible as God's Word, By faith we accept Jesus as our Savior. The PROOF is born out in the lives and actions of those that do the will of God.... No one is ever going to prove anything to you that you prefer not to be convinced of. Arguments do not change a persons' mind...

Editor's Response to Letter #73 (Part a)

You have offered no proof whatever, VT. The consequences people have experienced after accepting the Bible as God's word and Jesus as their savior have been as varied as the people involved, ranging from contentment to catastrophe. Prisons, cemeteries, and hospitals are replete with true believers. People may accept Jesus as their savior; but that proves nothing. What kind of specific proof do you have? That's the question. Faith is not proof. As was discussed in prior issues, the lives and actions of many hardly reflect what you call "the will of God," assuming the Bible is God's word and his will can be determined therefrom. Secondly, your conclusion that no one has proven anything to me that I preferred not to believe is no more worthy of comment than your assertion that arguments don't change minds. If the latter were true, presidential debates would be a tremendous waste of money. I've reluctantly changed my mind on numerous occasions.

Letter #73 Continues (Part b)

When Christ was nailed to the cross with the claim of "the king of Israel" over his head, their spiteful assertion was that they would believe if he would come down from the cross is plainly untrue. They would have shifted their ground and invented some other excuse.... These "Pious scoffers" are like many today who make factitious and arbitrary demands of Christ. Now the character, power, and diety of Christ are plain to all whose eyes are not blinded by the gods of this world. Christ will not give new proofs to the blind of heart....

Editor's Response to Letter #73 (Part b)

Several of your assertions warrant comment, VT. First, to be technically correct, what version are you using? None of the gospels in the KJV say "the King of Israel" was written over his head. Second, how could you know the thoughts of some people who lived 2,000 years ago? To say that is is "plainly untrue" that they would have believed Jesus if he had come down is nothing more than unsubstantiated speculation. How can you be certain they would have invented another excuse? Third, what was arbitrary about the demand by people at the foot of the cross for Jesus to prove his power by coming down? It seems to be a reasonable request. Fourth, you shifted the focus of attention to Jesus. BE is discussing the Bible's validity, not making demands on a person who allegedly lived 2,000 years ago. The genuineness of Jesus is inextricably tied to the book in which his activities are related. If the Book is shown to be invalid then certainly his alleged activities become dubious at best. Fifth, there is nothing plain about the character, power, or diety of Christ. Indeed, BE has engaged in an on-going process of proving precisely the opposite. His qualifications and integrity are flawed throughout. And lastly, how can there be "new proofs" when there were never any old ones?

Letter #73 Continues (Part c)

The problem whith so many people is that they just don't want to believe, period....

Editor's Response to Letter #73 (Part c)

No, the problem with so many people is that they do want to believe, period. Regardless of evidence to the contrary, they want something to hang on to, something to believe in. With far too many people the situation is such that if it sounds good, looks good, feels good, and seems to make sense, they don't really care if it's true or not. Rational minds only ask for demonstrable evidence. "I feel that" or "my reaction is" or "it seems to me" or "I believe" or "I think that" or "faith tells me" or "I was taught" explain nothing and prove less.

Letter #73 Continues (Part d)

Now we can accept this or we have the option to reject it. It is really just that simple.

Editor's Response to Letter #73 (Part d)

No, it isn't that simple by any means. There is the question of truth and that depends on proof. Whether people believe something or not has nothing to do with truth. It's true or false regardless of what people think. There is a real world out there that one must learn.

Letter #73 Continues (Part e)

The problem in translation is where the greatest of scholars run into trouble. The Greek and Hebrew have many synonyms. One word will have eight or even ten synonyms. Thus we have many different translations of the Bible. This is the point of contention. Any serious student of the Bible should use several different translations. Doctrine is not changed. There is no point at which a person can show where the doctrinal and theological importance has been impaired or diminished.

Editor's Response to Letter #73 (Part e)

How can you say doctrine does not change if the doctrine can't be determined initially? One can't show where the doctrinal and theological importance has been changed because varied interpretations obviate any possibility of definitely knowing the original teaching. Doctrine may not change; but the problem is one of determining what the doctrine should be. Impairing or diminishing isn't the problem; the question is one of fixing the correct doctrine to begin with.

Letter #73 Continues (Part f)

...Most all of the translations will differ in some degree. This is really no big thing as you make it out to be.... For you to make an issue of a rooster crowing at the wrong time to me is dwelling on trivia. This is the type of thing that got 'ol Thomas Paine and the other humanists started on their road of trivial pursuit. The only harm that it does is to the unsophisticated and the naive. Your paper is attractive to those that don't think for themselves.

Editor's Response to Letter #73 (Part f)

I didn't know I made a "big thing" out of the difference in translations, VT. Actually, we view them as little more than additional nails in the coffin. As far as the rooster crowing is concerned, one would hardly be justified in categorizing this as trivia, since Jesus is shown to be a false prophet and the gospels conflict with respect to what occurred and what should have happened. Frankly, I don't know what kind of evidence you want and I'm beginning to doubt any would be persuasive. The problem with so many apologists lies in their tendency to view any and all criticism as trivial. I'd hardly call Paine's Age of Reason trivial pursuit. The real harm done to the naive and unsophisticated comes about when they adopt your philosophical approach of discounting major problems. Your final comment is wholly inaccurate. Well over 200 subscribe to BE of whom a high percentage are lawyers, professors, holders of advanced degrees, and other individuals who have exhibited exceptional intelligence. You have made adamant judgments with respect to BE, its editor, its readers, and the thoughts of people who lived 2,000 years ago and, yet, have probably had no contact with anyone involved. Letters to BE clearly show many readers not only think for themselves but exhibit a considerable degree of sophistication. Indeed, having been surprised on several occasions, I've learned to choose my words like someone picking apples in an orchard. Choose with care because what you pick today you may have to eat tomorrow. Read the back issues of BE and you'll see that both sides are presented and readers are left to judge for themselves who is correct.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #74 from ET of Indianapolis, Indiana

In response to Letter #70 and GL's attack on my interpretation of Judges 1:19, let me quote Judges 1:19 from the NWT of the Holy Scriptures..."And Jehovah continued with Judah, so that he took possession of the mountainous region, but he could not dispossess the inhabitants of the low plain...." Since it says the Lord continued with Judah, would it not be logical that God was with...Judah when he tried the innocent people of the plains? You say the "he" was not God but Judah and his tribe. NOTE: Of course the "he" was Judah because there was, or is, no God. Judah was defeated by the war chariots....

On evolution...an arrow is NEVER the same when it is spent as when it leaves the bow! However, that was not my point; my point was this, without the cosmic law of evolution an arrow could not EVEN draw another breath. In fact, without evolution GL you could not take another step...or EVEN draw another breath. The Thorndike dictionary says of evolution "Any process of growth, gradual development, etc. Then it gives as an example a giant steamship evolving from a dugout canoe. That all life on this earth came from a single cell...is a theory...but EVOLUTION is NOT THEORY...it is a fact, a cosmic law of the universe, the same as gravitation, centrifugal force, momentum, etc.

Editor's Response to Letter #74

When you are criticized in BE by another reader, ET, you have a right "to respond." Your letter received priority.

Letter #75 from RO of Jamestown, Penn.

I am renewing my subscription...out of respect for your philosophy. But I think you have embarked on a hopeless task. The Bible was discredited quite well in the Age of Enlightenment but it did no good. Christians have just gone off on another tangent as they always will. It seems to be human nature to want to believe in something mystical, even if it is false.

Editor's Response to Letter #75

The task isn't hopeless, RO. Difficult, yes, but not hopeless. You'd be surprised at the number of people who seriously think about biblical difficulties when they are kept simple, relevant, and material and presented in a serious, respectful manner. I feel this especially during radio appearances. We have never received untoward phone calls and our subscriptions have grown steadily. When presenting information to people, you must give them time to weigh the merits before presenting more. It's an on-going process in which people are progressively re-educated. Granted many people are beyond hope but that's no reason to abandon the cause. I can't agree with your assertion that the Enlightenment discredited the Bible quite well. I know of no comprehensive refutation of the Bible that is available in the English language and, even more importantly, I know of no on-going systematic campaign against biblical defenses. Apologetic replies are as dynamic and fluid as criticisms. Voltaire and Paine's critiques have long since been attacked, showing there must be a perpetual response to the biblicists. It's a never-ending struggle, not a final battle. Even more important and difficult is projecting information to people. First one must gather as much data as possible. That's where BE enters. It's intended to be the most thorough refutation of the Bible available in the English language. Secondly, one must spread the information to others. That's where readers come in. People don't want to believe in something mystical; they want to believe in something that gives hope, a way out of their problems, something to look forward to, something that elevates their spirits.

Letter #76 from MP of Tulsa, Oklahoma

In Matt. 6:26 Jesus says "Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." But this is false, because millions of birds starve every winter!

EDITOR'S NOTE:

(a) BE recently moved 11 miles to larger, more convenient quarters. Our new address and phone number are: 3158 Sherwood Park Drive Springfield, Ohio 45505 (513) 323-6146

(b) Too many letters of good quality have been sent to BE for all of them to be published. If your's isn't printed, please don't feel slighted. Someday we hope to publish twice a month and/or increase the number of pages.

Issue No. 27

COMMENTARY

Jesus, The Imperfect Beacon (Part Three of a Four Part Series)--The Jan. issue noted 23 additional reasons Jesus is not the star one should follow and the following continue that enumeration: (51) "Then came to Jesus scribes and Pharisees which were of Jerusalem, saying, 'Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread.' But he answered and said unto them, 'Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?'" (Matt. 15:1-3). "Why do ye also" is an admission by Jesus that his disciples were violating a commandment of God. He doesn't deny they are breaking God's law; he simply says his critics are guilty of the same offense. (52) "With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible" (Matt. 19:26) versus "Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, All things are possible to him that believeth" (Mark 9:23) and "...If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you" (Matt. 17:20) and (John 14:12, 14). (53) "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28:16) and "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand" (John 3:35) versus "and he saith unto them...to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give" (Mark 20:23). (54) "Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (John 2:19) versus "But God raised him from the dead" (Acts 13:30) and "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus whom ye slew" (Acts 5:30). Jesus never raised himself but was raised by another. His prophecy that he would raise himself proved erroneous. (55) "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy" (Matt. 5:7) versus "then shall he (Jesus--Ed.) say unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat;..." (Matt. 25:41-42) and "when he saw a fig tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away" (Matt. 21:18-19). Jesus failed to practice the mercy he preached. An eternal curse resulting from disappointed hunger is hardly the reaction of a divinely merciful being equal to God. Killing a tree for lacking fruit isn't indicative of a reasonably merciful and composed individual. (56) "Woe to you! for you build the tombs of the prophets whom your fathers killed. So you are witnesses and consent to the deeds of your fathers; for they killed them, and you built their tombs" (Luke 11:47-48 RSV). Logic and scientific precision were not among Jesus' strong points. Building a tomb for someone whom my ancestors killed certainly does not mean I approve of the killing. (57) "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body" (Matt. 26:26). If the bread is really his body then there are two bodies of Jesus, two christs. Christians can't agree among themselves on how to approach this one. (58) "and I seek not mine own glory" (John 8:50) and "whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted" (Matt. 23:12) versus "And Jesus answered them saying, The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified" (John 12:23) and "now O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self..." (John 17:5). (59) "And he said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place" (Mark 6:10). Superficial profundity is evident in the fact that one could hardly do anything else. Obviously one must abide in a place until one departs. (60) "Then, if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect: (Matt. 24:23-24) versus "...the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me" (John 5:36) and (John 3:2, 20:30-31, Matt. 11:20-21). According to Jesus the ability to do great signs and wonders, i.e., miracles, does not prove one is the messiah. Yet, he contends his works prove he is from God. Using Jesus' own criteria, how do we know he is genuine? (61) "...verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation" (Mark 8:12) versus "A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas" (Matt. 16:4). Jesus said in Mark 8:12 that no sign would be given; now there is an exception. (62) "For as Jonas was three day and three nights in the whale's belly" (Matt. 12:40) versus "...and Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights" (Jonah 1:17). According to the OT Jesus erred. It was a fish, not a whale. (63) "the Son of man has come eating and drinking; and you say, `Behold, a glutton and a drunkard..." (Luke 7:34 RSV). If this comment is true, and there is little evidence to the contrary, Jesus' character is, indeed, substandard. (64) "Jesus saith unto her (Mary Magdalene--Ed.), `Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father'" (John 20:17) versus "and after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus.... Then saith he to Thomas, `Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side'" (John 20:26-27). Unless Jesus ascended to his Father during the eight day period after he told Mary Magdalene not to touch him, he either broke or abolished his own rule. He told Mary not to touch him until he ascended; yet, eight days later he told Thomas to touch him. (65) "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. And if ye will receive it, this (John the Baptist--Ed.) is Elias, which was for to come" (Matt. 11:13-14) versus "I (John the Baptist--Ed.) am not the Christ. And they asked him, what then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No" (John 1:20-21). Jesus says John the Baptist is Elias. John the Baptist says he is not. Someone is dishonest and, logically speaking, which man is in a better position to know. Secondly, if John the Baptist is Elijah, where is the "great and dreadful day of the Lord that is supposed to follow his appearance according to Mal. 4:5 ("Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord"). And lastly, if John the Baptist is Elijah the prophet, then Jesus taught reincarnation. (66) "And from the days of John the Baptist unto now..." (Matt. 11:12). These words signify that a long period had elapsed since John. Yet, on the very day Jesus is said to have uttered these words, he received a visit from the disciples of John who was in prison as Matt. 11:2-3 shows. (67) "Oh my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me..." (Matt. 26:39). This verse along with Matt. 27:46 ("Why hast thou foresaken me") shows that Jesus did not offer himself spontaneously as a sacrifice for mankind. "Cup" comes from a Hebrew word which actually means fate or, in this case, death. (68) "And Jesus began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer...and be killed, and after three days rise again" (Mark 8:31) and (Matt. 27:63) versus "The Son of man must suffer...and be raised the third day" (Luke 9:22) and (Luke 24:46, Mark 9:31). Jesus contradicted himself with respect to whether he was to arise on or after the third day. (69) "Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a King then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born...." (John 18:37). Jesus often didn't seem to know the difference between a question and a statement. Pilate posed a query; he did not make an announcement. (70) "There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my sake, and the gospel's, But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands..." (Mark 10:29-30). What wealth did the apostles and disciples receive? What houses and lands did they obtain for following Jesus? How does one grant retrospective motherhood? Promising one's followers immense riches is actually a form of bribery. (71) "Behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city...Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation" (Matt. 23:34, 36). What prophets, wise men, or scribes did Jesus send to that generation who were also killed, crucified, and scourged in the synagogues, and persecuted from city to city? (72) "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:54). Would this include Judas who so ate and drank (Matt. 26:26-27); whom Jesus called a devil (John 6:70), and whom Satan entered (Luke 22:3)? (73) "There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his Kingdom" (Matt. 16:28) and "there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the Kingdom of God come with power" (Mark 9:1), Luke 9:27). These passages show Christ's coming in power and glory to judge the quick and the dead was to come in the lifetime of persons living then; yet, they all died and the kingdom is yet to come. (74) "Watch therefore for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh" (Matt. 24:42-44). It is interesting that Jesus compares himself to a thief breaking into a good man's house. But, then, who knows his morality better than he himself?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #72 Continues from Last Month (Part f)

(BE noted in the Dec. 1984 issue that Jesus' promise of protection to Paul failed--Ed.) The defense for your 6th accusation concerning Acts 18:10 ("For I am with thee (Paul--Ed.), and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city") is located in that very same verse. You neglected to print the last portion of that verse which clearly has Jesus only assuring him that no harm will come to him while he is in Corinth.

Editor's Response to Letter #72 (Part f)

I don't feel this verse is as clear as you claim, GL. Perhaps the last part does promise protection only in the city of Corinth, but I don't interpret it that way. Actually, it is too nebulous to prove either position and probably should have been left out.

Letter #72 Concludes (Part g)

(In part 7 of the Dec. issue BE noted the following problem: "Make yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness" versus "Ye cannot serve God and mammon"--Ed.). Making yourself friends of mammon is not tantamount to serving mammon.

Editor's Response to Letter #72 (Part g)

I don't think you really believe the distinction you have made GL and only offer it as a debating tactic. Judging from the context in which both verses appear, the author did not intend the contrast you have drawn. You also face the unenviable task of explaining how Jesus can be our moral beacon while teaching people to befriend unrighteousness.

Letter # 77 from FW of Portland, Oregon

I just received your sample copy today. You're doing an excellent job about something which should be done on a massive scale. Count me in as a subscriber. There's something, however, which I must point out to you as in error. In your commentary about the Flood and the Ark and the related nonsense that goes with it, you talk about the variety of domestic dogs as if they were species. This is false. Science only recognizes canis familiaris as a species. All the subsequent breeds of dogs from the Great Dane to the Chihuahua were derived by the genetic manipulation of human dog breeders from ancient times to the present--or selective breeding, if you will. Check it out in the Britannica or some other authoritative source. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter #77

We thank you for your considerate comments, FW. With regard to your specific point, I think you misunderstood my position with respect to the dogs. Perhaps I wasn't clear enough. If you will recall, the commentary on this topic began with the following observation: "Anyone believing in the Flood must provide rational answers to the following questions." You have provided what you feel is a rational explanation. I, on the other hand, find it difficult to believe that the tremendous variety of dogs today could have evolved from a single pair in only a few thousand years. Not being a scientist, however, I didn't attempt to prove my case. That's an extra-biblical problem which I'll leave to qualified evolutionists. If they support your position, I'm quite willing to alter mine. Alerting people to the problem was my only concern.

Letter # 78 from DEM of Long Beach, California

(Part K of the commentary in issue #23 noted the problem presented in 1 Kings 7:23 of having a circle 10 cubits in diameter and 30 cubits in circumference--Ed.) With respect to 1 Kings 7:23 I feel that you are on thin ice. Granted that a circular object of 10 cubits in diameter cannot have a circumference of 30 cubits. As the figures are "30" was not qualified in the Bible, you have assumed that it should stand or fall according to mathematical exactness. It is either right or it is wrong, as you put it. But consider the following. Your answer of 31.40 is also wrong as you rounded off pi to two decimal places before using it in your calculation. In fact, no amount of decimal places would suffice due to the number pi. Mathematically, the exact value for the circumference must equal $10 \times \pi$ which can never be precisely captured by a decimal expression.... If we give the benefit of the doubt (and we should as we cannot know exactly the biblical author's thoughts here), then we must assume that the number given is an approximation of some type. The degree of accuracy depends on what we want. You used 31.40 based on rounding pi to two decimals. I might prefer the value 31.42 which is based on rounding off the "exact" answer to two decimals. Someone else might prefer the nearest whole number and they would select 31 as the answer. On the other hand, 30 is a nice clean number and may well have suited the needs of the biblical authors who used it. Since all length measurements must be an approximation we should insert that qualification in our reading unless the text specifically claims otherwise....

Editor's Response to Letter # 78

Dear DEM. You might be interested in knowing that this topic generated an exceptional amount of interest on the part of many readers. Your response in particular is essentially a variation on the common apologetic theme that the Bible was not meant to be a scientifically precise text. But the fact is the Bible is either inerrant or it isn't, and a circle with a circumference of 30 and a diameter of 10 isn't possible. If the author had said "approximately 30" there would have been no problem. But he didn't. Granted all measurements are approximations, but there is a qualitative difference between 31.40 and 30. The latter doesn't appear to acknowledge even the existence of pi. According to your reasoning when my teacher in school subtracted for my slightly erroneous answer, I should have told him my response was a "nice clean number." Moreover, if you are going to accept 30, why not accept 33, 32, 29, or 28? They are just rough approximations too. Why grant this privileged status to 30 only. Thousands of math students are going to have legitimate complaints when their answers, which are closer to the correct response than 30 is to 31.40, are counted wrong, while "God's word" is considered correct. And lastly, remember this is supposed to be God's book, not a man-made instrument. And like God it has to be perfect. Approximations don't count. You can't be approximatly perfect. You either are or you are not. If the book was giving an approximate figure, it should have said so or otherwise qualified the answer.

Letter #79 from KEN of Sacramento, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I am still an avid reader of BE, and hope you will take the time to review some constructive criticisms of some recent issues. First issue 22, page 1, Item (4). (BE quoted Gen. 1:20 and 2:19 and stated, "According to the 1st creation all winged fowl were created out of the waters. Yet, the 2nd account says that every fowl of the air was created out of the ground--Ed.) I'm sure by now many readers have pointed out the "contradiction" is just poor translation. If you check some of the more accurate and better documented translations, such as the NIV and the NAB the contradiction evaporates. Perhaps this item proves that the KJV is imperfect, but it argues nothing about the Bible in general.

Editor's Response to Letter # 79 (Part a)

Dear KEN. Problems of this nature are unavoidable no matter what version is used. Every version of the Bible has its detractors. If I used the RSV, the NEB, the NWT or any one of several other versions, someone would take issue with particular verses and cite other versions to the contrary. That's why I focus on the KJV. It seems to be most acceptable to the largest number of people. Dealing with every version of the Bible on an individual basis is out of the question. You have chosen to rely upon recent versions which are not only tendentious but opposed by a substantial number of fundamentalists. Before we can debate the Bible we must first agree on which version is to be used. There must first be a consensus on what the Bible is. If it isn't a book, but, instead, a compilation of bits and pieces from many books, then communication will rapidly deteriorate. If we are going to leap from one version to another, then the only practical way to communicate would be for you to write your own version composed of those verses you prefer and send me a copy. I've confronted this rather sophisticated technique before. Individuals will quote the KJV until they encounter difficulties and then switch to another version which is then quoted until it, too, creates problems, at which time a third version is employed. It's a kind of catch-me-if-you-can game in which apologists are provided a wide variety of sentences to choose from for each verse in the Bible. In effect, there is no Bible, per se, but only a vast array of sentences in a variety of versions which can be compiled as conditions dictate. I have no objection to discussing any standard version providing we stay with that version. Allowing biblicists to have 10 or 15 versions of every verse in the Bible from which to choose at will would be absurd.

Letter #79 Continues (Part b)

(On page 2 of the same issue BE contrasted Gen. 1:9-10 with 2:4-6. After quoting both, BE stated: "in the 1st creation the earth when created was covered with water and the land did not appear until the 3rd day. In the 2nd creation there was no water at first; the earth was dry land"--Ed.) I'm at a loss to understand how you can interpret Gen. 2:4-6 (the 2nd version--Ed.) this way. The verses say only that in the early days of the earth, there was no rain. It does not say that lakes and oceans did not exist. Perhaps you can enlighten me. If this argument is as weak as it looks, I fear you are only giving ammunition to the evangelists.

Editor's Response to Letter #79 (Part b)

Essentially we are discussing the extra-biblical question of how the earth was formed, KEN. I find it difficult to believe the earth initially had oceans and lakes and yet, not one drop of rain had fallen. If you can produce adequate evidence and reputable scientists willing to testify on your behalf, I'd be willing to reconsider my position. However, I think your belief runs counter to accepted scientific data.

Letter #79 Concludes (Part c)

(On page 2 of the 23rd issue BE quoted 2 Chron. 21:20-22:2 and showed that Ahaziah began to reign at age 42 even though his father had just died at age 40, i.e., Ahaziah was two years older than his father--Ed.) When I checked the NIV, for example, I see that Ahaziah was actually 22 years old when he began to reign (2 Chron. 22:2).

Editor's Response to Letter # 79 (Part c)

Why didn't you choose the KJV, the RSV, the MLV, the ASV, or the Jewish Masoretic text, KEN. They all say 42, not 22. Personally, I consider the RSV to be far more reliable than the NIV. Even the Living Bible, which has 22, has a footnote stating that literally speaking, the number should be 42. You quoted the NIV but it, too, has a footnote stating the number is 42 in Hebrew. Apologists have tried to escape from this problem by inserting the number 22 because 2 Kings 8:26 says Ahaziah was 22 when he began to reign. The compilers of expediency-motivated modern versions such as the NIV have sought to resolve the contradiction between 2 Kings 8:26 and 2 Chron. 22:2 by simply rewriting the latter.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #80 from MP of Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. Consider this problem. Jesus often referred to himself as the "Son of man" (Matt. 16:13, 19:28, 25:13, 26:2) and many biblicists would have us believe that Jesus was/is God. Yet, Balaam in an alledged revelation from God says, "God is not a man, that he should lie neither the son of man, that he should repent" (Num. 23:19).

Letter No 81 from DWC of Boydton, Virginia

Last night I and a few christian brothers were involved in a "heated" debate concerning the Bible and christianity; therefore, I decided to write you, after I remembered hearing you bring forth some good/excellent remarks about the bible on a talk show, three months ago, to see if you could come to my defense by sending me some of your literature and your newsletter. Also I would like to become one of your students. I can't honestly say if I'm an atheist or not, but I'm sure not a Christian! And I say this because there hasn't been a christian in my 10 years of incarceration who can answer my questions! Also most of these guys who have been converted into christianity are either doing it as a means of escapism (from drugs, gangs, etc.), something to cling to, or a chance to meet women in the choir. These converts smoke, shoot dope, and do almost everything else under the sun; yet, they claim to be christians! They also return to prison at a fast pace with a worse offense and head right back to the chapels. On several occasions I raised my hand during the christian services to ask question and was almost thrown out.... to be honest, I feel as though the bible is shoved down the poor people's throats to keep us in submission.... Where do we go when times are hard? Straight to church or to pick up a bible. But when we leave these churches or put down these bibles, things are still the same. People came from the Parole Board with the fake story of having the holy ghost....

Letter #82 from RM of Fairview, Canada

Dear Dennis. It is with pathological delight that I am renewing by subscription to BE for the 1985 term. How can I control my eagerness to make waves within my community, as well as provincially. However, it is great fun, thanx to you. Besides creating controversy in a local paper, I am in the process of putting much of BE on computer disk for immediate recall.

Furthermore, I am designing a correspondence course of twenty lessons apart from the disk. Having been a school teacher, I find grammatical errors within the covers of the Bible very interesting, especially the ones you have found like "replenish" and "mountains" in Genesis. I think the one in Gen. 3:8 is also interesting: "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day...." When does a voice take on legs for walking? ...thank you so much for all the intelligence you have shown me.

Editor's Response to Letter #82

Dear RM. Your remarks are very kind and I'm glad to see you are using BE as a basic tool to confront biblicists. That's one of the primary reasons for which it is written.

Letter #83 from AK of Port Moody, B.C., Canada

Dear Dennis. I would like you to know how much I appreciate reading BE. It is the most intelligent writing I ever read in the 77 years of my life. I like your logic and sense of humor and look forward to every new issue. Certain writings in the Bible, which for decades have been doubtful to me, have now been proven to be plain nonsense by BE. In discussions about religion, it is pleasant to have BE writings for support. Please accept the best wishes from my wife and myself for further success in the enlightenment of the people.

Editor's Response to Letter #82

Thank you AK and I'm glad to see that you, too, are using BE as support in discussions.

EDITOR'S NOTE: A special note of gratitude goes out to KEN who wrote this month's Letter #79. Although we have had our differences, KEN has always been a reliable supporter of BE and is solely responsible for my Feb. 18th hour-long appearance on radio station WGMR of Sacramento, California, and the resulting additional subscribers. Such support is greatly appreciated.

Jesus, the Imperfect Beacon (Part Four of a Four Part Series)--Although this month's list of Jesus' aberrations marks the conclusion of an extensive critique of Christianity's namesake, even more examples are available for future analysis and may someday be presented. In the meantime, however, the following will complete the topic: (75) "Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt.20:28) versus "Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him" (Psalm 72:11) and "...that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him" (Dan. 7:14) and "...all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:27). Jesus' concept of the messiah conflicts with that of OT prophets. (76) "but I say unto you, `That ye resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also" (Matt. 5:39) versus "And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers" (Matt. 21:12-13) and "when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck Jesus with the palm of the hand, saying, `Answerest thou the high priest so" (John 18:22)? Apparently Jesus ignored his own maxim since he overthrew the tables and was struck by an officer for talking back. (77) "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them saying,

"Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not" (Matt. 10:5) versus "So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he (Jesus--Ed.) abode there two days" (John 4:40) and "He (Jesus--Ed.) left Judaea, and departed again into Galilee. And he must needs go through Samaria. Then cometh he to a city of Samaria..." (John 4:3-5) and "...ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria..." (Acts 1:8) and (Luke 17:11, Isa. 49:6). Jesus not only ignored his own command but advised others to do as much. (78) "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15:24) and "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them saying, 'Go not into the way of the Gentiles...But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel'" (Matt. 10:5-6) and (Matt. 7:6, 15:26, Mark 7:27) versus "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations..." (Matt. 28:19) and "he said unto them, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature'" (Mark 16:15) and "the gospel must first be published among all nations" (Mark 13:10) and (Luke 24:43, Acts 1:8). Jesus originally sent his followers only to the house of Israel, but later reversed course and sought a wider audience. In the vernacular this is known as not having it together." (79) "then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52) and "...and his name shall be called...The mighty God, The everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace" (Isa. 9:6) and "Peace I leave with you, nay peace I give unto you" (John 14:27) and (Matt. 5:9, 5:22, Isa. 2:4, Zech. 9:10) versus "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I come not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. 10:34) and "I am come to send fire on the earth" (Luke 12:49) and "...he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one" (Luke 22:36). Jesus' contradictory approach to peace is even more apparent than that of current political figures appealing to the gallery. (80) "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22) and "As I hear I judge: and my judgment is just...." (John 5:30) and (John 5:27, 8:26, Matt. 25:31-32) versus "...for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world" (John 12:47) and "Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man" (John 8:15) and Luke 12:14, John 8:50). (81) In both Luke 24:17 RSV ("And he said to them, 'What is this conversation which you are holding with each other as you walk?") and Luke 8:43-45 ("And a woman...came behind him and touched the border of his garment:...and Jesus said, 'Who touched me?") Jesus deceived his audience by pretending he, i.e. God, didn't know something. For whatever reason, his act was deceptive. (82) "...go thou to the sea, and cast a hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of money: that take, and give unto them (as a tax--Ed.) for me and thee" (Matt. 17:27). One can not help but ask how this money originated. Either Jesus created it, in which case he was a counterfeiter or, as the omniscient God, he failed to perform the morally correct act of returning it to the rightful owner. (83) "Ask and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you: For everyone that asketh receiveth..." (Matt. 7:7-8) versus "Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am thither ye cannot come" (John 7:34) and "...they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me" (Prov. 1:28) and "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me" (Matt. 27:46) and (Luke 13:24, John 9:31, Psalm 18:41, Jer. 7:16, 11:11, Ezek. 8:18, Micah 3:4, Hab. 1:2). Sometimes Jesus' oratorical flourishes exceeded his grasp. His promise of success to all who ask is not only in opposition to comment by himself and OT prophets but refuted by his own experience. (84) "But I say to you that every one who is angry with his brother shall be liable to judgment..." (Matt. 5:22 RSV). Yet, Jesus himself, ("looked round about on them with anger--Mark 3:5) and overthrew the moneychangers' tables. Again, he didn't practice what he preached. (85) "Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 22:13) and (Matt. 8:12, 25:30) versus "And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 13:42) and (Matt. 25:41). How could weeping and gnashing of teeth occur in darkness and fire? (86) "I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:3, 5) versus "I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance" (Luke 15:7). All must repent; yet, many need no repentance. Strange "logic," indeed! (87) "Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation" (Mark 8:12) versus "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples..." (John 20:30) and "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you..." (Acts 2:22) and (Mark 16:20, Acts 5:12, 8:13). (88) "Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Matt. 20:16) versus "and all flesh shall see the salvation of God" (Luke 3:6) and "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me" (John 12:32). Explaining this one should be left to theologians, for as Elbert Hubbard stated in The Philistine "Theology is an attempt to explain a subject by those who do not understand it. The intent is not to tell the truth but to satisfy the questioner." (89) "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke 14:33) and "Jesus said unto him, 'If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me'" (Matt. 19:21) and (Mark 10:21, Luke 3:11, 11:41, 12:35, 18:22) versus "And it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house" (Mark 2:15). Jesus has a house while telling others to surrender their wealth. (90) "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away" (Matt. 24:35) versus "One generation passeth away, and another cometh: but the earth abideth for ever" (Eccle. 1:4). In this instance, as well as that which follows, Jesus is inaccurate according to the OT. Jesus said, "...all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, And shall come forth" (John 5:28-29) while Job 7:9 says, "as the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more." (91) "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father..." (John 15:26) versus "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name..." (John 14:26). Who, then, will send the Comforter? (92) "...but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder" (Matt. 19:17-18) versus "Thou knowest the commandments,...Do not kill" (Mark 10:19, Luke 8:20). Murder and killing are not identical. Jesus contradicted himself unless he intended to equate the two, in which case soldiers, police, executioners, and those killing in self-defense or by accident are in trouble. (93) Jesus called himself a prophet ("Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country"--Matt. 13:57) as did others ("And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee"--Matt. 21:11). But he couldn't be a prophet in the OT tradition because: (a) None of the prophets of Israel ever taught in his own name or on his own responsibility. The "I" of the prophets is God; the "I" of Jesus is himself; (b) No prophet added to or diminished the laws of the Torah; (c) No prophet arrogated to himself the power to forgive sins which the OT reserves for God alone; (d) No prophet ever did a miracle on his own authority or represented it to be a sign of his own power. Jesus performed miracles to cause people to believe in him OT prophets wrought miracles to strengthen belief in God; (e) and no prophet in the OT, not even Moses, ever claimed to be nearer God than others. Jesus claimed a special nearness to God not shared or even approximated by any other human being. (94) Jesus said, "If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true" (John 5:31) and later stated, "I am one that bear witness of myself..." (John 8:18). The logical conclusion to be drawn from combining these two statements is that Jesus disproved his own honesty. (95) "And the high priest answered and said unto him, 'I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God.' Jesus saith unto him, 'Thou hast said; nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven'" (Matt. 26:63-64). The inaccuracy of Jesus' prophecy is shown in the fact that the high priest never saw this. (96) And finally, like Paul, Jesus was not averse to twisting OT verses should the need arise. "For this is he, of whom it is written, 'Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee'" (Matt. 11:10). This is a quote from Mal. 3:1 which actually says, "Behold, I will send my messenger and he shall prepare the way before me..." Several differences are evident: (a) Malachi says, "the way before me" not "thy way before thee"; (b) Jesus left out "before thy face"; (c) Malachi says "will send" (future tense) rather than "send"; (d) Since it's unclear as to whom the pronouns apply, there is little reason to believe Malachi is referring to John the Baptist or Jesus, and (e) the scene in Malachi of the coming of the Lord is one of fear and terror, like the day of judgment; whereas the birth of Christ is always spoken of as a time of joy and happiness. Thus, the scene in Malachi would not be referring to the birth of Christ. A substantial number of additional examples could be mentioned and probably will appear in future issues, but by now any reasonably objective assessment must lead to the conclusion that Jesus is an imperfect beacon and wholly unqualified to act as mankind's savior.

REVIEWS

Letter #84 from Arthur Rice of Hale Center, Texas (Arthur wants his full name published) Dear Dennis...I have just finished reading and studying McDowell and Stewart's Answers to Tough Questions. If this work is typical of the apologists then they have a very weak case indeed. Time after time they distort the argument by using faulty logic, appeal to authority, appeal to ignorance, circular reasoning, watering down the conflict, i.e., always a difficulty never a contradiction, etc. McDowell is very apt to use whichever version of scripture most suits his assertions. As in the case on page 140 where in defense of christian faith as an "intelligent faith" he used the NASB version of Mark 12:34 showing a scribe answering intelligently instead of the KJV which shows the scribe answered discreetly. Whatever device furthers his position he uses extensively so that his "Answers" begin to look more like "Evasions and Unsupported Assertions."

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #85 from JP of Philadelphia, Penn. (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I just read your sample issue and I must say that the problem that I find with it is that you focus on individual points of apparent inconsistency and not the main issue at hand: Is the Bible God's Word, and is Christ who He said He was?...In your sample issue you quote 8 reasons given by McDowell and Stewart for the Bible's Divine Inspiration, all of which you rightly complained were internal and therefore no proof at all.

Editor's Response to Letter #85 (Part a)

Dear JP. I think that if you had read more than one issue of BE you'd realize the focus extends far beyond individual inconsistencies. They are used primarily as blows in the larger philosophical bout. Any attorney knows you prove your case by taking points one at a time. I can't disprove the entire Bible in one fell swoop. Cases are built point by point. It's technical and methodical, but what do you recommend? Broad glittering generalizations which are nothing more than unsubstantiated opinions? Opinions are a penny a pound.

Letter #85 Continues (Part b)

I would like to give you five reasons that I consider the Bible to be God's Word, all of which are external to its own claim of Divine Inspiration: (1) In a book written over 1600 years by 40 different men, I find a consistent message of man's sin, God's righteousness, etc.... (2) Fulfilled prophecy, both political and messianic, too numerous to be coincidence. (3) A practicality that is manifested in the changed lives that Christ has affected. (4) A message too unique and wonderful to be man's invention...especially in the concept of...salvation through grace. What man could have invented the greatest love story ever told. God becoming a humble babe...suffering death.... (5) Overwhelming evidence that Christ was resurrected and therefore who he said he was....

Editor's Response to Letter #85 (Part b)

The problem with your analysis, JP, is that it is not only a litany of unproven generalizations but permeated with the myopic vision so evident in those who have been taught early in life to believe their's is the only way. Let's look at your points individually: (1) Anyone who finds the biblical message to be consistent hasn't looked very hard or with a critical eye. One of the primary reasons for BE's existence is to prove the Bible is anything but consistent. (2) With respect to prophecy, biblical perspicacity is about on a par with that of most fortune tellers as past and future issues of BE will show. (3) Changed lives also occur to those who have adopted the beliefs of Mohammed, Buddha, and countless other religious figures. Why single out Jesus for special attention? (4) What is unique about the Christian message and upon what possible basis would you conclude that it is beyond man's invention. Are you saying no one thought of basic Christian beliefs such as salvation by grace, the atoning death and resurrection of one's god, etc. prior to Jesus' appearance? Are you saying Christianity is not a composite, an amalgam, of many earlier beliefs? One might just as well say it emerged isolated from all outside influences with no evolutionary history, in which case it truly would be unique. I'd be interested in knowing what aspect of Christianity was not evident in an earlier religion or faith. (5) And lastly, even if Jesus had arisen from death, why would that be of any consequence since resurrections were rather common in that age. Essentially, JP, you have made some all-encompassing generalizations to which I have more or less responded in kind. From your perspective the Bible is God's word, teeming with fulfilled prophecy and other accurate teachings. I say the exact opposite is true. Now that that is out of the way, where do we go from here? Do we prove and provide evidence or do we merely continue making assertions which the other side considers wholly inaccurate? That's the problem with so many letters I receive, JP. They equate belief with proof. They aren't able to separate proven facts from opinions. They also seem to have no ability to sit back and critically analyze their own beliefs. They don't ask themselves: What would be the logical response of critics to what I just said.

Letter No. 86 from GL of Uxbridge, Mass. (Part a)

Dennis. In response to your response to my letter (#72-Part a), I must point out that you obfuscated the issue by introducing your proposition that Jesus peculated silverware. First of all silverware was most likely not present. Secondly, my logic was far from dishonest unless you have made an escape from reason. You hold your assumption that Jesus rudely invited himself to the man's house as fact. There is no more supporting evidence for your assumption than there is for my proposition that Jesus may have been invited earlier. The passage in Mark 14 records Jesus as stating..."the teacher asks where is my room...? Even if you can not accept the possibility that Jesus was invited earlier, at best you must admit that the passages don't clean the matter up, but you can not assume the worst because of your dislike of Jesus which is the only thing that could bring you to the point where you contend that Jesus definitely invited himself beyond a shadow of doubt. Your response was specious at best.

Editor's Response to Letter #86 (Part a)

GL. We disagree on several points. First, silverware has been used for centuries. The Encyclopedia International in front of me says, "Greece, Byzantium, Rome and other countries of the ancient world produced admirable silverware." Your comment that it was "most likely not present" exposes poor homework. You're guessing! Moreover, don't you think your comment is rather immature, if not petty? I could have used any number of items. Secondly, I don't know what version you are using, GL, but the KJV says, "The Master saith, Where is the guestchamber" (Mark 14:14). The possessive pronoun "my" isn't even present. Thirdly, let's return to the original problem. In Matt. 26:18 Jesus said he would keep the passover at a man's home and BE's commentary noted this displayed rude manners. You stated Jesus could have received an off-camera invitation. As I mentioned earlier, if you are going to make behind-the-scenes assumptions, then so am I. If we stay strictly with the Bible, however, you will have little to present in Jesus' behalf. True, the passages "don't clear the matter up," but they are decidedly in my favor. If they aren't, why did you create something outside the Bible for support? You accuse me of assuming the worse because of my dislike of Jesus when actually you are assuming the best because of your devotion to Jesus. Unlike you, who formulated an extra-biblical event, I remained within the text. I could write an entire library if extra-biblical assumptions were allowed.

Letter #86 Continues (Part b)

(In part 3 of the Dec. 1984 commentary BE asked: If loving thy neighbor as thyself was an OT commandment, how could it be a new commandment as Jesus claimed. GL said it was a new commandment because it modified the old. BE replied that this violated Deut. 12:32, Prov. 30:6, and Rev. 22:18-19 which prohibit any modification of the Old Law--Ed.) In response to the Editor's response to my letter #72 (part c), Rev. 22:18-19 ("For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book. If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away..." was your strongest argument. But you took the verses out of context. If you examine the verses you will see that warning refers to those who..."add unto these things"; and to those who "shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy. This warning covers those who tamper with the book of Revelation only.

Editor's Response to Letter #86 (Part b)

Interestingly enough, GL, you accused me of taking Rev. 22:18-19 out-of-context when that is the criticism used by other biblicists when people have not applied Rev. 22:18-19 to the entire Bible. You contend the verse applies only to the Book of Revelation whereas apologists whom I have contacted apply it to the entire Bible. You need to meet with your Christian brothers and sisters and agree on a common policy. I think you are in a class by yourself. On this point I'd have to ask the same question many others would pose. Upon what basis do you assume that Rev. 22:18-19 does not apply to the entire Bible? Many groups who have given extra-biblical writings, such as the Book of Mormon and Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, authority commensurate with that of the Bible, could probably use you as a spokesman. They are tired of hearing Rev. 22:18-19 applied to the entire Bible. Secondly, you ignored Deut. 12:32 ("What things soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it") and Prov. 30:6 ("Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee"). Surely you aren't going to contend that they also apply only to the book in which they appear. If so, then for all practical purposes you have exposed the entire Bible to any group who seeks to modify the text with a more up-to-date revelation. In effect, the canon is not closed. Books and other writings can still be added. In trying to save Jesus, you have severely, if not mortally, wounded the Bible.

Letter #86 Concludes (Part c)

(In letter #70--Part d--GL described ET's concept of evolution as simplistic and ET defended his position in Letter #74--Ed.) In response to letter #74 and ET's response to my letter I must apologize ET. I assumed that you were speaking of the theory of Evolution when you stated that Evolution is fact. Part of the misunderstanding was due to your charge against "Bible thumpers." I know of no "Bible thumpers" who would disagree with you that evolution (change) is constantly at work. What we do reject as fact is the theory that all life on earth has come from a single cell.

Letter #87 from IF of Vacaville, California

(We sent a small note to IF explaining why BE doesn't emphasize the non-existence of Jesus--Ed.) I received your card explaining why you don't believe the non-existence of Jesus belongs in BE. I differ on that score. It is an errancy to pray and carry on by the hundreds of millions to a personage that never existed. This would be exposing the wealthy electronic evangelists plus the evangelist-in-chief in the White House....

Editor's Response to Letter #87

Dear IF. BE does not oppose discussing the non-existence of Jesus. That's no problem. The question is: What are you going to use for evidence and how will it affect others. An extra-biblical topic obligates one to go outside the Book for data to use against the Bible, an approach which has little effect on true believers. Using one part of the Book against another is more effective. It's one thing for outside data to refute something within the text; it's quite another for data within to do so. Biblicists believe in no higher authority than the Bible, so external information brought to the Book, regardless of source, will be discounted. Your approach will disprove the accuracy of the Bible from an intellectually objective perspective, but will it persuade others to alter their views. You'll win the argument; but will you win people. It's hard enough doing it BE's way. However, because of the topic's acceptance, it will be discussed eventually.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #88 from RPK of Ruston, Louisiana

Dennis. For the record, I do not believe the value of your work can be overestimated. I truly believe it may have historical significance and early editions of BE will become serious collectors' items. I wish my circumstances could allow me to take a more active roll in your work. Some time ago I began a correspondence with the Jimmy Swaggart people... I want to challenge them to name one verse to which I cannot find a contradiction or at least an inconsistency. Do you think I am on firm ground?...If I publicly challenge through "Letters to the Editor" some of the Bible quoting letters to the newspapers, are you available (on a non-professional basis) as a resource?

Editor's Response to Letter #88

Dear RPK. Your compliments are only too kind. With respect to finding a contradiction or inconsistency to every verse in the Bible, this could present a problem since many statements say little of substance. For instance, I just opened my KJV to John 7:53 which says, "And every man went unto his own house." I've never been known for defending the Bible but I'd be hardpressed to find a contradiction to a statement as innocuous as that. Indeed, many verses are nothing more than questions or exclamations. Rest assured that the amount of information in our favor far exceeds any need to play Russian roulette with verses. Anytime you wish to use us a resource feel free to do so.

Letter #89 from NLS of Richmond, Indiana

Dennis. Although I'm certainly not qualified to debate with anyone over biblical verses, I sure can loan them BE and let them read for themselves.

Editor's Response to Letter #89

Dear NLS. Sounds like an excellent idea! You're doing what you can with what you have and that's all anyone can ask.

COMMENTARY

False Teachings-Many biblical teachings exercise an influence on believers not unlike that of a tranquilizer on the unsettled. Euphoria is generated at the expense of reality. It would be nice if many of the following statements were true; but, unfortunately, denying conditions is no way to cope with vicissitudes: (a) "(God-Ed.) executes justice for the oppressed (and-Ed.) gives food to the hungry. The Lord sets the prisoners free. The Lord opens the eyes of the blind, the Lord raises up those who are bowed down; The Lord loves the righteous; The Lord protects the strangers; He supports the fatherless and the widow, But he thwarts the way of the wicked" (Psalm 146:7-9) and "He heals the brokenhearted, and binds up their wounds" (Psalm 147:3) and "The Lord lifts up the downtrodden, he casts the wicked to the ground" (Psalm 147:6) and "O Lord, who is like thee, thou who deliverest the weak from him who is too strong for him, the weak and needy from him who despoils him?" (Psalm 35:10) and "call upon me (God-Ed.) in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee..." (Psalm 50:15). The number of oppressed, starving, blind, crippled, and fatherless people who could testify to the inaccuracy of these comments is almost limitless. Millions of sufferers have never experienced relief. (b) Equally soothing but no less erroneous are statements to the effect that the world's wicked will receive their just deserts. "Does not calamity befall the unrighteous, and disaster the workers of iniquity?" (Job 31:3 RSV) and "The Lord preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy" (Psalm 145:20) and "The Lord is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked" (Psalm 129:4) and "The violence of the wicked will sweep them away because they refuse to do what is just" (Prov. 21:7 RSV) and "it will not be well with the wicked, neither will he prolong his days like a shadow, because he does not fear before God" (Eccle. 8:13 RSV) and "There is no peace saith the Lord, unto the wicked" (Isa. 48:22). Who would not desire a world in which the worst received their due; but justice is not written on the wind, only in the acts of men. We are told "the fear of the Lord prolongs life, but the years of the wicked will be short" (Prov. 10:22) and "bloodthirsty, deceitful men will not live out half their days" (Psalm 55:23 NIV). Unfortunately, all too often the wicked seem to live forever. We are told that "if the wicked's children be multiplied, it is for the sword: and his offspring shall not be satisfied with bread" (Job 27:14). Yet, in many cases they are the last to see combat and the first to be fed. The just are deceptively told that "though the wicked heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay; he may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver" (Job 27:16-17). If only this were true! And we are told "the face of the Lord is against evildoers, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth" (Psalm 34:16), when Hitler and Al Capone will be remembered long after most of us have come and gone. (c) In some verses the righteous are assured aid will be forthcoming. "When the righteous cry for help, the Lord hears, and delivers them out of all their troubles. The Lord is near to the brokenhearted, and saves the crushed in spirit. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivers him out of them all. He keeps all his bones; not one of them is broken" (Psalm 34:17-20 RSV) and "Cast your cares on the Lord and he will sustain you; he will never let the righteous fall" (Psalm 55:22 NIV) and "...Blessed is the man who fears the Lord, who greatly delights in his commandments: His descendants will be mighty in the land; the generation of the upright will be blessed" (Psalm 112:1-2 RSV) and "The fear of the Lord leads to life; and he who has it rests satisfied; he will not be visited by harm" (Prov. 19:23 RSV) and "...we receive from him whatever we ask, because we keep his commandments and do what pleases him" (1 John 3:22). In truth, anyone reasonably well acquainted with the world situation knows better. Cemeteries are filled with righteous people who lived in hope to the bitter end. (d) In many instances punishment of the wicked is directly linked to justice for the righteous: "The Lord does not let the righteous go hungry, but he thwarts the craving of the wicked" (Prov. 10:3 RSV) and "The righteous will never be uprooted, but the wicked will not remain in the land" (Prov. 10:30 NIV) and "He who is steadfast in righteous will live, but he who pursues evil will die" (Prov. 11:19 RSV) and "If the righteous is required on earth, how much more the wicked and sinner!" (Prov. 11:31 RSV) and "O fear the Lord, you his saints, for those who fear him have not want! The young lions suffer want and hunger; but those who seek the Lord lack no good thing" (Psalm 34:9-10 RSV) and "Trust in the Lord and He will give you the desires of your heart. Commit your way to the Lord, Trust also in Him, and He will do it" (Psalm 37:3-5 NASB). Again, one need only observe life to see that precisely the opposite is often the case. The righteous starve, are uprooted, die early, receive no relief on earth, and are plagued with ills; while the wicked often satisfy their cravings, live long, receive little punishment, and have fewer troubles than most. The Bible, itself, provides a good example. "And the Lord said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an unright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?...So went Satan forthi from the presence of the Lord and smote Job with more boils from the the side of his foot unto his crown" (Job 2:37). No ill befalls the righteous and they are requited on earth? Job would probably consider this rather humorous. (e) "If they (kings-Ed.) hear and serve Him, They shall end their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures, But if they do not hear, they shall perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge" (Job 36:11-12 NASB) and "A ruler who lacks understanding is a cruel oppressor, but he who hates unjust gain will prolong his days" (Prov. 28:16 RSV). There are far too many exceptions to these maxims to give them credence. Indeed, many of the best rulers have had the shortest, most tragic, lives. (f) "and these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (Mark 16:17-18). Many believers have followed these precepts to the detriment of themselves and others. (g) "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray...Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him anointing him with oil...and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up..." (James 5:13-15). On page 6 of the Nov. 1983 issue I stated the following: "The national news media is currently reporting a case in which a fundamentalist minister will not allow his daughter to receive medical treatment for her cancerous condition because of his interpretation of the Bible, (i.e., James 5:13-15)...One need only read James to see scripture supports his position...Depending on the capabilities of medical personnel, a child could very well die because someone got hold of a Bible...My heart goes out to the child, although I fear the worse." As you might have guessed, Pamela Hamilton died recently. (h) "Blessed is he who considers the poor! The Lord delivers him in the day of trouble; the Lord protects him and keeps him alive.... The Lord sustains him on his sickbed; in his illness thou healest all his infirmities" (Psalm 41:1-3). This isn't any more accurate than that promised the righteous. It should be; but it isn't. (i) "He who finds a wife finds a good thing and obtains favor from the Lord" (Psalm 18:22 RSV) and "She (a good wife-Ed.) does him good and not harm, all the days of her life" (Prov. 31:12 RSV). It's safe to say that millions of men could testify to the inaccuracy of these comments. (j) "But the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath; they cry not when he bindeth them. They die in youth, and their life is among the unclean" (Job 36:13-14). We can all think of hypocrites who did not die young. In fact, the longevity of some borders on the obscene. (k) "Such are the ways of all who get gain by violence; it takes away the life of its possessors" (Prov. 1:19). That somehow destiny is going to punish wrong-doers is a forlorn hope of biblicists. They just can't believe fate is not going to solve their problems, that they have to create their own remedies. (l) "My son, keep your father's commandment and forsake not your mother's teaching. Bind them upon your heart always; tie them about your neck. When you walk, they will lead you; when you lie down, they will watch over you..." (Prov. 6:20-22 RSV.) Although this should be correct, it isn't. The advice many fathers and mothers give their progeny is anything but proper. People often say that parents should "straighten out" their children when, in fact, millions can't even straighten out their own lives. Broken homes, drug and alcohol addiction, violence, profanity, abuse, deprivation, and a host of other parental involvements show that vast numbers are unqualified to guide their offspring. Telling children to always follow their parents is no way to proceed. (m) "The FOOL hath said in his heart, There is no God, Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: there is none that doeth good" (Psalm 53:1). Believers are enthralled with this verse and although the existence of God can be debated, the performance of good works by many atheists is not subject to rational dispute. (n) "What has been is what will be, and what has been done is what will be done; and there is nothing new under the sun" (Eccle. 1:9) and "That which is, already has been; that which is to be, already has been..." (Eccle. 3:15 RSV). If there is nothing new under the sun, I'd be interested in knowing when someone walked on the moon prior to 1969 or climbed Mt. Everest prior to 1953. Moreover, how does one reconcile this with "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth" (Isa. 65:17) and "...the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man" (Jer. 31:22)? (o) "A false witness will not go unpunished, and he who utters lies will perish" (Prov. 19:9 RSV) or "not escape" (Prov. 19:5 RSV). Exceptions to this are far too common for it to be taken seriously. (p) "Righteous lips are the delight of a king, and he loves him who speaks what is right" (Prov. 16:13 RSV). Thousands of subjects have been killed by their kings and rulers for stating what is right. (q) "Even in your thought, do not curse the king, nor in your bedchamber curse the rich; for a bird of the air will carry your voice..." (Eccle. 10:20 RSV). For the sake of us all; it's good that George Washington ignored this belief. - "...for there is nothing good for a man under the sun except to eat and to drink and to be merry..." (Eccle. 8:15 NASB) and "Bread is made for laughter, and wine gladdens life, and money answers everything (Eccle. 10:19 RSV). I'm not sure the playboy crowd would go that far. (s) "Do not withhold discipline from a child; if you beat him with a rod, he will not die. If you beat him with a rod, you will save his life from Sheol" (Prov. 23:13-14). "If you beat him with a rod he will not die." I should hope not! This philosophy is deplorable and opposed by most authorities in the field. Prov. 26:3 ("A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass, and a rod for the back of fools"), Prov. 29:19 ("By mere words a servant is not disciplined, for though he understands, he will not give heed"), and Eccle. 7:3-4 RSV ("Sorrow is better than laughter, for by madness of countenance the heart is made glad. The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth") belong in the same category. (t) "For bodily exercise profiteth little..." (1 Tim. 4:8). Nearly every sports and exercise program in the Nation testifies to the inaccuracy of this comment. (u) "Again I saw that under the sun the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, nor bread to the wise, nor riches to the intelligent, nor favor to the men of skill" (Eccle. 9:11 RSV). This belongs among verses that are so inaccurate they aren't worthy of serious consideration. (v) "Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, all is vanity" (Eccle. 12:8) and "Vanity of vanities, says the Preacher, vanity of vanities: All is vanity" (Eccle. 1:2). According to Webster's Dictionary "vanity" means futile, worthless, or idle. If so, then why do believers care about anything? They don't adhere to the logical outcome of their own teachings. (w) "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard its spots? Neither can you do good who are accustomed to doing evil" (Jer. 13:23 NIV) and "What is crooked cannot be made straight..." (Eccle. 1:15) and "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it" (Prov. 22:6 RSV). If these verses are true, one might just as well abolish all behavior modification programs for adults. (x) And lastly, "A good name is better than precious ointment, and the day of death, than the day of birth" (Eccle. 7:1 RSV). The day we die is better than the day we are born? I don't accept that for a moment and doubt many biblicists do either.

REVIEWS

On page 83 in So the Bible is Full of Contradictions Carl Johnson sought to reconcile John 14:27 ("Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you...") with Matt. 10:34 ("Think not that I come to send peace: I come not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father..."). He states that, "Jesus did come to bring peace to those who trust Him and obey Him. `Therefore being justified and obey Him, the gospel message will cause hostility and strife and will set man at variance who trust and obey Him, which he seeks to prove by quoting Rom. 5:1. The latter says those And where is the evidence that Matt. 10:34 only applies to those who do not trust and obey Him? It would be nice from Johnson's perspective if such were the case; but it isn't. He concludes with, "The first reference speaks of the peace Jesus gives to His own and the second reference speaks of the persecution His followers may expect." Yet, nothing whatever is said about persecution, nor is there any reason to limit the second verse to followers only.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #90 from VT of Huron, California (Part a)

(In part 2 of the Dec. 84' commentary BE quoted Luke 12:4 ("Be not afraid of them that kill the body and after that have no more that they can do") and followed with several examples of Jesus hiding, escaping, or fleeing-Ed.) If one stops at Luke 12:4 they will not get the true meaning. The exegesis is not complete. Luke 12:5 says, "But I will make it clear to you (BAS) whom ye shall fear (KJV) the only one you need fear (PHI). Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power (the power) to cast into hell (KJV)....

Editor's Response to Letter #90 (Part a)

You have added nothing to the resolution of the problem, VT, unless you are claiming the one who has power to cast into hell is the Jews and Pharisees in opposition to Jesus. Jesus said fear "him," i.e. Satan, not fear "them." Are you saying the Jews and Pharisees had power to cast others into hell? Only if this were true could Jesus have been consistent when he escaped, fled, and hid from them.

Letter #90 Continues (Part b)

(In part 3 of the Dec. 84' commentary BE noted that Jesus said we should keep the OT commandments of loving thy neighbor as thyself and, yet, later said he was giving a new commandment. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another" (John 13:34). The question was then asked that if loving thy neighbor as thyself was an OT commandment, how could it be a new commandment-Ed.). ...Jesus made it "New" by giving to it a new standard, and a new motive; "Love one another; even as I have loved you." His love was to be shown in his death for others; such self-sacrificing love shown by his followers would be the witness to the world of true discipleship. See Charles Erdmans Expositon of the Gospel of John....

Editor's Response to Letter #90 (Part b)

You are rationalizing, VT. You mean the new love differs from the old in that we must not only be willing to, but actually, die for others? If giving one's life is the new standard, then your continued existence shows you have chosen to ignore it.

Letter #90 Continues (Part c)

(In part 7 of the Dec. 84' commentary BE asked how Luke 16:9 ("Make yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness") could be reconciled with Luke 16:13 ("ye cannot serve God and mammon-Ed.). I believe the Wycliffe Commentary is of great value here! The Lord implied that earthly property can be used to help others, whose gratitude will ensure a welcome in eternity.

Luke 16:11 says, "If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon who will commit to your trust the true riches?" The use of material wealth is a test of character. Those who cannot use it wisely do not deserve to have spiritual responsibilities entrusted to them.... I believe this is about the final word here. What else need we say?

Editor's Response to Letter #90 (Part c)

A great deal, VT, because the commentary you quote is certainly not the final word. First, by what rationale do you conclude that the Lord implied that earthly property can be used to help others, whose gratitude....? What part of the statement justifies your assumption? You even admit it isn't stated, only implied. I see nothing in the verse or context regarding helping others who gratitude will ensure a welcome in eternity. Second, as I stated in the March issue, "You also face the unenviable task of explaining how Jesus can be our moral beacon while teaching people to befriend unrighteousness." Be wary of apologetic commentaries. Most of the standard works are masterpieces of rationalization. A lot of reasonably intelligent people have spent a great amount of time, energy, and money making the irrational seem feasible. After all, if you can convince people that men rose from the dead, sticks turned into serpents, donkeys talked, and the earth stood still, you can make anything, no matter how incredible, seem true. With a reasonable degree of ingenuity and creativity, the sky's the limit.

Letter #90 Continues (Part d)

(In part 8 of the Dec. 84' commentary BE noted that Jesus said men are better than sheep, yet repeatedly called his followers sheep-Ed.). Sheep is a Jewish metaphor as yoke is a Jewish metaphor. There are many word pictures in the Bible. Originally all language was purely pictographic. What else need be said?

Editor's Response to Letter #90 (Part d)

Why do you keep asking what else need be said, VT, especially in light of the fact that you have evaded the problem. Granted it's a metaphor. Obviously Jesus didn't mean his followers were actually four-legged, furry creatures. The fact is that to equate men with sheep is an invidious and highly demeaning comparison, especially in light of traits commonly attributed to sheep. As a follower of Jesus you should be as incensed as I would be if the president referred to citizens as sheep.

Letter #90 Concludes (Part e)

(In part 9 of the Dec. 84' commentary BE noted that Jesus said that if I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true (John 5:31) and later said in John 8:14 that if he bore witness it would be true-Ed.). ...In the Jewish, Greek, and Roman law the testimony of a witness is not received in his own case.... (In John 5:31--Ed.) Jesus yields to the rabbinical demands for proof outside of himself....

Editor's Response to Letter #90 (Part e)

Jesus said his witness was not true, VT. He didn't say it was merely inadmissible. The distinction is crucial. If Jesus had said his testimony was inadmissible because Roman law required at least two witnesses, there would have been no problem. But he went further and said it was not true. If what you say is true, then he made such a poor choice of words that that, in itself, would bring into question his credentials.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #91 from MP of Tulsa, Oklahoma (Extracts from several letters)

Dear Dennis. (a) The other day I was arguing about the Flood with a student from Oral Roberts University. He conceded that the Flood may not have been worldwide, but just covered the part of the world they knew about, Mesopotamia and the surrounding region. I countered by saying that if those ancient people were mistaken about and ignorant of the nature of our planet, perhaps later people in the same cultural tradition (Jesus' Jewish contemporaries) were greatly mistaken about the nature of Jesus. If the Bible errs about the Flood, it could err about everything else. (b) I have a problem to pass along. In 1 Kings 3:12 RSV God promised to Solomon, "Behold, I give you a wise and discerning mind, so that none like you has been before you and none like you shall arise after you." Does this make Solomon smarter than Jesus? - Also consider Paul's assertion that God "desires all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:4) in light of 2 Thess. 2:11-12 ("God sends upon them a strong delusion, to make them believe what is false, so that all may be condemned who did not believe the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (d) Biblicists maintain that we have all inherited a sinful nature from Adam, who rebelled against God and became corrupt. But we are all descended from Adam through Noah, whom the Bible describes as being "perfect" and "righteous." By the same logic, shouldn't we also have inherited Noah's perfection? (e) Hab. 1:13 says about God "Thou are of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity. "Yet, according to Job 1 & 2, Satan-the very source of evil-had little trouble in visiting God. If God cannot "behold evil," why does he permit Satan to come to him? (f) I have found that when I present some really objectionable passage from the OT, a typical response is, "But that's part of the Old Law, and we aren't bound by that any more." You mean God's laws become invalid when they're old? (You might mention that the Ten Commandments are also part of the Old Law-Ed.) (g) Lastly, if the Garden of Eden was perfect before the Fall, why did it need to be tended (Gen. 2:15)?

Letter #92 from DW of South Pasadena, California

Dear Dennis. I just got around to reading your 26th issue.... Your explanation of why you focus on the Bible itself was very well written and has my strong agreement. Suggesting that Jesus could have stolen the silverware as he left was a priceless response, a very humorous counterpoint. You are right that when the opposition makes unwarranted assumptions, you should point that out, and respond on that level. If the opposition selects an outrageous position out in left field, it gives you justification for setting up on the right field foul line (especially if the audience sees you don't really plan to stay there). The more sensible readers will eventually see where a legitimate center of field is.... Good tactics.

Letter #93 from JS of Romeo, Michigan

Dear Dennis...In the sample issue I received you listed 2 Kings 2:11 (Elijah went to heaven in a whirlwind) as contradicting Heb. 9:27 (It is appointed unto all men to die once). Here, I would have used John 3:13 (No man has ever gone into heaven-a quote from Jesus Christ) instead of Heb.9:27.

Letter #94 from AW of Sacramento, California

Hello Dennis. I heard your interview over KGNR radio.... Your effort is a timely one for many viewpoints have been set forth as being the unerring words of God. There is a need for objectivity.... If your newsletter will assist in enabling people to keep an open mind then it serves a very useful function. It appears that Jesus of Nazareth knew that all that had been attributed to Moses was not so, for on more than one occasion when referring to statements which appeared to the books attributed to Moses he said, "you have heard it was said" and again rather than attributing such statements to God he would say, "Moses said..." And in the letter to the seven churches of the revelation Jesus urged the reader to "listen to what the Spirit says to the churches" rather than urging them to read the Bible.... Also you will recall that Jesus mentioned that he would send upon his followers "the Spirit of truth" which would guide into all truth. John 14:17, 15:26, 16:13. He would likely not have spoken of doing this if all truth could have been obtained from solely reading the pages of the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #94

The problem I have with criticisms such as these, AW, is that although they are logical and reasonable inferences, they don't necessarily have to be true. Apparently you seem to realize as much judging from such comments as: "It appears that Jesus of Nazareth knew" and "He would likely not have spoken." Remember, biblicists give no quarter and generally expect none. They are going to challenge you on every point. If you have ever debated them, you know such encounters have all the earmarks of war. Their views and ours are light-years apart and each looks upon the other as error personified.

Isaiah 52-53--For over 15 centuries Christians have analyzed the OT with meticulous care extracting every verse that could possibly be interpreted as a messianic reference to Jesus of Nazareth. They have injected unintended meaning into scores of verses and, in so doing, distorted sizeable portions of Scripture. As Thomas Paine aptly stated, "...I have examined all the passages in the NT, quoted from the Old, and so-called prophecies concerning Jesus Christ, and I find no such thing as a prophecy of any such person, and I deny there are any... I have given chapter and verse for everything I have said, and have not gone out of the books of the Old and New Testament for evidence that the passages are not prophecies of the person called Jesus Christ" (The Life and Works of Paine, Vol. 9, p. 206) and "The writers of the gospels state some trifling case of the person they call Jesus Christ, and then cut out a sentence from some passage of the OT and call it a prophecy of that case. But when the words thus cut out are restored to the places they are taken from, and read with the words before and after them, they give the lie to the NT" (Ibid. Vol. 9, p. 269). Among those sections of exceptional importance is Isa. 52-53. One would be hard-pressed to find an OT messianic prophecy that carries more weight with biblicists. Indeed, if it can't endure critical analysis what prophecy could. Isa. 52:13 to 53:12 is replete with verses allegedly attributable to Jesus; yet, in every instance, one can see they are inapplicable. Evidence tends to prove the servant being discussed is Israel or the Jews. In any event, it certainly isn't Jesus as the following show: (1) "Behold, my servant shall prosper (Isa. 52:13 RSV). When did Jesus prosper? How can a condition of prosperity or success be predicated of the Godhead? (2) "He shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high" (52:13). This was not fulfilled in Jesus either. His humanity was condemned to death in an inglorious manner. This verse implies he was not high and exalted before, which would be contrary to his divinity. It also contradicts Isa. 53:3 ("He is despised and rejected of men") and Isa. 57:15 which says God (Jesus) is high and exalted continually. Exaltation is not a condition he will attain. (3) "...his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men" (52:14). If Jesus was God, how could his features have suffered disfigurement and when was his visage marred more than that of all others? This verse also contradicts the alleged description of Jesus given in Psalm 45:2 ("Thou are fairer than the children of men"). (4) "...the kings shall shut their mouths because of him" (52:15 RSV). What king ceased to speak because of Jesus? (5) "For he shall grow up" (53:2). This should have been translated, "he grew up," as is done in the RSV, which would show someone living before Isaiah was under discussion. (6) "...he had no form or comeliness that we should look at him, and no beauty that we should desire him" (53:2). (a) Like 52:14 (See #3 above), this contradicts the description of Jesus in Psalm 45:2 and Jer. 11:16. (b) If this describes Jesus' condition at death, there is nothing singular about it, because it applies to all dead people. (7) "He is despised and rejected of men" (53:3). (a) According to 52:13, he was to be "exalted and extolled, and be very high." (b) How many people really hated Jesus as opposed to the number of tribes who hated the Jews? (8) "...a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief..." (53:3). (a) Jewish scholars claim "grief" as used here only refers to bodily ailment in Scripture. Jesus had no bodily ailment. Nowhere in the NT does it say Jesus had so much as a headache prior to the cross, nor is his death ever referred to as a sickness. (b) The Jews had no conception of a suffering Messiah. They thought of him as a king or ruler over willing subjects and subduing his enemies. (9) "...we hid as it were our faces from him" (53:3). The Jews did not hide their faces from him but condemned him many times and the Gentiles accepted him. (10) "his visage was so marred" (52:14) and "we hid," "he was despised," "we esteemed" (53:3) and "he hath borne," "smitten of God and afflicted" (53:4) and "he was wounded," "he was bruised" (53:5) and "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted" (53:6) and "He was taken and cut off" (53:8) and "he made his grave" and "he had done no violence" (53:9). All these past tense verbs show that Isaiah is referring to an earlier individual, not someone living 700 years in the future. (11) "yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten by God, and afflicted" (53:4). Jesus was smitten by men not God. Would God smite and afflict his son, Christ, especially when the two are supposedly identical? (12) "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we esteemed him stricken, smitten by God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities" (53:4-5). (a) This refers to Israel. Prophets often designated humiliations and adversities as sicknesses and wounds. Isa. 1:5-6, Jer. 10:19, 30:17-18, 33:6-8, Lam. 2:13, and Hosea 6:1 all describe the Captivity as attended with calamities described as bruises and wounds. (b) Contrary to Matt. 8:16-17 ("...they brought unto Jesus many that were possessed with devils: and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick: That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Isaias, the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses") which claims to fulfill this prophecy, 53:4-5 says nothing about casting out devils or curing sicknesses as does Matt. 8:16-17. (13) "Behold my servant shall deal prudently" (52:13). (a) There is no reason to believe that the servant referred to is Jesus. "Servant" refers to anyone who works hard for God. It is used in reference to Moses (Num. 12:7, Job 1:8), all the prophets (Amos 3:7), and all of Israel (Lev. 25:42). The servant is expressly identified with Jacob or Israel in Isa. 41:8-9, 42:19, 44:1-2, and 49:3. Judging from the context, it refers to the Jews or Jacob, God's people, not Jesus. (b) The phrases applied to Jehovah in connection with the servant ("he that formed thee" and "I have redeemed thee") suit Israel alone, not Jesus. Jehovah is often called Israel's Redeemer. (c) How could Jesus (God) be God's servant? Would it make sense to call Christ God's servant, or would a prophet call him a servant? How could Jesus (God) be termed the servant of anybody? It would be an indignity to apply "servant" to the godhead. (d) Although debatable, Jewish scholars seem to feel that "deal prudently" actually means "to acquire knowledge;" yet, how could an all-knowing God acquire knowledge as this would imply he previously lacked wisdom. (14) "he was wounded for our transgressions" (53:5). According to Christian theology, Jesus was not so much bruised or wounded for man's transgressions as he was killed. (15) "He was oppressed,...yet he opened not his mouth:...so he openeth not his mouth" (53:7). According to John 18:21-23 ("Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said. And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck Jesus with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest thou the high priest so? Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me?"), John 18:33-37 ("Then Pilate...said to Jesus, Art thou King of the Jews? Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?...Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am king"), and Matt. 27:46 ("Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying,...my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"), Jesus not only opened his mouth when oppressed but was struck in the process. He even cried for help. (16) "...for he was cut off out of the land of the living" (53:8) contradicts Psalm 116:9 which says, "I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living." (17) "for the transgressions of my people was he stricken" (53:8). Yet, Jesus was supposedly stricken for all people, not just my people. (18) "And he made his grave with the wicked and with the rich in his death" (53:9). (a) When was Jesus buried with anyone? (b) When was Jesus with the rich in his death or buried with the rich? (c) This description contradicts the glorious burial predicted in Isaiah 11:10 ("And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse,...and his rest shall be glorious"). (d) Actually, in so far as Jesus is concerned, the prophecy was reversed. Jesus made his grave with the rich by being buried in the sepulchre of the rich Joseph of Arimathoea (Matt. 27:57), and was with the wicked, crucified thieves (not rich people) in his death. (19) "because he had done no violence" (53:9). John 2:15 ("And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables") and Mark 11:15 clearly prove the inapplicability of this verse to Jesus. (20) "...neither was any deceit in his mouth" (53:9). Anyone who seriously believes this refers to Jesus should read the commentaries in issues 24, 25, 26, and 27. (21) "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him" (53:10). (a) Would God be pleased to bruise Christ, his only begotten son and equal or to put him to grief? (b) Applying this verse to Jesus would seem to prove that he did not come of his own accord to meet death. The pleasure was not in him but in the Creator. (c) If Jesus wished to save the wicked from perdition, then he assumed responsibility for his sufferings, and it is wrong to argue that God willed it. (d) And this verse is clearly in opposition to the description of God given in Lam. 3:33 ("For he doth not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men"). (22) "...when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin" (53:10). But wasn't the body of Jesus offered as a sacrifice, not his soul? (23) "he shall see his seed" (53:10). (a) Throughout the OT "seed" always meant children or physical descendants. Yet, Jesus had no children. (b) If "seed" refers to Jesus' disciples then the prophet should have written "sons" because "seed" refers to those produced by carnal acts. (24) "...he shall prolong his days" (53:10). (a) The verse means he shall live long; whereas, Jesus did not live to an old age. He died when he was approximately 33 years old. (b) Actually Psalm 55:23 is much more applicable. "But thou O God, shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction: bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days." Jesus did not live out half his days. (c) It's difficult to see how this could be applied to a divine being since the idea of longevity is inappropriate to an eternal Deity. (25) "And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand" (53:10). Jesus has come and gone yet the world that God desires has never materialized. (26) "He shall see the travail of his soul" (53:11). I thought only the flesh of Jesus suffered, not his soul or divinity. (27) "Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great" (53:12). (a) If Jesus is not great, then who are the great? (b) When did Jesus ever divide a portion with the great? (c) Who could divide him his portion, since he is God? Who is the I? (28) "...and he shall divide the spoil with the strong" (53:12). (a) Jesus divides spoils? Would a perfectly good being be dividing spoils? Nowhere do we read that he plundered or divided spoils with the strong. (b) This verse implies Jesus was not one of the strong which would contradict John 17:2 ("As thou hast given him power over all flesh"). (29) "...he poured out his soul to death" (53:12). (a) I thought only the flesh of Jesus underwent death. (b) Jesus did not die willingly for his creatures. He feared and prayed as is shown by Matt. 26:37-39 ("And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death:...and he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me..." and Matt. 27:46 ("My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"). (30) "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord" (54:17). Here servants is plural, showing that more than one servant is referred to in Isaiah 53. (31) And lastly, immediately before Isaiah 52:13-53:12 Isaiah is predicting the gathering of the exiles and just after Isa. 54:1 he is talking of the glorious promises descriptive of the same events. Therefore, logically, all inbetween is speaking of the same thing. The conclusion to be drawn from all the above is that if Isa. 52-53 is the strongest reference to Jesus in the OT, then the case for messianic prophecy is weak indeed.

REVIEWS

In Evidence that Demands a Verdict apologist Josh McDowell cited many OT messianic prophecies and showed how they were allegedly fulfilled in Jesus. In nearly every instance, his scholarship exemplifies what Thomas Paine alluded to earlier. Several examples are noteworthy:

- (1) On page 152 McDowell cites Matt. 21:11 ("and the multitudes were saying, "This is the prophet Jesus, from Nazareth in Galilee") as a fulfillment of Deut. 18:18 ("I will raise up a prophet from among their countrymen like you, and I will put my words in his mouth and he shall speak to them all that I command him"). Several problems are created when Matt. 21:11 is viewed as a fulfillment of Deut. 18:18. (a) The latter could be applied to any one of hundreds of prophets. Why assume it's Jesus" (b) If God and Jesus are identical, why would God need to put words into Jesus' mouth or command him to do anything? In effect, he would be doing it himself. (c) McDowell neglected to mention Deut. 18:15 which refers to the same individual: ("The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of these of thy brethren like unto me, unto him ye shall hearken"). God said the Prophet will be "like unto me" whereas Jesus is supposed to be God, not like God. (d) How could "unto him ye shall hearken" apply to Jesus. The Jews did not follow him; they killed him. (2) On page 147 McDowell cited Luke 3:23, 34 ("Jesus...the son of Jacob...") as a fulfillment of Numbers 24:17 ("...there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy the children of Sheth"). How one could apply this to Jesus is difficult to imagine. (a) Jesus had no sceptre except a mock one, nor could he be considered the sceptre. (b) He did not smite the corners of Moab or destroy the children of Sheth. (c) When the Messiah comes all the Gentile nations are to fall, not just Moab and Sheth. (d) If this refers to Jesus why are the Moabites and those of Sheth singled out as a people to be conquered by him? (e) Two verses later it states, "Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city" (Num. 24:19). Yet, Jesus never had dominion and never destroyed "him" or those who remained in the city. (3) On page 150 McDowell cites Matt. 2:1, 11 ("Magi from the east arrived in Jerusalem...and they fell down and worshipped Him; and opening their treasures they presented to Him gifts...") as a fulfillment of Psalm 72:10 ("Let the kings of Tarshish and of the islands bring presents; The kings of Sheba and Seba offer gifts"). Yet none of this is applicable to Jesus. (a) Where does it say the Magi were kings of Tarshish, Sheba, or Seba. Luke 2 specifically states they were shepherds abiding in the fields. (b) How could they have visited Jesus in Jerusalem when he was in Bethlehem. Imagine kings coming to visit an obscure babe in a manger! (c) What islands are east of Jerusalem? (d) McDowell omitted the next verse ("Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him") which never occurred either. (4) On page 147 McDowell cites Luke 3:23-34 ("Jesus,...the son of Isaac") as a fulfillment of Gen. 21:12 ("But God said to Abraham...through Isaac your descendants shall be named"). He conveniently ignores the fact that "descendants" is plural, not singular, and could apply to any one of a hundred people. Why assume this is a specific reference to Jesus just because he is a descendant of Isaac. (5) And on page 154 McDowell cites Matt. 27:37 ("And they put up above His head the charge against Him which read, "This is Jesus the King of the Jews") as a fulfillment of Psalm 2:6 ("but as for me, I have installed My King upon Zion, my holy mountain"). How these two are related is perplexing, indeed. Putting a king upon Zion hardly equals putting up a sign, especially when Jesus is not becoming a king but a corpse and the sign is intended for ridicule only. Moreover, "have installed" could not be referring to a future individual because it's a past tense verb.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #95 from Ken Bonnell of Los Angeles, California

(Ken sent BE a newspaper clipping in which a man asked a catholic priest the following: A sin against the Holy Spirit, mentioned in Matt. 12:31--"All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him,..." is said to be "unforgivable." I thought every sin is forgivable? The priest answered as follows..Ed.) The unforgivable sin against the Holy Spirit, mentioned by Our Lord, is interpreted to mean "final impenitence." If a person decides that she or he is so evil that not even God can forgive a sinful life, then of course, the Holy Spirit is shut off from imparting forgiveness. The "unforgiving" in such a case is on the part of the sinner and not on the part of God, for actually all sins of whatever kind are forgivable, if the sinner will but repent and confess!

Editor's Response to Letter #95

Dear Ken. The priest's answer is, of course, pure rationalization. There is nothing whatever, either expressed or implied, showing that the attitude of the person involved toward the degree of sinfulness determines whether or not a sin is forgivable. What biblical verse could one use to prove the individual rather than God determines when a sin is forgivable? To say, "if a person decides that she or he is so evil that not even God can forgive a sinful life, then, of course, the Holy Spirit is shut off from imparting forgiveness," not only limits God's powers but flies in the face of biblical teachings. The priest said this was "interpreted to mean." Indeed, it was! Pure interpretation.

Letter #96 from IF of Vacaville, California

Dear Dennis. I read your response to my letter in the April issue of BE regarding the non-existence of Jesus about 2,000 years ago. BE's purpose is solely showing the contradictions and inconsistencies of the bible? Empirically as well as scientifically, it can be shown the bible is hogwash and no one expects passages in the bible to admit it. Reasoning can also prove the falsity of that book. As an example, did Noah journey to the Arctic so that we can have the man-eating polar bears, journey to Australia for kangaroos, to Antarctica for penguins.... In like fashion Jesus is not an historical being as no Greek, Roman, or Jewish historian of the time wrote about a diety performing miracles. The gospels were written long after Jesus was supposed to have died, so how could the writers quote him verbatim?.... You are limiting yourself to biblical quotations, thereby defeating the purpose of biblical errancy--to show the absurdity of the bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #96

Dear IF. I know this is an area of great interest to you so let me restate my position by making several observations: First, BE does not focus solely on contradictions and inconsistencies in the Bible. It concentrates on any internal information having to do with the Book's validity. Inconsistencies and contradictions are only the primary element. Anytime you bring in scientific or historical data to disprove the Bible you are going to confront scientists and historians on the other side whose arguments will not be as weak as those of apologists confined to Scripture per se. For example, you said Jesus was not an historical figure because no Greek, Roman, or Jewish historian mentioned him. Surely you must realize what the opposition will say. The mere fact that historians fail to mention someone does not prove he didn't exist. One might just as well say my grandmother didn't exist because she doesn't appear in historical writings either. All one can prove, as BE intends to show eventually, is that there are no non-Christian writings of antiquity which can be accurately applied to Jesus and those often employed are readily refuted. Your comment about the gospels would be leaped upon with equal relish, IF. You mean we can't quote George Washington verbatim because he lived hundreds of years ago? Biblicists could say the gospels are verbatim representations of what was said. They didn't say those who compiled the conversations and wrote the gospels were physically present when it occurred. Second, BE does discuss extra-biblical data occasionally. The examples you gave of the problem associated with Noah and the animals on the Ark were discussed in a prior issue. However, as with the Creation Story, BE's only attempt was to show the myriad of scientific problems one must confront if he adheres to the biblical approach. No attempt was made to disprove Creationism or the Flood Account. Why? Because as soon as I offer scientific data, opponents will do likewise and we begin matching libraries in fields very few people are qualified to discuss. And, even more important, how many really care? Third, I don't expect passages in the Bible to admit the Book is hogwash, but when two passages say something diametrically opposed, each is, in effect, asserting as much. I'm not limiting myself to biblical quotations; I'm limiting myself to that which is most relevant and persuasive to the average believer.

Letter #97 from VT of Huron, California

Greetings: your comments and opposition to the TRUTHS set forth in the Bible is (in my opinion) really UNFORGIVABLE. It is certainly unfortunate that you ever got started doing this kind of thing.... Your mentor, `ole Thomas Paine would be so PROUD OF YOU.... You don't believe the Bible is God's word, and yet you are willing to spend all your time and energy running it down.... You must get a great deal of satisfaction out of your VOCATION.

Editor's Response to Letter #97

Greetings VT. What "truths" are you referring to? Perhaps we should go through past issues of BE to find some? I'm glad you said "in my opinion" because in my opinion, and that of countless others, it's anything but unforgivable. You are correct when you say that it's unfortunate I ever got started in this. It's unfortunate for all those who project the Bible as something it most assuredly is not. I don't spend all my time running down the Bible VT, nor is this my vocation. I just feel that exposing the Bible is something that must be done. Believe me when I say I can think of many books I'd rather be reading. Scripture is often boring, monotonous, repetitious, infantile, and obscure. Many parts are so vague that one guess is as good as another as to what was meant. The fact remains, however, that it is the book for a substantial segment of the population. That's "where they are" and one can't persuade them to come to a more rational stance without first showing them the error of their ways.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #98 from MP of Tulsa, Oklahoma (Part a) Extracts from several letters Dear Dennis. Regarding Letter #87 from IF of Vacaville, California, the author seems a little confused. Apart from mathematics (my field), you cannot consistently prove negative propositions about factual matters....it's a waste of time to argue about the nonexistence of Jesus. I agree with you that it's much more effective to show biblicists that Jesus' actions and "doctrines" are less than perfect.

Editor's Response to Letter #98 (Part a)

Dear MP. Perhaps I didn't make my position as clear as I should have. I did not mean to say that discussing extra-biblical topics, such as the existence of Jesus, the history of the Canon's formation, pagan influences, etc. are a waste of time. Certainly not. For some people such arguments are quite impressive. All I said was that our efforts should primarily be directed toward those topics which are of greatest interest to the largest number of people and most susceptible to proof. A contradiction or logical inconsistency is far more difficult for a biblicist to combat than arguments over what occurred thousands of years ago.

I attended a student Bible study in one of the dorms the other night. The topic of the night was, "Why worship God?" The leader of the group would assign each person a verse to read on that subject and then would ask him to explain it. When it came my turn, I stated that I was puzzled by the Bible's attitude toward God, since poor old Job worshipped God fervently and led a blameless life, only to be rewarded by God allowing Satan to do all sorts of terrible things to him and his family. One girl responded that we cannot judge God because we cannot see the big picture or something to that effect. I responded by asking how it was for the long-term good of Job's children to be killed by Satan with God's permission. (Here the argument threatened to turn to theodicy, but I tried to keep to the Bible). Another woman said that you cannot understand the spiritual by looking at the physical. I pointed out that Jesus made no such distinction, since he talked about mustard seeds, mountains, fig trees, coins, etc. The expression on these peoples' faces was priceless, like I was the bastard at the family reunion. We were supposed to apply the Bible to our lives, not think about it.

I'm involved with other projects also. Not that I expect to deprogram anyone, but I have been calling a Christian radio station named KXOJ. The deejays will talk to you off the air. I've argued one of them to the point that he won't talk to me any more. He says that I am doing the work of Satan. Another, a woman about my age, will still talk to me, but she seems to be an intellectual zero. When she asks me why I'm doing what I'm doing, I respond that when you cross-examine a witness on the stand, the first thing you do is check his testimony on things that can be independently verified, before you believe his extra-ordinary claims; such is my attitude toward the Bible. But she seems to be one of those emotional, feelgood Christians.

Editor's Response to Letter #98 (Part b)

Keep up the good work, MP. You are going in among them rather than taking shots at-a-distance. I know what you are going through. I do it myself. Your comment about Jesus' repeated references to material objects was rather shrewd. I can see why they were taken aback.

COMMENTARY

Isaiah 42:1-20--Besides Isaiah 52-53 (In last month's Commentary) other sections of the OT are also extolled as prime examples of messianic prophecy. The 42nd chapter of Isaiah and Gen. 49:10-12, for example, are often quoted in messianic literature, despite their absence of any applicability to Jesus of Nazareth. Isaiah 42 couldn't be referring to Jesus for any one of several reasons: (1) "Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him:..." (42:1). (a) The past tense verb shows someone living earlier is under discussion. (b) would God call Jesus his servant? (c) How could Jesus be upheld to anything or need upholding? (d) How could God put his spirit on his equal, Jesus ("I and my Father are one--John 10:30). (e) Also puzzling is how God could have a soul. (2) "he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles" (42:1). (a) In Matt. 15:24 Jesus said he was not sent but unto the lost sheep of Israel, which would exclude Gentiles. (b) In Matt. 10:5 Jesus specifically told his followers not to go to the gentiles. (c) Jesus had no authority among the gentiles. (3) "He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street" (42:2). (a) Yet, Jesus wept (John 11:35). (b) He cried aloud and lifted up his voice in public thoroughfares and open spaces. Scourging tradesmen and upsetting their tables is not a display of quietude. Matt. 27:46, 50, Mark 15:34, 37, 39, Luke 23:46, 19:41, and John 7:28, 37, 11:43, 12:44 show this verse has nothing to do with Jesus. (4) "a bruised reed shall he not break and the smoking flax shall he not quench...." (42:3). This contradicts Psalm 2:9 ("Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel") which is also applied to Jesus. (5) "He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law" (42:4). Jesus did fail and was discouraged as Matt. 27:46 ("My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me") and John 11:35 ("Jesus wept") show. (b) He has never set judgment in the earth. (c) Extracting any degree of rationality from this verse is rather difficult since it's comparable to saying he will not fail until he has succeeded. He will fail the moment he succeeds in establishing justice. (6) "Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? Who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the Lord's servant? (42:19). (a) Would God say Jesus is blind and deaf or more deaf and blind than others? Would God virtually denounce Jesus in uncomplimentary terms? (b) How could a perfect being be blind or deaf? (c) Would God call Jesus his servant? (7) "seeing many things, but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not" (42:20). Would God describe Jesus in this manner?

Gen. 49:10-12--Gen. 49 also contains some allegedly messianic verses which are equally invalid. (1) :The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh comes; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." (a) Apologists view Jesus as Shiloh even though the sceptre departed from Judah 600 years before Jesus was born. If Shiloh is Christ then the prophecy is false, for the king of Judah (Zedekiah) was carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings 25:7) and all the leading Jews were taken away to Babylon, all of which took place 588 years before the birth of Christ. (b) If the sceptre continued all during the pre-Jesus period, then it still departed nearly 50 years after Jesus' death with the destruction of the temple. The sceptre did not depart from Judah when the so-called Shiloh (Jesus) came; it happened 50 years later when Jerusalem fell to the Romans. (c) During the existence of the 2nd temple there is no indication that a descendant of Judah governed Israel or Judah. (d) Authorities disagree as to an accurate translation of this verse. Some feel it should say "until he comes to Shiloh." They assert that Shiloh is not a man or a messiah. It's a place. Every time "Shiloh" appears in the OT after Gen. 49:10 it's clearly referring to a location. It was seat of the national sanctuary before it was moved to Jerusalem. Shiloh was where the national gatherings took place before Jerusalem was taken by David. (e) When did the people gather unto Jesus? (f) Gen 49:10 is ascribed to Jacob which is questionable in light of the fact that Judah did not receive the sceptre until David ascended the throne hundreds of years after Jacob lived. (2) "he washed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes: His eyes shall be red with wine" (Gen. 49:11-12). Verses 11 and 12 apply to the same person mentioned in verse 10. One cannot help but ask when Jesus washed his garments in wine or the blood of grapes. Jesus Disqualified--One of the most interesting aspects of messianic prophecy is the degree to which Christians have selectively employed every verse which could possibly be twisted in such a manner as to prove the messiahship of Jesus while systematically ignoring those proving the contrary. They use any verse in the OT that could be related to Jesus in a positive way but avoid all those that could just as easily be used to refute his credentials. Many disprove his messiahship better than those used to prove it. Many debunking his mission are clearer and stronger than those in support: (1) Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help" (Psalm 146:3). Jesus was called the son of man on numerous occasions. (2) "How much less man, that is a worm? and the son of man, which is a worm" (Job 25:6). Jesus often called himself the son of man. (3) "What is man, that he can be clean? Or he that is born of woman, that he can be righteous" (Job 15:14 RSV) and "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one" (Job 14:4 and "...how can he be clean that is born of a woman? (Job 25:4). The allegedly pure Jesus supposedly came from impure and sinful Mary. Virgin or not, Mary was still a sinner under Original Sin. (4) Christians don't hesitate to apply the 22nd Psalm to Jesus but conveniently ignore verse 6 which says, "But I am a worm, and no man..." (5) The suffering servant discussed by Isaiah is supposedly Jesus yet Isaiah 42:19 says, "Who is blind but my servant? or deaf as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the Lord's servant?" (Wasn't Jesus supposedly sent as a perfect messenger from God? (6) Jesus was a man in whom many trusted and still trust; yet, the OT admonished: (a) "Cursed be the man that trusted in man" (Jer. 17:5) and "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man" (Psalm 118:8). (7) "...yet I have not seen the righteous forsaken or his children begging bread" (Psalm 37:25). Then Jesus couldn't be righteous because he was forsaken by God and many of his followers beg for bread. (8) "...the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh" (Dan. 2:11). Yet, Jesus was allegedly the God/man dwelling in flesh. (9) Jesus was called the son of man; yet, Psalm 8:4 RSV ("...what is man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou dost care for him") and Psalm 144:3 NASB ("O Lord, what is man, that Thou dost take knowledge of him? Or the son of man, that Thou dost think of him?") belittle the son of man. (10) And lastly, "There is one come out of thee, that imagineth evil against the Lord, a wicked counsellor" (Naham 1:11). Jesus was called a counsellor in Isaiah 9:6.

What is Needed--We often hear from readers struggling with the question of how one can most effectively cope with religion in general and the Bible in particular. This is undoubtedly a major problem and judging from the enormous influence of both has not been adequately addressed. Indeed, the Bible's supporters dominate the scene on virtually every front. They have tremendous amounts of wealth and millions of supporters, while those at the other end of the spectrum are deficient in nearly every area but accuracy. As of now it's been a decidedly one-sided contest, although war would be a more accurate term. While the Falwells, Swaggarts, Grahams, and Robertsons marshal their forces like generals in battle, much of the opposition is either apathetic or innocuous. Biblicists not only utilize scores of radio and television stations with hundreds of regular programs but employ a national television network rivalling CBS and NBC. Thousands of inaccurate religious comments are broadcast daily without rebuttal, while opponents have almost no regularly scheduled anti-Bible programs in the entire Nation, let alone a station or network. Equally important is the fact that fundamentalists and evangelicals have many sympathizers in the media. We have had great difficulty gaining access to the airways, especially on call-in radio stations. Even though owners, managers, sponsors, producers, and hosts may not attend church on a regular basis, Ideologically speaking, they are closer to fundamentalism than BE. Getting on-th-air is difficult, obtaining a repeat performance is an accomplishment of even greater magnitude. Exceptions exist, of course, but they are clearly in the minority. Several hardworking supporters of BE have discovered as much for themselves. They have either been flatly refused an opportunity to be heard via BE or given a protracted run-around. Even when given access to the public I have often been viewed in the same light as dancing bears and sword-swallowers, a novelty act for entertainment only. Usually not much time has elapsed, however, before hosts have begun to realize they have a serious problem on their hands and poignant biblical criticisms aren't going to be destroyed with a flip of the tongue. Generally the powers-that-be shift from refuting to denying me a hearing after the programs's completed. Those who believe censorship is not widely practiced against critics of the Bible are victims of deception. They need only oppose the Bible themselves to see what will or will not happen. Ten years ago I wouldn't have believed it either. But personal experience is a potent teacher. If my performance were poor, my arguments weak, my speaking ability deficient, or my audience bored, I could easily understand why second invitations were not forthcoming. But in every instance precisely the opposite has occurred. The switchboard has nearly always resembled a Christmas tree. Supporters also have reported that BE's posters have been regularly removed.

In answer to the original question of how to oppose the Bible's influence, we would propose that a national network be created organized in a manner not unlike that of several Christian organizations. Its purpose would be to confront, debate, and contend with the opposition, especially before listeners whose views are still in a state of flux. There are millions of fence-straddlers with doubts and questions. Members would have to know the Bible's contents as well as its proponents and be fully aware of its weaknesses and relevant extra-biblical data. Training programs, institutes, conferences, etc. could be used to teach the Bible's inaccuracies and the most effective techniques by which to counter the opposition. Immense study and research would be prerequisites. But that would be easier than fulfilling the second requirement, namely, obtaining a hearing before a mass audience, especially on a repetitive basis. That's the real challenge. As long as you keep your views to yourself and read what confirms your beliefs, the problem is contained. But when you seek to convert, confront, or influence others, sparks begin to fly and opposition arises. Of necessity, members would have to make up in vocalism what they lack in numbers. Those who don't feel comfortable as debaters or educators could call stations, write letters, protest the content of programs, suggest speakers, and otherwise make their presence known. If nothing else, members could contribute funds for speaking engagements, travel, printing, phoning, postage, and other expenses. As many are aware, BE is not an abstruse, theoretical journal, but an assertive news letter operating on the offensive and geared to a mass audience. A major problem with some anti-religious publications is that they are written by academicians for academicians and miss the population in general. They often repeat the same points to those already convinced and rarely organize people in such a way as to effectively confront the fundamentalist agenda. Readers are provided numerous examples of creeping fundamentalism and the religious threat, up to and including a president who often echoes a Baptist preacher, while the real question is ignored, i.e., what needs to be done about a deplorable situation that seems to be worsening. Gathering information on a regular basis is fine; but shouldn't it be employed in a meaningful manner? Will such an organization be formed? I doubt it. Why? Because the numbers, resources, determination, and sticktuitiveness significantly exceeds that displayed by its opponents. Equally important is the fact that many people opposed to the Bible simply aren't interested in the Book. Frankly, it bores them. They can't bring themselves to read what is clearly the most important, the most influential writing in the Nation today. Their attitude is that if others want to believe such nonsense, let them. I'll just live and let live. Unfortunately, millions believe the Book and operate accordingly. They vote, influence political figures, affect the economy, impact the schools, etc. all of which touches everyone. If you believe Armageddon is coming, why oppose nuclear war or support disarmament? If you believe Paul's teachings on females, why support the women's movement? If you believe in salvation by faith rather than works, why devote your energies to the improvement of man's condition? After all, it's what you believe that's crucial, not what you do. The problem with live and let live is that the activities of the Book's adherents constantly impinge upon others, usually adversely. If only critics of religion in general and the Bible in particular weren't so conditioned to dominance by the other side! Imagine what would occur if the roles were reversed and critics had all the resources, including the media, that fundamentalists now enjoy. The response of biblicists would be anything but mild.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #99 from IF of Vacaville, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Your reply to my letter #96 appearing in the June issue of BE actually doesn't make sense. Scientists and historians "on the other side," meaning there are scientists and historians who can prove the truthfulness of the Gospels? Do such beings exist? How could Roman, Greek, and Jewish historians possibly fail to write about a man performing many miracles that only a supernatural could perform? Why would they ignore such a person? Would it not be a feather in their caps to report wonders that were never done before? Historians never wrote about your grandmother because she never accomplished miracles or anything else outstanding. But you had to have your grandmother, although unknown, to be in the world, your antecedent. George Washington can be quoted because people were not as primitive as 2,000 years ago when illiteracy was 98 or 99%. Then when the gospel writers had to depend on hearsay, versions begin to vary tremendously over decades. There were certified shorthand reporters in those days. Besides, you know the gospels contradict each other....

Editor's Response to Letter #99 (Part a)

Dear IF. Clearly we both hold the Bible in low esteem. In that regard we are unanimous. The problem lies in determining the best method by which to minimize its influence. I have no problem with your arguments. They seem reasonable, but they aren't concrete, certainly not as concrete as internal contradictions and dilemmas. You ask how Roman, Greek, and Jewish historians could have failed to miss a man performing miracles. The fact is, they could have. Granted it's not probable; but it is possible. Many extraordinary events have occurred in history and historians weren't present to record them. Surely you aren't contending every momentous event throughout time has been noted by historians. My primary objection to your approach is that it provides biblicists an avenue of escape. Contradictions do also, but the escape hatch is much narrower. The problem with historical arguments is that apologists can always say, as one told me on-the-air, "That shows how much your historians know. Read mine. They know what really happened." And since none of us were alive then, it often becomes a matter of whom you want to believe. The same problem exists with respect to the George Washington situation. You admitted illiteracy then was 98 or 99% which means there were some literate people. Biblicists will simply say that it was these literate few who did the quoting. Remember, knowledgeable apologists aren't going to grant you anything. You have to fight for every point. After debating these people many times, I can vouch for their determination. Encounters have all the earmarks of a court battle between lawyers. Nearly every significant point is contested, few stipulated. If you can't prove it, you'll sometimes wish you hadn't mentioned it. Good homework is axiomatic. Incidentally, when did I say they had scientists and historians who could prove the truthfulness of the gospels? I say they had scientists and historians; I didn't say they could prove anything.

Letter #99 Concludes (Part b)

In the book "Deceptions and Myths of the Bible" by Lloyd Graham it is stated there were 16 virgin-birth saviors prior to Christ. You won't find this statement in the bible which shows this concept was prevalent amongst religion makers for centuries before this supposed Christ. An atheist needs other sources besides the Bible to refute priestcraft.

Editor's Response to Letter #99 (Pat b)

As I mentioned in a prior issue IF, I have no objection to mentioning this kind of information. I occasionally use it myself. For some individuals it's of great importance. But the weight, probability, and significance of data must be kept in proper perspective. What do you think apologists are going to say to such information? Always ask yourself: What is the opposition going to say and how easy will this be to counter? Put yourself in the opponent's head and look at things as he would. The obvious reply in this instance is that the other 16 are fakes. This would probably be followed by a litany of the miraculous deeds and messianic prophecies accomplished and fulfilled by Jesus. You, on the other hand, would be obligated to prove Jesus was no different from the rest, which would necessitate biblical data. I may be wrong and don't mean to belittle your knowledge, IF, but I don't think you have crossed swords with very many apologists, especially those of the better informed variety.

Letter #100 from RB of Sugar Grove, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis.... To be gently critical of a comrade, a common complaint that I hear from fundies, non-fundies, and non-theists is that you are too picky about minor points, e.g. focusing on inconsistent but conceivably reconcilable scriptures so much (The solidly and hopelessly contradictory ones seem to get lost among the inconsistencies that are the more trivial ones, yet important ones nonetheless).... The thing that I really want to express here is that I think that this attitude, which is perceived by some as overly critical and dogmatic, is on psychological grounds a bit counter-productive as educational strategy. One slip-up on a minor point and your credibility suffers; then your audience is turned out. My preferred arsenal of arguments against inerrancy is compact, consisting of Biblical contradictions that have resisted my mightiest efforts at rationalizing as Devil's Advocate as well as resisted the best tries by my fundie friends. The list is growing and I find that a small barrage of a few old classics (e.g., the Matt. vs. Luke genealogies of Jesus, the Mark vs. John hour for the crucifixion or reconciling the four Gospels' accounts of Easter morning) with many more in stock, can plant a seed of thought that in time often makes an honest thinker out of a cult follower and bibliolater. (Of course, your publication's format does demand a massive barrage. Still, to some of shear immensity of your critical effort effects their minds much as too much light effects the pupil of the eye--it closes them down). We not only must seek to address a thinking audience, but must try to teach an habitually non-thinking one to learn these first awkward steps.

Editor's Response to Letter #100

Dear RB. Your thoughts are well considered and worthy of analysis. Let me make a few comments. First, although your point was tendered many issues ago by another reader, it merits another reply. Granted, BE is a technical publication and major criticisms sometimes get lost among the minor; but the problem has always been one of determining which is which. One man's blockbuster is another's trivia. So, for this reason I've decided to present everything and let readers judge and extract as they choose. BE is meant to be a resource which can be drawn from at will. Leaving something out is unwise because it might be the very point that attracts someone's attention. Second, to some extent I can see why "overly critical" may be of concern to some, but "dogmatic" is another matter. By what rationale some have come to this conclusion is difficult to surmise in light of the fact that controversy is an inseparable part of BE and biblicists are heard on a regular basis. How much chance would I have of writing in Christianity Today, Our Sunday Visitor, Christian Century, or any one of hundreds of other religious periodicals? Third, I've slipped up on points before and I'll probably do so again. Anyone seeking the perfect publication or the perfect writer had better forget about reading, period. They might as well stay tuned out. Fourth, your strategy of focusing on a few key problems is good; indeed, it's quite effective in most cases. For other encounters, however, I'd be better prepared. You'll need BE. And lastly, those who look upon BE as too much light may eventually view fundamentalism as the fire itself.

Letter #101 from CF of Easton, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis. How can matter or gases in space that has no life somehow come alive? If you reject God creating life as we know it, and you ask for reasonable, rational answers from others, please address this question. Can you cite some scientific study that can produce life from non-living material?

Editor's Response to Letter #101

Dear CF. We receive scores of extra-biblical questions such as this. Reminds me of discussions I had while majoring in philosophy years ago. I don't remember ever mentioning God and the creation of life but I'll respond anyway. I can't cite a study such as you request, but are you prepared to say that you know scientists will never be able to produce life from non-life? Are you saying that it's impossible because man presently lacks the ability? Is your perspicacity such that you can peer centuries into the future? You're going far out on a thin limb. Since we are on the topic, let me ask you a question. This periodical is far more concerned with the Bible's validity than God's existence, but I've always wondered why God does not have to have a creator while matter does. Why couldn't matter have been the only thing existing, changing, and evolving throughout eternity? If matter must have a creator, why doesn't God? Topics such as this actually belong more in the realm of theology and philosophy than Biblical criticism.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #102 from RW of Riverside, California

Dear Dennis. In your June 1985 issue with the commentary on Isaiah 52-53 I would like to add this comment: The Ethiopian converted by Philip read from this portion: "...and like a lamb dumb before HIS shearer." And from this Philip preached Jesus to the man, etc. (Acts 8:32). But when we turn to Isaiah 53:7, we read: "...and as a sheep before HER shearers is dumb." Not a major contradiction, of course, yet one is definitely he and the other she.

Extracts

Dear Dennis. Since the Bible says that God is everywhere ("Do I not fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord"--Jer. 23:24), and the Holy Spirit is God, why does the Holy Spirit have to enter people? In Mark 9:23 Jesus says, "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." And in Mark 11:24 he says, "what thing soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Yet, in the Garden of Gethsemane, Jesus prayed, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." (Matt. 26:39). But he was crucified anyway! Are we to conclude from this that Jesus displayed insufficient belief to deliver him from death?

Letter #104 from John Sikos of P.O. box 443, Romeo, Michigan 48065-0443 (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Thank you once again for your back issues of BE. I've read every word of issues 1 through 28 at least twice. I must say, your sample issue does BE no justice. I did not expect an enlightening treasury of wisdom this thorough. Excellent. In at least five letters I've written so far (one of my hobbies is to correspond with religionists) I've used your works as one of my sources.... I love your continued dialogues with stubborn religionists. Letter #1 and subsequent communications from the same author are a case in point. As late as Letter #79 you still do not give up with these kinds of people. Please do not become weary of printing such debates in future editions--no matter how repetitious they become, no matter how futile your efforts may seem; repetition is one of the methods that I think eventually draws stubborn people to their first staggering steps toward rational thought. I also enjoyed the brief glimpses of the Koran and the Book of Mormon in issues #22 and #23. While these are extra-biblical topics, I believe they do have some effect on fundamentalists....I've seen many a religionist give a blank look when confronted with the fact that other books also claim to be the word of God. "Why is your book more valid than their book?" I ask. They give no answer. Once a Baptist told me: "Their story talks about a messiah who died. Our's talks about a messiah who raised Himself from the dead.

(To Be Continued)

Editor's Response to Letter #104 (Part a)

Dear John. Your comments are very kind, although I think repetition is minimal. Your Baptist acquaintance does not know his own book which repeatedly says Jesus was raised by God. He didn't raise himself. (Acts 2:32, 3:26, 5:30, 13:30, Gal. 1:1, and Rom 8:11)

COMMENTARY

Did Jesus Exist (Part One of a Two-Part Series)--Although BE does not normally discuss extra-biblical subjects, exceptions have been and will continue to be made. One of the most important in this regard pertains to whether or not Jesus of Nazareth was a real, live, flesh and blood individual who walked the earth approximately 2,000 years ago. If he didn't Christianity would be dealt a blow from which it could never recover. The most significant aspect of this matter is that there is no reference to Jesus of Nazareth in any non-Christian writings of antiquity. One can peruse all the great literature of that era and find nothing proving the man even existed. "There is no history written at the time Jesus Christ is said to have lived that speaks of the existence of such a person, even as a man" (The Life and Works of Paine, Vol 9, p. 271). "We know nothing certainly of Jesus Christ. We know nothing of his infancy, nothing of his youth, and we are not sure that such a person even existed" (Interviews, Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 273. Anyone wishing to believe in the reality of Jesus will have to rely upon the New Testament and the NT alone. There is no other source. Biblicists heatedly deny this, of course, and quote many well-known Greek, Roman, and Jewish writers to prove their case. Since the question of whether or not the pivotal figure in Christianity really lived is of first magnitude in importance, each of the key apologetic quotations deserves consideration. The first and probably the most notable comes from the Jewish historian, Josephus, who allegedly said, "Now there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works, a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews, and many of the Gentiles. He was the Christ, and when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men among us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at the first did not forsake him; for he appeared to them alive again the third day; as the divine prophets had foretold there and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him. And the tribe of Christians so named from him are not extinct at this day" (Jewish Antiquities, Book 18, Chp. 3, Sec.3). The problems inherent in this paragraph are numerous and fatal to its credibility: (1) The alleged author, Josephus, was a devout Jew which would cause anyone familiar with the basic principles of Judaism to ask: Would a devout Jew imply that a man was not a man, that he was divine? Would he say that a man did miracles, was the Christ, and rose from the dead? And would a devout Jew say the messianic prophecies expressly referred to a man at that time? (2) The works of Josephus are voluminous and exhaustive. They comprise nearly 20 books. Whole pages are devoted to petty robbers and obscure seditious leaders. Nearly 40 chapters are devoted to a single king. Yet, Jesus is dismissed with a mere dozen lines. (3) The passage is not found in the early copies of Josephus. Not until the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius (320 A.D.) do we come across it. This is the same Eusebius who said that it is lawful to lie and cheat for the cause of Christ: "I have repeated whatever may rebound to the glory, and suppressed all that could tend to the disgrace of our religion" (Chp. 31, Book 12 of Prae Paratio Evangelica). (4) The early Christian fathers such as Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, and Origen were acquainted with what Josephus wrote and it seems reasonable to conclude that they would have quoted this passage had it existed. Apparently Eusebius was the first to use it because it didn't exist during the 2nd and 3rd centuries. Chrysostom often referred to Josephus and it's highly unlikely he would have omitted the paragraph had it been extant. Photius did not quote the text though he had three articles concerning Josephus and even expressly stated that Josephus, being a Jew, had not taken the least notice of Christ. (5) Neither Justin in his dialogue with Trypho, the Jew, nor Origen against Celsus ever mentioned this passage. Neither Tertullian nor Cyprian ever quoted Josephus as a witness in their controversies with Jews and pagans and Origen expressly stated that Josephus, who had mentioned John the Baptist, did not recognize Jesus as the messiah (Contra Celsum, I, 47). (6) The famous historian Gibbon claims the passage is a forgery as do many theologians. (7) The passage interrupts the narrative. Immediately before it Josephus tells of a rising of the Jews due to bitter feeling at the conduct of Pilate, and its bloody suppression by the ruling power. The words immediately following the passage are: "Also about this time another misfortune befell the Jews" and we are told of the expulsion of the Jews from Rome by Tiberius on account of the conduct of some of their compatriots. What is the connection between the reference to Jesus and these two narratives? That there must be some connection if Josephus wrote the passage about Jesus goes without saying in view of the character of the writer. Josephus was always careful to have a logical connection between his statements and from a rational standpoint there is no occasion whatever to put the passage about Jesus in the connection in which we find it. (8) The language of this passage is quite Christian and most of the passage is blasphemous from the Jewish perspective. (9) Josephus nowhere else mentioned the word Christ in any of his works, except in reference to James, Jesus' brother (Antiquities, Book 20, Chp. 9,1). (10) And lastly, the Arabic translation of the text, which many consider more accurate, is: "At this time there was a wise man who was called Jesus. And his conduct was good, and (He) was known to be virtuous. And many people from among the Jews and the other nations became his disciples. Pilate condemned Him to be crucified and to die. And those who had become his disciples did not abandon his discipleship. They reported that He had appeared to them three days after his crucifixion and that He was alive; accordingly, He was perhaps the Messiah concerning whom the prophets have recounted wonders." The texts are markedly different in that: (1) The 1st says he was the Christ, while the Arabic text says perhaps he was. (2) The 1st says he appeared to them the 3rd day; the 2nd say, they reported that he had appeared. (3) The 1st says he was dispensing truth with pleasure; the 2nd says nothing about dispensing truth. (4) The 2nd account never implies that he was anything other than a man. (5) And finally, the 2nd account says his conduct was good, while the 1st says he was a "doer of wonderful works," which could be interpreted as miracles.

A second major historian whom apologists often quote to justify their belief in an historical Jesus is the Roman Seutonius (77-140 A.D.) who said, "Since the Jews constantly made disturbances at the instigation of Chrestus, he (the emperor, Claudius) expelled them from Rome" (The Life of Claudius, Sec. 25.4). This couldn't refer to Jesus either because (1) The name in the text is not "Christus" but "Chrestus," which by no means is the usual designation of Jesus. It was a common name, especially among Roman freedman. Hence, the whole passage may have nothing whatever to do with Christianity. (2) Surely no one will contend that Christ was inciting riots at Rome 15 years after he was supposedly crucified at Jerusalem. And why would Jews be led by Jesus to begin with? (3) This passage contains no evidence for the historicity of Jesus, even if we substitute "Christus" for "Chrestus." Christus is merely the Greek-Latin translation of messiah and the phrase "at the instigation of Christus" could refer to the Messiah generally, and not at all necessarily to the particular messiah, Jesus, as an historical figure. (4) "Chrestus" was not only a familiar personal name, it was also a name of the Egyptian Serapis or Osiris, who had a large following at Rome, especially among the common people. Hence "Christians" may be either the followers of a man named Chrestus, or of Serapis. Historians know what evil repute the Egyptian people, which consisted mainly of Alexandrian elements, had at Rome. While other foreign cults that had been introduced into Rome enjoyed the utmost toleration, the cult of Serapis and Isis was exposed repeatedly to persecution. The lax morality associated with their worship of the Egyptian gods and the fanaticism of their worshippers repelled the Romans, and excited the suspicion that their cults might be directed against the State. (5) Vopiscus said, "Those who worship Serapis and the Christians,.... They are a turbulent, inflated, lawless body of men." Is it not possible that the reference to Chrestus and the Christians has been too hastily applied to Christ and Christians? The "Christians," who were detested by the people for their crimes,...., are not Christians at all, but followers of Chrestus, the scum of Egypt, the apaches of Rome, a people on whom Nero could very easily cast the suspicion of having set fire to Rome. The month's third and final author used to prove Jesus existed is Pliny the Younger. In his correspondence with the Emperor, Trajan (around 113 A.D.) which is concerned with the question of how Pliny, as Proconsul of the province of Bithynia in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), was to treat the Christians, Pliny said, "I have laid down this rule in dealing with those who were brought before me for being Christians. I asked whether they were Christians; if they confessed, I asked them a second and a third time, threatening them with punishment; if they persevered, I ordered them to be executed.... They assured me that their only crime or error was this, that they were wont to come together on a certain day before it was light, and to sing in turn, among themselves, a hymn to Christ, as to a god, and to bind themselves by an oath--not to do anything that was wicked, that they would commit no theft, robbery, or adultery, nor break their word, nor deny that anything had been entrusted to them when called upon to restore it.... I therefore deemed it the more necessary to extract the truth by torture from two slave women whom they call deaconesses. But I found it was nothing but a bad and excessive superstition.... the sacred rites which had been allowed to lapse (by them--Ed.) are being performed again, and flesh of sacrificed victims is on sale everywhere, though up till recently scarcely anyone could be found to buy it." Why apologists quote this passage is hard to understand: (1) It proves nothing in regard to the existence of Jesus, but only affirms the existence of Christians. (2) If the passage is referring to Christians, then it is also saying Christians sold the flesh of their sacrificial victims. (3) Roman laws accorded religious liberty to all. Before Constantine there was not a single law opposed to freedom of thought. (4) Trajan was one of the most tolerant of Roman emperors. (5) Pliny is universally conceded to have been one of the most humane of men. That Pliny would have tortured two women is highly unlikely. The person and character of women in Pagan Rome were held in high esteem. (6) The letter implies Bithynia had a large Christian population which is improbable at that early date. (7) The passage implies Trajan was not acquainted with Christian beliefs and customs even though Christians were quite prominent in his capital. (8) For Christians to be found in so remote a province as Bithynia before acquiring notoriety in Rome is unlikely. (9) Pliny says they sing a hymn to Christ as to God which Christians in Pliny's time would consider blasphemous since Jesus was no more than a man to them. His divinity was not established until 325 A.D. (10) This letter is found in only one ancient copy of Pliny. (11) The German literati, the most learned, say the epistle is not genuine. (12) The genuineness of this correspondence of Pliny and Trajan is by no means certain. The tendency of the letters to put the Christians in as favorable a light as possible is too obvious not to excite some suspicion. For these and other reasons the correspondence was declared by experts to be spurious even at the time of its first publication in the 16th century. (13) The undeniable fact is that some of the first Christians were among the greatest forgers who ever lived. This letter was first quoted by Tertullian and the age immediately preceding him was known for fraudulent writings. Tertullian and Eusebius, the people in favor of the passage's genuineness, were by no means the most reliable sources.

REVIEWS

On page 83 in Evidence that Demands a Verdict apologist Josh McDowell provided another quote from antiquity that is often submitted: "...As therefore Ananus was of such a disposition, he thought he had now a good opportunity, as Festus was not dead, and Albinus was still on the road; so he assembled a council of judges, and brought before it the brother of Jesus the so-called Christ, whose name was James, together with some others, and having accused them as law-breakers, he delivered them over to be stoned"(Antiquities, Josephus, 20.9). But McDowell failed to prove this passage specifically referred to Jesus of Nazareth or that the James mentioned was the brother of Jesus of Nazareth. James and Jesus were common names then. Moreover, the earlier quote by Josephus says, "He was the Christ." Now he is "the so-called Christ." Which represents the real Josephus? If this James is the brother of the Jesus of Nazareth, why would he have been stoned while Jesus was allegedly crucified?

On the same page McDowell quotes Seutonius who said, "Punishment by Nero was inflicted on the Christians, a class of men given to a new and mischievous superstition" (Lives of the Caesars, 26.2). Again, the presence of followers of Jesus no more proves he existed than the existence of believers in Zeus proves he existed.

On page 84 McDowell offers a very weak letter written by a Syrian named Mara Bar-Serapion to his son Serapion in which is stated, "...What advantage did the men of Samos gain from burying Pythagoras? In a moment their land was covered with sand. What advantage did the Jews gain from executing their wise King? It was just after that that their kingdom was abolished." McDowell neglected to mention that the Jews only assisted in the death of Jesus according to the Bible and Jesus was never a king over them. So how could he have been the king discussed? On page 82 McDowell quotes Lucian of Samosata who said, "...the man who was crucified in Palestine because he introduced this new cult into the world..." Yet, many people have paid the supreme sacrifice for introducing new cults. Why assume it's Jesus? And lastly, on page 83 McDowell quotes the unreliable Tertullian who stated, "(The emperor--Ed.) Tiberius accordingly, in those days the Christian name made its entry into the world, having himself received intelligence from the truth of Christ's divinity, brought the matter before the senate, with his own decision in favor of Christ. The senate, because it had not given the approval itself, rejected his proposal. Caesar held to his opinion, threatening wrath against all the accusers of the Christians" (Apology, V. 2). McDowell then admitted that, "some historians doubt the historicity of this passage." A reasonable degree of intellectual honesty would have brought forth the admission that nearly all historians doubt its authenticity. We are supposed to believe that Caesar Tiberius, himself, forced upon the Roman senate a belief in the divinity of Jesus.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #105 from CF of Easton, Pennsylvania (Part a)

(In reference to the discussion of Isa. 53:8--"...for he was cut off out of the land of the living"--in June's Commentary, CF says--Ed.). Dear Dennis. If the servant of Isaiah 53 is the Jews as you suggest then how do you explain this servant being "cut off from the land of the living"--Isa. 53:8. If the Jews were cut off, why are they still here?

Editor's Response to Letter #105 (Part a)

Dear CF. Where did I suggest the Jews were the Suffering Servant under discussion? That is a Jewish belief, not mine. I said it wasn't Jesus. I never said, nor do I know, who it was.

Letter #105 Continues (Part b)

You also said in Letter #30 "Nowhere in the NT does it say Jesus had so much as a headache prior to the cross...." You wrote this in reference to Isa. 53:3 "unacquainted with grief." I would like to ask you something. Would you be willing to allow yourself to be blindfolded and struck repeatedly and walk away without a headache? The face of Jesus was struck in this manner--Luke 22:63-64. This would be a good test of your faith or non-faith. Editor's Response to

Letter #105 (Part b)

Letter #30 was written a long time ago, CF, and has nothing to do with Jesus having a headache. I think you meant Issue #30, Sec. 8. Luke 22:63-64 says, "And the ones that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him. And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face...." Why do you assume he was repeatedly struck on the face? Many people have been hit in that manner without getting a headache. Why do you assume that's a necessary outcome? I have been hit in the face several times and not received a headache. The only version I have that says he was even struck in the face is the King James. In any event, you missed my point. "Prior to the cross" meant prior to those events immediately related to the trial and subsequent treatment of Jesus, not to the actual nailing of his hands and feet. I'm well aware of the biblical account of the mistreatment that immediately followed his conviction.

Letter #105 Concludes (Part c)

Is it also true that you were not allowed to set up a booth at an atheist convention?

Editor's Response to Letter #105 (Part c)

Yes, BE has not only been denied space for a booth but refused permission to advertise in atheist periodicals. That's ironic because Christianity Today, Christian Century, Commonweal, and other Christian journals have reviewed our literature and also denied us an opportunity to advertise. Although perplexing, apparently some atheists view BE as religious while many of the religious view us as atheistic. The latter have been quite vituperative.

Letter #106 from IF of Vacaville, California

(In last month's dialogue IF asserted that extra-biblical topics should be accorded greater importance in BE and historical evidence should be used against the Bible's supporters--Ed.) Dear Dennis. In your reply in July's BE you say many extraordinary events took place in history and historians weren't present to record them. Please educate us as to the extraordinary events historians never recorded. Tell us about hearsay events that have come down to us without having historians partaking. Yes, I believe every momentous occasion was recorded by historians. Do you know any occasions that were not noted by them?...I know that bible apologists are very determined but determination doesn't make for the truth. How could the gospel writers quote Jesus verbatim decades after he was supposed to have died and some of the writers weren't even born into the world? Whom were they quoting? On what satisfactory authority?...If the 16 virgin birth saviors prior to Christ were fakes why can't Jesus' virgin birth also be fake? Jesus in the gospels was never quoted saying he was born of a virgin. His mother never told him? Amongst my friends discussion of religion is taboo. They are church going people or synagogue going. They want a God even if one never existed. They want that invisible crutch to lean on light years away....

Editor's Response to Letter #106

Dear IF. Several of your points deserve comment. First, are you seriously contending every momentous event in history has been noted by historians? How could this be possible in light of the fact that the earth alone, according to most scientists, is approximately 4 billion years old, while man has only been present approximately 1 million years, 1/4,000th of the time.

Moreover, historical records are a relatively recent phenomenon in man's existence and certainly many events viewed by early man were not recorded for posterity. Your argument reminds me of the philosophical problem we discussed in college: If a tree fell in the forest and nobody was present to hear it, was there a noise? The answer is, of course, yes. Man's presence isn't a prerequisite for events to occur. I can't relate events unrecorded by historians any more than I can prove the tree made a noise; but I'd be foolish to believe otherwise. Second, you have repeated an earlier assertion to the effect that Jesus couldn't be quoted verbatim decades after he was supposed to have died. As I mentioned in reference to George Washington, it's quite feasible. Why do you insist on making this an impossibility? And third, Jesus' virgin birth could easily be a fake too. We agree. But as I mentioned before, apologists would probably follow this with a litany of biblical deeds performed by, and prophecies fulfilled by, Jesus, which would set him apart from the others.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #104 Concludes from Last Month (Part b)

...From experience, Dennis, I can tell you that the religionists, especially the fundamentalists and pentecostals, slowly but surely cutting up the Bible is the ONLY method that will edge them step-by-step toward reality. All the talk about it being absurd that God has "always existed" and felt bored and decided to create an earth to play with etc., have no effect on these people. Trying to exalt humanism and materialism do no good either as these religious types have already been programmed not to respond favorably. Only going to the Bible and opening it and not being afraid to use it works.... I once had a religionist declare that I must "prove" that logic and human reasoning are more reliable than the inspired word of God. How can we deal with these people, who I'm sorry to say were made this way by others (parents, churches) through no fault of their own?... Christians teach that you must believe on FAITH. As a radio preacher once said, "Faith is the Evidence." (He repeated himself four times consecutively). Since there is NO evidence, one must put one's faith in the scriptures. Faith is the ONLY evidence. (Another pearl of doublethink! I wonder if Hearsay is Proof too.)... After words like these are pumped into the heads of innocent mortals, it is not difficult to see why religionists insist on holding firm stubbornly when confronted with rational people like us... After all it's only Satan trying to deceive me, they think.... Almost from the start children brought up in this kind of setting learn to filter all facts through religious muddlement. If reality contradicts the Bible, then reality is wrong.... And since science by definition does not deal with spiritual matters, it cannot challenge the Bible. So why listen to science? I have seen the above kind of "thinking" steal many people away from the world of normal men. A watch they say implies a watch maker. (They use scientific terminology to convince themselves of the validity of their own statement). The earth "implies an earth maker. So, I ask: "Does God imply a God-Maker?"

Letter #107 from FG of East Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis. Thanks for #31. I have an editorial question. Why not type BE double column? It is easier to read and reference.... You said, "What is Needed" (pages 2 & 3) and I find it lucid and compelling. Do you have any idea, however, of the magnitude of the herculean labor you propose? You must undo almost all the religious right has done in the past 7 years--and against the sympathies in government. (The Federal bureaucracy has been stocked with fundamentalists for several years now....

Editor's Response to Letter #107

Dear FG. Both of your points are will taken. I haven't used the doublecolumn approach because it would be more difficult to type and reduce the amount of information given. I could also pull in the margins and have more divisions between sections and paragraphs, but that, too, would reduce the body of information. If more pages were added then costs would rise, as would also be true if word-processors, printers, and other devices were employed to improve BE's appearance. I know the mechanical aspects of the publication could be enhanced, but the bottom line has always been money and time. I'm not wealthy, nor am I becoming so. You are also correct in regard to what I suggested in last month's What is Needed? Great effort would be required to undo, not 7, but many years of inculcation. I haven't seen any current program that's any more than a mild irritant to religionists in general and fundamentalists in particular, but I'd be willing to listen to any ideas you may have.

Letter #108 from JG of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... I enjoyed your article on how the problems of the influence of the Bible and religion in general should be addressed. I thought I'd comment on your ideas and share a few of my own thoughts with you.... Atheists, agnostics, humanists, and other freethinkers must stop the philosophical hairsplitting and ideological debate and unite.... The trouble is that freethinkers are by their very nature tolerant and reasonable. Dennis, you are so right in describing the "let others believe in that nonsense if they want to" attitude. If only freethinkers would wake up to the fact that right-wing Christianity is a psycho-social disease.... It is a threat to the basic assumptions and ideals of a pluralistic democracy and has no place in the 20th century; it should be destroyed like the cancer that it is. And I must say BE is as good a form of "chemotherapy" as I've seen.... (In regard to appearing on the radio--Ed.) there is in our nation an unspoken but all-pervading law that it is unacceptable to offend anyone's preconceptions.... I don't think it is so much a question of mass media folks being "closer to fundamentalism than BE"; I think it's more a question of their collective tendency to broadcast to the least common denominator to avoid offending anyone.

Editor's Response to Letter #108

Your last point may be correct, JG, but I'm still inclined to believe otherwise.

ERRANCY

COMMENTARY

Did Jesus Exist (Part Two of a Two-Part Series)-- Except for Josephus probably no writer of antiquity has been more relied upon by apologists to prove the existence of Jesus than the Roman historian, Tacitus. In the Annals he related the measures taken by Nero to lessen the suffering brought about by the great fire in Rome in 64 A.D. as well as remove its traces and, then allegedly made the following statements: "But neither the aid of man, nor the liberality of the prince, nor the propitiations of the gods succeeded in destroying the belief that the fire had been purposely lit. In order to put an end to this rumor, therefore, Nero laid the blame on and visited with severe punishment those men, hateful for their crimes, whom the people called Christians. He from whom the name was derived, Christus, was put to death by the procurator Pontius Pilate in the reign of Tiberius. But the pernicious superstition, checked for a moment, broke out again, not only in Judea, the native land of the monstrosity, but also in Rome, to which all conceivable horrors and abominations flow from every side, and find supporters. First, therefore, those were arrested who openly confessed; then, on their information, a great number, who were not so much convicted of the fire as of hatred of the human race. Ridicule was passed on them as they died; so that, clothed in skins of beasts, they were torn to pieces by dogs, or crucified, or committed to the flames, and when the sun had gone down they were burned to light up the night. Nero had lent his garden for this spectacle, and gave games in the Circus, mixing with the people in the dress of a charioteer or standing in the chariot. Hence there was a strong sympathy for them, though they might have been guilty enough to deserve the severest punishment, on the ground that they were sacrificed, not to the general good, but to the cruelty of one man." (Annals XV, 44). The number of problems associated with this paragraph are almost too numerous to mention: (1) It is extremely improbable that a special report found by Tacitus had been sent earlier to Rome and incorporated into the records of the Senate, in regard to the death of a Jewish provincial, Jesus. The execution of a Nazareth carpenter would have been one of the most insignificant events conceivable among the movements of Roman history in those decades; it would have completely disappeared beneath the innumerable executions inflicted by Roman provincial authorities. For it to have been kept in any report would have been a most remarkable instance of chance. That the founder of Christianity was put to death under Tiberius by the procurator Pontius Pilate must have been discovered in the same archive which, according to Tertullian, also said the sun was darkened at midday when Jesus died. (2) The phrase "multitudo ingens" which means "a great number" is opposed to all that we know of the spread of the new faith in Rome at the time. A vast multitude in 64 A.D.? There were not more than a few thousand Christians 200 years later. (3) Death by fire was not a form of punishment inflicted at Rome in the time of Nero. It is opposed to the moderate principles on which the accused were then dealt with by the State. The use of the Christians as "living torches," as Tacitus describes, and all the other atrocities that were committed against them, have little title to credence, and suggest an imagination exalted by reading stories of the later Christian martyrs. (4) The Roman authorities can have had no reason to inflict special punishment on the new faith. How could the non-initiated Romans know what were the concerns of a comparatively small religious sect, which was connected with Judaism and must have seemed to the impartial observer wholly identical with it. (5) Suetonius himself says that Nero showed the utmost indifference, even contempt in regard to religious sects. Even afterwards the Christians were not persecuted for their faith, but for political reasons, for their contempt of the Roman state and emperor, and as disturbers of the unity and peace of the empire. What reason, then can Nero have had to proceed against the Christians, hardly distinguishable from the Jews, as a new and criminal sect. (6) It is inconceivable that the followers of Jesus formed a community in the city at that time of sufficient importance to attract public attention and the ill-feeling of the people. (7) The victims could not have been given to the flames in the gardens of Nero, as Tacitus allegedly said. According to another account by Tacitus these gardens were the refuge of those whose homes had been burned and were full of tents and wooden sheds. It is hardly probable that Nero would have incurred the risk of a second fire by his living torches. (8) According to Tacitus, Nero was in Antium, not Rome, when the fire occurred. (9) The blood-curdling story about the frightful orgies of Nero reads like some Christian romance of the Dark Ages and not like Tacitus. Suetonius, while mercilessly condemning the reign of Nero, says that in his public entertainments Nero took particular care that no lives should be sacrificed, "not even those of condemned criminals." (10) It is highly unlikely that he mingled with the crowd and feasted his eyes on the ghastly spectacle. Tacitus tells us in his life of Agricola that Nero had crimes committed, but kept his own eyes off them. (11) Some authorities allege that the passage in Tacitus could not have been interpolated because his style of writing could not have been copied. But this argument is without merit since there is no "inimitable" style for the clever forger, and the more unusual, distinctive, and peculiar a style is, like that of Tacitus, the easier it is to imitate. Moreover, as far as the historicity of Jesus is concerned we are, perhaps, interested only in one sentence of the passage and that has nothing distinctively Tacitan about it. (12) Tacitus is assumed to have written this about 117 A.D., about 80 years after the death of Jesus, when Christianity was already an organized religion with a settled tradition. The gospels, or at least 3 of them, are supposed to have been in existence. Hence Tacitus might have derived his information about Jesus, if not directly from the gospels, indirectly from them by means of oral tradition. This is the view of Dupuis, who wrote: "Tacitus says what the legend said." In 117 A.D. Tacitus could only know about Christ by what reached him from Christian or intermediate circles. He merely reproduced rumors. (13) What does it matter whether or not Tacitus wrote this passage? He could only have received the information, a hundred years after the time, from people who had told it to others. It doesn't matter, therefore, whether or not the passage is genuine. (14) In no other part of his writings did Tacitus make the least allusion to "Christ" or "Christians." (15) Tacitus is also made to say that the Christians took their denomination from Christ which could apply to any of the so-called Christs who were put to death in Judea, including Christ Jesus. (16) The worshippers of the Sun-god Serapis were also called "Christians." Serapis or Osiris had a large following at Rome especially among the common people. (17) The expression "Christians" which Tacitus applies to the followers of Jesus, was by no means common in the time of Nero. Not a single Greek or Roman writer of the first century mentions the name. The Christians who called themselves Jessaeans, Nazoraeans, the Elect, the Saints, the Faithful, etc. were universally regarded as Jews. They observed the Mosaic law and the people could not distinguish them from the other Jews. The Greek word Christos (the anointed) for Messiah, and the derivative word, Christian, first came into use under Trajan in the time of Tacitus. Even then, however, the word Christos could not mean Jesus of Nazareth. All the Jews without exception looked forward to a Christos or Messiah. It is, therefore, not clear how the fact of being a "Christian" could, in the time of Nero or of Tacitus, distinguish the followers of Jesus from other believers in a Christos or Messiah. Not one of the gospels applies the name Christians to the followers of Jesus. It is never used in the New Testament as a description of themselves by the believers in Jesus. (18) Most scholars admit that the works of Tacitus have not been preserved with any degree of fidelity. (19) This passage which could have served Christian writers better than any other writing of Tacitus, is not quoted by any of the Christian Fathers. It is not quoted by Tertullian, though he often quoted the works of Tacitus. Tertullian's arguments called for the use of this passage with so loud a voice that his omission of it, if it had really existed, amounted to a violent improbability. (20) Eusebius in the 4th century cited all the evidence of Christianity obtained from Jewish and pagan sources but makes no mention of Tacitus. (21) This passage is not quoted by Clement of Alexandria who at the beginning of the 3rd century set himself entirely to the work of adducing and bringing together all the admissions and recognitions which pagan authors had made of the existence of Christ Jesus or Christians before his time. (22) Origen in his controversy with Celsus would undoubtedly have used it had it existed. (23) There is no vestige or trace of this passage anywhere in the world before the 15th century. Its use as part of the evidences of the Christian religion is absolutely modern. Although no reference whatever is made to it by any writer or historian, monkish or otherwise, before the 15th century (1468 A.D.), after that time it is quoted or referred to in an endless list of works. (24) The fidelity of the passage rests entirely upon the fidelity of one individual (first published in a copy of the annals of Tacitus in the year 1468 by Johannes de Spire of Venice who took his imprint of it from a single manuscript) who would have every opportunity and inducement to insert such an interpolation. (25) In all the Roman records there was to be found no evidence that Christ was put to death by Pontius Pilate. If genuine, such a sentence would be the most important evidence in pagan literature. How could it have been overlooked for 1360 years? (26) And lastly, the style of the passage is not consistent with the usually mild and classic language of Tacitus.

Concluding Comments on the Existence of Jesus--What else, then, can be said about the historicity of Jesus? (1) Many writers, such as Renan, have attempted to write his biography but failed, failed because no materials for such a work exist. (2) If Jesus was an historical person, how is it that not only does the Talmud never mention him but Paul's Epistles do not tell a single special fact about the life of Jesus? Read the other Epistles of the NT. Nowhere in any of the early Christian documents do we find even the slenderest reference to the mere man Jesus, the historical personality as such, from which we might infer that the author had a close acquaintance with him. His life, as described in the gospels, seems to have been entirely unknown to the authors. His speeches and sayings are hardly ever quoted and where this is done, as in the Epistle of James or the Book of Acts, they are not quoted as sayings of Jesus. (3) What can Josephus or Tacitus prove? They could at the most merely show that at the end of the 1st century not only the Christians but their traditions and Christ-myth were known in Rome. When the latter originated, however, and how far it was based on truth, could not be discovered from Tacitus or Josephus. (4) And finally, it should be mentioned that some writers are notable for what they didn't say about Jesus: (a) Philo was born before the beginning of the Christian era and lived until long after the reputed death of Christ. He wrote an account of the Jews covering the entire time that Christ is said to have existed on earth. He was living in or near Jerusalem when Christ's miraculous birth and the Herodian massacre occurred. He was there when Christ made his triumphal entry in Jerusalem. He was there when the Crucifixion with its attendant earthquake, supernatural darkness, and resurrection of the dead took place--when Christ himself rose from the dead. Yet, these events were not mentioned by him. (b) Under the reign of Tiberius the whole earth, or at least a celebrated province of the Roman empire, was allegedly involved in a preternatural darkness of three hours. Yet, Seneca and Pliny the Elder, who recorded all the great earthquakes, meteors, comets, and eclipses they could find and who lived during the period of Jesus, failed to mention the event. (c) Justus of Tiberius was a native of Christ's own country, Galilee. He wrote a history covering the time of Christ's reputed existence. This work perished, but Photius, a Christian scholar and critic of the 9th century, was acquainted with it and said, "He (Justus) makes not the least mention of the appearance of Christ, of what things happened to him, or of the wonderful works that he did" (Photius, Bibliotheca, Code 33).

Jesus and Other Gods--Christians contend all of the following pre-Christian sun-gods are mythological: Hercules, Osiris, Bacchus, Mithra, Hermes, Prometheus, Perseus, and Horus. Yet, all: (1) allegedly had gods for fathers and virgins for mothers; (2) had their births announced by stars and celestial music; (3) were born on the 25th of December (Solstice); (4) had tyrants trying to kill them when they were infants; (5) met with violent deaths; and (6) rose from the dead.

Why BE Exists--Nearly every time the editor of BE has appeared on the radio callers have asked two basic questions: Do you believe in God and why are you doing this? As these queries are undoubtedly of concern to some, they need to be addressed. With respect to the first, BE takes no position on the existence of God. It is not a topic with which we are involved. Possibly this means we are agnostics as some have alleged. If so, it's not a consciously thought out position but more one by default. Rationally analyzing a tangible writing that is clearly affecting the lives of millions is of much greater concern. The second question is generally answered in the following vein: Thousands of people throughout this Country are giving an essentially one-sided presentation of the Bible. People are hearing all the pros and none of the cons, all the positives and none of the negatives. As of now it's been a decidedly lop-sided affair. How can people rationally and objectively analyze anything when given only one side of the picture? Someone, somebody, some group needs to travel the land and give a more balanced description of the Bible. Someone needs to expose the negative aspects so a more sensible perspective is possible. BE tries to fill the void by teaching a kind of Sunday-School-in-Reverse, by telling people all the things they should have heard in Sunday School but didn't. Only via this strategy can a truly accurate assessment materialize. For millions to hear only one side of a story is dangerous, especially when religion or politics are involved. If, after hearing both points of view to an equal degree, they still wish to follow the Bible, then so be it. That's their decision to make. But attorneys for the plaintiff and the defendant should have their say before a judgment is rendered.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #109 from VT of Huron, California (Part a)

Dear Assistant Editor of BE. The challenge from Dennis McKinsey is to prove the point like an attorney in court. Heb. 11:1 ("Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen") is about all you are going to get as far as God's written Word is concerned.... this one verse and it alone is sufficient to prove the case.... How can I believe with perfect assurance?...Read the verses again if you have any doubt. (Heb. 11:3--"THROUGH FAITH we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things that were seen were not made of things that do appear?").... We can accept (lay hold on) or we can reject this declaration. This fact was a statement made, a declaration given. Perhaps no further PROOF will be given you. No additional declaration need be given.

Editor's Response to Letter #109 (Part a)

Dear VT. Surely you must realize you have failed to prove your point. How can faith be proof? You mean anything becomes true as long as I have faith that it's so? You mean that if I believe I'm omnipotent I really am? You mean that if I sincerely believe the god, Zeus, exists, then he really does? Remember, you said "faith is the evidence," the evidence of things not seen. That means faith, in effect, is proof. Faith, alone, is sufficient. To believe makes it true. The sky's the limit once you start down this road. In effect, anything anyone seriously believes becomes reality. The only limitation involved are the imaginations of millions. You said, "this one verse and it alone is sufficient to prove the case." How have you proved your case like an attorney in court? If Heb. 11:1 "is about all you are going to get as far as God's written word is concerned," then you aren't going to get very far. You say the verses provide "perfect assurance" to those with doubt. I've read them many times and never had any doubt minimized. Your concluding comment that "no additional declaration need be given" means that the verse is true simply because the Bible says so. In other words, anything the Bible says, regardless of evidence to the contrary, which flies in the face of nearly every point made by BE over the last 3 years. You have chosen to ignore a veritable mountain of data showing the Bible is anything but inerrant. "My mind is made up, don't confuse me with the facts," comes into play when mere belief is taken as proof.

You said, "the fact was a statement made, a declaration given. Perhaps no further PROOF will be given you" and made two errors in the process. First, it's not a fact, it's a belief and there's a big difference. I've repeatedly argued this point with Mormons, Baptists, and others. They just can't seem to separate "fact" from "belief." They operate on the theory that believing something makes it so and fail to realize belief is not evidence. Mere assertions or statements in any book prove nothing. There is a real world out there that our thoughts and beliefs must conform to. It's not going to adapt to us; we must conform to it. We must learn its rules and regulations in order to survive; it's not going to learn ours. And to the extent that we ignore, fail to comprehend, or drift away from the real world, "out there," to that extent we enter the realm of neuroses, paranoidias, and other mental illnesses. To quote the famous psychiatrist, Dr. Carl Jung, "I have treated many hundreds of patients. Among those over 35, there has not been one whose problem in the last resort was not that of finding a religious outlook on life." Learning how the world operates and changing our behavior and beliefs accordingly is what science, logic, and rationality are all about. Second, your comment that "perhaps no further PROOF will be given you" begs the question. What PROOF? There is merely your belief that you have in your possession an inerrant book authored by a supreme being--a book replete with problems you choose to ignore. Is your need for something to believe in, something to hold on to, that strong, VT? Are you insecure? Judging from your letters you seem to be a decent, reasonably intelligent fellow. I would ask that you not put yourself in a position worthy of pity. With your abilities you don't need faith to lean on; you can do it yourself.

Letter #109 Continues (Part b)

Heb. 11:1--NOW FAITH is the substance of things.... We learn in this chapter that unbelief is the worst sin anyone can commit. God has a remedy for every sin except the state (sin) of unbelief.... Now many people don't find faith a very satisfactory way and feel like the little girl who, when asked to define faith, said, "Faith is believing what you know ain't so." They look at it like it is to take a leap in the dark.... When that is what it means to a person, they do not have faith, because faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen"--which means faith rests on a foundation.

Editor's Response to Letter #109 (Part b)

Where does the 11th chapter of Hebrews say unbelief is the worst sin anyone can commit, VT? I think you embellished the text somewhat. The only unpardonable sin I can think of is related in Matt. 12:32 which says, "...but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come" (See also: Luke 12:10). Faith isn't so much believing what you know ain't so as believing what you ain't proved. And until it's substantiated the only foundation involved is quicksand.

Letter #109 Concludes (Part c)

...In a very real sense faith is only the instrument through which we receive salvation. Christ saves and not something we do on our own. Yes, we certainly believe in works. But works is a product of salvation.... Salvation is a free gift. We can do nothing to purchase it. We receive it by FAITH. Works follows the believers. ...the Bible doesn't teach salvation by works.... The Bible does not attempt to prove God. The Bible is written to TEACH, INSTRUCT, AND ADMONISH. It is not a book of apologetics. The OT has Christ on most every page. Some see this and some cannot.

Editor's Response to Letter #109 (Part c)

(1) You say Christ saves and not something we do on our own. Yet, according to Christian ideology you must accept Jesus as your savior. Isn't that doing something? In fact, you are initiating the act of salvation. Jesus doesn't save you; you save yourself by accepting him. You caused the saving, not he. It isn't a gift but something you earned by your own act. (2) You say we can do nothing to purchase it; yet, precisely the opposite is true. You must purchase it by doing something. (3) You say works are a product of salvation. If so, then those claiming to have been saved are guilty of deception because they all continue sinning. I've never met one even close to perfection. (4) As shown in the 3rd Issue of BE your comment that the Bible does not teach salvation by works is diametrically opposed to many verses. You might want to read it. (5) I couldn't agree with you more that the Bible does not attempt to prove God. That's just the problem; it doesn't attempt to prove much of anything. Assertions are made and you either accept them or you don't. (6) And finally, people don't see Christ on most every page of the OT; they impose him on most every page. They start with the assumption he's there and proceed to distort verses as expediency dictates. You might want to read BE's discussion of messianic prophecies and those to come.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #110 from LG of Oxnard, California

Dear Dennis....I agree that the only way to confront fundamentalists and evangelists is to attack them directly at the source of their misguided beliefs. Trying to present scientific evidence to a group of people who don't have sufficient educational background is futile.

Letter #111 from BF of Louisa, Kentucky

Dear Dennis. In receipt of your Issue 32, excellent as always. Glad you are letting down the bars a bit in handling extra-biblical issues, such as alleged contemporary references to Jesus, etc. These areas do help us amateur BE activists. A bit of nitpicking on the last issue. Note correct spelling of Suetonius and on page 2, 2nd paragraph, line 6, freedmen, not singular; and quote mark needed on page 4, after "abolished," 4th line....

Editor's Response to Letter #111 Dear BF. Proofread as we may; sometimes they slip through.

Letter #112 form MN of Danvers, Illinois

Dear Dennis. As a reader of all 30 of your issues I want to congratulate you on a job well done. Although I have not always agreed with some of the points that you have made in individual arguments, I am in whole-hearted agreement with your strategy of confronting the biblical literalists with evidence from their own primary (really solitary) source. With that in mind, I would like to recommend to both you and your readers a book that I just recently purchased and read. It is entitled Beyond Fundamentalism by James Barr. The approach of this book is similar to your in that Professor Barr is severely critical of biblical literalists and uses the scriptures themselves to point out the fallacies of the fundamentalist position. ...He cites two such cases which would be sufficient to completely undermine the fundamentalist claim for both the infallibility of the scriptures as well as the infallibility of Jesus himself. Both cases involve Jesus making errors when referring to what are now considered OT scriptures. The first is found in Mark 2:25-26 when Jesus relates a story from 1 Sam. 21:1-6. The story involves the high priest Ahimelech. But Jesus incorrectly calls the high priest Abiathar (who happens to have been Ahimelech's son). The second case can be found in Matt. 23:35 where Jesus is talking about the death of Zacharias as related in 2 Chron. 24:20-21. The only problem with Jesus' recounting of this story is that he mistakenly refers to Zacharias as the son the Barachias when he is really the son of Jehoida. Personally, I find these two easily-verified biblical errors especially powerful arguments against not only literalism but also the infallibility of both the scriptures and Jesus himself. There seems no way the fundamentalists can explain these discrepancies and also maintain their theological position regarding the nature of the Bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #112

Dear MN. You selected two good arguments one could present to defenders of the Bible. They are, indeed, potent and only two among scores available. It's important to note, however, that fundamentalists and literalists are not the only defenders of the Book. Religious liberals and others of like persuasion often extol its reliability through reliance upon a less direct approach. Finding Adam and Eve, six days of Creation, the Flood, Jonah's whale, and many other aspects of Scripture hard to swallow they tend to embellish and allegorize profusely by reading meanings into statements and events and relying heavily upon symbolism and figurative interpretations. Consequently, BE does not refer to apologists as fundamentalists or literalists. Many of the Book's staunchest supporters are in neither category. "Biblicists" is the preferred term because anyone defending the Bible or giving credence to its contents is covered, regardless of philosophical inclination.

COMMENTARY

Biblical Geography (An Historical Bible Atlas May Be Needed)--Biblical geography, like biblical science and math, has too many inaccuracies to be viewed as part of the inerrant word of a perfect being. One need only view relevant accurate maps of that era to see notable examples are not hard to find: (1) "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, Saying, Where is he that is born king of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east,...." (Matt. 2:1-2). Since the wise men were east of Jesus, how could an eastern star or a star east of them tell them anything? (2) "Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey" (Acts 1:12). The inaccuracy of this comment lies in the fact that Olivet, the Mount of Olives was just outside the wall of Jerusalem near the Temple, hardly a day's journey. (3) "And John also was baptizing in Aenon near to Salim,...." (John 3:23). Nearly all critics agree there is no such place near salim. (4) "Then he returned from the region of Tyre, and went through Sidon to the Sea of Galilee, through the region of the Decapolis" (Mark 7:31 RSV). The geographical knowledge of Mark's author is questionable in that it's hard to imagine going from Tyre to the Sea of Galilee by passing through Sidon, much less the region of Decapolis. Sidon is to the north of Tyre and the Sea of Galilee while Decapolis is to the south of Tyre and the Sea of Galilee. This assertion was made by Mark when there were no coasts of Decapolis, nor was the name so much as known before the reign of the emperor Nero. (5) "Again the devil taketh him up into an exceedingly high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world,...." (Matt. 4:8). How could anyone see the whole world from one spot, even the known world at that time? (6) "For we have heard how the Lord dried up the water of the Red Sea for you, when ye came out of Egypt" (Josh. 2:10) and "By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned" (Heb. 11:29) and "Pharoah's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea: his chosen captains are also drowned in the Red Sea" (Ex. 15:4) and "But the Egyptians pursued after them, all the horses and chariots of the Pharoah, and his horsemen, and his army, and overtook them encamping by the sea, beside Pi-hahiroth, before Baal-zephon" (Ex. 4:9) and (Ex. 14:22). The Bible repeatedly says the Israelites crossed the Red Sea when they fled Egypt. Yet, they crossed at Baal-sephon which is more than 100 miles north of the Red Sea. If anything, they crossed the Gulf of Suez, although a map of the Exodus in Westminster's Historical Maps of Bible Lands shows them crossing even north of the Gulf of Suez near Lake Balah. (7) "And it came to pass that when Jesus had finished these sayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judea beyond the Jordan" (Matt. 19:1). The Jordan River being the eastern boundary of Judea, no "coasts of Judea" existed beyond it. The coast of Judea is the Jordan. (8) "And a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted and became into four heads. The name of the first is Pison: that is it which compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold;.... And the name of the second river is Gihon: the same is it that compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia and the name of the third river is Hiddehel; that is it which goeth toward the east of Assyria. And the fourth river is Euphrates" (Gen. 2:10-14). The geography of all this makes no sense. There is no Middle East river that divides and becomes the four rivers mentioned. (a) Havilah is a desert area southwest of Saudi Arabia, residing next to the Red Sea. There is no river encompassing the region. Indeed, one would be hard-pressed to find any river. (b) The Gihon river is apparently the Nile because it encompasses "the whole land of Ethiopia." Yet, the Nile is nowhere near the alleged location of the Garden of Eden. (c) This geographical presentation makes the Nile and the Euphrates branch from the same river. (d) It sounds as if Eden is the entire Middle East since Ethiopia and the Euphrates River are Linked together. (e) What river has ever left the Garden of Eden area and parted into four rivers? (9) "And they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes (or Gerasenes or Gergesenes--Ed.)" (Mark 5:1). How could this occur? Gadara and Gerara are both miles from the sea. They do not border it. (10) "The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus" (John 12:21). Bethsaida is in Gaulonitis, not Galilee. (11) "And leaving Nazareth (on the western side of the Jordan--Ed.), he came and dwelt in Capernaum (also on the western side of the Jordan--Ed.), which is upon the sea coast in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim: That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by way of the sea, beyond Jordan,...." (Matt. 4:13-15). Zebulon and Nephtali are not beyond the Jordan or across the Jordan. They are on the western side of the Jordan, not the eastern. Moreover, Capernaum is within the borders of Nephthalim but not those of Zebulon. (12) "These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing" (John 1:28). Contending that Bethabara is an interpolation, the scholar Geihie says, "The most ancient manuscripts read Bethany instead of Bethabara, but no site of that name is now known on the Jordan." The RSV says "Bethany" not "Bethabara." Bethany was a suburb of Jerusalem and was not beyond the Jordan. (13) "Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee; and leaving Nazareth he came and dwelt in Capernaum,...." (Matt. 4:12-13). If this says Jesus left Nazareth and entered the province of Galilee to arrive in Capernaum, then the geography is poor. Nazareth is as much in Galilee as is Capernaum. If he left Nazareth and went to Capernaum, then he remained in Galilee, since that's the province in which both reside. (14) "And I answered, 'Who art thou, Lord?' And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest" (Acts 22:8). (a) "Why would he be called Jesus of Nazareth when he was born in Bethlehem, which is far from Nazareth? (b) The Jews had every right to reject Jesus as the Messiah since he said he was from Nazareth which is in Galilee. As Scripture says, "Shall Christ come out of Galilee? Hath not the scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David and out of the town of Bethlehem (which is far south of Galilee--Ed.), where David was?" (15) "Every place that the sole of your foot will tread upon I have given to you, as I promised to Moses, From the wilderness and this Lebanon as far as the great river, the river Euphrates...shall be your territory" (Josh. 1:3-4 RSV). Israelite territory has never extended to the Euphrates River.

Questions of Ask--From time to time we all have contacts with the Bible's supporters and a few well-chosen questions can often have significant influence. In order to avoid queries which are generally ineffective, the following are offered as those which seem to have some effect: (1) Why are we being punished for what Adam did and why must women bear children in pain because of what Eve did, especially in light of Deut. 24:16 and other verses? (2) How could Adam and Eve have sinned since they were made perfect? The usual reply that they had free will is of no substance. They can have all the free will desired, but if they chose to sin then they weren't perfect. (3) Christians claim that in order to be saved you must accept Jesus as your savior. If so, then how are babies who die in infancy, the mentally infirm, those who lived long before Jesus, and those who lived in the New World before missionaries arrived, saved, and how could God be just if he condemned people because of where or when they were born. Don't let them escape via Romans 1 and 2. Belief in God and good works does not save. Only belief in Jesus. If belief in God and inherently knowing the good is all that's required, then many non-Christians are included. (4) How could Noah (Gen. 6:9) and Job (Job 1:1) have been perfect if all have sinned (Rom. 3:23)? (5) How could Paul have said we are saved through faith in Jesus when Jesus himself repeatedly said good works are the prerequisite? (6) Ask people if they believe. The answer is nearly always yes. Then ask if they would be willing to drink arsenic or handle deadly snakes since Mark 16:18 says, those who believe shall take up serpents and drink any deadly thing with impunity. (7) How can Num. 23:19 and 1 Sam. 15:29, which say God does not repent be reconciled with Ex. 32:14 and 1 Sam. 15:35 which say he does? (8) How can Ex. 33:20 and John 1:18 which say no one has seen God's face be reconciled with Gen. 32:30 and Ex. 33:11 which say the opposite? (9) How can the Resurrection be of such importance when many others rose before Jesus? (10) How can Jesus be our perfect savior when he made many false and deceptive statements? John 7:8-10 (going to the feast), Luke 23:43 (with me in paradise today), Matt. 5:22 (ye fools), and Mark 8:34 (take up a non-existent cross) are good ones to use (Note also the Commentaries in Issues 2, 24, 25, 27, and 28) (11) How can the Bible be the epitome of morality and virtue when it used profanity such as that found in 2 Kings 18:27, Ezek. 23:20-21, and Song Sol. 5:4. (12) How can the various accounts of the Resurrection be reconciled? (13) Ask women how they can support the Bible in light of the demeaning status accorded them in 1 Cor. 11:3,9, Eph. 5:22-24, and other appropriate verses. (14) And how can Jesus, who is allegedly God, talk to God the Father and yet only one God exists? Don't let biblicists escape with the rationalization that there is only one God but three persons. All of the above are good opening questions and should have some effect on most respondents.

Who Killed Jesus?--For nearly 2,000 years many Christians have held Jews responsible for the death of Jesus. Ironically, they fail to realize that if their assertion is true they have proved Jesus to be a false prophet because he twice prophesied his death at the hands of Gentiles, not Jews. They need only read Mark 10:33-34 ("And they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles. And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him:....") and Matt. 20:19 ("And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him:....") to see they have refuted their own leader. Who, then, did kill Jesus according to the NT? Well, that depends on which gospel you are reading and in John's case, which verse. Since the narratives are too long to quote verbatim a synopsis of each is appropriate. Matthew says Roman soldiers aided by the multitude with some support from the chief priests, scribes, and elders were responsible (Matt. 27:24-44). Mark attributes his death to Roman soldiers aided by some chief priests directing the people and some scribes (Mark 15:11-31). Luke says the multitude, some chief priests, rulers, and soldiers were all involved (Luke 23:1-37). John (verses 19:15-18) is the only gospel clearly saying the Jews (the chief priests) crucified him ("Pilate saith unto them, shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Caesar. Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away...) to Golgotha--Ed.) where they crucified him"). Yet, five verses later (#23) John says Roman soldiers were responsible ("Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus..."). No doubt Peter and Paul contributed to the confusion and helped generate anti-Semitic sentiment through such comments as those found in Acts 10:39)"And we are witnesses to all that he did both in the country of the Jews and in Jerusalem. They put him to death by hanging him on a tree") and 1 Thess. 2:14-15 ("...even as they have of the Jews: Who killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets") respectively. Majority vote would hold that Jesus was killed by Roman soldiers working in conjunction with some scribes and Jewish priests leading a multitude.

A Suggested Study Program--From time to time we are asked how one should study and analyze the Bible. Good Question! In order to criticize any writing one must first read it and in order to criticize effectively one must know the contents well. Unfortunately, the Shakespearian English of the most widely accepted version, the King James, ranges from difficult to incomprehensible in far too many instances. People understandably become discouraged while trying to plow through all those "begats" in Genesis. Years ago we surmounted this obstacle by buying three key books--The Layman's Parallel Bible, Strong's Exhaustive Concordance, and Westminster's small booklet entitled Historical Maps of Bible Lands. The first contains four major versions of the Bible--the King James, the Revised Standard, the Modern Language, and the Living Bible--in parallel columns. A newer version is less reliable because the NIV replaced the Modern Language. The following procedure was found to be quite effective and is offered to anyone interested. Pick up the Layman's Parallel Bible and begin reading the KJV, the most difficult but the most important version. If the text is obscure, then read the Revised Standard which is clearer but not as widely accepted. Unfortunately, the RSV is in the 4th column and should be in the 2nd. If the text is still vague, then read the Modern Language which is even clearer and more modernistic but farther from the King James. Unfortunately, the Modern Language is in the 2nd column and should be in the 3rd. If all else fails, turn to the least reliable but easiest to read version, the Living Bible, which isn't really a version but a poor paraphrase. Start at Gen. 1:1 and read to the end of Revelation. No doubt months will be involved but that's what is needed. Read for yourself and don't consult commentaries and other works which tell you how to view the narrative. Approaching the Bible with an uncluttered, unindoctrinated outlook devoid of pre-conceptions and expectations is of first magnitude in importance. Indeed, it's the key to effective critical analysis. Once the Book has been sufficiently mastered, commentaries and other apologetic works, which are nearly always nothing more than rationalizations, justifications, and obfuscations, can be viewed in proper perspective and effectively dealt with. It's important to observe the Bible through your own eyes, not those of others. One should not only devise an effective mechanism by which to read the Bible but create a system by which verses, data, and comments can be quickly retrieved for comparison with other parts of the Book. That's mandatory. Reading the Bible is of little use if verses cannot be recalled for comparison and analysis. That's where Strong's Exhaustive Concordance comes in. The key word is "exhaustive." Strong took every word in the KJV of the Bible and listed all the verses containing that word. So, one need only remember one word in any verse to find that verse. Remembering an entire verse is difficult but many can recall at least one word; and that's all that's needed. It provides one of the best, if not the best method, by which to arrange and retrieve biblical information in a systematic and orderly fashion. With an exhaustive concordance you can classify relevant biblical data without having to remember the Bible verbatim. With an exhaustive concordance, the Layman's Parallel Bible, a thin red ink pen for marking-up the latter, and a small booklet of biblical maps such as Westminster's Historical Maps of Bible Lands, one is ready to read, analyze, compare, and arrange the entire Book in a meaningful manner. The Editor of BE found this method to be highly effective. Hopefully others will obtain similar results.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #113 from RM of Annapolis, Maryland (Part a)

Dear Dennis.... The two errors made by Jesus in Mark 2:25-26 (Jesus calls the high priest Abiathar--Ed.) vs. 1 Sam. 21:1-6 (The high priest is actually Ahimelech--Ed.) and Matt. 23:35 (Jesus calls Zacharias the son of Barachias--Ed.) vs. 2 Chron. 24:20-21 (Zacharias is actually the son of Jehoida--Ed.) are not powerful arguments against scriptural infallibility as expressed by MN in Letter #112, Issue 33 but rather support the Bible's accuracy. After all, if Jesus walked this earth as a man, he would also error as a man. However, if Jesus is sinless, then it must be a sin to error.

Editor's Response to Letter #113 (Part a)

Dear RM. Three aspects of your analysis merit comment. First, your opening statement is a virtual admission that Jesus erred. Remember, Jesus is both God and man simultaneously, the God/man, and unlike all other men is perfect. How can a perfect being be mistaken as to facts? How do you know what he says is true if you once admit some of his comments are false? It's the same problem you have with the Bible itself. How do you know what's true if you admit certain parts are false? On that point the fundamentalists are correct. If you once admit that a comment by Jesus or the Bible is fallacious, the entire structure is brought into question. That's why firm believers defend every jot and tittle with such tenacity. The founder of Methodism, John Wesley, was correct when he said, "If there be any mistakes in the Bible, there may as well be a thousand. If there be one falsehood in the Book it did not come from the God of truth." Second, you said that "the two errors made by Jesus...support the Bible's accuracy." How's that again! You'll have to talk long and hard to explain that one, RM. The Book has two significant errors which you don't deny. And that proves its accuracy? Third, what has sinlessness to do with the issue? We are discussing the much broader topic of perfection. Was Jesus perfect? Is the Bible inerrant? You ask, "after all, if Jesus walked this earth as a man, he would also err as a man." According to theology Jesus was a perfect being. So how could he have erred? You state that "if Jesus is sinless then it must not be a sin to err" which is another way of saying that Jesus does not sin but Jesus erred; therefore, his erring does not mean he is sinning. Yes, but it would mean he was imperfect and that's what we are discussing. Surely you aren't saying sinlessness is the same as perfection in all areas, many of which have nothing to do with morality? An interesting corollary to this whole issue is how Jesus can be perfect in light of Matt. 19:17 ("And he, Jesus, said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God"),

John 14:28 ("...for my Father is greater than I"), and Luke 13:32 ("...and the third day I shall be perfected") which clearly show Jesus viewed himself as less than perfect.

Letter #113 Concludes (Part b)

BE issue #33, page 2, just before (18), states, "It (the name Christian) is never used in the New Testament as a description of themselves by the believers in Jesus." Surely the writer of Acts was a believer, and Acts 11:26 states, "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." Acts 27:28 says, "Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Paul then says that he wished everyone was of such as he. In 1 Peter 4:11-16, the text is about Jesus Christ. In verse 16, it states that god is glorified by the suffering of Christians. Surely the writer is a believer in Jesus.

Editor's Response to Letter #113 (Part b)

With all due respect, RM, I don't think you closely read what I said, namely, "Not one of the gospels applies the name Christian to the followers of Jesus. It is never used in the New Testament as a description of themselves by the believers in Jesus." The key phrase has been underlined. Apparently you consulted a concordance and looked up every biblical verse containing the words "Christian" and "Christians." We both know the KJV has only three such verses, none of which are in the gospels: Acts 11:26, 1 Peter 4:11-16, and Acts 26:28, which you incorrectly listed as Acts 27:28. I don't think you closely read the verses either, RM. Acts 11:26 says, "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." "Were called!" Called by others. Where does it say they called themselves Christians? Acts 26:28 says, "Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Agrippa wasn't a follower or believer in Jesus. Moreover, "themselves" is plural while Agrippa is one person. And lastly, 1 Peter 3:16 says, "yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed. Where in this verse do the followers of Jesus refer to themselves as Christians? Even if a man were suffering as a Christian, that does not necessarily mean he is referring to himself as a Christian. It could very easily be a title or, even, epithet applied by others. If we assume this is a title applied by the author of 1 Peter and grant your assumption that he was a believer in Jesus, the fact remains that he was only one man.

Letter #114 from John Sikos, P.O. Box 443, Romeo, Michigan 48065-0443

Dear Dennis.... I am currently arguing with a baptist preacher from Romeo and I am saying that the Bible claims Saturday is the true and correct Sabbath. You seem to agree with me on page 2 of Issue #18. This baptist brings up Rom. 14:5 ("One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," for his side (as I expected). If you could help me, I'd appreciate it!

Dear John. That's one of their favorite verses, although it flies in the face of a mountain of evidence to the contrary. There is nothing in scripture to justify changing the sabbath from Saturday to Sunday. The Bible only refers to Sunday, the first day of the week, 8 times and none of these have anything to do with making Sunday the sabbath. By allowing anyone to determine for himself when the sabbath should be honored, Paul, in effect, rewrote part of the OT which clearly and repeatedly says Saturday is the sabbath. If your baptist friend is going to rely on

Rom. 14:5, then you might ask him if an individual can pick any day of the week as his sabbath. If he says he can then you might ask how this is honoring the sabbath. All that individual is honoring is a sabbath or, to be more precise, a day which he chooses to call the sabbath. You might also look up the word "sabbath" in your concordance and note every verse showing Saturday, the 7th day, and not Sunday, the first day, is the sabbath. Show them to him and if he remains unconvinced, use my itemized refutation of the main "Sunday verses" on page 2 of the 18th issue. If he is still unpersuaded, then wait for my discussion of Paul, the Deceptive Disciple in some future issues and a far more extensive listing of the reasons Sunday can't be the sabbath. In the meantime you might consult some Seventh-Day Adventist literature. Probably no organization has studied this issue more closely than the Seventh-Day Adventist Church and the Adventists have issued some excellent free pamphlets on the topic. You could read them while waiting. I wouldn't recommend much else of theirs, however.

Letter #115 from MR of Richmond, Virginia

Dear Dennis. My daughter...teaches Sunday School where there are several millionaires sitting with us in class. She has lost her faith in this "religion of any kind" since reading my copies of BE, but still teaches once a month. She does a good job of it too as she points out things here and there from your paper. I am saving all my BE papers to keep for all my friends and relatives to read as I keep them on the table in full view. I take them with me at times. I agree with you 100% and just wish I could have read this stuff fifty years ago. Keep up the good work. I'm doing what I can to spread this truth. I was so glad to hear you on our WRVA talk show but I lost faith in religion at least a year before I heard you.... A lot of European countries have found out that religion is a fake and an anesthesia for the masses. People in power can control the religious groups. Keep them poor.

Editor's Response to Letter #115

Dear MR. Letters such as yours warm the cockles of my heart. Knowing I'm reaching people is a great motivator. Sometimes one gets weary climbing a mountain and your comments provide a welcome boost. If the class continues, I hope your daughter remains the teacher. It's better she do it than someone less enlightened.

Letter #116 form PA of Santa Rosa, California

Dear Dennis. I have been doing some study on the 10 commandments and the teachings of Jesus. Even though he says man is to keep the commandments, he himself seems to have violated most of them and taught others to do as well. According to Matt. 5:19 Jesus, in the Sermon on the Mount, says anyone teaching against or breaking the commandments is bad; yet, Jesus did not follow his own advice. #1 (Ex. 20:3)--Thou shalt have no gods before me. Jesus put himself before god when he said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me" (John 14:6). See also John 6:44 where "no man can come to Jesus except the Father draw him"). #4 (Ex. 20:8)--Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy. Jesus and his disciples plucked and ate corn on the sabbath and Jesus said, "The sabbath was made for men and not men for the sabbath" (Mark 2:23-28). #5 (Ex. 20:12)--Honor your father and mother. Jesus told others to honor their father and mother to gain eternal life (Mark 10:17-22) and yet to be a disciple of Jesus a person must violate this commandment according to Luke 14:26. #7 (Ex. 20:14)--Thou shalt not commit adultery. In the OT anyone guilty of adultery was condemned to death and when a woman taken in adultery was brought to Jesus he let her go without condemning her even though she did not repent and ask forgiveness (John 8:3-11). #8 (Ex. 20:15)--Thou shalt not steal. Jesus taught a parable about a man who found a treasure in someone else's field and rather than tell the owner about it, he hid it and bought the field (Matt. 13:44). This seems like stealing to me. #9 (Ex. 20:16)--Thou shalt not bear false witness (lie). In John 7:8-10 Jesus said he wasn't going to the feast and then as soon as the others left, he went to the feast in secret. #10 (Ex. 20:17)--Thou shalt not covet. Jesus taught a parable about a merchant who saw a pearl and coveted it so much that he sold all he had and bought it (Matt. 13:45-46)l. This is a quick history of a few violations....

COMMENTARY

Prophecy (Part One of a Four Part Series)--The Commentaries in Issues 3 and 10 discussed a topic near and dear to the heart of most believers in the Bible, namely, prophecy. Biblicists rely heavily upon the alleged perspicacity contained therein to demonstrate the Book's divine origin and reliability, while discounting evidence to the contrary. In light of the immense importance many attach to this subject, a concluding in-depth analysis is warranted. For our purposes, biblical prophecies can be grouped into three broad categories: (1) those which were incorrectly fulfilled, i.e., fulfilled in a manner different from that predicted; (2) those which have never occurred (a group too large to discuss in toto), and (3) NT references to non-existent OT prophecies. A critique of all three should begin with the third category as it is the smallest and most easily covered: (1) "As it is written in Isaiah the prophet, 'Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, who shall prepare thy way' (Mark 1:2 RSV)." There is no such prophecy in Isaiah. (2) "And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, 'He shall be called a Nazarene (Matt. 2:23)." As was noted on page 3 of the 3rd Issue, "He shall be called a Nazarene does not exist in the OT. There is no such prophecy." Judges 13:5 ("For, lo, thou shalt conceive and bear a son; and no razor shall come on his head: for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb") is not applicable because: (a) A Nazarite was not identical to an inhabitant of Nazareth; (b) Acts 24:5 ("...a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes") shows that a Nazarene was actually a member of a sect, not a resident of Nazareth; (c) and the man referred to was Samson, not Jesus. Moreover, Jesus was never called a Nazarene. (3) "then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value; And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me (Matt. 27:9-10)." There is no such statement in the Book of Jeremiah. Jeremiah 32:8-9 ("...Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord. And I bought the field of Hanameel my uncle's son, that was in Anatoth, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver") doesn't apply because: (a) Matthew says 30 pieces of silver were involved while Jeremiah says 17 shekels of silver; (b) Jer. 32:9 says Jeremiah alone bought the field, while Matthew says "they" bought the field, and (c) Matthew is discussing blood money that was not approved by God or allowed in the treasury (Matt. 27:5-8), while that in Jeremiah was approved by God (Jer. 32:8, 14-15).

The second major category is composed of those prophecies which were incorrectly fulfilled: (1) "And he (God--Ed.) said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them 400 years" (Gen. 15:13) and "God spake on this wise, That his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil 400 years" (Acts 7:6) versus "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was 430 years" (Ex. 12:40). According to prophecy the Israelites were to be in bondage for 400 years, not 430. (2) "And Abram fell on his face: and God talked with him saying,....And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession...." (Gen. 17:3, 8) and "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Gen. 13:15) and (Ex. 32:13) versus "And he (God--Ed.) gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his (Abraham's--Ed.) foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to his for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child" (Acts 7:5) and "These (Abraham's descendants--Ed.) all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off...." (Heb. 11:13). Neither Abraham nor his descendants ever received the land that was promised. The prophecy failed. (3) "Behold therefore, I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered into thy graves in peace" (2 Kings 22:20). The prophetess, Huldah, predicted that Josiah would die in peace. Yet, 2 Kings 23:29-30 ("In his days Paraoah-nechoh king of Egypt went up against the king of Assyria to the river Euphrates; and King Josiah went against him; and he slew him at Megiddo, when he had seen him. And his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem and buried him....And the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead") shows this didn't occur. (4) "All the men who set their faces to go to Egypt to live there shall die by the sword, by famine, and by pestilence; they shall have no remnant or survivor to live in Egypt. In Alexandria they established a cultural center in the 1st century A.D. (5) "...thou (the city of Tyre--Ed.) shalt be built no more...." (Ezek. 26:14) and "For thus saith the Lord God; When I shall make thee (Tyre--Ed.) a desolate city like the cities that are not inhabited; when I shall bring up the deep upon thee and great waters shall cover thee;....and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth,...that thou be not inhabited;....I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again,...." (Ezek. 26:19-21) and "The merchants among the people shall hiss at thee (Tyre--Ed.), thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more" (Ezek. 27:36) and (Ezek. 28:19). In other words, Tyre will be destroyed and never rebuilt. But, as the following verses show, Tyre existed throughout NT times and still exists today. "And from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon,...." (Mark 7:24) and "And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee,...." (Mark 7:31) and "Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon..." (Acts 12:20) and (Acts 21:3, 7, Matt. 15:21, 3:8). (6) "And of Naphtali he said, O Naphtali, satisfied with favour, and full with the blessing of the Lord; possess thou the west and the south" (Deut. 33:23). Naphtali received a district in the north of Palestine but none in the south or west. (7) "...and thou (Abraham--Ed.) shalt be a father of many nations" (Gen. 17:4). Only 4 nations appear to have descended from Abraham: the Jews, Ishmaelites, Midianites, and Edomites. (8) "And Joshua burnt Ai, and made it an heap for ever, even a desolation unto this day" (Joshua 8:28). People live at Ai now and continued to live there after the prophecy. As Nehemiah said, "The men of Bethel and Ai, an one hundred and twenty three" (Neh. 7:32). (9) "Thus saith the Lord, Write ye this man (Coniah--Ed.) childless, a man that shall not prosper in his day: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David and ruling any more in Judah" (Jer. 22:20) versus "And Josias begat Jechonias (Coniah--Ed.)" (Matt. 1:11 in the genealogy of Jesus) and "He (Jesus--Ed.) shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David:..." (Luke 1:32). According to the prophecy in Jer. 22:30 Coniah would have no descendants sitting upon the throne of David and ruling in Judah. Jesus was a descendant of Coniah according to Matt. 1:11 and will eventually sit upon the throne of David according to Luke 1:32. The moment Jesus sits upon the throne of David, the prophecy in Jer. 22:30 will become false. (10) "Therefore wild beasts shall dwell with hyenas in Babylon, and ostriches shall dwell in her: she shall be peopled no more for ever, nor inhabited for all generations. As when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and their neighbor cities, says the Lord, so no man shall dwell there, and no son of man shall sojourn in her" (Jer. 50:39-40) and "Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. And the voice of harpers, and musicians...shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman...shall be found any more in thee..." (Rev. 18:21-22). The destruction of Babylon was prophesied in both the OT and the NT. Yet, at no time has Babylon been uninhabited. People lived there during NT times, (Matt. 1:11, 12, 17, Acts 7:43, 1 Peter 5:13) and continue to do so today. Moreover, hyenas and ostriches have never been the dominant inhabitants of Babylon. (11) "For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel;...." (Jer. 33:17) and "...I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations" (Psalm 89:3-4) and "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever and his throne as the sun before me. I shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven" (Psalm 89:35-37, 1 Chron. 17:12, 14) and (2 Sam. 7:13, 16). God said there would always be a Davidic king. Yet, the Davidic line ended with Zedekiah; there was no Jewish (Davidic) king for 450 years. Not until the Hasmoneans (Maccabeans) established a new dynasty with their King Aristobulus, was the Davidic line restored. Since the end of the Hasmonean dynasty there has never been a king of the Jews. No descendant of David is now ruling in the Middle East.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #117 from VT of Huron, California

(Part 2 in last month's Commentary quoted Acts 1:12 ("Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey") and then, said, "The inaccuracy of this comment lies in the fact that Olivet, the mount of Olives was just outside the wall of Jerusalem near the Temple, hardly a day's journey"--Ed.). Greetings; I'm not going to comment on all the points under Biblical Geography. In my small library there are some two or three books that cover most all the subject matter in Issue No. 34. For a quickie I'll comment on (2) Acts 1:12. Any good COMMENTARY will explain "A Sabbath Day's Journey...." It was less than one mile. Dr. Howard Hanke in his book Bible Survey states it was some 2,000 cubits or about 2/3 of a mile!... The Sabbath Day law was in the rabbinical ordinance. It just possibly had its origin in the MOSAIC PERIOD, when the Israelites were not to leave camp to gather manna on the sabbath. Anyone could travel from Jerusalem to the mount called Olivet without breaking this ordinance.... You see there is a very logical answer to the statement regarding the SABBATH DAY'S JOURNEY...Perhaps you need to let your readers know of your error at this point. Most all of your statements can be answered by just about anyone who would take the time and the effort to check with most any good commentary....I will concede that when a person is really not interested in TRUTH so much as they are of CONTROVERSY, they will not listen or take time to understand. (At this point VT proceeded to denounce secular humanism--Ed.).

Editor's Response to Letter #117

Greethings VT. If your're correct, then, there aren't very many good Commentaries around because I checked eleven of the most prominent and only 4 even discussed the problem. Wycliffe, Wesleyan, and Jamiseson-Fausset said a Sabbath Day's Journey is 2,000 cubits or 3,000 feet while Clarke said it's 7 1/2 furlongs. Yet, none of the four cited a Jewish source to substantiate their position. Clarke quoted Book 20, Capter 8, Sec. 6 in the Jewish Antiquities of Josephus to the effect that the Mount of Olives "lay over against the city and at the distance of five furlongs" which proves nothing. You stated the "Sabbath Day law was in the rabbinical ordinance." Could you provide chapter and verse. I consulted the Socino Edition of the Talmud and couldn't find any rabbinic ordinance or rule clearly stating a Sabbath Day's Journey is 2,000 cubits. Jewish sommentators in the Erubin and Pesahim of the Talmud refer to a tradition of 2,000 cubits, but can you relate an actual ordinance to that effect? I know of none, but I could have overlooked it. If you can provide an ordinance from the Mishnah, as opposed to opinions and beliefs from the Gemara (a Jewish commentary), I'd withdraw section 2 from last month's Commentary. Your evidence, however, must come from a Jewish source. From experience I've concluded that Christian commentaries are primarily rationalizations permeated with dishonest scholarship. Keep in mind that we are relying on extra-biblical information to determine the length of a Sabbath Day's Journey. The latter is mentioned only once in the entire Bible and nowhere is a definition given. Since the problem under discussion is found in the Book of Acts, Christians, not Jews, are obligated to provide an explanation. And in order to resolve dilemmas of this nature they have often relied upon the time-honored technique of referring to some extra-biblical writing they claim exists to prove their point. Can you cite one rabbinic ordinance that specifically states a Sabbath Day's Journey is 2,000 cubits long? Self-serving apologetic commentaries aren't sufficient, if, indeed, they are anything. The source must be original, not second hand or hearsay. Incidentally, VT, truth has a much higher priority at BE than controversy. Indeed, it's regretable the latter is mandatory. Unfortunately, winning battles requires firing bullets, And while we are on the topic of truth, would you please not insert three dots (...) randomly throughout your letters since reprinting gives readers the impression parts of your material are being omitted when there is nothing there. I'd also like to hear from those two or three books in your library.

Letter #118 from Ken Bonnell of Los Angeles, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Regarding "Biblical Geography" you err in item 2. "A Sabbath Day's Journey" is not the distance a person can go in one day, but that walk which is permitted on the sabbath without violation of the commandment to rest on that day. It is quite short, almost 1,000 yards. (Ref. Webster's "Unabridged" Dictionary)

Editor's Response to Letter #118 (Part a)

Dear Ken. Webster probably got his information from Christian commentaries. In any event, you might note my prior response to VT.

Letter #118 Continues (Part b)

(Part 4 in last month's Commentary quoted Mark 7:31 RSV ("Then he returned from the region of Tyre, and went through Sidon to the Sea of Galilee, through the region of the Decapolis") and said "...its hard to imagine someone going from Tyre to the Sea of Galilee by passing through Sidon, much less the region of the Decapolis.... This assertion was made when there were no coasts of Decapolis,...."--Ed.). The RSV translators screwed up about Jesus' journey into pagan territory.... Your criticism of the word "coasts" refers, of course, to the KJV, and you're right there. In the trip to Lebanon, Jesus is following the example of Elijah (1 Kings 17), and his "Syrophoenician" woman is a "Zarephathian."

Editor's Response to Letter #118 (Part b)

Although we disagree on one point Ken you are to be thanked for noticing a discrepancy. In regard to the former, how was the journey of Jesus a repetition of that of Elijah in 1 Kings 17?

Elijah went from Gilead to the brook Cherith to Zarephath while Jesus went from Tyre to Sidon to the Sea of Galilee. They not only went in opposite directions but weren't even in the same area except for Elijah's trip to Zarephath. The discrepancy you noticed lies in the fact that I should have quoted the KJV rather than the RSV because the word "coasts" only appears in the former. My original criticism was that there were no coasts of Decapolis. Incidentally, you mentioned 1 Kings 17 which has a geographical error that could have been discussed in last month's Commentary. Verse 3 in the RSV says "Depart from here and turn eastward, and hide yourself by the brook Cherith, that is east of the Jordan." The Standard Bible Atlas (1959) of the Standard Publishing Company and Boardman's Atlas clearly show the brook Cherith is west of the Jordan just north of the Dead Sea.

Letter #118 Continues (Part c)

(Part 8 in last month's Commentary quoted Gen. 2:10-14 to the effect that a Middle East river divides into the four rivers mentioned--Ed.). Four rivers do have their sources close to each other in the Anatolian highlands of Turkey: The Euphrates; the Tigris--the biblical Hiddekel; the Kizil, probably the biblical Pison, which empties into the Black Sea on the shore of Colchis where Jason found the Golden Fleece; the Arak river borders the Caucasus which is probably the "land of Kush" which the translators have confused with Ethiopia here (Gen. 2:13). The Arak was Gihon.

Editor's Response to Letter #118 (Part c)

To say that I am dismayed at your analysis, Ken, is an understatement. The degree to which it deviates from what I have come to expect from your letters is considerable. Apparently you have accepted some kind of apologetic literature and the concomitant errors. First, Gen. 2:10-14 says a river went out of Eden and divided into four rivers which has nothing to do with four rivers having their sources close to each other. Some of the rivers you mention have their source in the same general region, but what has that to do with emerging from the same river? Second, you state one was "the Kizil, probably the biblical Pison, which empties into the Black Sea on the shore of Colchis where Jason found the Golden Fleece." Upon what basis do you equate the two? Not only does "probably" imply you are unsure, but the text states the Pison river encompasses Havilah, an area in present-day Saudi Arabia and far from the Anatolian Highlands. What river has ever flowed through Saudi Arabia and emptied into the Black Sea? Moreover, the Kizil river doesn't empty into the Black Sea in or near Colchis but much farther east. Jason and the Golden Fleece? Now we are really into mythology. Third, how could you possibly conclude "the Caucasus was probably the land of Kush which the translators have confused with Ethiopia? Every map I've ever seen has shown Kush to be the ancient name of Ethiopia. Visualizing any connection with the Caucasus is a real challenge, since they are well over a thousand miles apart. By using the word "probably" you must admit you're speculating. If translators mistakingly called Ethiopia, rather than the Caucasus, the "land of Kush," then there are literally hundreds of confused scholars out there, because the KJ, the RS, the Modern Language, and many other versions equate Ethiopia with Kush, as do scores of cartographers.

Letter #118 Concludes (Part d)

Now back to Matt. 28:1. It's KJV contains an internal contradiction. Can your readers find it!

Editor's Response to Letter #118 (Part d)

I may be wrong, Ken, but let me guess. Matt. 28:1 (KJV) says, "In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week,...." The sabbath, like all Jewish days, runs from sundown to sundown. How, then, could it begin to dawn, how could morning begin at the end of the sabbath? You can tell me if I've erred; my feelings have adjusted over time.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #119 from Mark Potts, 8510-A, East 66th Place S., Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

(Part a) Dear Dennis. I got the Oct. issue of BE recently and I want to discuss a few technical points with you....(After mentioning a possible error associated with a Sabbath Day's Journey which has already been covered, Mark continues--Ed.). Secondly, I'd like to see a fuller development of your objection to Rom. 1 and 2 as an answer to the question of what happens to people who never hear about Jesus, which I call the Pagan Problem. I've read this difficult passage very carefully in several versions, and nowhere does Paul explicitly say that ignorant Pagans get "saved" by believing in God and obeying morals. Rather, Paul asserts that pagans are "without excuse" (1:20) regarding knowledge of God, and that the (Jewish) law is "written in their hearts" (2:15). So the pagans apparently know about God and morality, but where does it say they can enter simply by being nice? Paul's explanation is like saying you know you have a certain disease (sin), but don't know that a cure (salvation) exists. Rom. 2:6-10 might be stretched to mean that pagans who unwittingly lead good lives get saved, but how could a baby, a paralytic, or a quadruple amputee perform good works under unevangelized conditions?

Editor's Response to Letter #119 (Part a)

You have covered the topic quite well, Mark, and focused upon the key phrase (without excuse." I would make only one modification. Apologists seem to be saying Paul is contending you have a disease (sin) and have been provided with a cure you can choose to employ. But they neglect to mention it isn't Jesus. As I read Rem. 1:18-20 Paul is only saying God and his characteristics can be learned from nature and things around us so that those who claim not to know God or right from wrong are "without excuse." I doesn't say that is sufficient. Apparently you agree.

Letter #119 Continues (Part b)

Thirdly, I have a minor problem to pass along. In Rom. 14:14 Paul with his usual bombast declares, "I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself: but to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean." Here Paul not only contradicts numerous assertions about uncleanness in the OT, but also conflicts with his other assertion in Eph. 5:5 that "no...unclean person...hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." Nothing is inherently unclean, Paul says, yet he doesn't hesitate to label other people unclean.

Editor's Response to Letter #119 (Part b)

You might encounter some trouble with this one, Mark. Rom. 14:14 says nothing is unclean of itself. Apologists could allege that of itself mean inherently; that doesn't mean people can't become unclean later. You have to anticipate their response to avoid being embarrassed.

Letter #119 Concludes (Part c)

A friend of mine says Christians have "the peace that preventeth all understanding." Perhaps you could devote an issue of BE to finding the right buttons to push when you are debating with an obtuse biblicist. It's not enough to know the right questions to ask and the right verses to quote; you need to know effective techniques for face-to-face deprogramming.

Editor's Response to Letter #119 (Part c)

We couldn't agree more, Mark. People are quite different and what alters some has little effect on others. That's why I suggested several issues ago that a national organization of knowledgeable biblical critics be created to, among other things, meet periodically and compare notes on the most effective techniques by which to deprogram the opposition.

Letter #120 from JJM of Center Line, Michigan

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Keep up the good work with BE. I find the letter sections particularly instructive--each of your answers is a miniature lesson in argumentation....

Letter #121 from Jack Trimpey of LOTUS PRESS, Box 800, Lotus, California 95651 Dear Dennis. Your sample copy of BIBLICAL ERRANCY was most interesting and I will subscribe for a year. Your approach to the deplorable problem of religiosity is articulate and scholarly, but at the same time sensitive to the feelings of compulsively religious persons. Your publication is an excellent one for people who are attempting to grow by overcoming religious faith, and you place within reach easy-to-understand information for those who want to grow. Your stimulation of the readers' mirth response is as deft as a physician striking for the patella knee reflex. No response--big problem. The letters you print, especially the testimonials from ex-christians, are priceless, and I hope to see more of them. We have all heard countless insipid tales from saved ones telling about how splendid it is to wield supernatural power in their daily lives; so it is truly exciting to read about someone who has miraculously overcome the mental disorder of religious faith, such as DB of Ontario, California. I suggest that you open direct communication between your readers. I, for example, would be delighted to exchange some letters with DB of Ontario, California. Could you start a bulletin board for correspondence, or perhaps forward letters?

Editor's Response to Letter #121

Dear Jack. Your letter is one the most gracious and insightful ever received by BE. We do try to be sensitive to the feelings of even the most ardent apologists which accounts for the noticeable absence of demeaning humor and derogatory comments. With respect to DB's testimonial, he might contact you himself after reading this issue. As far as opening up a bulletin board or forwarding letters is concerned, I can assure you that these are only a few of the projects we've been considering. We'd like to: duplicate and distribute tape recordings of radio appearances, create a complete index of every subject discussed in BE, videotape speeches and forward copies to public access channels, create a bibliography of writings recommended as supplemental readings to BE with a short synopsis of each, give all the bureaucratic work that goes with increased subscriptions to others so more time can be devoted to research, compile a list of promising talk-show hosts and stations throughout the Nation, and obtain sufficient funds to buy a computer, a printer, and videotape equipment for producing BE and my own programs. Those are only some of the activities we'd like to initiate, but time and money are needed. Rest assured, Jack, we have big plans at BE.

Issue #36 Editor: Dennis McKinsey

A national periodical focusing on Biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists

Prophecy (Part Two of a Four Part Series)--Last month's Commentary began listing those prophecies which were fulfilled in a manner different from that predicted and this month's Commentary will continue that enumeration: (12) "And Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever; there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it" (Jer. 49:33). People never stopped living in Hazor and continue to do so. (13) "Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom" (Matt. 6:28) and "he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the Kingdom of God come with power" (Mark 9:1, Luke 9:27). These prophecies show Christ's coming was to occur during the life of then existing persons. Yet, when did the Kingdom of God come with power? Second Peter 3:8 ("But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day") can't be invoked to escape from the problem because Jesus repeatedly stated that his contemporaries would see his return. All of them have long since passed away and people still await the Kingdom of God. (14) "But Jesus held his peace. And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said: nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven" (Matt. 26:63-64, Mark 14:61-62). The high priest never saw the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven. (15) God told Isaiah to promise Ahaz that Rezin and Pekah would not harm him. "And in the days of Ahaz the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, Rezin the king of Syria and Pekah the son the Remaliah the king of Israel came up to Jerusalem to wage war against it, but they could not conquer it...and the Lord said to Isaiah, "Go forth to meet Ahaz,...and say to him, `Take heed, be quiet, do not fear, and do not let your heart be faint because of these two smoldering stumps of firebrands, at the fierce anger of Rezin and Syria and the son of Remaliah. Because Syria, with Ephraim and the son of Remaliah, has devised evil against you, saying, Let us go up against Judah and terrify it, and let us conquer it for ourselves,...thus says the Lord God; It shall not stand, and it shall not come to pass" (Isa. 7:1-7). Yet, Ahaz and his forces were slaughtered by Rezin and Pekah. "Wherefore the Lord his God delivered him (Ahaz--Ed.) into the hand of the king of Syria; and they smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought them to Damascus. And he was also delivered into the hand of the King of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter. For Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah an hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all valiant men;...." (2 Chron. 28:5-6). God's promise (the prophecy) failed. (16) According to Ezekiel, Tyre will fall to Nebuchadnezzar and be destroyed by him. He will plunder Tyre's riches. "For thus saith the Lord God; Behold I will bring upon Tyre Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, a king of kings.... He shall slay with the sword thy daughters in the field:...and with his axes he shall break down thy towers...he shall slay thy people by the sword, and thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground. And they shall make a spoil of thy riches...." (Ezek 26:7-12) and "All they that know thee (the king of Tyre--Ed.) among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more" (Ezek. 28:19). Yet, Nebuchadnezzar did not take Tyre or make a spoil of its riches. His 13 year siege failed. He took the outworks but the town was on an island and remained impregnable. "Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon made his army labor hard against

Tyre; every head was made bald and every shoulder was rubbed bare; yet neither he nor his army got anything from Tyre to pay for the labor that he had performed against it. Therefore thus says the Lord God: Behold, I will give the land of Egypt to Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall carry of its wealth and despoil it and plunder it; and it shall be the wages for his army. I have given him the land of Egypt as his recompense for which he labored...." (Ezek. 29:18-20 RSV). Tyre was not conquered by Nebuchadrezzar, so God gave him Egypt as compensation. No historian either Greek or Phoenician mentions Tyre being taken, plundered, and destroyed by Nebuchadrezzar. Alexander the Great actually conquered Egypt 240 years later. (17) "And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt, and they shall take away her multitude, and her foundations shall be broken down. Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia, and all the mingled people,...shall fall with them by the sword.... And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be destroyed.... Thus saith the Lord God; I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar King of Babylon. He and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, will be brought to destroy the land; and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain. And I will make the rivers dry,...and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt: and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt....And I will set fire in Egypt" (Ezek. 30:4-16) and "thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will break his arms,... And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries. And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand: but I will break the Pharaoh's arms,... I shall put by sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt" (Ezek. 30:22-26). (a) The multitudes of Egypt have never been taken away or dispersed among other countries. (b) Ethiopia, Libya, and Lydia never fell along with Egypt. They never fell to a common destroyer. (c) A large conflagration never occurred in Egypt. (d) Nebuchadrezzar never destroyed the land of Egypt. (e) A prince continued to rule in Egypt long after Nebuchadrezzar. (f) The rivers of Egypt were never made dry and (g) None of the evils which Ezekiel said Nebuchadrezzar would bring upon Egypt ever occurred. (18) "It (Egypt--Ed.) shall be the basest of the kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations: for I will diminish them, that they shall no more rule over the nations" (Ezek. 29:15). Yet, in the 1820's Egypt took over and ruled the Sudan. (19) "And Babylon,...shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there;...and satyrs shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces: and their time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged" (Isa. 13:19-22) and "...but thou (Babylon) shall be desolate for ever, saith the Lord....to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant" (Jer. 51:26, 29) and (Jer. 51:37, 43, Isa. 13:20). (a) There has never been any time since Isaiah that Babylon was uninhabited or desolate. (b) Arabians still visit there. (c) Shepherds still make their fold there. (d) Babylon has never been known for its dancing satyrs and dragons in the palaces. Since satyrs are mythological creatures, the prophecy could never have been fulfilled anyway. (e) Apparently Babylon's days have been prolonged since it still exists, and has continued to do so for over 2,000 years. (20) "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled" (Matt. 5:17-19). Yet, one jot and one tittle did pass from the law before all was fulfilled. Indeed, Paul all but abolished any reliance upon the Old Law and Jesus ignored many maxims. (21) "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled" (Matt. 24:34). Jesus made this statement after listing a wide assortment of events that were to occur. Yet, the Son of man has not come like lightning shining from the east to the west, and all the tribes of the earth have not seen him coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Nor has he sent his angels with sounds of a trumpet gathering the elect from all parts of the world. The sun has not become darkened; the moon has not failed to give its light, and the stars have not fallen from heaven. Nearly 2,000 years have passed and this prophecy has never occurred, although Jesus strongly stated it would materialize in the lifetime of his generation. (22) "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live" (John 5:25). The hour is coming and now is. "And now is" shows the dead were to hear Jesus' voice and become alive at that time. (23) "The stranger that is within thee (Jews--Ed.) shall get up above thee very high; and thou shalt come down very low. He shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him: he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail" (Deut. 28:43-44). According to this prophecy Jews would be borrowers and not lenders. If Jews had always been in debt instead of being great money-lenders, Christians would hale this as a great prophecy instead of the failure it is.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #122 from BW of Federal Way, Washington

Dear Mr. McKinsey. You are absolutely right. The Bible can't be explained by reason! I can't figure out a lot of things that are in the Bible. Some things can be proven historically, etc. but where is the proof that all the spiritual aspects are true? I just don't understand. However, I also don't understand a lot of Einstein's theories, but I believe them because they seem to work. I also believe the Bible because when I try its principles they seem to work quite nicely. Maybe I'm looking through rose colored glasses but I happen to like the idea of a Hero who saved me from who knows what. I also like the idea of living forever in a place called heaven. It just all seems like a lot of fun to me and I know I'm enjoying having a relationship with Jesus. I know you probably think I'm silly, ignorant, not willing to face the facts, and on and on. I just have one question for you. If it's wrong what will happen to me? I will live a happy and satisfied life and take my chances of dying like a dog (no afterlife). I guess I really have two questions for you because here's the second one. If you are wrong what will happen to you?

Dear BW. At least on one point you are to be commended. You didn't send us an apologetic response teeming with rationalizations, prevarications, and obfuscations seeking to prove black is white. You cut through the usual rhetoric and went straight to the heart of the matter. Tossing reason aside, you candidly admit that you believe the Bible because you "like the idea of a Hero who saved me from who knows what" and "the idea of living forever in a place called heaven." Unfortunately, BW, truthfulness is of far less importance to you than happiness and contentment. But if you are correct and accuracy and reliability are of no real importance, then people might just as well believe anything that creates good feelings. That this would leave millions vulnerable to every snake-oil salesman imaginable goes without saying. I don't know if you have children, BW, but, if so, is that what you want for them. Several years ago the slogan, "If it feels good do it" was making the rounds and biblicists were offended by the implicit immorality contained therein. Now you're telling us "If it feels good, believe it. Don't worry about the absence of reason or evidence." Secondly, you say you believe the Bible "because when I try its principles they seem to work quite nicely." I'm not sure what principles you're referring to. The powers which are supposed to accrue to believers and those who pray often fail to materialize, while its moral teachings can be found in many religious books. I don't blame you for qualifying your remark by saying they "seem to work." Only someone blind to reality would say they are quite reliable. Thirdly, if your comment that "I know I'm enjoying having a relationship with Jesus" is sufficient justification for belief, then others could justify their relationship with drugs, alcohol, cults, and the occult because they, too, are enjoyable to many. Goodness, healthfulness, and truthfulness are not substantiated by pleasure. Fourthly, your closing synopsis of Pascal's Wager is considerably weaker than you realize. Understandably, its influence is strongest on those who have lived in a Christian dominated society. You might want to read the Commentary on Pascal's Wager in Issue #22. Essentially, all you are saying is that wisdom lies in believing and not taking chances. But it's not that simple. Believe what? Do you know how many different religious beliefs there are? Following your logic, to really be safe one would have to accept them all, which is impossible since many are mutually exclusive. Why should we assume that only Christian teachings could be valid? Fifthly, some Christian beliefs will bring damnation to their adherents according to other religions. Muslims, for example, hold that belief in the Trinity is a sure path to perdition. How can you be sure they are wrong? Aren't you gambling? You ask, "If I'm wrong what will happen to me?" According to many others you are wrong and plenty is going to happen to you. In fact, even within Christianity scores of sects and denominations have long since written off the others. Without even knowing the Christian group or tenets to which you adhere, I can assure you that more than one denomination has already written you off as hopelessly lost. How do you know they are wrong? And you accused me of gambling! Sixthly, the Bible attributes acts to God that can only be described as appalling, including killing, deceiving, causing adultery, ordering killings, playing favorites, practicing injustice, punishing many for the acts of one, and ordering cannibalism. (A much more extensive list is on page 5 of the third issue). What would be your feelings toward a book describing you in such a manner, BW? If God hasn't done anything to you so far, could it be he is just letting you hang yourself and on the Judgment Day in which you believe you're going to discover just how angry he has been from the beginning? Remember, you, not I, champion these characterizations. And lastly, you said, "I will live a happy and satisfied life and take my chances of dying like a dog (no afterlife)." You have even chosen to ignore the teachings of your own book which says your fate is comparable to that of a dog. "For the fate of the sons of men and the fate of the beasts is the same; as one dies so dies the other. They all have the same breath, and man has no advantage (pre-eminence--KJV) over the beasts; for all is vanity. All go to one place; all are from the dust, and all turn to the dust again. Who knows whether the spirit of man goes upward and the spirit of the beast does down to the earth?" (Eccle. 3:19-20 RSV). You can't begin to cover all the bases, BW, so the only sensible alternative is to adopt that to which the overwhelming preponderance of the evidence leads.

Letter #123 from Rev. DFS of Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. McKinsey...I look forward to your publication every month and always find it interesting and enjoyable. One small suggestion. Could you keep the borders (esp. the right) more even to allow room to three-hole punch them without chopping through words. I punch them so I can keep them all together in a three-ring binder. Although only in the discussion stages right now I am looking into the possibility of having a weekly radio program. It would be 15 or 30 minutes long and on about 100 radio stations scattered around the nation. At first it will be taped. Later, at least once in a while it will be live with an 800 number call-in feature. This will probably be a quarterly hour program. It will be a religious program, but it will be non-Christian and a good percentage of shows will be along the lines of your letter--an honest, open-minded discussion of the Bible. I would like to know if you'd be interested in being a fairly frequent guest, or even occasionally a guest host. We will cover all expenses and be willing to pay reasonable fees. We could even give your publication ad time or promotional consideration. This is still in the very early stages and this inquiry, of course, is informal.

Editor's Response to Letter #123

Dear Rev. DFS. I'd be more than happy to appear on any program at any time of your choosing. Just call or write. In the past, I've asked readers to contact their local radio stations, especially those with call-in programs, for possible appearances by BE. Your comment on the right margin of BE is well taken. Recent reductions in print size have sought to alleviate a problem caused by trying to put too much information into too small an area.

Letter #124 from JG of Oak Park, Illinois

Dennis...As I am writing, I am watching the John Ankerberg Show. Dr. Walter Martin, a Baptist polemicist and another trinitarian fundie are debating two United Pentecostals who are anti-trinitarian fundies. Unfortunately, the trinitarian fundies won. If I were to debate Dr. Martin solely on the Trinity, I'm afraid I'd lose or perhaps draw. I could score devastating blows on history and philosophy but he'd win decisively on Greek scholarship, because I don't know Greek. Dennis, can you come up quickly with an anti-trinitarian argument that could beat any Christian trinitarian, even a smart fundie like Martin or a Ph.D. Jesuit or Dominican theologian?.... Since the vast majority of Christians are trinitarians, a fool-proof anti-trinity argument would be a great rhetorical device for any freethinker.

Editor's Response to Letter #124

Dear JG. You have focused upon one of Christianity's cardinal beliefs. The core of the apologetic argument in this regard is that there is only one god but three separate and distinct persons. Each is god, yet there is only one god. Trinitarianism is an impossible concept to grasp, comparable to that of believing in a black white horse. Your best strategy is to pen them down to specific details. How can god on earth talk to god in heaven or out there somewhere and, yet, only one god exist? Most Christians aren't even aware a problem exists. So you must first explain the imbroglio that's involved and, then, show why escape isn't an option. Both are important. After debating this issue on several occasions and recently spending over 5 hours with a couple of ministers and laymen from the Church of Christ, I've concluded the word "trinitarian" is useless and little more than doubletalk. If anything, Christians are tritheists, not trinitarians. They believe in three gods under the guise of three persons. They seek to make the Godhead a separate being when it's nothing more than an all-encompassing rubric such as "mankind." Spending your time showing biblicists they can't even conceive of what they are trying to describe is more profitable than trying to understand the belief yourself. Anyone attempting to visualize a black white horse is going to waste a lot of time. Clergymen often try to project the Trinity as a mystery beyond mere mortal powers which should be believed while not understood. Of course it's not a "mystery," which is nothing more than a euphemism, but an impossibility. Debating this issue is imprecise because the concept is so muddled, even for its proponents. If you discuss the topic with some apologists, JG, which I'd recommend, let me know what they say. There is no better way to develop an effective approach. Your quest for an effective strategy is to be complimented. That's precisely what others should be doing. No program to counter biblicists on their own turf exists and that's a major reason they have dominated the scene for so long. They've had a kind of privileged sanctuary to which to flee. Comfortable in the belief they have truth, and nothing but, they have never known a serious challenge in their own arena. If we turn on the floodlight of reality and enter the cave of darkness, some inhabitants are bound to leave or move closer to the exit as the light approaches. Have no doubt about that. Questions about what one should say to various apologetic positions are of crucial importance and always welcome. I may not have the best answer, because we are all learning, but I'll try. Incidentally, I saw the Ankerberg Show you mentioned. Many combative apologists resemble hired guns in the Old West. Removing threats to the territory is their primary concern and that's why we need more knowledgeable firepower. Are you sure the trinitarians won the debate? Remember, Ankerberg controls the videotape and decides what is broadcast. I'd recommend viewing the entire program before deciding. Christian broadcasts are even less reliable than Christian commentaries. Do you really believe starving Ethiopians are the primary recipients of all those donations? You don't have to be an auditor to know that when no policing apparatus, governmental or otherwise, is monitoring where millions of dollars are going and from whence they are coming, the opportunities for deception and corruption are multitudinous.

Letter #125 from Mark Potts, 8510-A East 66th Place South, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74123

Dear Dennis. Here is a mini-editorial for BE. Biblicists would have us believe the following: (1) In the beginning God created a perfect man and woman. But they became corrupt. (2) God sent the Flood to destroy wickedness in the earth. But the people after the Flood are just as bad as the ones before. (3) God gave us his Law through Moses. But following the Law can't save us. Now, according to the biblicists, God has devised a "plan of salvation" which we must accept. Given their description of God's success record, what basis do we have for assuming this latest scheme will work? Incidentally, I want you to evaluate the following argument. Biblicists have told me that Matt. 19:16-21 (salvation by works) just applies to the man whom Jesus is addressing and no one else. If that's the case, then John 3:1-21 just applies to Nicodemus and no one else. Similarly, Acts 16:30-31 applies only to Paul's jailer, while Rom. 10:9 applies only to the Christians in Rome for whom Paul wrote this letter. If salvation advice is directed toward a specific person, how do you tell if these spiritual instructions apply to one person or to everybody? A local preacher has been jailed recently for contempt-of-court. His church runs a day-care center, and he refuses to apply for state licensing, since that would be recognizing an authority other than Jesus. But his actions are plainly unbiblical since according to Rom. 13:1-7 the civil authorities receive their power from God....

Editor's Response to Letter #125

Dear Mark. Your constantly improving ability to critique the Bible provides good evidence that training programs (courses, seminars, institutes, etc.) need to be created, especially for the young, to teach people how to expose the Bible in every forum possible. Thousands of knowledgeable analysts could provide the balance this Country so sorely needs.

Letter #126 from JH of Visalia, California

Dear Dennis. You made a point that occurred to me some time ago. I asked a Fundamentalist preacher what saves a person from hell. And he said, "accepting Jesus as your savior." In that case, all those who never heard of Jesus (including those who lived and died before he was born) never had a chance to be saved. Which brings me to a more general question: what exactly is the virtue of believing in something? Or the wickedness of not believing in it? For that matter, what is the virtue of a virgin birth? On the same score, if one is saved by "faith" and belief, then heaven will have in it the pious sadists of the Middle Ages and "born again" criminals; while in hell will be the benign intelligence of people like Darwin, Freud and Russell.... Just some thoughts of my own. I really like your newsletter, and I'm glad you put it out. I find it exciting and informative. Also I'm very impressed by your thorough knowledge of the Bible and the deft way you use it.

Letter #127 from MM of Wyckoff, New Jersey

Dear Sir: I read your newsletter, every word, and enjoyed it very much.... Are you a non-profit, tax deductible religious publication? Your stuff should be put in bus and plane stations, public libraries, and maybe C-n Science Reading Rooms.

Editor's Response to Letter #127

Dear MM. BE is non-profit but, as yet not tax deductible.

Letter #128 from RA of Albany, Oregon

Dear Dennis. A great series! I shall venture some comments later on. I wouldn't change a thing about your format, if I were you. (Except, maybe, to charge us 7 or 8 dollars a year instead of 6 dollars!)

EDITOR'S NOTES: (1) Point of clarification: Although extra-biblical topics are not normally discussed in BE, they are by no means totally excluded. Indeed, not only would drawing a definite line of demarcation be quite difficult but some topics and information outside the Bible clearly impinge on the Book's validity. The Bible is the nucleus about which conversation flows, but we have never hesitated to include subjects such as the historicity of Jesus, the scientific problems associated with the Flood, and biblical geography when they are directly relevant to biblical errancy. (2) Several prominent leaders of atheist and humanist organizations have been using profanity, scandalous humor, and other vulgarisms in speeches, writings, and talk-show appearances throughout the Nation. BE wishes to divorce itself from such behavior in no uncertain terms. We find it not only personally repugnant but tactically irrational. The typical religious stereotype of those in what is loosely called the freethought movement is that of people engaged in immorality and license. Reprehensible conduct of this nature can only buttress their suspicions and provide ammunition to biblicists. The primary reason activities of this kind should be avoided is that they have no place in a decent environment.

COMMENTARY

In Feb. 1984 BE (#14) instituted a policy of periodically devoting an entire issue to letters from readers and, in view of the tremendous number available, has decided to resume that program before continuing a discussion of prophecy.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #129 from Mark Potts, 8510-A, East 66th Pl. So., Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

(Part a) Dear Dennis. Exodus 16:29 RSV ("The Lord has given you the sabbath, therefore on the sixth day he gives you bread for two days; remain every man of you in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day") might have some bearing on the "Sabbath Day's Journey" problem.

Editor's Response to Letter #129 (Part a)

Dear Mark. You are correct. It shows there could never have been a legal Sabbath Day's Journey to begin with according to the Old Law and re-enforces what I told VT on page 3 of Issue #35, namely, "You stated the Sabbath Day law was in the rabbinical ordinance. Could you provide chapter and verse....Jewish commentators...refer to a tradition of 2,000 cubits, but can you relate an actual ordinance to that effect?" If such an ordinance exists then it's contrary to the Old Law, as would be a tradition. VT recently sent a letter listing more Christian commentaries defining a Sabbath Day's Journey but he's never provided a rabbinical ordinance. No topic since "the voice of the turtle" many issues ago has generated more adverse comments, but there's no need to belabor the issue further until chapter and verse from Jewish law are shown.

Letter #129 Concludes (Part b)

Regarding the prophesied destruction of Tyre (#5 on page 2 of Issue #35), apologists might argue that the modern city with the same name is not the same "Tyre" condemned by Ezekiel. When the Five civilized Indian Tribes were relocated to Oklahoma, they brought a lot of their place names with them, so there's a "Miami," Oklahoma, for instance. Czech immigrants brought the place name "Prague" to this state, also; so the modern "Tyre" may be an instance of the same type.

Editor's Response to Letter #129 (Part b)

Contending there are several cities, regions, people, and geographical features (mountains, rivers, deserts, etc.) with the same name is a common apologetic ploy, Mark. One can easily understand why since it's about the only escape possible in many instances. But because this tactic is available is no reason we should not present problems and let readers judge for themselves if biblicists are rationalizing. Christians have spent a great deal of time and money devising responses to every argument made in BE and all other freethought publications, but that is certainly no reason to give them free reign by failing to expose dilemmas. With respect to your specific example, I know of only one Tyre in the Bible. Can they provide proof for another?

Letter #130 from VT of Huron, California (Part a)

(In Part 13 of last month's Commentary we quoted Matt. 16:28--"Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom"--and Mark 9:1 and said, "These prophecies show Christ's coming was to occur during the life of then existing persons. Yet, when did the Kingdom of God come with power?"--Ed.). Greetings: Matt. 16:28 really belongs with chapter 17 (which starts by discussing the Transfiguration--Ed.) because the account of the TRANSFIGURATION of Jesus explains what he meant when He made this statement. Read 2 Peter 1:16-18 ("For we did not follow cleverly devised myths when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eyewitnesses of his majesty...for we were with him on the holy mountain.") to get a better understanding of this scripture. This scripture was fulfilled when Jesus Christ was glorified on the Mount of Transfiguration with three of His disciples looking on. The transfiguration was a miniature picture of the kingdom and Simon Peter confirms this for us! You don't have to understand everything you read, just accept it and realize that God had a reason for it. We were not around to tell God how to do it, so He did it HIS WAY. Now two thousand years later we come into the picture and ask WHY. Well, He didn't ask us did HE? We will just have to TRUST or REJECT His word. Isn't it something how some of us want all the little details answered?....

Editor's Response to Letter #130 (Part a) Greetings. Apparently you have consulted a Christian commentary, VT, because your answer reflects the typical apologetic response which emanates from writings of that nature and is equally flawed. First, before discussing the Transfiguration in Matt. 17:1-5 let's read the last two verses of the prior chapter which describes Jesus' coming: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom" (Matt 16:27-28). The next few verses describe what happened at the time of the Transfiguration "And after six days Jesus took with him Peter and James and John his brother, and led them up a high mountain apart. And he was transfigured before them, and his face shone like the sun, and his garments became white as light. And behold, there appeared to them Moses and Elijah talking with him....lo, a bright cloud overshadowed them, and a voice from the cloud said, `This is my beloved Son, with whom I am well pleased'" (Matt. 17:1-5 RSV). (a) Matt. 16:27 says the Son of man "shall come"; whereas, Jesus didn't come from somewhere to Peter, James, and John. He was with them all along and, in fact, took them up the mountain. (b) Jesus was supposed to come with angels and they aren't even mentioned in the Transfiguration account. (c) When did Jesus "reward every man according to his works" at the time of the Transfiguration? Nothing is said about rewarding anyone. (d) Jesus was to come "in his kingdom." Yet, his kingdom isn't mentioned in the Transfiguration account either. (e) According to the same narrative in Mark 9:1 the kingdom was to "come with power." Yet, the events surrounding the Transfiguration elicit no exceptional display of power. Second, you stated "the Transfiguration was a miniature picture of the kingdom." With all due respect, VT, what kind of argument is that? Jesus said the kingdom, itself, was coming, not a preview of coming attractions. Either the kingdom came or it didn't. And what about all the events related in other verses that were suppose to attend his coming? Thirdly, you stated that "two thousand years later we come into the picture and ask WHY" when our real questions are how and when. And lastly, you allege that "some of us want all the little details answered" when the time and circumstances of the Second Coming are hardly little details. To some apologists, any criticism, regardless of topic or validity, is a little detail. What do you consider a big detail?

Letter #130 Continues (Part b)

(In Part 14 of last month's Commentary Jesus was quoted as telling a high priest that he would see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven. The priest did not see this before he died--Ed.)....perhaps the KJV does not render the very best for us here. The Riess translation says, "The time has come when you will see.... The NEB says, "From now on you will see.... The Berkeley Version says, "shortly you will see.... and there are a dozen more versions one could read at this point. I like to have a number of versions to help when I come to a difficult passage. I'm sure you feel the same way....

Editor's Response to Letter #130 (Part b)

How have these versions abolished your dilemma, VT? They don't differ materially from the KJV. Jesus told the priest he would see something which didn't occur.

Letter #130 Concludes (Part c)

(In Part 12 of last month's Commentary we quoted Jer. 49:33 to the effect that "Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons and a desolation for ever; there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it--Ed.) Liberty Bible Commentary (Jerry Falwell's creation--Ed.) says on page 1513 that..."Hazor was not the city of northern Palestine, but the desert region east of Palestine. The name may also be used collectively of the permanent villages in the area." The Commentary has more to say regarding Hazor. One thing I learned from a trip to Israel is that there are a number of places that are of the same name. On page 691...the Wycliffe Bible Commentary says, The kingdom of Hazor, NO that should read The Kingdoms of Hazor. This can hardly refer to the great city of Hazor in northern Palestine, for here it is used as a desert area....Now as to dragons...it is my personal belief that there was simply not another word that would interpret the word used in the original.... I believe it is rather superfluous to continue on with answers. After all there would be no need for BE if you didn't challenge the Bible. I believe you are doing a grave injustice to people that read BE. There are many out there will let you do their thinking. They are just looking for something to hang their FRUSTRATIONS on....

Editor's Response to Letter #130 (Part c)

You are making mistakes so fast it's difficult to keep up, VT. (1) I never said Hazor was a city in northern Palestine, so why do you imply as much? (2) If Hazor is the desert region east of Palestine then your case becomes even weaker, because that's the modern state of Jordan which is widely populated and has never been "a desolation" in which "no man abides." You'd do better to try to restrict Hazor to as small an area as possible, such as a city or town. In the final analysis whether Hazor is a town in northern Palestine or the region east of Palestine does not matter because both are populated today and refute the prophecy. Incidentally, I consulted two historical atlases of that area and neither shows a desert area east of Palestine called Hazor. What atlas are you using? (3) Do you realize you refuted your case and proved mine by quoting Falwell's version to the effect that, "the name may also be used collectively of the permanent villages in the area." The prophecy was that Hazor would be a desolation for ever and no man would live there. Now you are admitting it's composed of permanent villages. You accused BE's readers of letting others think for them when that's precisely what you have done by uncritically accepting explanations given by commentaries without analyzing the ramification involved. (4) No point was made in last month's Commentary with respect to dragons, VT, so why did you even mention the topic. You are hitting a strawman and your "personal beliefs" in that regard aren't of evidential value anyway. (5) Your comment that "there would be no need for BE if you didn't challenge the Bible" is patently erroneous. As long as the Bible exists there will always be a need for BE's modus operandi. (6) You accuse readers of BE of seeking "something to hang their frustrations on" when the primary frustrations most of them have arise from dealing with people who reason more with their hearts than their heads. (7) As far as letting others do one's thinking is concerned, I can assure you that most subscribers to BE are more than capable of thinking for themselves.

Letter #131 from DW of South Pasadena, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I still find the letter section interesting although the main Commentary seems to be focusing on minor quibbles that are hard to follow. For an example of the problem that I'm having with the Commentary recently, consider the start of Issue #34. (1) "For we (the wise men from the east) have seen his star in the east...." Could not "in the east" refer to the place from which the star was seen? And (2) is unconvincing without demonstration of how far a "Sabbath Day's Journey" is, which many readers pointed out was probably not as you had implied. As for (3), that a 2,000 year old city (Aenon--Ed.) is now unknown is not that surprising. In (4), again modern knowledge of ancient geography and the translation of names is not good enough to say that a discrepancy means that the author from his own time and place is mistaken. I could go on in this vain, but we both know I am not pre-disposed to be a Biblical apologist--yet if a devout atheist like myself can spot loopholes, the well-conditioned evangelical should be able to rationalize away whatever grain of truth your alleged contradictions may contain.

Dear DW. You consider yourself an atheist but have written in an apologetic vein in this part of your letter, so I feel compelled to respond as would be normal under the circumstances. (1) The "minor quibble" argument has surfaced again. As I've stated before, what's minor to one is major to another. You and I may consider something major which others consider trivial and vice versa. That's why I've chosen to present all I have and let others pick and choose as they desire. Trying to second-guess the values of others is uncertain at best. Present what you consider a "major quibble" with respect to the entire Bible, DW, and some biblicists will accuse you of pettiness. To some of them any criticism is petty, period. I gave some questions to ask in an earlier issue because they seem to have the greatest effect on the largest number. But some people are beyond reaching. Did you ever try to present a rational argument to an irrational mind. It's like reasoning with the intoxicated. (2) I don't see why the points mentioned were hard to follow as they seem clear enough. With respect to the specifics of Issue #34, let me say the following: (a) If "in the East" refers to the position of the men rather than the star, then it should have been translated to say something like, "while we were in the East we saw." BE wants people to hear errors of this nature, listen to the explanations provided, and, then, judge for themselves whether biblicists are rationalizing. We certainly aren't going to refrain from exposing problems simply because apologists have an explanation for everything, including all the arguments presented by atheists, humanists, and other members of the freethought movement. (b) As far as the Sabbath Day's Journey is concerned, most critics of BE have latched onto this example and failed to address the other geographical problems mentioned. This is typical of their general strategy--seize the point where the best case seems possible, give so much emphasis that people are left with the impression the entire superstructure rests on this one point, and minimize everything else. (c) As far as the 2,000 year old city is concerned, we are dealing with a question of error, not a contradiction, as is true of most extra-biblical discussions. We stated that, "Nearly all critics agree there is not such place (as Aenon--Ed.) near Salim." If biblicists choose to ignore what scholars have noted and accept your explanation, then so be it; that's their choice. They can also deny the theory of evolution because it's a theory. But people have a right to know what the evidence shows and scholars say. You feel it's not surprising that a 2,000 year old city is now unknown and minimize archeological evidence to the effect that such a city never existed. One might just as well say that Atlantis or any other mythological kingdom existed because they are also found in ancient literature. What the preponderance of the evidence shows is worth mentioning, or are you going to accept what the Bible says at face value? (d)

With regard to Jesus going from Tyre to the Sea of Galilee by passing through Sidon and Decapolis, readers need only consult historical atlases to see for themselves what the evidence shows. If they want to accept rationalizations for factual questions, that's their prerogative. (3) As far as "the well-conditioned evangelical" rationalizing away "whatever grain of truth your alleged contradictions may contain" is concerned, DW, are you saying they would be immune to criticisms because they can develop "elucidations"? Penning apologists down and exposing their justifications and prevarications is crucial to BE and, as I stated earlier, every problem can be "explained." But the real question is: How do their "answers" appear to the Bible's supporters and millions of observers tending in that direction?

Letter #131 Continues (Part b)

Perhaps it is asking too much for the 30-odd issues of a periodical to come up with striking internal contradictions for an ages old faith. You've already covered most if not all of the obvious and impressive contradictions in earlier issues, and anyone not affected by them will not be swayed by anything which follows either. Yet perhaps you can continue to chip away. By the scientific method, it would be absurd to accept a theory just because there were no internal contradictions, which is only a necessary but not a sufficient criteria of truth. Even if there were no internal evidence against fundamentalist Christianity, since its proponents have marshalled no convincing evidence for it (hearsay being inadmissible), there is no basis for belief.

Editor's Response to Letter #131 (Part b)

First, far more than 30 issues are needed to cover the Bible's problems, DW. Some of your comments seem to reflect earlier Christian inculcation to the effect that the Bible is not as assailable as BE contends. Second, not only may biblicists be more affected by points in future issues, but supporters of BE may find points to come more to their liking in future dialogues. You have made a rush to judgment. Thirdly, just the number of letters and writings for and against the Bible that merit analysis could fill volumes. Fourth, your last point is quite accurate and should be directed to the Book's proponents since many seem to believe that if they can somehow reconcile all the problems validity will be substantiated.

Letter #131 Concludes (Part c)

...once one realizes the Bible is not the word of God, one should go on to establish a positive philosophy of life and not worry much about that book. That approach is obviously outside the scope of BE's calling. I'm finding the goals of (several groups are mentioned--Ed.)...of much more interest than debating fundamentalists. But I wish you good luck at freeing more minds from the myths of Biblical inerrancy, and I'll keep reading BE to see what luck you are having.

Editor's Response to Letter #131 (Part c)

You have touched upon one of the most divisive issues in the freethought movement, DW. Do we directly confront and challenge the supporters of religion and the Bible or do we go our own way by setting a good example and developing a positive philosophy and let them go theirs? The approach of the freethought organizations you mentioned is contrary to that of BE's. This Country is composed of millions of people whose support for the Bible ranges all the way from lukewarm to fanatical. In numbers and wealth their dominance is overwhelming and easily proven. One of their spokesmen alone, Jimmy Swaggart, has a yearly budget far in excess of that of all freethought groups and publications combined. The disproportionate relationship between the forces is tremendous and that's why television exudes so many people who belong in the Middle Ages. We are told to turn off the set or change the channel if we don't like the program, but isn't it about time they started changing the TV, not us. Even the government buttresses them. If I was told I would no longer be taxed or subject to financial audits while my neighbor continued as before, that would be positive assistance, not just hands off. Atheist, humanist, and other freethought publications have provided more than enough proof to show the partition between church and state more closely resembles a back door screen than a wall. This situation must be altered. Establishing a positive philosophy of life is commendable, but what follows? What do you do with it? Do you rest on your laurels and hope religionists will follow your example? How could that happen when they don't even know you are an atheist? In effect, the status quo would remain as before with biblicists dominating the scene. Two crucial questions must be faced by all freethought organizations: (1) Why should religionists, biblicists, and apologists come to the freethought movement when they are convinced they already have the truth and (2) why should these same groups listen to anything the freethought movement has to offer when they have been taught from infancy that atheism, humanism, agnosticism, etc. are works of evil? To some they are the devil incarnate. The only way to dispel people of these illusions is to go on the offensive, which few freethought organizations and publications are willing to do. Some even admit their reluctance. But, the fact is that a major reason the Bible is so all-pervasive is that millions of its supporters have taken their case to others. Missionaries have traveled the world and converted millions as Christian dominance in Latin America demonstrates. Mormons and Jehovah's Witnesses have not become rapidly growing sects by sitting at home praying the world will see the wisdom of their ways and beat a path to their door. Aggressive proselytization is their hallmark. Your tactics of adopting a "positive philosophy of life" actually amounts to nothing more than assuming a defensive posture, i.e., accepting conditions as they are, and is doomed from the beginning. You don't win on the defensive. Most freethought organizations and publications are not significantly converting people to their point-of-view but only picking up those who have rejected religion and/or the Bible for reasons of their own. Members of the religious/biblical community must be re-educated from the ground up. Most have been programmed from birth and it's up to us to deprogram. Although important, battles over prayer in the schools, nativity scenes, "In God We Trust" on the currency, etc. are essentially secondary. As long as people believe the Bible is God's word, conflicts of this kind will continue unabated and remain an understandable by-product. Once people no longer believe the Bible or have their allegiance to it dramatically shaken, their interest in these secondary issues will naturally fade. That's why BE teaches a kind of Sunday-School-in-Reverse. Our program is one of going back to the basics, starting over, and exposing all the facts that should have been heard in Sunday School but weren't. But we can't do it alone. You mentioned "luck," but that's not what matters. Thousands of knowledgeable people willing to put in the needed time and effort are what count. Serious and intense effort over many years in a protracted struggle are mandatory. Anti-religious humor, denunciations of the religious mentality, exposures of corrupt ministers or popes, and comparable tactics are subordinate, not superficial, and easily countered. Your statement with respect to fundamentalism missed the mark, DW. BE doesn't exist to debate fundamentalists. Millions of people in this Country are not fundamentalists or atheists but lie somewhere on the long spectrum inbetween. The common denominator is that nearly all support the Bible to some degree. BE merely seeks to debate those most supportive of the Book while all others observe, so views can be sharply delineated and many may be moved further from the Bible by having their faith weakened. Converting a fundamentalist in a dialogue is of far less importance than influencing the audience. Many people have no strong views one way or the other but are just listening. Your poignant letter deserved an extended reply.

Letter #132 from John Sikos, P.O. Box 443, Romeo, Michigan 48065-0443

Dear Dennis. In your response to Letter (#32 Issue 13) you declared (accurately) that Easter is "not within the Bible and is not really germane to this publication." Then in the following issue critical letter #40 pointed out that the word "Easter" does not appear in Acts 12:4 of the KJV. To answer that you cited the RSV, NASB, NIV and an assortment of other versions of Acts 12:4 which do not use "Easter." I feel the readers of BE should have an explanation for this. The fact is that the original Greek word used in Acts 12:4 was "Pascha" which means Passover. The KJV translators erred when they translated "Pascha" into "Easter." It is rather humorous to note that the same word "Pascha" was translated correctly as "Passover" in the KJV of Matt. 26:2, 17-19, Mark 14:12, 1 Cor. 5:7 and many others. Only in Acts 12:4 did the KJV translators FAIL. They were inconsistent and wrong!

Letter #133 from JH of Visalia, California

Dear Dennis. Thank you for sending me the sample copy of your BE. I enjoyed it, although it annoyed me that you capitalized biblical words, e.g., savior, book, resurrection, etc. I was very pleased and surprised to find that you...look sensibly at Christianity and the Bible. I wrote a 48 page book called "Common Sense" in which I did a very similar thing to what you do so well. However you do it much better than I did because you know a lot more about the Bible than I do. It is obvious that you've actually read the thing. And never having been a Christian, I'm sure you see through this much more quickly and easily than I would. I was thoroughly inculcated with this nonsense from the day I was born. All of your ideas that I read are blatantly obvious. Were the Bible not such a sacred and hush-hush subject (even you capitalize biblical words), it would be silly to anyone who read it...

Editor's Response to Letter #133

Dear JH. Your letter is most gracious but one point needs to be discussed. The biblical terms you mentioned are capitalized not out of any respect or obeisance to the Bible but simply because they are proper nouns and their capitalization facilitates reading. As I told an acquaintance some time ago, refusing to capitalize these terms is about as effective and puerile as refusing to eat dinner with or shake the hand of a biblicist. American and Soviet leaders detest each others ideas, but they meet, eat, and joke together constantly. Imagine Gorbachov and Reagan refusing to even shake hands because each considers the other the epitome of evil!

Issue No. 38

Prophecy (Part Three of a Four Part Series)--Last month's issue interrupted a listing of biblical prophecies that were incorrectly fulfilled and this month's Commentary will renew that enumeration: (24) "But I (Jesus--Ed.) say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist" (Matt. 17:12-13) and "he sent, and beheaded John in the prison" (Matt. 14:10). Jesus did not die "likewise" as did John the Baptist who was beheaded. (25) "The Virgin of Israel is fallen: she shall no more rise" (Amos 5:2) versus "Again I will build you, and you shall be built, O virgin Israel! Again you shall adorn yourself with timbrels, and shall go forth in the dance of the merrymakers" (Jer. 31:4 RSV). As these prophecies contradict each other, one of them can not be fulfilled. (26) "In thee (Abraham--Ed.) shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:3) and "in thine seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 22:18, 26:4) and "in thee (Jacob--Ed.) and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 28:14). All the nations of the earth have not been particularly blessed in Abraham, in Jacob, or in their descendants, the Jews. Christians claim that Christ fulfilled this prophecy by giving Christianity to the world (See: Acts 3:25-26 and Gal. 3:8-9). But this assumes Christianity has been a blessing whereas history shows much to the contrary. Even supposing, for argument's sake, that Christianity is a blessing, the prophecy remains unfulfilled. The Chinese, the Hindus, the Jews, and, in fact, the larger part of the globe's population don't believe in Jesus. The household strife which he promised, and the national and religious strife of which it was the type can hardly be described as blessing all families of all nations. (27) "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4:5). (a) Elijah never came. If John the Baptist is Elijah as Jesus says in Matt. 11:12-14 and Matt. 17:12-13 ("But I say unto you, That Elijah is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spoke unto them of John the Baptist"), then when did the great and dreadful day of the Lord occur? Moreover, John the Baptist becomes a prevaricator as he said he was not Elijah in John 1:19-21 ("And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou? And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ. And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, NO"). (b) John the Baptist said he was not Elijah who was to come, Jesus does not say he is the Elijah who is to come ("...Some say that thou art John the Baptist: Some Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ,...And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon Barjona...."--Matt. 16:13-17), no one else claims to be Elijah, and no one is designated as such. Therefore, the prophecy appears to have failed. (28) "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse (Mal. 4:5-6). Regardless of who is Elijah "who was to come," present and past world conditions proved he failed to bring fathers and children together. The prophecy that he would "turn the heart of the children to their fathers" did not materialize. As Elijah did not come, Jesus fulfilled the prophecy in a very easy fashion by declaring that John the Baptist was the "Elias which was for to come" (Matt. 11:14), even though the "great and dreadful day" which Elijah was to herald never arrived. (29) "And they asked him (Jesus--Ed.) `Why do the scribes say that first Elijah must come?' And he said to them, `Elijah does come first to restore all things.... But I tell you that Elijah has come, and they did to him whatever they pleased, as it is written of him" (Mark 9:11-13). This prophecy landed wide of the mark. What did John the Baptist restore? Nothing! (30) "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12:40). That was the prophecy, but Mark 15:37 ("and Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost") and Mark 15:42 ("And now when the evening was come, because it was the preparation; that is the day before the sabbath") show that Jesus died on the day before the sabbath, which is Friday, while Mark 16:9 ("Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week....") and Matt. 28:1 ("In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene....") show that he rose sometime on Saturday night or Sunday morning. Friday afternoon to Sunday morning does not encompass three days and three nights. (31) "And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him!...." (Matt. 20:19) and "...they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles: And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him!.." (Mark 10:33-34 and Luke 18:32-33) versus John 19:14-18 RSV ("...He--Pilate--said to the Jews, `Behold your king!' They cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him! Pilate said to them. Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Caesar. Then he handed him over to them to be crucified. So they took Jesus,...to the place...called in Hebrew Golgotha. There they crucified him,...." According to the prophecy Jesus was to be killed by the Gentiles, not the Jews. (32) "And he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things...and be killed, and after three days rise again" (Mark 8:31). Jesus died and was buried on a Friday evening. He rose sometime during Saturday night or Sunday morning. "After three days" means that he should have arisen after three days had passed, not a day and a half. (33) "Jesus said, Truly, I say to you, there is no one who has left house or brothers or sisters or mother or father or children or lands, for my sake and for the gospel, who will not receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses and brothers and sisters and mothers and children and lands, with persecutions, and in the age to come eternal life" (Mark 10:29-30 RSV). Many people have given up everything for the gospel's sake but have failed to receive "now in this time" such items as houses and lands. Jesus' prophecy, his promise, failed. Moreover, receiving retrospective motherhood in wholesale quantities would be more unbelievable than the Virgin Birth. (34) "And Jesus said unto him (the thief on the cross--Ed.), Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise" (Luke 23:43). This prophecy by Jesus could not have been kept unless Christ went to heaven that day, in which case he could not have been buried three days and three nights. His prophecy in Matt. 12:40 (See: #30 above) would have failed. (35) "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them and they follow me: And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand" (John 10-27-28). Yet, the following show they were plucked out of his hand: "While I was with them in the world, I have kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition...." (John 17:12) and "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils" (1 Tim. 4:1). Paul and Peter appear to have discussed what would happen to those who accepted Jesus and later rejected him. "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation.... He that despised Moses' law died without mercy.... Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God...." (Heb. 10:26-29) and "For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them" (2 Peter 2:20-21). (36) "And Jesus answered them saying, The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified....And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me" (John 12:23, 31-32). This prophecy failed because although supposedly lifted up Jesus is far from having drawn all men to him. Much of mankind has never even heard his name. Moreover, most men will not be drawn to Jesus according to Matt. 20:16 ("So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen"). (37) "And Joshua spake unto the house of Joseph, even to Ephraim and to Manasseh, saying, Thou art a great people, and...thou shalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and though they be strong" (Joshua 17:17-18) versus Judges 1:27-29 ("Neither did Manasseh drive out the inhabitants of Beth-shean and her towns, nor Taanach...but the Canaanites would dwell in that land. And it came to pass, when Israel was strong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out. Neither did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer; but the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among them"). Not only did Ephraim and Manasseh fail to drive out the Canaanites as prophesied but so did Israel. (38) "And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt....And I am come down...to bring them up out of that land unto a great land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 3:7-8). Palestine was neither a good land nor a large one. Far from being a land which might poetically be described as flowing with milk and honey, it is, and must have been within historic times, a barren and a desolate land in the main. In size it was little larger than tiny Wales. Of course the Jews were infatuated with their own land, but this is no reason why other people should accept their patriotic illusions as facts. (39) "Then answered Amos and said to Amaziah...thus saith the Lord; Thy wife shall be a harlot in the city, and thy sons and daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land" (Amos 7:14, 17). (a) Amaziah's son Uzziah succeeded him on the throne and died a leper (2 Chron. 26:21-23) so at least one son was not slain by the sword. (b) Amaziah himself was slain at Lachish (2 Kings 14:19) in the land of Judah (Josh. 15:20, 39) a territory which at least was less polluted than any other in the age of the prophets. (40) "Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city" (Matt. 23:34). What prophets, wise men and scribes did Jesus personally send out who were persecuted, scourged, killed, and crucified? (41) "When thou (Cain--Ed.) tillest the ground it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength: a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth" (Gen. 4:12) versus "And Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod...and he builded a city...." (Gen. 4:16-17). Instead of becoming a vagabond as was predicted, Cain took a wife, built a city, established a line of descendants and seemed to lead a settled life. (42) "And God said unto Abraham, as for Sarah thy wife...I will bless her, and she shall be a mother of nations" (Gen. 17:15-16). Apparently the only nation descended from Sarah was the Jewish one. (43) "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat,...shall not cease" (Gen. 8:22) versus "And the famine was over all the face of the earth,..." (Gen. 41:56) and "...the dearth was in all lands" (Gen. 41:54). (44) "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and Scepter shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth" (Num. 24:17). Christians say this is a remarkable prophecy of Christ, but Christ has no scepter except a mock one; and he did not smite the corners of Moab or destroy the children of Sheth. (45) "The weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den" (Isa. 11:8) and "the unicorn shall come with them,...." (Isa. 34:7) and "Babylon...satyrs shall dance there...and dragons" (Isa. 13:19-22). Seeing that cockatrices (serpents hatched from cock's eggs), unicorns, satyrs, and dragons are purely imaginary creatures, it is difficult to see how these prophecies could ever be fulfilled. Those who think Isaiah was speaking figuratively should read the context. (46) "...and I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry. And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwellingplace for dragons,...." (Jer. 51:36-37) versus "For I will rise up against them, saith the Lord of hosts, and cut off from Babylon the name, and remnant...saith the Lord. I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water:...." (Isa. 14:22-23). These prophecies have not only never occurred but can't even agree on what is to happen. One says Babylon's springs and sea will dry up; the other says Babylon will become pools of water and the possession of a water bird, the bittern.

Letter #134 from DB of Dayton, Ohio

Dear Dennis. Please renew my subscription for another year. Your publication continues to be one of the few I know of which actively seeks to balance the anti-intellectualism of our Christian culture, and as such I highly value it.... Now in the spirit of open-minded and unmalicious debate which you encourage a few words on our response to JG's letter (#124) with regard to the concept of the trinity. JG asked how to out-argue those who believe in the trinity and you replied, in what I took to be the key sentences, Thus--"spending your time showing biblicists they can't even conceive of what they are trying to describe is more profitable than trying to understand the belief yourself. Anyone attempting to visualize a black white horse is going to waste a lot of time." Such words are troubling to me because they seem to reduce the realm of possible truth to that which we can conceive, in the sense of "picture in your minds." Since I believe it is as impossible to picture in our minds massless particles as it is a black white horse, it follows--using your criteria--that such cannot exist. Neither can anything which is simultaneously a wave and a particle. Yet physicists believe in both, the first being the neutrino and the second light. Somewhat similarly, mathematicians deal with orders of infinities, in the belief that not all infinities are equal, even though I cannot picture infinity in my mind, nor easily comprehend how a series of such things may be unequal. I have heard of no one-mathematicians included-- who say they can clearly picture these ideas. While I trust there are good reasons for believing in physics and higher math and doubting the reality of the trinity it seems clear that those you gave J.G. cannot be among them. Promoting such a criteria seems to risk turning people against not only trinitarianism but much which might well constitute the greatest scientific achievements of the human mind.... The methods you advocate to dissuade biblicists from belief in the trinity I'm afraid would work as well, in biblicists hands, on me--and on most of us--regarding science...I suggest you develop a refutation of the trinity using the Bible itself rather than extra-biblical arguments. I am not an expert on the Bible, but having been educated to its numerous, verifiable, and ludicrous errors in so many areas be BE, I trust it is well within your power to develop such a refutation. Is the trinity even conceptualized as such in the Bible or is it merely one more barnacle religious leaders have fastened to it?... I think it more than likely that the trinity can be made to self-destruct and the resort to arguments based on one's ability to picture things avoided. If you still disagree, why not just deny the possibility of God Himself--since we can't really conceive of such a being...?

Editor's Response to Letter #134

Dear DB. Your point is well-taken and revolves around the question of what is the best method by which to expose the invalidity of the Trinity to the largest number of people. The phrase "they can't even conceive" should have been explained more precisely. Conception is not possible because the Law of Contradictions is violated, i.e., something can't be one and non-one, i.e., two, in number at the same time. If there is one God there can't be two and if there are two gods there can't but just one. When Jesus, who is god, talks to God out there somewhere, that's two gods, not one. Massless particles and something being a wave and a particle simultaneously are not analogous, as they do not involve something being A and non-A. Massless particles would only be a real contradiction if particles by definition were mass. Or are you saying physicists and mathematicians have repealed the Law of Contradiction? In high school algebra we worked with the square roots of minus numbers which no one can visualize. Nevertheless, we did work with them. Most people are not as technically minded as you and for those, such as yourself, I should have said, "they can't even conceive of something being A and non-A simultaneously. God is perfect. Jesus says he is not perfect. Therefore, Jesus can't be God. Christians say there is one God but provide conversations in which non-one, i.e., two, gods participate. Either there is one god or two but not both. You suggested an intra-biblical approach to the Trinity would be profitable but there are verses, such as Matt. 28:19 and 1 Peter 1:2, which could be used by trinitarians. One could argue these verses do not necessarily demonstrate equality but would that really convince the opposition. That's not to say one can prove the Trinity from the Bible but only that contrary data from the Book is not as solid as one would like either. The inconsistent nature of the Book in this regard is shown in the fact that both sides can find verses to support their position. There is nothing wrong with your strategy, DB. In fact, we hope eventually to highlight the salient verses. The issue is basically one of determining which approach would be more persuasive to the largest number.

Letter #135 from RHG, Executive Vice President of the John Ankerberg Show

(In letter #124 in Issue #36 JG stated that two trinitarians defeated two anti-trinitarians in a debate about the Trinity on the John Ankerberg Show. Since the host, John Ankerberg, is a trinitarian and decides what is broadcast, BE suggested the entire program be viewed before deciding who won--Ed.) Dear Mr. McKinsey. One of our viewers has sent along a copy of Issue #36 of BIBLICAL ERRANCY. I am familiar with your publication, and I'm sure you are aware that there are many points on which you and I would disagree. Let me comment, however, on your statement on Page 5 of the issue referred to concerning the "Trinitarian Debate" which we have produced and aired. I am enclosing for you the full transcript of that series. It represents the entirety of the discussion as taped. The allegations that the Ankerberg Show somehow "doctored" the material to our advantage are unfounded. One final note. I do appreciate your recommendation to your viewer that the entire program be viewed before deciding. I share your cynicism about certain broadcasts that are distributed in the name of "Christianity." I do commend your effort to give some of us at least the benefit of the doubt. By the way, our mutual "follower" has suggested that you might be interested in appearing on our program. I'm not ready to extend an invitation, but I would certainly welcome any materials from you which in your judgment best represent your position and the evidence in support of that position. Who knows? Our friend might have his way after all.

Editor's Response to Letter #135

Dear RHG. I appreciate receiving your transcript and carefully read all 87 pages. As far as I'm aware approximately 20 pages (57-77) of dialogue were never aired and, interestingly enough, some of the most relevant conversation is contained therein. On page 59 the primary anti-trinitarian spokesman, Sabin, told Ankerberg that, "it's plain to see that you're not impartial." To this Ankerberg replied, "I'd like to ask the folks here to show if in fact the deck is stacked. How many folks belong to the United Pentecostal Church (of Sabin--Ed.). Would you put your hands up" (Page 61). Later, on page 73 Sabin stated, "...some of the audience could be sympathetic with us. They came at their own expense. But the host of the show is not sympathetic with us. The one that determines the format, the questions that are asked, the sequence of the questions, and so on, and calls the end of it at the appropriate time after Walter Martin (the primary trinitarian spokesman--Ed.) has had his last say, that person is not sympathetic with us. And if I had to make a choice, I'd rather have the host with me than the audience because they are not participating." Ankerberg responded to the effect that, "I don't know any other host that would have sat here and let you say what you said and let you continue at my expense." To this Sabin replied, "John, we don't know what part of this program will be aired." And Ankerberg responded, "It will all be aired just the way you said it. Just as I told the friends that are sitting around me, 'What you see is what you get'." Apparently some of the actual participants in the program viewed the situation as did BE and judging from the dialogue our concerns were justified. From personal experience I can vouch for the truth of Sabin's comment to the effect that a sympathetic or neutral host is of crucial importance. Ankerberg said it would all be aired. As far as who actually won the debate is concerned, the transcript shows each side asked questions the other couldn't really lay to rest. But, then, that's to be expected from an inconsistent book.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #136 from Mark Potts of 8510-A East 66th Place South, Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. I have some apologetic problems for you to consider. The other night at work I was discussing the Bible with some co-workers. I brought up a few of the standard problems, and got some responses I found hard to counter. (1) Why can't we be saved by works as Jesus instructed in Matt. 19:16-21? The response was that Jesus tailors his message to each individual, so this passage applied only to that particular man. So I asked, "You mean the 'plan of salvation' isn't the SAME for everyone? I also contrasted this passage with Acts 16:30-31 ("And--Paul's jailor--brought them out, and said, Sirs what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved"), and asked if Paul's jailor was the ONLY one to be saved by faith. Incidentally, if Paul really were in jail, he was condemning himself in Rom. 13:1-7 when he said the civil authorities are ordained of God and not to be resisted. (2) What happens to people who never get to hear about Jesus? The initial response was, "There are no such people," but when I brought up some obvious historical facts, the apology changed to "It doesn't matter" and "God has it all worked out." (3) How could everyone be corrupt when the Bible attributes perfection to Noah, Job, and the parents of John the Baptist? One of the participants--my boss--explicitly denied the Bible said these people were perfect. I didn't have the Book handy to show him his error, but imagine if I had, he would have denied the literal meaning of the appropriate passages. I gave it my best shot, Dennis. What would you have done differently? It's almost like trying to communicate with autistic children. These people are almost insensitive to the influence of words and ideas. What are your comments?

Editor's Response to Letter #136

Mark, Mark, remember what you are dealing with. You have directed some poignant questions to people who have probably been to hundreds and hundreds of church meetings (Sunday School, services, Mass, etc.) over a period of several decades. They have been thoroughly indoctrinated to believe the Bible is truth par excellence and have probably never heard a word to the contrary. Then, on to the scene you come with questions striking at the core of their most cherished beliefs. Surely you don't expect them to change after 50 or 60 minutes of conversation when they have spent hundreds of hours hearing the opposite? Moreover, biblicism got to them first and convincing someone he has been going down the wrong path for decades is rather difficult to say the least. What you must do is deprogram in precisely the manner they were programmed. You must present some arguments, give them time to ponder their merits, provide more information later and again allow them time to ponder. This process must be repeated over many weeks if not months. The real problem is getting people to return because their interest begins to decline as their faith begins to waiver. That's why we need radio and TV appearances, public speakers, debates, and other methods by which to reach wide audiences. Defenders of the Bible will feel compelled to come forth when they see the Book being exposed on a repetitive basis. Years ago I repeatedly called a fundamentalist minister on a call-in radio program and asked questions he found unnerving. I finally challenged him to an on-the-air debate which he accepted before his audience but later rescinded off-the-air on the grounds that "there was nothing in it for him." The responses you received were not "hard to counter" but quite weak in fact. You may have given it "your best shot," Mark, but far more than one is required. You have embarked upon a long, arduous struggle against big money, entrenched traditions, strong beliefs, and large numbers. Day after day after day one must return to the fray. It's like chopping down a Redwood. Instead of relying upon one massive blow, you chip, chip, and chip again until the behemoth begins to totter. You are going to be insulted, denounced, called names, prayed for, threatened with hell, have your integrity and motives impugned, and, at times, demoralized. You'll be told your efforts are hopeless, you're doing the devil's work, and your soul's damned. And these are only some of the adversities one can expect. Believe me, I know. For me, however, the sense of purpose and accomplishment is far greater. Remember what Truman said about the heat in the kitchen. Keep asking questions and eventually you'll notice a change in some people. But you must give them time to think. After all you are asking them to change imbedded beliefs and nobody is going to do that overnight. Patience and persistence are axiomatic.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) We apologize for the typos in last month's issue and mistakenly labelling it Jan. 1985. That's what happens when you're rushed. (b) We'd like to thank those who have voluntarily aided BE financially since money is the oil that keeps the machinery rolling. We now have the largest number of subscribers ever and the number continues to grow.

Prophecy (Part Four of a Four-Part Series)--A third and final category of prophecies, besides those which never existed or were incorrectly fulfilled, are those which have never materialized. Some biblicists, such as those in the Church of Christ with whom the editor of BE recently debated, contend all the prophecies in the OT have already been fulfilled. If so, one can't help but ask when the following occurred: (1) "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). Israelite territory has never extended to the Euphrates and it's questionable whether it has extended to the Nile. (2) "The burden of Damascus, Behold, Damascus is taken away from being a city, and it shall be a ruinous heap" (Isa. 17:1). The Encyclopedia Britannica says Damascus is one the oldest cities in the world, has been continuously inhabited, and is the only city in Palestine that has never been completely destroyed. (3) "In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan, and swear to the Lord of hosts; one shall be called, The city of destruction" (Isa. 19:18). Five cities in Egypt have never learned to speak Hebrew or any other language from Canaan. (4) "So shall the king of Assyria lead away the Egyptians prisoners, and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Egypt" (Isa. 20:4). When did Assyrians capture Egyptian and Ethiopian prisoners and lead them away with their buttocks uncovered? (5) "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?" (Isa. 29:17). When did Lebanon become a fruitful field or more fruitful than its neighbors? (6) "No more shall there be in it an infant that lives but a few days, for the child shall die a hundred years old,...." (Isa. 65:20). When has everyone lived to be at least 100 years old? (7) "And I purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel" (Ezek. 20:38). People who transgress God's laws are still entering the land of Israel. (8) "And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste;...I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia. No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years. And I will make the land of Egypt desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waste shall be desolate forty years: and I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries" (Ezek. 29:9-12 and others). (a) Egypt has never been desolate from Syene to Ethiopia. (b) Men and beasts have never failed to pass through Egypt. (c) There has never been a forty year period in which Egypt was uninhabited or its cities desolate and (d) Egyptians have never been scattered among other nations or surrounded by countries that are desolate. (9) "...then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more" (Joel 3:17). Strangers continue passing through Jerusalem every day. (10) "The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth...." (Zeph. 3:13). The remnant of Israel has never stopped doing iniquity or speaking lies. (11) "They shall pass through the sea of Egypt; and the waves of the sea shall be smitten, and all the depths of the Nile dried up" (Zech. 10:11 and others). The Nile has never dried up. (12) "...but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited" (Zech. 14:11). Certainly this has never occurred, especially in today's society. (13) "...they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm" (Isa. 9:20). When did men eat their arms? (14) "And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without inhabitants" (Jer. 9:11). Neither Jerusalem nor Judah has ever been a ruinous heap. (15) "For the stars of heaven and the constellation thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine" (Isa. 13:10) and "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee.... The sun shall no more go down; neither shall the moon withdraw itself...." (Isa. 60:19-20). The sun, moon, and stars have never failed to emit light. (16) "Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days...." (Isa. 30:26). Mankind is yet to witness such brightness. Moreover, this would seem to contradict #15. (17) "The fishermen will mourn and lament, all who cast hook in the Nile; and they will languish who spread nets upon the water" (Isa. 19:8 RSV). At no time in the Nile's history has it been emptied of fish or unproductive for fishermen. (18) "It will be a sign and a witness to the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt; when they cry to the Lord because of oppressors he will send them a savior, and will defend and deliver them" (Isa. 19:20). When did Egypt receive a savior? (19) "And the streams of Edom shall be turned into pitch, and her soil into brimstone; her land shall become burning pitch. Night and day it shall not be quenched; its smoke shall go up for ever. From generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever" (Isa. 34:8-10). (a) The streams of Edom have never turned to pitch. (b) Edom's soil has never turned to limestone. (c) Edom's land has never become burning pitch. (d) Edom does not lie in waste and (e) people continue to pass through it every day. (20) "Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger,...and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely" (Jer. 32:37). The banished tribes have never returned and dwelt safely. (21) "...they (Ephraim--Ed.) shall return to Egypt" (Hosea 8:13) versus "He (Ephraim--Ed.) shall not return into the land of Egypt" (Hosea 11:5). Will they or will they not return is the question raised by these contradictory prophecies. (22) "...and I will abolish the bow, the sword, and war from the land; and I will make you lie down in safety" (Hosea 2:18). The Israelites have never dwelt in safety. (23) "...and I will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head:...." (Amos 8:10). When and where has every head become bald? (24) "I will utterly sweep away everything from the face of the earth, says the Lord. I will sweep away man and beast; I will sweep away the birds of the air and the fish of the sea. I will overthrow the wicked; I will cut off mankind from the face of the earth, says the Lord" (Zeph. 1:2-3, 18 RSV) "But the earth will be desolate because of its inhabitants, for the fruit of their doings" (Micah 7:13). Obviously these prophecies have never occurred. (25) "...and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. 2:3-4). Neither figuratively nor literally have these optimistic anticipations come to pass. (26) "And my people shall never be ashamed. And it shall come to pass afterwards, that I pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions" (Joel 2:27-28). Christians say this was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost and subsequently. But God did not by any means pour out his spirit on "all flesh." Nor are the Jews so hardened as never to have been ashamed amidst their poverty and afflictions. (27) "Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds" (Ezek. 5:10). When did this wholesale cannibalism occur? (28) "They shall pass through the sea of Egypt, and the waves of the sea shall be smitten, and all the depths of the Nile dried up" (Zech. 10:11, Isa. 11:15, 19:5-6). The Nile has never dried up. (29) "And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood, as with sweet wine...." (Isa. 49:26). When have the oppressors of Israel become drunken with their own blood and eaten their own flesh? (30) "Its (Jerusalem--Ed.) end shall come with a flood...." (Dan. 9:26 RSV). When was Jerusalem destroyed with a flood? (31) "On that day living waters shall flow out from Jerusalem half of them to the eastern sea and half of them to the western sea; it shall continue in summer and winter" (Zech. 14:8). No waters have ever flowed in an easternly or westerly direction from Jerusalem to the seas. And what seas are they referring to? (32) "And I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in their own place, and be disturbed no more; and violent men shall afflict them no more, as formerly...." (2 Sam. 7:10 RSV). Jews are still scattered over the world and violent men still disturb and afflict modern Israel. (33) "...but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there" (Ezek. 39:28). Yet, Jews remain in nearly every country. (34) "In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers" (Jer. 3:18). As the ten "lost tribes" of Israel have disappeared it is not easy to see how they can walk with the tribe of Judah out of the land of the north. (35) "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders.." (Isa 60:18). Regardless of the land being discussed this prophecy has failed to materialize. (36) "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.... The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat" (Isa. 65:17, 25). Being partly figurative, perhaps, most partly literal, these extravagant predictions are made to mean whatever best suits Christian requirements. (37) "...The days are at hand, and the fulfillment of every vision" (Ezek. 12:23 RSV). The Modern Language version of this verse says, "...and the fulfillment of every vision shall soon come to pass." After 2,000 years the wait continues. (38) "...Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and saltpits, and a perpetual desolation..." (Zeph. 2:9). When did Moab and Ammon become desolations, especially perpetual desolations? (39) "But I will put hooks in thy (Pharoah's--Ed.) jaws, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales" (Ezek. 29:4). What pharaoh ever had hooks put into his jaws by God and was brought up out of the rivers with fish sticking to his scales? Since pharaohs no longer exist, it's difficult to see how this prophecy could ever be fulfilled? (40) "And I will leave thee (Pharoah--Ed.) thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers...." (Ezek. 29:5). What pharaoh has ever been thrown into the wilderness along with all the fish of his rivers? (41) "Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down...." (Isa. 33:20). When did Jerusalem become synonymous with quietude? (42) "For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee (the Hebrews--Ed.) shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted" (Isa. 60:12). Nations that remain unsubjected by the Jews manage to flourish. If this poetical expression of a Jew's national hopes is perverted into a reference to Christ or his Church, then it may be pointed out that nations have advanced without Christ. (43) "Israel will no longer expect any help from Egypt. Whenever she thinks of asking for it, then she will remember her sin in seeking it before" (Ezek. 29:16 Living Bible). How is this to be reconciled with the recent Camp David agreement? (44) "...for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner...." (Isa. 51:6). When did the heavens and all the inhabitants of the earth perish? (45) "They (the Israelites--Ed.) sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of mine offerings, and eat it, but the Lord accepteth them not; now will he remember their iniquity, and visit their sins: they shall return to Egypt" (Hosea 8:13). When did the Israelites return to Egypt? (46) And lastly, "For, behold, I will send serpents, cockatrices, among you, which will not be charmed, and they shall bite you, saith the Lord" (Jer. 8:17). Since cockatrices are mythical creatures it is hard to see how this prophecy could ever be fulfilled. A future BE Commentary will be devoted to NT prophecies which are yet to be fulfilled.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #137 from HPS of Honolulu, Hawaii

Dear Dennis. This is just to let you know that I enjoy your publication very much. It has not changed my way of thinking but is organizing it in a better and more accessible manner.... I have one question to which I would like to hear your answer. In a recent issue, you have proven that the very existence of Jesus might be open to question. How do you explain the fact that practically the whole world of today uses the supposed year of his birth to count the years (A.D. 1986)?? When and where was this system instigated and how did it get its clout? I realize that the Jews (and some other cultures) have different ways of counting, but in every day life they use the universally accepted A.D. system.

Editor's Response to Letter #137

Dear DPS. That's a reasonable extra-biblical question and, perhaps, one of our readers has a simple, concise answer. I can't recall the explanation I heard years ago.

Letter #138 from JH of Visalia, California

(On the last page of the 37th issue JH criticized BE for capitalizing biblical terms such as savior, book, and resurrection. BE said words are capitalized when used as proper nouns and no obeisance is to be inferred--Ed.). Dennis McKinsey. I did not like being called "puerile" in your newsletter, although only my initials were given. The words I was referring to are not "proper nouns." Nor do I see how capitalizing these words "facilitate reading" your newsletter. Considering the context, they could hardly be mistaken. I sense that your feelings about this religion are very academic. Mine are not. I take it very personally. It's made a painful mess of my childhood and adolescence. And recently, my niece was deeply distressed because her Sunday School teacher told her that her divorced father is going to hell because he is now living with a woman he is not married to. For other and worse horrors, I refer to the Middle Ages.... I consider Christianity unhealthy and cruel. I hate it. Hence my disinclination to capitalize religious words which mean nothing to me.

Editor's Response to Letter #138

Dear JH. Several of your comments are misleading. First, I did not call you "puerile." I did, however, say that intentionally refusing to capitalize biblical words to express one's distaste for the Bible and religion was a puerile act. If all your acts were in the same vein, then puerile might be an appropriate term. But since we have known each other only briefly and your letters seem to reflect above-average intelligence, I'd be foolish to call you puerile. Second, the biblical words you mentioned in your letter are clearly proper nouns. On page 13 in The Plain English Handbook Martyn Walsh says, "a proper noun is the name of a particular person, place or thing; and it should be capitalized." On the same page a common noun, which is not capitalized, is defined as "the name applied to any one of a class of persons, places, or things." Since BE has been discussing a particular book, a particular resurrection, and a particular savior, not just any book, resurrection, or savior, capitalization is in order. Third, I have always found capitalization of proper nouns to be a reading facilitator as it immediately separates generic terms from those which are specific. I like that. Apparently you disagree. Fourth, your comment to the effect that my "feelings about this religion are very academic" is only partially correct, JH. They are both academic and personal. Do you seriously think I would devote hundreds and hundreds of unpaid hours to researching, editing, and publishing a newsletter if a deep personal commitment to the veracity of BE's cause were not involved? For me, religion and the Bible extend far beyond mere academic concerns. You said you "take it very personally" which reflects my sentiments exactly. And lastly, you said you are disinclined to capitalize religious words which mean nothing to you. But they mean plenty to me, JH. They mean deception, misinformation, and indoctrination. If you can provide valid reasons for not capitalizing proper nouns, I'd be more than willing to follow suit. But you will first have to show how the opposition is materially affected. Such acts seem analogous to name-calling, hand gestures, and sticking out your tongue. Emotionally satisfying, yes; but do they really strike the other side where it hurts? How many catholics have ever been converted by anti-catholic jokes? How is refusing to capitalize proper nouns of real substance? Perhaps I'm wrong. It's a judgment question open to discussion.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #139 from MA of Tulsa, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. Here are a few notes you might find useful.... (1) God tells Abraham that the Israelites will return from Egypt in the 4th generation from Abraham. But Joseph and his brothers were the 4th generation from Abraham (Gen. 15:15-16). (2) God says Sarai will be a mother of Nations. The only nation to descend from Sarai was the Jews (Isa. 7:3-7) and 2 Chron. 28:5-8). (3) Ezekiel 26:3-14, and 27:36 tell us that Nebuchadnezzar will capture Tyre and destroy it forever. Nebuchadnezzar's siege lasted 13 years. He took the outworks but not the town itself. Tyre was destroyed 240 years later by Alexander the Great. But it was subsequently rebuilt (Acts 12:20, Luke 10:13). (4) In 26:12 Ezekiel says that Nebuchadnezzar will seize the riches of Tyre. Then in 29:18 admits that it did not occur. (5) According to Gen. 11:26, 32, and 12:4 (KJV) Abraham was only 75 years old after having lived 135 years. (6) Ishmael was about 16 years old when Hagar carried him into the wilderness and cast him under a shrub (Gen. 17:24-25, 21:5, 8, 18).... (7) And in the Bible people thought with their hearts (Prov. 23:7, Esther 6:6, Isa. 10:7, Matt. 9:4). Like their contemporaries, Hebrews did not know the function of the brain. The word "brain" or "brains" are not to be found in the Bible, except the Moffatt Bible....

Letter #140 from JCW of Galesburg, Michigan

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I'm writing to tell you how much I enjoyed my first two copies of BE. I have long since become an unbeliever in Christianity as a result of a 6 year search into comparative religions, philosophies, and the occult. It becomes increasingly clear after a short time that Christianity was, at best, a hodge-podge of many other cultural and religious dogmas and artifacts, not to mention the possibility that Jesus may never have existed; he may have been a composite of myth and various other characters. In any event, I read your newsletter, not to be convinced that the Bible is a load of rubbish containing at best, those same elements we find in the National Enquirer, et. al., but because I enjoy the excellent scholarship, research, and logic and appreciate what you are trying to convey to the masses. However, I think you have a tough job ahead. I am sure you are aware that the steadfast to rabid Christian does not care much for logic and when backed up against the wall, in an unanswerable position, will probably invoke that ever present main-stay of Christianity--the devil. You, via the devil, are trying to destroy the truth, etc., ad nauseum. In conclusion, you may take this letter as an indirect response to Jack Trimpey (Letter #121) that here I am, another soul freed from the fetters of stupidity and nonsense via an unbiased inquiry into available materials. It's delightful....

Editor's Response to Letter #140

Dear JCW. Several of your astute comments are worthy of note. First, you are correct in saying BE definitely tries to reach the broad mass of the American people, not just the academic community. Second, you are also right when you say there is a "tough job ahead." But that applies not just to me but all those seeking a more rational society. Third, I know millions of people are not subject to reason or logic, but millions are. The Christian community encompasses a broad spectrum of views and many can be reached. Remember, most of the freethought movement is composed of former Christians or sympathizers. And lastly, as far as relating my efforts to the devil is concerned, that should be viewed in perspective. When biblicists portray the Bible as God's word, a Book describing God--the perfect being--as one of the worst personalities in history; when they say God--the epitome of justice--condemns to eternal hell all those who have accepted Jesus as their personal savior because the door is closed through no fault of their own; when they say the God of justice punishes all for the acts of one and teaches one's behavior has nothing to do with determining whether or not one will spend eternity in the fires of hell, they had better start worrying about their own fate, not mine. Their Book propounds this ideology, not one I support. They are attributing these deeds to God, not I. One would be hard-pressed to find a criminal act not applied to God by the Bible; whereas, the devil, comes out of the Book looking quite good in comparison.

Letter #141 from LSW of Sedgwick, Kansas

Dennis. I enjoy your little publication greatly. I am on exactly the same "wavelength" with you. And I must say that you are a mighty brave man to invite the wrath of the whole of the radical "right wing," as well as the entirety of the institutionalized religious hierarchy by your critical-albeit honest critique of their "holy word." I am sure that with the "love of God in their hearts," they would like to see you "drawn and quartered." Guess you count yourself lucky that you live in the modern times when, to the great disgust of the religious radicals, "heretics" can no longer be burnt at the stake! Otherwise I am sure you would be candidate #1 for a trip to the nearest bonfire! CONGRATULATIONS! This has been the lot of some of the greatest men in history.... In addition to the $6 for an extended subscription I am enclosing another check for $5 simply to help you with your overhead and expenses.... I believe you should invite contributions to help you with your work. The radio preachers surely make no bones about it and they rake in "BEAUCOUP MOOLAH"!!

Editor's Response to Letter #141

Dear LSW. Being silenced by a bonfire is of little concern to us since BE's influence on the national scene is far too small to warrant such dramatic action. Of much greater importance and far more prominent is censorship exercised by the media. Apparently radio and television personnel go to church, too. There is more than one way to still the opposition and most appearances by people such as myself are little more than window dressing in an aura of entertainment with few return engagements. All too often the better your presentation, the less likelihood of your reappearing. As far as appealing for funds is concerned, I assume people know we need resources. Many individuals have told us that I should become an evangelist and make a fortune. The problem is that I wouldn't feel comfortable appealing for financial support and saying that which I know to be false simply to make money. I'll probably kick myself when I am 70.

Letter #142 from MM of Tamal, California

(MM, a prisoner in San Quentin, ordered a packet of back issues which was returned badly damaged and stamped REFUSED BY SAN QUENTIN--Ed.) Dear Mr. McKinsey. Thank you very much for letting me know about the return of my "BE" back issues by the San Quentin mailroom. I was beginning to worry. Yes, I'm in the pen and don't have much of a life--aside from items such as BIBLICAL ERRANCY, FREE INQUIRY, and SKEPTICAL INQUIRER. I have received two issues on my subscription and am both delighted and fascinated. The work and thought which clearly went into those two issues are quite impressive and the decency and thoughtfulness shown in the writing (as well as the fine underlay of humor) confirm to me that my final, total abandonment of religionism--a few days following my arrest--was the smartest, sanest move I've made in 40 peculiar years....Regarding those 33 back issues of "BE" please mail them to (name withheld--Ed.) and she will put them to good reading and I'll get them in dribs and drabs. Quentin is odd. Anything that looks "published" must carry the return address of a bookstore or publisher. Since your "regular" name was on the sticker, they got huffy and kicked it back. The fact that it was clearly counter-Christian didn't help. Police are badly hooked on godism and never pass up a chance to fire on a heathen.... Good stuff and long overdue.

Editor's Response to Letter #142

Dear MM. From personal experience I have learned to never be surprised when somebody claims victimization by censorship. It's probably the most common, the most serious, the most insidious, the easiest to hide, and the hardest to prove or oppose form of control exercised in the Country today.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) As was stated long ago, any letter sent to BE may be published. If you don't want this to happen, please say so. (b) Anyone who wants their full name and address used rather than initials and a city should so indicate on each letter. We don't want to violate confidentiality, jeopardize anonymity, or hinder communication between readers who would like to contact and/or be contacted.

Issue No. 40

COMMENTARY

Jesus Vs. Paul (Part One of a Three Part Series)--Jesus, Paul and Peter are three of the most important figures in the NT, yet, the degree to which their teachings diverge is a sight to behold. Peter disagrees with Jesus and Paul on many points, while the latter two often contradict one another. As on TV's To Tell the Truth, one can't help but ask, "Will the true voice of Christianity please stand up?" Paul claims to speak for Jesus, to be his voice ("I say the truth in Christ, I lie not"--Rom. 9:1, 1 Tim. 2:7), ("As the truth of Christ is in me"--2 Cor. 11:10), ("Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me"--2 Cor. 13:3), despite abundant evidence to the contrary: (1) Jesus--"Go not into the way of the Gentiles" (Matt. 10:5) and "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15:24), and "...for salvation is of the Jews" (John 4:22) versus Paul--"For so the Lord has commanded us, saying, I have set you to be a light for the Gentiles, that you may bring salvation to the uttermost parts of the earth" (Acts 13:47) and "from henceforth, I (Paul--Ed.) will go unto the Gentiles" (Acts 18:6) and "that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it" (Acts 28:28) and "that I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles" (Rom. 15:16) and "that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph. 3:8) and (Acts 20:21, 26:17-18, 20, 23, 22:21, Rom. 1:5, 13, 3:29, 11:11-13, 15:9, Gal. 2:2, 7-9, 3:14, Eph. 3:6, 1 Tim. 2:7, 3:16, 2 Tim. 4:17). Jesus told his followers not to go to the Gentiles and Paul countermanded the order. (2) Jesus--"Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven...." (Matt. 5:17-19) and "it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fall" (Luke 16:17) and "The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do" (Matt. 23:2-3) and (John 7:19, Mark 1:44) versus Paul--"Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ" (Rom. 7:4) and "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law" (Gal. 3:13) and "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Rom. 6:14) and "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter" (Rom. 7:6) and (Rom. 10:4, 3:28, Gal. 3:23-25, 5:2-4, 18, 2:19, 21, 16, 4:10, Eph. 2:15, Col. 2:14, 16, Heb. 7:19, 1 Cor. 8:8 and many others). Jesus said the law would stand till heaven and earth passed, while Paul said it need no longer be followed. (3) Jesus--"Go not into the way of the Gentiles and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not" (Matt. 10:5) versus Paul--"they (Paul and Barnabas--Ed.) passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles" (Acts 15:3). Jesus said Samaria was not to be entered which Paul chose to ignore. (4) Jesus--"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. 28:19) versus Paul--"For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel" (1 Cor. 1:17). To baptize or not to baptize, that is the question. (5) Jesus--"but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire" (Matt. 5:22) versus Paul--"Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die" (1 Cor. 15:36) and "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you" (Gal. 3:1) and "We are fools for Christ's sake" (1 Cor. 4:10) and (Rom. 1:22, 1 Cor. 3:18). Apparently Paul doesn't feel "fool" is a dangerous word or hell fire is a thing to be feared. (6) Paul--"I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me" (Gal. 2:20) and "who gave himself for our sins" (Gal. 1:3) and "walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God" (Eph. 5:2) and "even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it" (Eph. 5:25) and 1 Tim. 2:6, Titus 2:14, Heb. 7:27, 9:14) versus Jesus--"...My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. 27:46, Mark 15:34) and "...My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death:... O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me" (Matt. 26:38-39). "Cup" comes from a Hebrew word which actually means "fate" or, in this case, "death." If Jesus gladly gave himself as a sacrifice for all, you'd never know it from his words. (7) Paul--"Honor thy father and mother: which is the first commandment" (Eph. 6:2) versus Jesus--"If any man came to me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke 14:26). (8) Paul--"I will therefore that men pray everywhere lifting up holy hands...." (1 Tim. 2:8) versus Jesus--"And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men.... But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret" (Matt. 6:5-6). Those clamoring for prayer in the schools had better quote Paul and not Jesus. (9) Jesus--"all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28:19) versus Paul--"The coming of the lawless one by the activity of Satan will be with all power and with pretended signs and wonders...." (2 Thess. 2:9 RSV). Who, then has all power, Jesus or the lawless one? (10) Paul--"In whom (Jesus--Ed.) are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. 2:3) versus Jesus--"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son...." (Mark 13:32). Apparently Jesus didn't feel he was as omniscient as did Paul. (11) Jesus--"but the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you" (John 14:26) versus Paul--"But when Peter came to Antioch, I opposed him to his face, because he stood condemned. For before certain men came from James, he ate with the gentiles, but when they came he drew back and separated himself fearing the circumcision party. And with him the rest of the Jews acted insincerely, so that even Barnabas was carried away by their insincerity. But when I saw that they were not straightforward about the truth of the gospel, I said to Peter before them all, 'If you, though a Jew, live like a Gentile and not like a Jew, how can you compel the Gentiles to live like Jews?'" (Gal. 2:11-14 RSV) and "For it has been reported to me by Chloe's people that there is quarrelling among you, my brethren. What I mean is that each one of you says, 'I belong to Paul,' or 'I belong to Apollos,' or 'I belong to Peter' or 'I belong to Christ.' Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were you baptized in the name of Paul?" (1 Cor. 1:11-13 RSV). The Holy Ghost must not have reached both Peter and Paul. Apparently, he also missed some of the brethren. (12) Paul--"And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses" (Acts 13:39) versus Jesus--"...but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him neither in this world, neither in the world to come" (Matt. 12:32) and "But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation" (Mark 3:29). According to Jesus you can never be justified for all things. (13) Jesus--"...for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted" (Luke 18:14) versus Paul--"For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles" (2 Cor. 11:5) and "I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing" (2 Cor. 12:11) and "that which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, in this confidence of boasting. Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also" (2 Cor. 11:17-18). Apparently Paul did not feel being abased was something to be feared either. (14) Paul--"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ...." (2 Cor. 5:10) versus Jesus--"Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man" (John 8:15) and "...who made me a judge and a divider over you?" (Luke 12:14) and "...for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world" (John 12:47) and (John 8:50). Somebody should have told Paul that Jesus doesn't want the job. (15) Paul--"...who (Jesus--Ed.), being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God" (Phil. 2:6) and "For in him (Christ) dwelleth all of the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. 2:9) versus Jesus--"...for my Father is greater than I" (John 14:28) and "...I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God" (John 20:17). Paul may consider Jesus God's equal but clearly Jesus does not. (16) Jesus--"With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible" (Matt. 19:26) versus Paul--"it was impossible for God to lie...." (Heb. 6:18). (17) Jesus--"If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven" (Matt. 19:21) versus Paul--"For every man shall bear his own burden" (Gal. 6:5). One can't help but ask why people are obligated to aid the poor if every man is supposed to bear his own burden.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #143 from VT of Huron, California

(VT has submitted many letters bearing on the Sabbath Day's Journey problem and now claims to have solid evidence proving a SDJ was 2,000 cubits long and the product of a binding rabbinical ordinance. In Letter #117 in Issue #35 VT was asked to provide such information and in order to do so sent us a copy of a letter he received from the Christian Jew Foundation, photostatic copies of some pages from The Mishnah by Herbert Danby, and a definition of a SDJ from the Interpreter's Dictionary--Ed.) Greetings. Enclosed is the information I promised to obtain.... No Sir, such an ordinance or law is not contrary to the OT. Jewish/Hebrew literature abounds with references to Sabbath Day legislation.... The material I've sent is self-explanatory so I need not dwell on it further. I really believe that with the letter from the Christian Jew Foundation, the page from the dictionary and the pages from the Mishnah you should be satisfied.... To ask for additional PROOF TEXTS would be a signal to me that you can't see the forest for the trees.... To ask for additional PROOF would (I believe) be unquestionably absurd. To deny that you have been given THE FACTS is simply and PLAINLY to DODGE THE ISSUE.

Editor's Response to Letter #143

Greetings. Somehow, VT, I don't think you are nearly as interested in accurate scholarship as in forcing me to say "uncle." Your ego is involved and that's why this lesser problem has taken on almost obsessive dimensions. Frankly, I'm almost ready to say "uncle" if it will move us on to more substantial topics. I trust you realize you are using a strategem two can play. Unlike yourself, I've never badgered or importuned a critic in BE but in your case an exception is warranted. I've asked scores of major questions in this publication and you have chosen to avoid them all. Instead, you have focused on a relatively minor point in a vain attempt to discredit my credibility. So let me ask you some questions bearing on material of real significance: (1) Why are we being punished for Adam and Eve's behavior, especially in light of Deut. 24:16? (2) If acceptance of Jesus is a sine qua non for salvation, then how could infants, the mentally ill, and those in the New World before missionaries arrived be saved? (3) If God is perfect then everything he created is perfect. How, then, could Adam have sinned? (4) If God created everything, then why isn't he the source of evil? (5) What did Jesus do that would prove he was the Messiah and (6) how could God on the Cross talk to God out there somewhere, when there is only one God? Do you have answers to these queries, VT? Yes or No! If so I'd be more than willing to listen. If not, then be honest enough to admit as much. But don't try to drag the reader's attention to some remote spot on the fringe. After you have addressed these dilemmas, I have many more standing in the wings. In addition, I'm still waiting to hear from geographical books you mentioned in Letter #117 which supposedly refute my extra-biblical geographical commentary in Issue #34.

With respect to the SDJ problem, per se, I still don't see an actual ordinance in the literature you sent. I see comments on a SDJ in the Erubin of the Mishnah--the Oral Law--and an interpretative definition on the page from your dictionary, but where is the chapter and verse I requested. The literature you keep sending is composed of varying opinions, beliefs, and conclusions of scholars as to what constitutes a SDJ but where is the evidence showing the SDJ under discussion is anything more than an oral tradition? In your letter you state that these laws, both ORAL and WRITTEN, ARE BINDING. You mean the Mishnah is as binding as the first five books of the Bible, the Torah? Even the literature you sent denies that! Part of your book, The Mishnah, makes several crucial statements in this regard. (a) "The Mishnah, or compilation of oral laws made at the close of the 2nd century A.D. ranks second only to the Hebrew Scriptures as a Jewish national-religious creation...." (b) "the Mishnah is comparable in its importance with the Apocryphal and Pseudepigraphical literature, as well as the works of Josephus...." (c) "the Mishnah is, after Sinai, the greatest landmark in the history of Judaism." Your literature also shows the Sadducees did not consider the written and oral law equally binding. On pages 19 and 20 of the Introduction are the following comments: "...the Sadducees say that we are to esteem those observances to be obligatory which are in the Written Word but are not to observe what are derived from the tradition of our forefathers" and "...the Sadducean theses that the Written Law alone was authoritative and that the traditional law was not binding." All these quotes clearly show the Mishnah, the oral tradition was of secondary importance to the written law. The question then becomes one of deciding which to follow when they collide. Exodus 16:29 is part of the written law and prohibits any traveling on the sabbath. You, on the other hand, are relying on the Mishnah which appears to allow journeys up to 2,000 cubits, although that figure differs from scholar to scholar. So, in essence, you are faced with three problems, VT. (1) Where is the written ordinance I requested in Issue #35; (2) Where is your evidence that the written and oral law are equally binding, especially when your literature gives the oral law weight comparable to that of the Apocrypha and the writings of Josephus, and (3) if you can find an actual written law defining a SDJ, then how do you reconcile it with the Torah--the Supreme Law--which prohibits travel on the sabbath? The letter attacking BE which you received from the Christian Jew Foundation has major flaws which I'd be glad to expose in a subsequent issue if you would prove it would be of interest to anyone other than yourself.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter # 144 from SO of Tallahassee, Florida (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Let me add my name to the list of those who so anxiously await each new issue of BE. Great stuff!...While I'm at it I thought I'd mention a couple of my favorite biblical contradictions. Like you, I keep a log of biblical errors as well as a corresponding list of fundamentalist rebuttals. I'll just mention two, here, and also note the most common rationalizations that biblicists usually give me. First, one from the OT. This contradiction is between 2 Kings 23:29-30 ("King Josiah went to meet Pharaoh Neco, and Pharaoh Neco slew him at Megiddo, when he saw him. And his servants carried him dead in a chariot from Megiddo,....") and 2 Chron. 35:23-27 ("And the archers shot King Josiah; and the King said to his servants, 'Take me away, for I am badly wounded.' So his servants took him out of the chariot and carried him in his second chariot and brought him to Jerusalem. And he died, and was buried...."). It turns on the question of where King Josiah died. Second Kings says Josiah was slain at Megiddo and carried by his servants dead, in a chariot from Megiddo to Jerusalem. Second Chronicles, on the other hand, says Josiah was only wounded at Megiddo and did not die until after his return to Jerusalem. This is an obvious and clear-cut contradiction unless, of course, one happens to already believe that the Bible is totally without error of any kind.... The rebuttal I've often heard is the one used by the venerable John Haley in which he argues that 2 Kings mistranslates the word "meth" as dead, when actually it could be "in a dying condition." Thus biblicists argue, there is no contradiction with 2 Chronicles. Do you know of a rejoinder to this fundamentalist dodge?

Editor's Response to Letter #144 (Part a)

Dear SO. I read Haley's Alleged Discrepancies of the Bible years ago and am aware of the applicable rationalization found on page 326, namely, "Davidson, Fuerst, Gesenius, and Rawlinson agree that the word "meth" in 2 Kings 23:30, may mean dying, or in a dying state. Josiah was carried off the field in a dying condition; he expired on the way to Jerusalem." In effect, we are being asked to believe a few scholars who feel "meth" may mean in a dying state instead of dead, as opposed to those who translated every version I have. The KJ, RS, Modern Lang., NI, NAB, Basic English, NAS, and the NWT versions of the Bible all say he was killed at Megiddo. He was dead before leaving. Your example is typical of one of the most common, but dubious, tactics in the apologetic arsenal. When dilemmas become irreconcilable, the script is simply rewritten. Each of the versions I mentioned was created by a committee of experts in Greek and Hebrew and they all agree on what the text should say. Yet, apologists such as Haley, would have us believe that his own interpretation or those of a few close allies represent Greek and Hebrew better than those of men who have devoted decades to biblical research and have written the most widely accepted versions in the English-speaking world. If "meth" means "in the process of dying" rather than "dead," then someone does not know Hebrew very well because the difference is tremendous. Trying to go back and rewrite the text, especially when the most widely accepted versions agree, is a weak ploy because those engaged in such activities are portraying themselves as more knowledgeable in Greek and Hebrew than recognized experts in the field. If someone with six years of Hebrew told me the correct translation of a word or verse was different from that which I was using, then I'd direct his attention to the committee of experts who have studied Hebrew far longer than six years and given that interpretation to the word or verse in dispute. It's their version, not mine. I'm always intrigued by the self-styled expert who considers himself sufficiently knowledgeable in biblical languages to say, "That's what it says, but that's not what it means" or "That's what it says but that's not what the original says." If his assertion is true, then many of the most widely read translations aren't really as reliable as we have been led to believe. If so, I'd suggest we discard them and have our self-styled experts write one of his own which then could be discussed.

Letter #144 Concludes (Part b)

The other contradiction I'd like to mention is the famous case of Jesus bealing the centurion's slave. The problem here, of course, is whether or not Jesus meets face to face with the centurion, as Matt. 8:5-8 clearly states, or whether Jesus meets only with the representatives of the centurion as is stated in Luke 7:1-7. I am familiar with several rationalizations for this one. Most frequently it is argued that Matthew is actually using an accepted figure of speech, a metonymy, when he stated that the centurion did such and such when it is understood that the beseeching of Jesus was in actuality done by representatives of the centurion. Thus, biblicists feel they have escaped the dilemma by appealing to some vague notion of metonymy used by Matthew.... I'm a little unsure how to rebut the figure of speech argument.

Editor's Response to Letter #144 (Part b)

The best refutation of most apologetic defenses is simply to read the text as one would read a newspaper. Matt. 8:5-7 says, "And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion, beseeching him, and saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented. And Jesus said, 'I will come and heal him'," while Luke 7:1-7 RSV says, "After he had ended all his saying in the hearing of the people he entered Capernaum. Now a centurion had a slave who was dear to him, who was sick and at the point of death. When he heard of Jesus, he sent to him elders of the Jews, asking him to come and heal his slave. And when they came to Jesus, they besought him earnestly,... And Jesus went with them. When he was not far from the house, the centurion sent friends to him, saying...therefore I did not presume to come to you." The clarity of the texts and the contradiction between them are all too obvious. Matthew says, "there came unto him a centurion" who spoke to Jesus. Clearly the centurion came himself. Luke says the centurion "sent to him elders of the Jews" and "they came to Jesus," not he. It also says Jesus went with "them" not "him" and the centurion "sent friends to him (Jesus--Ed.)" as Jesus approached the house. The strongest point is the centurion's comment that he "did not presume to come to Jesus." How the text could be clearer is difficult to visualize. The metonymy defense is nothing more than a variation on the common apologetic argument mentioned earlier: That's what it says but that's not what it means. The story is too simple for an objective observer to conclude anything other than that the Book says what it means and means what it says. Apologists will have you believing in square circles if you are not careful.

Letter #145 from RGB of Grand Junction, Colorado

Dennis. Why do you do this? I mean, I'm all for it and enjoy reading about the Christian religion. But what motivates you to put in what is evidently a lot of work on this topic?

Editor's Response to Letter #145

Dear RGB Because it's sorely needed and nobody is filling the void. Tens of millions of people are receiving a wholly one-sided presentation of a subject which colors their views on every topic from knitting to nukes. People constantly debate politics, economics, and sociology; yet, the most important subject to millions--the Bible--the topic that controls their attitudes toward all else, remains unquestioned, out-of-bounds, somehow off-limits. When this is combined with the fact that the Book contains a tremendous number of inaccuracies and deceptions, the need for an in-depth critique becomes imperative. If there is any topic that should not be sacrosanct, it's the Bible. Untold numbers are being adversely affected.

Letter #146 from JB of Tempe, Arizona

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I have finished reading issues one through twenty-seven of BE and would like to congratulate you and offer all the encouragement I can. I am the student president of Americans Promoting Evolution-Science (APES). I founded our organization in response to the efforts of local "creation science" groups to restrict the teaching of evolution in Arizona. Specifically, the law would have required the teaching of any subject regarding the origin of man or the universe be done in such a way as not to "cause a disbelief in a religion." The bill was defeated but only because one of the legislators felt that it didn't go far enough. He wanted the bill to require the teaching of "creation-science" side by side. I am aware that BE takes no stand on the creation-evolution problem and I compliment the topicality of your paper. You have more than enough to deal with as it is, I am sure. I might even go so far as to recommend that you stay out of the fray as much as possible.... To get dragged into the C/E quagmire would be a mistake with fundamentalists, and I have found your paper very, very, helpful, both in discussing with fundamentalists, and in my own thinking.... I have never been a christian and never will, and have often felt very much outside of our culture as a result. It is refreshing and exciting to find others like myself who feel the need to rationally explore all beliefs....

Letter #147 from JG of Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Dennis. Enclosed are funds for the first two years. I was totally impressed with 85 and the first three issues of this year.... A few thoughts about your approach in BE. Your universe is the bible which may only weigh a few pounds but is a very big universe. Your approach of minimizing extra-biblical issues is correct. It's strictly a matter of keeping this balance in perspective which you seem to be doing very well.... Your plans to expand to the doubters is best. The fundies neither think nor doubt but can be malicious. I have done abortion clinic escorting and some of that group are truly "mad dogs." You probably have made inroads on the academics and your next approach is correct in working on the doubters. To doubt one must first think. While fundies are currently getting the attention, my guess would be that the universe of doubters is quite high numerically. Keep up the good work. BE is excellent. EDITOR'S NOTE: We'd like to thank GK of Minneapolis, Minnesota who not only contacted a local talk show radio station in behalf of BE but created the following advertisements and paid for their insertion in six Minneapolis newspapers.

COMMENTARY

Jesus Vs. Paul (Part Two of a Three Part Series)--This month's commentary will continue the discussion of the disagreements between Jesus and Paul which was initiated last month. (18) Jesus--"I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15:24) and "...Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 10:5-6) and "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine...." (Matt. 7:6) and (Matt. 15:26, Mark 8:27, John 4:22) versus Paul "For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him" (Rom. 10:12) and "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek" (Rom. 1:16) and "Even the righteousness of God which is my faith of Jesus Christ unto all and all them that believe: for there is no difference" (Rom. 3:22) and (1 Tim. 2:6, Rom. 4:16, 2:26-29, 4:9-13, 23-24, 11:19-25). Jesus told his followers to go only to the Jews, while Paul said there was no difference between Jews and Greeks. (19) Paul--"Bless them which persecute you: bless and curse not" (Rom. 12:14) versus Jesus--"Ye fools and blind" (Matt. 23:17, 19) and "Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres" (Matt. 23:27) and "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers" (Matt. 23:33) and "All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers...." (John 10:8) and (Luke 11:40, 44). Apparently Jesus felt Paul's magnanimous advice was to be ignored since Paul laid down a maxim which Jesus had already cast aside. (20) Interestingly enough, Jesus gave similar advice which Paul chose to ignore. Jesus--"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you" (Matt. 5:44) and "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matt. 6:14-15) and "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you,.... And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other" (Luke 6:27-29) and Matt. 5:39) versus an account with reference to Paul's activities and comments: "And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him (Paul--Ed.) to smite him on the mouth. Then said Paul unto him, `God shall smite thee, thou whited wall, for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?' And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest?" (Acts 23:2-4). Contrary to Jesus' advice Paul felt there were times when enemies should be reviled rather than blessed. (21) Paul--"Who (Jesus--Ed.) only hath immortality...." (1 Tim. 6:16) versus Jesus--"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). Paul said only Jesus had immortality, while Jesus said others have everlasting life, too. If Paul had said only Jesus can provide immortality to others, there would have been no problem. But he said only Jesus has immortality. Incidentally, how can Paul say only Jesus is immortal when everyone is immortal according to Christian beliefs whether desired or not. It's not a question of whether we are immortal but one of where we will spend eternity. (22) Jesus--"For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. 11:30) versus Paul--"...all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. 3:12) and "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth" (Heb. 12:6). Persecution and scourging hardly sound like the concomitants of an easy yoke and a light burden. (23) Paul--"To speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men" (Titus 3:2) versus what Jesus did: "And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers...." (Matt. 21:12). Jesus felt that discarding meekness and becoming a brawler were sometimes warranted. (24) Jesus--"Verily I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you" (Matt. 21:31) versus Paul-- "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind...shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 6:9-10). Whether or not harlots will enter the kingdom of God appears to be in dispute. (25) Jesus--"There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him" (Mark 7:15, Matt. 15:11) versus Paul--"For a bishop must be blameless...not given to wine...." (Titus 1:7) and "Not given to wine...." (1 Tim. 3:3) and (Rom. 14:21, 1 Tim. 3:8). If nothing entering a man from the outside can defile him, then why prohibit the consumption of wine? (26) Jesus--"...Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do" (Luke 12:4) and "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil" (Matt. 5:39) versus the acts of Paul:"...And when the Jews laid wait for him (Paul) as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia" (Acts 20:3) and "when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles and also of the Jews with their rulers, to use them (Paul and Barnabas--Ed.) despitefully, and to stone them, They were aware of it, and fled into Lystra and Derbe...." (Acts 14:5-6). Not wanting to risk life and limb Paul ignored Jesus' advice by being both afraid and resistant to evil. (27) Jesus--"If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven...." (Matt. 19:21) versus Paul--"...but we beseech you brethren, that ye...may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing" (1 Thess. 4:10,12). How can one lack nothing if he sells all he has and gives to the poor? (28) Paul--"If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men" (Rom. 12:18) and "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace...." (1 Cor. 14:33) and "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14) and "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace" (Rom. 14:19) and "For Jesus is our peace.... Having abolished in his flesh the enmity...so making peace...and came and preached peace to you...." (Eph. 2:14-17) and "Now I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ...." (2 Cor. 10:1) and "Finally brethren,...live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you" (2 Cor. 13:11) versus Jesus--"Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. 10:34) and "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division" (Luke 12:51) and "...he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one" (Luke 22:36) and "I am come to send fire on the earth..." (Luke 12:49) and "they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, `It is enough'" (Luke 22:38) and Jesus made a scourge of cords and drove them out of the temple while overthrowing tables (John 2:15, Matt. 21:12, Mark 11:15). If Jesus was as peaceful as Paul would have us believe, you'd never know it from his comments and behavior. (29) Jesus--"Thou shalt do no murder...." (Matt. 19:18) versus Paul--"Thou shalt not kill" (Rom. 13:9). Jesus and Paul can't seem to agree on the wording of the 6th Commandment regarding killing. Every moral and legal system recognizes a difference between murder and killing. Paul outlaws killing while Jesus prefers a less comprehensive restriction. If Paul's rule prevails, soldiers, police, and those killing in self-defense are in trouble. (30) Paul--"...who will render to every man according to his deeds" (Rom. 2:6) and "...every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor" (1 Cor. 3:8) versus Jesus--"For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard and when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. (The owner subsequently hired laborers on the 3rd, 9th, and 11th hours for a penny each also--Ed.)...and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first" (Matt. 20:1-3, 8). But every man received a penny regardless of when hired. Those hired first complained and the owner said, "I do thee no wrong: didn't you agree with me for a penny? Imagine! Every man received a penny regardless of when hired and how long employed and Jesus equated this with heaven. This is rewarding every man according to his deeds as Paul forecast? This is justice? Sounds more like hell than heaven! (31) Paul--"...for he--one's ruler--beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God...." (Rom. 13:4) versus Jesus--"Put up again thy sword into his place, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt.

26:52). (32) Jesus--"...Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve" (Matt. 4:10) and "Neither be called masters, for you have one master, the Christ" (Matt. 23:10 RSV) versus Paul--"Servants, be obedient to those that are you masters according to the flesh,...as unto Christ" (Eph. 6:5) and "Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh..." (col. 3:22) and "Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters..." (Titus 2:9) and "Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honor..." (1 Tim. 6:1). Jesus says he is our only master, while Paul tells servants to obey their masters. How many master are there? (33) Paul--"...remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, `It is more blessed to give than to receive'" (Acts 20:35). Nowhere in scripture does Jesus made such a statement. Matt. 10:8 ("...freely ye have received, freely give") does not apply. (34) Jesus--"I and my Father are one" (John 10:30) versus Paul--"It is Christ...who is even at the right hand of God..." (Rom. 8:34) and "...the head of Christ is God" (1 Cor. 3:1, Heb. 9:24, 10:12, 1 Thess. 2:5). If Jesus is one with God as he claims, then how could he be sitting beside, or subservient to, God?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #148 from Ed McCartney, P.O. Box 79024, Lakewood, Ohio 44107 (Part a) Dear Dennis. I'd like to comment on something in BE #40. On page 4 of Letter #144 SO has a problem with 2 Kings 23:29-30 ("King Josiah went to meet Neco, and Pharaoh Neco slew him at Megiddo, when he saw him. And his servants carried him dead in a chariot from Megiddo....") and 2 Chron. 35:23-27 ("And the archers shot King Josiah; and the King said to his servants, `Take me away, for I am badly wounded.' So his servants took him out of the chariot and carried him in his second chariot and brought him to Jerusalem. And he died, and was buried...."). In addressing this I'll be referring to verses 20-27 of 2 Chronicles. SO falsely accused the Bible by saying that 2 Chron. "says" that Josiah died "after" he was brought to Jerusalem. Is that what the text "says"? SO then said, "This is an obvious and clearcut contradiction unless, of course, one happens to already believe that the Bible is totally without error or any kind." Although I'm a Bible believer, one doesn't have to be to see that it is not "an obvious and clearcut contradiction" so-called. Look at 2 Chron. 35:24. Does the text say that Josiah was brought to Jerusalem? Does it say that he died? If you want to try and show a contradiction in the Bible you would take those events chronologically, wouldn't you? Does the text say that he died at Jerusalem? Where did he die? According to 2 Kings 23:29-30 his enemy "slew him at Megiddo." Sometimes scriptures are to be taken chronologically, sometimes they are not. With reference to 2 Kings 23:29-30, should "...brought him to Jerusalem, and he died...." of 2 Chron. 35:24 be taken in chronological order? A Bible student by comparing scripture with scripture can see that at this point it should not. A Bible critic probably would take that in chronological order so that he could say that the Bible has "an obvious and clearcut contradiction."

Editor's Response to Letter #148 (Part a)

Dear Ed. You picked a poor spot to make a stand. With all due respect your case is flawed throughout and provides a good example of why people reject biblical apologetics as little more than tortuous rationalizing in far too many instances. Your love for Jesus and a Book viewed as your only hope has closed your eyes and produced a kind of "defend at all costs" mentality, even when the situation is all but hopeless. That isn't scholarship but blind adherence. It's one thing to defend your beliefs; it's another to go over the cliff with them. Several points show as much: (1) You asked if the text ("and they brought him to Jerusalem and he died--Ed.) says Josiah died "after" he was brought to Jerusalem. How could one conclude anything else from the literature, ED. Even your own compatriots who translated other versions wouldn't agree with you: ("...and brought him to Jerusalem. There he died and was buried..." Modern Language), ("...and brought him back to Jerusalem where he died"--Living Bible), ("...and brought him to Jerusalem, where he died"--NIV), ("...and brought him to Jerusalem, where he died"--the Catholic NAB), ("...and took him to Jerusalem where he came to his end"--Basic English Bible), and ("brought him to Jerusalem where he died"--NASB). I don't think you read the literature. (2) You say, "Look at 2 Chron. 35:24. Does the text say that Josiah was brought to Jerusalem? Does it say that he died?" Are you serious, Ed? Of course it does. How could the text be clearer: "...and they brought him to Jerusalem, and he died, and was buried..."--KJV, "...and brought him to Jerusalem. And he died, and was buried..."--RSV, and other versions already quoted. (3) You again asked, "Does the text say that he died at Jerusalem?" Yes, it does. and, then, you stated, "According to 2 Kings 23:2 his enemy "slew him at Megiddo." Precisely! And that's the contradiction. (4) and finally, you stated, "...should...`brought him to Jerusalem, and he died,'...of 2 Chron. 35:24 be taken in chronological order? A Bible student by comparing scripture with scripture can see that at this point it should not. A Bible critic probably would take that in chronological order so that he could say the Bible has `an obvious and clearcut contradiction!" If what you say is true, Ed, then translators of the versions I quoted must not be Bible students because they compared scripture with scripture and wrote the text in chronological order. You impugn the motives of biblical critics when even the Book's supporters disagree with your analysis. I think you'd do well to reread SO's statement to the effect that, "this is an obvious and clearcut contradiction unless, or course, one happens to already believe that the Bible is totally without error of any kind."

Letter #148 Concludes (Part b)

(After drawing a comparison between the contradiction already discussed and an incident involving Elisha and the dead son of a Shunamite which did not even involve a problem, Ed concludes--Ed.)... Although you are wrong in agreeing with SO that the problem is with the Bible, I would compliment you on some of what you did say concerning the way some apologists tried to reconcile those passages. You talked about how the scholars try to change the translation to fit their preference. Although some of those scholars are my brothers-in-Christ and you are not, at this point I agree with you and disagree with them. I think people who go back to Hebrew and Greek and return with a word that differs from the Authorized Bible (KJV) are in folly, conceited, and wrong. Dennis, by God's grace, you won't catch me craw-fishing like that. I'll stick with the King James Bible, no matter what any scholars think. I find it about as frustrating as you do when Christians shift with several standards. We ought to have one standard. Any Christian that confides in more than one version in a given language has a double standard and is stupid. Concerning letter #146, JB wrote, "I am the student president of Americans Promoting Evolution-Science (APES)." I laughed; I think that's humorous.

Editor's Response to Letter #148 (Part b)

Although we agree on one point, Ed, our reasons diverge. You feel people should not leap from version to version because the KJV is the only accurate translation, while I reject this approach because of the dishonest apologetics involved. In effect, biblicists would have many versions of each verse to select from as expediency dictated. The version a defender chooses is of less concern to me than the importance of him staying with that version when in difficulty. Before we can discuss the Bible we must first agree on the words and version we are going to employ. Apologists are increasingly coming to the conclusion that it's easier to rewrite the script by finding a "more insightful" translation of the original Greek or Hebrew than defend the indefensible. Make no mistake about it; the Bible is a political document that is constantly being altered to fit the times, just as catholic teachings are changed by popes and cardinals to fit the era. By rigidly adhering to the KJV you are going to find your position increasingly untenable and easier for people such as myself to refute. Some of the newest versions show that many of your "brothers-in-Christ" agree with me.

Letter #149 from GC of Playa Del Rey, California

(In letter #137 of Issue 39 HPS asked an extra-biblical question: If Jesus did not exist how do you explain the fact that practically the whole world of today uses the supposed year of his birth to count years?--Ed.) Dear Dennis. This is in response to Letter #137 from HPS. Our system of establishing time was devised by Dionysius Exiguus (a monk), in Italy, in the 6th century. He reckoned (according to the reign of Herod) that Jesus was born in December 753 (ab urbs condita-- "from the foundation of the city of Rome"). Thus, Jan. 1, 754 AUC became January 1, A.D. (anno Domini, "in the year of our Lord"). Later, it was discovered his figures were wrong concerning Herod's reign, but by then the new chronology was already in general use. I think your newsletter is great. How you do it on six bucks a year is beyond me. And I speak from experience. A year ago I published a book critical of the Bible; and I can tell you this. There are easier ways to go, although like you, I hang in there. Matter of fact I'm working on a second, even more critical of the "Holy Babble."

Letter #150 from Francis Graham (MS in Astronomy), POB 209, East Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15112

Dear Dennis. Regarding HPS (and his question about dating from Jesus' birth--Ed.) I might be of help in explaining the present calendaric system. During the time of Christ, years were numbered since the founding of the city of Rome (anno urbis conceptis--AUC) at least by the Romans. This process continued until well after the fall of Rome in the 5th century. In the 6th century, an astronomer and historian, Exiguus, tried to reconstruct the time of the birth of Christ by retrocalculation (using the Ptolemaic system!) and historical research (what little he could do--the 6th century was not known for its scholarly libraries). He introduced the year numbering system we now use (AD) 1986 is 2739 AUC. He was at least 4 years off. Josephus relates that a lunar eclipse took place at the time of the death of Herod. A deep partial lunar eclipse took place visible from Jerusalem in 4 B.C., marking the latest possible date for the birth of Christ. I happen to believe in the historicity of Jesus. There were many "jesuses" around at that time and our Jesus was probably one of them, even though the record is scanty. But, as any scholar, I must hold high the principle that reason and evidence and logic are applicable to any situation and even the Bible is an object for critical review as you are doing.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #151 from Jeff Governale of the Independent Atheist, Box 4123, Oak Park, Ill. 60303-4123

(We were given a free copy of the March 1986 issue of the Independent Atheist in which Jeff said the following--Ed.). ...the main enemy is fundamentalism, which is diametrically opposed to ALL humanism. I fully believe that Humanists cannot influence our culture while 25-40% of America is fundamentalist. The primary goal of all humanists, atheists, and freethinkers should be to subvert fundamentalism. All else is secondary for the next decade. The best way to subvert fundamentalism is to go to its roots, which lie in the dogma of BIBLE INFALLIBILITY. In my view, Biblical criticism and evolution advocay/anti-creationism are the best methods. Since Dennis McKinsey is the only freethinker in America who does Bible criticism the way it should be done, I encourage all IA members and friends to subscribe to McKinsey's newsletter if you have not already done so.

Editor's Response to Letter #151

Your compliment is appreciated, Jeff, although a couple of points need clarification. As I mentioned several months ago, fundamentalism is only the cutting edge of a much larger concern. Millions of people believe in the Bible but their degree of support ranges all the way from fanatical to lukewarm. Engaging the Bible's most ardent supporters while others observe enables us to influence a far larger audience. The primary goal should be to expose the theological foundation upon which rests nearly every church, denomination, and religious creed in the Nation--the Bible--by showing the Book is not reliable, lacks credibility, is not inerrant, and isn't the Word of God. This brings everything into question and weakens the resolve of all adherents. BE doesn't exist to subvert fundamentalists but to reveal the other side of a vital topic. Millions of people are receiving a totally one-sided presentation of the Bible. Thanks to church services, religious schools, and the media, they are hearing all of the pros and none of the cons, all the positives and none of the negatives. As Germany showed in the 30's, it's dangerous for millions to receive only one side of any argument, especially when subjects as vital as politics, economics, and religion are involved. People have a right to know what's wrong with anything they are being asked to buy and when that right is somehow abbreviated or eliminated injustice is bound to occur. BE seeks to fill the void, to provide the other side. If, after hearing both positions over an extended period, people still wish to believe the Bible is truth, then so be it; that's their choice to make. But they should have the story, the whole story, not just bits and pieces, before deciding. An inevitable by-product will be the demise of fundamentalism, although that isn't the primary motive. Incidentally, I'm not entirely comfortable with the word "humanist" as it's rather nebulous and conjures up a wide variety of images. "Freethought" would probably be as good a description of BE as any.

Letter #152 from Jeff Frankel in the Same Issue of the Independent Atheist

...I have often heard Atheists say words to the effect of "Why should we care what religious people think of us?" Considering that the major goal of the Atheist movement, aside from maintaining separation of church and state, is to improve the public image of Atheists and gain a position of respect in society, the answer to that question should be obvious. What if Dr. King had said, "Why should we care what white people think of us?" ...What if Women's Liberation leaders had said, "Why should we care what men think of us?" When a minority is fighting for recognition, who are they fighting for recognition from? The majority, or course, and in the case of Atheists, just who is the majority? Theists naturally. Theists are the majority, like it or not, and to antagonize them with insults and boorish behavior is not only counterproductive but just plain stupid and immature. We Atheists have a wealth of weapons from the areas to religious scholarship, history, and philosophy to battle theism with. Why do we need to be unnecessarily sarcastic, facetious, and obnoxious along with it? Why throw rocks when you have cannons? In my early days as an Atheist and a columnist for (name of publication withheld--Ed.) which is published by an organization noted for the obnoxious behavior of its leadership, I often resorted to the very behavior I am now denouncing. One of the things which changed me was reading Biblical Errancy. Dennis McKinsey regularly argues with defenders of the Bible in the pages of BE and always does so in a mature and respectful manner. At the same time his arguments are rational, compelling, and more than his biblicist opponents can handle. The bottom line is, if one has the ability to present one's position in a rational manner, one will have no need to be obnoxious. I have found that having your facts straight is the best weapon available and will win the respect of any reasonable person, theist or not. If I had not cleaned up my act over the past two years, I strongly doubt that I would have been invited to speak at a Christian university. Reason is the backbone of our movement. Thus, we must not resort to petty emotionalism which, while personally satisfying at the moment, is intellectually undermining in the long run.

Editor's Response to Letter #152

Well said, Jeff. What you are really talking about is work, just plain work, involving a lot of time, effort, and money. We have to know the Bible and related information as well as its supporters and be just as unrelenting about spreading the word as they are. People who think they are going to diminish the influence of the Bible and religion by a few witticisms and cartoons, some well-placed sarcasm about the religious mentality, and other innocuous involvements are living in a world of delusion. The Bible and religion are extremely powerful and well entrenched. Much more than that will be needed to pry them out. You have to take your knowledge, arguments, and strategy to the misled with a determination excelled by none. Unfortunately, that is something few people in opposition to the Bible and religion are willing to do. They don't like biblicists controlling society, but they aren't disgruntled enough to sustain a long term effort. To rewrite the old song, "They have grown accustomed to their place." They also underestimate the capability of their opponents on too many occasions. Just because biblicists are greatly misinformed, misled, and mistaken does not mean they are dolts. Playing chess taught me to never underestimate the intelligence of your worthy foe.

Jesus Vs. Paul (Part Three of a Three Part Series)--This month's Commentary marks the final installment on an extensive enumeration of the ideological disagreements between two of Christianity's most prominent spokesmen: (35) Paul--"...and to God the Judge of all,...." (Heb.12:23) versus Jesus--"For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22) and "Jesus said, `For judgment I came into this world, that those who do not see might see....'" (John 9:39 RSV) and "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28). According to Paul, God was to do all judging; while Jesus specifically said others would perform the task. (36) Jesus--"For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. 24:24, Mark 13:21-22) versus Paul--"God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and diverse miracles,...." (Heb. 2:4) and "Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds" (2 Cor. 12:12) and "For I will not venture to speak of anything except what Christ has wrought through me to win obedience from the Gentiles by word and deed, by the power of signs and wonders, by the power of the Holy Spirit...." (Rom. 15:18-19 RSV). Jesus had already stated that the ability to do signs and miracles was not to be used to prove one represented God. Note also Rev. 13:11-14 RSV, 16:14, 19:20. Even Paul, himself, admitted the forces of Satan could do miracles: "And then shall the wicked be revealed,....Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders,...." (2 Thess. 2:8-9). (37) Jesus--"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 16:27) versus Paul--"Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight" (Rom. 3:20) and "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ" (Gal. 2:16) and (Gal. 3:11). Jesus says you shall be rewarded according to your works while Paul holds you are saved by faith alone. What, then, happens to the man who leads a virtually immaculate life but has no faith? According to Paul he is condemned to eternal punishment, while Jesus sees a reward far more comparable to his deeds. (38) Jesus--"Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged" (Matt. 7:1-2) and "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged...." (Luke 6:37) versus Paul--"Is it not those inside the church whom you are to judge" (1 Cor. 5:12 RSV) and "the spiritual man judges all things, but is himself to be judged by no one" (1 Cor. 2:15 RSV) and "Do you not know that we are to judge angels? How much more matters pertaining to this life" (1 Cor. 6:2-3). Paul not only ignored Jesus' advice by telling others to judge but made some judgments of his own such as: "He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strife of words" (1 Tim. 6:4) and "For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already" (1 Cor. 5:3) and (2 Tim. 2:17). (39) Jesus--"...and be killed, and after three days rise again" (Mark 8:31) and (Matt. 28:63) versus Paul--"and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:4). Did Jesus rise on or after the 3rd day? (40) Jesus--"...for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance" (Matt. 9:13, Mark 2:17) versus Paul--"For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). Obviously Jesus could not call the righteous to repentance when there are no righteous according to Paul. (41) Paul--"For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come" (Heb. 13:14) versus Jesus--"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). Apparently Paul felt his meek followers are not going to inherit the earth as Jesus taught but only a world do come. (42) Jesus--"And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues. They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (Mark 16:17-18) versus Paul--"Now there are diversities of gifts,.... For to one is given...to another prophecy;...to another divers kinds of tongues;...Are all apostles? are all prophets?...are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues?" (1 Cor. 12:4, 9-10, 29-30). According to Jesus all who believe can speak with tongues, heal, etc. Yet, according to Paul, only certain people can do so. Each ability is limited to a particular group. (43) Jesus--"For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22) versus Paul--"Do you not know that the saints will judge the world?" (1 Cor. 6:2). Who, then, will judge the world? (44) Jesus--"Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body,.... Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them.... Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:.... But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself" (Matt. 6:25-28,30-34) versus Paul--"...every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor" (1 Cor. 3:8) and "...this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither shall he eat" (2 Thess. 3:10) and "But if any provide not for his own and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" (1 Tim. 5:8) and (2 Thess. 3:8, 1 Thess. 4:11, 1 Cor. 4:12, Rom. 12:11, Acts 20:34). Jesus said forget about labor and planning; God will provide. Paul said the opposite. Each person is to be rewarded according to his labor, and no one will be rewarded who does not produce accordingly. (45) Jesus--"Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:54) and "My sheep hear my voice,....and they follow me: And I will give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them to me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" (John 10:27-29) versus Paul--"For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost. And have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, If they shall fall away, to renew again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh,...." (Heb. 6:4-6) and "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation,...." (Heb. 10:26-27) and "...in the latter times some shall depart from the faith,...." (1 Tim. 4:1). According to Jesus you are eternally saved; there can be no falling away. Paul, on the other hand, feels salvation can be lost. It's not automatic since you can still be "plucked out" after having accepted Jesus. "Some shall depart from the faith." (46) Jesus--"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven.... But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned...." (Matt. 18:3-6) and "...Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God....Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein" (Mark 10:14-15, Matt. 19:14) versus Paul--"When I was a child, I spoke as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child but when I became a man, I put away childish things" (1 Cor. 13:11) and "Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men" (1 Cor. 14:20) and "...that we henceforth be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men: (Eph. 4:14). Jesus would have us become as children in understanding which Paul rejects outright. (47) Jesus--"But I say unto you, Swear not at all, neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: Nor by the earth;...." (Matt. 5:34-35) versus Paul--"The Lord sware and will not repent,..." (Heb. 7:21) and (Heb. 6:13, 3:18). Paul attributed swearing to God which is precisely what Jesus condemned. (48) Jesus--"But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir (Jesus); come, let us kill him...." (Matt. 21:38) versus Paul--"For those who live in Jerusalem and their rulers, because they did not recognize him nor understand him" (Acts 13:27 RSV) and (1Cor. 2:8). There is disagreement as to whether or not Jesus was recognized by those seeking to kill him. (49) Paul--"Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me: In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then, said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God" (Heb. 10:5-7). Nowhere in the gospels did Jesus make such a statement. Part of this is from Psalms 40:6-7 which could not have been said by Jesus, or applied to him, since Psalms 10:12 states, "...mine iniquities have taken hold upon me,...they are more than the hairs of my head." The person who said the latter also spoke in Psalm 40:6-7. Would Jesus have more iniquities than the hairs of his head?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #153 from VT of Huron, California (Part a) (Excerpts from several letters)

Greetings. May I ask you a question? Do you believe that what you are doing is for the good of mankind? And aren't you really saying that you believe in the Bible by the attack you are making on it? Think about it. Don't you really believe it is God's Word? Why would you bother to fight it if you didn't believe it is God's Word? Well there are several QUESTIONS HERE, BUT I KNOW YOU HAVE THE ANSWERS!!! Get old Tom Paine's book out and find a good answer!

Editor's Response to Letter #153 (Part a)

Greetings. Your letters are becoming increasingly divorced from reality, VT, and in this instance you outdid yourself. How you could possibly come to such a conclusion after reading 41 issues of BE is almost beyond comprehension. One might just as well say the Defense Department supports the Soviet Union because it devotes enormous time to combatting the latter's military and those in opposition to abortion are really its proponents deep down inside. Some biblicists just can't believe there are those who know the Bible and still reject the Book. As far as serving mankind is concerned, BE is undoubtedly meeting the needs of many. One doesn't need to rely on Tom Paine to answer your questions, VT, as they aren't particularly profound.

Letter #153 Continues (Part b)

...Did you know that Satan perverts the Word of God? Satan loves to do this. He misuses and reverses the WORD OF GOD and uses it to his own diabolical purposes. There are some 1189 chapters in the Bible and Satan, doubtless to say, has read every single chapter. HE MAY NOT BE A BIBLE LOVER, but HE IS A BIBLE READER. (1) Satan likes to take scripture out of context.... (2) Satan causes scripture to be misinterpreted! (3) He overstresses one side of a doctrine and ignores the other side. (4) Understresses certain doctrines. (5) He resists the prayers of God's servants. (6) HE BLINDS MEN TO THE TRUTH. (7) He steals the Word of God from human hearts.

Editor's Response to Letter #153 (Part b)

Your criteria are far more applicable to apologists than critics, VT, as past and future issues of BE demonstrate. When it comes to taking out-of-context and eisegesis (reading something into a verse that isn't there) they are past masters.

Letter #153 Continues (Part c)

(On page 3 of issue #40 VT was asked why we are being punished for Adam and Eve's behavior, especially in light of Deut. 24:16 which says, the fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers" every man shall be put to death for his own sin--Ed.)...The reason death spread to all, Paul explains, is that ALL SINNED. Adam's act of sin was considered by God to be the act of all people and his penalty of death was judicially made the penalty of everybody: "For all in Adam died, so in Christ all will be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22). So, just as sin entered the human race through Adam, so salvation from the penalty of sin is through Jesus Christ.... Though personal responsibility was the norm in the law codes of the ancient Near East, in some cases a son was permitted to be put to death in place of his father (Code of Hammurabi, Law 230). Moses forbade such a practice: each is to die for his own sin. You should not equate this law in verse 16 with the ORIGINAL SIN or the Sin of Adam or Man's Fall....

Editor's Response to Letter #153 (Part c)

You haven't answered the question, VT, but only skirted the issue. Just because Paul said all sinned doesn't make it true. You didn't eat of the forbidden fruit nor did I. So, obviously we couldn't have sinned. To say that Adam's sin was considered by God to be the act of all merely begs the question. How could God be just if he considered all guilty and punished everyone equally. To say the problem was corrected by Jesus is irrelevant since there would have been no problem to be corrected if justice had reigned initially. How is the justice of our being punished for Adam's deed corrected by Jesus being punished for what we did? Two wrongs don't make a right. Or are you saying they do? If Joe is executed because of what you did, how is justice accomplished by you paying the supreme penalty for Ed's crimes? Moses may have forbid the execution of sons for their fathers' deeds but the Original Sin in which you believe still dominates. Consequently, the problem remains as does the contradiction between Deut. 24:16 and Original Sin. Or are you saying Moses also repealed the idea of Original Sin on the grounds it was unjust?

Letter #153 Continues (Part d)

...Now the story of Genesis states that we started at the top and fell to the bottom.... We started in the GARDEN and fell to the GUTTER. Bible critics with their various cockamamie concepts jump on this Bible account with both feet. One of the first questions is: How could a just and loving God permit Adam and Eve to be tempted? The answer is elementary. God created mankind with the power of choice. HE HAD FREE WILL. Man chose to SIN....

Editor's Response to Letter #153 (Part d)

In the first place, VT, your use of "we" is inappropriate. "We" didn't fall to the bottom; "we" didn't start in the Garden: Adam and Eve did--only two people. Second, what "cockamamie" concepts are you referring to? Could you be more specific? Third, the question you pose is not of great concern to those in opposition to the Bible. You built a strawman. A query of far greater substance is: How could Adam have sinned since he was created perfect? To say that he had free will is of no consequence. Regardless of how much free will he had, if he chose to sin then he wasn't perfect. And lastly, according to Genesis "a man" chose to sin, not mankind. Let's put the responsibility where it belongs.

Letter #153 Concludes (Part e)

...Jeff of Independent Atheists (Issue #41, page 5) is right on. The main enemy of humanism/freethought is fundamentalism.... WE FUNDAMENTALIST CHRISTIANS are diametrically opposed to ALL HUMANIST AND FREETHOUGHT THUMPERS who are not the only CULTURE CULPRITS on our most wanted list. I don't believe they do near the harm to the cause of Christianity as do the liberal-modernistic theologians and ministers in some of our churches....

Editor's Response to Letter # 153 (Part e)

"Freethought thumpers" and "culture culprits!" Do you really believe pejoratives are productive, VT? Surely you must realize I could respond in kind and, then, where would we be? Mutual recriminations aren't going to do anything other than build walls instead of bridges.

Letter #154 from Ed McCartney, Post Office Box 79024, Lakewood, Ohio 44107

(Number 30 in the Commentary of Issue #38 posed a question: How could Jesus' prophecy that he was to be intombed 3 days and 3 nights like Jonah be true if he was buried on a Friday afternoon and rose on Saturday night or Sunday morning--Ed.) Dear Dennis. For years I believed that Jesus Christ was crucified on Friday and rose Sunday morning. That was on the assumption that there was only the 7th day sabbath that week. And since Jesus was crucified before the sabbath (Mark 15:42) many teach a Friday crucifixion. A few years ago it was pointed out to me by someone who went by the scriptures that there were 2 sabbaths that week, the passover and the 7th day. You said "Friday afternoon to Sunday morning does not encompass 3 days and 3 nights." You are right, Dennis. In Matt. 12:40 the Lord Jesus said, "...3 days and 3 nights...." Taking God's word into consideration I reject the teaching of a Friday crucifixion and believe in a Wednesday crucifixion.

Editor's Response to Letter #154

Dear Ed. Could you give me chapter and verse for your assertion that there were two sabbaths that week? You heard from "someone who went by the scriptures." What scriptures? And what text are you using to equate the Passover with the sabbath? The only sabbaths in the OT that weren't on the 7th day were in the 7th month; whereas, the yearly Passover was always in the 1st month (Nisan). Since you believe in a Wednesday crucifixion, you must believe in a Thursday sabbath. Where is scripture for this? Now who is reading something into the text?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #155 from WA of Madera, California

Dear Dennis. First of all I want to say that your newsletter is one of the best on Biblical nonsense that I have read so far. Although I've been studying quite a number of years picking out the errors, contradictions, etc. you have brought out so much more that it is totally educational to me. Keep up the good work.... I can't understand why people can't see the Bible for what it really is, nonsense. All they have to do is read it. Everyone who owns a Bible should have copies of your newsletter next to it.

Letter #156 from RK of Huston, Louisiana

(LSW of Sedgwick, Kansas, made the following statement on page 5 of Issue #39: "I must say that you, Dennis, are a mighty brave man to invite the wrath of the whole of the radical "right wing," as well as the entirety of the institutional religious hierarchy....--Ed.) Dear Dennis. This is in response to LSW....In particular I refer to LSW's use of the phrase "...radical right wing." Care should be exercised. It is suggested not to associate BE's admirers with a particular POLITICAL spectrum--if that is LSW's intent. This is the great failing of the Humanist movement--corrupting a noble philosophical concept into a de facto leftwing political party. To test the resolve of LSW and political liberals to match (or better) it.... Perhaps someday, BE's elegant scholarship will be put into a computer program so that one may be able to enter a particular Bible verse or concept and receive an immediate readout of the contradictions and fallacies. Keep up your inspired (humanly inspired, that is) work, Dennis. I predict you are making a place in history for yourself.

Editor's Response to Letter #156

Dear RK. Both you and LSW are making valid points. When he implied that most of those in opposition to BE's stance are "right wingers," he is correct. However, your point is well taken. Judging by letters and other correspondence we have received, a significant number of people opposed to the Bible are by no means political left wingers.

Letter #157 from Jack Trimpey of LOTUS PRESS, Box 800, Lotus, California 95651

Dear Dennis. LSW of Kansas raised a vital issue from those interested in a more rational society, namely money. He wonders how you can offer your excellent publication for 50 cents per copy, when the cost of producing and mailing it must be more than that. On the surface, it would appear that BE is a break-even venture at best. Part of the problem, Dennis, is that very few non-Christians understand the need for "intellectual mercenaries," or persons who wish to devote their productive time to the cause of rational sanity. Sometimes this is because they do not truly understand the nature of the extent of the problem with big-time, organized religion. Other times they get pre-occupied with petty differences over style and slant, and become "sectarian" within the secular humanist movement. Most often, though, it simply fails to occur to most non-Christians that they have been, and continue to be, injured by mass mysticism in its many potent forms. For the remainder of this century, and who knows how long into the next, the dominant social and political phenomenon will be the intrusion of mystical religion into human affairs. While the outcome is certainly up for grabs, my Christian friends say, "And it is written that this shall be." They are looking fondly toward a Christianized world, with one authoritative rule applicable to all, pluralism be damned. When people finally get wised up about what is happening under their very noses, they will see the big picture and understand the magnitude of the religious problem. They will see that their freedoms are lusted after by visionaries who themselves are fleeing bogymen of their own creation, and they will finally recognize that they had better seek out their own spokesmen and finance them well. You are one such spokesman, Dennis, and, with proper support, your influence on the national scene can only grow.... Also I'd like to contribute an angle on the question of propriety often raised by your readers regarding the capitalization of dreaded words like God, Christian, etc. Proper nouns often lose their status in a changed form as in "ungodly," "presidential," "biblicism," "jovial," "methodism," and so on. Perhaps free thought publications could comply with the conventions of capitalization when referring to the highly specific, i.e., "He is a Christian," and exercise some license when dealing with the general, i.e., "Many atheists are better "christians" than most "Christians."

Editor's Response to Letter #157

Dear Jack. I commend your letter except for the last sentence. My problem is not with the capitalization issue but the subtle implication that "real" christians are somehow the model for good behavior. It implies that Christianity is good; it's just christians that are bad. That's been an apologetic theme for centuries. Non-christians don't become good people by becoming better christians than christians. Please be careful. Comments such as your last often expose the subconscious influence of earlier teachings. Many people haven't broken away from the Bible and Christianity as much as they think they have.

Letter #158 from Steven Overholt of FREETHINKERS, POB 30544, Santa Barbara, California 93130

Dear Dennis. Our operation here works by the posting of essays that challenge religious positions. Curious folk note our mailing address and write us to ask what other similar material we have. This led four years ago to our hearing about the Society of Evangelical Agnostics which carried an ad about BIBLICAL ERRANCY. I have read all of your issues with great interest selecting some ten Bible verses, in the course of this, which I have felt most effective in convincing fundamentalists that the Scriptures are unreliable. Last year I designed a tiny tract, "Bible Study Issues," consisting of a chapter-and-verse list of these. I distributed 1,800 at Los Angeles' Billy Graham Crusade, 120 at a Kenneth Copeland Convention, and even stocked a table at the closing day of a California Bible Convention. Assuming that at least a few others have been as resourceful as myself, BIBLICAL ERRANCY has been exceedingly influential. Most who take a copy of "Bible Study Issues" look them up,...and seem to defect from fundamentalist positions to a more constructive and open-minded outlook almost as rapidly as they do their "homework." Congratulations.' I think your intuitions about the nature of your work and the need to APPROACH the religious have been precisely correct.

EDITOR'S NOTES: (a) Many people send us letters with a wide variety of biblical and personal questions. Because of the large number involved and the protracted answers some would require, please don't feel slighted if yours are not addressed. (b) Some readers have not been able to obtain the books we recommended by John Remsburg, Joseph Wheless, and others. Based on personal experience, the inter-library loan system appears to be the best method to obtain hard-to-find books in distant libraries. (c) Although BE has published the full names and addresses of many organizations and publications in the United States, this may or may not represent an endorsement of their approach. (d) We'd like to thank all the readers of BE who have enabled our subscriptions to reach the highest level yet.

Cannibalism--In recent months several readers have asked if the Bible supports cannibalism in any form and the answer, succinctly stated, is yes. The following enumeration covers virtually every relevant biblical comment and shows the key verses fall into two broad categories: those in which God or Jesus commands or condones cannibalistic activity and those which merely relate activities of this nature. One can justifiably accuse the Bible of advocating cannibalism in light of the former but not the latter. Merely relating instances of cannibalism, rape, incest, or other atrocious behavior doesn't mean such activities are being fostered or proposed. Among the former are such verses as: "And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat" (Lev. 26:29) and "I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend...." (Jer. 19:9) and "I will make your oppressors eat their own flesh, and they shall be drunk with their own blood as with wine" (Isa. 49:26 RSV) and "Therefore fathers shall eat their sons in the midst of you, and sons shall eat their fathers...." (Ezek. 5:10). In addition, there are statements by Jesus which some Christians have chosen to spiritualize, while other interpret them literally: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye shall have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:53-54) and "as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it and broke it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; For this is my blood...." (Matt. 26:26-28, Luke 22:19-20, Mark 14:22-24, 1 Cor. 11:24-26) and "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me and I in him.... So he that eateth me, even he shall live by me" (John 6:56-57). Then, of course, there are verses which merely relate or predict cannibalistic activity: "So we boiled my son, and ate him. And on the next day I said to her, 'Give your son, that we may eat him.' but she has hidden her son" (2 Kings 6:28-29 RSV) and "The hands of compassionate women have boiled their own children; they became their food...." (Lam. 4:10 RSV) and "What is to die, let it die; what is to be destroyed, let it be destroyed; and those that are left devour the flesh of one another" (Zech. 11:9 RSV) and "They snatch of the right, but are still hungry, and they devour on the left, but are not satisfied; each devours his neighbor's flesh" (Isa. 9:20 RSV) and "you shall eat the offspring of your own body, the flesh of your sons and daughters.... The man who is the most tender and delicately bred among you will grudge food to his brother, to the wife of his bosom,...so that he will not give to any of them any of the flesh of his children whom he is eating.... The most tender and delicately bred woman among you...will grudge to the husband of her bosom...her children whom she bears, because she will eat them secretly...." (Deut. 28:53-57 RSV).

Communism--Although most biblicists are strongly opposed to communism, their prized possession has some decidedly communistic statements: "All that believed were together, and had all things in common; And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need" (Acts 2:44-45) and "Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.... Having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet" (Acts 4:34-37) and "This is what the Lord has commanded: Gather of it, every man of you, as much as he can eat; you shall take an omer apiece, according to the number of persons who each of you has in his tent. And the people of Israel did so; they gathered some more, some less. But when they measured it with an omer, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack; each gathered according to what he could eat" (Ex. 16:16-18) and "...but that as a matter of equality your abundance at the present time should supply their want, so that their abundance may supply your want, that there may be equality. As it is written (Ex.16:18--Ed.), He who gathered much had nothing over, and he who gathered little had no lack" (2 Cor. 8:14-15 RSV) and "For even when we were with you, this we commended you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread" (2 Thess. 3:10-12) and "Let the thief no longer steal, but rather let him labor, doing honest work with his hands, so that he may be able to give to those in need" (Eph. 4:28 RSV).

REVIEWS

Two of the latest apologetic critiques of the freethought movement to appear on the market are False Gods in Our Time by Norman Geisler (Professor of Systematic Theology at Dallas Theological Seminary) and The New Atheism by Robert Morey (Executive Director of the Research and Education Foundation). Published by Bethany House the latter work is of particular interest to BE because of its wholly inaccurate portrayal of this publication and the philosophy of its editor. After attacking Madalyn M. O'Hair, the courts, the policies of some universities, and Paul Kurtz of Prometheus Press, Morey opened Chapter 3 by denouncing anti-theists in general and biblical refuters in particular. "Militancy is the difference between what was historically known as 'atheism' and the modern movement of 'anti-theism.' The atheists of the old school took a rather relaxed, passive attitude toward God and the Bible. They felt that if people were foolish enough to believe in religion, that was their problem. The atheists did not feel the need to read through the Bible, desperately seeking contradictions or errors. They did not sit up night after night feverishly trying to formulate attacks against religion. They simply ignored religion" (p. 25). A few paragraphs later he continued by saying, "Anyone who reads its literature or debates its leaders finds that modern anti-theism is fueled by such ignoble motives as bitterness, rage, and hatred. Its spokesmen manifest an angry spirit which rages first against God and then (because they cannot confront God directly) against those who dare believe in Him. This irrational rage motivates some of them to read the Bible, frantically searching for ways to attack it. Obsessed with the need to debunk the Bible, they cannot rest until they have rooted out all faith in the Bible as God's Word. Modern anti-theists are on a crusade against the Bible as well as God. One clear example of the anti-Christian bias of modern anti-theists is the monthly newsletter called The Bible Errancy. While its editor claims to be objective and scholarly in his investigation of the truthfulness of the Bible, in his April 16, 1984 edition (issue #16) he let the proverbial cat out of the bag: He had requested Madalyn O'Hair to allow him booth space at her atheist convention in Kentucky, but she refused because, "The Bible needs to be thrown in the trash....and the editor's response to Madalyn revealed his attitude toward the Bible was the same as hers. The motivation behind his newsletter was to get people to "throw the Bible in the trash." He would do whatever was necessary to undermine the trustworthiness of the Bible. With such an irrational hatred of the Bible as the motivation behind The Bible Errancy, it is no surprise to find the newsletter filled with every logical, historical, and biblical error known to man. Apparently, the editor superficially rushes through the Bible looking for anything he can twist into a contradiction or error. Of course, he does not indicate he has ever had any education in the original languages of the text and history of the Bible." (p. 27).

Dr. Morey's analysis is sad to say the least. He accuses others of bias and irrationality while attributing beliefs and motives to someone with whom he has had no contact whatever and criticizing a publication with which he appears to have had only a superficial acquaintance. An itemized analysis of his comments is more than justified. (1) Why would I need to read through the Bible "desperately seeking contradictions and errors," Robert, when they aren't particularly hard to find? Indeed, while an adolescent some bothered me even before I had read to Book in depth. The word "desperate" implies they are few and far between which runs counter to the entire tenor of this publication. (2) To accuse me of sitting up "night after night feverishly trying to formulate attacks against religion" hardly merits a response. Your imagination could use some restraint. I rarely lose sleep over anything. (3) Your allegation that anti-theism is fueled by such ignoble motives as bitterness, rage, and hatred, highlights one of the most common weaknesses of biblicists--their inability to see anything other than nefarious motives in their opponents. Maintaining any degree of objectivity, much less providing a forum for the opposition, would be all but impossible if "bitterness, rage, and hatred" were controlling factors in this periodical. (4) Your contention that "its spokesmen manifest an angry spirit which rages first against God and then against those who dare believe in Him," is deceptive at best. A determined spirit, yes; an "angry spirit which rages," no. Anger and rage tend to blind one's vision by fostering emotional rather than rational decisions. "Those whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad" is as true today as ever. In what back issue did you find an angry spirit raging against God? Again, you are making accusations against a periodical you don't appear to have read. BE's dispute is far more with the Bible than with God. Thomas Paine, the deist, displayed a similar philosophy when he said, "For my own part, my belief in the perfection of the Deity will not permit me to believe that a book so manifestly obscure, disorderly, and contradictory can be His work" (The Life and Works of Thomas Paine, Vol. 8, p. 330). (5) "Frantically searching" would be a poor way to research anything. Our approach is actually rather slow, methodical, and systematic to the point of tediousness. (6) Hyperbole rather than reality appropriately describes such phrases as "obsessed with the need," "rooted out all faith," and "on a crusade." Tactically speaking, it's not wise to be obsessed by anything, since common sense tends to fade. (7) Upon what basis do you assert that "its editor claims to be objective and scholarly?" I've always felt our readers are sufficiently intelligent to make that determination for themselves. In what issue is such boasting to be found? (8) As far as "letting the cat out of the bag" is concerned, I never knew he was in one. BE has never supported the Bible or implied as much. The captions, alone, should corroborate that. Nor has it ever said the Bible should not be discarded. Your real mistake lies in saying "the motivation behind his newsletter was to get people to `throw the Bible in the trash." when it really exists to get people to see all the problems contained therein. As a result, many will, no doubt, discard the Bible but that is an understandable by-product, not the motivating factor. (9) Surely you don't think I "would do whatever was necessary to undermine the trustworthiness of the Bible." To imply someone you know little about would lie, cheat, steal, or physically harm others to undermine the Bible is decidedly unfair; wouldn't you agree. I haven't impugned your motives, denegated your integrity, or implied you'd do anything to spread the Bible, although many biblicists would not fare as well. Is it too much to expect the same consideration? (10) "An irrational hatred" is certainly not the motivation behind BE. Again, if you had kept up with the publication you'd know that reason and evidence with an abundance of biblical quotes are the hallmark of our research. Hatred would only blind us to the other side's strengths and cause exaggeration of our own. (11) To accuse me of "superficially rushing through the Bible" looking for anything I can twist into a contradiction when hundreds of hours of laborious study have been invested is only excusable because you qualified your sentence with "apparently." You might want to reread #5 above. (12) And lastly, as far as knowing the original languages is concerned, you again exhibit unfamiliarity with prior issues of BE. The 6th issue discussed the Greek-Hebrew question although more will be said about this in next issue because another biblicist sent a more involved letter covering the same topic. Turning from the negative to the positive aspects of your narrative, Robert, a couple of your points do have an element of truth. The new atheism does appear to be more assertive than the old and BE does seek to cover every logical, historical, and biblical error known to man. Of course, the magnitude of the latter all but eliminates any possibility of success. Incidentally, in case someone should ask, the name of the publication is BIBLICAL ERRANCY not THE BIBLE ERRANCY.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #159 from Robert H. Bowman, Jr., Research Coordinator of the Christian Research Institute of San Juan Capistrano, California (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. CRI is an evangelical apologetics ministry which seeks to educate the public in all matters relating to apologetics, including warning them about pseudo-Christian cults, explaining and defending the teachings of Scripture, and responding to criticism of the Bible. During the last year or so, several people have written to us concerning your newsletter Biblical Errancy, of which I now have your sample copy. I would like to ask you some general questions and then comment on the specific argument in your sample newsletter. To begin with I would like to know whether you consider the Bible to be (a) the product of sincere human beings, (b) the product of dishonest human beings who set out to deceive others, (c) the product of some sincere human beings and some dishonest ones, or (d) the product of deranged, insane human beings. If you believe that there was a mix...please tell me which you think were sincere, which insincere, and which same. Second, I wonder if you consider the Bible to contain (a) a number of errors roughly comparable to the number of errors, contradictions and the like that we might find by comparing other ancient books and documents, (b) a number of errors somewhat less than in other ancient books, or (c) a number of errors far greater than in other ancient books. If you think the number to be far less or far greater, please tell me your opinion as to the reason for this variation. Third I would like to know if you believe that not only do the biblical writers contradict one another and make errors of fact but they also contradict themselves.... Further, does Paul (or any other writer in the Bible) contradict himself within the same document? How often, if at all, do you think such self-contradictory statements are made by the biblical writers--more, less, or about as frequently as in other books? If more or less, how do you account for the variation?

Editor's Response to Letter #159 (Part a)

Dear Mr. Bowman. You have posed some comprehensive biblical and extra-biblical questions which have puzzled scholars for centuries. Let me address them in the order they were submitted. Your first question is extra-biblical and concerns the character and motives of the Bible's authors. Before we can proceed, however, the writers must first be identified. And, as you are no doubt aware, scholars are by no means unanimous on who wrote which book. Even if the author of each book was known for certain, his motives could not be firmly established. It's hard enough determining the motives of people living today, let alone nebulous figures writing thousands of years ago. They were probably like people of today--some honest, some dishonest, some sincere, some insincere, some deranged, some not--but that's only conjecture. I can't help but feel the author of Revelation was something less than stable and I've had doubts about the author or authors of Daniel, and Ezekiel. But that's not proof either. The writings have to be judged on their own merits regardless of authorship.

Your second set of questions involves material outside the scope of this publication and not really germane to the Bible's "inerrancy." Even if it had less errors and contradictions than other ancient book and documents, that would have little hearing on whether or not the Bible was God's Word, unless the tally sheet showed a score of 100%. Judgments with respect to comparisons between documents are hard to make because two mistakes in one book may be of far greater importance than twelve in another. As with nuclear weapons, sheer numbers aren't the whole story. A lot more is involved. Weapons experts must consider speed, location, power, accuracy, and range. If you are only concerned with numbers then I can say that I can't think of any book I've read that's had more problems than the Bible. But, then, I haven't read them all.

Your third series of questions are not extra-biblical and warrant a more extensive reply: (1) You ask if biblical writers contradict one another, make errors of fact, and contradict themselves. By all means, and no one better exemplifies this than Jesus Christ. You might want to read the commentaries in issues 2, 3, 9, 24, 25, 27, and 28 which focus on his vacillations and inconsistencies and those in issues 40, 41, and 42 which highlight his disagreements with Paul.

(2) You ask if Paul (or any other writer in the Bible) contradicts himself within the same document. Again, one need only read the issues on Jesus to see the answer is yes. (3) You ask how often such self-contradictory statements are made by biblical writers. I've never made a count but they are far too numerous to lend any credence to their authors. As far as how this compares with other writings, I can only repeat my earlier reply.

Letter #159 Continues (Part b)

Finally, I would like to comment on just one point. On page 3 of your sample issue you quote from page 23 of McDowell and Stewart's Reasons Septics Should Consider Christianity, where they list eight reasons for believing "that the very words of the Bible are God-given." All eight of these reasons essentially make the point that the Bible itself claims that its words are inspired. You challenged this argument as circular, if I understand you correctly, because it involved using the Bible to prove the Bible. Whatever position you choose to maintain on the inspiration of the Scripture, I think you should admit that you misconstrued McDowell and Stewart on this point. The section from which the passage you quoted was taken is entitled, "To what extent is the Bible inspired?" (p. 21). They open the section with these words: "If a person recognizes that the Bible is the inspired Word of God, he often questions the degree of inspiration. Does it include every book, every word? Does it extend to historical matters? How about scientific statements? Their purpose is not to prove that the Bible is inspired, but rather to answer the question of the extent of inspiration. Given that a person accepts the Bible as the Word of God, the question of the extent of its inspiration can be answered from the Bible without arguing in a circle. The form of the argument may be analyzed as follows: (1A) The Bible is in some sense the Word of God. (1B) The Word of God, at the very least, is a reliable guide to matters concerning God and what He wants us to know. (1C) One thing that concerns God and His revelation is the extent of the inspiration of the written medium of His revelation, namely, the Bible itself. (2A) Therefore, the Bible is a reliable guide to the extent of its own inspiration. (2B) The Bible repeatedly, emphatically, and unambiguously asserts that its inspiration extends to the very words of the text. (2C) Therefore, the very words of the Bible are inspired by God." Editor's Response to Letter #159 (Part b)

You've made two major points, Robert, both of which are fatally flawed: (1) You stated McDowell and Stewart's "purpose was not to prove that the Bible is inspired, but rather to answer the question of the extent of inspiration." I agree. So where is the problem? The first sentence of my sample issue states that, "McDowell and Stewart provide a list on page 23 of 8 commonly given reasons for believing the Bible is inerrant." There is no problem. I stated at the outset that they intended to prove that the extent of inspiration was total and complete, i.e., inerrancy dominates. I never said they only sought to prove the Bible was inspired. You're trying to create a difficulty where none exists. (2) Your second mistake is even more pronounced because your syllogistic reasoning leaves a lot to be desired. (1B) really repeats (1A). (1C) isn't even needed. (2A) is comparable to saying it's true to the extent it's true. (2B) is the first significant statement and merely repeats what McDowell and Stewart said in their 8 reasons, i.e., it's true because it says so, which, as I said in the sample issue, is no proof whatever. If "the Bible's inspiration extends to (all of--Ed.) the very words of the text" as (2B) says then (2C) is nothing more than redundancy. Obviously "the very words of the Bible are inspired by God" if "inspiration extends to the very words of the text." (1A), (1B), and (2A) suggest limited inspiration. Not until we reach (2B) is complete inspiration slipped into the picture--a rather subtle attempt to succeed where McDowell and Stewart failed. This is the kind of deceptive reasoning that has had a lot to do with my rejection of the Bible in general and apologetics in particular, Robert. You are trying to use rationality to make irrationality sound rational.

Letter #159 Concludes (Part c)

McDowell and Stewart's argument admittedly rests on premises 1A and 1B, but these premises are different than 2C; consequently, they cannot be accused of arguing in a circle. The reasons for accepting 1A and 1B are not treated in the section of their book which you quoted (they have discussed such reasons in other books). Incidentally, you obscured the context of their statements by not italicizing or underlining the words "very words" in the first sentence which you quoted since they had italicized them to emphasize that they were discussing the extent of inspiration, not the fact of inspiration. This may have been unintentional on your part, of course. In any case, I think you owe it to your readers to admit that you took McDowell and Stewart out of context.

Editor's Response to Letter #159 (Part c)

Premises 1A and 1B have nothing to do with their argument, Robert. With all due respect, I think you should reread their comments. They go straight to (2B) and (2C). Your other premises aren't needed. They don't even imply, as (1A), that "the Bible is in some sense the Word of God. They state their position clearly and unmistakably: "Two words describe the extent of inspiration according to the Bible: verbal and plenary. Plenary means full, complete, extending to all parts" (p. 21) and "the entire Bible is inspired, not just certain parts! Inspiration extends not only to all parts of the Bible, it extends to the very words" (p. 22). I think you owe it to our readers to admit that you slipped something into McDowell and Stewart's narrative. I didn't feel a need to italicize "the very words," but maybe I should have. I'm surprised you would want them stressed since they strengthen my case and weaken yours. If "the very words" are inspired, why would (1A) and (1B) be of significance since both emphasize something less than total inspiration.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #160 from RB of Sugar Grove, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis, a greeting. I continue to enjoy and profit from the reading of your publication. The hard-core Fundies are so outgunned that all they can do is ignore your essential points, dwell on side issues, and evade any acknowledgement of the comprehensive catalogue of obvious biblical errors and contradictions that you document with such undiminished firepower. It is characteristic of them that they pretend with fervent faith, that the Bible doesn't really say what you show that it clearly does say--the translators own plain unequivocal English. Under the bright light of your searching glance they can only squint, squeal, and scurry off to their dark, narrow corners. Yours is an honest reading of the Bible, an objective one. Those who are not afraid of using their eyes and their reason in order to seek out the book's real nature, rather than following unexamined feelings or what one has always been told, will be able to look the realities you point to squarely in the face.

Letter #161 from Mark Potts, 8510-A East 66th Place South, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

Dear Dennis. I had an interesting adventure this weekend. Some Jehovah's Witnesses were having a convention in Tulsa's Civic Center downtown, so a couple of my friends and I went there to find some biblicists to deprogram. One of my friends struck up a conversation with a Witness and began to teach him about the scientific problems in the Six-day Creation and the worldwide Flood. My other friend and I were listening in as we sat on a bench across the hall from the Witnesses' auditorium. Soon a couple of other Witnesses accosted the four of us, and threatened to have security guards remove us. So we broke off that session and sought out an official in the Civic Center to discover our rights. She called the City Attorney, and verified that all the Witnesses controlled with their lease was the auditorium and the half of the hallway giving access to it. As long as we didn't solicit, pass out literature, or otherwise cause a public disturbance, we could converse with anyone we wanted in the rest of the building. So, for the rest of the afternoon we tried to strike up conversations with Witnesses about the Bible's validity. Eventually, however, a group of Witness officials gathered and began to shadow us. As soon as my friend spoke to a Witness, an official would come up and say, "Excuse me a minute, brother, may I have a word with you?" And he would pull away the person and quietly order him not to speak with us. This happened several times, and none of the Witnesses disobeyed. I felt like saying, "Hey people, this isn't Jonestown! You're free adults." ...Oh, well, at least we tried.

Peter Vs. Jesus--One of the distinguishing characteristics of Peter is the degree to which he disagrees with comments by other figures and biblical teachings. He contradicts Jesus, Paul, the Old Testament, the New Testament and even himself, on occasion. So many instances can be given that each conflict merits a separate section. For example, Peter clashed with Jesus on numerous topics: (1) Jesus--"Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man" (John 8:15) versus Peter--"And he (Jesus--Ed.) commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained to be the Judge of quick and dead" (Acts 10:42). (2) Peter--"The words which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ" (Acts 10:36) versus-- Jesus--"Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I come not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. 10:34). (3) Peter--"Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but to the froward" (1 Peter 2:18) versus Jesus--"...for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve" (Matt.4:10). (4) Peter--"Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins,..." (Acts 2:38) and "he (Peter--Ed.) commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord" (Acts 10:48) versus Jesus--"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. 28:19). Are people to be baptized in the name of Jesus, the Lord, or in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost? (5) Jesus--"It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail" (Luke 16:17) and "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled" (Matt. 5:18) and "the scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do...." (Matt. 23:2-3) and (John 7:19) versus Peter--"And God knows the heart bore witness to them (the gentiles--Ed.), giving them the Holy Spirit just as he did us; and he made no distinction between us and them, but cleansed their hearts by faith. Now therefore why do you make trial of God by putting a yoke (being circumcised and following the Old Law--Ed.) upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we have been able to bear?" (Acts 15:8-10 RSV). Jesus said the Old Law would never fail till all be fulfilled. Yet, Peter considered adherence to it by all gentile converts to be an unnecessary yoke. (6) Jesus--"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. 24:23-24) and "Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Verily I say unto you, there shall no sign be given unto this generation" (Mark 8:12) versus Peter--"Ye men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you,..." (Acts 2:22). Jesus stated that the ability to do miracles does not prove one is approved by God. False christs and false prophets can do as much. Yet, Peter said the ability to do miracles, wonders and signs proved one was approved by God. Jesus also said no sign would be given to his generation but Peter said the opposite occurred. (7) Jesus--"I and my Father are one" (John 10:30) versus Peter--"Who (Jesus--Ed.) is gone into heaven and is on the right hand of God...." (1 Peter 3:22) and (Acts 2:22). How two beings can be one, i.e.

identical, while sitting beside one another is, indeed, perplexing. (8) Jesus--"Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life...." (John 6:54) and "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them to me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" (John 10:27-29) versus Peter--"For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire" (2 Peter 2:20-22). Contrary to Jesus, Peter held that the "sheep" can be plucked out of the Father's hand. Those who have knowledge of Jesus can return to the "pollution of the world." They can accept Jesus and later reject him. (9) Peter--"...but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean" (Acts 10:28) and "Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe. And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith" (Acts 15:7-9) and "Of a truth I perceive that God is not respecter of persons; But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him" (Acts 10:34-35) and (Acts 10:43-45) versus Jesus--"...Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not" (Matt. 10:5) and "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15:24) and "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and cast it to dogs" (Matt. 15:26). Contrary to Peter, Jesus feels some are unclean and unworthy of his message. (10) Peter--"The Lord is not...willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Peter 3:9) versus Jesus--"He (the Lord--Ed.) hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them. These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, and spoke of him" (John 12:40-41).

Peter Vs. Paul--Peter also disagreed with Paul on several issues. (1) Peter--"Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons" (Acts 10:34) versus Paul--"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the the Greek" (Rom. 1:16) and "But glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentiles" (Rom. 2:10) and "Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints" (Col. 1:26) and "As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated" (Rom. 9:13) and "when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them (the Israelites--Ed.) by lot" (Acts 13:19) and (Eph. 3:4-5). Apparently Paul doesn't concur in Peter's belief that God does not play favorites. (2) Peter--"Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you...." (Acts 2:22) versus Paul--"Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders...." (2 Thess. 2:9). Paul's statement clearly shows that the ability to do signs and wonders can not prove one is approved of God as Peter alleges, unless Satan is approved of God. Satan and his agents can also do signs and wonders. (3) Paul--"...and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty" (2 Cor. 2:17) versus Peter--"Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward" (2 Peter 2:18). Telling people to willingly submit to their master regardless of the latter's behavior hardly fosters a spirit of liberty. (4) Peter--"Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe" (Acts 15:7) versus Paul-- "...but on the contrary, when they saw that I had been entrusted with the gospel to the uncircumcised, just as Peter had been entrusted with the gospel to the circumcised (for he who worked through Peter for the mission to the circumcised--the Jews-- worked through me also for the Gentiles)" (Gal. 2:7-8 RSV). Peter and Paul can't even agree on who is to take the message to whom.

Peter Vs. Peter--Peter not only disagreed with others but himself as well. (1) "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons" (Acts 10:34) and (1 Peter 1:17) versus "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9). (2) "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29) versus "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evildoers." (1 Peter 2:13-14). (3) "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment" (2 Peter 2:4) versus "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter 5:8). How could the devil be walking around when he was chained in hell until judgment?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #162 from JW, President of Alpha and Omega Ministries of Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I was recently sent a copy of your periodical entitled "Biblical Errancy" (May 1986). I found it quite interesting, and representative of a view-point I have encountered on numerous occasions. Though a full refutation of the information in the newsletter would be impractical, a few points should be brought up. First, your commentary entitled "Jesus vs. Paul" amazed me. Do you, sir, understand the implications of the word "context"? Does background, chronology, and language enter into this discussion? For example, your first mentioned "contradiction" (Number 18) completely ignores the chronological progression of events. It tears the texts from their context and creates nothing but confusion. Your final statement read, "Jesus told his followers to go only to the Jews, while Paul said there was no difference between Jews and Greeks." This ignores the fact that Jesus' statements were made before his death, burial, and resurrection. After that event Jesus Himself said, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations..." (Matt. 28:19). To postulate a contradiction between Paul and Jesus on the basis of the passages you cited is simply illogical. Only a preconceived prejudice against the Bible could allow such a contention. Is it possible, sir, that you are just as guilty of such a preconception as many Christians are in their remarks?

Editor's Response to Letter #162 (Part a)

Dear JW. Like you, I have encountered the same arguments on numerous occasions and your "out-of-context" pleading is one the most common. You alluded to point #18 in the May 1986 commentary and held that there was no contradiction between Jesus and Paul because the former adopted a new position after his death and resurrection. Oddly enough, we agree on one point. His posture did change. Before his death Jesus said, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15:24) and "Go not into the way of the Gentiles" (Matt. 10:5), while afterwards he said, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations" (Matt. 28:19). So which view represents the real Jesus? I'm not sure. Are we to assume God, i.e. Jesus, changed his mind and completely reversed a very important teaching. I assumed he did not, which accounts for the disagreement with Paul who said, "For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek." If you insist he altered his stance, then you have only eliminated a contradiction between Jesus and Paul by creating one between Jesus and Jesus (which was discussed in Issue 28's commentary--#78). Jesus initially said one thing; afterward he said another. One of his comments is false unless he originally came to save only a small group instead of all mankind. Is that what you are contending? If so, then you had better rewrite some Christian theology. Or, are you saying Jesus, i.e. God, the perfect being who changes not (Mal. 3:6), changed his mind and reversed his teaching merely because he died and was resurrected? Why would his death, burial, and resurrection warrant such a major change or be of significance and weren't those to whom he spoke before his death on the cross given false information? After all he knew he was sent to save more than just the Jews.

Letter #162 Continues (Part b)

Section 21 in the same issue contrasting 1 Tim. 6:16 ("Who, Jesus only hath immortality") with John 3:16 ("For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life") provides another example. Later in the periodical you mention people jumping from version to version in an attempt to defend the Bible. I am surprised that this would even be a problem. You, as the person initiating the discussion, should realize that you are attacking (if you don't mind the term) the veracity of an ancient document that was written in two languages Hebrew and Greek (with some Aramaic). Hence, I would assume that you would be fluent in both languages, or, at the very least, in Greek, as Hebrew is fairly basic, especially in comparison with koine Greek. At any rate, a basic knowledge of Greek would have cleared up your confusion concerning this example. The word found at 1 Tim. 6:16 is atharasion, whereas John 3:16 it is a phrase that is translated "eternal life," that phrase being zoeon aionion. As you can see you are comparing apples and oranges. Also, you mention that only Jesus "has" immortality, supposing this to be a contradiction of Christian teaching concerning immortality of all people. Again, a simple examination of the text is in order. The word translating "hath" in the KJV is a participle in the original, echon. The continuous action, without relationship to time expressed by this participle is significant to the meaning of the passage. I submit that it is your misunderstanding of the passage in its original tongue that causes your "contradiction." Your assault on the Bible without reference to its original tongue is comparable to my attacking Goethe's Faust without a knowledge of German--few would seriously consider my remarks valid. Nowhere is this more clearly seen than in the comment found under Number 29. YOU imagine a difference between Jesus' words in Matt. 19:18 ("Thou shalt do not murder") (Greek: ou phoneuseis) and Paul's in Rom. 13:9 ("Thou shalt not kill")(Greek: ou phoneuseis). As you can see, there is absolutely no difference whatever in the two occurrences--both are quoting directly from the Septuagint (LXX) version at Exodus 20:13 ("Thou shalt not kill") (20:15 in the LXX). Your comments demonstrate an extremely shallow depth of research on your part. I would hope that you would remove this example in a coming edition of "Biblical Errancy."

Editor's Response to Letter 162 (Part b)

I realize that apologists, such as yourself, place great reliance on the "back to Greek and Hebrew" defense, JW. Some even like to think of it as their ace-in-the-hole. If there were unanimity among scholars and only one version available, their dream would be plausible. But, unfortunately for them, anything but agreement reigns supreme and widely varying versions abound. Your own example shows this quite well. You said there was no difference between Matt. 19:18 ("Thou shalt do no murder") and Rom. 13:9 ("Thou shalt not kill") because both came from "ou phoneuseis" in Greek. That is in direct opposition to some of the most widely accepted versions on the market today. Since you questioned my knowledge of Greek and Hebrew, I'd like to pose some questions to you. How many years have you studied Greek and Hebrew? Have you ever taught it on a professional, full-time basis? Are you an expert, a recognized authority on these languages? With all due respect, I doubt it. Those who translated Greek and Hebrew into such versions as the King James, the Revised Standard, the New American Standard, the New American Bible etc. are such experts. Indeed, many have devoted their lives to linguistics. And the consensus of several of these committees is opposed to your analysis of our example. The translators of the KJV say "murder" is the proper word in Matt. 19:18, while "kill" is the best term to use in Rom. 13:9. Are you saying they don't know the difference, that they don't know how to translate? Are you saying you know Greek and Hebrew better than those who assembled the KJV? They say there is a difference, while you say there isn't. Before leaping to the common response that later research has corrected some errors in the KJV, you had better take note of the fact that several of the newest versions agree with the King James. The Modern Language says "murder" (Matt. 19:18) and "kill" (Rom. 13:9), the New American Bible says "kill" (Matt. 19:18) and "murder" (Rom. 13:9), and the New English Bible says "murder" (Matt. 19:18) and "kill" (Rom. 13:9). So clearly the experts on several committees say there is a difference where you deny one exists. This is typical of the type of problem that arises when you return to the "original" Greek and Hebrew to see what the text says. Even the experts clash. They often don't agree on which text to use among the multitude available and they often don't agree on what the text says even when agreement is reached on the text to use. The dispute as to whether "almah" in Isaiah 7:14 means a "virgin" or a "young woman" has never been resolved. I could become one of the world's greatest Hebrew/Greek scholars and still find many knowledgeable people who disagree with my interpretation. The example you gave demonstrates the problem quite clearly. Does "ou phoneuseis" mean "kill" or "murder." Certainly there is a difference between killing and murdering. The KJ, the NAS, the Modern Language, and the NE versions contend one "ou phoneuseis" does not equal the other. So we have disagreement within these versions. We also have the problem of versions that are internally consistent but in opposition to one another. For example, the RSV says "kill" (Matt 19:18) and "kill" (Rom. 13:9) as does the Living Bible, the New American Standard and the New Jerusalem. The NIV, the NASB, the NWT, and the TEV, on the other hand, say "murder" (Matt. 19:18) and "murder" (Rom. 13:9). So who is right? Who knows Greek best? Which group of Greek scholars should we accept? And these men have devoted decades to these languages. That's why BE does not become involved in linguistics and translations. It's a never-ending struggle often decided more by political expediency than objective scholarship. It's the same kind of expediency that decided which books would enter the canon to begin with. BE only requires apologists to stay with one version or the other and relates problems primarily from the KJV because it's accepted by the largest number of people. Relating every disagreement within and between all versions is out of the question.

Your reconciliation of the disagreement between 1 Tim. 6:16 ("Jesus only hath immortality") and John 3:16 ("whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life") doesn't fare much better, JW. You say the word in 1 Tim. 6:16 is athanasian which Webster defines as "immortal (Greek: a-without + thanatos-death) and view that as different from the "eternal life" in John 3:16. How "immortality" differs from "eternal life" is a distinction only theologians can visualize. I'd say we are comparing apples to apples. Like many apologetic theologians you are trying to create a distinction where non exists. Your attempt to solve the "only Jesus has immortality" problem is muddled at best. You said, "the word translating `hath' in the KJV is a participle in the original, echon. The continuous action without relationship to time expressed by this participle is significant to the meaning of the passage." How it is significant and what "continuous action" has to do with the issue, one can only surmise. Either Jesus is or is not the only immortal being.

You implied that only those fluent in Greek and Hebrew are qualified to critique the Bible. But, that goes two ways. Are you sufficiently fluent in these languages to defend the Book? And, even more importantly, are you more fluent than recognized experts on translation committees such that you can tell them their understanding of a passage is in error? You need to realize that some of your points exhibit disagreement more with them than with me, JW. You say there is no difference between the "ou phoneuseis" of Matt. 19:18 and the "ou phoneuseis" of Rom. 13:9; whereas, the translators of the KJ, the NAB, the ML, and NE versions say there is. With all due respect, I'm more inclined to believe them than you. And since BE can only focus on one version at a time we have stressed problems within the KJ.

Letter #162 Continues (Part c)

The examples such as the above abound. Number 31 ("one's ruler beareth not the sword in vain" versus "all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword") would be humorous if it were not found in the context of your periodical, as is #33 (Paul quotes Jesus as saying, "It is more blessed to give than to receive" when Jesus made no such statement anywhere in Scripture)--see John 21:25 ("But there are also many other things which Jesus did; were every one of them to be written, I suppose that the world itself could not contain the books that would be written"). Number 34 ("I and my Father are one" versus "It is Christ who is even at the right hand of God") deals with in-depth theology, a subject that I really don't believe you are prepared to handle, given the above examples of your work. What gender is the word "one" in, and what significance does that have?

Editor's Response to Letter #162 (Part c)

In all honesty, JW, I fail to see the humor in #31. Seems like a clear-cut inconsistency to me! Your comment with respect to #33 does, however, have some merit. As long as you are willing to admit that the statement attributed to Jesus by Paul does not exist in Scripture, I am willing to admit there could be an extra-biblical comment to that effect. But don't give people the impression, as is often done, that such a statement by Jesus can be found in the Bible. As far as #34 is concerned, some of that "in-depth theology" on the Trinity was covered in Issues 15, 18, 36, and 38 which you don't appear to have read. Instead of answering the trinitarian dilemma posed, you merely belittled my understanding and asked an innocuous question about gender which has little relevance and less impact. I've debated the Trinity on numerous occasions and seriously doubt you could add anything new. But I'm willing to listen.

Letter #162 Concludes (Part d)

At any rate, I do look forward to receiving your work. I do not believe that you demonstrated so much as one contradiction in your paper, and looking over the vain attempts of atheists and others to confound the Word of God only strengthens my faith in that book. I do not blindly accept anything--I have examined your "facts" and found them wanting. Please reply to the information I have provided you.

Editor's Response to Letter #162 (Part d)

Do you honestly expect me to believe that you "do not blindly accept anything, JW. You condemned BE before hearing my responses, without reading prior issues, without addressing many other points that were made; without giving clear, unmuddled responses to the problems you chose to discuss, and without acknowledging your own limitations with respect to Greek and Hebrew. You have not examined my "facts" but only examined some facts, very few, in fact. Moreover, confounding the "Word of God" is not the purpose of this publication, JW. We only ask that you examine all the evidence before accepting the Bible as the "Word of God." But you have acted in precisely the opposite manner. You accepted it as the Word of God long ago and have been judging all evidence accordingly. That which corroborates your belief has been retained; that which doesn't has been discarded.

And finally, since you are rather generous with gratuitous advice let me respond with some of my own. Never talk as if you have the final word on what the text says when even the experts don't agree and, remember, Greek and Hebrew are no different from other languages. They are constantly changing and often open to varying interpretations.

Letter #163 from AS of Chicago, Illinois

Dennis. I am a fan of BE, and I look forward to each new edition. I wanted to thank you for our recent comments on cannibalism. However, there was a statement you made within that text that I disagreed with, and I felt you should know about it. You said, "Merely relating instances of cannibalism, rape, incest, or other atrocious behavior doesn't mean such activities are being fostered or proposed." Christians always claim their God is all-powerful. This being the case, he has the power to STOP any activity he sees that he doesn't like. To me, when this God sees cannibalism, rape, incest, or murder occurring, and these offenses should offend a just, loving God, and he does not stop it, he is condoning it.... If this is true, why do Christians consider this a God worth worshipping? This is one of the reasons I'm an atheist. I can't see why a just, loving God would let these things happen, unless there was no God to prevent them.

Editor's Response to Letter #163

Dear AS. Your position seems reasonable but I'm afraid I'll have to stand by my earlier comment. Far be it from me to defend biblicism but I can't agree with the belief that God does not exist because he fails to turn the world into a heaven on earth. The belief that the undesirable must exist for us to have choices by which to strengthen our character and earn our way seems more plausible. The idea that God should do it all while we enjoy nirvana without effort doesn't sit well with me. That's why BE has never held, as do many in the freethought movement, that God does not exist because if he did he would clean up the planet. Although your argument is good and merits consideration, I feel better ones are available.

COMMENTARY

God, Prayer, and Miracles--During an extrabiblical response to last month's letter #163 we told AS that better questions could be directed to theists concerning the alleged existence of God than how a just and omnipotent being could permit atrocious behavior. Several of these queries have always bothered us and need to be brought out. First, why does matter, which is known to exist, have to have a creator, while God whose existence is not known does not? Why couldn't only matter or the material world have always existed? Why can't it be eternal? Secondly, and in close conjunction with the first, where can one see an act or event that can not be explained by logical, natural causes? Aspects of quantum mechanics aren't sufficient. Biblicists talk interminably about miracles and divine intervention. In fact, one can say without fear of exaggeration that few topics receive more attention with less evidence. Religious writings and comparable literature are awash with them; yet, proof, evidence, and data of a tangible, verifiable nature are all but non-existent. If God's existence is shown by his interference in the affairs of mankind, if he alters the course of events or changes what would otherwise occur, then events must happen for which no natural explanation exists. The cause must be supernatural, i.e., beyond nature. Yet, biblicists are wholly unable to provide such proof. Prayer is viewed by many as one means by which such intervention is effectuated. Believers constantly give examples of prayers being answered while conveniently ignoring two major considerations. What about all the prayers that did not materialize which unquestionably far outnumber those that appear to have been met? The cemeteries are replete with people who prayed; they prayed so hard it hurt, but they died anyway. And, as far as those prayers that appear to have been satisfied are concerned, how does one know that that which was sought would not have occurred in any event? If that which is pursued by prayer happens, how does one know prayer was the cause? After all, one could pray for a new governor or president, which will occur regardless, and conclude one's prayer was the motivating factor. Hardly a rational approach! And thirdly, there is the question of the burden of proof. Those who doubt the existence of God or the supernatural should not seek to prove their non-existence as they are under no obligation to do so. A fundamental axiom of science and reasonable thought is that the onus of proof lies on he who alleges. It's the theist, the supernaturalist who must prove. He is the one obligated to repeatedly provide evidence for all to see. If a scientist says he will create an explosion by dropping a lump of sodium into water, he can demonstrate the truthfulness of his belief by repeatedly doing so. One need not believe him but only request proof. When someone says he talks with Jesus on a regular basis or other people offer different beliefs of a similar ilk, the burden of proof rests on their shoulders. Realizing that beliefs aren't valid merely because they can't be disproven is of crucial importance. Otherwise, every belief of every individual would be true until shown to be false, which would create an absurd situation. How would one prove people do not live inside the planet Neptune to someone who believed they do? How would one prove the gods, spirits, devils, and demons of different religions are the product of imaginations unleashed? How would one prove we are not followed by green men to those who clearly see them? How would one prove an eternal, omnipotent being, a giant, or a group of gods did not create everything? The sky's the limit if the burden of proof is lifted from the shoulders of those making claims and placed on those who don't believe until provided evidence. AS's letter deserved a more extensive reply and hopefully that requirement has been addressed.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #164 from IF of Vacaville, California

Dennis. In your answer to AS's letter #163 in Issue #44 you finally admitted you are a deist. No one has proven the existence of a deity that is unseen, silent, and does nothing in the face of tremendous evils that befall mankind. Your deity is the invention of ignorant hallucinating, primitive priestcrafts. Man's most useless invention. In the time I've subscribed to BE you never mentioned your background. Have you studied for the ministry?

Editor's Response to Letter #164

IF. Where did I state in that short paragraph at the end of last month's issue that I believed in a deity of any kind? AS and I were discussing the best strategy by which to confront those believing in an omnipotent, just being. Whether or not such a being existed wasn't even the issue. I feel that arguments such as those in this month's commentary present biblicists and theists with poignant and effective questions from which escape is more difficult. At least they have always been among those that troubled me the most. If AS feels his approach will touch more people, then, by all means, he should use it at every opportunity. No doubt many are influenced by his contention that a truly just and loving God would never allow rape, incest, murder, and other atrocious behavior to exist. I, myself, said it was a good argument. Judging from your letter my position should have been made clearer. Including me among believing in an unseen, silent deity created by ignorant hallucinating priests has never occurred before and hopefully will never occur again. This publication would never create, support, or condone any beliefs in the supernatural, including those pertaining to gods, devils, demons, spirits, and angels. As I mentioned many issues ago, my background is primarily in the field of education with a bachelor's degree in philosophy and a master's in the social sciences. I've never participated in any formal biblical training and consider that a definite plus because I've been able to view the Bible with a critical eye and few preconceptions. Most biblicists, on the other hand, have been taught what to seek and, thus, what to avoid, which amounts to little more than being guided in such a manner as to read the Book through a filter of expectations. Verses affirming what one has been taught are accepted while those to the contrary have been ignored or rationalized. Inculcating children before they are able to critically analyze and compare is key to the whole process.

Letter #165 from KG of Champaign, Illinois (Part a)

Dear Dennis. First, let me state that I am a devout atheist living for the day religion peters out due to rationality. I've got some comments I'd like to make. I think it's important to distinguish between hard contradictions, vague contradictions, and non-contradictions. I'll speak of issue #44. Number 6 is a hard, irreparable contradiction, as are most of your points. But I'd say #2 ("preaching peace by Jesus Christ" in Acts 10:36 VERSUS "I come not to send peace, but a sword" in Matt. 10:34) is a vague contradiction, meaning it's open to interpretation. Although Jesus did say this about the sword, it's obvious he didn't come to earth to cause wars. I think it's evident that Jesus was an opportunist and knew what to say to who and when to gain the sympathies of the masses, and this may be an example. Granted I have no idea what he meant by saying all those seemingly irresponsible statements in Matt. 10:34-36.

Editor's Response to Letter #165 (Part a)

Dear KG. Although some verses are no doubt clearer than others, limits exist to the "it's to be interpreted figuratively" defense. Granted, when Jesus said he was a door (John 10:9) and was laying down his life for sheep (John 10:15), he did not mean he was a real door dying for real sheep. One must concede some poetic license. But bounds do exist and when Jesus said he came to bring a sword, I see no reason to doubt that he intended to utter words which would set people against one another, which, indeed, has occurred. Why do you say "it's obvious Jesus didn't come to earth to cause wars" when his followers have not only warred against non-believers for their religious convictions but themselves as well. Moreover, if he didn't intend to generate friction and strife, then he shouldn't have said as much. If he didn't mean "to set man at variance against his father and the daughter against her mother,...(Matt. 10:35), then he shouldn't have said it. You stated, "I have no idea what he meant by saying all those seemingly irresponsible statements in Matt. 10:34-36" when it's clear he meant what he said. Be careful! Don't succumb to a common weakness of biblicists. When Jesus and other figures say or do things that don't conform to their preconceptions, they often ignore or rationalize the message.

Letter #165 Continues (Part b)

An example of a non-contradiction is #3 (Peter--"Servants, be subject to your masters" versus Jesus--"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve"). Here is where the usually sophisticated argument of context has merit. Peter and Jesus were obviously talking about two different things. Peter was speaking of "earthly" conduct towards government, albeit, because he believed governors and kings were tools of god. Jesus was speaking of the worship of one god only, forsaking false gods. I would have left this item out. We, as critics of the bible, do not want to come across as "irrational" fanatics, grasping at straws to condemn the bible.

Editor's Response to Letter #165 (Part b)

You are giving the same defense often employed by apologists, KG,--"That's what it says but that's not what it means." But if it meant something else, then it should have said something else. This is the kind of problem you have when you are working with a book that deals in absolutes. If the Bible dealt more with shades of gray or qualified statements with greater precision, problems of this nature would fade, but it doesn't. So we are left to conclude that it means what it says and says what it means. You say they were "obviously" talking about two different things when an anarchist could just as easily conclude they were discussing the same topic and Jesus was arguing for anarchism. I don't know your religious background but you appear to be reflecting a preconception of what Jesus should be teaching and are molding verses accordingly. Be careful with the word "obviously." What's obvious to one can be interpreted differently by others. As I've said before, even though apologists can rationalize problems, we are still going to present them and allow readers to judge the plausibility of their own explanations for themselves.

Letter #165 Concludes (Part c)

Have you ever given thought to comparing discrepancies between factions in christianity? I'm talking about the main factions as considering them all would be impossible. Or how about commentaries concerning totally fabricated doctrines such as immaculate conception, original sin, indulgences, etc. That would be fascinating. Keep up the good work.

Editor's Response to Letter 165 (Part c)

I've considered your suggestions, KG, and hope to employ them someday. But they have a rather low priority because of more pressing concerns. They would not only involve some extrabiblical issues but some degree of risk. To compare the teachings of one denomination with those of another could imply that one group was more correct, more truthful, or more reliable than another. BE is not concerned with whether or not baptists know theology better than methodists or presbyterians but with proving that anyone reclining on the Bible for truth, guidance, and comfort rests on a weak foundation, indeed.

Letter #166 from VT of Huron, California

Glancing at the latest edition of BE, I'm compelled to send the following little paragraph or two. I CONTEND: If we believe the truth, it is because we choose to receive it: if we reject it, it is because we will to reject or disbelieve.... Just my thoughts, my opinions. O yes, my opinion is based on PREJUDICE! You see, I'm very, very opinionated...I read BE. I read this and I read that. If I'm convinced of any one thing, it is that the BIBLE IS THE INERRANT WORD OF THE LIVING GOD. For me there is no controversy.... The Bible says it, I believe it, and that settles it.

Editor's Response to Letter #166

It took a long time VT, but I'm glad to see you finally admit that your opinions are based on prejudice and you are opinionated. Webster defines prejudice as "a judgment or opinion formed before the facts are known, a judgement or opinion held in disregard of facts that contradict it, an unreasonable bias" and opinionated is defined as "holding unreasonably or obstinately to one's own opinions." Judging from what you have said here and in prior letters, need I say more. Your final comment (The Bible says it....") is the logical outcome of what you have already conceded and a poor argument to direct to this publication. The Bible says what? What does it say you must do to be saved? What does it say about God's face being seen or God's repenting? Does it say all men are sinners or who was Joseph's father? What does it say about Jesus being God? In these instances and thousands more the Bible says one thing on one page and something else on another. Even if someone took the Book seriously and agreed to accept whatever it taught, VT, he still wouldn't know what to believe. You think you know but that's because you have never critically compared one part of the Book with another.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter # 167 from Mark Potts, 8510-A East 66th Pl. South, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

Dear Dennis. Regarding your exchange with VT of Huron, California in Letter #153, I'd like to ask a question: If we inherit Original Sin, why was Noah exempt? The Bible says Noah was both perfect (gen. 6:9) and righteous (Gen. 7:1), so he was obviously a break in the transmission of Original Sin. Also, since we are all allegedly descended from Noah, how could we have Original Sin today if Noah lacked it?

Secondly, regarding Jack Trimpey's implication in Letter #157 that "christians" somehow represent a high level of morality, I'd like to point out that the standard biblicist doctrine of salvation through faith in no way discourages immoral behavior. When a person gets "saved," so the story goes, it happens regardless of his merit or moral actions. You can't work your way into heaven, so your immoral actions are quite irrelevant to your salvation. By the logic of this teaching, if Hitler had accepted Jesus a minute before he died he would have appeared before God with a clean slate.... (Not that I take an afterlife seriously).

Regarding your exchange with JW in Letter #162, I'd like to point out there are other biblicists who eschew Greek and Hebrew scholarship altogether, and insist that all you need to understand an English translation of the Bible (usually the KJV) is the guidance of the "Holy Spirit." Since the biblicists themselves can't agree on what one needs to understand the Bible, how can they possibly advise us in this matter with any assurance?

I also have some other problems to pass along. According to 3 John 11, "He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God." Does this include Satan, who saw God in Job 1:6-12? And does this include Judas, who followed Jesus (God)? According to 1 John 4:15, "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."

Does this cover devils and unclean spirits who readily acknowledge Jesus in Matt. 8:29, Mark 1:25, 5:7, and Acts 19:15? Acts 13:37 says, "But he, whom God raised again, saw no corruption." But if Jesus' resurrection body saw no corruption, why did it still bear the scars of his execution (John 20:25, 27-28)? Heb. 8:6-7 indicates that the original covenant created by God has been replaced by a "better covenant." Couldn't God have made a perfect covenant to begin with? When a biblicist says the Old Law is no longer in effect, shouldn't we ask, where in the Bible does it say God's Law has an expiration date? And when is the New Law laid down by Jesus and Paul supposed to expire? Biblicists assert that the penalty for our sins is "death" or eternal damnation (Rom. 6:23). Yet, they also tell us that Jesus took the penalty of our sins upon himself that we might be saved (Heb. 9:28). If that's the case, then why is Jesus in heaven instead of hell? Both Heb. 9:26 ("but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself") and 1 Cor. 5:7 ("For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us") assert that Jesus' death was a sacrifice for our sins. But there are problems with this notion: (1) When you sacrifice a living organism it stays dead. It doesn't come back to life on the third day. (2) God disavows the custom of sacrifice in Jer. 7:22 ("For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices") (also Isa. 1:11). (3) Why would God accept a sacrifice when one of his inspired prophets states that sacrifice is a second-rate form of worship (1 Sam. 15:22). And finally, Paul states in Rom. 8:7 ("the carnal mind is enmity against God"), 1 Cor. 2:14 ("the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God") and 2 Cor. 4:4 ("the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not") that unsaved people cannot understand spiritual matters. But since biblicists assert that everyone starts out unsaved, how can anyone ever figure out what to do to be saved? An apologist might argue that God gives people spiritual knowledge through divine intervention, but that's equivalent to saying that the apologist needs to invoke a miracle to save his theory. The Bible gets itself into trouble by making unconditional statements and then providing exceptions.

Now I'd like to relate my radio adventure. "Talkback with Bob Larson" is a live, call-in Christian radio talkshow broadcast via satellite from Denver. In Tulsa we get it on KCFO-AM 970 starting at 3:00 P.M. every weekday. Judging from the geographical distribution of the show's callers, I'd say it has anywhere from 100,000 to 1,000,000 listeners. Normally Larson discusses social issues from a Christian perspective, but on July 1-3 he was taking calls on theological matters. On July 3rd his guest was an apologist named Richard Yawn. I called right at 3:00, got through (which surprised me, since his switchboard is usually jammed by that time) and said on the air that I was not a Christian, but that I had studied the Bible for a number of years (I have found this to be a good "icebreaker" when I want to ask a biblicist a few deprogramming questions. I then asked the apologist why we're being punished for what Adam and Eve did, and how these alleged first parents could have sinned if they were originally perfect. To the first question Yawn replied that we are NOT being punished because of Adam and Eve; each person is punished for his own sins. His answer is plainly contrary to Paul's assertions in Rom. 5:12-19, but I decided to let that slide, since his answer to my second question was easier to attack. To the second question Yawn replied that, yes, Adam and Eve were originally perfect, but they also possessed the magical power called "free will" which allowed them to choose to rebel against God. Larson then turned to me for a rebuttal, and I accused Yawn of begging my second question. Regardless of how much "free will" Adam and Eve allegedly had, since they were PERFECT, how could they have sinned under ANY circumstances? Larson then changed the subject to my integrity. He asked me if I had "sin" in my life. I confessed to eating pork, which the Bible clearly condemns in Lev. 11:7, but that wasn't the sort of "sin" he had in mind. He pressed me on this point, so, to keep the discussion going, I admitted that I had my share of FAILINGS. Larson then asked me what I was going to do about my sin. He was obviously expecting a biblical answer, so I gave him one--but not the one he wanted. I responded that according to what Jesus told a man in Matt. 19 all I'd have to do to attain eternal life is to follow the Commandments and give my money away. That caught him off guard even better than my remark about pork. He started quoting salvation-by-faith verses to me, but I counter-attacked by pointing out that the passage in Matt. 19 is a straight-forward question-and-answer; there is nothing there to "interpret." I also asked where Jesus states that his salvation advice to the man in Matt. 19 doesn't work. He had no good answers. I topped off by saying that if you had only the gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke as spiritual guides, the only conclusion you could draw is that you get saved by being humble, following the Commandments, and giving your wealth to the poor. Only in John and in Paul's writings do you find salvation-by-faith. By that time I had worn out my welcome, so I graciously signed off. Neither Larson nor Yawn got mad but I sure had them sweating. Reached a lot of people, too. How often do biblicists meet or hear someone who talks sense about the Bible? I think that our phone-call showed some of the potential an organized anti-biblical movement could have.

Editor's Response to Letter #167

Dear Mark. Your call to the station was an excellent idea although I'm not sure how much of a hearing you will be allowed when they control the equipment and finance the air time. Millions of people are receiving a one-sided presentation of the Bible and actions such as yours are strongly needed if the trend is to be reversed. BE exists not only to inform but to stress upon people the importance of carrying information to others. Merely learning the Bible's inadequacies is insufficient. One must also relay them to others on a continuous basis as people are not going to alter long held beliefs after a mere 30 minute conversation. Hundreds, if not thousands, of informed spokesmen teaching a kind of Sunday-School-in-Reverse are sorely needed. If people such as you and I don't expose the Bible's problems, who will? Certainly ministers, priests, and rabbis won't. They are out to sell the Book not disprove it. Some freethinkers seem to feel that once they have more than enough information to realize the Bible falls far short of its billing, they can drop the whole matter. Not by a long ways! Not when biblicists dominate society. I may lose interest in the Bible but tens of millions haven't. And since they are "running the show" I'm forced to concentrate on whatever interests them, although I may be bored to tears and wish to progress beyond superstitious nonsense.

Letter No. 168 from RT of Piedras, Puerto Rico

Dear Mr. McKinsey. The latest BE (#44) was a gem.... I find BE to be a very interesting publication. For many years I thought little at all about religion, having become an atheist in my teens or early 20's. But not long ago, I subscribed to cable TV and have been continually horrified by the amount of religious nonsense displayed almost continuously, much of it morally degenerate and self-serving. On top of that I find myself living in an unusually religious society, compared to U.S. society generally, and am frequently in contact with people who profess to believe in the literal truth of the Bible. (Oddly enough, my girlfriend is a fundamentalist Christian). Since Christians usually have an explanation for any apparent contradiction, I think the only way is to overwhelm them with contradictions and errors, which is what your publication holds some promise of doing. (the resilience to evidence, however, is amazing). In attempting to answer all contradictions, one hopes that they will eventually perceive that they have tied themselves in a knot and further see that the only escape is to cut it and leave the shreds behind. The Worldwide Church of God people are fond of saying the Bible is like a jigsaw puzzle, but in fact it is more like 50 partial puzzles dumped in one box and sold as a complete puzzle. Christianity condemns itself with the immense variety of ways in which the Bible has been interpreted. It is impossible to derive a unified body of doctrine from it. Along with simply pointing out Biblical contradictions, I think this is one of the strongest arguments that one can use when discussing biblical errancy with Bible-believers. Reiterating the various contradictory beliefs derived from the Bible can (but will not inevitably) make a dent in the armor of certainty. I am told that if one prays earnestly for guidance and reads the Bible that one will come to know the correct meaning. If one points out that thousands of Christians over the millenia have read and prayed for guidance and gotten different answers, this is a lance-point wedged under one of the belly scutes of irrational belief....

Letter #169 from MJ of Wenatchee, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I have read all of the monthly issues you have produced and I am very impressed. I believe you have done an excellent job in research and analysis concerning the various contradictions and inconsistencies contained within the Bible. I have read several books dealing with Biblical contradictions and the origin of the early Christian Church, but your publication is the first I have seen dealing with this subject on a monthly basis. Your publication has an excellent potential to be distributed on a full national and international basis. We are fortunate to live in such an enlightened and liberal period.... Had such a publication been produced only a mere 100 or 200 years ago in certain sections of Europe, the author/ publisher would have been subject to severe punishment....

EDITOR'S NOTE: The editor of this publication has accepted a gracious invitation to speak on Saturday, October 11th, to members of the FREEDOM FROM RELIGION FOUNDATION at their 3-day convention in Madison, Wisconsin.

COMMENTARY

Biblical "History" (Part One of a Four-Part Series)--Historical problems, inconsistencies, and contradictions comprise a significant part of the Bible and include a sizable body of extra-biblical information. Examples are not hard to find although some facts and figures are still in dispute: (1) "Thirty and two years old was he (Jehoram--Ed.) when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem 8 years, and departed without being desired. Howbeit they buried him in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings" (2 Chron. 21:20) and "the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead.... So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned. Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign...." (1 Chron. 22:1-2). If Jehoram began to reign at age 32 and ruled 8 years, then he died at age 40. Yet, his son took over at age 42. Imagine a son two years older than his father! (2) "In the thirty and first (31st) year of Asa king of Judah began Omri to reign over Israel, twelve years:...." (1 Kings 16:23) versus "So Omri slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria and Ahab his son reigned in his stead. And in the thirty and eighth (38th) year of Asa king of Judah began Ahab the son of Omri to reign over Israel" (1 Kings 16:28-29). How could Omri have reigned 12 years if he ruled from the 31st to the 38th year of Asa's rule? And how could Ahab have taken over from his father Omri in the 38th year of Asa's rule when Omri didn't give up his rule until the 43rd year of Asa's rule (31 + 12=43)? (3) "Solomon had three score and ten thousand (70,000) that bare burdens, and four score thousand (80,000) hewers in the mountains; Beside the chief of Solomon's officers which were over the work, three thousand and three hundred (3,300) which ruled over the people that wrought in the work" (1 Kings 5:15-16) and "the house which king Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was threescore (60) cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits and the height thereof thirty cubits" (1 Kings 6:2) and "...So he was 7 years in building it" (1 Kings 6:38). It took 153,300 men seven years to build a house that was 60 cubits by 20 cubits by 30 cubits or 96 X 32 X 48 feet. The mountain labored and brought forth a mouse. (4) Now, behold, in my (David--Ed.) trouble I have prepared for the house of the Lord an hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver...." (1 Chron. 22:14). The gold collected amounted to $3 billion and the silver amounted to $2 billion. In other words, David gathered more bullion than was possessed by the Roman Empire at the height of its power. (5) "Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred threescore and six (666) talents of gold...." (1 Kings 10:14). A talent of gold is worth over $29,000. The chief of a petty, barren district of Asia Minor without significant arts, manufacture, or civilization received $20,000,000 per year. Yet, the Romans only got $22,500,000 from all their Asiatic provinces. (6) "Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the world...." (Ezra 1:2). When did Cyrus rule all the world or all the known world? (7) "...so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand (500,000) chosen men" (2 Chron. 13:17). If this is a correct figure, what a massacre! At Gettysburg, the greatest battle of the Civil War, the defeated army lost fewer than 5,000 men or 1/100th the number. (8) "It came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth (480th) year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the 4th year of Solomon's reign over Israel...." (1 Kings 6:1) versus "About the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness. And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot. And after that he gave unto them judges about the space of 450 years until Samuel the prophet (who lived before Solomon--Ed.)." If there were 480 years between the time they left Egypt until the 4th year of Solomon's reign and Judges ruled for 450 of these years, then that would mean that Saul and David, both of whom lived before Solomon, could only have ruled for a total of 30 years. Yet, David, alone, ruled 40 years as 2 Sam. 5:4 ("David was 30 years old when he began to reign, and he reigned 40 years") shows. (9) "The first of the firstfruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the Lord thy God" (Ex. 23:19). Exodus was supposedly written by Moses. Yet, how could this verse have been written before the time of Solomon; for God had no house prior to the erection of the temple in 1004 B.C. which was 447 years after Moses? When David proposed to build God a house He forbade it and said he had never lived in a house since they left Egypt. "Whereas I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle" (2 Sam. 7:6). (10) "Your children shall wander in the wilderness for forty years...." (Num. 14:33). Does "wander" mean "lost?" If so, how could they be lost for 40 years in an area only 400 miles wide at its widest part? (11) "Hiram said moreover, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel that made heaven and earth...." (2 Chron. 2:12). Hiram, king of Tyre, was not a Jew. Would he have said that the God of Israel made heaven and earth? (12) "Abijah set the battle in array with an army of valiant men of war, even 400,000 chosen men; Jeroboam also set the battle in array against him with 800,000 chosen men, being mighty men of valour" (2 Chron. 13:3). All these soldiers were Jews; all lived in Palestine, a poor miserable little country about 1/4th the size of New York. Yet, 1,200,000 soldiers were put in the field. This would have required a population of 10 to 12 million which is absurd. Palestine could have barely supported 2,000,000. (13) "and the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives, of which the name of the one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah: and he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools, if it be a son, then ye shall kill him: but it be a daughter, then she shall live" (Ex. 1:15-16). Would the Pharaoh have entrusted the execution of a command on which he thought the safety of the kingdom depended, to Hebrews. It is all but certain that the midwives were Egyptian not Hebrew. Shiphrah and Puah are Egyptian names. Josephus says they were Egyptian (Antiq. B2, Ch. 9:2).

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #170 from JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries of Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. In response to your reply found in BE of August 1986 I will attempt to be brief, as your space is limited. DM, your point that Jesus contradicted Jesus by, after His death and resurrection, commanding the disciples to go unto all the world is built upon the supposition that Jesus' command to the disciples ("I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel"--Matt. 15:24--Ed.) originally was meant to be eternal. There is no indication that it was. You don't seem to feel Jesus could direct His ministry in the best way possible. Quoting Mal. 3:6 ("For I am the Lord God; I change not") begs the issue as it removes the phrase from its context and misapplies it to a completely different issue. Jesus did not "change his teaching" merely because He died and was resurrected--the death and resurrection of Christ (as the Bible makes clear) was the focal point of the entire NT revelation. The standards you apply to Jesus are at best extremely unrealistic. During his ministry He sent the twelve to the Jews only as He came as their Messiah; upon their rejection of Him and His death and resurrection, the Gospel was opened up to all who would believe. If you think this is a contradiction, fine. Most would disagree.

Editor's Response to Letter #170 (Part a)

Dear JW. So many of your comments warrant analysis tht one hardly knows where to begin. (1) You state that there is no reason to suppose that Jesus' original command to his disciples was meant to be eternal. But what else could have been intended when he said "I am not sent but unto?" If you're going to employ this line of defense you're going to throw out the baby with the bathwater. Literally thousands of biblical statements will be brought into question. One could ignore any biblical maxim by simply saying it only applied to the individuals directly involved and the period in which it was uttered. If the absolutist nature of many biblical teachings is jettisoned, the structure will begin to disintegrate. One could argue, for example, that the "Thou's" in the Ten Commandments only apply to the persons being directly addressed. Secondly, what evidence do you have that it was not eternal? I see no such qualifier in the text. You talk about a "supposition"; yet, you are supposing something less than eternity when nothing in the text justifies your belief. Thirdly, even if the statement was meant to be valid only for a short period, you have only shown that Jesus changed his mind and strategy. The perfect, omniscient being altered his course! This could be seen as more damaging than a contradiction. Fourth, you said "Jesus could direct His ministry in the best way possible." Yet, one can't help but ask, "What's best about it?" The supposedly prescient, perfect being changed tactics and abandoned a crucial teaching. (2) Your comment that Mal 3:6 was misapplied and taken out of context has no merit not only because biblicists constantly quote the verse in any context deemed suitable but because it is appropriate. Jesus is God and God does not change his basic nature, which includes consistency. For Jesus to change a basic teaching, especially because it was rejected by those to whom it was directed, would not only be inconsistent but expedient. (3) You accuse me of contending that Jesus changed his mind because of his death and resurrection when that was your position. Remember saying, "Your final statement read, `Jesus told his followers to go only to the Jews'.... This ignores the fact that Jesus' statements were made before his death, burial and resurrection. After that event Jesus said...teach all nations" (Issue #44, p.3). (4) You accuse me of applying unrealistic standards to Jesus when all I'm requesting is consistency. Is that too much to ask of a perfect being? (5) What do you mean by saying, "the gospel was opened up...?" You mean Jesus only came to save the Jews and only turned to the gentiles because the Jews rejected him? You mean we can all be saved only because the Jews eschewed him. How does it feel to be a consolation prize, separate from God's first choice, especially when this flies in the face of Acts 10:34 and Rom. 2:11 which say God is impartial? (6) Finally, it isn't a question of whether I think this is a contradiction; I know it is. Jesus originally said I am not sent but unto and later sent his followers to all nations. The "most" whom you contend would not feel this is a contradiction are biblicists and that's to be expected.

Letter #170 Continues (Part b)

Part (b) truly amazed me. The main proof you attempted to argue had to do with the fact that you had claimed a contradiction between Paul and Jesus at Matt. 19:18 ("Thou shalt do no murder") and Romans 13:9 ("Thou shalt not kill"). You wrote, "Jesus and Paul can't seem to agree on the wording of the 6th Commandment regarding killing." I simply pointed out to you that you were wrong. Both Jesus and Paul said the exact same thing--ou phoneuseis--hence, they obviously did agree on the wording of the 6th Commandment. Your claim was wrong. How an English, German, or French translator or anyone else renders ou phoneuseis into their own tongue is completely irrelevant to the issue you brought up. If you have problems with Matt. 19:18/Rom. 13:9 bring it up with the translators, not with the Bible. There is no contradiction as the exact same word is used. You spent nearly a full page begging an issue that had not even been raised. I would challenge you to look up the passage in a modern critical text and see for yourself. And then to say that my comment "is in direct opposition to some of the most widely accepted versions on the market today." Really, DM, this is ridiculous. Phoneuo is defined as "murder, kill" (Bauer, Arndt, Gingrich, Danker, A Greek-English Lexicon of the NT and other Early Christian literature, p. 864). You contend that since various versions use synonyms (murder, kill) they are trying to point out a difference in the two passages--please, DM, since you failed to answer my question of your own ability to translate Greek I can only assume that you are unqualified to make the assertion that you do. These versions are not trying to differentiate these passages at all. Again, all of this is irrelevant as your charge was that Jesus and Paul used different wording which they obviously did not. Let the reader decide for himself. (By the way, the very fact that you list the New World Translation of the Jehovah's Witnesses along with truly scholarly editions is amazing--I would like to suggest you look into the NWT and find out what it really is--I enclose a tract pointing out some interesting facts about that subject).

Editor's Response to Letter #170 (Part b)

Again, JW, your comments are misleading. To begin with, you speak as if you had the autographs (the original writings) in your lap when, in truth, you and your compatriots have never seen them nor have any other living human beings. Apologists concede that they do not exist and I see little reason to believe they ever did. "The autographs are not extant so they must be reconstructed from early manuscripts and versions" (A General Introduction to the Bible by Geisler and Nix, p. 237). All scholars have are thousands of manuscripts, codices, lectionaires and other writings purporting to be accurate representations of the non-existent originals. How, then, do we know for certain what the original said? We don't! Scholars only make educated guesses based upon the best evidence available after analyzing and comparing those writings that are available. They boast about the large number of existing NT manuscripts as if this confirmed the reliability of today's NT. "There are now more than 5,300 known Greek manuscripts of the NT. Add over 10,000 Latin Vulgate and at least 9,300 other early versions and we have more than 24,000 manuscript copies of portions of the NT in existence today. No other document of antiquity even begins to approach such numbers and attestation" (Evidence That Demands a Verdict by Josh McDowell, p. 39). "There are no known original manuscripts of the Bible; in fact, none are needed because of the abundance of manuscript copies" (Ibid. Geisler and Nix, p. 267). Yet, they also admit there are over 200,000 disagreements among these writings on what verses say and what verses should be included. "The multiplicity of manuscripts produces a corresponding number of variant readings, for the more manuscripts that are copied the greater will be the number of copyists' errors.... The gross number of variants increases with every new manuscript discovery.... To date there are over 200,000 known variants and this figure will no doubt increase in the future as more manuscripts are discovered" (Ibid. Geisler and Nix, p. 360-61). Notice that Geisler and Nix try to diminish the importance of this figure by attributing the variants to just copyist errors which they have no way of proving. They also minimize the problem by contending some errors are merely repetitious and few have any real bearing on important Christian doctrine which is utterly false. Because of wide variances among manuscripts scholars can't agree on whether the last 12 verses of Mark (which involve some very important tests for belief) should even be in the the Bible. They can't agree on whether Isa. 7:14 says a virgin or a young woman, which has a direct bearing on the only OT prophecy of a virgin birth. They can't agree on whether the word "yet" should be in John 7:8, which is crucial to Jesus' honesty. One need only read critiques of the latest versions of the Bible written by the King James advocates to see that many disagreements over wording involve important beliefs. Apologists even go so far as to imply that the greater the number of variants the greater the precision. "At first, the great multitude of variants would seem to be a liability to the integrity of the Bible text. But, just the contrary is true, for the larger number of variants supplies at the same time the means of checking on those variants. As strange as it may appear, the corruption of the text provides the means for its own correction" (Ibid. Geisler and Nix, p. 366). "Strange" is hardly the word; "absurd" is much better. Imagine a homicide detective saying his knowledge of what occurred grows as the number of conflicting testimonies increases. Twenty-four thousand manuscripts would provide tremendous support if they agreed, but when they don't, when over 200,000 disagreements exist, precisely the opposite occurs. Secondly, as a result of speaking as if you have the autographs and ignoring manuscript variances, you erroneously conclude that your source is the final authority. You said that if I "have problems with Matt. 19:18/Rom. 13:9" I should "bring it up with the translators, not with the Bible." But it is not I but you who should consult with the translators. You said, "both Jesus and Paul said the exact same thing--ou phoneuseis--yet translators used different words--murder and kill-- which you erroneously called synonymous. You mean soldiers in battle and those shooting in self-defense or to protect loved ones are murderers? The translators with whom you disagree might have any one of several reasons for rejecting your interpretation and used "murder" in one instance and "kill" in another. The following are only a few available: (a) "You picked inaccurate manuscripts among the thousands available. Some translators might have good reasons for using manuscripts with something other than "ou phoneuseis." For example, 100 manuscripts may have "ou phoneuseis" and 50 something else; yet the 50 are preferable because they are far older and closer to the source. (b) "You chose accurate manuscripts but don't realize that identical words can have different meanings." "Pound," for example, can refer to an enclosure for animals, English money, or hitting something, rather than weight, and "hand" can refer to a sailor, part of a clock, a unit of measurement or a game of cards rather than the end of an arm. One "ou phoneuseis" might mean something quite different from another and if you would consult with the translators they might show you why one was translated "murder" and the other "kill." A contradiction could exist even though the words are identical. Identical words need not have the same meaning. Context is a major factor. (c) If you manage to surmount these two obstacles as well as others, an even larger one could be looming on the horizon--the imprecision of the Greek language. If "ou phoneuseis" can mean both "kill" and "murder" as your Greek-English lexicon of the NT says, then the verse means nothing and might just as well be stricken from the Bible. Unless definite guidelines exist by which to determine which is appropriate, and that's highly unlikely in light of the disagreements among the experts, the words can't be translated reliably. How do you know which to use in the English translation--kill or murder? The distinction is crucial. If they were synonymous in English there would be no problem. But they are not. The problems associated with lower (textual) criticism seem to elude you, JW. The large number of disagreements among the major versions on the market today are something biblicists would just as soon avoid for obvious reasons. If people realize experts are at loggerheads over many key points then what is the layman to believe. Dissension erodes people's faith in the Bible to such an extent that biblicists would rather have you believe in any version than nothing at all. Your comment with respect to the Jehonah's Witnesses' New World Translation exposes a distinct bias. BE quotes the most prominent versions available regardless of the source. We also quoted the Living Bible and for you to include it among the "truly scholarly editions" borders on the absurd. The NWT, with all its imperfections, is considerably more scholarly than the pathetic paraprse known as the Living Bible.

Letter #170 continues (Part c)

(Part 21 in the May commentary expressed the following contradiction. Paul said, "Jesus only hath immortality," while Jesus said, "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life--Ed.) Again, DM, you beg the question by dodging the clear fact that the Bible differentiates between athanasia (Greek for immortal--Ed.) which is Christ's by right, and zoen aionion (Greek for eternal life--Ed.) which is given to the believers at the time of the new birth. Just because you don't understand the difference does not mean it doesn't exist. In the same way, you said that my explanation of the use of echon (hath--Ed.) in relation to immortality was "muddled" and that what the relationship of the continuous action of the participle to the passage was "one can only surmise." Again, simply because you do not understand the passage as it was written is no excuse for continuing to suppose a contradiction. Anyone familiar with the language would be able to follow what I said and would see that you are arguing from ignorance. You simply will not allow for the possibility that the Bible might indeed be consistent on this point, DM. You are making the exact same kind of error you decry in others. (To Be Continued)

Editor's Response to Letter #170 (Part c)

You speak of ignorance, JW, when the tapes and literature I received from your organization continually try to make distinctions without differences in order to escape imbroglios. You assert that athanasia applies to Christ while zoen aionion applies to believers. Where does the Bible make such a distinction? First Cor. 15:53-54 says, "For this corruptible must put on incorruption; and this mortal must put on immortality (from athanasia--Ed.) ...and this mortal shall have put on immortality,..." As you see athanasia could apply to any believer and need not be restricted to Jesus. Moreover, several verses show zoen aionion could apply to Jesus and need not be restricted to believers: "God hath given to us eternal life (zoen aionion), and this life is in the Son" (1 John 5:11), "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood hath eternal life" (John 6:54), "For the life was manifested, and we have seen it...and shew unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and manifested unto us" (John 1:2) and 1 John 5:20. If eternal life is in the Son, if eternal life enters one by eating the Son, if Jesus can be called that eternal life which was with the Father, then it's safe to conclude "zoen aionion" can apply to Jesus as well as believers. You said, "Just because you don't understand the difference does not mean it doesn't exist," when the truth is that just because you created one doesn't mean it does. Your interpretation of "echon" (hath) in 1 Tim. 6:16 ("who only hath immortality) is even more tenuous. On page 4 in the August issue you originally asserted that, "the word translating `hath' in the KJV of 1 Tim. 6:16 is a participle in the original, echon. The continuous action, without relationship to time expressed by this participle is significant to the meaning of the passage." Although you are yet to make your point very clear, I assume you meant then, and are repeating now, that echon means Jesus had immortality throughout eternity while others merely obtained it at a point in time. Following your logic, echon (hath) in Mark 9:17 ("my son, which hath a dumb spirit") means his son had a dumb spirit throughout eternity and echon is John 10:20 ("He hath a devil, and is mad") means he has been mad throughout eternity. These are only a couple of the many examples available. The question is not when immortality or eternal life is obtained but who has it. First Tim. 6:16 said only Jesus has it. Nearly every major version translates the verb in 1 Tim. 6:16 as "has," "possesses," or "is," and none even imply that the verb requires eternity. If it did then their translators aren't very proficient because that's a major distinction. Judging from the verbs they employed those on translation committees apparently don't see your capricious distinctions either. You need to either get with your apologetic colleagues on these committees and create a consensus version or devise a version of your own. Should you decide on the latter, send me a copy and I'll be glad to critique it. You have several lamentable habits, JW, including inadequately explaining or proving your position, generating arbitrary distinctions to escape dilemmas, rationalizing the obvious, and patronizing your opponent. You also dwell on ad hominem comments to such an extent that if it continues you could notice a change in the tenor of my responses.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #171 from AS of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Dennis. I've been thinking about something for quite a while and I thought the time had come to ask someone who knows the bible rather than read the whole thing myself to find the answer. The question may seem simple, but I am really curious about the answer. It is simply this: How many bad or evil things in the bible is SATAN DIRECTLY responsible for? How many wars did he start? How many people did he kill? How many towns did he destroy? How many times did he use disease to strike back at or simply cause someone trouble? Don't get me wrong. I am not a satanist, simply an Atheist who is curious. Christians always say God is GOOD and Satan is BAD and I want to see just how bad the bible says Satan really is. In the research I've done,...I have yet to see Satan responsible for anything. With the bad rap Christians give him I want to know just how much he's done! Are Christians misdirecting their hatred or is Satan deserving of it?

Editor's Response to Letter #171

Dear AS. Excellent questions! I've often expressed similar concerns. Perhaps readers of a different persuasion can delineate biblical acts showing the Devil's deeds are worse than those attributed to God by the Bible and outlined in our third issue. On the radio I've gone further by asking people to relate one good, honest, just act committed by God in the entire OT that would cause you to hug his neck and kiss his cheek while saying, I'm proud of you.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We'd like to thank DS of Saskatchewan, Canada who arranged for our October 17th appearance on a radio talk show. Except for financial donations nothing is of greater assistance to BE than contacting the media on our behalf. We'd also like to thank the anonymous donor who entered an ad for BE in the NFD Journal. Requests for sample copies are coming in.

Biblical "History" (Part Two of a Four-Part Series)--This month's commentary will continue last month's listing of historical problems: (14) If Terah was 70 years old when Abraham was born ("When Terah had lived 70 years, he became the father of Abram..."--Gen. 11:26) and Abraham left Haran at age 75 after his father Terah died ("...Abram was 75 years old when he departed out of Haran"--Gen. 12:4) ("Then he--Abraham--lived in Haran and after his father died, God removed him..."--Acts 7:4 RSV), then Terah lived to be 145. Yet, Gen. 11:32 says, "And the days of Terah were 205 years; and Terah died in Haran" (Gen. 11:32). (15) Or to restate #14 differently: If Terah was 70 years old when Abraham was born (Gen. 11:26) and Terah was 205 years old when he died (Gen. 11:32), then Abraham was 135 years old when Terah died. Yet, Abraham was only 75 years old when he left Haran after the death of Terah (Gen. 12:4, Acts 7:4 RSV). Abraham was only 75 years old after having lived 135 years. (16) "And the whole earth was of one language, and of one speech" (Gen. 11:1) and "the Lord said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language" (Gen. 11:6) and "Therefore is the name of it called Babel; because the Lord did there confound the language of all the earth" (Gen. 11:9) versus "By these were the isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands; every one after his tongue" (Gen. 10:5). How could languages have been created at the Tower of Babel in Gen. 11 when Gen. 10:5 shows there were already many languages? There couldn't have been one language in Gen. 11, because Gen. 10:20 and 10:31 say "after their tongues" and show many languages already existed. (17) "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose" (Matt. 27:52). How could there be saints before the church set up the saint calendar? Jews did not canonize saints. (18) If Noah was 500 years old when he begat Shem ("Noah was 500 years old and Noah begat Shem, Ham, and Japheth"--Gen. 5:32) and 600 years old at the time of the Flood ("And Noah was 600 years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth"--Gen. 7:6) then Shem was 100 years old at the time of the Flood. How, then, could Gen. 11:10 ("Shem was an 100 years old, and begat "Arphaxad 2 years after the Flood") be true? Shem would have been 102, not 100, when he begat Arphaxad two years after the Flood. (19) "And there came a writing to Jehoram from Elijah the prophet saying..." (2 Chron. 21:12) versus "...there appeared a chariot of fire,...and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven" (2 Kings 2:11) and later "And in the 5th year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel,...Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah began to reign" (2 Kings 8:16). In 2 Kings 2:11 Elijah went to heaven in a chariot and later in 2 Kings 8 Jehoram began to reign. How, then, could Elijah have sent Jehoram a letter when Elijah left for heaven before Jehoram appeared on the scene? (20) "Now the sojourning of the children of Isreal, who dwelt in Egypt, was 430 years" (Ex. 12:40) versus "Now the promises were made to Abraham and to his offspring.... This is what I mean: the law, which came 430 years afterward (after the promises--Ed.) does not annul a covenant previously ratified by God,...." (Gal. 3:16-17). If what Paul says in Galatians is true, then Abraham got the Covenant exactly when the Israelites entered Egypt which is impossible. Some try to solve the problem this presents by quoting the Septuagint, which says, "they sojourned in Canaan and in Egypt 430 years." This would require 430 years from the time Abraham entered Canaan until the Exodus from Egypt. Yet, there were 25 years from Abraham entering the land until Isaac's birth: "So Abram departed...and Lot went with him; and Abram was 75 years old when he departed out of Haran" (Gen. 12:4) and "when Abram was 99 the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him...my covenant will I establish with Isaac, which Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time in the next year" (Gen. 17:1, 21). Isaac was 60 when Jacob was born ("and his name was called Jacob: and Isaac was threescore years old (60) when she bear them (Jacob and Esau--Ed.)"--Gen. 25:26 and Jacob was 130 when he entered Egypt ("and Jacob said to pharoah, The days of the years of my sojourning are 130 years"--Gen. 47:9 RSV). If we add 25, 60, and 130 we get 215 years which would leave 215 years for the actual sojourning in Egypt, not 430 years. (21) "And God spoke to this effect, that his (Abraham's--Ed.) prosperity would be aliens in a land belonging to others, who would enslave them and ill-treat them 400 years" (acts 7:6) versus "Now the promises were make to Abraham and to his offspring.... This is what I mean: the law, which came 430 years afterward, does not annul a covenant previously ratified by God..." (Gal. 3:16-17 RSV). How could they have been in Egypt for 400 years if the law was given 430 years after the covenant was given to Abraham? That would mean all the events between Abraham receiving the covenant and the Jews entering Egypt would have to have occurred within 30 years, hardly a viable option. (22) "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt was 430 years" (Ex. 12:40) versus "Kohath (Jacob's grandson--Ed.) who went down into Eqypt with Jacob, lived 133 years ("the years of the life of Kohath were an 133 years"--Ex. 6:18). Kohath's son was Amram ("And the sons of Kohath: Amram, and Izhar...."--Ex. 6:18) who lived 137 years ("...and the years of the life of Amram were 137 years"--Ex. 6:20). Amram's son was Moses (Ex. 6:20) who was 80 years old when the Israelites left Egypt ("Moses was fourscore (80) years old and Aaron fourscore and three years old, when they spake unto the Pharoah. Consequently, the Israelites could not have been in Egypt longer than 350 years (133 + 137 + 80 = 350), even if Kohath had been born the day they entered. (23) "...Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him" (John 19:6). It's hard to believe that the highest court of a country would pronounce a man innocent and then condemn him to death. (24) "...which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:21). What prophets were living when the world began? (25) "King Solomon offered as a sacrifice 22,000 oxen and 120,000 sheep" (2 Chron. 7:5). These numbers are dubious at best in light of the fact that they were offered within a one week period and would have required the killing and burning of 5 oxen and 24 sheep every minute, assuming 12 hours for work. (26) "That upon you (the pharisees and scribes--Ed.) may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar" (Matt. 23:35). (a) How could the pharisees and scribes be responsible for Abel's death? (b) The Zacharias mentioned was killed in Jerusalem in 69 A.D. Jesus is accusing people of killing a man who was yet to die. He was the same Zacharias Baruchos who, according to Josephus, was slain in the temple a short time before the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. Several scholars, such as Professor Newman, say there is no other man known to history to whom this passage could apply. (c) Several apologists seek to resolve the problem by contending Zacharias is Zechariah in the OT. The problem with this lies in the fact that the accusation of Jesus was intended to cover all time from the first offense to the last. If the Zechariah of 2 Chron. 24:20 is being referred to then that would mean no righteous blood was shed from his day to that of Jesus, i.e., 850 years later. (27) "And David took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem" (1 Sam. 17:54) versus "And the king (David--Ed.) and his men went to Jerusalem unto the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: who spake unto David, saying, Except thou take away the blind and lame, thou shalt not come in hither.... Nevertheless David took the stronghold of Zion (Jerusalem-- Ed.) the same is the city of David" (2 Sam. 5:6-7). David could not have taken Goliath's head to Jerusalem in 1 Sam. 17:54 because it was a Jebusite city. How could David have taken Goliath's head to Jerusalem when David's people did not have the city until later? The duel between David and Goliath is said to have occurred in 1062 B.C., while the conquest of occupancy of Jerusalem by the Israelites (2 Sam. 5) did not occur until 1047 B.C., 15 years later. (28) "Belshazzar, while he tasted the wine, commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels which his father Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple...." (Dan. 5:2). Nebuchadnezzar was not the father of Belshazzar. The Modern Language Version admits as much by calling Nebuchadnezzar his grandfather. (29) "But when he (Joseph--Ed.) heard that Archelaus reigned over Judea in place of his father Herod, he was afraid to go there, and being warned in a dream he withdrew to the district of Galilee" (Matt. 2:22). A son of Herod also reigned in Galilee, so Joseph could not have been more secure in one province than in the other. (30) "then a Pharisee named Gamaliel...arose in the Sanhedrin and...addressed them, `Men of Israel, be careful what you intend to do to these men; for in earlier days Theudas appeared claiming to be somebody, and about 400 men adhered to him; but he was killed and all his supporters were dispersed, and they came to nothing. After him Judas the Galilean led an uprising at the time of the census, and raised a popular following, and he perished, too...'" (Acts 5:34-37). (a) According to Acts the sedition of Theudas occurred before the taxing or census which was about 6 A.D. According to Josephus it really occurred while Fadus was procurator of Judea around 46 A.D. which was 40 years after the date assigned in Acts (Antiquities, Book 20, Chapter 5, Sec. 1). (b) Acts 5:36-37 came from a speech by Gamaliel before the Jewish council. Josephus says the revolt by Theudas, which Gamaliel is referring to, occurred when Fadus was Procurator of Judea in 45 or 46 A.D. Yet, Gamaliel spoke before 36 A.D. Many feel he spoke in 29 A.D. Thus the author of Acts makes Gamaliel refer to an event as long past which, in reality, would not occur until 16 years later. (31) "Now it came to pass in the third year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Hezekiah the son of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign" (2 Kings 18:1) versus "Now in the 14th year of King Hezekiah did Sennacherib king of Assyria come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them" (2 Kings 18:13). The 3rd year of Hoshea was no later than 728 B.C. and since Hezekiah began his rule then, the 14th year of Hezekiah's rule would be 714 B.C. But Sennacherib did not come to the throne in Nineveh until 705 B.C., and according to his own annals, the invasion of Judah took place in 701 B.C. Therefore, the invasion must have occurred in the 27th year of Hezekiah's reign rather than the 14th, as related in 2 Kings 18:13.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #170 from JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries Continues from Last Month

(Part d)

You mentioned a list of issues that dealt with the Trinity--I now have access only to Issues 15 and 18, hence I can only comment on them. Our ministry deals with the cults, and what you wrote in those articles shows much less research than does the material printed by such groups as Jehovah's Witnesses (from whom you obviously borrowed freely). The very fact that you could list as the Trinitarians main support such passages as 1 Peter 1:2 ("Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ"), 1 John 5:7 ("For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one") (are you kidding?), 2 Cor. 13:14 ("The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all") and Matt. 28:19 ("...baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost") demonstrates one of two things: (1) you have not read much on the subject, which obviously is not true as you make references to a number of works in your articles, or (2) you are deliberately deleting a number of important factors. I would hope the reason for #2 is that you don't have a lot of room with which to work. At any rate, the view you gave of the Biblical view of the Trinity is, at the very best, contorted and twisted. It is not my desire to enter into a long discussion of the Trinity with you, as you would not allow for a logical, contextual, and linguistic interpretation of the Scriptures. I enclose more information on the subject for your personal reading. By the way, I asked you a simple question that anyone familiar with the subject of the Trinity would know the significance of and would be able to answer. It was not meant to insult you--it was meant to make you deal with the issues. You did not.

Editor's Response to Letter #170 (Part d)

Again JW, you continue to summarize to the jury before the facts are heard and make misleading or inaccurate statements. (1) You allege BE shows much less research than does material from groups such as the Jehovah's Witnesses. Are you comparing newsletter to newsletter or newsletter to books? Have you compared their newsletters to BE, i.e., 6 pages to 6 pages? Have you compared their material to all of my notes, including 3 large loose-leaf binders? (2) Your comment that I obviously borrowed freely from the Jehovah's Witnesses is totally erroneous. I've never needed their literature to notice the same problems with orthodox biblicism. (3) If you wish to reject 1 Peter 1:2, Matt 28:19 etc. as proofs for the Trinity, I certainly have no objections. Since these are among the few that directly link the three parts of the Godhead and have been interpreted as evidence for trinitarian beliefs, I support your efforts wholeheartedly. A few more comments like that, JW, and perhaps you might want to consider joining us. (4) You accuse me of "deliberately deleting a number of important factors" and giving a "contorted and twisted view of the Trinity. Yet, no examples are provided in either instance. You have an unfortunate habit of drawing conclusions and making judgments before evidence is forthcoming. (5) You accuse me of "deliberately deleting" factors and predict I will "not allow a logical, contextual, and linguistic interpretation of Scriptures." Apparently you consider yourself a long-distance mind-reader and a forecaster of future events as well. (6) You implied I did not address a trinitarian question with respect to the gender of the word "one" in "I and my Father are one" (John 10:30) because I had no answer. The real reason was that the question is of little import since the gender of "one" is of less importance than the number. Incidentally, I listened to your trinitarian seminar tape-recording and found little more than typical Christian metaphysics in which rationalization and obfuscation are sold as erudition and perception. However, I do appreciate the fact that you sent your materials.

Letter #170 Continues (Part e)

In response to part d: I did not condemn BE in any letter--I mentioned only the single issue I had at that time. I simply stated that you had not demonstrated a single contradiction in that paper, and I hold to that claim. I would like to kindly submit to you, DM, that it is you who will not admit "your own limitations with respect to Greek and Hebrew." I have given my qualifications, what are yours? And finally, I would like to point out that Greek and Hebrew as modern languages are indeed always changing--but that misses the whole point. We are dealing with classical Hebrew and koine Greek--they are not changing and evolving. Such a dodge does not work.

Editor's Response to Letter #170 (Part e)

First, as far as your comment that "I had not demonstrated a single contradiction" is concerned, JW, that's merely an opinion and we all make mistakes. In your current frame of mind I don't think you would admit the Bible has contradictions if Jesus and Paul supported me. Secondly, I've never claimed to be a Greek and Hebrew scholar nor could you. An in-depth knowledge of these languages is not necessary as apologist W. Arndt explained quite well, "With the various revised versions at hand, with an analytical concordance, with reliable commentaries, and with the help of dictionaries of the Bible language, the reader need not know Greek or Hebrew to verify the original meaning of a given passage. He has in his mother tongue the means whereby he may determine the correctness of most of the obscure translations" (Bible Difficulties, page 20). Thirdly, as I've said before, JW, Greek and Hebrew scholars are by no means agreed on what texts say, what they mean, or how they should be translated. You seem to think that by throwing your chips into the Greek/Hebrew basket you are going to emerge with a body of beliefs, teachings, and words resting on granite after emerging from God's mouth. You have succumbed to one of the cornerstones of Christian mythology. Fourthly, your assertion that "classical Hebrew and koine Greek are not changing and evolving" is almost beneath comment. There is nothing so permanent as change and nowhere is this more evident than in languages. No language is fixed in time and above evolution. The classical Hebrew and koine Greek of 100 B.C. were different from those 100 A.D. and both were different from those of 200 A.D. So the question becomes one of determining which classical Hebrew and koine Greek you are referring to. You, not I, missed the point when you decided to find truths that were good at all times and under all conditions. Not I, but you, dodged the issue when you refused to acknowledge the fluidity and imprecision inherent in all languages, classical or otherwise. You tend to minimize the wide variances among modern translations and ignore the fact that knowledgeable scholars disagree on many points. Some of your disagreements are more with your compatriots than with me. You're seeking a kind of permanence in life that doesn't exist my friend. Good luck!

Letter #170 Concludes (Part f)

(Under Peter versus Peter on page 3 of Issue #44 is the following contradiction: "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment" (2 Peter 2:4) versus "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Peter 5:8). The question then became one of determining how the devil could be walking around if he was chained in hell until judgment--Ed.) One other point I cannot resist bringing up--in the August issue, page 3--please give me the reason you equate "the angels who sinned" with Satan. Jude gives us more information about those angels mentioned in 2 Peter, and even Peter narrows it down a good bit. This again demonstrates that it is your misunderstanding of the passage that creates the difficulty--the Bible nowhere says that Satan is chained, awaiting judgment. That is only your erroneous conclusion based on preconceived prejudices and mistakes.

Editor's Response to Letter #170 (Part f)

Again, JW, you summarized to the jury without knowing or weighing many of the facts, took verses out-of-context, displayed a poor knowledge of a principle in logic, and exhibited a strong proclivity for tendentious reasoning. (1) What additional relevant information does Jude 6 ("And the angels that kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation he hath reserved in everlasting chains..."-) add to 2 Peter? Nothing! Both are merely noting the fact that some angels were punished for sin just as were those living in Sodom and Gomorrah. (2) Where does Peter say they were the ones (the angels--Ed.) who sinned in the days of Noah, thus narrowing it down a good bit? Talk about taking verses out-of-context! After mentioning that some angels were punished for sinning (2 Peter 2:4) the text merely notes that people living in the days of Noah (verse 5) and those living in Sodom and Gomorrah (verse 6) were also punished for their wickedness. Nowhere does the text imply, much less state, that verse 4 is discussing angels who sinned in the days of Noah. (3) I'm surprised you mention the parallel verse in Jude 6 because, following your logic, I could also conclude that some angels were also cast down for their sins when the Israelites were saved from Egypt. The prior verse (Jude 5) says, "...the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not." If you are going to link 2 Peter 2:5 with 2:4, then I'm going to link Jude 5 with Jude 6 in the same manner. In fact, I think I'll also bring in 2 Peter 2:6 with 2:4 and say some angels were also cast down when Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed. It's amazing what can be devised when you let your imagination run wild. If there is anyone who should refrain from attributing preconceived prejudices to others.... You read just enough of the text to try to create a plausible rationalization while ignoring that which went before and after. (5) Where did I "equate the angels who sinned" with Satan? I implied, then, and state now that he was included among those cast down. Obviously he couldn't be equated with them since "angels" is plural. My textual support lies with 2 Peter 2:4 and Jude 6. "The angels who sinned" means all the angels who sinned, not some or most. I learned that logical construct years ago in college. And wasn't Satan among those who sinned and were cast down? You just displayed one of the great errors common to those who have been reared in an uncritical Christian environment, JW. You have been so thoroughly imbued with a cardinal belief, e.g., the Devil is loose throughout the world and responsible for so much evil, that any evidence to the contrary couldn't possibly be valid. You even closed your eyes to contrary biblical verses and dismissed them out-of-hand, thus showing why people want to reach children as soon as possible. You said you couldn't resist bringing up this issue, JW, but you should have. One final point. I recommend that you read all of the back issues of BE before making additional criticisms, as some of your points have already been discussed. Since you apparently consider yourself an authority in biblical defense, I'd especially like for you to address more substantial problems such as most of those posed on pages 2 and 3 of issue #34.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #172 from AH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis.... I really like your commentaries because they are so informative but I really enjoy the letters from Bible believers when they are "grasping for straws." What I would like to do is photocopy hundreds of copies and everytime I stay in a hotel place copies of BE in the Bibles they all seem to have. I have a small typed sheet, like a book mark, titled Bible Study Questions with suggested verses to be read. They are the verses about whether anyone has ever seen God or his face and each verse contradicts the prior one. Every time I stay in a hotel I place a copy of this book mark. Also I put a bumper sticker on my car last year that said, "THE BIBLE: AN ANCIENT JEWISH PUPPET PLAY." Usually believers just stare with hateful glares, occasionally they wait by my car for me to arrive to tell me they are going to pray for me. But recently several have driven up next to me, honked the horn and given me hand gestures when I looked over. Then they sped away. Only last week someone yelled out (expletive deleted--Ed.). I would like to tell you that I am an Amway Distributor and for the first 5 years the group I was in had a prayer and a pledge to the flag at all their meetings; in fact, Sunday meetings were even stated to be religious. they even had Jerry Falwell speak at a rally. I wouldn't sit down thru the prayer, which really caused some problems, because the speakers would see this and spend the next several hours saying, "if you want to be Rich in Amway, you'd better get it right with God. I found that by standing with everyone else the "sermons" were shorter. But I transferred to a new group and the new Double Diamond came to my house to tell me religion and politics have no business in the Amway business. I really enjoy my Amway Business and am doing well. I wish I had had BE before I transferred from the old group. Our Direct from the old group would come to our house, "to help us build our business" but the whole event would be to convince (confuse) us that the Constitution allows school prayer. If you weren't a Bible Promoter, you were not allowed to speak on stage, when I went 1,500 and got to walk up on stage, my upline "clued in" the host who held the "mike" for me. All I could say was my name, sponsor, and Direct's name. What I wanted to say was that I did it without all their religion and God stuff. But the "mike" was pulled away too fast. Of course the next couple got to say that they only did it with God's help. Lots of applause. Dennis, I am so glad I'm in a new group. And I am also glad I now have BE to help me when confronted with these poor unfortunate believers.

Letter #173 from FM of Chicago, Illinois

Dear Dennis. Your presentation at the Freedom From Religion convention in Madison was memorable. You said a series of "workshops," seminars, and courses could turn out trained speakers who could present our ideas in a way that listeners could accept--without feeling "put down." I agree with so many things you said.

Letter #174 from WB of Waterloo, Iowa

Dear Mr. McKinsey. It was a pleasure to have met you & to have heard your presentation at the FFRF convention. Your method of bringing attention to the very basis of the Christian religion could not be improved, for what basis is there other than the Holy Bible. Your endeavor is sincerely appreciated and I am envious of the fact that you are able to retain so much information relating to a book that is so boring. Please include me as a subscriber.

EDITOR'S NOTE: My recent appearance before the FFRF convention in Madison, Wisconsin was most enjoyable and quite rewarding. Everyone was very gracious and most cooperative. Subscriptions to BE increased by a full 10%, marking the largest single 3-day increase ever. My speech focused on the philosophy, goals, strategy, and tactics behind this publication and the need for a national organization, a think tank, to confront biblicists on their own turf.-

COMMENTARY

Many months ago we instituted a policy of devoting an entire issue to Letters of the Editor and have decided to renew that program before continuing our discussion of biblical "history."

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter No. 175 from OR of Hesston, Kansas

Dear Mr. McKinsey: More on "original sin." When the sperm meets the egg the resulting soul is immediately damned to eternal torment in a literal hell fire. Because of God's unmerited favor and mercy He forgives and saves the fetus, infant, and child. When the human being reaches the age of accountability God's unmerited favor and mercy is no longer any good. The human being who reaches the age of accountability loses his salvation. The only way he can regain his lost salvation is to repent, make a decision and endorse a correct doctrinal statement....Accepting Jesus Christ is just another one of the good works we have to do in order to be saved.

Editor's Response to Letter #175

Dear OR. Jesus, himself, made several statements ("I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me"--John 14:6), ("He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already,...."--John 3:18), and ("He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life: but the wrath of God abideth on him"--John 3:36) that clearly show everyone must accept Jesus to be saved. Everyone means everyone, not some, not most, but all. Consequently, all beings that die as foetuses, infants, and babies are condemned to eternal damnation because of events over which they had no control. In an attempt to eradicate the obvious injustice and heartlessness involved, some biblicists have devised the wholly unbiblical concept known as the age of accountability. Few beliefs are given more credence with less biblical support. Generally speaking, the Bible does not make fine distinctions such as would accompany a finely-honed legislative document and this instance is no exception. There is nothing in the Bible about an "age of accountability." In fact, the word accountability does not even appear in the KJV of the Bible. If you contend the word "trinity" does not appear either, then you must produce verses comparable in weight to those provided in support of the Trinity and prove it's a valid concept. Moreover, you said a baby is conceived damned, forgiven, and saved until the age of accountability. Where are you getting all this? Could you provide chapter and verse rather than what appears to be your own theology.

Letter #176 from KMB of Columbus, Ohio

(In part c of the Commentary in Issue #11 is the following: Gen. 6:17 says, "I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breadth of life, from under heaven: and everything that is in the earth shall die". Gen. 7:4 reinforces this point by saying, "Every living substance that I made will I destroy from off the face of the earth." The question was then posed of determining how a flood could destroy whales,.... and all other animals of the sea--Ed.) Dear Mr. McKinsey. Please allow me to take issue with you on only one point in Issue #11. Your idea is that God said all life was to perish. Including sea animals--whales, etc. However, what God actually said is quite different. Gen. 6:7 says, "I will blot out man whom I have created from the face of the ground, and beast and creeping things and birds of the air" (NO mention of sea life). Gen. 6:17 says, "Everything that is on the earth shall die." Gen. 7:4 says, "Every living thing that I have made I will blot out from the face of the ground." Gen. 7:22-23 says, "Everything on the dry land in whose nostrils was the breadth of life died; every living thing that was upon the face of the ground." Man shall live by every word that proceeds forth from God. To do less than that is to miss the mark. All of your biblical "errors" could be explained in the same manner as the above was. Your friend, a christian.

Editor's Response to Letter #176

Dear KMB. As I mentioned many issues ago, any discussion of the Bible is going to be exceedingly difficult unless there is a consensus on the version to be employed. If people seek to avoid difficulties by leaping from version to version as expediency dictates, then dialogue will become all but impossible. One can't analyze, critique, or even believe in a phantom, a book which alters its wording from moment to moment. BE has always focused on the KJV because of its almost universal acceptance. As was stated previously, we can't discuss every version in every issue. Your exegesis is based on the difference between the RSV and the KJV in five verses and has major flaws. First, the KJV of Gen. 6:7 says, "...I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth: both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air..." while the same verse in the RSV says, "from the face of the ground." Gen. 7:4 in the KJV says, "...every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth," while the RSV says, "...I will blot out from the face of the ground. Your argument rests on the contention that because the word "ground" is employed in the RSV rather than "earth" only land animals are being discussed. You also alluded to Gen. 7:23 which mentions the death of every living substance "upon the face of the ground" as additional evidence. Yet, as far as the first two verses (Gen. 6:7 & 7:4) are concerned you'd do well to note the large number of other versions (NIV, NAB, BEB, GOOD NEWS, MASORETIC TEXT) which agree with the KJ rather than the RS. Even more important, note the wording of Gen. 6:17 in your own RSV. It says, Everything on the earth shall die, not just those on the ground. Moreover, you ignored the first part of verse 17 ("...to destroy all flesh in which is the breath of life from under heaven") which shows that not only all flesh that breathed was destroyed but all flesh under the heaven perished. The latter would include both land and sea animals, since both are under heaven. Second, you underlined the word "on" in verse 6:17 RSV with the intention of showing only animals on land are being discussed. If we are going to be that technical, then one could conclude that worms, moles, grubs and many other subterranean creatures were never killed because they live under the earth rather than on it. And believers in the KJV would have to believe the opposite since it says, "Every thing that is in the earth shall die." Moreover, your own RSV supports the King James wording by saying "on the earth" rather than "on the ground" in Gen. 6:17. And we all know sea creatures are on the earth. Surely you aren't saying they are in space somewhere? Third, you quoted Gen. 7:22 in the RSV ("Everything on the dry land in whose nostrils was the breath of life died") but omitted the prior verse which says all flesh that moved upon the earth died, which would include sea creatures. All the earth is included, not just dry land. And lastly, Gen. 7:23 actually says, "He blotted out every living thing that was upon the face of the ground,...Only Noah was left, and those that were with him in the ark." You quoted the first half but omitted the second which clearly says only those in the ark survived. All other land and sea creatures perished. If sea creatures survived as you allege, then verse 23 is false because, both the KJ and the RS say only those on the ark evaded death.

You said, "man shall live by every word that proceeds forth from God." In light of your propensity to quote out-of-context and selectively extract parts of verses in typical apologetic style, KMB, you'd do well to heed your own advice. Your allegation that all my "biblical errors" can be explained in the same manner only proves BE is in better shape than I thought.

Letter #177 from RS of Richmond, Virginia

(We asserted on page 4 in the 8th issue that a different kind of problem is found in 1 Cor. 15:5 where Paul says, "He--Jesus--was seen of Cephas--Peter, then of the twelve." If true, this would mean that there were 13 apostles unless Peter was not an apostle--Ed.) Dear Dennis. On "Paul, the Deceptive Disciple" page 4, couldn't this be also read that Jesus was seen by Peter, then by all twelve together (including Peter)? Keep up the good work!....

Editor's Response to Letter #177

Dear RS. I have re-read that verse in and out of context many times and concluded it could be read either way, although I still prefer my original analysis. Because the verse is so ambiguous, like so much of the Bible, I've decided to remove it from my comments.

Letter #178 from VT of Huron, California Greetings: Please allow me to recommend two books that certainly should be of interest to you. I know how really concerned you are in SEEKING AND REPORTING THE TRUTH. One is Alleged Discrepancies in the Bible by John Haley. You may have this one. The other is The Bible has the Answer by Henry Morris. The writer deals with some 100 of the most important questions. I don't see how anyone could read this book and come away with doubt in regard to the Bible being the word of God....

Editor's Response to Letter #178

Greetings. I bought and read these books years ago, VT, and came away fully convinced the Bible wasn't God's word. In fact, I read Haley's book twice and have quoted both in BE.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #179 from OR of Hesston, Kansas (Combined Letters)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Most Christians say they believe in a literal interpretation of Scripture. Any comprehensive interpretation of Scripture includes literal and symbolic interpretation. But if Christians are going to believe in a literal approach to what Jesus said about heaven and hell, they should believe in a literal interpretation of what He said about being in the grave 3 days and 3 nights (Matt. 12:40). There is no way to get a literal 3 days and 3 nights from Friday evening to Sunday morning. Concerning the allegation that nature teaches bodily resurrection from the dead in 1 Cor. 15:35-50. A seed that falls into the ground does not die and then resurrect from the dead. The seed first procreates and then dies, leaving the shell (body) in the ground. If Christians want to say that nature teaches a bodily resurrection from the dead, that is their privilege, but bodily resurrection from the dead does not happen in nature.

Letter #180 from TF of Dothan, Alabama

Dear Dennis. A Jehovah's Witness and her two children came to my door recently. I immediately told her I had read the Bible all the way through several times. She said, "Oh, well you ALREADY have a lot of Bible knowledge. Great!" I said, "I learned the Bible contains a lot of contradictions. "WHERE", she demanded. I said, "Hold on." I got Issue #47 and gave it to her. She said, "No, no, I don't want it." I said, "But you wanted to know where the contradictions were!" So she looked at it and said, "Who is this Dennis McKinsey? Is he a preacher?" I said, "No, he has just studied the Bible thoroughly." So I showed her the contradiction about Terah. She said, "I'm sure it could be explained logically." I said, "Then take it home and write to Mr. McKinsey and he'll print your explanation." She refused. She said, "The important scripture is clearly non-contradictory anyway." I said, "Important scripture? It says ALL scripture is given by god and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. She said, "Well, I just KNOW I am right." "How do you know," I asked? I finally penned her down to saying, "Well, you have got to have faith!" "So you don't KNOW then do you," I asked? Dennis, I have always been able to pen people, usually Fundamentalists, down on this "know" business. Anyway she started walking away and refused to talk or read anything further.

Editor's Response to Letter #180

You are to applauded for several reasons, TF. First, fate brought you a greatly misguided human being whom you did not turn away. Instead, you asked some poignant questions relevant to her most cherished beliefs. You assumed a burden place upon all enlightened individuals, that of showing biblicists how they have been misled and misinformed. After all, ministers, priests, and rabbis certainly aren't going to expose the Bible's inadequacies. That's not what they are paid for. If people such as you and I don't act, who will? When confronted with biblicists, a substantial number of freethinkers seem to feel they have prevailed if they prevent biblicists from converting them. That isn't victory; that's defeat. Why? Because believers in the Bible are far more numerous than those of the opposite persuasion and will remain so without an increase in our numbers and a reduction in theirs. Victory can only be declared when you have converted them to your views, not when you have merely prevented them from converting you to theirs. The latter is a formula for failure. Second, you stayed within the Bible and used Scripture to discredit her remarks. Your injection of 2 Peter 3:16 at a key point was particularly effective. That's why its so important for us to know the Book better than they do. As I've said before, the Bible is its own worst enemy. Third, she left herself open with several poorly conceived statements and you quickly took advantage of her mistakes. She said, "No, I don't want it" after having asked "where" and she said, "all the important scripture is clearly non-contradictory," which not only implies some scripture is contradictory but some is less than important. And lastly, you let her terminate the conversation which she will ponder later. You probably won't see her again but she will replay your dialogue in her memory. If she encounters other individuals such as yourself, especially on a repetitive basis, her faith in the Bible couldn't help but diminish. That's why it is so important for many individuals to follow your lead. A lot of study is involved; that's true. But BE already contains much of the leg-work. The longer I'm involved with this strategy, the more I realize it is the only way. My only reservation is that I wouldn't have started with the Terah problem. It isn't close enough to the heart of christian beliefs; it involves a more detailed knowledge of biblical verses; it's more open to rationalization, and it's not the type of problem that stays with people the longest. I would have opened with one of the suggested queries in the 34th Issue. Initial questions are very important because biblicists will quickly lose respect for your comprehension of the material if they are readily countered. Keep up the good work; we need thousands similarly involved.

Letter #181 from AH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis....I was in a coffe shop the other morning and was joined by a prospect I wanted to show Amway to. I mentioned that it was a good thing that he wasn't a christian, because the Bible clearly states that to follow Christ and secure a place for oneself in Heaven one must sell all one's possessions and give the money to the poor. He said he was a christian, but that I was taking all of this out of context. So I pulled #16 out of my briefcase and started reading. Well!, almost immediately this very rude christian woman who just happens to be behind me in the booth started tapping me on the shoulder, demanding that I take her Bible and read the whole thing. Not loosing my cool, I informed Ms. Christian that she was bothering me. She continued to tap my shoulder and tried to hand me her Bible. I informed her again that she was bothering me. She said she just wanted me to get it right, and that I had to read the whole thing to understand what it meant. I told her that I had read the whole thing and know what it says. I told her she was misinformed, she was not invited into my conversation, and she should learn to mind her own business. She turned around and left me alone for the rest of my stay. However, my prospect was terrified and suggested that we change the subject. It really makes me angry that christians are able to force their acceptance of their God onto everyone else....

Editor's Response to Letter #181

Dear AH. Although your compliments are greatly appreciated, I think you missed a golden opportunity. You should have followed the example of TF in the prior letter. Instead of shewing the woman away, you should have leaped to the occasion by showing her the errors of her ways and explaining the inadequacies of the Bible. If you don't know them, then you should. If you do know them, then you should have acted. She might never meet another person such as yourself. One of the major purposes of this publication is to provide people like us information to use in encounters such as this.

Letter #182 from Mark Potts, 8510-A, East 66th Pl.S. Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

(Combined Letters)

Dear Dennis. Recently, in a discussion with a biblicist I asked how Adam and Eve could have sinned if they were perfect. He denied they were perfect, and said only people who get saved will become perfect. This raises a question: If God couldn't create perfect people the first time around, why should we expect him to do better later on? This biblicist's apology is equivalent to saying that God requires trial-and-error to attain his goals. If God can make mistakes, that doesn't say much for his alleged wisdom and power.

Biblicists accuse atheists and freethinkers of being advocates of moral relativism, the doctrine that right and wrong vary from place to place and age to age. Curiously, however, the laws of the Pentateuch were for centuries held to be moral absolutes--until a man named Paul came along to pronounce most of the Old Law invalid....

Consider the following: Trinitarians allege that God, Jesus, and the Holy Ghost are distinct, yet co-equal. According to the Bible, Jesus has a spirit (Luke 23:46, Gal. 4:6) and God either has or is a spirit (John 4:24, Gen. 1:2). Does the Holy Spirit have a spirit? When a biblicist tells me that Jesus "lives" in his heart," I ask, if he were to get a heart transplant or an artificial heart, what would happen to Jesus. The biblicist then usually explains that "heart" doesn't literally mean an organ in the chest. But when biblicists, especially catholics, talk about the "blood" of Jesus, they mean the literal physiological fluid in Jesus' body.

To your list of questions for biblicists, you might add: How could Jesus have been a "sacrifice" for our sins when the Gospels indicate he didn't stay dead? After all, when the Jews sacrificed lambs, they didn't revive on the third day.

Editor's Response to Letter #182

Dear Mark. Be careful! Most of your queries are quite insightful but sometimes you ask a question (e.g. your heart transplant question) which could be read by biblicists as little more than an attempt to be facetious. In such cases, you aren't going to be taken seriously because they won't feel you are taking the Bible seriously. It's analogous to relying upon anti-religious humor as one's primary instrument. Biblicists are going to think: No wonder he doesn't see the Bible is true; he doesn't think about it seriously enough to see it's correct.

Letter #183 from EZ of Dayton, Ohio

Dear Dennis.... I recently spent some time in Mexico on a short-term missionary outreach (5 weeks) and am soon planning to go to Israel to study Hebrew. So I haven't had much time to appreciate your publication lately. You may correctly gather that I'm a disciple of Christ. (Labels, especially the typical ones, don't seem to fit me). Yet, I find BE stimulating and sometimes challenging. I'm neither a "fundie" nor a literalist; so much of what you say provides support to my beliefs. Your response to letter #163 was terrific....

Editor's Response to Letter #183

We have other religious subscribers, EZ. You are by no means alone. Although they believe in the Bible and/or religion, they are willing to give others a hearing.

Letter #184 from RM of Baton Rouge, Louisiana

Dear Dennis. I just read Issue #46. The historical short-comings of the Bible are numerous. The study of biblical "history" is possibly the best scientific debunker of the Bible. With your indulgence, I will list a few historical problems contained in "God's Word." (1) Daniel 5:31 contains two historical inaccuracies. This verse gives Darius "the Median" credit for the capture of Babylon and the resulting liberation of the Jews. In fact, it was Cyrus who accomplished this deed; and neither Cyrus nor Darius were "Medians." Both were Persians who ruled Persia and Media. (2) Luke the "physician" should perhaps be called Luke the "inventor." He apparently invented two "traditions." No historical evidence exists for Luke 2:3-4. This famous verse states that families were supposed to return to ancestral homes in order to be counted for tax purposes. Imagine thousands, if not millions, of people attempting to find their ancestral cities, some of which no longer existed. This would have completely disrupted Mediterranean life and commerce. The second tradition that Luke apparently invented occurs in Luke 23:17 which infers that it was traditional for governors to release prisoners of choice at Passover. This "tradition" does not exist in Hebrew or Roman history. These are just a few of the many historical "bleeps and blunders" the Bible contains.

Letter #185 from AH of Sonoma, California (Combined Letters)

Dear Dennis. I really enjoyed your commentary about Women and the Bible, what the Bible really says about women. I let a friend read this; now she is really questioning her belief and faith in the Bible. I doubt she'll ever give up belief in God, but just one issue has caused her to reject the Bible. Just ONE issue!

I agree completely with your methods. Could it be called fighting fire with fire? I handed out BE to my waitress at the Good Earth restaurant and almost had to fight to get them back, especially the issues on SLAVERY AND WOMEN. She knew she didn't like religion, now she knows why. I think the average christian I meet (certainly all my relatives) are as uninformed and misinformed about the Bible as most of us who have rejected the whole idea of what religion stands for. Certainly this is true for me. Even at an early age I wanted to know why certain things were done a certain way and not another. And the idea of having a minister come to our house to ask for money, tell us what to do, and tell us how to behave was upsetting to me. I'm so glad my parents didn't indoctrinate me....

EDITOR'S NOTE: As you can tell our new computer and printer have made a difference. Many readers suggested we widen the margins so holes could be punched, create more paragraphs, provide more white space, create columns, and raise the rates. Apparently, most people want an improvement in appearance even with a reduction in content. So we have decided to comply in some respects and will probably institute additional changes later. Because of increased costs, improved format, substantial purchases, and no advertising revenue, we must raise our rates on January 1, 1987 to: 6 months = $5, 1 year = $9, 2 years = $17. Back issues = $1 each. Compared to other publications on the market, that's still minimal and quite a bargain. Hopefully, our publisher and postmaster won't give us any news. Many people want to subscribe for a longer period of time so we are providing another year.

Biblical "History" (Part Three of a Four-Part Series)--One of the more prominent aspects of historical difficulties within the Bible pertains to those events for which there is little or no extrabiblical corroboration. Examples are rather numerous and receive a good deal of attention in freethought literature. (32) "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king,...." (Matt. 2:1). There was no such person as King Herod because the Jews were under the control of Roman emperors who governed by governors or tetrarchs. (33) "Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under,...." (Matt. 2:16). (a) Josephus devoted nearly 40 chapters to the life of Herod and relates every important event in his life. He detested Herod and dwelled on his crimes and errors. Yet, he never mentioned this massacre and appears to have known nothing about it. (b) No ancient historian recalls this massacre. (c) Herod already had full grown sons to succeed him. Would he be afraid that the babe of an obscure Nazareth carpenter would supplant him? (34) "Then were there two thieves crucified with him, one on the right hand, and the other on the left" (Matt. 27:38). Thieves were not crucified. Death, in any form, for theft was contrary to Jewish and Roman law. It was not a capital offense. (35) "And behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent; and the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many" (Matt. 27:51-53). No historian of antiquity mentions these events. (36) "And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour" (Mark 15:33). There is no mention of this in the history of the period. (37) "And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria)" (Luke 2:1-2). (a) History says nothing about a taxing (census) ever being taken of the whole Roman world. (b) The KJV says "all the world should be taxed," yet no such decree was issued by Augustus. He not only never issued a general decree but never attempted a uniform assessment. Taxes were done province by province. (c) When Jesus was born, the governor of Syria was not Cyrenius. Cyrenius did not become governor of Syria until nearly 10 years after the death of Herod and Matt. 2:1 ("Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea in the days of Herod the king...") says Jesus was born during the reign of Herod. (d) If Jesus was born during the reign of Herod as Matthew says, Joseph, whether a resident of Judea or of Galilee, could not have been taxed by Augustus in any event since neither province was then a part of Roman Syria. Both provinces belonged to Herod's kingdom and Herod's subjects were not taxed by the Romans. (e) Cyrenius (Quirinius) made a census in Palestine but his census took place 10 years after the death of Herod. (38) "...because there was no room for them in the inn" (Luke 2:7). The historical scholar, Dr. Geikie, says "inns" were unknown among the Jews. (39) "And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him,...." (Luke 23:33). If Jesus had been tried, convicted, and executed by the Jews, he would not have been crucified but stoned. Jews never used crucifixion. (40) "The Jew therefore...besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away" (John 19:31). This punishment, known as crusifragium, was a distinct mode of execution and was never combined with crucifixion. Moreover, neither method was ever employed to punish theft. Yet, we are asked to believe both were used. (41) "And he said to the devils, Go. So they came out and went into the swine; and behold, the whole herd...." (Matt. 8:32 RSV). The swine are as imaginary as the devils, since the keeping of these animals was prohibited in ancient Judea and Galilee. The French philosopher, Voltaire, wanted to know why swine were there to begin with. (42) "...he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it" (Isaiah 44:14). Not in Western Asia. Ash trees do not grow there. Some commentators think a pine was meant. (43) "...he came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis" (Mark 7:31). This statement was made by Mark when there were no coasts of Decapolis, nor was the name so much as known before the reign of Emperor Nero. (44) "And being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat,...." (Mark 14:3). This is highly improbable since lepers could not legally live in the cities. (45) "And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions" (Luke 2:46). Not until the time of Gamaliel in the middle of the 1st century was a child allowed to sit in the presence of rabbis. (46) "Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building,...." (John 2:20). (a) The scholar, English, says this is incorrect because the temple then standing was built by Herod who reigned but 37 years and built it in 8 years. (b) Josephus (B. 15, Chapter 11) gives a full account of the building of the temple. Sec. 6 says it took 1 1/2 years. Herod built it between 19 and 17 B.C. (47) "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice" (John 13:38). English says cocks were not allowed in Jerusalem at that time. (48) "That very night Belshazzar the Chaldean king was slain. And Darius the Mede received the kingdom (of Babylon--Ed.) being about 62 years old." (Dan. 5:30-31 RSV). (a) Belshazzar was not the king of Babylon. Nabonidus was the king of Babylon at the demise of the Chaldean Empire. Belshazzar was his son. (b) Darius never took the kingdom nor was he ever king of Babylon. (c) There is no reference to Darius the Mede in any ancient document we have today. (d) Profane history says it was Cyrus the Persian who conquered the Babylonian empire. (49) "Pul the King of Assyria came against the land;...." (2 Kings 15:19). John Remsburg says the king who reigned in Assyria at that time was Iva-bish. Assyria never had a king named Pul. (50) "John the baptizer appeared in the wilderness, preaching a baptism of repentance...." (Mark 1:4 RSV). The only extrabiblical evidence of John the Baptist's existence is a passage in Josephus (Antiquities B. 18, Ch. 5, Sec. 2) which appears to be an interpolation (a forgery). Herod had put away his wife who was the daughter of Aretas. Aretas defeated Herod who appealed to Tiberius for help. Tiberius sent Vitellius, a Syrian governor. Then follows an account of John the Baptist. From that, the narrative returns to Vitellius saying that he prepared to make war with Aretas. How the passage on John the Baptist relates to the narrative one can only surmise.

Jesus' Trial as "History"--Freethought literature is especially concerned with the historical problems associated with Jesus' trial and concomitant events. (51) "And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophecy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands" (Mark 14:65). Every person acquainted with the Jewish history of that age knows that this is false. In the Sanhedrin court and Roman courts, law, dignity, and decorum ruled. (52) "...Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" (Mark 14:61). No Jew, especially a priest, would use the expression, 'Christ, Son of the Blessed,' or imply that the messiah was the son of God. (53) "And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest:...." (Mark 14:54). No trial was ever held at the residence of the high priest. All meetings of the Sanhedrin were held in the hall adjoining the temple. A trial at any other place would have been illegal. (54) "And they compelled one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his cross" (Mark 15:21). Stating that Simon was compelled to carry the cross is improbable since in executions of this kind the criminal was always required to carry it himself as a mark of disgrace. (55) "And now when the evening was come, because it was the preparation, that is the day before the sabbath" (Mark 15:42). The sabbath began at sunset on the day that Jesus is declared to have been crucified. Jewish law would not permit a dead body to be exposed on the sabbath. Since crucifixion is a lingering death lasting several days, it's unlikely the Jews would have demanded such a death when they knew he would have to be taken down in a few hours. (56) "And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat the passover with you before I suffer" (Luke 22:15). The Synoptics say that the trial was held during the feast of the Passover. Yet, that could not be because no trials were held by the Jews during this feast. (57) "But you have a custom that I should release one man for you at the Passover; will you have me release for you the King of the Jews?" (John 18:39) and "Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired" (Mark 15:16). There is no historical authority whatever for this alleged custom. No Roman government could have safely adopted it. (58) "And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together, and led him into their council, saying, 'Art thou the Christ? tell us'" (Luke 22:66-67). (a) Here Jesus is questioned by the Sanhedrin, yet a Jewish court did not question a prisoner. He could not even plead guilty. (b) According to the Synoptics Jesus had no lawyer which Maimonides said would have been against Jewish law. (c) According to the Synoptics the trial lasted only a few hours. Yet, Jewish law required at least 2 days for a capital offense--one day for the prosecution, one day for the defense. (d) The Synoptics say that the trial was held on Friday the day before the Sabbath. Yet, no trial for a capital offense was ever allowed to begin on the day before the Sabbath. (e) By having Jesus appear before Annas, Caiaphas, Pilate, and Herod, they subjected him to four trials in one day which would have been illegal. (f) According to Luke the trial might have occurred during the day, while Matthew and Mark say it started in the night. Could the trial have been held as the latter allege? No, because Jewish law prohibited the opening of a trial at night. The Sanhedrin could not hold a session before 6 A.M. or after 3 P.M. (59) "Then Pilate therefore took Jesus, and scourged him. And the soldiers plaited a crown of thorns, and put it on his head and they put on him a purple robe, and said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands" (John 19:1-3). Jesus is said to have suffered indignities, not at the hands of a Jewish mob, but at the hands of a Roman court, from which the Jews had absented themselves and whose proceedings they could not witness. Yet, every lawyer knows Roman courts were models of business for 2,000 years. Scourging was often inflicted by the Romans before execution but never before conviction and sentencing. (60) "And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend:...." (John 19:12) and "Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified" (John 19:16). (a) Between the Pilate of the NT and the Pilate of history there is little in common. The NT Pilate is subservient to the Jews, acceding to their every wish. The real Pilate hated Jews and was cruel towards them, which provoked his recall. It is declared that Pilate desired to release Jesus but could not. Who ruled Judea, Pilate or the Jews? According to the Evangelists the Romans ruled Judea, while the Jews ruled the Romans. (61) "Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him. Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power,.... Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses? Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye. And they all condemned him to be guilty of death" (Mark 14:61-64). (a) Jesus, it was charged, had declared himself to be the son of God. This, if true, would not have constituted blasphemy. It was no offense against the law for a man to claim that he was the son of God. All men, especially all good men, were recognized as the sons of God. Referring to Christ's claim a Jewish writer said, "no law, no precedent, and no fictitious case in the Bible or the rabbinical literature, can be cited to make of the expression a case of blasphemy" and even if he had been proven guilty of blasphemy, he could not have been put to death, for blasphemy had ceased to be a capital offense. And is it reasonable to suppose that the Romans would have condemned a man to death for an offense against a religion in which they did not believe, but which they regarded as one of the vilest of superstitions? (b) Jesus had a trial before the Sanhedrin also in Matt. 26:57-75 and Luke 22:54-71. Yet, it was about this time (30 A.D.) that the Sanhedrin ceased to have jurisdiction over capital offenses. After its jurisdiction ceased Jesus could not have been tried before it; and before its jurisdiction ceased he would not have had a subsequent trial before a political figure such as Pilate.

As one authority noted, anywhere from 14 to 27 infractions of Jewish law exist in connection with Jesus' trial. The meeting was held at night, in the residence of the High Priest, during Passover, and under circumstances that precluded a quorum of 23. No defense witnesses were called, condemnation and execution occurred on the same day, and the penalty, crucifixion, did not match the crime, blasphemy.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #186 from Dr. PR, Pastor of the Bible Baptist Church, Author of Biblical Commentaries, and Founder of the Pensacola Bible Institute, Pensacola, Florida

(In late October, 1986, the editor of BE debated PR on national radio in what turned out to be a rather acrimonious conversation. I sent a letter to PR, along with a copy of BE, suggesting we meet again under more civil conditions. What follows is his reply--Ed.). Dear Mr. McKinsey. I received your note. All I can say is I feel very sorry for a man like yourself who is under the illusion that anyone could be "civil" to a man who thinks he is qualified to correct the Bible when he obviously is not able to read his own language. "Civility" to such a character is a little too much to ask. In thirty-six years of teaching the Bible and teaching Hebrew and Greek, plus manuscript evidence and problem texts, I don't believe I have ever encountered a more ignorant man or a man more ill-equipped to give an opinion about the scripture.

I looked at your little paper today for the first time (#47) and saw the old resurrected ghosts of Bob Ingersoll and Tom Paine and all the other hair-brained idiots that our freshmen students are taught to correct. Many of our freshmen students do not even have a high school education. Without wasting your time or my time in going through all the bunk you wrote down, notice that the very first so-called "contradiction" which you mentioned (If Terah was 70 years old when his son, Abraham, was born--Gen. 11:26--and Abraham left Haran at age 75 after his father died--Gen 12:4, Acts 7:4, then Terah lived to be 145. Yet, Gen 11:32 says Terah died in Haran at age 205--Ed.) has been answered by every book on apologetics written since 1850. You are more than 130 years late in your reading. Any child could solve the problem which you call "an historical problem."

Following the footsteps of men as uneducated, and as unlearned, and as unread, and as incompetent as yourself, you have assumed that Abraham was born first because his name was listed first. It doesn't take a man with a fifth grade education to see that Japheth is the first-born among Noah's three sons and he's never listed first. As a matter of fact, he's always listed last, as you find it in Gen. 10:1, 9:18, and 5:32. There is not only no contradiction in regards to the time that Terah died and Abraham left, but there isn't the slightest semblance of any "problem" at all anywhere in the entire passage in any of the verses. This is typical of your entire paper or, as far as that goes, your entire ministry. I would suggest that until you are able to read and do research work that you not demonstrate your ignorance on a nation-wide scale with a newspaper about "Biblical Errancy." Any man who can't read the book he professes to be correcting is in foul shape.

Dear PR. The rudeness of your diatribe is only matched by the inadequacies of your erudition. (1) You said that civility to a character such as myself is a little too much to ask. After having read your book Science and Philosophy and having met you on the radio, I'd say civility to anyone is a little too much to ask of you. Your puerile propensity for pejoratives is something only the uncouth could envy. I feel sorry for anyone who is incapable of discussing even the most cherished beliefs without vituperation and vilification. One can totally disagree with someone's philosophy and still be civil my friend. Ask Reagan and Gorbachov! You need a course in decency more than apologetics. I would suggest you read the Bible less and How to Behave more. (2) I seriously doubt that your students are exposed to the biblical criticisms of Paine and Ingersoll. Organizations and publications engaged in propagandistic activity rarely provide an adequate hearing for the other side. That's simply not their cup of tea. Your institution may be an exception but I doubt it. (3) You chose to attack my Terah-Abraham problem and said it's "been answered by every book on apologetics written since 1850." Apparently you aren't very well acquainted with apologetic works, PR, because many avoid the topic entirely. Moreover, "answers" have been around from the beginning, not just 1850, but they don't make any more sense now than when first devised. (4) Your defense of the Terah-Abraham problem lacks merit for several reasons: (a) You began by saying I "assumed Abraham was born first because his name was listed first" when no such assumption was either expressed or implied. In fact, it's quite irrelevant to the argument. What difference would the order of births make? Gen. 11:26 says, "When Terah had lived 70 years, he became the father of Abram, Nahor, and Haran" and clearly shows Abraham was born sometime during Terah's 70th year. That's all that's needed. (b) You not only used Noah's sons to make an irrelevant point about the sons of Terah but erred in the process. You said "it doesn't take a man with a 5th grade education to see that Japheth is the first-born among Noah's three sons." From whence did that conclusion arise? The Bible doesn't say Japheth was the first-born of the three. In truth, Gen. 10:21 in the RS, LB, ML, Masoretic Text, Good News, AS, NAB, BEB, and the NASB versions say the opposite; Shem was the older brother of Japheth. Apparently you have received something less than a fifth grade education. You said "any child could solve the problem which you call an historical problem." Since you didn't "solve" it, and any "child" can, I can only assume your capability is below that of a child. Your approach reminds me of your response on the radio when I asked you how the perfect Adam, created by the perfect God, could have sinned. You said it doesn't say he was created perfect; it says he was created innocent. Although I let the point go unchallenged, I should have asked where the Bible ever says Adam was created innocent. The word "innocent" never appears in the KJV of the Book of Genesis. In light of your desire to read words into the text that aren't there, PR, you should teach courses in eisegesis, not exegesis. (5) If all of your refutations of my comments on the Bible are as weak as the one presented, I can only conclude the words "bunk," "ignorant," "incompetent," "uneducated," "unlearned," "unread," "ill-equipped," and "hair-brained," could be more appropriately assigned. (6) You said "many of our freshmen students do not even have a high school education." If the caliber of your institution's scholarship and objectivity is comparable to what you have demonstrated so far, I can understand why. (7) You concluded that "this is typical of your entire paper or, as far as that goes, your entire ministry." How anyone could come to such a conclusion after having read only one issue out of 48 and having participated in only one radio exchange is perplexing to say the least. (8) And finally, you said "any man who can't read the book he professes to be correcting is in foul shape." Judging from your demeanor, I'd say foulness lies more with your manners and objectivity than my shape. I thought pastors were supposed to be models of rectitude. Dedication to one's beliefs is one thing, PR, fanaticism for the cause is another, and the line between them is often vague and easily crossed.

Letter #187 from JL of Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Dennis.... I am thinking of writing a pamphlet in response to the books of Josh McDowell, which seem to be widely used by Christian apologists. I was somewhat impressed with them when I first read them until I began to dig deeper. I then found that McDowell's arguments are based on fringe bible scholarship, bogus probability arguments, Christian interpretations and forgeries, quoting out-of-context, very loose interpretations of prophecy (compare his analysis of the Tyre prophecies in Ezekiel to yours), and blatant falsehoods. An example of a blatant falsehood in Evidence That Demands a Verdict is on page 73 (1972 Edition) where he says that Quirinius was governor of Syria around 7 B.C.E. "based on an inscription found in Antioch ascribing to Quirinius this post." The Antioch inscription says no such thing, as I found by checking Ramsay's translation (the very source McDowell cites). It only states that Quirinius was elected duumvir of the colony of Pisidian Antioch in Galatia. Ramsay concocted an argument from this that Quirinius was governor of Syria at that time, but it's a very weak one. I've thought of several titles for an anti-McDowell pamphlet, such as "Christianity: A Verdict That Demands Evidence"....

Letter #188 from JJM of Center Line, Michigan

Dear Mr. McKinsey: Perhaps this is germane. Christians of every hue say that human life comes from God; for this reason, abortion is murder. Very well! But if God creates a life and sends it where He knows it will be killed, then how is He any different from David, who sent Uriah the Hittite to where he knew he would be killed (2 Sam. 11)? David sinned once this way (and had, at least, a discernible motive)--but how many aborted babies are there which God has had killed this way? If Christians really believe in absolute morality, then shouldn't they show it here--by holding God at least as responsible for murder as David is held?

Editor's Response to Letter #188

Dear JJM. Whenever you see a biblical problem, you should always ask yourself, "What will apologists say to this." It's like war. Before you fire something their way, make sure you know what they have available for retaliation. One reason I devote so much time to apologetic writings is to make sure I know the number, strength, position, accuracy, and direction of their arguments before engaging in verbal exchanges. I dislike surprises, especially on the radio. They are not only embarrassing and demoralizing but indications of poor preparation on my part.

Anyone following this strategy in this instance will see that competent apologists wouldn't have much difficulty with your example. They'll simply say, "God did not intend for the babies to die; David did intend to kill Uriah. God sent babies to where he knew they would be killed, as did David, but he did not send them there to have them killed. That was man's doing. Your example highlights the importance of engaging Bible believers in dialogue because it enables people such as you and I to improve our analysis and exposition of the Bible. Please accept my comments in the spirit in which they are offered.

Letter #189 from John Sikos, P.O. Box 443, Romeo, Michigan

Dear Dennis. I have just one thing to add to Mark Potts' Letter #182 in the December issue. If God, Jesus, and the Holy Spirit are distinct, yet one, and if both God and Jesus either have or are spirit, then consider Luke 4:1 which says Jesus is "full of the Holy Ghost." I wonder--is the Holy Ghost ever full of Jesus?

Editor's Response to Letter #189

Dear John. The problem I have with questions such as this, and there are hundreds one could pose, is that they are troubling but not disabling. Apologists can either dismiss the question with a brief yes or no or ask why it is of importance and move on. The Bible remains intact unless a contradiction emerges.

Letter #190 from BR of St. Cloud, Minnesota

Dear Dennis. I continue to read your publication "religiously" and believe you are in some respects a national treasure. I also believe that your impact will be felt long after your're gone, a thought I'm certain you don't find disappointing. I've been with you on this venture from the beginning....

Editor's Response to Letter #190

Dear BR. You're only too kind. Accolades of that magnitude are always appreciated.

Issue No.50

February 1987

Biblical "History" (Part Four of a Four-Part Series)--This month's commentary will begin with a final listing of biblical events for which there is little or no extrabiblical corroboration and conclude with an enumeration of the problems associated with many population figures throughout the OT. (62) "But one of them, Caiaphas, who was high priest that year,...." (John 11:49 RSV). This language implies the high priest was appointed annually, whereas he held his office for life or until removed. Caiaphas had been high priest for many years. (63) "He did not say this of his own accord, but being high priest that year he prophesied that Jesus should die for the nation;...." (John 11:51-52). Jews knew that prophesying was not a privilege or part of that office. A high priest did not assume the role of prophet, much less would he have given utterances to the prophecy ascribed to Caiaphas. It would have been foreign to the Jewish mind. For even one person to have been put to death to save all of Israel would have been murder. (64) "Herod and Pilate became friends with each other that very day for before this they had been at enmity with each other" (Luke 23:12). To the day of Pilate's recall by Rome they were enemies. Herod was continually plotting to unite his Galilee with Pilate's Judea, which his father had promised him. (65) "Now in the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee...and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene; Anna and Caiaphas being the high priests, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness" (Luke 3:1-2). (a) How could John have gotten the word of God during the reign of Lysanias in Abilene when Lysanias had been dead for 34 years when Jesus, a contemporary of John, was born. Lysanias was put to death at the instigation of Cleopatra 60 years before Jesus began his ministry (Josephus, Antiq. B 15, Ch 4, Sec 1). (b) At the time mentioned by Luke the territory of Abila or Abilene was no longer a tetrarchy. (c) Two people never held the office of high priest jointly. It would have been the same as having two popes. (66) And lastly, Isaiah said, "He (Cyrus--Ed.) is my (God's--Ed.) shepherd and shall perform all my pleasures: even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid" (Isa. 44:28). How could Isaiah have written this since he died around 698 B.C., and Cyrus' decree in favour of the Jews returning to Jerusalem did not occur until 536 B.C., 162 years later? As with other predictions, biblicists will say it's merely an accurate prophecy, while some knowledgeable authorities say it was written long after the event happened.

Population Figures--A final aspect of the problems within biblical history concerns the accuracy of several population statistics: (67) "...all the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten (70--Ed.)" (Gen. 46:27) versus "...for every one (after the Exodus--Ed.) that went to be numbered, from 20 years old and upward, (was--Ed.)...six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty men" --603,550 (Ex. 38:26). For each man in the 603,550 figure one can safely assume there was at least one woman and three children (totalling, 3,000,000 people). This would mean 70 people went down into Egypt in Gen. 46 and approximately 3,000,000 emerged nearly 215 years later. The sons of Jacob had approximately 5 sons each. If all of Jacob's grandsons also had had 5 sons each and so on for 4 generations and nobody had died, which is false ("And Joseph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation"--Ex. 1:6), there would have been only 6,500 males by the time the Exodus occurred. Any rational increase in these numbers would not change the totals very much, even if all of the 70 were Jacob's grandsons and each had had 5 sons etc. The biblical scholar,

Joseph Wheless, says that for 3,000,000 people to have left 4 generations later, each of the 55 males of the first generation would have to have had 40 children (20 boys and 20 girls) and so on each generation. It's especially difficult to see how the Israelites increased to 3,000,000 in light of Deut. 7:7 which says, "The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people." (68) "And it came to pass the selfsame day, that the Lord did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their armies" (Ex. 12:51). (a) It would have taken several days if not weeks for the message to have reached the people in the outlying districts and even more time for people to have assembled and left. The pharaoh told them to leave the night before. Imagine assembling 2 to 3,000,000 people in one night in that day and age! (b) Assuming it took 1 hour to mobilize and 8 hours to collect the things mentioned in Exodus 12:35-36 ("And the children of Israel did according to the word of Moses; and they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and the Lord gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required. And they spoiled the Egyptians") and assemble, they would have had 15 hours left to leave Egypt which would have required them to move at more than 60 miles per hour according to one source. (c) If they had marched in close order as many as 50 abreast, with only a yard interval between ranks, there would have been 48,284 ranks forming a column 28 miles long. (69) "And gather thou (Moses--Ed.) all the congregation together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And Moses did as the Lord commanded him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation" (Lev. 8:3-4) and "The length of the court shall be an hundred cubits and the breadth fifty (150' X 75')..." (Ex. 27:18). Gathering over 600,000 men in front of a tent in a court only 150 by 75 feet is highly improbable in light of the fact that this many people would make a dense 1/4th mile square mass. Actually, there would have been more than 2,500,000 people involved extending over several miles. (70) "These be the words which Moses spake unto all Israel..." (Deut. 1.1). How could one man have spoken to and been heard by more than 600,000 people, let alone 2,500,000? (71) "When the Lord thy God shall bring thee into the land whither thou (the Israelites--Ed.) goest to possess it, and hath cast out many nations before thee, the Hittites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations greater and mightier than thou;..." (Deut. 7:1) versus "The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people" (Deut. 7:7). If each of the 7 nations had more constituents than the Israelites, then the latter defeated approximately 18,000,000 people. (72) "The Lord made not this covenant with our father, but with us (the Israelites--Ed.) even us, who are all of us here alive this day" (Deut. 5:3). Moses made this statement 38 years after the covenant was made at Sinai and after thousands of Israelites had wandered in the wilderness for the same period; yet no one who received the covenant had died. (73) "And ye shall compass the city, all ye men of war,...and the 7th day ye shall compass the city 7 times,..." (Josh. 6:3-4) and "it came to pass on the 7th day, that they rose early about the dawning of the day, and compassed the city after the same manner 7 times only on that day they compassed the city 7 times" (Josh 6:15). Some observers feel Num. 26:2 & 51 show there were over 600,000 men in the Israelite army and ask how that many men could have gone around a city 7 times in one day in that era. (74) "Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were 232: and after them he numbered all the people, even all the children of Israel, being 7,000" (1 Kings 20:15). How could the Israelites have been the chosen people when they went from over 2,500,000 to 7,000? (75) "This was the muster of them...Adnah the commander, with 300,000 men of valor, and next to him Jehohanan the commander, with 280,000, and next to him Amasiah...with 200,000 mighty men of valor. Of Benjamin...with 200,000 men...and next to him Jehozabed with a 180,000 armed for war" (2 Chron. 17:14-18 RSV). How could they have assembled an army of 1,160,000 in that area? (76) "And the space in which we came from Kadeth-barnea until we were come over the brook Zered, was 38 years; until all the generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host, as the Lord swore unto them" (Deut.2:14).

All of the 603,550 fighting men died within the 38 year period but not Moses who wrote the verse. (77) And finally, "there went forth a wind from the Lord, and it brought quails from the sea, and let them fall beside the camp, about a day's journey on this side and a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp, and about 2 cubits (1 cubit = 18 inches) above the face of the earth. And the people rose all that day, and all night, and all the next day, and gathered the quails; he who gathered least gathered 10 homers; and they spread them out for themselves all around the camp" (Num. 11:31-32). (a) A homer is about 10 bushels; so that the least gathered by anyone was 100 bushels or about 800 gallons. Estimating 15 quails to the gallon gives 12,000 per person. (b) Another scholar noted that a biblical day's journey is 44,815 meters or 49,296 yards or 28 miles according to the Jewish Encyclopedia. Such an area would have had 780 square miles of solid quail 36 inches high.

These figures and conclusions, like many others found throughout the four-part series on biblical "history" are based on the analyses of many observers of the extrabiblical scene.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #191 from Robert M. Bowman Jr., Associate Editor at the Christian Research Institute, San Juan Capistrano, California

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Thank you for responding to my letter of April 2, 1986, in your July 1986 issue of BE. I would like to comment on your response. My first question had to do with the motivation and sanity of the biblical writers. You answered that because the identity of the writers is in many cases uncertain, their motives and sanity cannot be ascertained with any certainty. In the majority of cases I think we can know who wrote what book (See: Donald Guthrie's New Testament Introduction, for example). Moreover, it seems to me that when reading a book (or a newsletter!) we ought to assume the author's sincerity and sanity unless and until evidence arises to the contrary. Still, your answer amounts to "I don't know," and that's fair.

My second question concerned how prone to error you consider the biblical writers to have been. You answered that it didn't matter, because one error would falsify its inerrancy, and went on to say, "If you are only concerned with numbers then I can say that I can't think of any book I've read that's had more problems than the Bible." Now, let me explain my reason for asking the question. If you were saying--as so many scholars, theologians, and lay people are saying today--simply that the Bible has some errors in it, that it isn't perfect, then I could understand that (though I wouldn't agree). But you seem to be saying that the Bible is chock-full of errors--that, in fact, it is filled with a disproportionately high number of errors. If it was merely a human book, just another collection of human ideas and stories, then we would indeed expect it to contain some goofs. But we would not expect it to contradict itself with every new sentence. Yet your newsletters (I have seen half a dozen of them) give exactly that impression of the Bible. This leads me to suspect that there may be something faulty in your methodology. If you said, "I've found a couple hundred contradictions and errors in the Bible," I'd say, "Really, let's look at some of them." But you seem to think there are thousands of bloopers in the Bible. This makes me wonder if perhaps you aren't trying too hard to find errors in the Bible.

My suspicions are confirmed when I discover that you think Jesus contradicted Himself over and over again. For the sake of argument, let's concede that Jesus might have contradicted Himself a few times; if He were only a mere, ordinary human being, that would be expected. But it would not be expected that nearly every statement of Jesus recorded in the Gospels would contradict another statement of His. Yet, that is the impression one gets from your newsletter. I'm just an ordinary guy, but I can string together a few sentences without contradicting myself....

Dear Robert. I'm sorry for this late reply to your letter but we are so inundated with correspondence that much of it could never be answered unless BE were expanded. As far as the specifics of your analysis are concerned, several warrant comment. (1) You said that "in the majority of cases I think we can know who wrote what book" and mentioned a corroborative source when, in fact, the authorship of every book in the Bible is a matter of dispute among scholars. I can't think of one book whose author is known for certain and, like you, I have authorities to buttress my point. That's the problem with an extrabiblical topic such as history. None of us were there and it ultimately comes down to whose sources, whose scholars, you want to believe. (2) Your comment that "we ought to assume the author's sincerity and sanity unless and until evidence arises to the contrary" is misleading because the writing, itself, may bring the author's sanity into question. The books of Daniel, Ezekiel, and especially Revelation, are sufficient within themselves to bring the author's mental stability under scrutiny. I'm reminded of the comments by Ingersoll ("Read the Book of Revelation, and you will agree with me that nothing that ever emanated from a mad house can more than equal it for incoherence" ("Interviews," Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 273), Thomas Jefferson ("It is between 50 and 60 years since I read the Apocalypse--Revelation--and I then considered it merely the ravings of a maniac.... What has no meaning admits of no explanation"), and Thomas Paine ("It's impossible to tell where revelations stop and hallucinations begin"). "Evidence to the contrary" arises as soon as you read the writing. (3) Although I'm among those who contend the Bible is a veritable miasma of problems, I wouldn't say it "contradicts itself with every new sentence." That's going too far. Projecting that impression is not our intent. Virtually any book on a library shelf has some truth in it. If you obtained the impression from BE that "nearly every statement of Jesus recorded in the Gospels would contradict another statement of His," for example, then you read more into the narrative than was there. (4) Your comment that the large number of problems attributed to the Bible by BE "leads me to suspect that there may be something faulty in your methodology" exposes a distinct bias on your part. Why assume something is wrong with my methodology rather than the Bible itself. After all, we have presented more than enough data to substantiate our position. (5) It's not a question of whether I think there are "thousands of bloopers in the Bible." The evidence shows as much and many are ideologically fatal. That's what is crucial. Finding problems is not nearly as hard as you imply and I'm under little stress while so engaged. Moreover, the number of errors and contradictions has no relevance to how hard I'm trying; they either exist or they don't. (6) You admitted "that Jesus might have contradicted Himself a few times if He were only a mere, ordinary human being." But the point is that he is supposed to be God incarnate; so how could he ever contradict himself, especially in God's perfect book?

Letter #192 from VT of Huron, California

Greetings. Regarding Issue 45, Sept. 86, Letter #167 from Mark Potts. In regard to Gen. 6:9 ("Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations and Noah walked with God") (which apologists were asked to reconcile with "all have sinned" in Rom. 3:23--Ed.), this verse seems to be rather interesting or confusing to both Mr. Potts and yourself. Without a proper education in the field of HOMILETICS (the branch of theology dealing with the writing and preaching of sermons--Ed.) it is impossible to speak with authority. However, I do believe we can trust such scholars as F.W. Farrar, H. Cotterill, T. Whitelaw and others.... "Was a just man" does not mean spotless innocence (Knobel); but upright, honest, and virtuous.... He was just by reason of his faith in God.... PERFECT implies `COMPLETE, WHOLE. Perfect in the sense not of SINLESSNESS, but of MORAL INTEGRITY (Generius, Calvin)...Noah was a preacher of righteousness. The conclusion: Noah, it is obvious, was not a man whose character was shaped by his contemporaries. In this regard, Noah was a "just man that walked with God"...Noah was perfect in the sense that his heart was right with God...I trust this little note of EXPLANATION will SUFFICE. I know much, much more can be said about and to the subject, but this is (I believe) enough to set the record straight. Do you agree?

Editor's Response to Letter #192

Greetings: Unfortunately, VT, your little note doesn't set the record straight or suffice for many reasons. First, what does homiletics have to do with the problem? Exegesis (the critical analysis of a word or passage, esp. in the Bible) and apologetics (the branch of theology having to do with the defense and proofs of Christianity) are the real areas of concern, not homiletics. I fail to see the relevance of writing and delivering sermons. Second, most of your letter dealt with the word "just" and had to be deleted because it was irrelevant to the issue. You built and fought a strawman because I focused entirely on the word "perfect" which you discussed only briefly. Third, interestingly enough, you failed even in your employment of the word "just" because if it involves being upright, honest, and virtuous without perfection, then everyone is included. We are all upright and honest to some degree. No one is totally dishonest or immoral. Fourth, you tried to show that "perfect" did not involve "sinlessness" but proved the opposite by saying "perfect" means complete moral integrity. How does that differ from sinless perfection? Either Noah was morally perfect or he wasn't. There is no inbetween, and if his moral integrity was complete, then he was sinless, i.e., morally perfect, not a sinner, which would violate Rom. 3:23. Fifth, why would Noah have been chosen to be on the ark to begin with if he wasn't morally perfect? If he was not morally perfect then he was morally imperfect, in which case he was no different from the rest of his contemporaries and had no more right to be on the ark than they did. To say that he sinned, but less than others, is no answer because he would still have been a sinner and not always have "walked with God." His difference from others would have been one of degree not kind. If Noah was not an example of "spotless innocence" as you claim, then how could his heart have always been "right with God" as you allege?

Letter #193 from EB of Canton, Michigan

Dear Dennis. Some time ago I wrote to you about answering some questions I got from work. The main question was about the location of Zebulun (which was involved in a prophecy on page 2 of Issue #10--Ed.). Gen. 49:13 says, "Zebulun shall dwell at the shore of the sea; he shall become a haven for ships, and his border shall be at Sidon." You went on to say how this prophecy failed. You also wrote me and said, "Two Christian atlases clearly show Zebulun does not touch any sea." My born-again boss said it did touch the sea, and quoted Matt. 4:13-15 ("And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Isaiah the prophet, saying, the land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan,...."). Would you respond to him? Keep up the great work.

Editor's Response to Letter #193

Dear EB. In the first place, your boss apparently ignored my suggestion that he consult some standard biblical atlases such as Westminster's Historical Maps of Bible Lands and Standard's Bible Atlas and relied on another biblical verse instead. That's always the problem with extrabiblical subjects. Many biblicists don't care about outside information except when favorable and operate on the premise that if it says the Bible is wrong, then it's false, and that's that. In this instance, your boss not only failed by ignoring some standard historical maps but by relying on Matt. 4:13-15 to salvage his position. Matthew says, "and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zebulun and Nephthalim." Capernaum is a city on the Sea of Galilee within the province of Naphtali which also borders the Sea of Galilee. It is not within Zebulon, an adjacent province to the west of Naphtali that touches no seas. Because Capernaum is on the eastern side of Naphtali and Zebulon is on its western side, Capernaum can not be in both provinces simultaneously. Consequently, Matt. 4:13 does not prove Zebulon touches the sea. Secondly, if your boss had closely read Matt. 4:15 he would have noticed that it says "the land of Zebulon, and the land of Naphtalim by way of the sea." In other words, Naphtali was "by way of the sea" or on the sea coast, not Zebulon. Thirdly, although the original prophecy in Gen. 49:13 said the borders of Zebulon would extend to Sidon on the Mediterranean, there are no extrabiblical maps or internal verses showing Zebulon extending to Sidon which is far to the northwest. And finally, since your supervisor relied partly upon Matt. 4:15, he should also note that Zebulon and Naphtali, which are west of the Jordan River, could not have been "beyond the Jordan" (Matt. 4:15) unless the speaker was east of the River, which is unlikely.

Letter #194 from VM of Del Mar, California

Dear Dennis. I must say I thoroughly enjoy your newsletter, but I think it would be much more to your advantage to concentrate more on errancy itself and less upon topics outside the Bible. Key Christian doctrines should be examined and exposed as absurdities, as well as contrasted with the contradictory views of other sects (e.g. Jesus is God vs. Jesus is not God) and all the while there should be a chance for apologists to be heard. Anything else (i.e. Christian bashing, biblical morality, etc...) is superfluous, and does not really relate to the issue at hand; namely, "is the bible the perfect word of God?" Problems also arise when we try to step outside the Bible to prove it is false. For example: in BE #3, you criticized the God of the OT for ordering horses to be hamstrung (Josh. 11:6). Unless you're a vegetarian, are you really in a position to speak out against "cruelty to animals"? Ironically, it's the God of the OT who advocates vegetarianism as an ethical ideal (Gen. 1:29-30, Isa. 11:6-9, Deut. 8:7-9)---this would make a great subject for ignored teachings. This is precisely the dilemma: in terms of morality, the Bible contains everything from hardcore pacifism and vegetarianism to human sacrifice and rape. Thus its teachings have not only moved the "pious sadists" of the Middle Ages, but Tolstoy, Gandhi, and da Vinci as well. Rather than evaluate the bible on emotional appeal (which can never really work, since it contains a lot of "inspirational" passages alongside the filth), it's better to judge it objectively and critically. In general, you're doing a terrific job, and keep up the good work!

Editor's Response to Letter #194

Dear VM. We agree on most of your comments. I've repeatedly stressed the importance of using the Bible against itself although many people rely primarily upon extrabiblical data to refute the Book and want BE to follow their lead. The Babylonian influence on the Canon's formation and the authorship of various books, for example, just don't carry the weight of internal inconsistencies. Although occasionally discussed in BE, I leave such topics to the Higher Critics and others. That's why I haven't been totally comfortable with my recent commentaries on biblical "history." Although my sources may be totally accurate, biblicists will probably reply that, "Our authorities, our sources, say something quite different and we choose to believe them." The best way to make an historical case would be to show that all the historians of that era substantiate your position which would be rare. Oddly enough, the contradictory aspects within the Bible often provide protection against external assaults. If someone contends scripture supports war, slavery, and immorality, for example, defenders can always provide verses to the contrary. The old adage that you can prove anything you want from the Bible has a good deal of truth. Only when one goes within the Book and compares verse with verse do contradictions become weaknesses. External strengths are internal failings. Since few people really know the Book and even fewer critics have focused primarily on internal difficulties, the Bible has been relatively free of effective opposition from the beginning.

I must take issue with a couple of your points, however. I don't feel one needs to be a vegetarian to speak against cruelty to animals any more than one needs to be a pacifist to speak against a war or a teetotalist to speak against alcoholism. If we have to be perfect models to oppose an activity, then we're all in trouble. Secondly, the verses you suggested could not be included in Ignored Teachings under VEGETARIANISM because they do not clearly teach such a doctrine.

Alcohol--Probably no chemical in the history of mankind has been more involved with the destruction of human life than alcohol. Throughout the ages groups of one sort or another have arisen to fight its pernicious influence and religiously-oriented bodies have been no exception. Biblicists have viewed themselves as being in the forefront of the abstinence movement via such organizations as AA and the WCTU (Womens' Christian Temperance Union). Although one need not exhibit much wisdom to see why people should be encouraged to eschew alcohol, as exceptional degree of insight is needed to see how the Bible can be of assistance in this regard. Only by the selective use of verses can one invoke the Bible as an anti-alcohol source. Because alcohol is a sociological problem of the first magnitude, an exhaustive biblical discussion of the issue is in order. All of the verses in opposition to its consumption will be listed first, followed by all those advocating its employment. Both categories can be subdivided into verses that are forceful and those less assertive. Verses most in favor of the teetotalist position are: "Moreover, wine is treacherous; the arrogant man shall not abide" (Hab. 2:5 RSV) and "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth,...." (Rom. 14:21) and "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise" (Rom. 20:1) and "A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober,...not given to wine,...." (1 Tim. 3:2-3) and "For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God;...not given to wine,....sober, just, holy, temperate" (Titus 1:7-8) and "Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations" (Lev. 10:9) and "Who has woe? Who has sorrow? Who has strife? Who has complaining? Who has wounds without course? Who has redness of eyes? Those who tarry long over wine, those who try mixed wine. Do not look at wine when it is red, when it sparkles in the cup and goes down smoothly. At the last it bites like a serpent, and stings like an adder" (Prov. 23:29-32 RSV).

Verses opposing the consumption of alcohol with less definitiveness are: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess..." (Eph. 5:18) and "Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkard,...shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 6:10) and "Whoredom and wine and new wine take away the heart" (Hosea 4:11) and "For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink..." (Luke 1:15) and "These also reel with wine and stagger with strong drink; the priest and the prophet reel with strong drink, they are confused with wine, they stagger with strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in giving judgment" (Isa. 28:7 RSV) and "Thou hast made thy people suffer hard things; thou hast given us wine to drink that made us reel" (Psalm 60:3 RSV) and "But Daniel resolved that he would not defile himself with the king's rich food, or with the wine which he drank" (Dan. 1:8 RSV) and "...when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries" (1 Peter 4:3) and "Then said the Lord unto me, Go yet, love...an adulteress, according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Israel, who look to other gods, and love flagons of wine" (Hos. 3:1) and finally, "When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite,.... He shall separate himself from wine and strong drink, and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moist grapes, or dried. All the days of his separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the vine tree,...." (Num. 6:2-4). The weakness inherent in some of the latter lies in the fact that they seem to oppose drunkenness and excess rather than drinking per se.

On the other side of the coin are those verses that advocate indulging and they too can be divided into stronger and weaker comments. Among the former are: "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy heart. Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more" (Prov. 31:6-7) and "Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works" (Eccle. 9:7) and "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities" (1 Tim. 5:23) and "Thus saith the God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine:..." (Jer. 13:12) and "...every one who thirsts, come to the waters; and he who has no money come buy and eat! Come, buy wine and milk...." (Isa. 55:1) and "Yea, the Lord will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith" (Joel 2:19) and "I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel...and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof...." (Amos 9:14) and "...then you shall turn it into money, and bind up the money in your hand, and go to the place which the Lord your God chooses, and spend the money for whatever you desire, oxen, or sheep, or wine or strong drink, whatever your appetite craves..." (Deut. 14:25-26 RSV) and "Therefore God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine" (Gen. 27:28) and "On this mountain the Lord of hosts will make for all peoples a feast of fat things, a feast of wine...." (Isa. 25:6 RSV) and "Likewise must the deacons be grave, not doubletongued, not given to much wine,...." (1 Tim. 3:8) and "...not given to much wine...." (Titus 2:3).

And finally, there are verses that support drinking but with less assertiveness: "And wine that maketh glad the feast of man...." (Psalm 104:15) and "...in the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink offering" (Num. 28:7) and "Behold that which I have seen: it is good and comely for one to eat and to drink,...." (Eccle 5:18) and "the vine said unto them, Should I leave my wine, which cheereth God and man...." (Judges 9:13) and "...he will love you, bless you; he will also bless your grain and your wine...." (Deut. 7:13 RSV) and "Melchizedek King of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God" (Gen. 14:18) and "For how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! corn shall make the young men cheerful, and new wine the maids" (Zech. 9:17) and "in that day the mountains shall drip sweet wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and all the stream beds of Judah shall flow with water...." (Joel 3:18 RSV) and "...after that the Nazarite may drink wine" (Num. 6:20) and Lev. 23:13, 2 Sam. 6:19 and 2 Chron. 2:10.

Judging from the above, one can see the Bible's teachings on the consumption of alcohol are inconsistent and contradictory. Last month's comment to the effect that there is a "good deal of truth in the old adage that you can prove anything you want from the Bible" is borne out by this example. If one seeks a verse in favor of drinking it's available; if one seeks the opposite, it's there, too. As in the case of war, immorality, slavery, brutality etc., if someone chooses to attack the Bible from the outside, biblicists have plenty of verses to utilize in support of either position as expediency dictates. Because of the extremely contradictory nature of biblical pronouncements, the Bible is made to order for this kind of assault. But when one goes within the Book and simply asks, "Should I drink or shouldn't I," he finds no consistent response; he's left hanging. Because the overwhelming majority of the people do not know the Book very well and are not aware of its contradictions, they are satisfied with whatever answer apologists provide and given the impression the Bible is the wisest of all volumes. Failure to take cognizance of this fact has been one of the most important mistakes of freethought advocates throughout history. The latter have concentrated on the wrong strategy and addressed the wrong issues. There is more than enough information within the Book to refute its validity and keep one busy for a lifetime. It isn't necessary to focus primarily on externals although they should be included.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #195 from RJS of Burnsville, Minnesota

Dear Dennis, I enjoyed issue #49. The section on the gospel versions of the trial of Jesus and violations of Jewish law is excellent. But most of all I liked the letter from "Dr. PR" who is the embodiment of the fundamentalist spirit. Many of these Bible thumpers find abuse much easier than argument. Ironically, I think both of you are wrong about Abraham and Terah! Pastor PR's apologetic is silly, as you point out, but your original criticism is based on the assumption that Abraham left Haran after Terah died. But the Genesis account might not be strictly chronological. That is, it is perfectly good narrative technique to organize a story around people or events rather than being a slave to chronology. (My book about the flat-earthers will be organized that way.) The narrator completes the story of Terah, including his death, and then begins the story of Abraham. We cannot exclude the possibility that the two stories overlap in time.

Pastor PR's Science and Philosophy must be a pearl of great price. No doubt I could dig out his identity, but it is easier just to ask you. Who is he, and how can I get his book?

Editor's Response to Letter #195

Dear RJS. I appreciate your compliment but must take exception to your analysis of the Terah/Abraham problem. You have devised the kind of defense I would expect from a typical apologist and, with all due respect, I think you should have read the text closer. Your criticism of my "assumption that Abraham left Haran after Terah died" is best addressed by reading the words themselves. Acts 7:4 in the RSV says, "Then he (Abraham--Ed.) departed from the land of the Chaldeans, and lived in Haran. And after his father died, God removed him from there into this land (Israel--Ed.) in which you are now living." The Living Bible's version of Gen. 11:31-12:4 clearly states the same. "Then Terah took his son Abram...to go to the land of Canaan; but they stopped instead at the city of Haran and settled there. And there Terah died at the age of 205. After the death of Abram's father, God told him, Leave your own country behind you...and go to the land I will guide you to.... So Abram departed as the Lord had instructed him...." Your "being a slave to chronology" comment reminds me of the common apologetic rationalization of the inconsistencies among the gospel narratives. One must assume narrations are arranged chronologically unless good evidence exists to the contrary; otherwise, chaos will reign. Every reader would be free to arrange events in any order he or she deemed desirable.

As far as PR's Science and Philosophy is concerned, I wouldn't waste my time. If I hadn't received a free copy, I probably would have never read it. Far too many other books merit more immediate attention.

Letter #196 from A and A

Dear Dennis. I thoroughly enjoy your publication. Let me quibble. Jews did practice crucifixion at least one time; the Hasmonean monarch, Alexander Jannaeus crucified 800 pharisees (89 BC), an event which may have inspired I Enoch 37-31 (I think you mean 37-41--Ed.) according to my source, The Jews in the Roman World by Michael Grant.

Also, it is hair-splitting to say Herod the Great was not a King. The Romans had puppet kings. You recognized that he was a king by your reference to the Kingdom of Herod (#37 on page 1 of Issue #49). Now that I've put forth my petty criticism let me again congratulate you for your brave and scholarly work.

Letter #197 from RCC of Nagasaki, Japan

(On page 2 of Issue #49 BE said Assyria never had a king named Pul--Ed.). Dear Dennis. Regarding #(49) "Pul the king of Assyria came against the land...." (2 Kings 15:19). In 74 BC a former soldier named 'Pulu' ascended the throne of Assyria. He took the name "Tiglath-Pileser III and subdued Palestine in 733 B.C. Tell el-Mutesellim, Stratum II has evidence of this. PULU became 'Pul' in Hebrew. Cuneiform tablets found in palaces on the Tigris River tell the same story as the OT. My reference is The Bible as History by Werner Keller, translated from the German. Thank you for your fine periodical.

Letter #198 from KB of Los Angeles, California

Dear Dennis. My jury is still out regarding your new format....Regarding Issue #49 by the numbers: (32) You will probably get a lot of flack on this. Per Josephus Antiquities XIV. I.3. "Herod son (of Antipater)...came...to be king of the Jews...." Marc Anthony did appoint Herod tetrarch (XIV. XIII,l), but this did not exclude Herod's claim to the title of King.... (41) The swine of Matt. 8:32 and Mark 5:11 are in the gentile area of the Decapolis, near Gadara; so neither their keepers nor the users would be Jewish....

Editor's Response to Letter #198

Dear KB. Your historical sources, like those of the two prior letters (#196 and #197) are at odds with those I consulted. So whom should we believe? I could research the matter further as could you, but would the average person be materially swayed by an historical exchange of this nature. I enjoy history immensely and was a philosophy/history major in college, but these are not the issues of greatest importance to the average believer in the Bible. Like many other extrabiblical subjects they are not sufficiently demonstrable and/or persuasive to be placed on the front burner.

Letter #199 from Ed McCartney, P.O. Box 79024, Lakewood, Ohio 44107

Dear Dennis...In issue #46, page 2, point (12) you added up the men on both sides for battle to 1,200,000 in 2 Chron. 3:3. The total population is not given. I understand that, unless everyone fought, the population is greater than the number in the army. I do not know what the population was. I do not doubt the number of fighting men (1,200,000--Ed.) the Bible gives.... You said, "Palestine could have barely supported 2,000,000." How do you reckon that? You said, "Palestine, a poor miserable little country..." You may be describing its conditions at present. If so, are you saying that back in Abijah's time the land was as desolate as it is now? I checked an atlas published two years ago and it says the population of Israel is 3,878,000.

Editor's Response to Letter #199

Dear Ed. Even though the area under discussion is far more affluent and fertile today than nearly 2,500 years ago, the entire population has barely reached 4,000,000. Yet, you choose to believe ancient Israel fielded an army far larger than that which executed the allied invasion of Europe on June 6, 1944 (D-Day).

Letter #200 from FW of Eufaula, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. Herewith my renewal. I continue to be interested (enjoy is not an appropriate word) in your detailed focusing on discrepancies in the Bible. I have only "exposed" your writings to one "fundamentalist" couple and they accuse you of taking things out of context--a claim you've refuted many times. I trust your honesty but would feel better discussing the pros and cons with some truly open-minded people if I could find them!

Recently the Methodist Church in whose musically excellent choir I sing (tho I haven't joined the church) has started a Sunday School class for "skeptics" like me. The leader is a questioner who has a strong background in theological, philosophical and psychological training. We are fortunate to have him. So far no central direction of study has emerged and maybe we will be "thrown out" when our liberalism becomes known to the church fathers before such a direction shapes up. I can envision information derived from your letter being useful from time to time....

With reference to your question in Issue #46 about God having performed one OT good, honest, just act. Assuming it happened miraculously as related in 1 Kings 17:16, the oil and meal not failing for many days; would that not qualify? How about the cloud by day, fire by night and manna during the 40 years wandering in the wilderness, and the parting of the Red Sea prior to that? I have the feeling you'll feel none qualify but they come to me so I've jotted them down for what they're worth--if they really happened.

Dear FW. I appreciate the implicit kindness in a couple of your remarks but have two points I'd like to make. First, "discrepancies" is a word favored by apologists because it tends to minimize contradictions and ameliorate inconsistencies. Hopefully an oversight on your part rather than a conscious intent to mislead accounts for its employment. Countless biblical problems are far more than mere "discrepancies." They are major problems with serious consequences. Second, the acts you related with respect to the parting of the Red Sea, the gift of manna, etc. are only a few of many acts of favoritism shown by God toward the Israelites. If the OT God were as good, honest, and just as you believe, then why did he repeatedly favor the Jews over the Hivites, the Jebusites, the Amorites and other tribes? What had the Jews done to earn the title of "God's Chosen People?" Why were they selected over everyone else? That doesn't sound like goodness and justice to me. That sounds like what we have in abundance already. Why weren't the other tribes forgiven repeatedly for their constant violations of God's laws? God's preference for the Israelites is all too evident throughout the OT. I thought we were all supposed to be God's people and He was no respecter of persons (Acts 10:34)? No doubt the Hivites, Jebusites and Amorites had troubles too. Why weren't they showered with favors?

Letter #201 from Jim Lippard, P.O. Box 37052, Phoenix, Arizona 85069

Dear Dennis.... According to Exodus 9:1-7, the fifth plague killed all of the field livestock, horses donkeys, camels, herds, and flocks of the Egyptians. In Exodus 14:6-9, 17-18, 23, 25-26, and 28 the Egyptians chased after the Hebrews with chariots and horseman. I guess the 5th plague didn't inconvenience the Egyptians much, since they were apparently able to quickly replace all their dead horses.

John 3:16 says, "For God so loved the world..." but 1 John 2:15 says, "Do not love the world, nor the things in the world. If anyone loves the world, the love of the father is not in him." Looks like another case of "do as I say, not as I do."

A biblical Catch-22: Luke 4:26 says, "If anyone comes to Me, and does not hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be My disciple." But 1 John 3:15 says, "Everyone who hates his brother is a murderer; and you know that no murderer has eternal life abiding in him."

Letter #202 from RH of Shreveport, Louisiana

Dear Dennis. Many thanks for the continued excellence of BE. It is a monthly delight. I have one quibble--the banner headline showing the ripped Holy Bible. You are after all trying to get people to read the thing, not to rip it up (or burn it!) and I think the symbolism is bound to put off some believers who won't get any further. I am astounded monthly by your depth of Biblical knowledge--you are doing a valuable service. Congratulations on the computer and printer; looks swell.

Editor's Response to Letter #202

Dear RH. I can't think of a better symbol to represent this publication than a Bible torn in two by its own contradictions, errors, and fallacies. One can't "water-down" the external appearance in order to attract readers since they will quickly comprehend the philosophy contained therein anyway. The caption (The Only National Periodical....) alone will reveal the general tenor of what is to be expected. If you are trying to placate everyone, you have embarked on a journey to nowhere. We tell people what they ought to hear, what they need to hear, not what many want to hear. Millions have been deceived from the beginning and there is no other way to correct the situation than by giving them some unpleasant information. Like needed surgery, it's painful, but they learn to adapt. If you try to be all things to all people, you'll end up being nothing to anybody. Incidentally, Haley's Alleged Discrepancies of the Bible, which is an apologetic classic available in most Christian bookstores, also has a ripped Bible on the cover.

Letter #203 from LBH of Huntsville, Alabama

Dear Dennis. I always enjoy BIBLICAL ERRANCY and Issue #49 was no exception. I thought it unusually informative. However, I offer one criticism. Please do not subject us to such "tripe" as supplied by Letter #186 from Dr. PR of the Pensacola Bible Institute. Vituperative comments such as his seem "out of place" in a publication intended to inform on a very important subject. Dr. PR's comment rubbed me quite the wrong way and added nothing of value to your excellent publication. Please keep up your good work.

Letter #204 from DP of Lakewood, New Jersey

Dear Dennis...In reading various issues here and there while keeping in mind the purpose of BE, it must be admitted that you've rendered a far more unique, original, and valuable service to knowledge, insight, and the Bible's real innermost secrets than any other publication or periodical I've encountered in over 30 years of freethought readings--since 1955 anyway. The latter include Herbert Cutner's Jesus: God, Man or Myth?, Thomas Paine's The Age of Reason, Ludwig Buchner's Force and Matter, Kersey Graves' The World's 16 Crucified Saviors, and all 12 volumes of Ingersoll's Works plus scads and scads of other immortals' works over the years. Add the fact that you furnish "chapter and verse," provide reasoned, calm, balanced, well-stated explanations with convincing, unswerving, dedication to logic and present evidence that's unimpeachable, and, at least to anyone who's unafraid to think freely, far more proof that the Bible's a worthless guide on any subject it touches, be it morality, ethics, science, geography, history, etc. It's unfortunate that BE isn't available as a course either in high school or college for without any doubt whatsoever, it would free more minds of the Bible's stranglehold on society than thousands of fulminations hurled at religion by atheists! If there were years enough left for me (having hit the age of 59), aside from a half-dozen or more other freethought projects I'm still trying to maintain in balance, I'd commence with #1 and put'em all on floppy discs and probably around the middle of the next century issue them in book-form....

Whether fortunately or otherwise a Freethinker isn't made or "born" overnight--it's a struggle to get rid of the beliefs of babyhood foisted when one's in no reasoning position to understand what's being drummed, brainwashed, and indoctrinated into the mind--yet once the underlying factor of fear is uncovered, exposed, and unearthed to the bright, shining, clear, glorious sunlight of reason, logic, common sense, evidence, and proof, turning back is impossible and that I've never regretted!

To make a short story even shorter, Dennis, since it all revolves around BE, you're doing exactly and precisely what I'd have loved doing myself--only I have neither the ability nor the talent, nor anything else in fact, to accomplish what you do: so I'm going to promote your BE in whatever way I can and by sheer dint of reprinting and distributing, others will learn about the Book which they tout as Gawd's word. Little do they know they don't know a thing about it.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (1) Several readers call on a regular basis to discuss strategy, tactics, beliefs, and other topics of major concern. Because we like to keep abreast of what people are saying and doing throughout the Nation, calls are welcome, especially from activists. A kind of semi-organizational consensus seems to be coalescing. (2) Most information in BE's commentaries comes from three large loose-leaf binders compiled over many years. At the current rate of utilization and barring any unforeseen circumstances, the notebooks will be exhausted sometime in 1991. At that time BE will adopt one of two major programs currently under consideration, either one of which will take us well beyond the turn of the century. On the other hand, they could be combined in which case the amount of material would be virtually unlimited. Creation of the most detailed, comprehensive, and accurate refutation of the Bible in the English-speaking world is one of our key objectives. (3) If you need a speaker, a panelist, or a debater for your church, college, or organization, we are willing to go anywhere to present BE's philosophy. Just let us know. (4) We'd again like to thank those who have helped advertise BE and facilitate our appearances on the media.

Genesis Questions--The Commentary in Issue 21 discussed the scientific problems generated by the creation accounts in the Book of Genesis, while Issue 22 noted the numerous contradictions within and between the two accounts in chapters one and two. Each not only disagrees with the other but itself as well. In addition to the difficulties posed in Issues 21 and 22 there are some significant general problems that need to be addressed and a lesser number of queries that are just bothersome. Verses within the former are: (1) "...and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth,...." (Gen. 1:28). How could the earth be re-plenished unless it had been plenished before Adam and Eve? How do you replenish something that has never been plenished to start with? (2) "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made" (Gen. 2:2). How could God be masculine unless he had the physical attributes or organs of a male? What makes God masculine? (3) "And the earth was without form and void...." (Gen. 1:2). How could something even exist without some kind of form? (4) "...and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me (Cain--Ed.) shall slay me. And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold...." (Gen. 4:14-15). Since the only people in existence at that time, other than Cain, were Adam and Eve, who was it that God thought might slay Cain? Abel had already been slain. (5) "And Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod...." (Gen. 4:16). How do you leave or escape from the presence of the omnipresent? (6) "And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived and bare Enoch; and he builded a city...." (Gen. 4:17). Where did Cain get his wife and how could one man build a city? If she is his sister, as some biblicists allege, then apparently we are all products of incest.

Verses giving rise to lesser problems are: (1) "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it" (Gen. 2:17). Why would God prevent man from knowing good from evil? (2) "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1). If the only places in which something can exist are heaven, hell, and earth, where was God when he created them? (3) "And the LORD said unto Cain, Where is Abel thy brother?" (Gen. 4:9). Why would an all-knowing (omniscient) God need to ask questions? He already knows the answer. (4) "...a vagabond shalt thou (Cain--Ed.) be in the earth...And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him" (Gen. 4:12, 15). How could God be the epitome of justice and rectitude when he not only failed to adequately punish Cain for killing Abel but promised him protection from potential slayers.

Gambling--As is true of alcohol, it's hard to see how biblicists can oppose gambling when many biblical verses show it was commanded by God or performed by his spokesmen and chosen people with apparent impunity. Divine commands are evident in Joshua 14:2 ("By lot was their inheritance, as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses...."), Joshua 21:8 ML ("The Israelites granted to the Levites these cities and their pastures by lot, as Page 2 the Lord had commanded through Moses"), and Num. 26:52, 55-56 ("And the Lord spake unto Moses saying...the Land shall be divided by lot: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit. According to the lot shall possession thereof be divided between many and few").

Gambling, or the casting of lots, was done by God's chosen in Joshua 18:10 ("And Joshua cast lots for them in Shiloh before the Lord...."), Josh. 18:6 ("...that I may cast lots for you here before the Lord our God"), Josh. 18:8 ("...that I may cast lots for you before the Lord in Shiloh"), Josh. 19:51 ("...divide for an inheritance by lot in Shiloh before the Lord...."), 1 Sam. 14:42 RSV ("Then Saul said, 'Cast the lot between me and my son Jonathan.' And Jonathan was taken"), Acts 1:26 RSV ("And they cast lots for them, and the lot fell on Matthias and he was enrolled with the eleven apostles"), 1 Chron. 24:5 LB ("All tasks were assigned to the various groups by coin toss so that there would be no preference...."), 1 Chron. 24:30-31 LB ("...These were the descendants of Levi,...they were assigned to their duties by coin-toss without distinction as to age or rank. It was done in the presence of King David,...and the leaders of the priests and Levites"), 1 Chron. 25:8 RSV ("And they cast lots for their duties, small and great, teacher and pupil alike"), 1 Chron. 26:13-14, Neh. 10:34, Judges 20:9 RSV, and 1 Sam. 10:20-21 RSV. Proverbs 18:18 ("A coin toss ends arguments and settles disputes between powerful opponents") even implicitly advocates gambling as a way to settle conflicts.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #205 from JW, President of Alpha and Omega Ministries of Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I briefly respond to your comments found in the October, 1986 edition of Biblical Errancy. I simply intend to correct a number of logical and factual errors present in your rebuttal. First, you did not at all deal with the facts that I brought up relevant to our main discussion, that being your original charge that Jesus and Paul did not agree on the wording of the 6th commandment. I pointed out that both said the same thing--ou phoneuseis. Your reply involved a number of issues, most of which lie outside the realm of a brief reply. You spent some time discussing the subject of textual criticism, and later said that "the problems associated with lower (textual) criticism seem to elude you, JW." I am enclosing two papers that should be sufficient enough to demonstrate my proficiency in the realm of textual criticism. Instead of proving your point, your comments demonstrate a lamentable lack of knowledge of the field. Such comments as your disbelief that the original writings ever existed, that textual criticism involves "educated guesses," that Geisler and Nix have no way of proving that most errors are the result of copyist errors, etc. simply prove beyond a shadow of a doubt to anyone who has studied the field that you have not. I would challenge you to dispute the findings of such scholars as Bruce Metzger, Kurt Aland, or F.F. Bruce in regards to this science. Your lack of understanding of the subject is clearly demonstrated by your comment concerning Geisler and Nix's comment about the variation in the text providing the means of its own correction...Your example of the homicide detective demonstrates your misunderstanding of the subject.

You made at least three major errors in this section: (1) there is no textual variation at Isaiah 7:14 ("Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold a virgin--almah in Hebrew--shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel"). The Hebrew is almah, the Greek (LXX--Septuagint) is parthenos. The dispute is on rendering, not text. If you insist on saying there is a textual difficulty here, please provide the textual sources you are relying on. I am referencing Kittel's Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia, 1983, page 685, and Rahlf's Septuaginta 1979, pg. 575, and F. Delitzsch, Commentary on the Old Testament: Isaiah, pages 216-217. (2) You intimated that I have "picked inaccurate manuscripts among the thousands available." May I ask you to provide a single textual source giving a different reading other than ou phoneuseis at either Matt. 19:18 or Romans 13:9? (Thou shalt not murder or Thou shalt not kill?--Ed.). I have consulted the Textus Receptus, the Stephens Text, the Majority Text, Westcott and Hort, the UBS 3rd Edition (corrected), and the 26th edition of the Nestle-Aland text--all indicate that there are no textual variants at this point whatsoever--all read ou phoneuseis. (3) You postulated a difference in meaning between the two instances of the same word. Could you please provide lexicographical support for this? You said that "context is a major factor." Since the context of these two instances is the same, how could this change the meaning?

The facts are quite clear: (1) Both Paul and Jesus said the same thing; (2) Both quoted the same passage in the same context; (3) the text at this point is perfectly pure--there are no textual variations known; (4) there is no lexicographical data that would support the idea of "different meanings" for identical usage of the same word in the same grammatical form. Hence your original charge is again shown false....

Dear JW. After several months of correspondence it's rather obvious, but unfortunate, that you have a notable array of shortcomings including a failure to listen very well, a strong propensity to belabor points that have already been answered, a tendency to uncritically parrot pat answers learned in Bible class and/or seminary, a deceptive and dishonest inclination to build strawmen for appearances sake, a poor grasp of logical processes in key areas, an attraction to glittering generalities rather than evidence, and a lamentable lack of comprehension of the overall imbroglio in which you find yourself. You hear what you want to hear, what you have been told to internalize. Your letters exude a distinct aura of deja vu and reek with examples of each failing. Apparently, you still don't understand the problem but I'll go through it one more time as succinctly as possible. Hopefully the audience can endure the repetition. I'm tempted to say, Just re-read our correspondence and you'll see the error of your ways, but I don't think you'd do that any more than you'd read all of our back issues as I suggested. First, I never said, much less insisted, there was a textual variation in the Hebrew at Isaiah 7:14 nor did I say there was a textual variant between Matt. 19:18 KJ ("Thou shalt not murder") and Rom. 13:9 KJ ("Thou shalt not kill"). You attributed a position to me and then proceeded to dismantle your strawman. I never said the dispute was over text rather than rendering nor did I say how the contradiction arose. All I said was that a contradiction existed. Specifically, I stated the following which you chose to ignore. "You said there was no difference between Matt. 19:18 and Rom. 13:9 because both came from 'ou phoneuseis' in Greek.... The translators of the KJV say 'murder' is the proper word in Matt. 19:18, while 'kill' is the best term to use in Rom. 13:9. Are you saying they don't know the difference, that they don't know how to translate? Are you saying you know Greek and Hebrew better than those who assembled the KJV? They say there is a difference, while you say there isn't....several of the newest versions agree with the King James.... The dispute as to whether 'almah' in Isaiah 7:14 means a 'virgin' or a 'young woman' has never been resolved. I could become one of the world's greatest Hebrew/Greek scholars and still find many knowledgeable people who disagree with my interpretation. So who is right? Who knows Greek and Hebrew best?....Many of these men have devoted decades to these languages (far more years than the 24 you have lived--Ed.)" (Issue #44, p. 4). Later on page 4 of Issue 46 I provided three reasons translators may disagree with your equating of Matt. 19:18 with Rom 13:9: (a) you picked inaccurate manuscripts, (b) you chose accurate manuscripts with identical words having different meanings, or (c) the original text is so imprecise as to be susceptible to several interpretations. As I stated months ago, your disagreement is with your colleagues as much as me. If all the manuscripts say "ou phoneuseis" as you contend and the words have identical meanings as you allege, then you have only scaled two lesser hurdles to reach an even higher barrier, namely, what does the Greek mean. If scholars can't agree on how to translate the manuscripts, even though there are no textual differences, then what the text says is of no consequence. Locating the problem's source is of less importance to this publication than noting the fact that it exists. If recognized experts give contradictory interpretations of the same words, then we have a problem equal in magnitude to that of contradictions between manuscripts. That's the hurdle you either refuse to recognize or can't surmount. If you think you have the solution then tell us what Matt. 19:18, Rom. 13:9, and Isa. 7:14 say in English. Whatever response you give will prove you view yourself as more knowledgeable in Greek and Hebrew than recognized experts in the field. If so, I again recommend that you write your own version of the Bible as did Wycliffe, Tyndale, Knox, Lamsa, Moffatt, and Fenton. If you're as capable as you seem to believe, then follow their lead and by all means send me a copy. You don't seem to realize that translating or rendering is as serious a problem as disagreements among manuscripts. Contradictions in one instance are as fatal as in the other. What difference would it make if there were no contradictions among the manuscripts if authorities still couldn't agree on what they said; the practical result would be the same.

You erroneously created a strawman when you said I accused you of picking "inaccurate manuscripts among the thousands available." In point (b) above I repeated my original charge that your fellow apologists many so contend. You also erred with another strawman when you said I "postulated a difference in meaning between the two instances of the same word," i.e. "ou phoneuseis." I postulated nothing of the sort. I originally said in point (c) above that your critics or fellow apologists may see a difference in meaning between two instances of the same word. On page 4 of Issue 46 I noted that the word "pound" could have many different meanings. Your problem is with your colleagues while BE is primarily concerned with the bottom line, the contradiction that's present. Whether it's among manuscripts or interpretations of those manuscripts is of secondary importance. The result is the same. People don't know what to believe. Even if the Greek/Hebrew manuscripts were in unison throughout, which is by no means true, the Bible would still be of no value in many areas because of contradictions within and between versions.

Second, with reference to these same verses, I stated that the problems associated with lower (textual) criticism seem to elude you, JW" and you responded by sending me two of your papers on textual criticism. How two textually critical papers on topics A and B, assuming they are valid throughout, proves your analysis with respect to topic C is correct, eludes me, JW. Using that kind of logic I might as well not grade Johnny's paper because he got 100's on the last two. Isn't that known as a non sequitur?

Logic is also sadly deficient when you challenge me "to dispute the findings of such scholars as Bruce Metzger, Kurt Aland...." You mean I'm supposed to research their data? That's your responsibility, not mine. Since the burden of proof lies on he who alleges, you, not I, are obligated to provide the findings. Imagine a defense attorney in court doing nothing more than saying, "I have three witnesses corroborating my client's testimony. Prove them wrong." What do you think the judge would say? I seriously doubt he would instruct the prosecutor to research their data to see if it's true.

Third, and in close conjunction with what has gone before, is your attraction to glittering generalities and summations to the jury without evidence. You said I "did not at all deal with the facts...relevant to our main discussion" which is wholly inaccurate. I not only dealt with them but did so in some detail. The problem is that you didn't like what you heard and chose to ignore that which did not fit your preconceptions of biblical criticism. I again recommend that you re-read our dialogue, especially my responses in Issues 44, 46, and 47. You made a blanket indictment of some comments I made on page 4 of Issue 46 without providing evidence to the contrary. Specifically, you denounced my disbelief that the original writings ever existed, my belief that textual criticism involves educated guesses, and my assertion that apologists can't prove with certainty that most contradictions are the result of copyist errors. Yet, you provided nothing more than another demeaning generalization with respect to my knowledge of the field. It's not that I "demonstrate a lamentable lack of knowledge of the field" but that you demonstrate not only a lamentable lack of evidence for your sweeping generalizations and those of the people you quote but a mindset indicative of those who have been told what to accept as valid criticism and reply. Your repetition of the common apologetic defense that variations in the text provide "the means of its own correction" is not only notably unsubstantiated by concrete examples but exposed by my "homicide detective" analogy. Following your logic, one could more accurately recreate the "original manuscripts" as the number of contradictions and inconsistencies between and within manuscripts increased. I've never seen a solid example of this apologetic ploy which receives a lot of play but no proof. It's comparable to saying that "the more chaotic things become the clearer they are."

Incidentally, you built another strawman by intentionally giving a misleading impression of what I said regarding the original writings. I did not flatly state they never existed. I said there is little reason to believe they did. As in an earlier discussion of Jesus, which you apparently refuse to read, I never said he didn't exist; I said there is practically no extrabiblical evidence that he did.

In essence, then, if you want to contend there is no contradiction in the Greek manuscripts between Matt. 19:18 and Rom. 13:9 while admitting these verses should be stricken from the Bible because reliable, non-contradictory interpretations don't exist, I have no objection in this instance or others we could discuss. The result is the same. The verses mean nothing because nobody definitely knows what they are saying; only contradictory translations exist. Again, if you're sure you know their correct meaning, then, by all means, translate them into English.

I look favorably upon this discussion in general and the kill/murder example in particular because they strike at the heart of the Greek/Hebrew escapist defense and the basic fallacy contained therein. The principle underlying this discussion is also applicable to other verses of crucial importance.

In concluding, several additional observations are in order. First, you're not really interested in objective scholarship and a comprehensive discussion of the Bible, JW, as much as forcing me to say uncle on one point. This accounts for your narrow focus and intense concentration. Your limited range of concern and failure to confront the substantive problems I've posed in prior issues only confirms my belief that you're insecure in other areas and, like VT in earlier issues, are desperately trying to put me on the defensive. VT became almost obsessed with his "Sabbath Days Journey" problem to the exclusion of all else. If I followed that tactic, many an apologist could be nailed to the wall while many readers would become thoroughly bored with the repetition. One might have some respect for your scholarship if you discussed a far wider range of issues as do more capable apologists such as Gleason Archer, Josh McDowell, and Norman Geisler. They exhibit more intellectual honesty by facing a much broader spectrum. On page 5 of November's issue (#47) I said "I'd especially like for you to address more substantive problems such as most of those posed on pages 2 and 3 of issue #34." So far, your silence has been deafening. Literally hundreds of statements with respect to the Bible's validity have been made throughout the history of this publication and the fact that your criticisms have been so narrow in scope is practically an endorsement of the 98% outside your purview. Second, having read several issues of Alpha and Omega's publication and witnessed the dearth of meaningful material contained therein, I'd say you'd do well to look homeward before complaining about other periodicals being intellectually wanting. And finally, please don't send critical letters while asking that they not be published. We prefer open debate so all can judge for themselves. Moreover, insufficient time is available for protracted off-camera discussions with single individuals.

Letter #206 from DC of Angwin, California (Part a)

Dear Sir. You have me confused on a point. I just received the full set of back issues of your "Biblical Errancy" which I had ordered and paid for, and have started to read through. Very interesting. Very enlightening. But, like I say, you have me confused on one point: about whether or not God is a liar (forgive, please, the extreme blasphemy of such a concept) or not. In your Issue #3, for March 1983, page 6, lines 20 and 21, you say God cannot lie, by definition. But on page 5 of that same issue, in the 13th to 15th lines of your response to letter #3, you tell us how God has:--(1) Deceived (Jer. 4:10, 15:18, 20:7, 2 Chron. 18:22, Ezek. 14:9; 2 Thess. 2:9-12);--(2) Told people to lie (Ex. 3:18, 1 Sam. 16:2);--(3) Lied, Himself (Gen. 2:17, 2 Sam. 7:13); and--(4) Rewarded liars (Ex. 1:15-20). Could you please straighten me out on this? Thank you.

Editor's Response to Letter #206 (Part a)

Dear DC. The problem is not particularly profound. Biblicists claim to have God's word in written form. If so, then how could the Book possibly portray God in the manner contained therein? How could a perfectly moral being have committed all the deeds attributed to him. Either it's not his book and he's been libeled or his character leaves a lot to be desired. And that's putting it mildly. All of this, of course, rests on the assumption that he exists to begin with.

Letter #206 Concludes (Part b)

Also, to what God should I pray now? For the past 4 1/2 decades I have been a baptized member of a Very Fundamentalist Christian denomination; but my recent discoveries have disrupted my faith in it and the Bible, and the literally-interpreted Bible's God.

Editor's Response to Letter #206 (Part b)

I'd recommend you cease praying and start relying on your own efforts, DC. Work, sacrifice, planning, and sticktuitiveness are the main passports to happiness and good fortune. Prayer, on the other hand, is often little more than a lazy man's way of seeking something for nothing.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #207 from Mark Potts, 8510-A East 66th Pl. So., Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

Dear Dennis. In letter #175 OR states that "When the human being reaches the age of accountability God's unmerited favor and mercy is no longer any good." If God's favor and mercy wear out after a few years, how long can his salvation last?

Moreover, OR's apology fails to explain the related problem of what happens to adults who never get to hear about Jesus. And you don't need to point to remote times and places to find such people. One of my aunts lived in Japan for a few years, and told me that many Japanese strenuously avoid learning anything about Christianity. Consequently, in modern Japan adults die every day in complete ignorance of the gospel. What happens to them? Antibiblically yours,....

Letter #208 from RCC of Nagasaki, Japan

Dear Dennis. Enjoying the latest issue, #48, as I do all of them. Letter #177 didn't look quite right. In 1 Cor. 15:5 Jesus is seen of Peter, then of the twelve, after His death. This is as related in Luke 24 etc. Except there weren't twelve. Judas was gone and Matthias hadn't been elected yet to replace him. There were only eleven....

Letter #209 from JW of Raleigh, North Carolina

Dear Dennis....I'm sure you don't need convincing that there is a serious, even desperate need for the type work you're doing. The results of the refusal by "bible-believing" Christians to honestly and critically examine the moral and religious claims and assertions of their faith are cropping up in the headlines every day. And I agree with you that the only way to reach these "believers" is to go on the offensive, to expose their theological assertions as fallacious, irrational, dangerous, and--not to put too fine a point on it--fundamentally immoral.... Your newsletter is excellent, and considering the vast amount of territory there is to cover, I'm glad to see that it deals with several different topics at a time. You might want to consider soliciting contributions from your ex-Christian readers on how and why they came to their senses. In my case, I was unable to reconcile the image of God as a concerned and loving father as proclaimed by Jesus with the capricious horror of the doctrine of predestination and election (Rom. 9:9-24). As far as I'm concerned, all other "problem" passages in the bible pale by comparison. The implications of such a belief are petrifyingly monstrous, with ramifications that most literal-minded fundamentalists haven't even begun to grapple with. It's bad enough to be asked to accept the fact that some people (including children and infants) will be tormented eternally in hell, but to be asked to love and praise a God who condemns the vast majority of mankind to such a fate EVEN BEFORE THEY'RE BORN is going too far.... Thanks again for your courage and efforts on behalf of reason and sanity....

Predestination (Part One of a Two-Part Series)--One of the most prominent figures in modern church history, John Calvin, is strongly associated with a belief that is repugnant to most of Christendom, i.e., predestination. Most biblicists believe that God knows what will occur prior to the event but leaves man free to make the choice. In other words, men are free to choose what God already knows will happen. Calvin, on the other hand, stressed biblical pronouncements to the contrary. God doesn't just know ahead of time; he determines it; he fixes it; he plans it; it's his idea. In reality, Calvin viewed free will as myth. In so doing he highlighted one of the most serious, most prominent contradictions in biblical theology--free will versus determinism. His opponents rightly observed that the abolishment of free will destroys moral responsibility. But unfortunately for them literally scores of verses substantiate his position. An exhaustive list in descending order of strength would include the following: (1) "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world,.... Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ himself, according to the good pleasure of his will" (Eph. 1:4-5), (2) "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son,.... Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called...." (Rom. 8:28-30), (3) "And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord; and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed" (Acts 13:48), (4) "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth" (2 Thess. 2:13), (5) "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his (not our--Ed.) own will" (Eph. 1:11), (6) "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10), (7) "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you" (John 15:16), (8) "For God has not destined us for wrath, but to obtain salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 5:9 RSV), (9) "A man's heart deviseth his way: but the Lord directeth his steps" (Prov. 16:9), (10) "He will carry out what he has planned for me, and of many such matters He is mindful" (Job 23:14 Mod. Lang), (11) "Only, let every one lead the life which the Lord has assigned to him, and in which God has called him" (1 Cor. 7:17 RSV), (12) "...your eyes saw my unformed body. All the days ordained for me were written in your book before one of them came to be" (Psalm 139:16 NIV), (13) "Man's goings are of the Lord; how can a man then understand his own way?" (Prov. 20:24), (14) "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matt. 24:31), (15) "...whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world,...." (Rev. 17:8), (16) "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire" (Rev. 20:15), (17) "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him" (John 6:44), (18) "...no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father" (John 6:65), (19) "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call" (Acts 2:39), (20) "Many are the plans in a man's heart, but it is the Lord's purpose that prevails" (Prov. 19:21 NIV), (21) "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord" (Prov. 16:33), (22) "Man's days are determined; you have decreed the number of his months and have set limits he cannot exceed" (Job 14:5 NIV), (23) "From one man God made every nation of men, that they should inhabit the whole earth; and he determined the times set for them and the exact places where they should live" (Acts 17:26 NIV), (24) "...for that that is determined shall be done" (Dan. 11:36), (25) "Therefore I endure all things for the elects' sakes that they may obtain the salvation which is in Christ...." (2 Tim. 2:10), (26) "And a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed" (1 Peter 2:8), (27) "For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men,...." (Jude 4), (28) "Blessed is the man whom thou chooseth, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts" (Psalm 65:4), (29) "Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ,...chosen and destined by God the Father...." (1 Peter 1:1-2 RSV), (30) "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began" (2 Tim. 1:9), (31) "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved" (Acts 2:47), (32) "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord...." (Psalm 37:23), (33) "Then the King will say to those at his right hand, 'Come, O blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world'" (Matt. 25:34 RSV), (34) "...but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (John 15:19), (35) "All that dwell upon the earth shall worship him (the Devil--Ed.) whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8), (36) "Jesus said to them, 'You will indeed drink from my cup, but to sit at my right or left is not for me to grant. These places belong to those for whom they have been prepared by my Father'" (Matt. 20:23 NIV), (37) "They (Herod, Pilate, the Gentiles and the people of Israel--Ed.) did what your power and will had decided beforehand should happen" (Acts 4:28 NIV), (38) "He was not seen by all the people, but by witnesses whom God had already chosen...." (Acts 10:41 NIV), (39) "Who (Jesus--Ed.) verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you" ((1 Peter 1:20), and (40) "Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou comest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations" (Jer. 1:4-5).

Next month's commentary will provide a more extensive list of predestination verses having to do with the elect, the chosen, the called, the given and conclude with some general verses having a decidedly deterministic flavor. Predestination is of critical importance to Christian theology because of its impact on concepts such as heaven, hell, sin, salvation, faith, works, rewards, the Atonement, the Devil, the Decalogue, the Crucifixion, and so forth.

REVIEWS

On page 278 in False Doctrines Answered apologist John R. Rice confronted the predestination issue by saying, "It is true the saved are God's elect, 'chosen...in him before the foundation of the world' as Ephesians 1:4 tells us. But it is wrong to make their election a whim of God whereby He saves some, compels them to be saved, and damns some whom He has decided He does not wish to save. (This is known as unconditional election--Ed.). No, election is not 'unconditional.' It is simply that God knows who will trust Him when they hear the Gospel and chooses them to be carried through till they be 'conformed to the image of His Son.' Rom. 8:28-30 tells us so: "...For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called....' God gives the order of things here. First, foreknowledge, then predestination, then calling, then saving,.... To ignore or to change the inspired, divine order is false doctrine." In essence, Rice seeks to shift the focus of predestination by saying it only means the elect will be "conformed to the the image of Jesus" after God realizes who will follow him when they hear the gospel. And since he knows that from the beginning, they are, in effect, predestined. This is typical of the more devious rationalizations theologians create and is fatally flawed in several respects. First, and most important, Rice deceptively misquoted Eph. 1:4 which says, "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy...." He omitted the first four words which clearly show God chose those to be saved before the foundation of the world. They weren't just chosen "in" him; they were chosen "by" him. The difference is critical. When Rice says, "It is simply that God knows who will trust Him when they hear the Gospel and chooses (predestinates--Ed.) them to be carried through" ...he is trying to create the impression that God merely knows the future; he doesn't create it, which flies in the face of Eph. 1:4. Secondly, Eph. 1:4-5 shows Rice himself created a false doctrine by altering the so-called "inspired, divine order." Eph. 1:4 says being chosen came first which the next verse (1:5) equates with being predestined. Foreknowledge isn't even mentioned. And thirdly, how could "foreknow" precede "predestinate," whether it be a general predestination of everything by God or the more narrow predestination of believers being "conformed to the image of his Son" preferred by Rice. If God knows it, then it's simultaneously predestined.

On page 395 in The Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties apologist Gleason Archer highlighted the contradiction involved when he said, "...there is no room for personal merit in the matter of our election. It is all a matter of God's mere good pleasure.... To sum up, then, God chooses from all eternity those who will be saved; and the sole basis of His choice is His mere good pleasure,...." Sounds like a good Calvinist! But, then, he turned around and said, "Yet God never chooses those who do not and will not believe in Christ; only those that do will He bring to Christ for salvation. But what...causes a sinner to open his heart to God's truth...is not really spelled out in Scripture." Yes, it is and Archer stated as much a few sentences earlier. "God chooses from all eternity those who will be saved. So Archer's concluding statement ("all we can be sure of is that God...has not made their choice for them. Each man bears full responsibility for his own choice....") is decidedly at odds with his own summation, Eph. 1:4, and other verses.

On pages 117 and 119 in Questions Non-Christians Ask apologist Barry Wood made some enlightening comments in this regard: "How do you leave room for man's free will to accept or reject God's call? We must admit this is a difficult thing to understand. Just read Romans chapters 9 through 11 and see if Paul understood it. He didn't! He was left with a paradox.... I know this is a mind bender but we humans, in our limited knowledge, must wrestle with the profundity of God's ways with us."

A couple of other fundamentalist authors are much more candid than Rice, Archer, and Wood. They frankly admit the problem has no solution and believe resolution will only occur "in eternity." "It is not contradictory therefore, but rather complementary, to hold that man determines his own decisions and actions and yet also to recognize that God in some inscrutable way has foreordained those very things. Although admitting we cannot really understand this paradox, we can accept both aspects of it by faith and then act accordingly, trusting God to make it all clear in eternity" The Bible Has the Answer by Morris and Clark, p. 141. "...we cannot, in our present finite understanding, completely resolve the mystery surrounding God's 'determinate counsel and foreknowledge' (Acts 2:23)...." (Ibid. p. 142). Yet, we are told by their book's title that the Bible has the answer. On page 172 in 508 Answers to Bible Questions M.R. DeHaan, M.D. went even further by saying, "You are, of course, dealing with a difficult subject which I believe we will only fully understand when we reach glory. We are not required to reconcile predestination and free will. We are expected to believe it." How's that for unbiased, demonstrable scholarship! Reminds me of the Trinity miasma. We are being told to believe in a square circle, or what is euphemistically called a mystery, that will only become comprehensible "in eternity."

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #210 from LB of Luck, Wisconsin (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Several years ago I became involved in a debate with two local biblicists over the topic of alcohol. At this time I was just becoming a freethinker and therefore did not attack the bible for its inherent contradictions but tried to refute those passages which supposedly preach total abstention. Besides the ones you mentioned, a minister wrote to me about Hab. 2:15 ("Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken...."), Isa 5:11-12 ("Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them! And the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts: but they regard not the work of the Lord,...."), Isa. 5:14, Isa. 5:22 ("Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink"), Prov. 20:1, Jer. 35:6 ("But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons for ever"), and Jer. 35:19.

I agree with the BE viewpoint that the Bible can be used to prove anything, but in a discussion with biblicists this usually will not sway them. I believe you should have examined this alcohol topic more closely so it could be of use to people who debate biblicists. If it is possible to refute those verses which oppose alcohol one would have the best line of defense in a debate. The biblicists I encountered had defenses for those verses which proscribe (I think you mean "prescribe"--Ed.) alcohol.

Editor's Response to Letter #210 (Part a)

Dear LB. To begin with, the verses you received from a minister are not as strongly opposed to alcohol as the ones I quoted in Issue #51. Your minister should have read BE as he apparently doesn't know the best verses in his favor. Most of the verses he sent you are either weak or irrelevant: Isa. 5:14 and Jer. 35:19 have nothing to do with alcohol; Prov. 20:1 appeared in Issue #51; Isa. 5:11-12 and Hab. 2:15 were omitted because they appear to oppose drunkenness rather than drinking per se and the latter also appears to oppose giving drink to others rather than drinking yourself, and Jer. 35:6 was omitted because Jonadab is not god and there is little evidence his commands have divine sanction. Isa. 5:22 is the only verse that probably should have been included in Issue #51. Secondly, BE is less concerned with "refuting" than "exposing." Contradictions are more concerned with revealing conflicts between verses than disproving the validity of a particular verse.

Letter #210 Continues (Part b)

Their main argument is that of the distinction made between "wine" and "strong drink." Accordingly "strong drink" was generally a mixture of equal parts of water and wine. The wine used during Passover was supposedly mixed in a ratio of 3 parts water to one part wine, according to the Talmud. One minister supplied me with a tract that went as follows; "The Greek word 'oinos' which in the NT is translated 'wine' was a generic term that referred either to fermented intoxicating wine or plain unfermented and unintoxicating fresh grape juice. So just because it says Jesus turned water into 'oinos' doesn't mean He turned it into intoxicating wine. There is not the slightest indication by which any honest minded man can contend that it was intoxicating wine."

Editor's Response to Letter #210 (Part b)

You have given the standard apologetic rationalization for this problem, LB. Essentially it's little more than an attempt to rewrite the text as expediency dictates by making the Greek word "oinos" mean either fermented or unfermented juice. Of course, as is often true with the Greek/Hebrew escapist defense the tables can be easily turned. If biblicists are going to arbitrarily insist that "oinos" means grape juice whenever they desire, then I'm going to claim all those verses in which the consumption of wine (oinos) is condemned are actually referring to grape juice.

Biblicists focus on Jesus turning water into wine when the problem is much broader. Many OT verses such as Eccle. 9:7, Prov. 31:6, Amos 9:14, and Deut. 14:26 advocate the consumption of wine and "oinos" isn't even involved. In those instances, "wine" comes from the Hebrew word "yayin" which means wine (fermented). According to Webster's Dictionary, wine does not exist until fermentation occurs. On page 1630 of the 2nd College Edition wine is defined as "the fermented juice of grapes used as an alcoholic beverage...anything having an intoxicating or exhilarating effect." Apologists would have us believe Greeks don't know the difference between wine and grape juice.

Letter #210 Concludes (Part c)

They also attack 1 Tim. 5:23 ("Drink no longer water but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake....") vehemently. One claims it to be "an admonition to a specific individual in a specific situation and not to be applied universally." The other compares it to an injection of morphine that a doctor might prescribe in a time of illness, thus not to be taken regularly. So as a whole they refute those claims that the bible endorses alcohol and that leaves one with only the tee-totalist verses. I am a relatively new reader of BE and would appreciate it if you would expand on Issue #51 to make it pertinent to topics that biblicists would argue with, especially the concern over the existence of "new wine" being non-alcoholic (Mark 2:22)....

Editor's Response to Letter #210 (Part c)

The assertion that 1 Tim. 5:23 only applies to a specific person is a weak defense because the sky's the limit when we start down that road. I could just as easily assert that hundreds of other biblical teachings only apply to those being addressed and have no continuing applicability. The Sermon on the Mount, for example, only applied to those whom Jesus addressed at that particular time. As far as the medicinal aspect is concerned, that's not only assumption but still an endorsement of alcoholic consumption. In regard to Mark 2:22, why would new wine be any less alcoholic than old wine? In essence, they certainly haven't "refuted" claims that the Bible endorses imbibing.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #211 from BP of Gainesville, Florida

Dear Mr. McKinsey...I have thoroughly enjoyed reading your publication....Unfortunately I have not been a close student of the Bible so I often miss the subtleties of your more hair-splitting articles. I appreciate the importance of your approach, however, because the learned fundamentalist apologists I have met certainly can quote their Bibles. I have taken more of a Feuerbachian approach to most of the believers I meet--pointing out the manner in which their religious projections reflect the contradictions of an alienated and traumatised world. I like Weston LaBarre's definition of religion as "the ghost dance of a traumatized people" with all the efficacy of a Melanesian cargo cult. I know that you would probably reject the anthropo-psychosocial approach as perhaps being too abstract. You may have done this before, but could you possibly reiterate why?

In addition, I would tremendously enjoy a closer scrutiny on your part to the free will/determinism debate. The Bible looks to me like an open and shut case of predestination. I often ask believers if they think they're willing participants in a rigged scenario....

Editor's Response to Letter #211

Dear BP. You're correct. We don't propound the anthro-psycho-social approach for many reasons. First, it's wholly non-persuasive in most cases. Second, beyond telling people their religious beliefs emerge from alienation and dissatisfaction with their plight in life, what are you going to say? That which follows will be little more than variations on the same theme. Third, such as approach entails degrading and demeaning your listeners by giving them the impression they are sick and in need of mental health treatment. Whether true or not, that's certainly no way to win friends and influence people. Fourth, and very important, it makes no attempt to re-educate individuals with respect to basic beliefs or expose and explain the errors of their ways. Fifth, with all due respect, BP, it's a rather lazy strategy. Instead of getting in and among those who need help, you're doing little more than throwing rocks at a distance. There is no substitute for work, research, and study. If you're going to influence millions of people, there is no way to avoid one overriding fact. You must know the Bible as well as, if not better than, its proponents, and you must know its problems and convey them to its adherents. And lastly, your approach is actually more emotional than rational, although elements of both are present.

Incidentally, if BE engages in "hair-splitting" then so do lawyers in court. The only alternative to detailed presentations and methodical proofs are the glittering generalities with which many publications abound. And they aren't all religious by any means. Many people can't separate opinions from proofs and most periodicals would be dramatically reduced in size if the former were eliminated. More often than not your audience is going to say PROVE IT in no uncertain terms.

In closing, hopefully this month's commentary as well as that which follows will cover the free will/determinism issue to your satisfaction.

Letter #212 from John Wallach, 117 Camden St., Raleigh, North Carolina 27601

Dear Dennis. In regard to Letter #114 (Issue #34), I honestly don't see how you can claim "there is nothing in scripture to justify changing the sabbath from saturday to sunday." Hasn't anyone ever bothered to tell you that Paul's pronouncements are scripture. Never mind that 95% of what Paul has to say flatly contradicts the OT patriarchs, the prophets, and even Jesus himself (Matt. 5:17-19), or that he cavalierly dismisses and invalidates both the objective and subjective experience of God of every Jew from the day of Abraham to the present, when he casually reveals ...that God never expected the law to be kept in the first place! As he sees it, the law was given "that offense might abound" (Rom. 5:20). I'm sure it would come as quite a surprise to Moses that even as God dictated the exhaustively detailed law to him, that he neither expected nor intended for it to be kept, that mankind was really being put on hold until Jesus could arrange to have himself born and crucified. Really, Dennis, if you insist on approaching the scriptures rationally what hope is there for you.

Letter #213 from AH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis.... Just wanted to let you know how much I enjoyed #51. I now have 2 "most favorites," #8 and now #51. #51 has the kind of commentary that most anyone can use to challenge fundamentalists. This morning at a coffee shop I asked a woman I know from having seen her reading her Bible in the coffee shop, what the Bible position was on alcohol. She admitted she didn't know. I suggested she read all the verses you listed in #51 against drinking. (I made a book mark and listed the pros on one side and the cons on the other) and I gave it to her with the con side up. I told her I was interested in having all these verses typed out on a single sheet of paper. She said she would be delighted to type it out. I went back to doing my paperwork and she started looking up the verses and writing them down. Well she's real fast and turned the book work over and started on the other side. I wanted to save that for tomorrow, but no luck. After the 3rd verse on the other side she got the drift, got mad, came over to my table, dropped my book mark, and said, "No thanks," turned around, and left.

Letter #214 from OG of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis. First of all, congratulations on your continued success with the newsletter! The new computer printout looks great; much neater than before. Also, the content is still as tough, sensible and helpful as when you first started.

I have this rather strange habit of getting up early on Sunday mornings to watch the preachers--just to make sure they don't try anything sneaky; you understand. About two weeks ago, Jerry Falwell announced that the Bible is free from error and that if any viewers were confronted by skeptics, they should send in the questions that were raised and the Old-Time Gospel Hour people would answer them (I forgot what the context of all this was). Not wanting to let an opportunity like that slip by, I whipped out my back issues of BE and fired off a letter. I'm still waiting for a reply....

Predestination {Part Two of a Two-Part Series}--In addition to verses in last month's Commentary on predestination several terms clearly strengthen the deterministic aspect of biblical teachings. Each is employed repeatedly and shows that God selects many, if not all, of those to be saved or brought within the realm of God's people. First are the elect, those drawn out by God. If they are selected by him then their salvation is determined more by God's acts than their own deeds and beliefs: "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded" (Rom. 11:7), "Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of (by--Ed.) God" (1 Thess. 1:4), "Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth" (Isa. 42:1), "For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name...." (Isa. 45:4), "and then shall he send his angels and shall gather his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven" (Mark 13:27), "...mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there" (Isa. 65:9), "...but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days" (Mark 13:20), "And shall not God avenge his own elect" (Luke 18:7), "Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect?" (Rom. 8:33), "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved...." (Col. 3:12), "If those days had not been cut short, no one would survive, but for the sake of the elect those days will be shortened" (Matt. 24:22), "...mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands" (Isa. 65:22), "...if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. 24:24), "...to reduce, if it were possible, even the elect" (Mark 13:22) and (Rom. 9:11, 11:28-29). Second, are the chosen, who like the elect are singled out for preferential treatment: "So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called but few chosen" (Matt. 20:16, 22:14), "Yet the Lord set his affection on your forefathers and loved them, and he chose you, their descendants, above all the nations, as it is today" (Deut. 10:15 NIV), "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance" (Psalm 33:12), "For the Lord hath chosen Jacob unto himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure" (Psalm 135:4), "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see the Just One, and hear the voice of his mouth" (Acts 22:14), "So too, at the present time there is a remnant chosen by grace" (Rom. 11:5), "Yet now hear, O Jacob my servant, and Israel whom I have chosen...Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou, Jesurun, whom I have chosen" (Isa. 44:1-2), "From Paul, the slave of God and the messenger of Jesus Christ. I have been sent to bring faith to those God has chosen...." (Titus 1:1 LB) and (Deut. 7:7). Third, are the called, who may be the chosen: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called" (1 Cor. 1:26), "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called" (1 Cor. 7:20), "Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God" (1 Cor. 7:24), "...it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace" (Gal. 1:15), "That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory" (1 Thess. 2:12), "they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance" (Heb. 9:15), "...knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing" (1 Peter 3:9), "But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus...." (1 Peter 5:10), "...give diligence to make your calling and election sure...." (2 Peter 1:10), "Among whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ" (Rom. 1:6), "But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks...." (1 Cor. 1:24) and (Rom. 9:24). And fourth, are the given, those whom God singled out for special consideration by giving them to Jesus for salvation. As is true with the elect, the chosen, and the called, God, in effect, either predestines many to salvation or strongly influences the outcome. Certainly anyone given to Jesus by God is provided a decided advantage. In essence, God is not only playing favorites but materially determining the outcome: "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me: and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out" (John 6:37), "this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing...." (John 6:39), "Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him" (John 17:2), "I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me: for they are thine" (John 17:9), "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou has given me, that they be one as we are....those that thou gavest me I have kept...." (John 17:11-12), "...whom thou hast given me" (John 17:24) and "I have revealed you to those whom you gave me out of the world. They were yours; you gave them to me and they have obeyed your word" (John 17:6 NIV).

Whether they be the elect, the called, the chosen or the given, the hands of predestination are unmistakable. To the extent that God determines the players and their roles, it's out of man's control. And to the extent it's out of his control, man becomes little more than a participant in a play whose scenario has already been written.

And finally, some verses just exude an aura of predestination although with less force than that which has gone before: "...but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven" (Luke 10:20), "This man was handed over to you by God's set purpose and foreknowledge...." (Acts 2:23 NIV), "But in fact God has arranged the parts of the body (of Christ--Ed.), every one of them, just as he wanted them to be" (1 Cor. 12:18 NIV), "we speak of God's secret wisdom, a wisdom that has been hidden and that God destined for our glory before time began" (1 Cor. 2:7 NIV), "truly the Son of man goeth, as it was determined" (Luke 22:22), "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth" (Rom. 9:18), and (Heb. 12:22-23, 1 Sam. 12:22, Psalm 86:13, Dan. 5:23).

In summary, then, Scripture clearly shows that predestination is an inseparable part of biblical theology.

Sinless Perfection--Interestingly enough, according to the Bible no biblicalist is a Christian because none abide in Christ. Since none abide in Christ, how anyone can ever be saved becomes a logical question. Why can't people abide in Christ? Because everyone commits anti-social behavior, or what biblicalists refer to as sin, and that excludes them summarily: "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him" (1 John 3:6), "No one who is born of God will continue to sin, because God's seed remains in him; he cannot go on sinning, because he has been born of God" (1 John 3:9 NIV), "We know that anyone born of God does not continue to sin, the one who was born of God keeps him safe, and the evil one does not touch him" (1 John 5:18 NIV). Obviously, then, no one has ever been born of God since all biblicists continue to sin, regardless. Until someone can demonstrate sinless perfection, abiding in Christ remains illusory.

And to make matters even worse from the biblicist's perspective, James 2:10 NIV says, "For whoever keeps the whole law and yet stumbles at just one point is guilty of breaking all of it." Also note Matt. 5:19. Since every believer repeatedly stumbles on one point or another, all believers are equally immoral. In other words, while John alleges that any sin obviates any possibility of one abiding in Christ, James asserts everyone commits the most heinous of acts.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #215 from EMT of Cottonwood, Arizona (Part a)

(Although BE does not normally discuss allegedly divine books other than the Bible, on pages 2 and 3 of Issue #23 we did list some problems within the Book of Mormon. EMT appears to be a Mormon and sent the following reply--Ed.). At long last there is something atheists and evangelical christians can agree on--attack the Book of Mormon. Atheists and agnostics, ignorant of the existence of God, have their obvious reasons. Evangelicals do so because the B of M claims to be an extra-biblical authority. In my opinion they really attack it because it does not teach their doctrine of original sin. In fact the LDS (Latter Day Saints) church teaches that the "Fall" of Adam was necessary. This obviously negates the evangelical position that we are groveling, sin-ridden creatures by nature.... Issue #23 of BE says the Book of Mormon "...is viewed by many as comparable in weight to the Bible...." This is technically not true. Joseph Smith taught that the Bible was the Word of God only as it was translated correctly. He placed no such qualification on the Book of Mormon. He called it the most perfect book ever translated from ancient records. However, that does not mean that certain passages cannot be changed. In fact, anti-Mormons gleefully point out the large number of changes that have been made in it.

Editor's Response to Letter #215 (Part a)

Technically, it is true, EMT. Apparently you missed the point. Nearly all biblicists, not just Joseph Smith, believe the Bible is the word of God only to the extent that it is translated correctly. You'd get very little disagreement on that point. You said the B of M was translated from ancient records so, to be logical and consistent, Joseph Smith must consider the B of M to be God's word only to the extent that it is translated correctly. How does that differ from the typical Christian view of the Bible? The fact that he views it as "the most perfect book ever translated from ancient records" means nothing because that is precisely the view many biblicists have of the King James Version.

Letter #215 Continues (Part b)

Point (a) in BE [According to Alma 7:9-10 Jesus was supposed to have been born in Jerusalem not Bethlehem--"...for behold, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and the Son of God cometh upon the face of the earth. And behold, he shall be born of Mary, at Jerusalem..., she being a virgin...who shall be overshadowed and conceive by the power of the Holy Ghost"] fails to quote in full the passage in question--Alma 7:9-10. This is a technique often used by anti-Mormons, but I was surprised to see it being used in BE. You should have added the following words which I've underlined: "...he shall be born of Mary, at Jerusalem which is the land of our forefathers, she being a virgin...." Surely Joseph Smith knew as well as any Bible student that Jesus was born in Bethlehem not Jerusalem. If he was just concocting a book that he wanted to foist off as being from God, I'm sure he wouldn't have put in "Jerusalem." The gold plates were referring to a geographical area not to a city when they said "the land of our forefathers," a land which Bethlehem belonged to.

Editor's Response to Letter #215 (Part b)

The words in question were left out because I didn't feel they were germane to the issue, EMT. Upon closer examination of the B of M, however, I notice that Jerusalem refers to both a land (1 Nephi 7:2, Alma 21:1, 3 Nephi 20:29) and a city (Alma 21:24, 3 Nephi 9:7, 1 Nephi 1:4) in which case your point has some credibility. However, you have only leaped from one problem to another. I have never heard of the "land" of Jerusalem. Can you name one reputable biblical atlas or scholarly work that delineates a "land" of Jerusalem that also encompasses Bethlehem?

Letter #215 Continues (Part c)

Point (b) in BE [According to Mosiah 26:23 God created sin. "For it is I that taketh upon me the sins of the world; for it is I that hath created them...."] says that Mosiah 26:23 says God created sin. You are simply mis-applying the pronoun "them." If you'll read the whole chapter you'll see that "them" refers to "they who were baptized in the waters of Mormon."

Point c ["The List of the 12 disciples in the Book of Mormon in no way resembles that of the Bible"] says Jesus named different apostles when he came to the Americas. Of course he did. How on earth would Peter, James, and John et.al serve their missions in the Old World and the New World at the same time?

Editor's Response to Letter #215 (Part c)

You should have stopped at point (a), EMT. Mosiah 26:23 clearly says God created the sins of the world. The only plural antecedent to which "them" could reasonably refer is "sins." You'll have to go back many verses to find another plural antecedent. Moreover, this verse as well as those going before are already using "him" to refer to the baptized people you mentioned. "Them" is referring to sins, not people. People are already being referred to in the singular. Your exegesis envisions a poorly constructed sentence.

As far as point (c) is concerned, I made no reference to the Americas or Jesus entering same. The list of names is found in 3 Nephi 19:4 and makes no allusion to the New World or a second list of twelve apostles. Where are you getting such notions? There is certainly no biblical list of another twelve. Moreover, if this is a second group of 12 apostles, then there was a second Last Supper because that appears to be occurring in the prior chapter.

Letter #215 Continues (Part d)

Point (d) accusing the Book of Mormon of fostering racism can only be answered by a good deal of rationalization. I do not believe that God curses people by giving them a black skin....I can only hope the Church will change which I believe it is doing. When the scriptures of the Church were revised in 1982 one passage which said the Lamanites would become "white and delightsome" has been changed to read "pure and delightsome." When Joseph Smith translated these offensive passages did he let his 19th Century world view get in the way? I do not know. Please note that the church dropped its barring of black people from full church participation on Sept. 30, 1978....

Editor's Response to Letter #215 (Part d)

"Rationalization" is an appropriate choice of terms for your approach, EMT. In the first place, it's not a matter of what you believe but what the book says, and the B of M clearly promotes racism with such statements as: "And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which was a curse upon them because of their transgression and their rebellion...." (Alma 3:6). If you don't feel the LDS church is promoting racism, then why did you say, "I can only hope the church will change"? Although your church is to be commended for altering its policy, the fact remains that it's doing so despite the B of M not because of it. Your leaders are engaging in the same kind of dishonest revisionism with reference to the B of M that biblicists employ with respect to the Bible. When a problem becomes irreconcilable they simply rewrite the script. If your leaders no longer bar black people from full participation, then they left the book as far as that topic is concerned.

Letter #215 Concludes (Part e)

I disagree with your point (f) that the Book of Mormon is anti-Semitic. The passages you cite refer only to those Jews who were evil. As far as Jews as a whole are concerned, the Mormon Church recognizes them as a special people of God....I thank you for listening. I enjoy BE and I'd like to subscribe.

Editor's Response to Letter #215 (Part e)

Second Nephi 10:3 shows you have erred, EMT: "Wherefore, as I said unto you, it must needs be expedient that Christ...should come among the Jews, among those who are the more wicked part of the world; and they shall crucify him...and there is none other nation on earth that would crucify their God." The word "nation" as well as the contrast created between Jews and the rest of the world show the entire Jewish community is included. There is nothing in this verse or others quoted in the 23rd issue that would lead one to believe only evil Jews were intended. Incidentally, we're glad you chose to subscribe.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #216 from RB of Sugar Grove, Pennsylvania

Dennis McKinsey: I want to thank Jim Lippard (Letter #201, BE #51) for pointing out that Exodus 9:6 (in the TEV, ML, NEB, NASB, and the NIV--Ed.) has all the Egyptian livestock, including horses killed off in a plague; yet soon after, in Ex. 14, Egyptian chariots and horsemen are in action. An honest look at this case spells doom for any inerrantist reading of it. However, watch for a superficial biblicist "trap." The fundie will often just switch translations in order to pick a reading more favorable to his position; this is the fallacy of employing the "Skip to the Most Convenient Version Evasion Maneuver." In this case he may cite the KJV, where Ex. 9:3 lists cattle, horses, asses, etc. separately in the threat of destruction, but only with "all the cattle" is the actual killing done in Ex. 9:6. Thus horses are not explicitly killed in the KJV; the RSV agrees. It is useful to have some familiarity with many versions. First ask the biblicist which is his Bible of choice; then zero in on the inevitably numerous contradictions that his version features most strongly....

Besides the horse contradiction there is a second one in this Exodus story and even the King James and the Revised Standard are not off the hook on this one. Ex. 12:29 clearly states in both versions that in the final plague all the first born of the Egyptians' "cattle" were killed--when several plagues prior to this we were told that "all the cattle" (9:6) of the Egyptians had already been wiped out....

Letter #217 from PK of Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I read your excellent speech in FREETHOUGHT TODAY. I agree that freethinkers must get out there and argue. If we don't use our freedom of speech, we will lose it....If I think I might be cut off right away in a conversation, I use one of these one-liners for the first statement I make: "Do you consider the premeditated mass murder of humanity in the biblical flood to be a good moral example" and/or "Do you consider the infinite torture of human beings by the biblical Jesus to be a good moral example?" The infinite torture of even one human being would be an infinite crime against humanity. They must think of these as good moral examples or else they are not Christians. They sometimes answer that we are judging by "mere" human criteria, not "god's" criteria. But if such acts do not even meet "mere" human criteria for morality, how can they meet a pretended "higher" criteria? "Lower" criteria must be met before one moves to "higher" criteria. Infinite torture is the worst possible moral example. "Thou shalt not kill" sounds hollow when uttered by a premeditated mass murderer of humanity. Actions speak louder than words. Is it any wonder that the mental hospitals and prisons are full of good religious inmates? Keep fighting. I think we have more input than we realize.

Letter #218 from BG of Morrow, Ohio

(On Tuesday, April 14, 1987, the editor of BE appeared for 3 1/2 hours on WLW radio in Cincinnati, Ohio--Ed.). I agree with you completely on the facts you presented on the Mike McConnell show today. I also lecture on Bible Errancy although I am a firm believer in God and the historical Jesus. It's a shame that the average Christian is not exposed to the facts you detailed....The greatest biblical scholars today are the ones backing you up. Perhaps it would help your cause to reference some of them during your talks and in your newsletter so that people don't get the opinion that you have some ax to grind. The Anchor Bible covers many of your points and its authors are Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish scholars with impeccable credentials....Bible criticism is over 100 years old and was really meaningfully started by Julius Wellhausen in the 19th Century when he showed that Genesis was a compilation of two versions of some Sumerian myths with additions by 3 other sources.... Many of the contradictions and discrepancies in the Bible are not mistakes in translations but willful acts by various men to inflict their views on the unsuspecting masses.... It was truly sad to hear the rambling nonsensical comments some of the callers made in their pitiful attempts to rebut your facts. If they had read the Sumerian and other stories the Bible writers used to base their Adam and Eve, Noah and the Flood, Tower of Babel, etc. stories on, they would have rejected the latter out of hand....

Editor's Response to Letter #218

Your comments are generally valid and most considerate BG except for your belief that meaningful biblical criticism began with Wellhausen in the last century. Actually it's been around from the beginning but unfortunately critics and critical writings have all too often met a common fate. Openmindedness and objectivity have never been a hallmark of biblically-dominated societies.

Letter #219 from CHF of Minneapolis, Minnesota

Dennis. I saw and heard you speak at the FFRF Convention last October. What you said and what you are doing has given me ideas....I am a former minister. I came from a religiously liberal community and attended a liberal seminary which used higher criticism in the study of biblical literature. The latter was looked upon as a record of the developing, changing, and evolving thought of peoples over the centuries. As it has grown and changed in the past, so could it be expected to continue to grow and change. In this atmosphere, religious faith is not anchored to the ignorance and superstition of the past, nor is it bothered by the contradictions, inconsistencies, and unpalatables in biblical literature. Persons of this persuasion feel and argue that because medicine began with witchdoctors, medicine is not therefore discredited, and neither should all religion be so treated....One of the things clergy with a liberal religious schooling learn is that the conservative schools do not include the literature of higher critical scholars or expose their students to their arguments. Students are given a proof-text theology. I feel it will take more than BE to erode the religious beliefs held by those of liberal convictions. And I am not going to say that breaking in on the conservatives will be easy. But because of the desire to be honest which I found in those conservatives with whom I associated, I feel that BE might very likely get to them. I know that there are hard-heads...out there among the fundamentalists who can never be reached, but I am willing to risk losing on them in a try for BE exposure for those who can be reached.

What I have done is to go through the Yellow Pages of the telephone directory's church section and make a list of the ministers whose names accompany the church listing, selecting particularly churches known to be conservative or fundamentalist. For each of these I want to place a six month subscription.... I prefer that my name be kept anonymous and not exposed to those to whom BE is mailed. It is my thought that if other people around the country would subscribe thusly many people would quickly begin to get exposed. If this tactic gained momentum, significant things might start to happen....These are small investments in an enormous cause.

Editor's Response to Letter #219

Your assistance is most appreciated and your efforts are to be applauded, CHF. I only wish more people would follow your strategy. However, the liberal position you project with respect to the Bible's validity also has some major drawbacks which will be addressed in BE. Although we focus primarily on the inerrantist position, any philosophy viewing the Bible as "God's Word," the product of supernatural forces, the result of divine influence, or inerrant is subject to scrutiny. Fundamentalists and BE agree on one point. How do you know what's true if you begin to admit certain parts are false. Where do you draw the line? Where do you stop? In effect, you'll end up with as many bibles as you have readers and everyone will judge for himself what he chooses to follow and believe. We intend to expand on this subject later.

Paul--The Deceptive Disciple {Part One of a Six-Part Series with a Mid-point Digression}--Issue 8's Commentary (See also: Letter #22 in Issues 10 and 11) focused on some inaccurate comments by Paul and concluded with an assurance that "more will be said later about his shortcomings." Fulfilling that commitment is of crucial importance to a thorough critique of Christianity in general and the Bible in particular since no figure in history, with the possible exception of Jesus, contributed more to the formulation of biblical theology. Any critique of the Bible would be remiss without an exhaustive listing of his failings which, generally speaking, can be grouped under five broad headings: (a) statements in which Paul not only contradicts other parts of Scripture but himself as well, (b) misquotations of biblical verses, (c) accurate quotations corrupted by misinterpretations, (d) inaccurate, misleading or ill-conceived comments, and (e) quotations of non-existent verses (non-quotes). [Note: For purposes of discussion we are willing to grant the common apologetic belief that Paul wrote the entire NT except for the Gospels, Acts, and the 8 books following Hebrews]. Category (a) comprises the largest number of examples: (1) "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment" (Heb.

9:27) versus "...we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51), "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death, and was not found, because God had translated him...." (Heb. 11:5), "And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him" (Gen. 5:24), "...behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went by a whirlwind into heaven" (2 Kings 2:11), and "...the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:16-17). We are told all men must die but given examples of people who didn't. (2) "...how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures...." (1 Cor. 15:3) and "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22) versus "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin" (Deut. 24:16). (3) "...and to God the Judge of all...." (Heb. 12:23) versus "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?" (1 Cor. 6:2). (4) "Be ye angry, and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath" (Eph. 4:26) versus "Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry; for anger resteth in the bosom of fools" (Eccle. 7:9), "Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go" (Prov. 22:24) and "He that is slow to anger is better than the almighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city" (Prov. 16:32). (5) "...who (God--Ed.) alone has immortality...whom no man has ever seen or can see" (1 Tim. 6:16) versus "And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel; for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved" (Gen. 32:30), "And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend" (Ex. 33:11), "...I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up...." (Isa. 6:1), "...for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isa. 6:5), and (Amos 7:7-8). (6) "For there is no respect of persons with God" (Rom. 2:11), "...God accepteth no man's person...." (Gal. 2:6), "...knowing that your Master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with him" (Eph. 6:9), and (1 Peter 1:17) versus "...for the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek" (Rom. 1:16) and "as it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated" (Rom. 9:13), "Thou shalt be blessed above all people...." (Deut. 7:14), "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace" (Rom. 11:5), "For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever...." (1 Chron. 17:22), "...the Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth" (Deut. 14:2), and (Psalm 138:6, Rom. 2:11, 11:7, Gen. 13:14-15). If God does not play favorites, why are some given preference? (7) "...Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife" (1 Cor. 7:27) and "For I would that all men were even as I myself (single--Ed.)...I say therefore to the unmarried and widows. It is good for them if they abide even as I" (1 Cor. 7:7-8) versus "Then the Lord said, 'It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him a helper fit for him'" (Gen. 2:18 RSV). (8) "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain" (1 Cor. 9:24) versus "So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy" (Rom. 9:16). (9) "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12), "Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation...For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners" (Rom. 5:18-19), "Therefore as by one man's offence death reigned by one;...." (Rom. 5:17), and (Rom. 5:15, 1 Cor. 15:21-22) versus "The soul that sinneth it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son...." (Ezek. 18:20) "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin" (Deut. 24:16), and (Deut. 32:4). (10) "...Thou shalt not covet...." (Rom. 13:9), "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house,...nor anything that is thy neighbor's" (Ex. 20:17) and (Rom. 7:7) versus "But covet earnestly the best gifts...." (1 Cor. 12:31) and "Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy,..." (1 Cor. 14:39). (11) "You were bought with a price; do not become slaves of men" (1 Cor. 7:23 RSV) versus "Slaves, obey in everything those who are your earthly masters, not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing the Lord" (Col. 3:22

RSV). (12) "Bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2) versus "For each man will have to bear his own load" (Gal. 6:5). (13) "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness...." (Gal. 5:22) versus "And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he judged Israel, and went out to war...." (Judges 3:10), "And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he went down to Ashkelon, and slew thirty men of them, and took their spoil...." (Judges 14:19), "...and the spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him,...and he found a new jawbone of an ass,...and slew a thousand men therewith" (Judges 15:14-15), and "the Spirit of God came upon Saul...and his anger was kindled greatly" (1 Sam. 11:6). (14) "Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge" (Heb. 13:4) versus "And the Lord said to Hosea, Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms...." (Hosea 1:2) and "Then said the Lord unto me, Go yet, love a woman beloved of her friend, yet an adulteress" (Hosea 3:1). (15) "Thou, Lord, didst found the earth in the beginning, and the heavens are the work of thy hands; they (the earth and the heavens--Ed.) will perish, but thou remainest...." (Heb. 1:10-11 RSV) and (Psalms 102:25-26) versus "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth forever" (Eccle. 1:4). (16) "By faith Moses left Egypt, not being afraid of the anger of the king...." (Heb. 11:27) versus "And he (a Hebrew--Ed.) said, Who made thee (Moses--Ed.) a prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killest the Egyptian? And Moses feared and said, Surely this thing is known. Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh and dwelt in the land of Midian...." (Ex. 2:14-15). (17) "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption" (1 Cor. 15:50) versus "...Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven" (2 Kings 2:11), "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death...." (Heb. 11:5), and "Enoch walked with God; and he was not; for God took him" (Gen. 5:24). (18) "That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter: because that the Lord is the avenger of all such...." (1 Thess. 4:6) versus "...and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God" (Ezek. 39:10) and "...ye shall spoil the Egyptians" (Ex. 3:22). Paul said don't defraud your neighbor while God ordered "robbing" and "spoiling." (19) "For it is not the man who commends himself that is accepted, but the man whom the Lord commends" (2 Cor. 10:18 RSV) versus "...for I ought to have been commended of you; for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles...." (2 Cor. 12:11), "For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles. But though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge...." (2 Cor. 11:5-6), "Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also" (2 Cor. 11:18) and (2 Cor. 11:30). How could Paul be accepted with such braggadocio? (20) "Who (God--Ed.) only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto...." (1 Tim. 6:16) versus "Then spake Solomon, The Lord said that he would dwell in the thick darkness" (1 Kings 8:12), "Clouds and darkness are around about him (God--Ed.)...." (Psalm 97:2), and "He made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters...." (Psalm 18:11). (21) "Bless them which persecute you: bless, and curse not" (Rom. 12:14) and "See that none render evil for evil unto any man...." (1 Thess. 5:15) versus "Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works" (2 Tim. 4:14). Paul preached forgiveness but sought the opposite for his offenders. (22) "For I am the least of the apostles, unfit to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God" (1 Cor. 15:9 RSV) versus "I think that I am not in the least inferior to these superlative apostles" (2 Cor. 11:5 RSV). (23) "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities" (1 Tim. 5:23) and "Likewise must the deacons be grave, not doubletongued, not given to much wine...." (1 Tim. 3:8) versus "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine...." (Rom. 14:21), "A bishop then must be...not given to wine,...." (1 Tim. 3:2-3), "For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God...not given to wine...." (Titus 1:7), "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise" (Prov. 20:1), "Whoredom and wine and new wine take away the heart" (Hosea 4:11) and (Prov. 23:31-32, Num. 6:1-4, Titus 2:3).

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #220 from BC of Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Dennis. I was reading your Sample Issue and you do raise a lot of points of Bible Errancy. Yet you haven't proven the Bible wrong or that there is no God of creation. As you should know in order to have a Creation we have to have a creator. And this world isn't here by an explosion. God said His thoughts aren't our thoughts; His ways aren't our ways. And if we did know as much as he does, we would have no need of God's salvation.

The same goes for a small child. He doesn't know as much as the father knows. God made man to grow in truth and in knowledge, but only if we trust, believing in faith in Him. To give you an example: If there is a real God and his word is truth for Salvation to all to have eternal life and if there is a Judgment for all, who is really in trouble at the resurrection. The one who believed in works and faith or the one who didn't believe at all?? And if there is a God, He said, whoever isn't written in the Lamb's Book of Life is Condemned and have their part in the Lake of fire. Mr. McKinsey, you raise a lot of interesting points as I said before but don't you think God has a reason for everything man can't understand and know? Are we to challenge God? Judge God? May I ask if you believe in God and Jesus Christ our Saviour. I'm enclosing $1 for the back issue on God's Nature.

Editor's Response to Letter #220

Dear BC. You should have read some prior issues of BE before sending your letter as many of your points have already been addressed. Your errors are numerous and indicative of one who has been thoroughly imbued with Christian ideology. First, after reading our sample issue you concluded that "we haven't proven the Bible wrong." I can only surmise that that's all you've read since the evidence presented by this publication throughout the years is decidedly to the contrary. Indeed, if one need only present a single biblical contradiction or error to prove the Bible wrong or errant, then that task was fulfilled years ago. Second, BE has never proved "there is no God of creation" because we have never attempted, nor are we obligated, to do so. You are required to prove he does exist; we are under no requirement to prove he doesn't. After all, you are the one bringing him up. A basic principle of science and logic says the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. Otherwise, I would have to disprove every dubious theory or belief known to man, no matter how extreme. Third, why do you assume creation or matter had to have a creator? Why couldn't it have existed from all eternity? Fourth, why do you assume your creator does not need a creator? Fifth, I never stated or implied that this world emerged from an explosion and, unless you are knowledgeable in astrophysics, I'd suggest you not be so confident in an area few people comprehend. Sixth, you asserted that "God said His thoughts aren't our thoughts...." when, in reality, all you have done is quote from a book evidence shows to be so permeated with problems and difficulties it couldn't possibly have emanated from a perfect being. Your comment that "God said...." discounts the entire history of this publication. If the Bible was God's word there would be no contradictions, errors, and fallacies contained therein. Seventh, your deprecation of man's knowledge and assertion that we must "trust" and "believe in faith" in God is nothing more than a subtle indoctrination to the effect that we must trust and believe in the Bible, since that is allegedly our conduit to him. Eighth, you resurrected the ghost of Pascal's Wager which was laid to rest on the 3rd page of the 22nd issue. You should read that analysis as it answers those who contend we should believe the Bible just to be on the safe side. Ninth, this publication takes no position with respect to whether or not a god exists so your questions in regard to judging and challenging miss the mark. However, we clearly take a stance with respect to the Bible's validity and its allegedly divine authorship. And lastly, for Jesus to be our saviour is out of the question when it comes from a book that is so much in question.

Letter #221 from EMT of Cottonwood, Arizona

Dennis... Looking at your question, "How could the earth be replenished (Gen. 1:28) unless it had been plished before Adam and Eve?" Leaving the Mormon claim aside that this planet was constructed of the ancient materials of other planets, let's look at the word "replenish." It is from the Hebrew word "male" or "mala'," and means: accomplish, confirm, consecrate, fill, furnish, gather together, replenish, satisfy, etc. The NIV uses the Hebrew to read "Be fruitful and increase in number; fill the earth..." This is something that I think even you will agree that the human race has accomplished....

Editor's Response to Letter #221

Your observation is worthy of note because it highlights a major concern associated with biblical criticism, EMT, i.e., what version of the Bible should be employed. Regardless of the one used someone will prefer another. We have always concentrated on the King James because of its acceptance by the largest number of people, but, unfortunately, problems such as the one you've offered are unavoidable as long as disagreement exists on the source to be used. I'm willing to admit that "most versions do not say replenish" but I have no way of knowing what version you prefer. Of my 13 versions only three (the KJV, the ASV, and the Jewish Masoretic Text) say "replenish." The others duplicate your NIV citation. The fact that they are later creations tends to corroborate my earlier contention that apologists often rewrite the script when problems become irreconcilable. Before you and I could discuss the Bible we would have to agree on the version to be utilized. I'm not as concerned with the version used as making sure you don't leap from one to another as expediency dictates. For you or other biblicists to have 13 or more versions of every verse, any one of which could be chosen as conditions dictate, is a ground rule with which I would never agree.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #222 from Mark Potts, 8510-A East 66th Place South, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

Dear Dennis...I have a couple of remarks about your "Genesis Questions" in Issue #52. In Gen. 4:12 God prophesied falsely to Cain when he predicted that Cain would be a fugitive and a vagabond, because according to 4:16-17 he settled down in the land of Nod and built a city.

Also God's warning to Adam and Eve in Gen. 2:17 ("But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die") makes no sense. If Adam and Eve lacked moral knowledge before the Fall, how would they have known it was wrong to disobey God.

Incidentally, here's another curious point: If the Creation was originally perfect in every step and every aspect before the Fall, why did God declare in Gen. 2:18, "It is not good that the man should be alone" before the creation of Eve?

Letter #223 from AH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis...There is a guy here in the coffee shop with a gold cross earring and long blond hair reading a Bible and drinking lots of coffee. If he gets up to go to the bathroom, I'll place a copy of BE on his table. All the employees here at the Good Earth enjoy BE, even the Church goers, which confuses me. If they know the Bible isn't perfect and agree it isn't from God, why would they quote from it or use it as a valid source? The cashier quoted Jesus to me one day and I replied, "But Paul disagrees with him, now what?" She just looked confused. The next day I gave her the copy of BE which had Jesus versus Paul. She said she enjoyed it and wanted to take it to her pastor....

Editor's Response to Letter #223

Dear AH. Letters describing encounters in which readers are seeking to influence, persuade, and inform biblicists have always been of special interest to me because learning the correct message and taking it to the other side go to the heart of this periodical. Too many freethought advocates think they have prevailed by merely keeping biblicists from converting them. That's not victory; that's capitulation, if not defeat. Success occurs when you convert them to your point of view not when you merely prevent them from converting you to theirs. That's why proselytization and a positive program of assertive re-education are needed. You are to be congratulated for using BE in the manner intended, although I'd prefer that you converse with biblicists more rather than just hand them literature to read. Questions will always arise which can only be answered by someone on the spot. No piece of literature can anticipate all the questions, doubts, and objections that will arise. There is no substitute for work, no short-cut to victory. Literature can be of great assistance but rarely does the job for you. The personal touch is crucial. All too often it's primary, not secondary.

Letter #224 from Mark Jacquemin, 4815 E. Thomas Rd. #241, Phoenix, Arizona 85018

When I was a young child I was forced to attend an Episcopalian church every Sunday morning. There are no words to describe how much I hated this church and its empty religion. When I reached the eighth grade I was told that I wouldn't have to go any more so I have never been back since other than to attend my sister's wedding. During the last couple of years of high school I started taking drugs. It is hard to explain but I feel that drugs somehow opened my mind up to religion, which I always hated so much. I also listened to rock music night and day, some of which spoke favorably of a higher power. This undoubtedly influenced me. One night in May 1970 when I was 18, I came home after smoking pot and really felt terrible. This was unusual as I had always had good experiences with drugs prior to that. I started to feel worse and suddenly the thought popped into my mind, "why don't you read the bible, maybe that will help." I was unable to find the family bible but I did find a paraphrase of the book of Romans. Prior to this night I had never read the bible in my life. I deliberately never listened to anything in church and so I was totally unfamiliar with the bible's contents. I read the first five or six chapters of Romans, all about "man's depravity," and really became convinced that my life needed to be changed. The next day I contacted a few of the believers at high school and they proceeded to tell me all about their version of the christian faith. They all went to a "charismatic pentecostal" church, composed of fundamentalists who also believe in speaking in tongues, healing, miracles, etc. So I became "saved," "born again," "justified," "filled with the Holy Ghost," etc. I began to read the bible, pray every day, attend a million church meetings, try to convert the lost etc. As soon as I got "saved" and indoctrinated, I felt that all churches but charismatic churches were false. I believed that the baptists, methodists, catholics, presbyterians, mormons and a million other sects did not follow the bible so I abhorred these institutions. Around 1975 I started to realize that most charismatic churches did not follow the bible either, so I read every book and listened to every tape that I could find about the "new testament church." I reasoned that the true church must be like the church in the book of Acts. I visited many churches that claimed they were like the new testament church. In 1977 I attended a bible school that claimed to have the "new testament order" so I could become a preacher. After bible school a few friends of mine and I started home bible studies but they never got off the ground. Around May 1985 I started reading literature that challenged the idea that the bible taught "eternal hell." These writings claimed the original writings of scripture had been corrupted by the King James Version and most of the modern versions of the Bible. It was claimed that the Hebrew word "olam" and the Greek word "aionios" did not mean eternal. There are several versions that do not use the word "eternal": Young's Literal Translation, the Concordant Version, Rotherham's Emphatic Bible and the Emphatic Diaglott. So I became open to the idea that perhaps the bible taught the "annihilation of the wicked" (annihilationism--Ed.) or the doctrine of the restoration of all things, that all mankind and even fallen angels and satan would eventually be restored to God (universalism--Ed.). Around January 1986 I formally rejected the idea that the bible taught the doctrine of the "trinity," though I had felt very uncomfortable with that belief for years. In my thinking the trinity doctrine is polytheism, worshipping three gods, and obviously false. Around November 1986 the thought occurred to me that I had never really given the enemies of christianity a fair hearing, I had never even read their books. In a courtroom a judge listens to both sides before making a decision, but most christians, including myself up to that time, only read literature that confirms their beliefs and traditions. They are not open to change, so it is impossible to pursue truth impartially. From November 1986 to the present I have read numerous books by deists, agnostics and atheists, but there are five books that really stand out in my mind as destroying my faith in the bible as the "inerrant word of god." These were the first anti-bible books I read and they demonstrated to my satisfaction that the bible, though it may have some good morals and interesting stories, is basically a pack of lies, particularly its main theme, the pagan doctrine of the "atonement." The first book I read which challenged the scriptures was a small book on the history of Egypt. It pointed out that the uniqueness of christianity is a lie, that scores of pagan deities had a "virgin birth," "died as a ransom for mankind," and "rose from the dead." Many pagan deities were "god-men" and the doctrine of the trinity was very common long before the time of Christ. The second book I read was the Age of Reason by Thomas Paine. I don't see how anyone could read this book and honestly claim that christianity is true. Then I read a book on the "Dead Sea Scrolls" by Charles Potter that really attacked the doctrine of the deity of Christ, and pointed out how the NT is filled with mythology. Then I read "The Mistakes of Moses" by Robert Ingersoll, which pointed out that the so-called "chosen people of God" were really a bunch of savage pagan barbarians....

If anyone reading this still believes in the bible as nonfiction, rather than fictitious mythology, I would like to discuss the claims of the scriptures with him. I rejected the bible after very careful study, not from a desire to sin or displease the true God, if theism is true. I would particularly enjoy having an oral or written debate with anyone who believes in orthodoxy.

Paul--The Deceptive Disciple (Part Two of a Six-Part Series)--Last month's commentary initiated a discussion of statements in which Paul not only contradicts other parts of Scripture but himself as well and this month's issue will continue that enumeration: (24) "For I know that in me (that is in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing...." (Rom 7:18) versus "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me...." (Gal. 2:20). Paul said no good thing dwells within him yet he has Christ within. (25) "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made...and this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law was 430 years after (Abraham--Ed.)...." (Gal. 3:16-17) versus "now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was 430 years" (Ex. 12:40) and "he said unto Abraham, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them 400 years...." (Gen. 15:13). How could the law have been given to Moses 430 years after the promise to Abraham when the Israelites were in Egypt alone 430 years (Ex. 12:40) or at least 400 years (Gen. 15:13)? (26) "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. 10:31) versus "And David said unto God, I am in a great strait; let us fall now into the hand of the Lord; for his mercies are great: and let us not fall into the hand of man" (2 Sam. 24:14). (27) "But to Israel he (God--Ed.) saith, All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people" (Rom. 10:21) versus "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel...." (Num. 23:21). (28) "And after that (the destruction of 7 nations in Canaan by the Israelites--Ed.) he gave unto them judges about the space of 450 years, until Samuel the prophet" (Acts 13:20) [Note: Paul not only wrote much of the NT but made many statements in the Book of Acts--Ed.] versus "And it came to pass in the 480th year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt in the 4th year of Solomon's reign over Israel...." (1 Kings 6:1). If there were 476 years between the time the Israelites left Egypt until the 1st year of Solomon's reign and Judges ruled for 450 of these years, then Saul and David could have only ruled for an intervening total of 26 years. Yet, 2 Sam. 5:4 says David alone ruled 40 years. In addition, more than 40 years were consumed from the time they left Egypt in the Book of Exodus to the period in which they expelled the 7 tribes from Canaan as related in the Book of Joshua. (29) "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now" (Rom. 8:22) versus "The eyes of all wait upon thee; and thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing" (Psalms 145:15-16). How could the whole creation groan in pain when God satisfies the desires of every living thing? (30) "tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them that believe" (1 Cor. 14:22) versus "If therefore the whole church be come together into one place and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all,...and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you...." (1 Cor. 14:23-25). Paul's logic leaves a lot to be desired. Speaking with tongues is for the unbeliever, but if you speak with tongues the unbeliever is unconvinced. Prophesying is not for the unbeliever, but if you prophesy the unbeliever is convinced. (31) "Who is the image of the invisible God...." (Col. 1:15) and "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible...." (1 Tim. 1:17) versus "...for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved" (Gen. 32:30), "And the Lord spoke unto Moses face to face...." (Ex. 33:11), "...for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isa. 6:5), and (Judges 13:22). How could God be seen if he is invisible? (32) "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified" (Rom. 2:13), "Who will render to every man according to his deeds" (Rom. 2:6) and (2 Cor. 5:10) versus "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight...." (Rom. 3:20), "that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident...." (Gal. 3:11) and (Gal. 2:16). (33) "And I (Paul--Ed.) have hope toward God...that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust" (Acts 24:15) versus "In a moment...the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:52). In Acts Paul "hopes" there is a resurrection while in Corinthians he is sure. Which is the real Paul? (34) "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:16) and "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord" (1 Cor. 14:37) versus "That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, in the confidence of boasting" (2 Cor. 11:17), "But to the rest speak I, not the Lord...." (1 Cor. 7:12), "Now concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment..." (1 Cor. 7:25) and (1 Cor. 7:6). If all scripture emanates from God, how can Paul say on several occasions that he was not speaking for God? (35) "That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie,...." (Heb. 6:18), "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie...." (Titus 1:2) versus "Now therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets...." (1 Kings 22:23, 2 Chron. 18:22), "for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie" (2 Thess. 2:11), "O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived...." (Jer. 20:7), "if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him...." (Ezek. 14:9), "Then said I, ah Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul" (Jer. 4:10) and (Jer. 15:18, Gen. 2:17, 5:5). (36) "Moreover, Brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; And all were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea" (1 Cor. 10:1-2) versus "And the angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them: And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel...." (Ex. 14:19-20) and "the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them.... But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea...." (Ex. 14:28-29). Paul should be more concerned with his own ignorance. The cloud was before and behind them; they were not in it. And none of the "fathers" were baptized; none touched the sea. Actually the Egyptians were the ones "baptized." (37) "...so that no human being might boast in the presence of God" (1 Cor. 1:29 RSV), "Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger and not thine own lips" (Prov. 27:2) and Psalm 94:4) versus "What I am saying I say not with the Lord's authority but as a fool, in this boastful confidence; since many boast of worldly things, I too will boast" (2 Cor. 11:17-18 RSV), "You have made me act like a fool--boasting like this.... There isn't a single thing these other marvelous fellows have that I don't have too...." (2 Cor. 12:11, Living Bible) and "...but I (Paul -- Ed.) laboured more abundantly than they all...." (1 Cor. 15:10). (38) "Paul wanted Timothy to accompany him; and he took him and circumcised him because of the Jews that were in those places, for they all knew that his father was a Greek" (Acts 16:3 RSV) versus "But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised" (Gal. 2:3). Behaving according to expediency, Paul circumcised his companions as conditions dictated. His intentional deception of the Jews by circumcising Timothy is a case in point. (39) "For our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29) and "In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ...." (2 Thess 1:8) and (Heb. 10:27) versus "Now the God of peace...." (Heb. 13:20) and "The Lord is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and of great mercy...and his tender mercies are over all his works" (Psalms 145:8-9). (40) "...and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour" (1 Cor. 3:8) and "Who (God--Ed.) will render to every man according to his deeds...." (Rom. 2:6) and (2 Thess. 3:10) versus "And I (God--Ed.) have given you a land for which ye did not labour, and cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them; of the vineyards and oliveyards which ye planted not do ye eat" (Joshua 24:13). (41) "I take you to record this day, that I (Paul--Ed.) am pure from the blood of all men" (Acts 20:26) versus "And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women" (Acts 22:4) and "...many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them" (Acts 26:10) and "...Is not this he (Paul--Ed.) that destroyed them which called on his name in Jerusalem...." (Acts 9:21) and "Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord...." (Acts 9:1) and "...when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I (Paul--Ed.) also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him" (Acts 22:20) and (Acts 9:13, 26:10-11, 1 Cor. 15:9, Phil. 3:6, Gal. 1:13, 23, 1 Tim. 1:13). (42) "...while to the person who does not work by Law, but whose faith rests on Him who declares the ungodly righteous" (Rom. 4:5 Mod. Lang.) versus "He that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous; him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him" (Prov. 24:24), "He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord" (Prov. 17:15), and (Isa. 5:20-23). Since God declares the ungodly righteous, he must be not only cursed and abhorred by the people but abominable to himself. (43) "For there is no respect of persons with God" (Rom. 2:11), "...knowing that your Master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with him" (Eph. 16:9), "...God accepteth no man's person...." (Gal. 2:6) and (Deut. 10:17, 2 Chron. 19:7, 1 Peter 1:17) versus "For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, Lord, becamest their God" (1 Chron. 17:22), "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God and the Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth" (Deut. 14:2), "Thou shalt be blessed above all people" (Deut. 7:14) and (Gen. 13:14-15, Rom. 1:16, 2:10, 9:13, 11:5, 7, Psalm 138:6). We are told by Paul that God does not play favorites when clearly he does. And finally (44) "...behold, I (Paul--Ed.) am going to Jerusalem, bound in the Spirit, not knowing what shall befall me there...." (Acts 20:22 RSV) versus "And having sought out the disciples, we stayed there (in Tyre--Ed.) for seven days. Through the Spirit they told Paul not to go on to Jerusalem" (Acts 21:4 RSV). Paul says the Spirit approved of his going to Jerusalem while the same Spirit told others to tell him otherwise.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #225 from Robert Bowman Jr., Associate Editor at the Christian Research Institute, San Juan Capistrano, Calif. (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I read your response to my letter of September 5, 1986, in the February 1987 issue of Biblical Errancy and would like to reply to your six points. (1) You say that "the authorship of every book in the Bible is a matter of dispute among scholars. I can't think of one book whose author is known for certain...." This is a good example of the extreme skepticism and fault-finding inherent in your approach to the Bible. Scholars with no ax to grind will tell you that, at the very least, it is regarded as certain that Paul wrote Romans, I & II Corinthians, Galatians, Philippians, I Thessalonians and Philemon. Please supply me with a list of "authorities" who deny or express serious doubts about the Pauline authorship of these letters. I realize that most nonevangelical scholars today doubt the apostolic authorship of Matthew and John, the Isaianic authorship of Isaiah 40-66, and so forth; but your position is extreme and unscholarly. Also I have studied the writings of most of the famous nonevangelical biblical scholars, and they simply do not deal with the arguments presented by Guthrie, whereas Guthrie deals thoroughly with their arguments. Frankly, until you study carefully the arguments of such biblical scholars as Guthrie and F.F. Bruce...you don't know what you are talking about.

Editor's Response to Letter #225 (Part a)

Dear Robert. Apparently you have spent too much time reading a rather narrow range of apologetic literature. Greater consultation with the "higher critics" would probably have dissuaded you from such sweeping generalizations. You should devote more time to the writings of such knowledgeable analysts as Loisy, Sunderland, Renan, Gladden, Briggs, Wellhausen, Trattner, Wheless, Remsberg, Conybeare, and Cheyne. Contrary to common evangelical belief, Bruce and Guthrie do not have a corner on biblical scholarship. The following represent only some of the comments one could use to disprove your belief that little disagreement exists with respect to the authorship of various writings. "Says Prof. Charles A. Briggs; 'It may be regarded as the certain result of the science of the Higher Criticism that Moses did not write the Pentateuch or Job; Ezra did not write the Chronicles, Ezra, or Nehemiah; Jeremiah did not write the Kings or Lamentations; David did not write the Psalter, but only a few of the Psalms; Solomon did not write the Song of Solomon, Ecclesiastes, and a portion of Proverbs; Isaiah did not write half the book that bears his name. The great mass of the OT was written by authors whose names and connection with their writings are lost in oblivion.' Says Prof. Smith: "A large proportion of the books of the OT are anonymous.' Dr. Washington Gladden writing of the Books of Samuel says:...There is not the slightest reason for believing that the Books of Samuel were written by Samuel any more than that the Odyssey was written by Ulysses.... The fact that Samuel's name is given to the book proves nothing as to its authorship." J.W. Chadwick in his Bible of Today says:...The authors of Samuel, Kings, Chronicles are all unknown to us.... And with the Pentateuch it is just the same. The Yahwist, Elohist, the Deuteronomist...are all unknown to us." {The Bible by Jabez Sunderland, G.P. Putnam Sons, 1897, pages 48-50}

Comparable assertions exist with respect to the NT: "Many moreover, are of the opinion that not one of the Gospels is the work of the apostolic person whose name it bears, and that the apostle John, in particular, had nothing whatever to do with writing the Gospel attributed to him.... It follows that Luke wrote neither the 3rd Gospel nor Acts.... According to tradition Paul wrote 14 Epistles and the veracity of God demands the belief that all are truly his. But the Epistle to the Hebrews is positively not from him; the second to Thessalonians is almost certainly apocryphal; so is the Epistle to the Ephesians; many hold that the Epistles to Timothy and to Titus, in the main contents, cannot be his. And we have already pointed out in another work (The Birth of the Christian Religion) that there is much to be said against the full authenticity of the Epistle to the Romans, to the Corinthians, to the Galatians to the Colossians.... The Second Epistle of Peter is a barefaced forgery. The first Epistle is not more authentic.... The three Epistles attributed to John...are no more the work of the apostle John than is the Gospel itself. Need we add that the Book of Revelation is the work of a certain John who was not John the apostle?...." {The Origin of the NT by Alfred Loisy, MacMillan and Co. 1950, pages 13-15}. Before minimizing the source of these comments you might note what a knowledgeable scholar said about the author, Loisy. "It remains to acknowledge my indebtedness to the three greatest Christian scholars of our age--Alfred Loisy, Professor Harnack and J. Wellhausen." {The Origins of Christianity by F.C. Conybeare, University Books, Evanston and N.Y., 1958, page XXIX.

And before continuing to denigrate "most of the famous nonevangelical biblical scholars," especially those known as the "higher critics," you should seriously consider the following comments by Ernest Trattner: "It is sometimes thought--mostly however in half educated circles--that the men who undermined the old theology and exploded antiquated beliefs were relentless enemies of the church and the synagogue, a sort of mixed and rowdy group of infidels, atheists, anarchists, and libertines. Such has long been the popular and misleading impression which glances at all biblical investigation as a dark and sinister menace.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The founders of the science of Biblical Criticism were not only men of superb courage, with wide awake and unbefuddled power, but they were devotees of a very high type of religion.... These scholars were no ordinary group of thinkers. (Many were professors of religion and clergymen--Ed.). It is true they were often harsh and blunt--they had to be in order to speak their minds against contemporary dislike for reason and investigation. It is often a thankless and ungracious office to tell the world what it least wants to hear." {Unravelling the Book of Books by Ernest Trattner, Scribners and Sons, NY and London, 1931, page 279}

Your criticism of the books of Daniel, Ezekiel, and Revelation is based, I would venture to say, on a complete lack of familiarity with the literary forms of the ancient Near East, and in particular with that form which has been dubbed "apocalyptic." If you were familiar with these literary forms, you would not have made the mistake that Ingersoll, Jefferson and Paine made in thinking the author of the Book of Revelation to be insane. No one in first or second century Judaism would have questioned the sanity of that author. Modern literary and other media art forms (music, films, etc.) employ equally weird symbolism to communicate ideas. While we may not find such art to our taste, it is narrow-minded and simplistic to dismiss all such works of art as the products of insane men. By the way, some have hailed the book of Revelation as "the only masterpiece of pure art in the NT" {See: William Barclay, The Revelation of John, Vol. I (Westminster, 1976), page 2}.

Editor's Response to Letter #225 (Part b)

Most of your comments are without merit and deserving of correction, Robert. First, your statement that I erred "in thinking the author of the Book of Revelation to be insane" like Ingersoll, Jefferson, and Paine is inaccurate. I said "the writing, itself, may bring the author's sanity into question. The books of Daniel, Ezekiel, and especially Revelation, are sufficient within themselves to bring the author's mental stability under scrutiny" and I reaffirm that observation. "I'm reminded of the comments by Ingersoll, Jefferson and Paine" was an addendum. I never flatly said the author was insane. For me to have directly stated as much would have been inappropriate as I have no more awareness of the mental state or motives of ancient authors than do you. In fact, why would you even make such a comment when your own letter on page 3 in the Feb. 1987 issue has the same question and my response. Your letter stated: "My first question had to do with the motivation and sanity of the biblical writers. You answered that because the identity of the writers is in many cases uncertain, their motives and sanity cannot be ascertained with any certainty.... Your answer amounts to 'I don't know and that's fair.'" How often must I address the same query? Second, your statement that "no one in first or second century Judaism would have questioned the sanity of that author" is rather presumptuous, wouldn't you agree. After all, how could you possibly know what was in the mind of, or speak for, every Jew living nearly 2,000 years ago? Third, your comment that my "criticism of the books of Daniel...is based, I would venture to say, on a complete lack of familiarity with the literary forms..." is nearly as tenuous, since you know little about my knowledge of ancient Near East literary forms. Of course, you covered yourself to some extent by saying: "I would venture to say" which concedes an element of guesswork. Fourth, you even admit these writings employ "weird symbolism" to communicate ideas, so don't be so eager to indict those who have doubts about the mental stability of the authors involved. Fifth, although "some may have hailed the book of Revelation as the only masterpiece of pure art in the NT" others clearly disagree. Martin Luther, who holds a position in Christendom immeasurably higher than that of William Barclay, stated in this regard: "About this book of Revelation of John, I leave everyone free to hold his own opinion.... I miss more than one thing in this book and it makes me consider it to be neither apostolic nor prophetic....there is no prophet in the OT, to say nothing of the New, who deals so exclusively with visions and images. For myself, I think it approximates the Fourth Book of Esdras; I can in no way detect that the Holy Spirit produced it....they are supposed to be blessed who keep what is written in this book and yet no one knows what that is, to say nothing of keeping it. This is just the same as if we did not have the book at all. And there are many far better books available for us to keep...My spirit cannot accomodate itself to this book...Christ is neither taught nor known in it....Therefore I stick to the books which present Christ to me, clearly and purely. {Luther's Works, Vol. 35, American Edition, Philadelphia, 1960, pages 398-99}. Luther subsequently stated: "This is the way it has been with this book heretofore. Many have tried their hands at it, but until this very day they have attained no certainty. Some have even brewed into it many stupid things out of their own heads. Because its interpretation is uncertain and its meaning hidden, we have also let it alone until now, especially because some of the ancient fathers held that it was not the work of St. John the Apostle.... For our part, we share this doubt." {Ibid. page 400} TO BE CONCLUDED

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter # 226 from SO of Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Dennis. First of all let me say how much I enjoy and look forward to BE each month. Along with Free Inquiry, BE is the most enjoyable periodical I receive and I receive a lot. As a graduate student at Florida State University I have ample opportunity to come into contact with Christian fundamentalists as a number of their associated organizations have chapters on campus, e.g., Campus Crusade for Christ, Students for Christ, Fellowship of Christian Athletes, etc. On several occasions I've found myself discussing biblical inerrancy with some of their members. When challenged to provide examples of contradictions, I have sometimes found that I couldn't remember the exact chapter and verse references needed to prove my points. Hence, I decided to print some "business cards" with examples of biblical contradictions. Now, when approached by defenders of inerrancy I can quickly produce a precise, referenced rebuttal to their inerrancy claim. I've found this technique quickly cuts through all the rhetorical generalities about inerrancy and gets to the heart of the matter. I've enclosed one of my cards for you.

Editor's Response to Letter #226

Dear SO. Good thinking. I only wish more people were as innovative and energetic. If only we had hundreds, if not thousands, following your lead! You are correct. It's much better to deal in specifics than the escape hatches known as glittering generalities often preferred by apologists. My only reservation is that you appear to be acting only "when approached by defenders of inerrancy." I'd suggest a less passive and more active role of taking it to them with facts in hand. Don't wait for them to come to you. Incidentally, your opening remarks are only too kind.

Letter #227 from Mark Potts, 8510-A East 66th Pl. So., Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133

Dear Dennis....The biblicist view of morality makes no sense. Consider two separate questions: (1) Does morality matter according to biblicists? (2) Does the Bible provide a set of moral absolutes? The answer to both of these questions is apparently no. First, biblicists constantly judge the behavior of others as falling short of their moral ideal--whatever that is. (As BE has amply demonstrated, we certainly can't use JESUS as a perfect role model.) But this constant judging makes no sense, because people are not "saved" by their moral actions, only by their faith in Jesus. If Hitler had fallen on his knees in his bunker to accept Jesus before he died, he would have been as "saved" as any other Christian.

Secondly, biblicists maintain that the Bible gives us a set of moral principles that we have to follow. But the Law of Moses in the Pentateuch is full of rules which modern biblicists feel perfectly free to ignore. Why? Because Paul tells us time and again that the Old Law is no longer valid. Overnight, it seems the rules defining right and wrong radically changed. If the Law of Moses could be discarded like yesterday's newspaper, in what sense can any moral commandment in the Bible be absolute.

EDITOR'S NOTE I'm scheduled to speak at the Am. Rationalist Conv. in Chicago on 8/29/87.

September 1987

Paul--The Deceptive Disciple (Part Three of a Six-part Series)--This month's commentary will conclude an analysis begun two issues ago in which Paul not only contradicts himself but other parts of Scripture as well. (45) "Now when they {Paul and Timothy--Ed.} had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden by the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia" (Acts 16:6) versus "...but he (Paul--Ed.) himself stayed in Asia for a season" (Acts 19:22), "Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded...." (Acts 19:26), "And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 19:10), and (2 Cor. 1:8, Acts 20:4, 18). Paul supposedly had the Holy Spirit; yet, he ignored its commandment not to go into Asia. (46) "Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?" (1 Cor. 11:14) versus "For, lo, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and no razor shall come on his head...." (Judges 13:5), "All the days of his separation there shall no razor come upon his head: until the days be fulfilled, in which he separateth himself unto the Lord, he shall be holy and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow" (Num. 6:5), and (1 Sam. 1:11). If long hair is a shame as Paul alleged, then why was it associated with holiness in the OT? (47) "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace...." (1 Cor. 14:33), "Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace...." (2 Thess. 3:16), "Now the God of peace be with you all" (Rom. 15:33) and (Heb. 13:20) versus "The Lord is a man of war...." (Ex. 15:3), "Blessed be the Lord my strength, which teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight" (Psalm 144:1), "For our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29), and (Judges 9:23, 1 Sam. 16:14, 2 Thess. 2:11). (48) "Do you not know that you are God's temple and that God's Spirit dwells in you? If any one destroys God's temple, God will destroy him. For God's temple is holy, and that temple you are" (1 Cor. 3:16-17 RSV) versus "And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the 250 men" (Num. 16:35), "The Lord killeth, and maketh alive: he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up" (1 Sam. 2:6), "Who smote great nations, and slew mighty kings...." (Psalm 135:10), "See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no god with me; I kill, and I make alive" (Deut. 32:39), and (Num. 21:6, 25:17, Joshua 10:40, 1 Sam. 15:18). If God destroys those who destroy God's temples, will he destroy himself? Or is this another example of: Do as I say not as I do. (49) "And every priest stareth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sin" (Heb. 10:11) versus "...and the priest shall burn them upon the altar...and the priest shall make an atonement for his sin that he hath committed, and it shall be forgiven him" (Lev. 4:35), "And one kid of the goats for a sin offering to make an atonement for you" (Num. 29:5), "And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin offering which is for himself" (Lev. 17:11), and (Lev. 4:26). Paul said that sacrifices could never take away sins when the OT clearly stated sacrifices could atone for sins. (50) "The merchants among the people shall hiss at thee (Tyre--Ed.); thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more" (Ezek. 27:36), "...and shall set thee (Tyre--Ed.) in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old...that thou be not inhabited....thou shalt be no more; though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord God" (Ezek. 26:20-21) and Ezek. 26:14) versus "Now when we (Paul and his party--Ed.) had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria and landed at Tyre" (Acts 21:3) and "when we had finished our course from Tyre...." (Acts 21:7). How could Paul have sailed from Tyre in the NT when it was abolished in the OT? (51) "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners...his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper" (Psalm 1:1-3) versus "...some (the judges and prophets--Ed.) were tortured.... Others suffered mocking and scourging, and even chains and imprisonment. They were stoned, they were sawn in two, they were killed with the sword; they went about in skins of sheep and goats, destitute, afflicted, ill-treated...." (Heb. 11:35-37 RSV). The judges and prophets Paul speaks of can not say that "whatsoever they did prospered." (52) "Death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression" (Rom. 5:14) and "Therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation.... For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners...." (Rom. 5:18-19) versus "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers, every man shall be put to death for his own sin" (Deut. 24:16, 2 Chron. 25:4, 2 Kings 14:6, Ezek. 18:20, Jer. 31:30) and (Rom. 2:6, Ezek. 18:4). (53) "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh (whom Christians say is Jesus--Ed.) come...." (Gen. 49:10) versus "And afterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul...." (Acts 13:21). Paul refuted Gen. 49:10. He noted that a king was established in the person of Saul before the advent of Shiloh. Apparently the sceptre had fallen before Saul appeared. (54) "...we speak not as pleasing men, but God which trieth our hearts" (1 Thess. 2:4), "Not with eyeservice, as menpleasers; but as the servants of Christ,...." and (Eph. 6:6), "...for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ" (Gal. 1:10) versus "Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved" (1 Cor. 10:33), "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification" (Rom. 15:2), and "To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men...." (1 Cor. 9:22). (55) "And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river" (Ex. 1:22) and "the woman conceived, and bare a son: and when she saw him that he was a goodly child, she hid him three months" (Ex. 2:2) versus "By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months by his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment" (Heb. 11:23). Paul's statement must be false. If the woman was not afraid, why did she hide her son, Moses? (56) "Who will render to every man according to his deeds" (Rom. 2:6), "...whose end shall be according to their works" (2 Cor. 11:15), "(For not the hearers of the law are just before God) but the doers of the law shall be justified" (Rom. 2:13), "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour" (1 Cor. 3:8) and (Gal. 6:7-8, Eph. 6:8, 2 Cor. 5:10, 1 Cor. 7:19) versus "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law" (Rom. 3:28), "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ...." (Gal. 2:16), "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith" (Gal. 3:11) and (Heb. 10:38, 11:6, Rom. 11:6, 1:16-17, 3:20, 4:13, 5:1, 2 Cor. 5:7, Gal. 5:6). Paul repeatedly states that one's ultimate reward and salvation are based on faith, while simultaneously contending they are based on works and good deeds. In addition, that which follows shows Paul can't even come to a definite conclusion as to whether or not the Old Law should be heeded. (57) "...for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them" (Gal. 3:10), "...the doers of the law shall be justified" (Rom. 2:13), "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law" (Rom. 3:31), "Know ye not, brethren,...how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth?" (Rom. 7:1), "...so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and the prophets" (Acts 24:14), "it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings" (Lev. 23:14, 21, 31, 41) and (Rom. 2:25, 7:12, Gal. 3:12, 19, Acts 28:17,23, 1 Cor. 14:34) versus "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter" (Rom. 7:6), "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law...." (Gal. 3:13), "...blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us...nailing it to the cross" (Col. 2:14), "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ" (Rom. 7:4), and (Rom. 6:14, 10:4, Gal. 2:16, 19, 21, 3:24-25, 5:2-4, 18, Eph. 2:15, Col. 2:16, Heb. 7:19, 1 Cor. 8:8--Also note: Acts 15:1-2, 28-29, 21:21, 24-25, 13:39, Rom. 2:27-29, 3:20, 4:14-15, 14:3-6, 14, 17-20, 23, 1 Cor. 7:18-19, 10:23-25, 27-29, 32-33, Gal. 4:21-31, 3:11, Phil. 3:7, 9, Col 2:20-23, 1 Tim. 4:4, Heb. 8:8). (58) Several problems accompany Paul's conversion on the road to Damascus: (A) "And the men which journeyed with him (a) stood speechless, (b) hearing a voice, but seeing no man" (Acts 9:7) versus "And when (a) we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me" (Acts 26:14) and "they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they (b) heard not the voice of him that spake to me" (Acts 22:9). (B) "Am I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord" (1 Cor. 9:1) and "last of all he was seen of me also" (1 Cor. 15:8) versus "And he (Paul--Ed.) fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him; Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?...And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. And he was three days without sight" (Acts 9:4, 8-9). Nowhere in Acts 9:4-9 or Acts 22:7-9 and 26:14-15, which discuss the same events, does the narrative say Paul saw Jesus. Indeed, he had his eyes open only briefly and only heard him. (C) "...Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? and the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city and it shall be told thee what thou must do" (Acts 9:6) and "I said, what shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do, and when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came to Damascus" (Acts 22:10-11) versus "...rise and stand upon thy feet; for I (Jesus--Ed.) have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee;...the Gentiles unto whom now I send thee, To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light...." (Acts 26:16-18). Did Paul receive his specific instructions on the road to Damascus or later in the city? (D) Contrary to previously-quoted Acts 9:8, 22:10-11 and 26:19-20, which say Paul went straight to Damascus after his conversion, Gal. 1:15-17 ("But when it pleased God...to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: Neither went I up to Jerusalem...but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus") says he went to Arabia first. (59) "...and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty" (2 Cor. 3:17) and "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Jesus Christ" (Gal. 3:28). One need only read Issue #8 to see widespread biblical support for slavery and female subjugation. (60) "...for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible...and the mortal must put on immortality..." (1 Cor. 15:52-53) and (Rom. 2:7 RSV, Rom. 6:23, 1 Cor. 15:16, 21) versus "For the fate of the sons of men and the fate of beasts is the same; as one dies so dies the other...man has no advantage over the beasts.... All go to one place; all are from the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knows whether the spirit of man goes upward and the spirit of the beast goes down to the earth" (Eccle. 3:19-21 RSV, 9:5-6) and (1 Tim. 6:15-16). (61) "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac...offered up his only begotten son...." (Heb. 11:17) versus "For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman" (Gal. 4:22) and "Abram was 86 when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram" plus "Abram was 100 when his son Isaac was born unto him" (Gen. 16:16 & 21:5). Ishmael was 14 years older than Isaac, so Isaac couldn't have been the only son. (62) "...my (Paul's--Ed.) knowledge in the mystery of Christ which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets...." (Eph. 3:4-5) and "...even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but is made manifest to his saints...." (Col. 1:26) versus "For there is no respect of persons with God" (Rom. 2:11), "...knowing that your Master is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with him" (Eph. 6:9) and (Deut. 10:17, 32:4, Col. 3:25). As was shown by #43 in the prior Issue, God clearly plays favorites. (63) "...if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law" (Gal. 3:21) versus "Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgments: which if a man do, he shall live in them: I am the Lord" (Lev. 18:5) and "For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them" (Rom. 10:5). Contrary to Gal. 3, Lev. 18 and Rom. 10 say the law can give life. (64) "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than the necessary things; That ye abstain from meats offered to idols and from blood...." (Acts 15:28-29) and (Acts 15:20, 21:25) versus "Eat whatever is sold in the meat market without raising any question on the ground of conscience" (1 Cor. 10:25 RSV), "But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not are we the worse" (1 Cor. 8:8), "If one of the unbelievers invites you to dinner...eat whatever is set before you without raising any question on the ground of conscience" (1 Cor. 10:27) and (Col. 2:16). Paul is contradictory with respect to whether all meats can be eaten. (65) "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy" (Ex. 20:8) versus "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days" (Col. 2:16). (66) "For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all" (Rom. 11:32) and (1 Tim. 2:4) versus "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth" (Rom. 9:18). (67) "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves...for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord" (Rom. 12:19) versus "...yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge" (2 Cor. 7:11) and (2 Cor. 10:5-6). And lastly, (68) "there is none other God but one" (1 Cor. 8:4) and "But to us there is but one God, the Father...." (1 Cor. 8:6) versus "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness...." (Gen. 1:26) and "the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us to know good and evil" (Gen. 3:22). How can God be singular when he refers to himself as "our" and "us"?

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #225 from Robert Bowman Jr. of the Christian Research Institute Continues from Last Month (Part c)

My point was that your newsletter gave the distinct impression that the Bible "is filled with a disproportionately high number of errors." I would still like to know what explanation you would give for concluding that the Bible contains far more errors and self-contradictions than any other merely human book.

Editor's Response to Letter #225 (Part c)

Remember, Robert, the Bible is not a book; it's a compilation of books and writings. The myriad of difficulties contained therein are primarily attributable to the fact that you are dealing with a volume composed over approximately 1,500 years by 40 to 50 different writers, few of whom seem to be very concerned with what the others said.

Another major source of biblical inconsistencies lies in the tremendous amount of repetition from Genesis to Revelation. Deuteronomy repeats much of Exodus; the gospels are repetitious as is much of Proverbs, etc. Understandably, in the absence of correlation, inconsistencies are a foregone conclusion.

Letter #225 Continues (Part d)

I am not assuming the inerrancy of the Bible when I suggest that your methodology in biblical criticism is faulty. Rather, I am merely assuming the humanness of the Bible's authors. If they were ordinary human beings, they would not have contradicted themselves as often as you seem to think they do.

Editor's Response to Letter #225 (Part d)

First, you suggest my "methodology in biblical criticism is faulty" but provide no evidence to that effect. Your assertion rests more on opinion than proof. Secondly, why do you assume there are a limited number of times "ordinary human beings" can contradict themselves. I've never noticed any restrictions of that nature. The number of times people contradict themselves varies dramatically from person to person and group to group. The Bible's authors could easily be within one of the less consistent groups. That's quite understandable when you are dealing with a volume composed over many centuries by many people. And finally, what you or I feel or "seem to think" is of little consequence. The question is what the facts show.

Letter #225 Continues (Part e)

The reason why you feel "little stress" when looking for errors in the Bible is that your methodology makes it too easy. I challenge you to take any collection of writings--say, the Encyclopedia of Philosophy edited by Edwards, or The Federalist Papers--and try to find enough contradictions to fill a page of your newsletter. I suggest you will find it difficult to do; and if so, it will be either because you adopt a different methodology or the Bible really is a different sort of collection of writings.

Editor's Response to Letter #225 (Part e)

I'd use the same methodology regardless of the book being analyzed, Robert; so that's not really germane. The other writings you mentioned could easily have less inconsistencies which would account for the fact that I couldn't "find enough contradictions to fill a page" of BE. That would have little to do with my methodology. It could be that they simply aren't there. That's why I could very well "find it difficult to do." Why imply my approach is different, flawed, or unfair. Why couldn't it just be that the Bible has a far greater number of problems than most books and in that sense it "really is a different sort of collection of writings."

Letter #225 Concludes (Part f)

I do not believe Jesus ever contradicted Himself. My point was that if He were only human, while He would probably have contradicted Himself occasionally, He would not have done so as often as your newsletters suggest.

Editor's Response to Letter #225 (Part f)

Again, what you or I believe is irrelevant, Robert. The question is: What does the evidence show? Secondly, you are again engaged in a numbers game of assuming that there are limits on the number of times mortals can contradict themselves. Why do you assume that because humans probably contradict themselves occasionally, Jesus and/or the Bible's authors could not have contradicted one another to a much greater degree? You are assuming the very point in dispute, namely, those connected with the Bible are somehow superior to, rather than equal or inferior to, the average human being.

Letter #228 from VM of Del Mar, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis...I really enjoy BE, and have been using some of your arguments in debates with Christians. The results have been interesting! In response to the question "What did Jesus do that had not already been done?" (BE #3), they claimed he not only had the power to forgive sins, but also allowed himself to be worshipped (Matt. 28:17); something which both the Old and New Testaments reserve only for God Himself (e.g., Rev. 22:8-9).

Editor's Response to Letter #228 (Part a)

Dear VM. Did the people with whom you conversed provide evidence of things Jesus did that corroborate his power to forgive sin. Apparently they merely "claimed" as much and "claims" or "assertions" prove nothing. Many people have claimed a wide assortment of powers. Charles Manson made some outlandish assertions as have many clergymen. That certainly doesn't mean they are valid. Hundreds of people have claimed the messiahship throughout the centuries. "Claiming" is not "doing." I want to know what Jesus did to substantiate his powers, not what he or his followers alleged he could do. The people with whom you conversed haven't given an example of something Jesus did that was not only new and exceptional but directly related to this issue.

As far as being worshipped is concerned, the same standard holds. Anyone can allow themselves to be worshipped, urge others to worship them, or hold themselves up as worthy of worship. That proves nothing. The question is: What have they done that substantiates their elevation to such lofty heights. What they or others say in their behalf is of no import. Nothing is cheaper or more plentiful than words.

Letter #228 Concludes (Part b)

When I asked how Jesus could be the Jewish Messiah descended from David if Joseph was not his physical father, they replied that Joseph had adopted Jesus, and thus was recognized by Jewish and Roman law as his legal son. I wasn't sure how to respond to these rationalizations. Any ideas?...All in all, BE is quite remarkable...I look forward to the day you compile all your data into a single volume. Keep up the good work!

Editor's Response to Letter #228 (Part b)

Your apologetic acquaintance doesn't know the Bible very well, VM. To begin with, there is nothing in the gospels showing Joseph adopted Jesus. Indeed, evidence is to the contrary. The genealogies in Matthew 1 and Luke 3 clearly show Joseph is the physical, the biological father, of Jesus. Secondly, not only do prophecies say the messiah must be a physical descendant of David ("The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne"--Psalm 132:11) and (Psalm 89:3-4, 2 Sam. 7:12-13), but so does Paul ("Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh"--Rom. 1:3) and (2 Tim. 2:8, Acts 13:23). If Jesus was adopted by Joseph, how could he have been a physical descendant of David? And if he wasn't in the physical lineage of David how could he have been the messiah. Thirdly, I recommend you read to your friends the Commentary on the Virgin Birth in the 6th Issue, as it's directly applicable to this question. This entire topic will be discussed more extensively in a future commentary.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #229 from JG of Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Dennis.... I have all 53 issues of BE. As they come through each month I become more and more impressed. You mentioned in an earlier issue about having materials available for two or more years. Isn't there some way you can consolidate this information into a well indexed reference book preferably aimed toward college classes?...The information you are putting out should be going to millions, not thousands. What this country needs is ONE well-organized, well-written explanation of biblical errors. Assuming this book were magically available, the next step would be promotion. The evangelists are already preparing to work over the Pan Am crowd when it arrives. Imagine even a small number of our group being there with a well-written flier to pass out in volume. It would contain information to catch the minds of the curious and doubters. This flier would then point to the one well-written book for those interested in more info....Please give at least some consideration to this idea....Keep up the good work; it's not just good, it's fabulous.

Editor's Response to Letter #229

Dear JG. Your project is only one of many we have been considering. You are by no means the only person who has suggested we write a comprehensive book encompassing BE. Unfortunately, time and money are limited.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We'd like to thank those who have arranged for me to speak on college campuses and elsewhere. Their assistance is invaluable. We'd also like to thank those who have increased our readership by word of mouth. People telling people about BE and what it has to offer is probably our single greatest source of subscriptions.

Issue No.58

On Saturday, August 29, 1987, the editor of BE spoke before the American Rationalist Convention in Chicago, Illinois. We have decided to depart dramatically from our normal format by using the promised mid-point hiatus in the on-going revelation of Paul's inadequacies to give an edited and abridged account of what was said. A few comments that were not included but should have been are bracketed thus { }. The constraints of space usually account for the omissions (...). Because we intended to say a great deal in a limited amount of time, the speech was delivered in a considerably less formal manner than that normally exhibited by BE and words, but not meanings, have occasionally been altered. Oratorical flourishes of grandiloquent rhetoric were deemed less important than abundant and critical information.

SPEECH

Part One of Three Parts--I'd like to thank those who helped arrange my appearance here today, especially Eldon, who was very instrumental....Anyone who puts forth effort to arrange a speaking engagement is to be commended. (At this point some levity regarding several prominent figures and parachutes was attempted--Ed.)....My name is Dennis McKinsey, as some of you are aware...and my publication is entitled BIBLICAL ERRANCY. BE has a heading with a Bible split in half and that fits in very well with what the publication is all about. It's subcaptioned: "The only national periodical focusing on biblical errors, contradictions, and fallacies, while providing a hearing for apologists." BE is a six-page, single-spaced, monthly newsletter that will be starting its sixth year in January. I might briefly describe the sections contained therein. It begins with a commentary in which I simply talk about parts of the Bible I feel have many problems. Next, I'll sometimes submit a book review section...in which I will critique apologetic writings.... Then I nearly always have a section entitled DIALOGUE AND DEBATE in which people write to me and state why they think I don't have it together and I promptly proceed to show them why they are mistaken. It's an inseparable part of the newsletter. I'm very dialogue and debate oriented as you will probably notice if you read the publication. Then I have a section called LETTERS TO THE EDITOR in which people are basically writing to me who agree with our perspective. And finally, sometimes a note will appear at the end. For instance, one appeared two issues ago announcing the fact that I was going to be speaking here.

Usually when I speak before audiences I focus on problems and contradictions in the Bible and provide a lot of quotes. But since most of you are probably sympathetic with what I'm doing, what I'd really like to do is concentrate on how we should approach people who support the Book. Consequently, this talk will focus on strategy and tactics. The purpose of BE is to provide the other side because people in the United States are hearing an entirely one-sided presentation of this Book. That's obvious; that's clear. All you need to do is watch TV and hear the radio....

All of the pros and none of the cons dominate. That's also true in churches, Sunday schools, and other {forums}. Even when you talk with people individually, it's {apparent} they have been indoctrinated. People have a right to know; that's their prerogative. If they still want to believe the Book after having heard what I have to say, I have no objection. But they still have a right to hear the other side {and that's not being provided}. This is of great concern to me. You just can't have a nation of 240,000,000 people in which 10's of millions are hearing a totally one-sided presentation of anything as important as the Bible, because many people approach events out of that context. They look at abortion, education, divorce, and politics, virtually any topic you want to name, from a biblical perspective. So it's imperative that we know the Book, that we confront it head-on. I teach a kind of Sunday-School-in-Reverse by telling people all of the things they should have heard in Sunday school but didn't.

WHY BE CONCERNED

Some of you might ask, "Why be concerned?...{If people want to believe that superstitious medieval nonsense, let them. That's their mistake. Answering} this is a separate speech within itself and I'm not going into all the gory details, but clearly some of them need to be highlighted. If biblicists believe what they are told it's going to affect you and me. You may not think so but it will simply because of the number of people involved. They have voting power, if nothing else, which can't be ignored. Ignoring them isn't that easy. A certain mentality {with several prominent features} emanates from those believing in the Bible: (1) They'll contend, for instance, that a better world is coming so why work to improve this one. They won't be involved in the improvement of social conditions or participate in such projects as VISTA and the Job Corps.... Even when they donate money to missionary programs in foreign countries they are not really doing so because they are concerned about the welfare of others. The primary reason is to ingratiate themselves so that others will listen to the message they are bringing. This exposes a subtle, if not insidious, philosophy. (2) People who rely on the Bible are going to depend on prayer and outside forces rather than their own efforts, which will make them easy to manipulate, especially by anybody who comes along and says he is going to lead them to the promised land. (3) They won't oppose wars {with real conviction} and might even welcome them for several reasons. First, death is merely a sleep to most of them although some believe that when you are dead, you're dead and that's it. ...most Christians believe that when you are dead you are sleeping and waiting for the day you arise. Second, since you are going to a better world, why be concerned {about your fate in} this one. Third, since...you can't really be destroyed regardless of what happens on the battlefield, why be concerned with the nuclear threat or be engaged in anti-nuclear activity. And lastly, why be concerned since Armageddon is inevitable {according to the Bible}. (4) They will oppose sexual equality. How any woman can support the Bible is hard to understand. I recently encountered one who argued that she still has equal status with men despite many verses I cited clearly showing the opposite. Paul's position on women is very demeaning. (5) Of extreme importance is the fact that they are going to believe that giving to "God's representatives," i.e. Falwell, Swaggart, etc., is actually giving to God. Buying their way into heaven is the unspoken motive and accounts in large measure for the fact that many clergymen are very well off. (6) Believers are going to feel that anti-social behavior can be exonerated by bequeathing wealth to the church, by repentance, by confession, by accepting Jesus, and by fulfilling rituals such as going to church. For many of them church-going will be viewed as a cleansing of their record on Sunday for all their evil deeds committed during the week. {Then they can return to their old ways the following week.} And that's not meant to be humorous, since a negative influence is unmistakable. People will seriously feel that confession or something of that nature will purify their account. {Such concepts could easily foster anti-social behavior as could the belief that good deeds are irrelevant to salvation.} (7) They will tend to rely upon supposed experts to interpret the Bible for them which will cause them not to view events objectively and independently but through the eyes of those who find them easy to manipulate. (8) Feeling they have constant, eternal truths, they won't be open to change and new ideas.... Yet, anyone who knows anything about science knows there is nothing so permanent as change. (9) Because they believe in original sin they will view all people as inherently corrupt and associate with others on a basis of hypocrisy. The hypocrisy lies in the fact that while outwardly smiling and exhibiting the {expected} social graces, inwardly, they will look upon people as pieces of dung, to quote Martin Luther....and you can't work with a piece of dung except to change it {to fit your preference}. {Low self-esteem will be on the minds of many}. (10) They are going to be intolerant with all the accompanying war and conflict--the inevitable by-product of anybody with this type of philosophy. As is often discussed in freethought literature, they will feel they have the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. (11) As outlined in Matthew, they will view anti-social behavior as the result of things from within rather than without. If you have a bad person, conditions did not make him that way; it came from within. The problem I have with this is that if it's true then why does most of the criminal activity occur in the poorer sections of cities? What they are really saying is that those who live in the higher crime areas are inherently bad. Something is wrong with them, which I reject. Most anti-social behavior has more to do with the conditions in which people are raised than something innate. (12) Those who believe in the Bible are going to tend to look for a savior, somebody to lead them to the promised land. They are not going to rely upon their own wisdom and guidance. (13) And lastly, they will tend to view themselves as more worthy than others because they are supposedly the {people chosen by God to carry his message}. The Jews are a prime example. All one need do is read the OT to see that. These are only some of the reasons one could give for opposing biblicism.

TACTICS TO USE

Now I'd like to relate some tactics that I would use to oppose those who place reliance upon the Bible. As I said earlier, this speech will be tactically-oriented because you are probably sympathetic to what I am saying. What follows are those strategems that I use in my newsletter, on the radio, and on TV. I am especially fond of radio because it reaches a wide audience composed of many people who don't agree with me. I enjoy talking to people who are diametrically opposed to my position {because differences are clearly delineated}. I want to talk with the largest number possible and radio reaches many more than speaking engagements. I've been told by radio hosts that I'd be speaking to 100,000 or more at a time and I know I'm going to be affecting some. There is no way I couldn't. So what are some of the tactics I'd use. First, and this is very important, ask the right questions. That's absolutely crucial. In fact, I have it underlined. Even the order is important. If you talk with one of these people and your first two or three points aren't effective, he is going to turn you off, especially if they are easily answered. He'll lose interest and respect for you. For many of these people, when I come upon the scene, it's like holding the dike. Remember the Dutchman who stuck his finger in the dike. They feel that if I get through with one, the whole dam will go. So they will fight very hard in the early stages. I imagine Gordon has found that to be true, too, when he was on the radio. Second, focus on absolutes. In other words, concentrate on biblical statements that deal with words like "all," "each," "every," and "none." Absolutist type comments allow no escape by closing the door. All I need do is find exceptions, which isn't hard, and they're doomed. Third, there are some topics I would avoid when debating biblicists. I'm not saying they aren't important, because they are, as I've mentioned in BE. But I'd put them on the backburner for several reasons. Let me list some of them and then state why they are weak: The Babylonian influence on the formation of the Bible, the history of church atrocities and bad popes, pagan influences on early Christianity, the similarity of beliefs between Christianity and other religions..., dating the books of the Bible, determining who wrote what book when, historical disproofs of biblical history, OT references to murder, rape and incest, unless they are being advocated, the theological beliefs of our founding fathers, {the history of the Canon's formation}, and the Creation/Evolution controversy. I'm not saying avoid these entirely by any means, but I am saying I would {assign them a secondary status} for several reasons: (a) Biblicists won't recognize outside information of this nature and will say, "I don't care what information you have, if it says the Bible is false, it's wrong, and that's that." They will turn you off. You can pile up a mountain of scientific and historical data but they won't recognize it.... (b) If you go into historical matter, all they are going to say is that we have our historians too.... The problem with history is that it really comes down to whom you want to believe because none of us were there. Years ago I taught history in high school and students called me on some points. I'd say, "Somebody said it but I'll admit I wasn't there. You just have to take the historian's word for it." (c) The main reason I would avoid these is that they simply don't carry weight with the public. I'm not talking about college-educated audiences and people of some scholarship; I'm talking about the average citizen on the street whom I try to reach. They won't recognize them as topics of substance. So, I stay almost entirely within the Bible and simply compare one part of the Book with another. You will find as you proceed that the Bible is its own worst enemy. I don't have something outside the Bible telling me the Bible is false; I have the Bible telling me the Bible is false. {And that is much more difficult to minimize or avoid}. When something in Mark is telling me the exact opposite of what's in John, biblicists have a problem. They are much more likely to wrestle with {dilemmas} of this nature. That's the type of problem that will stay with them after they leave the radio. They'll mull that over for awhile. Fourth, and last, start with simple problems; they lose less people. I learned years ago as a teacher that the more simple things are the less people you lose. Focus on problems...that the average person who has had no in-depth training can relate to. Let me give some examples, especially for people who have read the Book. Num. 23:19 says God doesn't repent but Ex. 32:14 clearly says he does. Ex. 33:20 says no man has seen God's face and lived while in Gen. 32:30 a man says, "I have seen God face to face and my life is preserved." Solomon had 40,000 stalls for horses according to 1 Kings 4:26 while 2 Chron. 9:25 says 4,000 stalls. (Incidentally, you'll notice that I'm a chapter-and-verse man; I get right in there among them. I not only don't run from the Book but enjoy discussing it.) Second Sam. 10:18 has two contradictions in one verse. It says David slew the men of 700 chariots and 40,000 horsemen while 1 Chron. 19:18 says it was 7,000 chariots and 40,000 footmen. One of the big problems with the Bible is that it constantly repeats itself, especially the Gospels. Christians would have done well to have gone through and eliminated everything that was repetitious but clearly they didn't have much coordination going on. It's ideal for people such as myself.

What follows is a good example of a problem that stirs up things on-the-air. Rom. 3:23 says, "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." "All" have sinned and come short of the glory. All means all; that's what it says. But Gen. 6:9 says, "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations" and Job 1:1 and 1:8 say the same about Job. My question is: If these men were perfect, how can all be sinners...? The approach biblicists will usually employ is to play with the word "perfect." They'll contend Gen. 6:9 doesn't say Noah is perfect; it says he is complete. But that's in the newer versions which are trying to escape the problem by changing the wording. You'll find that Christians can't solve many problems so they will simply rewrite the script. A good example that comes immediately to mind is the kill or murder situation in the Ten Commandments. The latter tell people, "Thou shalt not kill," but this creates a problem for soldiers.... How could any army or police force be successful if its members believed "Thou shalt not kill"? So, many modern versions are changing "kill" to "murder" when the former is correct.

Sometimes I'll focus on problems that require little more than reason, logic, and common sense. Christians say, for instance, that you must have Jesus to be saved. That's an absolute rock-bottom requirement. Then what do you do about fetuses that die in the womb and babies that die in infancy; what do you do about people with low IQ's, the mentally ill, or those in the New World before the missionaries arrived.... Where are they going? They must go to hell. Why, because they didn't accept Jesus. But how could they? How, then, could God be just as related in Deut.

32:4?... I'm not talking about only 8 or 10 persons. I'm talking about millions. Imagine what the infant mortality rate is in some countries. How many foetuses die in the womb? Millions and millions.... According to fundamentalists foetuses are human beings; that's their argument. By saying people become human beings at conception rather than birth they have only compounded the injustice and their problem by adding millions of people. A lot of foetuses die in the 9 month interim.

Other problems are: Why are we punished for Adam's sin? That's his problem not ours. He ate of the forbidden fruit, we didn't.... Moreover, why are women punished for what Eve did? That's her problem. Where is the justice? If Adam was created by God, then Adam had to have been perfect. Then how could he have sinned? They say, "He had free will..." But I don't care how much free will he had, if he chose to sin then he wasn't perfect. If someone approaches me and says I'm perfect and five minutes later he sins, what better evidence do you need that he isn't perfect. He disproved his own point. Another problem is that we are punished for Adam's sin and Jesus is punished for ours. Supposedly, Jesus corrected the situation Adam created. Yet, we are told two wrongs don't make a right. We are being punished for Adam; that's wrong. Jesus is being punished for us; that's wrong. Yet, it's all corrected. Clearly two wrongs do make a right according to their theology. Not only that but Jesus supposedly died on the cross...for our sins and that's why many have a crucifix in their child's bedroom. Jesus stepped into our place. The problem I have with this is that no court in the land would accept such an arrangement... Suppose you were sentenced to die and your father voluntarily stepped in and said, "I'll sit in the electric chair for him." I don't know of a judge in the Nation who would agree. It has nothing to do with justice. It's a magnanimous gesture, but it has nothing to do with justice. {Any God who would accede to that just wants blood and doesn't care who dies as long as somebody pays.} When Jesus was on the Cross he said, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me." And he's supposedly our savior. Can you imagine a redeemer saying that. Those aren't the words of a savior but of a man who can think of a hundred places he'd rather be. He's not up there saving you or me; he's trying to save his own skin.

Another key problem is how God can talk to God.... When Jesus was on the Cross he said, "Forgive them Father, they know not what they do." I'll usually ask, To whom was he speaking," and they'll say, "He was talking to God." "But I thought he was God?" And they'll say, "Well, he is God." Then I'll say, "Now wait a minute. God is talking to God. How can God talk to God? That's two Gods." They'll say, "No, there is only one God but three persons." Then I'll say, "How can you have God out there somewhere talking to God here if there is only one God?" Incidentally, I've received calls and correspondence from several Moslems who agree with me. We have some Moslem subscribers and several have said they love BE not only because of its anti-Bible stance but also because most of my points are precisely the ones they have been making for centuries. The point about the Trinity is a good example. They consider the idea of the Trinity to be blasphemous; the whole idea that a man could be God is both heretical and absurd. One need only read Sura 5:72-75 in the Koran to see as much....

Another very important point with Christianity is the Resurrection. Paul said that without the Resurrection our faith is in vain. Christianity rises or falls on its existence. If Jesus didn't rise, there isn't any validity to Christianity. Even Christians will admit that. So all one need do is address the issue. (At this point all the problems associated with the Resurrection that were related in Issue #2 were repeated.)

I think the point that really strikes home is the next one. I have probably gotten more feedback on this one when I'm on-the-air as well as when I give speeches than any other. The Bible is God's word, that's what we always hear; the Bible is God's book. Let me read to you a list of the deeds that God committed somewhere in the Bible and I'd be glad to give chapter and verse {for purposes of substantiation}. He does all of the following. Please bear with me; it's rather lengthy. (At this point I read the list of God's deeds related in Issue #3 with some additions.) Now can you imagine anyone, any person, saying, "Yes that's my book, that represents me, that's the way I am," especially a supposedly perfect being. I can't think of an individual in history, including Hitler and Ghenghis Khan, with a worse record. In fact, to go even further...I can't think of one good, decent act that God committed in the entire OT such that you'd want to hug him around the neck, kiss him on the cheek, and say, "Good job, well done, I'm proud of you." The Devil clearly comes out of the Bible looking much better than God. You'd almost think the Bible was written by the Devil about God.

After about an hour or so of talking to people, ...they will usually start asking questions like: who am I, where did I come from, why am I doing this, what do I hope to gain and, of course, the ever present, am I saved. They want to get away from the Book, to literally close it up, and begin discussing me. And I'm not being facetious. That's sad because it shows the extent to which they have been indoctrinated. Even the most intelligent believers don't really have much of a case when confronted with the facts.

APOLOGETIC ARGUMENTS

Knowing the apologetic arguments before you debate believers is quite important because I occasionally run into people who are knowledgeable.... You have to know what you are talking about because some can handle themselves better than others. You need to know their arguments before entering discussions. What then are the points they usually use? The most common ones are: (1) You are taking verses out-of-context. If I've heard that once I've probably heard it a hundred times. I'm supposedly reading the Book wrong because I'm taking one verse out and not taking account of those around it. Not true! If you go to Proverbs, for example, there is no context. It's just a series of statements that are often unrelated. Not only that but if you read the verses, that's clearly what they say, verbatim. I'm taking nothing out-of-context. That's an unfair criticism. (2) Another argument is that I'm focusing on copyist errors. They'll say the Book has mistakes, granted, but that's because somebody copied the original manuscripts incorrectly. But how do we know that? We don't have copies of the original manuscripts. Even they will admit there are no copies of the original writings of the Bible. So anything we have, any volume (The KJV, the RSV, the NASB, etc.)...is really a book composed by a group of people who are looking at a collection of documents that purport to be accurate representations of the originals. The problem is that you have thousands of the documents and who knows which ones are correct. It's often decided by vote.... How do they know they are copyist errors?.... (3) Another argument is that I don't know Greek and Hebrew. They claim you have to know these languages.... I've never portrayed myself as a scholar in either; but I don't have to be. One conservative scholar admitted as much when he said you don't need to know Greek and Hebrew because with good commentaries, good lexicons, and so forth you can critique the Bible quite well.... I don't need to know these languages to ask questions like most of those already posed. {Moreover, scholars don't agree on how verses should be translated. I could be the world's greatest Greek/Hebrew scholar and still have other experts disagree with my interpretations. So who is correct? If scholars agreed there wouldn't be so many versions with major differences.} (4) Another one you will hear is the "natural man" argument. I'm the natural man. First Cor. 2:14 says, "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God for they are foolishness to him, neither can he know them for they are spiritually discerned." In other words, you have to get into a particular mind-set, a certain mentality,...and then you will see the Bible is true, which is really a circular position. All they really are saying is that if you accept it as true, you'll see it's true and if you see it's true you'll accept it as true.... (5) Another one that was mentioned earlier today and is often posed to me is Pascal's Wager--You'd better believe it; you never know, it might be true; don't take any chances; be on the safe side. In the first place, if I believed something for that reason and that reason alone, I'd be rather hypocritical, wouldn't you agree. Secondly, I'd have to believe thousands of religions at the same time just to be "on the safe side." And thirdly, how could I be a Moslem and a Christian simultaneously when one of them says that those who believe the Trinity have committed blasphemy and are condemned. A dichotomy is present. One excludes the other. So you have to take a gamble. All Christians are gambling whether they will admit it or not. And I'm not talking about just within denominations. I'm talking about being a Christian, period.... (6) Another defense I often confront is that I'm taking words too literally. "You have to realize there are symbolic meanings and metaphors"...is the common refrain. {This defense is usually employed when the common sense interpretation of the natural meaning of the words creates an obvious inaccuracy or absurdity}. Although valid in some instances, it's mostly employed for no other reason than to escape from a dilemma. {(7) A final argument I often confront is the assertion that I'm being petty. Of course, this is a matter of opinion. What is petty to one is a serious problem to another}....

(To Be Continued Next Month)

November 1987

Issue No. 59

Part Two of Three Parts--I spend a significant amount of time in Christian bookstores and libraries reading their apologetic works. One should prepare as would a general going into battle.... When you intend to fire something over, you have to know what could come back. {All teams in sports send out scouts to evaluate the opposition; businesses buy and analyze the opponents products}; the United States and the Soviet Union spy on one another constantly. They know they must discover what the other has before an exchange occurs. If you get on-the-air and somebody hits you with an argument you've never heard, you can be thrown off track and become unnerved to some extent. So I like to know their positions ahead of time. That is not to say you aren't going to lose some points. On a couple of occasions I have not fared too well. But I did my research and {was prepared the next time}. You have to study the matter and come back; you don't just quit. You "get your act together."

MY OVERALL STRATEGY

At this point I'd like to address something of great concern to me--the strategy we should follow in the freethought movement in general. First, proselytizing is a must. We have to go to them. Don't expect them to come to us because they are convinced they already have the truth. Why would they come to us? Why would they come to a meeting like this?... You must first show them what is wrong with what they have before they are going to accept or even be open to what we have. And this is certainly not being done. They have been indoctrinated to believe that we are {satanic} agents...so they are not going to come to us. That's one of the problems you have in even trying to talk to these people. You can't build a parallel mountain...and say, "Look at my mountain; isn't it better than your mountain. Why don't you climb my mountain instead of going up yours." You haven't shown them what's wrong with their mountain. And I think in nearly every instance this is what we have been doing. {Freethought groups have only been picking up people who have rejected religion in general and the Bible in particular for their own personal reasons}. New adherents have not come over because they were persuaded or shown the error of their ways by others. {All too often freethought organizations have been little more than psychological support groups providing a service to intellectuals and others of similar persuasion comparable to that rendered former fundamentalists by Fundamentalists Anonymous.} Second, you must start re-educating from the beginning. You must tell them what they should have heard but didn't, i.e., teach a Sunday-School-in-Reverse. Third, you must build bridges, not walls. No put-downs. Don't do anything that will damage their self-image or self-respect. The idea is to persuade and convert not embark upon an ego trip. To demean, degrade, or embarrass them is not going to create empathy. Fourth, avoid humor. Generally I don't employ jokes, not because I'm not a lover of humor, but because if you do they are going to assume you don't understand because you haven't thought seriously enough about the topic. If you thought about it more deeply, you'd see it's true. So I give the impression I'm very serious, which is nearly always true anyway, and I'm trying as hard as I can to understand what I'm hearing.... Fifth, don't use profanity and dress decently. Do nothing that would confirm the image they have been given of the Bible's opponents. Sixth, return again and again to the topic, give them time to think about your points and return later with more problems. One of the difficulties I have is that members of the freethought movement will say, "I met a Christian, presented many of my best arguments, and, yet, he ignored everything and just walked away." My response is, "You must be kidding? You sought to convert somebody in 30 minutes from beliefs they have held for 30 years. That's not the real world, my friend." You must get that person out of what he was put in the same way he was put in it. How was he put in it? By going to Sunday school and church week after week after week.... You must give him some information, let him think about it; give him some more, let him think about it, etc. That's why I'd like to have some radio and TV programs that appear week after week, rather than going on-the-air once, hitting them with some concepts, and walking off. Seventh, you must ooze people away from the Bible. It's a long slow, gradual process of many revelations. {I dare say that's how all of us arrived at where we are today. None of us changed overnight.} Eighth, and very important, you must get into the Bible. You have to know the Book; that's crucial. A lot of studying is involved. You can't stand at a distance and just throw rocks. You also must assume that there are such things as the Resurrection, Salvation, the Messiah, Judgment Day, etc. for purposes of discussion in order to wean them from such beliefs. You shouldn't say, for instance, that the Resurrection is nonsense and that when you are dead you're dead and that's that, or that salvation is a myth and I don't want to talk about it, because that will lead nowhere. You must show why there are logical problems with each. Ninth, put vague topics on the backburner. And I can't think of one that's vaguer than eschatology.... They love to talk about what happens after you die and where the world is going. There is quite a stir in Christian circles today about eschatology and many books are coming out in that regard.... The subject is very imprecise and I can't think of two books in the Bible that are more nebulous than Daniel and Revelation.... Even Martin Luther rejected the latter...because, as he said, you don't even know what it is saying and Christ and the Holy Spirit aren't in it. So you must know when you are entering an area that can be symbolized or spiritualized as they involve subjects with escape hatches and back doors. Eschatology is one of the best. It has a multitude of fire escapes. And tenth, don't spend time debating atheism. When I go on-the-air the first question I'm usually asked is: Are you an atheist? The problem with this is that if I say yes, what's going to happen? I'm going to spend the rest of the program defending atheism and we are not even going to get into the Bible. Callers will start asking questions like: "How do you explain the design in the world....etc?" They will resurrect all the arguments we have heard many times before.... I won't be exposing their ideas; instead, they are going to be attacking mine. I'm not going to be on the offensive; they will be. I want to be on the offensive because that's where you succeed; you don't prevail on the defensive. So I constantly return to their beliefs, especially since that's what we are there to discuss anyway. Another problem with discussing atheism is that the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. If somebody tells me there is a God, I don't say there is or there isn't. What I do say is, "Prove it; you brought up the subject." If he says, "Prove there isn't one," that would be analogous to somebody telling me people live inside the planet Jupiter...and saying, "If I doubt it's true, prove they don't." What he is really saying is that until I prove they don't live there, they do, in fact, live there. That makes it true. As I said, the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. He brought up the subject so he must prove it. If we work on the theory that something is true unless I can disprove it, then every crackpot, weirdo, hair-brained, crazy idea is valid until I can disprove them. How am I going to prove somebody does not live inside the planet Jupiter? I can't prove they are imaginary but, then, I'm under no obligation to do so. He, on the other hand, is required to prove they do. That's the essence of science. Assertions must be {demonstrable and} independently verifiable by different people.

I try to focus on pre-tested questions and usually have a certain number I feel really register. When I go on-the-air they are the ones I try to present. After giving my opening arguments on the radio, I usually discuss what interests callers because they usually have topics that "turn them on." You shouldn't talk about what strikes your fancy when it's of little interest to others. You have to develop a sense of what is activating the audience. As in teaching, you wouldn't teach first-graders the way you would seniors. {Both methods and content would vary dramatically.} And it's the same with the Bible. You shouldn't make the same type of approach to every group. You must be able to empathize and know when you are hitting home.... You must also realize that it's more than a debate with fundamentalists because people are on a broad spectrum in this country. They range all the way from fundamentalists to us and they are constantly evolving. Many points you'd make to liberals won't hold weight with conservatives and vice versa. I talk primarily to fundamentalists because I feel that affects everybody on the spectrum. If I show what is wrong with the Bible, everyone is influenced to some degree. They are all going to tend to move to the religious left. But I'd err if I made arguments only to the liberals. The latter won't disagree with you about many topics such as the Creation issue. They say the six days of creation are not referring to {literal} days, but each day represents millions of years. They symbolize the day. And Jonah wasn't swallowed by a whale or fish. {That's mythology}.... Many of them reject almost as many things of this nature as we do. They don't accept many of the miracles.... So you are not going to make a case with them when you oppose miracles. They will support you. The argument I make with them is: "Wait a minute! You don't believe in Noah and the Flood; you don't believe Lot's wife turned into a pillar of salt; you don't believe Jonah was swallowed by a whale; {you don't believe Adam and Eve were real people}? Then you don't believe in Jesus because Jesus said those happened. If you say those did not occur, then you are saying Jesus is a liar and you're no Christian. That's a valid criticism fundamentalists use against the liberals. I would agree with the conservatives on that point.... {Another reason for zeroing-in on the conservatives is that they are our most vocal opponents. Moreover, liberals are so divergent in their views that refutation of some leaves most unscathed.}

Knowing whom to talk to is very important. When I debate a hardened fundamentalist like Falwell or {Swaggart}, I know I'm not going to convert him. We must be realistic. He isn't going to convert me and I'm not going to change him. But while conversing with {biblicists} I have an audience that is reasonably open-minded, that broad spectrum I referred to earlier. By showing what's wrong with his views, I am going to influence listeners. I'm not interested in affecting him; I'm interested in showing what's wrong with what he believes in order to influence others. {My main focus is on the audience}. So I will usually talk to youth, or the hard core when I know other people less firm in their views, such as youngsters, are listening.

Another problem I find with people in the freethought movement is that they are too satisfied with fending people off. Christians will approach them at the door, for example, start a conversation, donate some literature,...and walk away. The freethought person will then think, "Whew, I got out of that one; he didn't change me any; I won that exchange." Oh no you didn't, you lost! You lost because their numbers are far greater than ours and we can only gain by increasing our supporters and reducing theirs. So you have to engage that person and bring him over to your side. That's a victory. Fending him off, merely keeping him from converting you, is not victory but defeat. With the numbers what they are, we are in trouble. I think of an encounter with Christians as I would a court trial. The Bible is the defendant; the apologist is the defense lawyer; I'm the prosecutor; the moderator of the program is the judge and the audience is the jury. That's the way I proceed. Sometimes you'll have trouble on-the-air...if you don't have a neutral host. You have to watch the media people; some are tricky. Sometimes, for instance, they will want to know my points ahead of time. They will ask me, "What are you going to ask the Christian you are going to engage?" That's a silly question. That's comparable to asking the prosecutor before the trial what he is going to ask the defendant. I'm not going to tell him anything. My immediate reaction is, "I'll tell you what I'm going to ask if you will tell me what he is going to answer. Then he'll be back to square one. He'll have to know what my next question is going to be. I'd rather the host not pick the topics because they might channel the discussion, especially unsympathetic people, to where the Bible is not so vulnerable. I know where I feel it's weakest and that's where I want to go. Unsympathetic hosts will also often interrupt after my first point. That's another tactic that wouldn't be allowed in a court-of-law. A prosecutor is allowed to present his case; he's entitled to an uninterrupted 10 to 15 minute presentation, at least. Then, if people want to call in and...tell me where I'm wrong, I have no objection. But at least let me get my case out. Many don't even allow that. You present one point and they are immediately on top of you.... Reminds me of the TV program "Crossfire".... I tape record all of my appearances and will explain why later. (At this point I played an excerpt from one of my radio appearances to give some idea of what media confrontations entail).... That's where people are and that's what you must confront.

I might mention some other points about my radio appearances. When I go on the air I usually submit several requests to the host. First, I'd like to have a tape of my appearance. Second, I would like to put my name, address, and phone number out over the air. Third, I'd like to tell people that a free sample will be provided to anyone who writes. Fourth, I'd like to pick the opening questions. And lastly, I'd like to know if someone is going to be on as my opponent. Recently I went on a California station and wasn't told I would be debating the founder of the Pensacola Bible Institute until 5 minutes before air time.... I had already read one of his books and would like to have known he was going to be on so I could have talked to him about it.... One of the few Christian programs in the United States that has any intellectual merit is the John Ankerberg TV Show. The program is one-sided in orientation, of course, but Ankerberg does bring on people who present another point of view. He recently had Paul Kurtz,...the editor of Free Inquiry, for example.... When you go on such a program...you should not debate two people simultaneously. Paul was sitting on the stage debating a Christian professor...while he was also confronting Ankerberg who was out in the audience. That's two on one and two on one means you're allocated one-third of the time,...if everyone speaks the same amount. Winning is very difficult when your opponents have 2/3's and you receive 1/3 of anything. {In addition, nearly all of the audience was against Paul.} If I went on I'd be willing to engage anybody, {regardless of whom they chose}, but I would not debate half the {auditorium} simultaneously. Moreover, throughout most of the program Paul was on the defensive answering questions. They didn't debate the Bible {or the biblicists' perspective} as much as they debated humanism and whether or not it was a religion.... Paul was kind of sand-bagged.

WHAT'S NEEDED?

Moving on to the last part of my speech the question becomes, "What's Needed?" {This is of tremendous importance and merits special emphasis}. I think we need a national organization of knowledgeable experts to create literature, {give speeches}, and appear on the media before audiences. It should be a think-tank composed of people who know the book as well as believers with, if possible, a full-time paid staff. A tremendous amount of study and research are going to be required. As was stated in the introductory pamphlet announcing this convention, I'm battling the Bible as a force of one and that's the way I feel.... The sad part is that Christians already have these organizations. The Christian Research Institute, the Research and Education Foundation, and the John Ankerberg Show, to name only a few, are all set up for one basic purpose--to eradicate the opposition, figuratively speaking, and gain converts. Generally they concentrate on the cults (Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses, Christian Scientists) and similar groups because...millions of people are involved. But if our organizations and numbers grew to such an extent that we became a real threat they would shift their focus and a lot more information would come out in opposition to us. A good example is a book that emerged recently entitled, The New Atheism, which attacked me, Gordon Stein, Paul Kurtz, MM O'Hair and some other advocates of freethought. Gordon wrote a response {in The American Rationalist}. Biblicists pay people to attack the opposition and we need {point men also}. We need institutes, courses, seminars, and relevant literature. This will probably sound immodest, but if you know {the Bible} and every issue of BE, I feel you will be well-prepared to confront the opposition. I feel that BE is the most comprehensive refutation of the Bible in the English-speaking world {and possibly the entire world}. At least that's what I hope to {possess eventually}. Other people have produced similar information but I can't think of anybody, including Ingersoll and Paine, who has created anything remotely approaching the volume of BE. A lot of time and energy is needed; sticktuitiveness is a must. It's going to be a long, protracted struggle with no place for a short attention span or sunshine patriots. Actually, it's going to be more like Valley Forge in the winter. {But it's still very satisfying and provides a strong sense of accomplishment. }

{After hearing all this}, many of you are no doubt thinking, "You mean I have to do all that; you mean I have to read, study, research, and so forth?" No, not necessarily. Suppose you don't really want to become knowledgeable to that degree in the Bible. Some people will admit that they just can't bring themselves to read it, especially the King James Version which is written in Elizabethan English with all those "thee's," "thou's," and "begat's." To them it's a drag and frankly I'm sympathetic. I can think of a hundred books I'd rather read than the Bible. It's not very interesting and the plot is often thin. In many places it's {repetitious} and about as exciting as reading a dictionary. But it has to be read. There is simply no way to avoid the Book because of its numerous supporters. Suppose you just can't bring yourself to study the thing.... Then, there are other activities you can engage in: (a) Call {colleges and other institutions} to arrange appearances {for our spokesmen}. (b) Call radio stations that have Christians on and say something like, "Don't you feel an obligation to provide balance and the other side down there? I'm tired of hearing about the 'merits' of religion and the Bible." That's when our panel of experts could come into play.... I'd like to have people other than myself doing this. (c) Provide funds and other physical services such as lodging and transportation. (d) Circulate public access tapes. (e) Ask 8 to 10 well-chosen questions. (f) Arrange speaking engagements. (g) Distribute anti-Bible literature at conventions and assemblies. (h) Send letters to the editors of newspapers. (i) And, re-educate those who come to your door. Don't shew them away.... Don't let Mormons and Jehovah's Witnesses escape. {At our home they are invited in and} happily seated. After about 45 minutes, though, they nearly always {seek sanctuary}. As they start for the door...I usually suggest we meet again. Although they usually agree to a repeat engagement, it rarely occurs.

The organization I seek needs to meet periodically {so members can} compare notes on what works and what doesn't. That's why I record every appearance. The whole encounter resembles a football game. You go down to the locker room and replay the tapes to see how you did and what needs to be changed. Then you go out, play another game, come back, and view your tapes again.... Self-criticism is a must. You must recognize the subtle Christian and Jewish influences all of us carry. Most freethought people come from religious backgrounds and most of them have not left their past as much as they think. Reservations are dwelling within. A woman in Columbus, Ohio recently told me...she was afraid she would fall back into the Christian miasma if she started talking to biblicists. She was afraid of backsliding...

One must expect opposition, {insidious and surreptitious censorship}, and counterattacks. After appearing on the radio I'm often told a return engagement is a {distinct} possibility but they rarely occur because of opposition from clergymen, station management, sponsors, hosts, and other influential figures. I've had people admit as much when I called. Free speech is not as prominent as we are led to believe and this becomes more obvious as your presentation becomes stronger, {more accurate, more poignant, and more relevant}. Although I'm sometimes brought on as a novelty act, they soon learn they have {a problem of the first magnitude} on their hands. It's by no means hopeless, however, because there is a broad spectrum of believers in varying stages of evolution and open-mindedness.

If you wish to research these matters you can adopt my technique. Go to a bookstore and buy the Layman's Parallel Bible which has four versions--the KJ, the RS, the Modern Language, and the Living Bible {and then proceed as follows}. First, read the KJ; if you can't understand it, read the RS; it's newer and not quite as difficult; if you still don't understand the text, then read the Modern Language, and if you still don't understand, read the Living Bible. It's a pathetic paraphrase with many inaccuracies but very easy to read.... Go through the entire Bible this way. Next I'd buy Strong's Exhaustive Concordance because you must have some kind of index.... It will tell you every word in the Bible and its location. All you have to do is remember any word in any verse and the book will locate every verse in which it appears.... Another thing you will need is an historical atlas of the OT, such as Hammond's or Westminster's, to trace, for instance, the migration of the Israelites at the time of the Exodus. Buy a red pen and do a lot of marking in your Bible of contradictions and other problems. I bought a thin pen and my Book looks like I'm working in the red it's so marked up. {Internal problems are noted on the pages to the left and external problems are noted on pages to the right}. Avoid Christian commentaries. I wouldn't go out {initially} and ask Christians what they think about the Bible {or read their opinions on it. You are intelligent enough to read the Book as you see it}. Don't let them influence you as to what it should say or what they think it says. Just read it cold, yourself. Go to Christian meetings and ask questions. I was recently in a Seventh-Day Adventist Seminar on the Books of Daniel and Revelation and everyone else present was of a fundamentalist mentality. I asked questions every week.... And after...about the 4th or 5th week, you could have heard a feather drop when I was asking a question because they were pretty sure something was going to come out of my mouth they hadn't considered or didn't want to hear. The minister teaching the course tried to get me to join his church and told me several times privately that the church would send me to an educational setting for training where they would pay all expenses if I would accept Jesus. They couldn't refute me so they were trying to co-opt me. They will do that sort of thing; {you can be sure}. I will go to anything Christians sponsor AS LONG AS I CAN ASK QUESTIONS THROUGHOUT. {I almost never listen to one-sided sermons}.... The only strategy I can think of that would be more effective than mine is force... But I can't do that nor would I recommend it.... {Of course, if I could determine the education of people from the moment of birth, that would also be decisive.}

In conclusion, if you really delve into the Bible you will see it's a maze, a mass, a veritable labyrinth of contradictions, inconsistencies, inaccuracies, poor math, bad science, erroneous geography, false prophecies, immoral comments, and a multitude of other problems too numerous to mention. It may be somebody's word but it certainly isn't the product of a perfect, divine being. The Bible has more holes in it than a backdoor screen. In a society dominated by the Book's influence I think all of us in the freethought movement should do what Adam and Eve did when they were expelled from the Garden of Eden. They went out and raised Cain. Thank you for being so attentive.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

#1 If you picked one contradiction as the best and simplest to use, what would it be?

ANS: Good question. I would probably use one of those that has already been mentioned. Why are we being punished for Adam's sin; how could Noah and Job be perfect if all have sinned, and {how could deceased fetuses and infants be saved if you must accept Jesus? However, what I do in BE is present nearly all of them and let people pick what they feel are the best. The ones I mentioned usually cause the greatest effect as far as I'm concerned. They are the ones that seem to generate the greatest interest.... Incidentally, I might say that the approach I'm taking is hard. I don't deny that at all. There is a lot of work involved and frankly I don't know many people willing to do what I'm doing. For instance, I listen to tapes on the NIV version of the Bible as I drive my car.... I don't do it very often as it does get old, but it is quite educational. As I listen I'll notice points I didn't see before, take notes, and look them up later at home. You also must read apologetic literature and that entails getting in among them. Usually we want to stay away from biblicists whenever possible, as if they had a contagious disease. Many think, "I don't want to get among those people, {I might succumb to their siren's song.}" But it must be done.

Paul--The Deceptive Disciple (Part Four of a Six-Part Series)--With this month's commentary we resume the discussion of Paul's inadequacies that was last addressed in the September issue. As was stated in the July issue Paul's failings lie within 5 major categories: contradictions, misquotations, non-quotes, misinterpretations, and ill-conceived comments. As of now we have completed our enumeration of the contradictions and can proceed to the second category--misquotations. Almost no bounds exist with respect to Paul's propensity to extract from the OT the meanings he desires. (69) In 1 Cor. 3:20 (...For it is written....The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain") Paul misquoted Psalm 94:11 ("The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity"). Surely not all men are wise. Wisdom and men aren't equal. (70) In Rom. 15:12 ("And again, Isaiah saith, There shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles; in him shall the Gentiles trust") Paul misquoted Isa. 11:10 ("And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek..."). (a) Isaiah does not say he shall reign or rule over the Gentiles. It merely states that the root of Jesse will act as a standard or banner for the people. (b) Isaiah refers to "it" not "him." (71) In 1 Cor. 2:9 ("But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him") he misquoted Isa. 64:4 RSV ("From of old no one has heard or perceived by the ear, no eye has seen a God besides thee, who works for those who wait for him"). (a) Nowhere in Isa. 64:4 does it say, "neither have entered into the heart of man." (b) Paul states, "the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Yet, Isaiah 64:4 does not state or even imply that there will be a future reward for those that love God. It merely states that God will work for those who wait for him. (c) Isa. 64:4 says, "no eye has seen a God besides thee," which Paul omits. (72) In Eph. 4:8 ("Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men") Paul misquoted Psalm 68:18 ("Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive: thou hast received gifts for men...") (a) Psalm 68:18 says "received gifts" not "gave gifts." (b) It also says "thou" not "he." (c) Jesus never led captivity captive, led others to a high mount, or gave gifts unto men. (d) There is a big difference between "giving gifts to men" and "receiving gifts for men." (73) In Rom. 3:4 ("...as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged") Paul misquoted Psalm 51:4 ("...that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest"). (a) Psalm 51:4 says "judgest" not "art judged." (b) Psalm 51:4 also says "and be clear" or "blameless," not "and mightest overcome" or "prevail." (74) In Rom. 15:21 ("But as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand") Paul misquoted and misapplied Isa. 52:15 ("...the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they have not heard shall they consider"). (a) Isaiah 52:15 says nothing about "he was not spoken of"; it says "that which had not been told them." It says "that," not "he." (b) "They that have not heard shall understand" is not the same as "that which they have not heard shall they consider." Because something is considered does not mean it is understood. (75) In Heb. 10:7 ("Then said I, Lo I come [in the volume of the book it is written of me] to do thy will, O God") Paul distorted Psalm 40:7-8 ("Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me. I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart"). He left out the last phrase ("thy law is within my heart") which shows God's will is the law. If Paul had quoted Psalms correctly he would have been stressing the importance of upholding the Old Law. Since Paul never stressed the Old Law, he understandably left out the last verse. (76) In 1 Cor. 15:54-55 ("...then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?). Paul misquoted Isa. 25:8 RSV ("He will swallow up death forever") and Hosea 13:14 ("...O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction"). (a) Isaiah says death will be swallowed up "forever" not "in victory." (b) Hosea says "thy plagues" not "thy sting." (c) "Hosea was not written in interrogatory form. (d) Hosea says "thy destruction" not "thy victory." It is difficult to see how Paul's words could be accurately derived from Isaiah and Hosea. (77) In Heb. 10:36-37 ("...ye might receive thy promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry") Paul perverted Hab. 2:3 ("For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry"). (a) Habbakuk says nothing about "he." The "it" in the verse is a vision, not Jesus. Hab. is referring to the maturation of a vision he has. The "it" referred to has nothing to do with the arrival of any individual. (b) Where in the OT, esp. Hab., did God promise "he will come and not tarry?" (78) In Rom. 11:9-10 ("Let their table be made a snare, and a trap and a stumblingblock, and a recompense unto them: let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back alway") Paul misstated Psalm 69:22-23 ("Let their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap. Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake"). The Psalmist said nothing about a "stumblingblock," a "recompense," or "bowing down their back alway." (79) In Rom. 11:26-27 ("And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, For this is the covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins") Paul misquoted and misused Isaiah 59:20-21 ("And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord..."). (a) Isaiah 59:20 says "to Zion," not "out of" Zion. (b) Isaiah says the Redeemer shall come "unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob." It does not say the Deliverer "shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." In other words, he will come to those who turned from transgression on their own volition. It does not say he will turn away ungodliness. (c) Moreover, "when I shall take away their sins" is not in Isaiah 59. Paul created that out of nothing. (d) Nowhere does Isaiah use the word "saved" or "salvation" as Paul uses it. (80) In Rom. 9:25-26 ("as he saith also in Hosea, I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her beloved, which was not beloved. And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there shall they be called the children of the living God") Paul misquoted and misused Hosea 2:23 ("...and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God") and Hosea 1:10 ("...and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God"). (a) Hosea 1:10 is speaking only of Jews as Hosea 1:11 ("Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together") shows. It is not referring to Gentiles and does not justify spreading the word to Gentiles. (b) "and her beloved, which was not beloved" is not in Hosea. Paul created the words. (c) Hosea 2:23 says, "and they shall say, Thou art my God," which Paul conveniently left out of his quote since millions of Gentiles have clearly not made such a statement. (81) In Rom. 10:6-8 ("But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? [that is, to bring Christ down from above] or, who shall descend into the deep? [that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead]. But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach...."), Paul mutilated Deut. 30:12-14 ("It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it? But the word is very nigh unto thee in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it"). (a) The latter is only saying that his (Moses--Ed.) commandments are easy to obtain. They are not far off but as close as one's heart or mouth. Deut. says nothing about "faith." (b) It refers to seeking "it" and doing "it," not seeking "him" or doing "him." (c) It does not even imply Christ or Jesus, let alone mention him. (d) Deut. is referring to Penitence and is not about believing on or bringing down Jesus from heaven or up from the dead. (e) Deut. is saying that God wills us to repent of sin and that you may know when you have sinned. You have only to look at his law which is very close by. (82) In Heb. 10:16-17 ("This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more") Paul misquoted and misapplied Jer. 31:33-34 ("...but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts,...for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more"). (a) The New Covenant referred to in Jer. 31:31 is not that of Jesus' New Testament but a reaffirmation with Israel of the importance of following the Old Law. Jer. 31:33 clearly states that God's law (my law) will be put in them. (b) Jer. says the law will be written in their hearts, not their minds and God's law will be put in their inward parts, not their hearts. "And in their minds will I write them" does not appear in Jer. (83) In Rom. 9:33 ("As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion a stumblingstone and rock of offence: and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed") Paul misquoted Isa. 28:16 ("Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste"). (a) Isaiah says nothing about "on him" or "being ashamed." (b) Isaiah says God will lay a precious corner stone, a sure foundation, not a stumbling stone or rock of offence. (c) True, Isa. 8:14 ("And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel...") speaks of a stumbling stone and a rock of offense, but it is speaking of God himself. Paul deceptively combined two unrelated verses and altered the text in the process. (84) And finally, Heb. 12:20 is a misconstruction of Ex. 19:12-13 and Heb. 4:3 is a perversion of Psalm 95:11.

Besides contradictions and misquotations, Paul also engaged in quoting non-existent OT statements--nonquotes. (85) "For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed" (Rom. 10:11). No such statement exists in scripture. Isa. 28:16, Jer. 17:7, and Joel 2:32 simply don't apply. (86) "For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them" (Rom. 10:5). Although Paul is quoting Lev. 18:5, he couldn't be quoting Moses since Moses didn't write the Pentateuch. (See: Moses and the Pentateuch in Issues 19 and 20). (87) Second Tim. 3:8 ("Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses...") refers to two people who were never mentioned in the OT and there is no evidence they are the Pharaoh's sorcerers in Ex. 7:11. (88) Contrary to 1 Tim. 1:18 ("This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee..."), there are no OT prophecies pertaining to, or referring to, Timothy. (89) Eph. 5:14 ("Therefore it is said, Awake, O sleeper, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give you light") is nowhere to be found in the OT. Isa. 60:1 and 26:19 are not applicable. (90) Contrary to 1 Cor. 15:7 ("After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles") no gospel says James saw Jesus. (91) And finally, contrary to Heb. 9:3-4 ("And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all; which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant,...wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant...."), 2 Chron. 5:10, Deut. 10:2, 5, and Ex. 25:16 show there is nothing in the OT about a golden pot or Aaron's rod being put in the ark. {This listing of nonquotes will conclude next month.}

CONCLUSION OF THE AM. RAT. CONV. SPEECH

#2 Why is so much of the focus on Christianity? Is it because it's statistically the majority religion on the planet?

ANS: The reason I'm concerned is because it represents the majority in this country. If the Koran were the main religious book in the U.S., I'd focus on it.... You must know the Bible because when you talk to these people they are going to retreat into it. If you ask them how they know God exists, they are going to say, "Because the Bible says so." If you say, "Prove God exists;" many will say, "I don't have to; the Bible says he does." Now you have to prove the Bible is not to be believed, which means you must get into the Book and go over each point. {Don't forget their motto: The Bible says it; I believe it, and that settles it.} As long as they put credence in the Book, any arguments you make to the contrary are not going to carry sufficient weight....

#3 What is the origin of the Bible?

ANS: Answering that is a speech within itself. Let me attempt a quick summation. When you go into a bookstore and ask for a copy of the Bible, they don't give you a copy of the Bible; they give you a version. But you say, "I don't want a version; I don't want the King James, the Revised Standard, the New American Standard or the Living Bible. I want a copy of the Bible. But they can't give you that as there is no such animal. What they will produce is a book written by a group of people who claim to have manuscripts that are accurate copies of the originals--the autographs. But how do we know which are correct, assuming the originals ever existed? There are thousands of copies. Scholars picked and pulled from these different manuscripts and compiled or composed books which are portrayed as accurate versions of the originals. That's what you are reading.

In addition, there are the problems associated with how the Bible was put together initially. The catholic version has more books within the Bible than the protestant King James. During many councils and conferences in the 200 to 600 A.D. period scholars basically voted on the books to be accepted and rejected. I have a list in my notes of many of the books that {never made the canon's list}.... Christians don't want you to know this because it shows the Bible was composed by people and not by God. It was an expedient document put together by individuals pushing and pulling like typical politicians.... {Evidence shows the Book is not inspired.}

#4 If they admit a copyist error, how can they continue the discussion?

ANS: They admit there is a copyist error but contend the original writings are perfect. Most don't defend an inerrant King James.... Evangelists and other fundamentalists will concede errors in the King James. That isn't what you are debating.... They say it's the original writings which are accurate, the ones written approximately 2,000 years ago.... They are the ones without error. If you have a book today with mistakes in it, that's because somebody didn't copy correctly.... But we don't have the original autographs; all we have are a lot of writings purporting to be accurate representations of the original writings which don't exist.... Does that sound like a book composed by God?.... How do you know what is a copyist mistake and what isn't? That's their problem.... When they say it's a copyist mistake, they are obligated to provide evidence.... {And how do you know what's true if you start admitting certain parts are false? Where do you draw the line? That's a major issue that looms over the entire Book. That's why many hold the line so fervently}.

#5 Doesn't this come down to empirical, logical, rational thinking versus irrational faith and an emotional need to hold on to something absolute? Aren't they going to believe no matter what you say?....

ANS: {As I said earlier}, you must realize the spectrum of believers is very wide. You can't use a broad brush to cover all Christians. Putting them all in the same bag is preposterous.... True, you have people on the fringe with whom conversation is futile. I wouldn't waste my time on them. I've talked to some biblicists and realized I might as well have been talking to a stone. There's no reaching them. Trying to present a rational argument to an irrational mind is an exercise in futility. Didn't the psychiatrist, Jung, say, {"I have treated many hundreds of patients. Among those over 35 there has not been one whose problem in the last resort was not that of finding a religious outlook on life."} Religion is a mental problem and it's reflected in their logic and rationalizing. Making a logical case to an illogical mind is a waste of time. But that isn't true of a lot of Christians, especially those who are more intelligent. If you present a case, many will listen. I'm not saying they will quickly change. As I said earlier, you must present some evidence and come back later and present some more repeatedly. You can't convert them in 20 minutes, but you can reach a lot of people by multiple contacts. I think you are saying they all fit your mould while many I talk to do not. I see many whom you can reach.... It relates to what I said about talking to Falwell. I know I'm not going to convert him to anything, but I can sure shake-up his followers.... (At this point my time was exhausted and the program was concluded.)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #230 from JW of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. In Issue #3, where you respond to letter #3, you give 7 verses where God created evil. A verse which you did not list, but is directly on point is Isa. 45:7 KJV ("I form the light and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things"). Keep up the good work and keep thinking about putting it all in a book.

Editor's Response to Letter #230

Dear JW. Although I could have referred to this verse, it was omitted because apologists claim that just as light is the opposite of darkness, war or confusion, not evil, is the opposite of peace. So they contend the word "evil" means disruption rather than immorality. Rather than debate the issue I opted for verses less open to dispute.

Letter #231 from CWL of Reynoldsburg, Ohio

Dear Dennis. The other day a Jehovah's Witness knocked on our door (alone, surprisingly) and I invited him inside. I didn't try to overpower him in one visit and so I just politely asked him to resolve the Mary Magdalene problem in the four gospels. He left and didn't come back for about two weeks. His answer or solution was very poor. However, he returned and continued his evangelizing by supplying me with You Can Live Forever in Paradise on Earth to show me the "light."

Your periodical is a valuable aid in dissuading such individuals from their beliefs. However, I would like to ask if you have a considerable number of biblical verses that contradict the basic tenets or interpretations of Jehovah's Witnesses in particular. I would definitely appreciate receiving such information by return mail. What I am pointing out is that your periodical has organized the Bible's contradictions in a certain manner. However, the contradictions are not organized so as to contradict the basic tenets of any particular fundamentalist religion, e.g. Jehovah's Witnesses and Baptists. Perhaps, as your periodical continues its publication, you will see fit to present biblical contradictions in a format that is aimed at one particular group or another.

Editor's Response to Letter #231

Dear CWL. I'm glad to see you confronted the JW on his own turf and didn't avoid a dialogue. When they gave me the book you mentioned I read and critiqued it from cover to cover. Some of the information was useable. As far as outlining problems in such a manner as to oppose particular groups is concerned, I intend to do so someday but other activities are of greater concern. Except for matters pertaining to eschatology, the Trinity, and a few other key areas, most of the basic beliefs of the Witnesses are in agreement with those of orthodox Christianity. So I'd direct the same points to them that have been made to other biblicists.

Letter #232 from BF of Louisa, Kentucky

Dear Dennis. A friend referred me to Jer. 8:8 RSV ("How can you say, We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us? But, behold, the false pen of the scribes has made it into a lie"). Isn't this a golden test acknowledging biblical errancy straight from the horse's mouth? Maybe you've cited it often before but I haven't seen it in BE's pages?....

Editor's Response to Letter #232

Dear BF. I've never used this verse in BE because how one turns a law into a lie is somewhat unclear.

Letter #233 from Mark Potts, Wilson Hall, Rm. 203, NSU, Tahlequah, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. I think I can answer your question, "What happens to people who never hear about Jesus?" According to 2 Thess. 1:7-9, those "that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" will be condemned. Because this passage is unambiguous and allows no exceptions, modern Japanese who have not heard the gospel are just as worthy of damnation as people in Christian countries who have heard the gospel but have rejected it.

Letter #234 from ARG of Front Royal, Virginia

Dear Dennis. My sincere admiration for your efforts in producing BE. Christianity is undoubtedly the biggest scam ever perpetrated on mankind. You are effectively knocking the foundation out from under it. Too bad there isn't some way to get your work before all reasonable people who still think the Bible has some inherent validity.

Letter #235 from JC of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, Canada

Oh, Bless you sir! You've taken a most loathsome chore off my hands. I can't stand that book; it gives me a headache. I open it looking for two things--a clear and straightforward explanation of Christian theology and eloquent examples of Christian mercy. There is hardly enough of either to fill a thimble.... Thank you for making some sense out of it. Perhaps you could set up a home study course. I agree with you that the freethought movement needs its biblical experts to point out to the religious middle-of-the-roaders that the Christian mythology preached in mainstream churches has little to do with the bible and to point out to the fundamentalists that the bible does in fact have errors and contradictions. Personally I don't care what people do in the privacy of their own pew. The Moral Majority, however, is going for political power and taking their Inquisition-type-mindset with them.... If the current economic woes deepen, we will see a desperate casting about for Something-to-Believe-In, something sure, rock solid, fundamental.... I don't think Jim Bakker's troubles will hurt the cause of fundamentalism, but rather cause people to turn to someone even more rigid and uncompromising....

Letter #236 from KDB of Largo, Florida

Dear Dennis. WOW! Totally awesome! Fifteen adjectives indicating extreme surprise, fascination, enjoyment, and approval! In other words I like it. I just received #56 and #57 which began my subscription. Wadda Trip! There is just so much good stuff on the reprint list, that it may constitute mental cruelty. Which do I order first?... Please create a TRACT to give out. It must avoid obscene (hard to resist) insulting language, and set forth the truth in plain verifiable speech....

Letter #237 from PH of Calverton, New York

Mr. Dennis McKinsey....Keep up the good work. I live on Long Island and heard you on the Buffalo station. Some great person said an unexamined life is not worth living. I say an unexamined religion is not worth living by. I admire how you insist on the callers' logic but wonder how you take the abuse....

Letter #238 from VEC of Hood River, Oregon

I love them Dennis. Take good care of yourself and don't get burned out.

January 1988

Paul--The Deceptive Disciple (Part Five of a Six-Part Series)--Before moving to a listing of Paul's ill-conceived comments, we'll complete the enumeration of his nonquotes begun last month. (92) Paul's comment in 1 Cor. 15:4-6 ("...and he arose again the third day according to the Scriptures: and he was seen of Cephas--Peter, then of the twelve: After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once...") is unsubstantiated. (a) No gospel says that Peter saw Jesus before the twelve. (b) No gospel states that Peter was the first person to see Jesus alive after the Resurrection although Paul implies as much. (c) And no gospel states that 500 people saw Jesus at one time after the Resurrection. Five hundred people never stated as much. Paul says they did, but we only have his word for it. (93) Paul's comment in Heb. 1:6 ("And again, when he bringeth in the first begotten (Jesus--Ed.) into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him") does not repete any statement in the OT. Psalm 97:7 and Deut. 32:43 have no relevance. (94) Paul's comments in 2 Cor. 6:18 ("...and (I--Ed.) will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty") appear nowhere in the OT. Second Sam. 7:14, 1 Chron. 17:13, and Jer. 31:1 aren't applicable. (95) In Heb. 10:5-6 ("Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me; In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure") Paul misquoted and misapplied Psalm 40:6 ("Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou opened: burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required"). (a) "but a body hast thou prepared me" is not in Psalm 40:6. Paul created it. (b) "mine ears hast thou opened" is in Psalm 40:6 but Paul omitted it. (c) Psalm 40:12 ("...mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head...") was written by the same person who wrote Psalm 40:6 who couldn't have been Jesus since the former committed many iniquities. Paul took the verse out of context. (d) Moreover, nowhere in the Gospels did Jesus say what Paul attributed to him in Heb. 10:5-7. (96) And finally, nowhere in the OT does it say that "the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you" as Paul says in Rom. 2:24 ("For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written"). Isa. 52:5 and 2 Sam. 12:14 aren't applicable.

The next major category encompassing Paul's failings involves ill-conceived comments. (97) "But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother" (Gal. 1:19). Where does any gospel say one of the apostles was Jesus' brother, James? (98) "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them" (Heb. 4:2). The gospel was never preached to Paul. He simply converted and began preaching. (99) First Cor. 15:4-5 ("And he was buried, and he rose again the third day according to the scriptures: And he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve") flies in the face of Matt. 27:5 ("And he--Judas--cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and went and hanged himself"). Paul's statement that Jesus was seen by the twelve is false, unless Judas came back to life. His replacement, Matthias, was not elected until after the Ascension. (100) "You foolish man! What you sow does not come to life unless it dies" (1 Cor. 15:36 RSV). The organic processes constituting physical life do not cease in the grain which grows up into wheat. If they did cease, that body that shall be, which he compares to the bodies of the resurrected would never appear at all. In other words, that which thou sowest does not come to life if it dies. (101) "He (Moses--Ed.) considered abuse suffered for the Christ greater wealth than the treasures of Egypt..." (Heb. 11:26 RSV). How and when was Moses punished or subjected to suffering because of a belief in Jesus or the Christ? Where is that in Scripture? (102) "Some (of the prophets--Ed.) were tortured, refusing to accept release, that they might rise again to a better life" (Heb. 11:35 RSV). Nowhere does the OT say that people suffered torture in order to expect resurrection. Paul created this. (103) "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree..." (Gal. 3:13). According to Paul's reasoning, anyone who was ever crucified could be the Savior. (104) "Therefore leaving the principle of the doctrine of Christ let us go on unto perfection..." (Heb.

6:1). According to Paul, then, Christ's doctrine is not perfection but only a step toward the same. (105) "For until the law sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when there is no law" (Rom. 4:13) and "...where no law is, there is no transgression" (Rom. 4:15). This makes no sense! If sin was not imputable to people before the law, then how could sin have been in the world? How could people have been sinners? If sin was in the world, then it must have been imputable; otherwise, how could it have been sin? How could you have sin imputable to no one? (106) "But God has so composed the body (of Christ--Ed.), giving the greater honor to the inferior part, that there may be no discord in the body, but that the members may have the same care for one another. If one member suffers, all suffer together; if one member is honored, all rejoice together. Now you are the body of Christ and individually members of it" (1 Cor. 12:24-27 RSV). Religious conflicts between Christians and the existence of over 1,500 Christian denominations demonstrate the inaccuracy of this statement. (107) "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles...." (Heb. 2:4). The presence of miracles does not prove God is present as Matt. 24:23-24, Mark 13:21-22, Rev. 13:11, 13-14, 16:14 and 19:20 show. Many beings, both good and bad, performed miracles as Ex. 7:11-12, 8:7, 2 Thess. 2:8-9, and Deut. 13:1-3 prove. (108) "Who (Jesus--Ed.) is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature...." (Col. 1:15). (a) If Jesus and God are equal and eternal, how could either be born? (b) In no sense could Jesus be considered the firstborn either as a man or a God. As a God he was never born; as a man he lived after millions were born. (109) "(God--Ed.) hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds...." (Heb. 1:2). An heir is appointed for a time when the appointer dies or is incapacitated. Paul is saying God is finite, will die, or become incapacitated and Jesus will take over which contradicts what God said in Isa. 48:12 ("...I am the first, I also am the last"). (110) "...by whom (Jesus--Ed.) also he made the worlds.... Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee?" (Heb. 1:2, 5). Paul quoted Psalm 2:7 wherein David said, "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." If God created the world through Jesus, it would imply that Jesus lived before the worlds were created. But, then, Paul stated that God said to Jesus, "This day have I begotten thee" and he said it by the mouth of David who lived long after the worlds were created. (111) "...therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law)...." (Heb. 7:11). False! The law was given first in the form of the Ten Commandments and other rules to the firstborn Israelites. The priesthood and Temple service were switched from their responsibility to the Tribe of Levi after the former worshipped the golden calf and the Levites refused to do so. (112) "For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid (Hagar--Ed.), the other by a freewoman (Sarah--Ed.)...for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Hagar" (Gal. 4:22-24). False history! The law was given from Sinai to the descendants of the freewoman, Sarah, through Isaac and not to the descendants of the bondwoman, Hagar, through Ishmael. (113) Paul said Melchizedek was "...without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually" (Heb. 7:2-3). If Melchizedek is like Jesus then he is a God too. Yet, Gen. 14:18 implies he was only a priest. What Paul says of one must be true of the other. Otherwise, Melchizedek is not "like unto the Son of God." (114) "These all died in faith, not having received what was promised (by God--Ed.), but having seen it and greeted it from afar...." (Heb. 11:13). Paul, the alleged messenger of God, is accusing God of breaking his promise to Abraham. In effect, he's accusing God of lying. (115) "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth" (1 Cor. 10:24). This verse speaks for itself. (116) "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not" (1 Cor. 10:23). And Nixon was accused of considering himself above the law and operating on expediency! (117) "But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was able to be blamed....(because--Ed.) he did eat with the Gentiles; but when (the Jews--Ed.) were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision" (Gal. 2:11-12). Paul accused Peter of acting on expediency; yet, he, Paul, was "all things to all men" (1 Cor.

9:22). (118) "That Christ should suffer and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead...." (Acts 26:23). Jesus certainly wasn't the first to rise from the dead as the RESURRECTION discussion in Issue #2 showed. (119) In several verses Paul openly admitted he spoke foolishly which is more than his followers are willing to concede: "What I am saying I say not with the Lord's authority, but as a fool, in this boastful confidence...." (2 Cor. 11:17), "...I speak foolishly,...." (2 Cor. 11:21), "...I speak as a fool...." (2 Cor. 11:23), "I wish you would bear with me in a little foolishness. Do bear with me" (2 Cor. 11:1 RSV), "I am become a fool in glorying...." (2 Cor. 12:11). (120) "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service" (2 Cor. 11:8-9). This hardly needs comment! (121) "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast" (Eph. 2:8-9). False! The act of accepting by faith is a work itself. You have to do something; it's not a mere gift. (122) "And he (Paul--Ed.) said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest...." (Acts 9:5). Why would Paul ask who is speaking when he called the speaker "Lord?" He must have known who was speaking. (123) And lastly, "For I testify again to every man that is circumcised that he is a debtor to do the whole law. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace" (Gal. 5:3-4). Yet, Jesus, himself, was circumcised ("And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, his name was called Jesus...."--Luke 2:21), as were Paul ("I was circumcised the eighth day...."--Phil. 3:5), and Peter ("And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision contended with him, Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them"). And Acts 16:3 RSV ("Paul wanted Timothy to accompany him; and he took him and circumcised him....") shows Paul circumcised Timothy. Although Jesus, Paul, and Peter were circumcised and obligated to do the whole law, each ignored significant parts of it and was fallen from grace. (TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH)

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #239 from AF of El Paso, Texas (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Thank you for the sample issue of your publication. I am an open-minded person who considers himself a Christian. I have a lot of problems with groups that are fanatics about "Bible worshipping" like the Council of Biblical Inerrancy out in California. At the same time I get tired of atheist nerds that don't know what they're talking about. I hope that we will be able to enter into dialogue/argument/fighting. Mr. McKinsey one of your arguments against the Genesis Flood account is Gen. 8:4 ("And the ark rested in the 7th month, on the 17th day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat"). Many of your questions, arguments and criticisms of Genesis are interesting, valid and thought-provoking but 8:4 is very poor. Your standard of Bible attack seems to be based on the English translation which no respectable evangelical would accept as the 100% Inspired Word of God. The only material acceptable are the autographs written in the original languages and close to the original extant copies. Out here we have a chain of various peaks (mountains) called the Franklins. The mountains of Franklin they are called. In Gen. 8:4 both the singular and plural use of mountains seems to be correct.

Do you have a degree in Hebrew and Greek? Where did you receive it? Under whom did you study? Do you have professors/experts you can access rapidly? Where did you study hermeneutics, apologetics, textual criticism, eschatology, soteriology, and church doctrine?

Dear AJ. First, "atheistic nerds" is hardly the kind of scholarly phrase one would expect from someone who just said he was "open-minded," but, even more important, do you have any substantive evidence that they "don't know what they are talking about?" Pejoratives are not proof. I don't doubt that their opinions of your intellectual prowess would be anything but complimentary and they could submit equally colorful adjectives. Exchanges of this nature generate more heat than light and rarely alter opinions. Second, on page 2 of the sample issue I quoted Gen. 8:4 and asked how the ark could "have rested on several mountains at once." You said this was a "very poor" criticism of Genesis but presented very poor evidence to prove your point. The verse clearly says "mountains" not "a mountain." I have 14 English versions of the Bible, including the KJ, RS, LB, NEB, NASB, NWT, TEV, NIV, JV, NAB, BEB, AS, MLB, and the Masoretic text, and all but 3 say "mountains," which is plural. Only the NEB ("on a mountain in Ararat"), the TEV ("on a mountain in the Ararat range"), and the MLB ("on the Ararat mountain range") seek to resolve the problem by translating the Hebrew into a singular. The overwhelming majority of translations in my library (11 to 3) feel "mountains" is the most accurate term to use.

I'd like to ask you the question you asked me. "Do you have a degree in Hebrew and/or Greek? And even more importantly do you know Greek and Hebrew better than the scholars who translated Genesis into English. Nearly all of them say "mountains" is the best word to use. In fact, you admitted you're uncertain, you're guessing, when you said, "the singular and plural use of mountains seems to be correct." Would you please refrain from saying I'm wrong and provide some solid evidence to that effect. All you are contending is that I might be wrong because the originals might be saying something other than what the overwhelming majority of the English translators thought. Third, your comment that my "standard of Bible attack seems to be based on the English translation" is misleading because it's based not on 1 but 11 out of 14 translations. An overwhelming consensus of scholarly opinion is certainly not "very poor" scholarship. You, on the other hand, like so many of your compatriots, keep implying the non-existent autographs, which you have never seen, are your source. Actually, all you are relying on, assuming you can read Greek and Hebrew, are Greek/Hebrew manuscripts which are supposedly accurate copies of the "originals." This is precisely what scholars relied upon when they created the modern English versions. The only question now is whose translation is best. Apparently you feel qualified to correct their rendering. Fourth, I've already addressed the "Do you know Greek and Hebrew" question several times. {See: Issue #6, for example}. If critics would spend more time answering the questions and problems posed by this publication and less time worrying about my background, a great deal more could be accomplished. The amount of literature that I've read on my own is more than enough to prove my case. If you worried less about credentials and degrees, which are primarily bestowed by apologetic institutions in this field, and more about the logic, accuracy, and poignancy of that being presented, you'd be far better off. Training in apologetic institutions, such as seminaries, has a major disadvantage which studying on one's own can avoid. Institutions are either openly or covertly one-sided in their presentation and permeated with books, lectures, and A-V materials that are geared to accentuating the positive and ignoring the negatives. Because of the mind-set that is inculcated, there is little chance a graduate will critically examine the Bible, as does BE, before accepting it. Why look for something you've been taught is virtually nonexistent. If you don't think I've read enough on apologetics, hermeneutics, eschatology, and textual criticism, consult my wife.

Letter #239 Concludes (Part b)

For you to truly criticize the text you must present this in the original Hebrew with comparative translations and versions with a word study to correlate conclusions. I highly recommend a book titled, Noah's Flood, Joshua's Long Day and Lucifer's Fall Examined. It agrees with some of the questions you raise. I hope we can help each other answer questions and raise new ones. You seem very sincere and I applaud that. There are a lot of insincere (Expletive deleted--Ed.) out there who are on a political kick. Right now I will not go into many of your questions but I trust that you will keep an open mind.... I hope to purchase some of your back issues. I find the format very refreshing.... Do you plan to do articles/expose's on Pat Robertson and....?

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #239 (Part b)

How could I or anyone else critique the text in "the original Hebrew" when there are no such documents, my friend? Comments like that lead me to believe you, not I, should read more in the area of textual criticism. And, other than your comments on Gen. 8:4, I can't see that you have gone into any of my questions. Again, are you sure I'm the one who needs to keep an open mind? All you said in regard to Gen. 8:4, and this is typical of so many apologetic explanations I confront on the radio, is that there has to be an explanation for the problem even though you don't know what it is. Of course, that's nothing more than a hope and a wish, a wing and a prayer, a proof of nothing. It's the same kind of irrationality exhibited by Paul in Heb. 11:1 ("Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen"). If it's merely hoped for and not seen, how could it be evidence? As far as critiquing prominent figures is concerned, that's not a very profitable exercise. Even if Robertson were ruined, he would be easily replaced and the process would resume ad infinitum. As long as the theology remains, spokesmen will emerge. Although we generally disagree, several of your comments are gracious and much appreciated.

Letter #240 from VS of St. Louis, Missouri

Dear Dennis McKinsey. Your BE arrived today and I read the whole issue--very interesting and very good. I'm a retired Lutheran minister. It seems to me you've done a lot of good. Glad you like dialogue and debate--but the "funnymentalists" are pushovers! (I mean from our point of view).... You've had a lot of fun; isn't it time for you to graduate to a more meaningful stage of your ministry. (I'm referring only to your periodical--I've never heard you on radio or TV; I'd like to). Whom are you reaching with your periodical?! the already "converted"? helping them gloat about mistakes in the Bible? I like fun too, but it's time for us to grow up and be for something. Being an iconoclast is not enough! When you try to take away someone's "security blanket" you should at the same time offer him something better. You have made your point over and over and over. Why ride it to death? I can send you many articles. Use any, any way you like....

Dear VS. Several of your comments are wide-of-the-mark and deserve comment. First, I would not use the word "funnymentalists" because it's not only an unproductive pejorative but tends to minimize and make light of a serious and formidable opponent that dominates the White House. As far as being a "pushover" is concerned, even I wouldn't say that. How often have you engaged spokesmen for the inerrant position? I learned years ago, while playing tennis and chess, to never underestimate my worthy opponent. Second, there are tens of millions of people who have never been reached by the kind of message conveyed in BE. You talk as if the battle is over when it has barely begun. One minister alone, Jimmy Swaggart, has a larger budget, more adherents, and far greater access to the media than all the atheist, agnostic, humanist, and freethought organizations in the United States combined. If they are such "pushovers," I'd say we have either been pushing in the wrong direction or hardly at all. Third, BE exists to provide a tremendous amount of crucial information to millions of people being kept in the dark. The need is real and the stakes are high. Enjoyment, satisfaction, enhanced self-worth, and a sense of accomplishment undoubtedly exist, but they are secondary to the primary motive. "Fun" is hardly a precise term when so much time, effort, and study are involved. Fourth, I don't feel a need "to graduate to a more meaningful stage" when I'm already there. When people want me to move from what they erroneously view as a concerted attack on fundamentalism alone, I'm not sure what they have in mind. If it's to a broader focus on liberalism in particular and Christianity in general, I can't think of a better way to dissipate one's efforts. Critiquing religious liberalism is like boxing jello in a kaleidoscopic room. Positions are continually changing on a spectrum that's constantly widening. As people leave the Bible in general and inerrancy in particular, they expand outward like spokes on a wheel. From New Agers and the occult to unitarianism and universalism, the number of views are multitudinous. Unless I'm dealing with a body of people with a common set of ideas, I'd have to search each person's individual beliefs in order to adequately expose their shortcomings. Some liberal organizations have a common group of postulates but none of them is as large or powerful as fundamentalism in general. What would you have me move on to? What is that to which we should "grow up" to? Could you describe the "more meaningful stage" to which I should advance? Fifth, "ministry" is not an appropriate term to describe our efforts or this publication. "An assertive educational program" is more appropriate. Sixth, whom am I trying to reach? Anybody who will listen because nearly everyone accepts some biblically instilled inaccuracies. Whom am I reaching? Our subscribers cover the entire spectrum with large numbers at each end. The "already converted" are by no means the only readers. Seventh, helping people "cope" rather than "gloat" is our purpose. Assisting people in accurately assessing the most influential book extant is BE's reason for being. Eighth, with respect to being "for something," we are. Anytime you expose contradictions, inaccuracies, and errors in a widely held tome, you are for logic, reason, and accuracy. That's the "something better" we are offering. But as I said in my Am. Rat. Conv. Speech, you must show people what is wrong with what they have before they are going to listen to what you propose. Ninth, as a religious term of opprobrium "iconoclast" is inappropriate because it stresses only the negative aspect of BE. Your reliance upon religious terminology implies you have not left religion to the degree you think. Adopting the other side's verbiage is conceding half the battle. When men tear down a city building to erect a newer structure or bulldoze a plot of ground for future construction, are they acting positively or negatively? Are they "iconoclasts" for not respecting the older structure or terrain? If so, how do you propose the new be built? And lastly, nothing has been ridden to death. BE has been systematically exposing all the known problems associated with nearly every major issue in the Bible. At what point would you have had us stop? Perhaps 5 issues ago? If so, then you would never have heard all the mistakes of Paul, who is unquestionably one of the most important figures in the entire Book. In fact, one could almost call the religion "Paulianity" instead of Christianity. How about 10 issues ago? Then you wouldn't have heard all the problems associated with the predestination question. Moreover, one man's major dilemma is another's minor problem and vice versa. How do you or I know the next problem won't be crucial to certain readers? We present as much as possible and let readers judge the degree of importance for themselves. Are you prepared to confront strong believers in the Bible on their own turf? If I had stopped 10 issues ago, could you have effectively related all the problems associated with predestination and Paul to a biblicist? And if we don't relate them, who will? What are you going to do when confronting these people? What are you going to tell them?--religion is irrational and only for the mentally ill and insecure; the Bible is a book of fairy tales and superstitious nonsense, key biblical teachings are unscientific and often absurd, and Jesus was nothing more than a nice guy with some beneficent teachings. Surely you don't expect that to carry the day! They have heard it before. That's been the overemphasis of freethought advocates for centuries. As with biblicists too much of their literature, both past and present, has been devoted to opinions, judgments, and conclusions rather than facts, proofs, and citations. Merely making statements, even though they are true, isn't going to persuade.

Paul--The Deceptive Disciple (Part Six of a Six-Part Series)--With this issue we'll complete our revelation of Paul's failings begun last summer by listing the remaining examples of ill-conceived comments and concluding with those verses within the final category--misinterpretations. (124) In 1 Cor. 9:19-23 ("....And unto the Jews, I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews, to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; To them that are without law, as without law...that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And this I do for the gospel's sake") Paul showed his allegiance to expediency and opportunism by being a religious chameleon. (125) In Heb. 11:17 ("By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac... his only begotten son....") Paul contradicted not only what he said in Gal. 4:22 ("For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman") but two OT verses, Gen. 16:16 ("And Abram was 86 when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram") and Gen. 21:5 ("Abraham was 100 years old, when his son Isaac was born unto him") which clearly show he had two sons and Isaac was the younger. (126) In 1 Cor. 11:14 ("Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?") Paul refuted several OT verses that show long hair denotes a child of God: Judges 13:5 ("For lo, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and no razor shall come on his head: for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb...."), Num. 6:2,5 ("...when either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite...all the days of the vow of his separation shall no razor come upon his head...he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow"), and 1 Sam. 1:11 ("...she vowed a vow and said...I will give him unto the Lord all the days of his life, and there shall no razor come upon his head"). (127) In Heb. 10:5-10 ("Consequently, when Christ came into the world, he said, 'Sacrifices and offerings thou (God--Ed.) has not desired, but a body hast thou prepared for me;.... 'Thou hast neither desired nor taken pleasure in sacrifices and offerings and burnt offerings and sin offerings'...then he (Jesus--Ed.) added, 'Lo, I have come to do thy will.' He abolishes the first in order to establish the second, and by that will we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all") Paul quoted Psalm 40:6 which clearly says that God does not want sacrifices to him. And yet Paul quoted Jesus as alleging that one final sacrifice is needed. There are no bounds to Paul's ability to extract from the OT the sense he desires; he goes so far as to find a demonstration of the necessity of the sacrifice of Christ in a Psalm passage (40:7) which clearly affirms that God does not desire sacrifice, but obedience to his will. (128) In Acts 23:6-8 ("But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees (at his trial--Ed.), he cried out in the council, men and brethren I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question. And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees; and the multitude was divided. For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both") and Acts 24:21 ("...Concerning the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day") Paul intentionally lied about the charges against him in court in order to create arguments among his accusers. As Acts 21:28 ("...men of Israel, help! This is the man that teacheth all men every where against the people, the law, and this place; and further brought Greeks into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place") and Acts 24:5 ("For we have found this man a pestilent fellow and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes") show, the real charges were quite different. (129) According to Acts 9:22-25 ("But Paul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is the very Christ. And after many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him...") the Jews sought to kill Paul; while according to 2 Cor. 11:32-33 ("In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me....") it was the governor under Aretas the king who sought him. Unless the governor and his men were Jews, which is highly unlikely, there is a conflict. (130) Paul's comment in Heb. 1:2 ("...by whom (Jesus--ed.) also he (God--Ed.) made the worlds....") conflicts with his utterance in Heb. 1:5 ("Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee?"). If God created the world through Jesus, it would mean that Jesus lived before the "worlds" were created. But in the same breath Paul stated that God said, "This day have I begotten thee" to Jesus and he said it by the mouth of David (Psalm 2:7) who lived long after the worlds were created. (131) In Phil. 3:8 ("...for whom (Jesus--Ed.) I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ") Paul seems to have ignored his own advice in Col. 3:8 RSV ("But now put them all away; anger, wrath, malice, slander, and foul talk from your mouth"). (132) Contrary to Gal. 1:18 ("Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him 15 days"), three different NT accounts found in Acts 9, 22, and 26 state that Paul went to Jerusalem shortly after he left Damascus, not 3 years later. (133) In Phil. 4:3 ("...help those women which labored with me in the gospel....") and Rom. 16:3 ("Greet Priscilla and Aquila, my helpers in Christ Jesus....") Paul seems to have ignored his admonition in 1 Tim. 2:12-13 ("I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve...."). (134) And lastly, in Acts 21:21-24, 26 Paul practiced deception by pretending to uphold the law by purifying himself with four men.

The final major category of Paul's failings involves misinterpretations of biblical verses and is a little harder to follow. (135) In Rom. 15:3 ("For even Christ pleased not himself: but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me") Paul misinterpreted Psalm 69:9. The "me" referred to in Psalm 69:9 is David; he is speaking, not Jesus. (136) In Heb. 1:5 ("...I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son?") Paul misinterpreted and misapplied 2 Sam. 7:14 ("I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men and with the stripes of the children of men"). (a) In 2 Sam. 7:14 God is saying he will call Solomon, not Jesus, his son. (b) How could Jesus commit iniquity which Paul omitted. It must be referring to a mere mortal like Solomon. (c) Certainly God would not beat Jesus with a rod, cause stripes to be put on him, or threaten to chasten him with stripes. (137) In Rom. 4:17 ("As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations") Paul correctly quoted Gen. 17:4 but incorrectly interpreted Gen. 17:4 in the prior related verse, Rom. 4:16 ("...the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all"). Gen. 17:4 says "many" not "all" nations. Abraham was not the father of us all. Many other tribes and peoples lived before and during his time, e.g. the Egyptians (Gen. 12:12) and the Amorites (Gen. 14:7). (138) Paul made a major error by incorrectly applying "seed" to Jesus in Gal. 3:16 ("Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. he saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ"). (a) "Seed" in the OT was never used in the plural as Gen. 13:15-16, 15:5,13, 26:4 and 32:12 show. Seed always referred to all of one's descendants. (b) If "seed" is referring to Jesus alone, then Gen. 12:7 would mean God gave Jesus, the creator of heaven and earth, the land of Canaan as an inheritance which is absurd; Gen. 13:16 and 22:17 would mean Jesus was as numberless as the dust of the earth; Gen. 15:13 would mean Jesus and a nation of Christs would serve Egypt 400 years, and Gen. 17:9-10 would mean the covenant of circumcision was established with Jesus. (c) Why would God make a promise to Jesus to begin with since Jesus is co-existent and co-equal with God? (139) In Heb. 12:21 ("...and so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake....") Paul is referring to the fear Moses had when he stood at the base of an untouchable mountain and witnessed blazing fire, gloom, darkness, trumpets sounding, and words. Yet, Paul is using Deut. 9:19 ("For I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure, wherewith the Lord was wroth against you to destroy you") which is actually referring to Moses' fear of the Lord's anger at the time he found them worshipping the Golden Calf. (140) In Heb. 6:20 ("...even Jesus made an high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec") Paul misapplied

Psalm 110:4 ("The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek") to Jesus. The "thou" in Psalm 110:4 is referring to David, not Jesus. (141) In Gal. 3:13 ("Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree") Paul used Deut. 21:22-23 ("And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree: his body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day,") for his own ends. (a) Deut. 21:22 is referring to a sinful man who couldn't be Jesus since the latter is supposedly sinless (1 Peter 2:22). (b) Jesus was not hanged. (c) He did not die on a tree and never remained "upon the tree" during the night. (d) Actually Paul is calling the alleged "Savior" cursed. (142) In Heb. 10:30 ("For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord") Paul quoted part of Deut. 32:35 ("Vengeance is mine, and recompense...") and falsely attributed the original comment to the Lord. The quote was actually made by someone who felt he was God's agent. (143) In Rom. 4:5-8 ("But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly his faith is counted for righteousness. Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, Saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin") Paul misinterpreted Psalms 32:1-2 ("Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile"). (a) Just because God forgave iniquities does not mean one is saved by faith. (b) Psalms says nothing about belief or believing "on him." (c) In no sense does Psalms imply that a man's sins are forgiven because he believed or accepted something. (144) In Acts 13:30-33 ("But God raised him from the dead. And he was seen many days of them which come up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people. and we declare unto you glad tidings how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm <'...the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee'>"). Where does Psalm 2 say or where is it equivalent to saying in some distant day I will raise Jesus of Nazareth, Joseph's son, from the dead. The second Psalm does not promise that: (a) anyone will rise from the dead, (b) he who is the Son of God must rise from the dead, (c) Jesus of Nazareth is the son of God or (d) anyone risen from the dead shall be the son of God. Moreover, the Psalmist (David--Ed.) in Psalm 2:7 is speaking of himself, not Jesus. (145) In Heb. 2:6-9 Paul perverted Psalm 8:4-6. (a) The Psalmist stated that God made man, not Jesus, to have rule over all God made and God made man, not Jesus, a little lower than the angels. What the Psalmist stated has no relation to Jesus as Paul implies in Heb. 2:9. (b) Why would Jesus have been worshipped by the angels if he was made a little lower than them? (c) A crown of glory and honor was never put on the head of Jesus. (146) And lastly, in Heb. 1:8-9 Paul misinterpreted Psalm 45:7: (a) If Jesus is God or co-equal with God, would the Psalmist have addressed him with "thy God." How could Jesus, who is God, have a God? (b) Verses 45:1,8-9 show the Psalmist is speaking of a king. Jesus' garments never smelled of myrrh, aloes, and cassia. And king's daughters were never among Jesus' honorable women.

A final small category of Paul's failings concerns erroneous prophecies. (147) In 1 Thess. 4:15 ("...we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep") and 1 Thess. 4:17 ("Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord") Paul was certain that the end of the world was coming in the lifetime of his contemporaries. He expected to be snatched up bodily into heaven with other saints then living, who would, thus, never taste death. Yet, Jesus did not return in Paul's lifetime and Paul and his contemporaries were never taken up into the air. (148) Heb. 1:2 ("In these last days"), 1 Cor. 7:29 ("The time is short") and Heb. 10:37 ("For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry") clearly show Paul taught his converts that Christ's coming and the end of the world were close at hand. After 2,000 years it's safe to say he erred.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #241 from CHF of Minneapolis, Minnesota

(CHF wrote letter #219 in issue #59. What follows are his observations on my response to that letter). Dear Dennis. I think you misunderstood my position as regards biblical validity. On rereading my letter to you I can see how that might be. Let me say first that although once a Christian minister, I am no longer even a Christian, but rather a convinced atheist.

The point I was trying to make in my previous letter to you was that there are in the ministry persons to whom the Bible's validity consists merely of a record of the progression of Judeo-Christian thought, that it is not God's word, nor does it dictate what one thinks, does, or believes.... The ministers of which I speak hold to the belief that life, energy, matter and order suggests a conscious intelligence, so they stay with a belief in God, and further believe that what is not yet clearly perceived awaits more light. As I said in my earlier letter, these ministers are not troubled by attacks on biblical literature; they are with you on that.

Editor's Response to Letter #241

Dear CHF. Thank you for the elucidation of your position although I don't think your earlier stance was misunderstood. As I said in response to your prior letter, liberals have abandoned many of the biblical problems associated with fundamentalism only to adopt another group of difficulties almost as fatal which I hope to cover eventually. Also, you might note my reply in last month's issue to VS, a former Lutheran minister, as well as comments in my Am. Rat. Conv. Speech.

Letter #242 from MA of Louisville, Kentucky (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I should like to offer some comments on BE Issue #2 on "The Resurrection." After quoting 1 Cor. 15:14 ("if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain") you state, "Yet, why should the Resurrection be of such significance." The supreme importance of His resurrection versus those before and after is the testimony to Who He is and God's acceptance of His sacrifice. Acts 2:22-36 speaks of Him as the Holy One who was not to see corruption. Also Romans 1:3-4 states His resurrection declared Him to be the Son of God.... I know from glancing through the issues of BE that you do not accept these doctrines. Yet, I feel it is an answer to your question as to why it is so important.

Editor's Response to Letter #242 (Part a)

Dear MA. You haven't resolved the difficulty. In the second issue I asked why the Resurrection should be of any significance since others rose before Jesus and what had Jesus ever accomplished that had not already been done. You replied that the Resurrection acted as "testimony to Who He is and God's acceptance of His sacrifice." But how does it testify to who he is? As I said earlier, others rose from the dead previously. And how on earth does it testify to God's acceptance of his sacrifice? That makes little sense and I'm confident you don't really understand what you are saying. You are merely relaying some stock answers learned in Sunday School or seminary, MA, without thinking about the import. "Speaks" in Acts 2:22-36 and "declared" in Rom. 1:3-4 are not proofs. They are merely conclusions or assertions by the Bible; they aren't evidence. "Claims" aren't proofs. Nothing is cheaper than words. I want to know what Jesus did, what he accomplished, that was unique. The resurrection per se, proves nothing.

Letter #242 Concludes (Part b)

Rom. 6:3-10 shows why he died and that He was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father. The entire 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians states very dramatically the reason why His resurrection is so important.... Christ died for our sins, according to the scriptures, and he was buried, and He rose again the third day according to the scriptures....The apostle Paul shows that all was vain or void without the resurrection of Christ. Eph. 1:19-25 also states the reason why His resurrection is so important. Perhaps in the future I will take up the second major difficulty as cited by the 7 disagreements you allege.

Editor's Response to Letter #242 (Part b)

First, Romans 6 and 1 Cor. 15 give reasons for his death and resurrection but provide no proof. You assert that he died for our sins according to the scriptures and he rose again on the 3rd day according to the scriptures. But just because the scriptures say it, does not make it true. Moreover, others rose also. Does that mean they died for our sins? Constantly repeating what supposedly occurred isn't going to make it any truer, MA. Repetition of a favorite Christian belief lying at the core of the Apostle's Creed isn't going to make it valid. Second, you switched the topic from his resurrection to his death. Paul said it's the Resurrection that matters. The validity of Christianity rests on the fact that he supposedly rose from the dead not the fact that he supposedly died for our sins. What makes his Resurrection unique? Third, why did you mention Eph. 1:19-23 which does not add to or strengthen your case? Fourth, if you decide to "take up the second major difficulty as cited..." you'd better construct a position that's considerably more reasonable than the first. And lastly, just as a point of clarification, why do you call Paul, "the Apostle Paul," when he was no more one of the 12 apostles than Mark, Luke, Nicodemus, or John the Baptist who appear to have been closer to Jesus than Paul?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #243 from DH of Duluth, Minnesota

Dear Dennis. Thanks for taking on the monumental task of researching your topics for us. BE is the most useful tool available for those of us who enjoy a good debate.

Letter #244 from HLM of Bellbrook, Ohio

Dear Mr. McKinsey. Of all the atheist associations that I've been invited to join in recent days, yours is the most compatible with my way of thinking. Your sample copy of BE was, if you'll forgive me, a touch of heaven. My interests, like your own, lie mainly in pointing out the fallacies and absurdities of a book that modern man has been raised to accept as history.

Since I am the only atheist in my family (I am single), a newsletter like yours could help bridge the theist/atheist gap better than any other publication I can think of. This is because you not only get at the root or foundation of religion, but you also provide a public forum for your critics. I would not feel the least bit nervous about placing BE in the holy hands of a theist....

Letter #245 from Mark Potts, Wilson Hall #203, NS Univ, Tahlequah, Oklahoma 74464

Dear Dennis. According to Luke 7:36-50, after a sinful woman had anointed Jesus' feet, he announced to her that "Thy faith hath saved thee" (verse 50). If people could be saved before the Crucifixion, why was Jesus' death necessary?

In Matt. 5:8 Jesus blesses "the pure in heart." But there are no such people, for "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked" (Jer. 17:9).

In Rom. 1:20 Paul says that God's nature is evident in physical reality. Yet, in Rom. 8:20-22 he says that physical reality is corrupt. (Creationists interpret this passage to mean that). Does this mean that God's nature is corrupt or that the godly parts of physical reality are mixed up with the corrupt parts? Because the natural man is oblivious to spiritual things (1 Cor. 2:14), and even the Christian sees through the glass darkly (1 Cor. 13:12), how could we distinguish between the godly parts and the corrupt parts?....

Editor's Response to Letter #245

Dear Mark. You have again demonstrated an exceptional ability to strike at the foundation of biblical theology. If that organization of skilled and knowledgeable anti-biblical experts which I seek ever comes to fruition, you should apply for membership. You are clearly in tune with the philosophy, strategy, and intent of this publication. As today's youth would say, "I like where you are coming from; you have got the hang of it." Your problem concerning the sinful woman is especially perceptive and escaped my attention. Be careful, though. Don't strain verses to obtain the interpretation you prefer. Your third example hinges on Rom. 8:20-22 and I'm not sure biblicists would agree with your depiction of their interpretation. Exegesis can easily lapse into eisegesis.

Letter #246 from BN of Mary Esther, Florida

Thanks Dennis. Not only are you providing a much needed service to us who have long ago put "the book" in its proper place--pure poppycock--but for those people who are riding the fence and just don't quite know how to put it all in perspective. I know for a fact that several of my acquaintances have been swayed over to our side somewhat after reading your periodicals. Keep the fire burning.

Letter #247 from RK of Ruston, Louisiana

Dear Dennis. Regarding the BE strategy described in recent issues, the reasonable atmosphere required for true effectiveness would seem really attainable only by a consummate pro like yourself. For us less well-versed types, initiating the dialogue on the biblicists' favorite high ground (morality) might prove a more effective approach.

For instance, if a free thinker begins a discussion by piously and self-righteously suggesting that he can not morally accept a book which embraces the concept of a human sacrifice to a god, or which advocates, as an intimidation, the forced cannibalism of one's own children, or which condones slavery, the murdering of first-borns, etc., it is usually the biblicist who suddenly calls for reasonableness and rationality. At that point the subject of errancy just seems to naturally work itself in in a more receptive atmosphere.

Dear RK. I appreciate your kind accolade but just can't agree with your strategy. There is no substitute for knowledge and no short cut to success. In order to be effective we have to know the book as well as its proponents and undue concentration on one issue while ignoring or de-emphasizing hundreds of others is doomed to failure. Since time immemorial freethought advocates have relied too much upon the immorality and inhumanity contained within the OT to carry the day. The fundamental flaw in this approach lies not only in the fact that it's restrictive and biblicists have several replies, but also that the argument, in essence, is based more on emotion than logic. BE has always relied more on the head than the heart. We have always had an innate aversion to emotional appeals to feelings and arguments founded on the "that's just not kind or decent" approach.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Although increasing numbers of people are adopting BE's assertive approach, several have expressed a need for an index to BE's topics. Biblicists at the door or elsewhere can not be adequately shown the error of their ways if one can't access crucial information on a moment's notice. BE has become so voluminous that I, too, can't remember where some topics are located. For this reason we hope to create comprehensive and detailed indexes noting every location of each topic and verse. Unfound information is lost opportunity. As I've learned on the radio, if it can't be quickly retrieved, it might as well not exist.

Many readers have also expressed a need for a pamphlet with 10 or 20 of "BE's BEST" that can be handed out to biblicists as occasions arise. We hope to create a document of this nature soon. Let us know your favorites.

Issue No. 63

Mar. 1988

COMMENTARY

Over four years ago BE instituted a policy of periodically devoting an entire issue to correspondence from readers. Because the number of letters has grown to substantial proportions, this issue, as well as that to follow, will mark a renewal of that program.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #248 {An audio tape} from JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries in Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

(On pages 2 and 3 of our 43rd Issue we commented on Robert Morey's description of BE on page 27 of his book, The New Atheism. Morey later appeared on a call-in radio program hosted by one of BE's fundamentalist subscribers, JW, of Alpha and Omega Ministries. The following dialogue with respect to BE actually went out over the air to an unsuspecting public.

JW: "...Dennis McKinsey also mentioned your book as I recall in his publication."

Morey: "Yes, he did. And, again, this is another logical fallacy. Every book ever printed as far as I know has at least one or two typographical errors. When you have someone doing the type-setting maybe they do "hte" instead of "the." Well, typographical errors logically have nothing to do with the arguments presented in the book. So McKinsey simply focused on the fact that there were several typographical errors. The problem with his arguments is that in the very edition of his magazine in which he swept away my book as not being worth reading because of typographical errors he himself had some typographical errors, I believe, concerning Geisler's book."

JW: "Yes, I think I was the one who pointed that out to you. He had the wrong title for False Gods of Our Time."

Morey: "Well, you see this is the problem. Someone says your arguments are invalid because you are mean or because you are proud. What logically does that have to do with that? Absolutely nothing! When atheists descend to slinging the mud and attacking your character it's because they cannot refute your arguments. And the fact of the ad hominem ferocious arguments that were given in the article simply made me deliriously happy for I know I must have zinged him good (Laughter from JW--Ed.) and he couldn't take the heat so he lashed back irrationally using ad hominem arguments."

Editor's Response to Letter #248 (Part a)

If anyone ever sought proof of perfidious prevarication by fabricating fundamentalists, this is it. Virtually nothing in Morey's malediction has anything to do with reality. For JW to have allowed this nonsense to be broadcast over the air says almost as much about his character and integrity as that of Morey. Fortunately, the whole situation can be easily checked for reliability. One need only read page 27 in Morey's book and pages 2 & 3 in BE's 43rd Issue to see the duplicity. Morey appears to have been relying on the assumption that few of JW's radio listeners had read both and thus would not be on guard. The most obvious deceptions are: First, Morey said, "McKinsey simply focused on the fact that there were several typographical errors" in his book. One need only read BE to see this wasn't even a significant consideration. In fact, the only reference to an error of this nature was in a final incidental comment at the end of over 1 1/2 pages of monologue. The very last sentence said, "Incidentally, in case someone should ask, the name of the publication is BIBLICAL ERRANCY not THE BIBLE ERRANCY." Second, I mentioned only one error of this kind not several. Third, BIBLE rather than BIBLICAL is not a typographical error. Somebody actually missed the name of the publication as I did with Geisler's work. Typing errors rarely create other words, especially when several letters are involved. Fourth, Morey accused BE of having "some typographical errors" "in the very edition" of BE which accused his book of having some typographical errors. Although I did refer to Geisler's book as False Gods in Our Time rather than False Gods of Our Time I would not consider our mistakes of equal significance. Fifth, where did I say or even imply that Morey's book was "not worth reading because of typographical errors?" Sixth, Morey referred to "arguments presented in the (his--Ed.) book." What arguments? Page 27 in his The New Atheism is little more than a tirade against some freethought advocates with opinions, judgments, and conclusions masquerading as arguments and evidence. The only point made that might be considered justifiable (MM O'Hair does not want people to read the Bible) has nothing to do with BE or the validity of its evidence. Seventh, he said BE had "some typographical errors." Could he provide others? As it stands, he has made an accusation without providing proof. Furnishing evidence should be very easy if it exists. If typographical errors are in that edition I'd like to know where. If they aren't, then an apology is in order. Eighth, where did BE say or imply "you are mean" or "you are proud"? To the contrary, on page 3 of Issue #43 I specifically said, "I haven't impugned your motives, denigrated your integrity, or implied you'd do anything to spread the Bible." After hearing Morey on the radio, however, I've changed my mind. On page 27 he accused me of doing "whatever was necessary to undermine the trustworthiness of the Bible." After listening to him in action, I've concluded the reverse is true. He'll do whatever is necessary to prop-up the Book. Ninth, Morey accused atheists of descending "to slinging the mud and attacking your character" because "they cannot refute your arguments" when that's precisely what he practiced with reckless abandon. In his book he accused me of resorting to "ad hominem ferocious arguments" when, in truth, on one page alone he accused freethought advocates in general and me in particular of being fueled by such ignoble motives as bitterness, irrational rage, hatred, and an angry spirit as well as being obsessed, promoting a crusade, operating on expediency, exhibiting irrational hatred, doing superficial research, and twisting scripture. He has a remarkably strong propensity to accuse others of precisely that which he is most guilty. Tenth, he accused me of being unable to refute his arguments when, in fact, if he had presented any I would have been glad to have addressed them. And lastly, for him to say I "couldn't take the heat" when he's figuratively feeding Dante's Inferno seems rather incongruous.

Letter #248 Concludes (Part b)

(On another radio broadcast on a different topic JW said the following to his listeners--Ed.).

"There is a book put out by Zondervan by Gleason Archer called Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties. Now interestingly enough Mr. McKinsey enjoys taking pot-shots at Gleason Archer and his publication. Normally the pot-shots are way off the mark but that's the nature of the animal that you are dealing with when you are dealing with this subject. But this Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties will address the major supposed contradictions found in the scriptures. Not all of them. I've found a couple that people have dug up that were not addressed by Dr. Archer in his book. But it is a hardback book and very worth your while to add to your library. Another good book...."

Editor's Response to Letter #248 (Part b)

Several of JW's comments need to be addressed: First, "pot-shots" is a pejorative term and should be withdrawn unless he is willing to admit he takes "pot-shots" at BE. Second, could he provide examples of our mistaken criticisms of Archer's Work since he told his audience we are normally "way off the mark." I'd prefer evidence rather than unsubstantiated allegations. Third, "animal" is another derisive term that should be withdrawn unless he is willing to include himself. Scientifically speaking, I think every living thing is an animal unless he is putting himself into the vegetable category. Fourth, Archer's book certainly does not confront all "the major supposed contradictions found in the scriptures." It doesn't even come close. In so far as I am aware, there is no book in the English-speaking world that exhausts the subject. Although not a book, BE, is the most comprehensive source available, but it, too, currently falls short of exposing all the major biblical problems that exist. Contrary to biblicist propaganda, which seeks to minimize the number of problems and give the impression they aren't fatal, there is no single source, either pro or con, addressing all the major biblical problems. And finally, JW should know that I have no objection to him discussing BE on the radio or anywhere else for that matter nor am I primarily concerned with what is said. However, common decency and a sense of fair play would obligate him to send me a tape or written copy of any program or writing of his in which BE is criticised. I recently had the feeling that I would not have received some written and audio material if I had not learned of its existence and requested copies.

[TO BE CONTINUED]

Letter #249 from DM of Long Beach, California

Dear Dennis. On one or two occasions you have stated that modern translations have a tendency to eliminate discrepancies which are accurately rendered in the KJV. Can you give me some hard data on this point with respect to such recognized translations as the NEB, the TEV, the NOAB and the JB. I'm under the impression that the modern scholarly works are a distinct improvement over the KJV in terms of accuracy.

Editor's Response to Letter #249

Dear DM. I've never said, "modern translations have a tendency to eliminate discrepancies which are accurately rendered in the KJV." What I have said is that the Bible is a political document and some modern translations have resolved difficulties found in the KJV by changing words and phrases which other modern translations have left untouched. Repeated alterations of this nature to reduce surprise, project a point of view, or resolve conflicts have led me to the unavoidable conclusion that many changes are based more on political expediency than objective scholarship. Unfortunately, without the autographs--the original writings which are assumed to have existed--there is no way to conclusively prove my thesis any more than proponents of a particular version can prove they have created a precise reproduction of the original. An excellent example to corroborate my theory is found in 1 Sam. 6:19 where the number of people God killed because of a minor infraction varies widely from version to version: 50,070 (KJV, ASV, NWT, NASB, Masoretic Text), 70 (JB, BB, NEB, NAB, LB, TEV, RSV, NIV), and 50 to the 1,000 (Mod. Lang.). A very revealing footnote in the NIV says, "70 according to a few Hebrew manuscripts; most Hebrew manuscripts and the Septuagint say 50,070." Another revealing footnote in the RSV says the Hebrew has "of the people 70 men, 50,000 men." Notice that the KJV, in conjunction with most Hebrew manuscripts (assuming the NIV's composers are correct) has an incredible figure. Regardless of the scholars or manuscripts (assuming one can read Greek and Hebrew) one accepts as most accurate, other scholars will disagree.

A good, quick test from BE's perspective to judge the philosophy of any version is to see how Isaiah 7:14 has been translated. The less political and more objective versions translate the Hebrew word "almah" as a "young woman," "maid," "maiden," etc. rather than a "virgin." Another good test is to look at Ex. 20:13 and Deut. 5:17 to see if the 6th Commandment has been rendered, "Thou shalt not kill" or "Thou shalt not murder." Versions based more on politics nearly always opt for the latter. However, these are rough rules-of-thumb rather than iron-clad maxims. Of all the versions with which I am acquainted the RSV of 1946/52 appears to be the most reliable, although it, too, has drawbacks. This is always the problem when you prepare to discuss or debate the Bible. First, you have to agree on what most accurately represents the originals--assuming they ever existed. What is the Bible and where is it? It's hard to debate a book that does not exist and no one living has ever seen. That's quite a trick! You start debating translations and versions which have been derived from manuscripts which purport to be accurate copies of the originals. This, in turn, leads to disagreements over which manuscripts are the most accurate and since scholars can't agree, we are left with differing versions and translations which have been derived from manuscripts in dispute. One of the major failings of those who think nearly all problems can be resolved by going back to the Greek and Hebrew is that they're convinced their analyses of manuscripts or that of scholars with whom they agree are the most correct, even though other reputable experts disagree. The kill/murder example discussed some time ago with JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries is a classic example. After having explained to him the fallacy of his approach, he still refuses to either recognize or acknowledge his problem. Apparently he is erroneously assuming I'm merely creating a rationalization for not learning Greek and Hebrew in depth. Having passed a college proficiency test in German and having obtained the ability to read Spanish, French, and Russian at the sophomore level in high school, I seriously doubt Greek and Hebrew would present substantial obstacles. No, my real reason for not concentrating on these languages is that difficulties simply aren't resolved. As I've said before, I could become the world's greatest Greek/Hebrew scholar and still find knowledgeable opponents on many points.

Letter #250 from BWF of Louisa, Kentucky (Part a)

Dear Dennis. As an ardent BE fan, I was recently reviewing Issue #29 on "False Teachings." Having done some study of the book of Job, I noticed a couple of citations on page 2 from Job: (e) was Job 36:11-12 ("If they {Kings--Ed.} hear and serve Him, They shall end their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures....") and (j) was Job 36:13-14 ("But the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath.... They die in youth and their life is among the unclean"). Certainly these quotes are vulnerable to sarcastic dismissal by BE in terms of reality. But these two are allegedly from the lips of Elihu, one of the stricken Job's "comforters." Are these fair to cite, since in Job 42:7 ("You have not spoken of me what is right") Yahweh himself castigated Eliphaz and his two friends (one of which was apparently Elihu--Ed.). True, Elihu is not specifically named (since his speeches are now usually considered as later interpolations), but readers do consider Elihu as speaking against Yahweh's intentions. Thus, is it "cricket" to quote them among "False Teachings"?

Editor's Response to Letter #250 (Part a)

Dear BWF. You have been a strong supporter of BE for many years and your comments are always welcome. However, I don't see a problem. Your observation that verses 11-14 in the 36th chapter of Job were uttered by Elihu is correct but I see no reason to doubt their truthfulness from a biblical perspective. If they are invalid then prior verses 36:3-6 which were also uttered by Elihu are false too. They assert that God is righteous, perfect in knowledge, mighty in strength and wisdom, and does not preserve the wicked. Verse 26 says the number of God's days are incalculable. If one is false, why aren't the others? Why make a distinction? In verse 2 Elihu said he was speaking on God's behalf and if 5 of his subsequent verses are false, why aren't the rest? Secondly, when God accused Eliphaz and his two friends of not speaking of God what is right, I assumed Elihu was one of the friends and what he said in Job 36 was not included. If it was meant to be included, then I'd say you have exposed a rather significant contradiction. Elihu gave a very pro-God speech in Job 36 only to be told by God in Job 42:7 that he had not spoken of God "the thing that is right."

Letter #250 Concludes (Part b)

Not as clearcut as the Elihu verses but perhaps worth a mention here, are your citations of Job 27:14 and 27:16-17 on page 1 under (b). In traditional versions these do appear to come from the lips of Job himself. But according to Peake's commentary and the studies by W.B. Ewing and Samuel Terrian, etc. much of chapter 27 should be regarded as actually portions of the missing "third speech" of Zophar, another one of the ironic "comforters" condemned by Yahweh....

Editor's Response to Letter #250 (Part b)

You have just provided some evidence as to why I have never given much credence to apologetic commentaries, BF. If, contrary to traditional versions, Peake, Ewing, and Terrian consider someone other than Job to be the author of part of the 27th chapter, then they should read the first verse ("Moreover, Job continued his parable and said") of the chapter. Why do they arbitrarily assume Job ceased to speak at some point in the chapter? There is nothing in the narrative that would lead one to believe another speaker took over. Chapter 28 appears to be a continuation of Job's monologue in chapter 27 and this belief is buttressed by the fact that the first verse of chapter 29 says, "Moreover Job continued his parable and said."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #251 from VEC of Hood River, Oregon

Dear Dennis. I just finished reading Issue #62 and found the good news about the pending indexing of BE's topics. I'm not a student of the Bible and don't want to spend the time and effort to become one. A cross index would really be appreciated.

Editor's Response to Letter #251

Dear VEC. You should know that the creation of a comprehensive index to BE at this time is entirely dependent upon a friend of mine who has volunteered his services. I simply don't have the time. However, I did manage to write 20 of BE's Best for small tracts to be handed out to biblicists. But that won't come to fruition unless I can find a printer willing to operate at considerably less cost than I've been offered.

Letter #252 from DB of Lima, Ohio (Part a)

I am glad to hear of your plans for a pamphlet which would include the 10 or 20 strongest points BE's made against the Bible. Such a pamphlet sure would have come in handy last December when I was preparing to debate two Jehovah's Witnesses. On the other hand, lacking such a thing I was forced to make my own and learned much in the process. This learning was tested in what turned into a three hour debate. I was amazed at my opponent's utter unfamiliarity with the most glaring of Biblical contradictions (such as the two different orders given for the creation of man and the beasts in Gen. 1 and 2), they were obviously embarrassed that an unbeliever seemed to know the Bible better than they did. Clearly, they were of the opinion that anyone who read the Bible had to be convinced of its truth. The fact that I had read it and knew it better than they did--yet still didn't believe--was, I think the greatest jolt I gave their mindsets.

Editor's Response to Letter #252 (Part a)

Dear DB. I know the feeling having experienced it on numerous occasions. Many of the Bible's strongest proponents are not only quite unfamiliar with its problems and contradictions but live under the delusion that to know the Book is to accept its contents. Incidentally, the word "unbeliever" is a negative trap which biblicists have subtly taught others to apply to themselves. They are the unbelievers, not us. In far too many instances, they have ceased to believe in reason, common sense, and proofs and chosen faith, miracles, and superstition instead.

Letter #252 Continues (Part b)

As for the specific contradictions which had the greatest impact, the following 4 rated highest: (a) Rom. 1:3 and Rev. 22:16 say Jesus is the offspring of David, but Matt. 1:20 says Mary conceived Jesus of the Holy Ghost and not of Joseph, David's alleged descendant. (b) Matt. 10:35-36 quotes Jesus as saying he means to turn people against their parents and Luke 14:26 has Jesus demanding that his disciples hate their parents. Yet, Col. 3:20 says we should obey our parents in all things, and, of course, Ex. 20:12 tells us to honor our parents. (c) Gen. 9:6 quotes God as saying that whoever sheds man's blood shall have his blood shed by man. Ex. 2:11-12 tells us that Moses killed an Egyptian. Yet, Moses' blood wasn't shed in turn. (d) 2 Chron. 22:2 says Ahaziah was 42 years old when he began to reign, while 2 Kings 8:26 says he was 22.

The first three contradictions were answered poorly, but the answers were seemingly still good enough for my opponents, if for no one else. The last left them speechless. It is to-date the strongest single contradiction I know of in the Bible. Either Ahaziah was 22 or 42--no legalistic quibbling or special pleading can get around that. And while there is another Ahaziah in the Bible, 2 Chron. 22:2 and 2 Kings 8:26 are part of passages full of too many parallel details for anyone to claim they refer to two different people. If Ahaziah was 42, this would make him older than his father Jehoram (2 Chron. 21:16-20)--an interesting enough contradiction, which I learned from BE, but no contradiction at all to diehard literalists, who can hypothesize odd adoption scenarios and unstated time gaps between Jehoram's death and Ahaziah's coming to power--the two events which define their relative ages. If I could vote for but a single contradiction to be a part of your planned pamphlet, it would be 2 Chron. 22:2 versus 2 Kings 8:26. Anyone confronted with it (in either the King James or RSV editions) must either admit the Bible is not 100% true or argue 22=42 and thus suffer being dismissed as mad.

If you have ever mentioned this contradiction, I'm sorry I missed it and apologize for belaboring a point you're familiar with. The closest I'm aware that you came to stating it, however, was on page 2 of Issue 23. In fact, this statement of Ahaziah being older than his father led me to the contradiction with 2 Kings as I was researching possible counter-arguments. Since what I found seems to be a less easily explained contradiction than what you published then, forgive me for tentatively concluding you were not aware of it then and perhaps still aren't.

Continuing on the assumption that I have stumbled upon an area of contradiction that has perhaps escaped your notice--and, given the length and complexity of the Bible, I am only too well aware of how easily it is to miss things in it... If, however, I have erred somewhere and am really the one who is confused, please let me know before I do our common cause damage by misstating things in some future debate.

Editor's Response to Letter #252 (Part b)

If you send many more letters like this one, DB, assuming your observations are of your own creation, you, too, should consider applying for membership in that group of anti-biblical experts which I hope to see created someday. Either you are very knowledgeable with respect to the Bible's shortcomings or a very good guesser. In mid-January I concluded that the Ahaziah (22 vs. 42) contradiction was of such import that I decided to put it among the first 3 questions to ask a Christian minister during a 4-hour debate on 50,000 watt WLW radio in Cincinnati, Ohio, on Jan. 28th. Although a fundamentalist pastor in the Church of Christ for more than 45 years, I can say without fear of exaggeration that he was excruciatingly perplexed if not flabbergasted. Oddly enough, I've known of the problem's existence for years but only realized its full potential after reading Problem Texts by Ruckman, a King James only extreme fundamentalist. You're correct; it's among the cream of the crop and probably should have been mentioned in BE a long time ago.

Letters such as yours in which freethought advocates are relating encounters and debates with biblicists have always been of immense importance to BE. Contacts by those who engage the opposition and research "possible counter-arguments" lie near the apex of our priority list. We want to know what both sides said and the outcome. Keep up the good work; people engaging biblicists are sorely needed.

Letter #253 from RH of Shreveport, Louisiana

Dear Dennis. Your speech in the last three issues of BE is an excellent summary of your work. I've sent copies to friends. The stream of errancy you are broadcasting continues to be very high quality rational thought. You are putting out a magnificent product.

Letter #254 from J and SS of Bridgewater, New Jersey

Dennis.... We find more concrete info in one edition of your publication than in a year's worth of all others we receive....

EDITOR'S NOTE: All freethought advocates are urged to submit any and all biblical questions and arguments which they have found through actual experience to be exceptionally effective vis-a-vis biblicists. Send your best and they will probably be published for all to see and use.

COMMENTARY

With this issue we'll complete a two-month analysis devoted solely to correspondence from our readers.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #248 (an audio tape) by JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries Concludes from Last Month (Part c)

JW: But others attack the Scriptures from another direction and that is that they say we don't have the original manuscripts and therefore you don't know what it says. In fact, and this still just completely and totally levels me, Mr. McKinsey implies numerous times in his publication that the originals never existed. Now how you get 5,000 copies of a non-existent original I don't know and I've never figured it out. And I still can't figure it out and probably never will. This truly amazes me. But anyhow there are some who would say, "Hey, do you have the originals?" And then you would have to say, "No, we don't." I do not have what Paul sat down and wrote; I do not have the particular letter he wrote. I have 5,000 or more copies of it in Greek, 10,000 copies in Latin and all sorts of other different languages. But I don't have the originals. And they say, "Ah, then you don't know what the originals said." I say that's a very large jump in logic from saying we don't have the originals to saying we don't know what it said. We have manuscripts, for example, of the gospel of John that go back within a generation of the originals. And that is an unbelievably close period of time in comparison with any other ancient documents at all.... The whole subject of NT textual criticism is, of course, fascinating and there are a number of good books on it. But it is amazing how people will take pot shots at the accuracy of the Bible, people who know almost nothing about the Bible and its transmission. Without going deeply into the subject I can assure you that what you are reading is unbelievably accurate in comparison to any other ancient document. And there is nothing in the Christian faith that depends on any disputed passage whatever, nothing at all.

Now you compare modern translations and you say, "Well, I see differences between translations." You have got to be careful when you are talking about that. We are English-speaking people; we are reading an English translation and obviously if I sit down and someone else sits down and we both know Greek and we translate a passage it's not going to come out exactly the same because I'm going to choose different words than he. I'm going to put things in a different order than he does. That does not mean either one of our translations is wrong or inaccurate. They are just simply translations.... We are here to talk about the fact that what you have in your hand, if you have the NIV, the NAS, or any of these modern translations is an excellent, excellent resource. It reflects the originals so closely as to not have any effect on the meaning of the passages at all. In fact, there is hardly any other book at all that can boast the massive number of scholars involved in the translation and the care of the manuscripts and of the writing itself.

Again, JW, you have relayed information to your radio audience that is erroneous and/or misleading for many reasons. First, you accuse me of saying, "we don't have the original manuscripts and therefore we don't know what it says." You should have inserted "for sure" at the end of my alleged comment. We may have accurate copies of the "alleged" original but there is no way of knowing for sure. I'm glad you said, I "implied" the original never existed because I've never directly said its mythical. The burden of proof lies on he who alleges. Those who believe it existed are obligated to prove it did. I don't have to prove it didn't. As in the case of Jesus Christ, I don't have to prove he didn't exist; they have to prove he did. After all, they are the ones who brought up the name. Second, you ask, "How do you get 5,000 copies of a non-existent original" as if that proved the original existed. As far as I'm aware none of these 5,000 copies claims to be an exact copy of any other writing. So why couldn't they be independent creations by different authors discussing the same events? This could easily account for the 200,000 variances between manuscripts. Do you realize how many different encyclopedias there are? Collier's, the World Book, the Encyclopedia Britannica, the Encyclopedia Americana, Random House and the New Columbia are only some of those available. Are you saying that because they generally say the same thing and deal with the same topics, they must have a common source? The same question could also be asked of similar dictionaries, atlases, cookbooks, and school textbooks. I've been on several school textbook selection committees and couldn't see a dimes worth of difference among the many choices available. Third, your 5,000 copies are alleged to be copies of the original, JW. That does not mean they are. You keep leaving out the key words, "alleged" and "purported." You accept as fact that which can't be definitively proven. If you didn't have the incredibly large number of variances among manuscripts, if they all had the same wording, there would be much less in the field of textual criticism, a dramatic reduction in exegetical conflict, and a far more valid reason for assuming there was an original autograph. But, a multitude of differences do exist so we can never know the original wording for sure. Fourth, you said, "That's a very large jump in logic from saying we don't have the originals to saying we don't know what it said." In fact, a couple of large jumps were made by you when you assumed the original must have existed and we definitely know what it said. Fifth, regardless of how far back the gospel of John, or any other gospel for that matter, goes, we still don't have the autographs. That's a fact you just can't avoid no matter how hard you try and no matter how much you reassure your listeners that they are getting it "straight from the Almighty's mouth." Assuring your audience that what they "are reading is unbelievably accurate in comparison to any other ancient document" is deceptive not only because you subtly avoided saying it was inerrant or perfectly true but also because you compared it to writings which are not claiming to be God's word or inerrant. To say it's "unbelievably accurate" is not to say it's perfect. In effect, you are conceding mistakes may exist. And how do know what's true once you begin to admit certain parts are false? Where do you draw the line? God's word is not to be compared to other ancient writings to determine its credentials; it's to be compared to perfection. And by that criteria every writing available clearly fails. Sixth, you consider yourself knowledgeable in textual criticism but made the stunning statement that, "there is nothing in the Christian faith that depends on any disputed passage whatever. Nothing at all." Many examples easily disprove that comment. For example: (a) In some versions 2 Tim. 3:16 says "all scripture is inspired by God and profitable...." while others say "all scripture that is inspired by God is profitable...." The latter clearly does not say all scripture is inspired but implies some scripture is not inspired. (b) In some versions 1 Cor. 5:7 says, "For Christ, our paschal lamb, has been sacrificed" while the KJV says, "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." That Christ allegedly died for us is a crucial Christian doctrine. By omitting "for us" a large group of Christians are left without a gospel of substance. (c) In some versions Isa. 7:14 says, "Behold a virgin shall conceive..." while others say, "Behold a young woman or maiden shall conceive...." Thus some versions clearly remove an extremely important verse, indeed the only prophetic OT verse, in favor of the Virgin Birth. (d) In some versions Rom. 9:5 says, "...and from them is traced the human ancestry of Christ, who is God over all, forever praised" while others say, "...according to the flesh, is the Christ. God who is over all be blessed for ever." The clash here is all too obvious. One says Christ is God; the other does not. A period makes all the difference. (e) In some versions 1 Tim. 6:10 says, "For the love of money is the root of all evil" while in others it says, "For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil." There is a big difference between being "a" root and "the" root. There is also a big difference between "all evil" and "all kinds of evil." The latter could easily be omitting some kinds of evil. Many other major examples are available which will be listed in a future commentary. The number of minor variances among versions are far too numerous to cover. And lastly, your attempt to minimize or rationalize the differences between translations is rather transparent, JW. Obviously people will choose different words and place them in different sequences. That isn't the problem. The crucial aspect lies in the fact that the meanings are different. The messages diverge; the essence of that which is conveyed conflicts markedly. That's what matters; that's the real problem. Your belief that differences among modern translations do "not have any effect on the meaning of the passages at all" is erroneous to say the least. Your comment that "any of those modern translations is an excellent, excellent resource" flies in the face of the fact that they not only differ on many important points but include the NWT (New World Translation) of the Jehovah's Witnesses which you, yourself, have denounced as quite unreliable. Or, are you now agreeing with its translation of John 1:1 ("In the beginning the Word was, and the Word was with God, and the Word was a God") which says Jesus was not god but "a" god.

Letter #255 from LWC of Lufkin, Texas

Dear Dennis. As a new subscriber to BE I am most favorably impressed particularly with "Strategy" as outlined in Issue #59. The technique of nonconfrontational, but persistent, attacks on bible credibility using the bible itself as the source would in my opinion be devastating to the bible believer. Before embarking on this course of action, however, one must do one's homework thoroughly as you point out. In that regard, does BE sponsor workshops or seminars to provide training in the proper use of this technique? If so, please send me some literature as I would be very interested in attending....

Editor's Response to Letter #255

Dear LWC. As of now we do not sponsor any training programs although they certainly will be implemented whenever possible. That's only one of more than 10 major programs I'd like to activate. All subscribers, including yourself, will be apprised when anything is undertaken. Your letter is very complimentary although the word "nonconfrontational" would not be applicable to this publication. We believe in direct, head-on confrontations in their ballpark, their book.

Letter #256 from KG of Champaign, Illinois

Dennis. I can't help but feel all your noble effort is in vain because you are asking irrational, unobjective people such as religionists, to be rational and objective, in short, to think! Something they don't know how to do because religion discourages free-thought. Is it evident to you that any of your religious readers have rejected their beliefs?... Sure one can get into complicated philosophical positions, and one can attempt to rationalize it all, but it's all redundant because religion is founded on irrational human emotion and ignorance, very difficult concepts to overcome. It's a lot easier to let mom, dad, or god tell you what to think...than it is to take care of yourself.... What your "ministry" is doing is very important.... I don't knock it at all. I just think it's too logical and systematic for most people to grasp. Please pardon my cynical ramblings.

Letter #257 from JRC of East Brunswick, New Jersey

Dear Dennis. Your publication continues to excel and your research is commendable. There are far less errors in BE than that rag you disillusionize. You have my deepest respect. Attacking the fundamentalists in their own backyard is probably one of the more effective ways of debunking their beliefs to a rational mind. However, we are not dealing with rational minds. Any arguments used against these people are likely to fall on deaf ears. That has certainly been my experience and from all I have seen and heard I am sure others have felt the same frustration. Publications like BE are, without doubt, of the utmost importance to those on the borderline of joining a sect or cult, or those with minds that still ask questions concerning their religion....

Letter #258 from JW of Chillicothe, Ohio

Dear Dennis. Can't tell you how refreshing it was to hear you on WLW Cincinnati radio last week. I didn't know if you were still bashing away at the idiocy in the world or not; you must be a real trooper.... You did an admirable job with Gaston, the minister.... Debating someone of his ilk is much like trying to carry on an intelligent conversation with a brick wall.... Again, keep up the good work. I know how frustrating it is to try to reason with a bunch of flaming churchy types and the "Satan" worshippers types aren't any better. They're all nuts.

Dear JW. Your letter, as well as #256 and #257 which preceded yours, reflect one of the most, if not the most, common detraction made of this publication by sympathetic readers; namely, you just can't reason with biblicists. They are irrational, brainwashed, narrow-minded, and mentally ill. Pursuing a sensible, logical conversation with them is a waste of time. Your phrase, "a brick wall," seems to sum it up for many. I'm constantly confronted with this observation by people in the freethought movement. While at a freethought meeting recently I was asked if I really thought I was changing anyone through BE. Did I really think I could persuade religious believers in general and Bible-believers in particular. My response was an immediate, "Of course! I not only can; I have. Moreover, I venture to say that not one person at this rather large gathering did not come out of a religious background or ideology. In fact, the chairman of our meeting was a former trainee for the Lutheran ministry." The whole idea that "you just can't reason with these people" is flawed in several respects. First, biblicists cover an extremely wide spectrum of beliefs and many have already rejected much of the Bible. With sufficient evidence there is no reason to assume they wouldn't reject more. Second, how would you expect people to respond when they have been given a totally one-sided presentation of the Bible all their life. Naturally they are going to be stubborn in the early stages. You are telling them that fundamental beliefs they have held for decades are flawed throughout. Surely you don't expect to be accepted with open arms? Third, how many times you talk to them, how long the conversations occur, and how poignant are the arguments presented are of crucial importance. Anyone who thinks he is going to convert people in 30 minutes from beliefs they have held for a lifetime is only deluding himself. You must give them information, allow them time to mull it over, and repeatedly come back later with more. That's how they were taught and that's how they have to be deprogrammed. It's a long process and not for those of faint hearts or short attention spans. Fourth, classifying everyone who believes in the Bible as sick is inaccurate. I've dealt with many devout biblicists who possessed good minds and logical thought processes. The problem lies in the fact that their fundamental beliefs and assumptions are wholly inaccurate. Even though one can reason correctly it's of little use if the initial premises are erroneous. Their problem reminds me of syllogisms in logic. A good relevant example is: (a) Everything the Bible says is true. (b) The Bible says we must accept Jesus as our savior in order to be saved. (c) Therefore, it logically follows that the statement that we must accept Jesus as our savior in order to be saved must be true. Given the truth of (a) and (b), then (c) must logically follow. Biblicists are intelligent enough to draw the required conclusion. The mistake in all this, of course, lies in their original assumption (a). {b} is not the problem; {a} is. It's amazing how many Christians who call me during radio appearances have failed to catch the flaw in their line of reasoning. Their logic is usually acceptable but their assumptions, which have been subtly instilled since birth, rest on quicksand. I don't hold that against them, however. To take an extremely obvious case, Iranians, especially children, are in the same predicament. How could they know they have been entrapped. If I had complete control over the lifetime environment of anyone in the freethought movement or anywhere else, I could successfully teach them to believe people can rise from the dead, donkeys can talk, sticks can turn into snakes, and a woman can turn into a pillar of salt. There is no belief so absurd that people will not adhere to it, especially when all contrary information is excluded. And lastly, I can't help but feel there is some rationalizing going on by some freethought advocates themselves. They are trying to evade their homework. Nobody said the race would be easy; after all, biblicists have had a head start of many centuries and tremendous funding. Each person must ask himself. How much does success mean to me; how badly do I want to reach my goal? Don't be deceived into believing that revelations about corrupt ministers such as Bakker and Swaggart will do the job for us.

Letter #259 from Mark Potts, Wilson Hall #207 NSU, Tahlequah, Oklahoma 74464

(Mark, a long time adherent to BE, has some relevant comments to make in this regard--Ed.). Dear Dennis. I got the Nov. 1985 issue.... I have a comment about letter #121 from Jack Trimpey (a psycho-therapist--Ed.) who says religious faith is a "mental disorder" (4th line from the bottom).... One can find at least three models of biblicist behavior in freethought literature: (1) the psycho-medical model, where biblicists are retarded, sick, etc., (2) the moral model where they are evil, and (3) the educational models where they are ignorant and misinformed. The first two models just don't work. Regarding (1) it's beyond dispute that biblicists can function in society--unlike retardates and the behaviorally disturbed. Regarding (2) even the Bible's most severe critics have admitted that its adherents can display good behavior. As Thomas Paine himself said in the first part of The Age of Reason, "That many good men have believed this strange fable, and lived very good lives under that belief (for credulity is not a crime), is what I have no doubt of." However, (3) proves to be the best and most careful description of the biblicist problem. Ignorance and misinformation can be objectively measured and corrected. Therefore I view biblicists as teachable, well-intentioned people whose heads have been stuffed with nonsense. By assuming this I know what to do to lead these people to reality.

Unfortunately, the leadership of organizations like (the names of several nationally known freethought organizations have been omitted--Ed.) prefer the first two models. By emphasizing that biblicists are inherently "different" from rational people, that there's something "wrong" with them, these groups turn their religious opponents into aliens and enemies. This tendency is unfortunate, since it cuts off the opportunity for constructive dialogue about the Bible. I plan to write to Trimpey about this and to see if we can plug him into our network. He seems to understand the basic issues....

Letter #260 from Jack Trimpey of Lotus, California

(A month ago we received the following letter from Jack Trimpey--Ed.). Dear Dennis...I, too, admire Mark Pott's incisive attacks on Biblical mumbo-jumbo. I've read his remarks over the years, and his growth as a leader in the errancy movement is evident.

On the whole, I think I agree with you that turning the Bible on itself is the most constructive thing that we can do to cut humanity's losses to revealed religion.... Even so, we would better recognize that the errancy approach requires a degree of discipline and facility with abstract reason with which not everyone is endowed. Others are more comfortable, and therefore more effective, with challenging theology on other turf, and they should be encouraged to do so.

For example, as a psycho-therapist, I can see that human disturbance is often caused and perpetuated by conscious or unconscious adherence to harmful religious doctrines, such as the concept of human decadence, divine retribution, and the Jesus complex, and I can often show clients how they can benefit enormously from rejecting Biblically-based ways of thinking. The essence of therapeutic change, then, is often overcoming religious faith, rather than discovering Biblical errors. I show the painful consequences of certain doctrines or beliefs in everyday life and then provide a rational alternative which is in the client's, rather than the church's, interest.... The spirit of humanism or atheism is conveyed without a disciplined critique of absurd scriptures. Each BE reader has strengths which can be put to good use in the service of sanity and I believe that each of us is a little saner because of your excellent publication.

Dear Jack. Mark Potts sent you a letter in December 1985 that is quite relevant in this regard. He also sent me a copy. It said, "Although I'm glad you're taking action to counter the Bible's influence, I must further dispute your clinical model of religious behavior. Though I have no doubt biblicism can become a serious behavioral problem for some people (comparable to, say, anorexia-bulimia), I must question the validity of applying this model to ALL biblicists, for the following reasons: (a) 'Mental disorder' is a rather unfair way to characterize ideas you happen to dislike.... (b) In my cultural tradition--poor, white, Southern--people become biblicists in the same way they acquire their accent. They simply don't KNOW any better. Their self-esteem has nothing to do with it. (c) Many biblicists are intelligent people who are 'successful' and 'responsible' by commonly accepted standards. For example, at the Univ. of Tulsa, a doctorate professor of computer science once told me the Second Coming is imminent. These don't fit the stereotype of 'mentally disordered' fanatics. So, although I concede biblicism can mess up some people's lives, I seriously doubt the phenomenon can, in general, be described as a 'mental disorder.' I prefer to describe it as an example of The Big Lie. Repeat a lie often enough, in the absence of contrary information, and people will come to believe it. I suggest you've been dealing with a biased sample in your professional counseling work. It's simply not valid to extrapolate from the human wrecks you've treated to ALL biblicists.

From reading your description of Unrevival 86' I get the distinct impression you plan to deprogram the masses by MOCKING religious behavior. If that's correct, then I'm afraid you'll be wasting your time. Dennis McKinsey, who has been studying the actions of the freethought movement for some time, will tell you that ridicule simply doesn't affect most biblicists. My own experience supports this conclusion. People just don't like to be laughed at. Even assuming your model of biblicism to be correct, you must admit you wouldn't treat anorexia-bulimia by LAUGHING AT and MOCKING its victims. Perhaps I misunderstood what Unrevival 86' is all about, but at first glance it doesn't sound like something I'd want to associate either myself or BE with. These are my objections to your program. If I've missed your points, please straighten me out...."

Letter #261 from GVS of Rye, Colorado

Dear Mr. McKinsey....Since I'm a late comer to your publication I wonder if you have a list of definitions to all of your abbreviations of the different bibles that you hang on to all the quotes from these bibles...?

Editor's Response to Letter #261

Dear GVS. I apologize for assuming people would automatically know what versions my biblical abbreviations were referring to. Let me list them now. KJV (King James Version), NAS (New American Standard), NWT (New World Translation), TEV (Today's English Version), NAB (New American Bible), NEB (New English Bible), BBE (Bible in Basic English), ASV (American Standard Version), LB (Living Bible), NIV (New International Version), JB (Jerusalem Bible), RSV (Revised Standard Version), ML (Modern Language or Berkeley Version), and the MT (Masoretic Text). I own all of them and use the Layman's Parallel Bible by Zondervan Publishers, which has four versions (KJ, ML, LB, RSV) running parallel, as my basic text. It's tremendously marked up with a red ink pen.

EDITOR'S NOTE: A husband and wife team known as Brother Jed and Sister Cindy travel from campus to campus throughout the Nation preaching an emotional message of hell-fire and damnation to college students. I'm tentatively scheduled to debate Brother Jed Smock on the Ohio State University campus in Columbus, Ohio at 7:30 P.M. on April 14, 1988.

COMMENTARY

The Crucifixion--In the 2nd Issue of BE we listed most of the problems associated with the gospel narratives of the Resurrection. Of comparable import are the conflicting details concerning the prior Crucifixion. As with the Resurrection, accounts clash in many respects. (1) What color was the robe that was put on Jesus? Scarlet--Matt. 27:28 ("And they stripped him, and put on a scarlet robe") versus purple--Mark 15:17 ("And they clothed him with purple....") and John 19:2 ("...and they put on him a purple robe"). (2) When was the robe put on Jesus? During his trial--John 19:1-2, 15 ("Then Pilate took Jesus, and scourged him. And the soldiers...put on him a purple robe.... Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King?") versus after Pilate delivered him to be crucified--Matt. 27:26-28 ("Then released he Barrabas unto them; and when he had scourged Jesus he delivered him to be crucified. Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into a common hall,...stripped him and put on him a scarlet robe") and Mark 15:15-17 ("And so Pilate, willing to content the people...delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified. And the soldiers led him away into the hall...and they clothed him with purple"). (3) At what hour was Jesus crucified? The third hour--Mark 15:25 ("And it was the third hour, and they crucified him") versus before the sixth hour--Luke 23:43-44 ("And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise. And it was about the sixth hour....") versus after the sixth hour--John 19:14-16 ("...and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your king! But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him.... Then delivered he him unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away") to be crucified later. (4) What was the inscription on the Cross? "This is Jesus the King of the Jews" (Matt. 27:37) versus "The King of the Jews" (Mark 15:26) versus "This is the King of the Jews" (Luke 23:38) versus "Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews" (John 19:19). (5) For what did the soldiers at the Cross cast lots? His garments--Matt. 27:35 ("they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots") and Mark 15:24 ("And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take") and Luke 23:34 ("... And they parted his raiment, and cast lots") versus his coat alone--John 19:23-24 ("Then the soldiers when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout. They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be...."). (6) What was Jesus given to drink? Vinegar--Matt. 27:48 ("And straightaway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and...gave him to drink") and Luke 23:36 ("And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him and offering him vinegar") and John 19:29-30 ("Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished....") versus vinegar mingled with gall--Matt. 27:34 ("They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall") versus wine mingled with myrrh--Mark 15:23 ("And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh; but he received it not"). (7) When Jesus got the sponge filled with vinegar, who said they would see if Elijah would come to his rescue? The person who actually gave him the sponge--Mark 15:36 ("And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down") versus those with the person who gave him the sponge--Matt. 27:48-49 ("And straightaway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink. The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him"). (8) How many of the thieves on the Cross reviled Jesus? One--Luke 23:39-40 RSV ("One of the criminals who were hanged railed at him, saying, 'Are you not the Christ? Save yourself and us!' But the other rebuked him, saying, Do you not fear God, since you are under the same sentence of condemnation?") versus both--Matt. 27:44 RSV ("And the robbers who were crucified with him also reviled him in the same way") and Mark 15:32 ("And they that were crucified with him reviled him"). (9) Who were the named women watching the Crucifixion? Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children--Matt. 27:55-56 versus Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James the less and Joses and Salome--Mark 15:40 versus Jesus' mother, his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene--John 19:25. (10) From where did the women observe the Crucifixion? From afar--Matt. 27:55-56 ("And many were beholding afar off...among which was Mary Magdalene...") and Luke 23:49 ("...and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things") and Mark 15:40 ("There were also women looking on afar off; among whom was Mary Magdalene,....") versus near the cross--John 19:25 ("now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene").

Children--Punishment of children is one thing; child abuse is another. And, unfortunately, many biblical verses can be easily used to justify the former by means of the latter: Prov. 23:13-14 ("Withhold not correction from the child: for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die. Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from hell"), Prov. 22:15 RSV ("Folly is bound up in the heart of a child, but the rod of discipline drives it far from him"), Prov. 20:30 RSV ("Blows that wound cleanse away evil; strokes make clean the innermost parts"), Prov. 13:24 RSV ("He who spares the rod hates his son, but he who loves him is diligent to discipline him"), Prov. 19:19 ("Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying"), Prov. 29:15 ("Thy rod and reproof give wisdom, but a child left to himself brings shame to his mother"), Prov. 26:3 ("A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass, and a rod for the fool's back <children are often foolish--Ed.>"), and Deut. 21:18-21 ("If a man has a stubborn and rebellious son, who will not obey the voice of his father or the voice of his mother, and, though they chastise him, will not give heed to them, then his father and his mother shall take hold of him and bring him out to the elders of his city...and they shall say to the elders of his city, 'This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton and a drunkard. Then all the men of the city shall stone him to death with stones; so you shall purge the evil from the midst").

And, then, there are those verses which demean and degrade children by looking upon them as little more than beings to be punished for the misdeeds of others: Ex. 20:5 ("I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me"), Lev. 26:22 ("I will also send wild beasts among you, which shall rob you of your children...."), Hosea 13:16 ("Samaria shall become desolate: for she hath rebelled against her God: they shall fall by the sword; their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up"), and Isa. 13:16-18 ("Their infants will be dashed in pieces before their eyes; their houses will be plundered and their wives ravished.... Their bows will slaughter the young men; they will have no mercy on the first of the womb; their eyes will not pity children").

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #261 from JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries of Phoenix, Arizona (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I am in receipt of the March, 1988 edition of Biblical Errancy. As seems normal for BE (having read a majority of all past issues to this point), the impression given by your handling of the material from our series on atheism on The Dividing Line Radio Program are unfair to say the least. It wasn't so much what you said as what you did not say that matters. A few examples should suffice.

You first castigated me in your response on page #1 of Issue #63 by stating, "For JW to have allowed this nonsense to be broadcast over the air says almost as much about his character and integrity as that of Morey." Really? Am I suppose to engage in censorship on my program, Mr. McKinsey? Why is it that you did not mention anywhere in this edition of BE that you, too, appeared on our program for just as long as did Dr. Morey? Should I have edited the great amount of "nonsense" that you propounded on the air? And why did you neglect to mention that of the five guests I had on that series, three were atheists? The only Christian apologists that were part of the program (excluding myself) were Dr. Morey and Dr. Boliek. You were given every opportunity to enter into dialogue on these subjects live and direct--I do not practice attempting to "edit" live programs or debates.

Editor's Response to Letter #261 (Part a)

Dear JW. Several of your comments are wide of the mark. First, you were not being asked to engage in censorship or "editing." I would not support such activities nor was that the thrust of my remark. I wanted to know why you allowed comments to go out over the air which were unamended and uncorrected, comments you knew were inaccurate. Surely you aren't alleging lack of knowledge on your part in this regard. Don't you feel responsible to your audience and an obligation to correct inaccuracies, even when uttered by your closest compatriots. One need only read BE's back issues to see that we correct inaccuracies, or that which is viewed as incorrect, by proponents and opponents alike. We let it go out to the audience, too, but not without a response. Correcting is not "editing". You criticized where you thought I was wrong but you said nothing where you knew he was. Second, please don't try to bring in extraneous material in order to give an appearance of objectivity. We are discussing what Morey said on your radio program about BE's treatment of his book. How long Morey and I appeared on your program and the composition of your guest lists are not germane to the central issue discussed in Issue #63. I wasn't concerned with the length of time I appeared on your show or an imbalance in your guest list. Third, for you to complain about me leaving material out seems rather incongruous in view of the fact that you not only made no attempt to defend Morey's character or integrity, only your own, but you also did not attempt to defend even one of his major comments.

Letter #261 Continues (Part b)

Regarding the specific charges you made against my endorsement of Dr. Archer's book Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties (Zondervan). (a) "pot-shots" indicates your propensity for attacking scholarly information drawn from a variety of sources while you yourself demonstrate abject lack of scholarly training in the fields in which you make such confident assertions. Have you ever engaged Dr. Archer in direct debate? Have you corresponded with him on the topics? Have you taken the time to become equipped to deal with the Bible as it was written? If you have not, then the term "pot-shots" is an accurate description of your writings. Indeed it is a far more accurate term than your lyrical "perfidious prevarication by fabricating fundamentalists" wouldn't you say? (b) You asked for specific citations of error regarding Archer--such is too simple--the very first time you address the topic (Issue #1, page 3-5) you show your ignorance of the Hebrew term nacham and, as usual, did not allow for any interpretation or harmonization of the passages under consideration (i.e., you again assumed a priori that the passage was incorrect), just as I pointed out in Letters to an Anti-Theist, pages 31-32. Your mocking parody of Dr. Archer's discussion of paradise, etc. was equally "way off the mark" (Issue #2, page 4). To assert a contradiction in this instance you must claim omniscience for yourself, for you are only asking questions that are not directly addressed by the text itself. We don't know what color

Jesus' eyes were either, but that hardly has bearing on the issue of inerrancy. The same can be said of page 5 of this issue where you have the audacity, ignorant as you are of textual criticism and the Biblical languages, to attack Dr. Archer's brief mention of the difficulty of accuracy in transmission of numbers and proper names. Such criticism is not only "way off the mark" but it is completely outside the realm of scholarly discussion. Indeed, in reference to Archer in Issue #5, page 3, you again repeat the ludicrous idea that there were no "original" writings of the Bible! No serious scholar can give such nonsense the time of day, DM! Just where do you think those thousands of copies came from anyway? I suppose because no one alive has even seen the original of Josephus' Antiquities that the original never existed--copies just materialized over time from nothing, right? I think that should provide sufficient samples of material that is "way off of the mark." (c) Most of your readers probably can understand the phrase "but that's the nature of the animal that you are dealing with when you are dealing with this subject." "Animal" is made correlative with "subject." It clearly indicates that erroneous comments are part and parcel of dealing with anti-theists. (d) Your next criticism is ridiculous; you point out that Archer does not address all the major supposed contradictions found in Scripture. Anyone reading just what you printed would see that I had already said that. There's even this little sentence--"Not all of them." Did you miss that or something? TO BE CONCLUDED

Your letters have sunk to a new low, JW. I can't think of any prior correspondence in which you have exhibited more denunciations and vilifications with less proof than this one. Pejoratives and ad hominem denunciations are replacing dispassionate scholarship and open-mindedness. Liquefied hate is dripping onto your writing. I'm reminded of the 19th century writer who said, "I hear the voice of approbation not in the dulcet sounds of praise but in the savage cries of indignation." Your errors, deceptions, and irrelevancies are many. First, you accuse me of demonstrating abject lack of scholarly training, exhibiting ignorance of textual criticism, speaking outside the realm of scholarly discussion, and making ludicrous, nonsensical, and ridiculous comments. Yet, proofs within your letter are few and far between. Much of your malediction is little more than opinions and conjectures based on an offended ego. Please leave the world of glittering generalities and present specifics. Don't criticise unless you provide chapter and verse with respect to what everyone said. Put your "proof" within the letter. Otherwise, readers are left guessing as to what's being debated and they, as well as I, are forced to do research you should have furnished. Second, you asked if I had ever corresponded with Archer or engaged him in debate. No! Nor have I so engaged scores of other apologists I have quoted at one time or another. I don't know of anyone who has; do you? Are you saying you have corresponded with and debated the people you have critiqued? You mean I must correspond with someone in order to critique his writings? Third, you ask if I have become equipped to deal with the Bible as it was written. We have debated this issue in one form or another on several occasions, JW, and we recently had two phone conversations in which it played a prominent role. Frankly, I'm beginning to conclude that no amount of evidence is going to penetrate your biblical barrier to the brain. Nevertheless, I'll try once more. Give me the text as it was written. Were, for instance, verses 9 through 20 in Mark 16 in the original? A simple yes or no will do. They either were or they weren't. We both know you have already committed yourself to a negative reply because of the pamphlet you sent me entitled, Mark 16:9-20 Scripture or Not The Evidence. But, can you name one English version of the Bible that omits them? If so, then you and it are in a lonely boat. Many manuscripts and the translators of every version with which I am acquainted have those verses in the Bible while you claim they don't belong there. Many of the translators with whom you disagree have taught in this field longer than you have been alive. You might read Dean Burgon, for example, who proves conclusively, according to many, that they do belong in the Bible. Mark 16:9-20 is only one of many examples which I will use in a later commentary to make this point. Fourth, you again accused me of promoting "the ludicrous idea that there were no 'original' writings of the Bible." I don't often say this about someone, JW, but you have a distinct inclination toward pure hardheadedness. In your zeal to defend the faith at all costs, you are strangling receptivity while oxygenating the Bible. Despite repeated readings of page 3 in our 5th Issue, I am yet to find any statement by me that there "were no original writings." You repeatedly resurrect a point that was laid to rest years ago. To make matters worse, you completely ignored my clear statement on this topic in last month's issue. I said, "I'm glad you said, I 'implied' the original never existed because I've never directly said its mythical. The burden of proof lies on he who alleges. Those who believe it existed are obligated to prove it did. I don't have to prove it didn't." I have never said the original didn't exist. Let me repeat this since it doesn't appear to have registered. I have never said the original didn't exist. What I have said is that you "are obligated to prove it did" and so far the evidence is inconclusive. "As in the case of Jesus Christ, I don't have to prove he didn't exist; his followers must prove he did. After all, they are the ones who brought up the name." Fifth, you claim I exhibit ignorance of the Hebrew term "nacham" and didn't allow for "interpretation or harmonization." What you really mean is I didn't allow for any rationalization. Num. 23:19 ("God is not a man that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent") clearly contradicts 1 Sam. 15:11 ("It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king...."). In both verses as well as 1 Sam. 15:29 and Ex. 32:14 "repent" comes from the Hebrew word, "nacham" and one need only consult Archer's defenses and my responses, which you failed to provide or discuss, to see his explanations are weak and unwarranted. Sixth, you accuse me of engaging in "mocking parody of Dr. Archer's discussion of paradise" when his entire rationalization of the problem found in Luke 23:43 ("Today thou shalt be with me in paradise"), which you also failed to provide, is based on two "apparentlys" and one "presumably." I said, "apparently, apparently" and "presumably" which are nothing more than accurate repetitions of his comments. You don't have to be asserting omniscience to ask how Jesus could be with the thief in paradise on that day when he spent 3 days in the grave. Seventh, you accuse me of having the audacity "to attack Dr. Archer's brief mention of the difficulty of accuracy in transmission of numbers and proper names" and assert my criticism "is completely outside the realm of scholarly discussion." In fact, one need only read his explanation and my response, which you also failed to provide, to see that both are well within the tradition of apologetic defense and critical response. Eighth, the whole issue of accurate translations, the degree to which we know the original, and the role played by thousands of manuscripts will be addressed in a future commentary, since it's too voluminous to be covered here. Ninth, most readers are quite capable of understanding what you meant by animal and do not need your "obfuscating guidance" to interpret the subtleties behind the scene. They know what was implied. Tenth, why did you refer to me as DM, when everyone reading this publication knows my name. Words on the letterhead are hard to miss. I'm forced to conclude that you are engaging in unjustified mockery, JW. While you are trying to be cute I'm trying to be cautious. Years ago we printed the full names of several individuals and were reprimanded several times. Employment, status, and friendships were only some of the factors under consideration. Since then we have used initials only, unless requests are made to the contrary. If you want your full name used, just say so. That's no problem. In fact, we'll put in your address if you want. And lastly, regarding whether or not Archer addressed all the supposed major contradictions, let's read verbatim what you said in your letter. "But this Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties will address the major supposed contradictions found in the scriptures. Not all of them. I've found a couple that people have dug up that were not addressed by Dr. Archer in his book." There are hundreds if not thousands of major contradictions in the Bible and when you say there are "a couple that were dug up" that he omitted, that's tantamount to saying he covered them all. Their number is certainly far more than a couple. If you insist your sentence--"Not all of them"--is justified by a couple of exceptions, so be it. We'll let the readers judge.

Letter #262 from John Sikos, P.O. Box 443, Romeo, Michigan 48065-0443

Dear Dennis.... When I first read Issue #43 regarding Robert Morey's book The New Atheism, I immediately went to the local Bible bookstore and found a copy. Your comments regarding the logical errors made by Morey in that book were 100% correct.... Obviously Morey plays to an audience he knows will never check up on the truth of his statements, an audience who will never bother to read Biblical Errancy. The point of my letter is this: Judging from the transcript of JW's radio broadcast and Morey's statement implying that you are "slinging the mud and attacking" people's characters, I do not think that we are dealing here with stupid, misguided people. I think they know full well that you are right and that they cannot logically defend themselves, so they must resort to deliberate, conscious, and malicious slander like this. Do you and does Biblical Errancy have any plans to sue JW and Morey for libel and/or slander, and also to demand equal time on JW's broadcast? I doubt that you are considering legal action, but I hope you nevertheless print parts of the above letter so that when JW and Morey see it, they will know that they'd better watch what they say in the future.... When Christians must resort to these kinds of antics on their radio broadcasts it means we are doing something right....

Editor's Response to Letter #262

Dear John. Taking legal action is not my style. We have accepted an offer by JW to reappear on his program in early May.

Letter #263 from SO of Tallahassee, Florida

Dear Dennis. In reference to your EDITOR'S NOTE in Issue #63, here are five of my favorite biblical contradictions: (1) Where did King Josiah die? He was killed at Megiddo (2 Kings 23:29-30) versus he died in Jerusalem (2 Chron. 35:22-24). (2) Did Jesus curse the fig tree before or after cleansing the Temple of the moneychangers? "After" (Matt. 21:1-19) versus "before" (Mark 11:1-15). (3) How many sons did Abraham beget? Isaac was Abraham's only begotten son (Heb. 11:17) versus Abraham had two sons (Gal. 4:22). (4) Was the veil of the Temple torn in two before or after Jesus expired on the cross? "After" (Matt. 27:50-51) versus "before" (Luke 23:44-46). (5) Did Jesus communicate face to face with the Centurion whose slave was healed or only with the centurion's representatives? Jesus spoke directly to the centurion (Matt. 8:5) versus he spoke only to his representatives (Luke 7:1).

These are five among my favorites not only because they are such obvious contradictions but because they elicit such ludicrous rebuttals from Christian apologists. It is in the quality of the rebuttals that biblicists continually reveal the absurd lengths to which they are willing to stretch credulity in order to preserve pre-conceived notions about inerrancy. It's amazing.

Letter #264 from FG of East Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Dear Dennis. As usual, BE #63 was great. I can't thank you enough for elevating my knowledge of the Bible. I can't say I've grown to despise it, but my appreciation of it has gotten to where I can't see it having authority over my life anymore.... My religious training is in the past. I'm a scientist now, and every day I try to be a better one. The training helps me in coping with people who have similar backgrounds and are into problems with science.

Letter #265 from KB of Los Angeles, California

Dear Dennis.... BE #61 arrived today. Regarding letter #239. Referring to "the original autographs" by inerrantists is usually a way to avoid commitment to any particular reading....

The variants give a breadth of interpretation that they don't want to lose if all except one were determined to be copyist errors.

Editor's Response to Letter #265

Dear KB. You're correct when you say they like the versatility that's provided by variant interpretations. As a minister I debated recently demonstrated, they can expediently leap from version to version as conditions warrant. However, like so much in life this, too, is a two-edged sword. The flexibility this generates also produces contradictions, contrasts, and conflicting interpretations which leave proponents and opponents alike decidedly perplexed.

Issue No. 66

COMMENTARY

The Originals--Two major questions need to be addressed in regard to the alleged original writing of Scripture. First, was there an original copy of the Bible from which subsequent manuscripts were copied and, secondly, if there was such an original, and existing manuscripts are copies of that original, can we reconstruct or do we have an accurate copy of that original. In addressing the first question in prior issues we noted that although there are thousands of manuscripts with similar and nearly identical texts, there were also thousands of variations. Because of the great number of differences, one would not be wise to assume there must have been a common source. As was stated a couple of months ago, encyclopedias and cookbooks also bear a remarkable resemblance and one might assume they, too, had a common source. Although it is correct to say that the degree of similarity between biblical manuscripts is significantly higher than that between most encyclopedias and cookbooks, the difference is one of degree, not kind. It remains for believers in an original to prove it existed.

The second is even more important. Even if we assume an original existed, could one know what it said based on existing manuscripts? With thousands of variances between thousands of manuscripts, there is no way to definitely know an original's contents, despite apologetic assurances to the contrary. Hundreds of differences between translations bear witness to the fact that scholars can't agree on what various verses say, what they mean, and whether they should even be included in reconstruction of the Bible. The experts are clearly at loggerheads on many points and uncertain as to others. Unanimity is not the dominant theme by any means. Despite the uncertainty that permeates the process of translating and understanding, people are repeatedly told there is no reason to worry about the validity of translations or reconstruction of the "original."

Versions Differ (Part One of a Five-Part Series)--Within the last 4 months the editor of BE has been told by 3 professional defenders of the Bible that there is nothing in the Christian faith that depends on any disputed passage in Scripture, nothing whatsoever. Unfortunately for biblicalists there is abundant evidence to the contrary. A wide variety of differences among translations, often caused by the manuscripts from which they are derived, are readily available and, generally speaking, can be grouped into 3 broad categories: (1) Differences with respect to how a verse or part of a verse should be translated (Conflicting Translations--CT), (2) Differences on whether or not verses contradict one another (Contradictory Verses--CV), and (3) Differences on whether or not verses or part of a verse should be omitted entirely (Omitted Text--OT). The first category (CT) is undoubtedly the largest and can be divided into 2 smaller subdivisions whose lines of demarcation are admittedly gray: (a) Different renderings that go to the heart of biblical teachings and (b) Differences among translations that range from significant to serious, but not critical. [The initials that will be used for translations are: KJ = King James Version, RS = Revised Standard Version, ML = Modern Language, AS = American Standard Version, NEB = New English Bible, NAB = New American Bible, NI = New International Version, NAS = New American Standard, TEV = Today's English Version, BBE = Bible in Basic English, NWT = New World Translation, JB = Jerusalem Bible, LV = Lamsa's Version, MT = Masoretic Text, LB = Living Bible]. Disputed translations within the first subdivision of category CT are such verses as: EX. 20:3 ("You shall not have no other gods before me"--KJ, RS, ML, AS, NAS, MT, NI) versus ("You shall have no other gods except or besides me"--JB, NAB, TEV, BBE, LV). A clash over the first commandment arises from the fact that the former group merely says you must put the god of the Bible at the top of the list. Worship of other gods is not prohibited. 1 SAM. 6:19 ("But God smote of the men of Beth-shemesh...50,070..."--KJ, AS, NWT, NAS, MT) versus ("...he slew 70 men of them"--RS, LB, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NI) versus ("the Lord smote 5,070 men of the people"--LV). Whether God killed 70 people or over 50,000 for a relatively innocuous act bears directly on the biblical teaching in Deut. 32:4, Psalm 9:8, etc. that God is just and righteous. Apparently this troubles scholars and accounts for the dramatic reduction in numbers in many recent translations. JOB 19:26 ("...yet in my flesh shall I see God"--KJ, LB, NI, TEV, NWT) versus ("then from or without my flesh I shall see God"--RS, ML, JB, AS, BBE, NAB, MT, NAS). The latter denies the physical resurrection of mankind which the former affirms. PROV. 14:33 ("...but it <wisdom--Ed.> is not known in the heart of the fools"--RS, NAB, JB, BBE, TEV, LV) versus ("But in the inward part of fools it maketh itself known"). Biblical teaching is contradictory as to whether wisdom lies within fools, although one might argue the inward part does not mean the heart. PROV. 28:3 ("A ruler who oppresses the poor is like a driving rain..."--NI, BBE, NAB, TEV) versus "A poor man that oppresseth the poor"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, AS, NAS, MT, LV). It's hard to visualize how a poor man could oppress the poor which is probably why the NI, NAB and TEV translators reversed the script. The biblical view of an important social issue is quite muddled. ISA. 7:14 ("Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son..."--KJ, ML, LB, NI, AS, NAB, NAS, LV) versus ("Behold, a young woman shall conceive and bear a son..."--RS, BBE, NEB, TEV, MT) or (a young maiden--JB, NWT). This clash has been debated for centuries and goes to the heart of a critical biblical teaching because it's the only OT prophecy referring to the Messiah's virgin birth. DAN. 9:24 ("...and to anoint the most holy"--KJ, AS, NI) versus ("...and to anoint a most holy place"--RS, LB, BBE, NEB, TEV, NAS, MT). The 9th chapter of Daniel has one of the most important of all OT prophecies and it's rather difficult to see how it could be referring to Jesus, i.e. be messianic, when conflict exists as to whether the most holy is a man or a place. MICAH 5:2 ("...whose goings forth have been from old from everlasting"--KJ, ML, LB, AS, BBE, NWT, NAS, LV) versus ("...whose origin is from old from ancient days"--RS, JB, NI, NEB, TEV, MT, NAB). Micah 5:2 is supposedly one of the most precise OT prophecies because it supposedly predicts the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem. But how could it be referring to Jesus if his goings were "from ancient days" which, unlike "everlasting" denotes a beginning at some time in the distant past? Whether or not the Messiah had an origin is crucial. MATT. 12:40 ("For as Jonas was 3 days and 3 nights in the whale's belly"--KJ, RS, AS, NAB, LV) versus ("For as Jonas was 3 days and 3 nights in the belly of the sea-monster"--ML, JB, NEB, NAB) versus ("For as Jonas was in the great fish 3 days and 3 nights"--NI, NWT, TEV, LB, BBE). This conflict bears directly on the accuracy of comments by Jesus since whales are not fish and vice versa. MARK 1:1 ("The beginning of the gospel about Jesus Christ"--NI, LB, JB, TEV, NWT) versus ("The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ"--KJ, RS, ML, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, NAS, LV). The former does not say Jesus wrote the Book of Mark while the latter all but says he did. MARK 15:39 ("...Truly this man was the son of God"--KJ, RS, NI, AS, NAB, TEV, NAS, LV) versus ("...In truth this man was a son of God"--JB, BBE, NEB). "A" son clearly means there could be other sons of God while "the" son does not. LUKE 1:27 ("To a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph..."--KJ, ML, LB, RS, JB, NI, AS, BBE, NAB, NWT, NAS, LV) versus ("...with a message for a girl betrothed to a man named Joseph...."--NEB, TEV). The latter translation does not support the idea of a virgin birth. LUKE 2:33 ("Joseph and his mother marveled at those things which were spoken"--KJ, LB, LV) versus ("his father and his mother marveled at what was said...."--RS, ML, JB, NI, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS). Except for the Living Bible and the LV no modern version in our list supports the KJ. They all imply there was no virgin birth because Joseph is equated with his mother by being called his father. The second group clearly implies that Joseph was as much his father as Mary was his mother. LUKE 2:43 ("...and Joseph and his mother knew not of it"--KJ, LV) versus ("His parents did not know of it"--RS, LB, ML, JB, NI, AS, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS). Again every one of our versions says Joseph was the father of Jesus except the KJ and LV. Only the latter imply Joseph was not his father and there was a virgin birth. LUKE 17:21 ("...the Kingdom of God is within you"--KJ, LB, AS, TEV, NWT, NI, LV) versus ("...the Kingdom of God is among you"--RS, ML, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, NAS). Whether or not the Kingdom of God is within you or outside is of theological importance. JOHN 1:26, 31, 33 ("...I baptize with water"--KJ, ML, RS, LB, JB, BBE, NAB, TEV, NI, LV) versus ("...I baptize in water...."--AS, NEB, NWT, NAS). No wonder some support baptism by sprinkling ("with water") while others believe in baptism by immersion ("in water"). JOHN 10:29 ("My Father who has given them to me <Jesus--Ed.> is greater than all...."--KJ, ML, LB, RS, JB, AS, NEB, NAB, NAS, NI, LV) versus ("What my Father has given me is greater than anything...."--BBE, TEV, NWT). Which is greater than all? God or what God has given to Jesus? JOHN 10:33 ("...You a mere man claim to be a God"--NWT, NEB) versus ("...you a mere man claim to be God"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, AS, BBE, NI, NAB, TEV, NAS, LV). "A" god leaves open the possibility of many gods. Claiming to be God differs dramatically from claiming to be "a" god. ACTS 20:28 ("...of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood"--KJ, NWT, NAS, NI, TEV, LB, LV) versus ("...of God, which he obtained with the blood of his own Son"--RS, ML, JB, AS, BBE, NAB, NEB). Whether God's blood or that of his son was spilled is quite important, especially for those who don't believe the two are identical. ROM. 9:5 ("...as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever"--KJ, ML, JB, AS, BBE, NAS, LV) versus ("...according to the flesh, is the Christ. God who is over all be blessed for ever"--RS, LB, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT). The latter version clearly does not make Jesus God while the former does. 1 COR. 7:21 ("...Even supposing you could go free, you would be better off making the most of your slavery"--NAB, LV) versus ("If you can gain your freedom, do so"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, BBE, NI, NWT, NEB, NAS, TEV). By advising people to make the most of their slavery, the NAB and LV clearly conflict with other versions on a major point. 1 COR. 7:36 ("But if a man thinketh that he behaveth himself unseemly toward his virgin daughter...and if need so requireth, let him do what he will; he sinneth not; let them marry"--AS) versus the BBE, NAB, KJ, NI, NEB, NWT AND ML which omit the word "daughter." The latter don't agree with the ASV's teaching that fathers should marry their daughters rather than behave "unseemly" toward them. GAL. 3:24 ("Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring <or lead> us to Christ"--KJ, AS, BBE, NWT, NAS, NI, LV) versus ("...the law served as our custodian until Christ came"--ML, LB, RS, JB, NEB, NAB, TEV). If the law served as our custodian until christ came as the latter asserts, then it no longer held that role after he arrived which the former projects. The first version does not rule out its guidance after his arrival. Moreover, serving as our custodian does not necessarily mean it's bringing us to Christ. 1 TIM. 3:2, 12 & Titus 1:6 ("A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife...."--KJ, ML, RS, LB, AS, BBE, NI, NWT, NEB, NAS, TEV, LV) versus ("A bishop must be irreproachable, married only once"--JB, NAB). The JB and NAB clearly limit a bishop to only one wife whereas the former do not keep him from having many wives as long as he has no more than one at a time. 1 TIM. 3:16 ("...great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh...."--KJ) versus ("Great indeed, we confess, is the mystery of our religion: He was manifested in the flesh...."--RS, ML, JB, NI, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS). With differences of this magnitude is it any wonder that the King James only supporters are up-in-arms. In this instance, the KJ is the only version clearly saying

God was manifest in the flesh. If "he" is referring to Jesus Christ, then it is only stating the obvious. If Jesus came, he came in the flesh or as a man. But it doesn't say he was God or God came in the flesh. 1 TIM. 4:4 ("For every creature of God is good..."--KJ, AS) versus ("For everything created by God is good..."--RS, ML, LB, JB, NI, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, LV). If everything created by God is good, that would include far more than just the "creatures" mentioned in the KJ and ASV. 1 TIM. 6:10 ("For the love of money is the root of all evil"--KJ, RS, ML, JB, NEB, NAS, LV) versus ("For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil"--NI, AS, TEV, NAS) versus ("For the love of money is a root of all evil"--BBE) versus ("For the love of money is a root of all sorts of injurious things"--NWT). Is the love of money "a" root or "the" root? If it's "a" root then there could be many others. Is it the root of "all evil" or "all kinds of evil"? "All kinds" does not mean "all evil." Some could be excluded. 2 TIM. 3:16 ("All scripture is given by inspiration of God"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, NI, BBE, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS) versus ("Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching..."--AS, NEB, LV). A cardinal belief of all fundamentalists is that all scripture is inspired, but that is clearly not the import of the AS, NEB and LV. They leave open the possibility that some of Scripture is not inspired. TITUS 2:13 ("...and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ"--KJ, AS, NAB, NWT, LV) versus ("...the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ"--RS, ML, LB, JB, BBE, NEB, TEV, NAS, NI). According to Granville Sharp's Rule of grammatical interpretation which fundamentalists propound, the first version is referring to two separate beings because the word "our" appears before the word Saviour. According to that same rule "our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ" in the second version is referring only to one being and calling Jesus God. This same rule, which supports BE's position, applies to "of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" versus "our God and Saviour Jesus Christ" in 2 Peter 1:1. HEB. 9:11 ("But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come..."--KJ, JB, AS, BBE, NI, NAS) versus ("But when Christ appeared as a high priest of the good things that have come"--RS, ML, LB, NAB, NWT, NEB, TEV, LV). Versions differ on whether Christ was high priest of good things to come or of good things that already have come. 2 PETER 2:9 ("...and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished"--KJ, JB, NWT, LV), versus ("...and to keep the unrighteous under punishment until the day of judgment"--RS, ML, LB, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NAS, NI). Versions can't agree on whether punishment exists until the day of judgment or begins on the Day of Judgment. 1 JOHN 3:4 ("...for sin is transgression of the law"--KJ, JB, BBE, TEV) versus ("...sin is lawbreaking or lawlessness"--RS, ML, AS, NI, NAB, NWT, NEB, NAS). The "law" refers to OT maxims whereas "lawbreaking" could refer to any laws, OT or otherwise. Apparently some biblicists don't want to be obligated to follow all the Old Law. REV. 13:8 ("...whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world"--KJ, ML, NWT, NI) versus ("...everyone whose name has not been written from the foundation of the world in the book of life of the Lamb who has been slain"--NAS, LB, JB, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV). Conflict exists over what occurred at the foundation of the world. Was the lamb slain or were names written in the book of life?

In conclusion, one can see from all the above that to assert nothing of crucial importance in the Christian faith depends on any disputed passage in Scripture is irrational. Anyone contending there are not critical theological, philosophical, and sociological differences among versions of the Bible simply hasn't studied the evidence.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #261 from JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries (Part c)

As you know, when I contacted you about being on the program (you did not contact me) I promised to send a tape of the discussion to you at a later time. Before we went on the air I mentioned that we would send the entire series we were doing once it was completed and edited. We tried to do that for each of the guests, but it took a while to edit them, transfer them to other tapes, etc. Again you make it look like we are involved in duplicity, when in fact we have provided you with airtime, free materials, etc. Why did you not mention that you heard of our little booklet Letters to an Anti-Theist from our very own newsletter which we sent you at no cost? When you wrote and asked about it you did so by circling the item on our own order sheet that you received in our newsletter....

Editor's Response to Letter #261 (Part c)

Again, JW, you brought in irrelevant material to put a gloss on your activities. Whether or not you sent me promised tapes or provided free materials is not the issue. The real point in dispute lies in the fact that some time ago you published nearly all of our correspondence in a pamphlet entitled Letters to an Anti-Theist. I was not told this occurred and did not receive a copy. Later when I received a compilation of all your available materials I happened to see this pamphlet on the list. I requested a copy suspecting that it might pertain to me, which was subsequently confirmed. I concluded, justifiably I might add, that if I had not specifically sought a copy, I probably would have never become aware of its existence. Now that I have a copy we intend to eventually provide an itemized refutation of its contents.

Letter #261 Concludes (Part d)

And finally, given the fact that attempting to debate an issue while limited to the pages of BE seems fruitless (case in point--your reply to my last letter ran 3.37 times longer than what I wrote--to my 43 lines you replied with 145). How about we answer these questions live on the air before a public audience? I certainly have no problems in paying for the air time and the phone call. Demonstrating how anti-theists twist and hide the truth is well worth the effort. Feel free to call us collect and we will set up a time....

Editor's Response to Letter #261 (Part d)

Correcting erroneous comments often takes far more time and effort than composing the statements, JW. As far as meeting on the radio is concerned, we both agreed to discuss the Bible again on your program on Sat. May 7th. Unfortunately, you sent me a letter on May 5th stating our dialogue would have to be cancelled because all but one of your radio sponsors had withdrawn. My acceptance is still open. Apparently you do have a problem in paying for air time. Incidentally, I did not call you collect because I had not yet read your letter when you called me.

Letter #266 from JL of Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Dennis. I just received BE #64.... I am very much interested in seeing the rest of your response to JW.

I must say I find your response to JW in Issue #64 to be entirely unconvincing. As I have commented to JW on this subject, the evidence for original documents from the existing variants is almost as good as the evidence for common ancestors of existing biological species. I agree with your "we don't know what it says for sure," but I think we do know with a fairly high degree of accuracy, at least for the NT epistles. In the case of the gospels, there is a strong possibility that individual stories and sayings of Jesus were independently circulated and then collected together in their present form by editors (and there is little question that the synoptic gospels are interdependent in some way.

It looks to me as though you are arguing that because we don't know for sure, we don't know at all. If I were to accept that argument, I would have to reject nearly all knowledge. It would certainly lead to solipsism.

Your argument about encyclopedias is pretty bogus--any two encyclopedias do not come anywhere near as close as any two variant manuscripts of NT books.

Finally, your response (the sixth) is based on a misunderstanding of JW's comment. Your examples are of translational variants, not textual variants. JW's reference to "disputed passages" meant disputed passages in the variation of extant manuscripts, not disputed interpretations of identical manuscript passages.... (In other words, JW was referring to differences in the Greek or Hebrew wording of manuscripts on the same material, not disagreements on the best translation of the Greek or Hebrew of manuscripts on the same material--Ed.).

Editor's Response to Letter #266

Dear JL. Initially, you addressed two questions discussed in this month's commentary on The Originals. Was there an original and, if so, is there any way to know what it said based on existing manuscripts. As far as the first question is concerned, I have never been persuaded that the evidence proves an original existed. Perhaps it did, but tens of thousands of variations among thousands of manuscript, cause me to doubt the veracity of your assumption. In so far as whether or not we can reproduce the "alleged" original from existing manuscripts is concerned, you, yourself, employ some qualifiers. "I think we do know," "a fairly high degree of accuracy," "a strong possibility," and "interdependent in some way" are not the words of someone who is positive we have, or can recreate, accurate copies of the "original." Obviously, you, too, have doubts and reservations.

My argument with respect to the encyclopedia analogy, which was presented in this month's commentary, need not be repeated.

Lastly, as far as your final point is concerned, JW made the same comment to me during a phone conversation over a month ago. His position is that differences arise from disagreements over how verses should be translated (translational variants) when there are no differences between manuscripts over what the verses say in Greek and Hebrew (textual variants). In other words, he contends the manuscripts are basically consistent in the Greek and Hebrew wording; it's in translating that conflicts arise. This is another way of saying the autographs are okay, but the translators aren't. As I tried to show JW on the phone, there are two major problems with this theory. First, the manuscripts are by no means in as much agreement as he alleges, even in the Greek and Hebrew. Scholars admit that tens of thousands of variations exist. The manuscripts are in far greater disagreement than JW is willing to concede. Secondly, and even more importantly, why would consistency be of any real consequence if you can't tell what is being said. It would be as if a man caused the following dialogue to occur by bringing thousands of manuscripts in Swahili to JW and myself. JW: (after looking them over) "My, look how consistent they are. They all say nearly the same thing." DM: Fine, what do they say?" JW: "I don't know for sure but they are quite consistent." Greatly simplified, JW's position is that as long as they are consistent who cares what they say while mine is, who cares if they are consistent if you don't know what they say. Moreover, the tremendous number of differences between the translations of Greek and Hebrew experts shows we not only don't know what is being said in far too many instances but we don't even know if many books, chapters, and verses should be included. A common misconception some people have of BE is that it deals only with contradictions in the Bible. In truth, we deal with any and all problems having to do with the Bible's validity. Contradictions are only one aspect. If manuscripts agree on the wording of a particular verse but there is no way to determine the correct translation of that verse, if different translations of a verse prevail among the major translations, then we have a contradiction equal in importance to that of textual variations. We have a plethora of contradictory translations but are assured there is no problem when the manuscripts are in agreement. The Kill or Murder problem discussed with JW in prior issues (the 6th Commandment) is a classic example. He claims there are no textual variants but can only provide contradictory translations whenever the commandment is mentioned.

Letter #267 from DAP of St. Petersburg, Florida

Dear Dennis.... May I offer you some thoughts on whether Christian/Religionists suffer from mental disorders? A major disorder, usually described as Schizophrenia, can be defined as the state of a mind that holds diametrically-opposed ideas, yet is consciously unaware of any conflict. As an example of the Christian or Religionist thought conflict, I offer you Ex. 20:13 and Num. 31:17. In the first instance, Moses is commanded by his god: Thou shalt not kill! In the next instance, Moses tells his followers to kill innocent children. This is don't kill versus kill the innocent. As history shows, Christians and Jews slaughter others in the name of the god who says "Thou shalt not kill."

The second example is that Christians describe Jesus as offering humankind unconditional love, then they tell you that you must, as stated in Mark 16:16 both believe and be baptized. So, Jesus' unconditional love is predicated on two conditions. This is schizophrenic....

EDITOR'S NOTE: Jed Smock and I are going to debate again at the same time and place on Tuesday, May 31st. I thoroughly enjoyed our last exchange and would like to participate in many more throughout the Nation. The last encounter was over the Bible in general and now we intend to concentrate on all activities related to Jesus in particular.

COMMENTARY

Versions Differ (Part Two of a Five-Part Series)--Last month's commentary focused on Conflicting Translations (CT) of a critical nature while this month's analysis will concentrate on those that range from significant to serious: GEN. 11:2 ("And it came to pass, as they journeyed from the east"--KJ, RS, BBE, LV) versus ("...in the east"--ML, NEB, NAB, TEV) versus ("...eastward or to the east"--NIV, LB, ASV, NWT, NAS, MT). Did they journey from the east, to the east, or in the east? GEN. 19:14 ("Lot went out, and spoke unto his sons-in-law which married his daughters"--KJ, ASV, BBE, NAB, NWT, MT, LV) versus ("Lot went out and said to his sons-in-law, who were to marry his daughters"--RS, LB, NIV, JB, NEB, TEV, NAS). Were the sons-in-law married to Lot's daughters and how could they be sons-in-law if they weren't (were to!)? GEN. 49:10 ("The sceptre shall not depart from Judah...until Shiloh come...."--KJ, ML, LB, ASV, NWT, NAS) versus ("The sceptre shall not depart from Judah...as long as men come to Shiloh...."--MT. Is Shiloh a man or a place and who or what is coming--men or Shiloh? EX. 14:27 ("The Egyptians were fleeing toward it"--NIV, RS, JB, NAS) versus ("the Egyptians fled against it"--KJ, ML, ASV, MT, LV) versus ("...the Egyptians were fleeing from encountering it"--NWT. NUM. 3:28 ("In the number of all the males from a month old and upward were 8,600"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, ASV, BBE, NEB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, NI, LV) versus ("...males of one month and over, came to 8,300"--NAB, JB). NUM. 11:25 ("...when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease"--KJ) versus ("...and when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied. But they did so no more"--all other versions). Only the KJV says the prophesying did not cease. JOSH. 15:18 and JUD. 1:14 ("...as she came unto him (her husband--Ed.), she moved him to ask of her father a field..."--KJ, RS, ML, AS, NEB, NWT, NAS, MT, NIV) versus ("...when she came to her husband, he urged her to ask her father for a field"--JB, BBE, NEB, TEV). Who urged whom to ask? JUDGES 1:18 ("Judah took Gaza, with the coast thereof..."--KJ, RS, ML, LB, ASV, BBE, NEB, NI, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("But Judah did not take Gaza"--JB, NAB, TEV). JUDGES 4:11 ("Hobab the father-in-law of Moses..."--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("Hobab the brother-in-law of Moses"--AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NIV). JUDGES 14:15 ("And it came to pass on the 7th day, that they said unto Samson's wife..."--KJ, ML, AS, MT) versus ("On the 4th day they said to Samson's wife..."--RS, LB, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, NIV, LV). 1 SAM. 8:16 ("And he will take your menservants, and your maidservants, and your goodliest young men..."--KJ, ML, LB, AS, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("He will take your menservants, and maidservants, and the best of your cattle..."--RS, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NI). Translators can't agree on whether men or cattle were taken. 1 SAM. 13:1 ("Saul was ... years old when he began to reign"--RS, NAB, NWT, MT) versus ("50 years old"--NEB) versus ("40 years old"--ASV, NAS) versus ("30 years old"--NIV). Again, 1 SAM. 13:1 ("...and for 2 years he reigned over Israel"--NWT, MT, NAB) versus ("and he reigned over Israel for 22 years"--NEB) versus ("he reigned 32 years"--NAS) versus ("he reigned over Israel 42 years"--NIV) versus ("one or two years"--LV). Talk about confusion! 1 Sam. 13:1 is a classic example. 1 SAM. 13:5 ("and the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, 30,000 chariots..."--KJ, RS, ML, AS, NEB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT) versus ("...mighty army of 3,000 chariots"--LB, JB, BBE, NAB, NI, LV). 1 SAM. 25:22 ("...do God unto the enemies of David"--KJ, ML, AS, NWT, NAS, MT) versus ("God do so to David"--RS, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NI, LV). Did God do it to David or the enemies of David? 2 SAM. 15:7 ("At the end of 4 years"--NIV, RS, ML, LB, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NIV, LV) versus ("after 40 years"--KJ, AS, NWT, NAS, MT). 2 SAM. 21:19 ("...Elhanan...slew the brother of Goliath the Gittite"--KJ, LB) versus ("Elhanan...slew Goliath the Gittite"--RS, AS, BBE, NWT, NAS, MT, NI). 2 SAM. 23:18 ("Abishai, the brother of Joab...was chief among 3..."--KJ, LB, AS, MT, NI) versus ("Abishai, the brother of Joab...was chief of the 30"--RS, ML, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, LV). 2 SAM. 24:2 ("For the king said to Joab the captain of the host..."--KJ, ML, LB, AS, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("the king said to Joab and the commanders of the army"--RS, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, NI). Did the king speak to many or Joab alone? 2 SAM. 24:13 ("So God came to David, and told him...Shall 7 years of famine"--KJ, ML, LB, AS, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("...Shall 3 years of famine"--RS, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NI). 2 CHRON. 3:4 ("...20 cubits and the height was an 120"--KJ, RS, JB, AS, BBE, NWT, NAS, MT) versus ("...and its height was 20"--NEB, NAB, NI, LV). 2 CHRON. 36:9 ("Jehoiachin was 8 years old when he began to reign"--KJ, RS, LB, JB, AS, NEB, NAS, MT) versus ("was 18 years old"--ML, BBE, NAB, TEV, NWT, NI, LV). 2 CHRON. 36:10 (...and made Zedekiah his brother king over Judah..."--KJ, RS, LB, JB, AS, NAB, MT, LV) versus ("He appointed his uncle Zedekiah as king..."--ML, BBE, NEB, TEV, NWT, NI). PSALMS 2:11-12 ("Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry..."--KJ, ML, NI, AS, NWT) versus ("Serve the Lord with fear, with trembling kiss his feet, lest he be angry"--RS, JB, BBE) versus ("...kiss the King, lest the Lord be angry"--NEB). So what is to be kissed--the Son, his feet, or the King? PROV. 10:6 ("...but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked"--KJ, AS, NIV) versus (...but the mouth of the wicked conceals violence"--RS, ML, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT). Does violence cover the mouth or does the mouth cover the violence? Which covers which? PROV. 11:30 ("The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life; and he that winneth souls is wise"--KJ, NI, AS, NWT, MT, NAS) versus ("The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, but lawlessness takes away lives"--RS, BBE, NAB, NEB, TEV). The underlined parts of these two verses are quite dissimilar. PROV. 21:12

("The righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked"--KJ, ML, AS, NAB, LV) versus ("The Righteous One considereth the house of the wicked"--MT, JB, BBE, NEB, TEV, NWT, NI). Is God or man to do the considering? ECCLE. 8:10 ("...they, the wicked, were forgotten in the city where they had so done"--KJ, ML, AS, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("they were praised in the city...."--RS, BBE, NAB, TEV, NIV). Were the wicked praised or forgotten? ISA. 65:20 ("and the one who does not reach the age of 100 shall be thought accursed"--NAS, JB, NEB, NAB, NI) versus ("...and the sinner a 100 years old shall be accursed"--RS, KJ, ML, AS, MT, LV). Are you accursed when you reach 100 or before? JER. 49:32 ("...I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners...."--KJ, NI) versus ("I will scatter to every wind those who cut the corners of their hair"--RS, ML, JB, AS, BBE, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, LV). In this instance, the clash between translations is exceptionally obvious. EZEK. 5:7 ("...nor observed the ordinances of the nations which surround you..."--NAS, KJ, ML, JB, AS, NEB, MT, NIV) versus ("but have acted according to the ordinances of the nations that are round about you"--RS, BBE, NAB, TEV, NWT, LV). Did they follow the ordinances or not? EZEK. 40:44 ("...at the side of the east gate"--KJ, AS, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus (...at the side of the south gate"--RS, ML, LB, JB, BBE, NEW, NAB, TEV, NI). EZEK. 40:49 ("...and the breadth 11 cubits"--KJ, AS, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("and the breadth 12 cubits"--RS, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, NI). MATT. 6:7 ("But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do...."--KJ, AS, BBE, NWT, NAS) versus ("And in praying do not heap up empty phrases or babble as the Gentiles do..."--RS, TEV, JB, NI, NAB, NEB). The Catholics, with their repetitive "Hail Marys," would not use, or agree with, the former translation and their versions (the JB & NAB) reflect as much. MATT. 18:22 ("...I say not unto thee, until 7 times; but until 70 times 7 <i.e., 490--Ed.>"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, AS, BBE, NEB, NAS, NAB, TEV, LV) versus ("...I tell you not 7 times, but 77 times"--NI, JB, NWT). There is a big difference between 490 and 77. MATT. 26:50 ("Jesus said to him, 'Friend why are you here'"--KJ, ML, NWT, RS, LV) versus ("Jesus said, 'Friend, do what you are here to do'"--LB, JB, AS, BBE, NI, NAB, TEV, NAS, NEB). Did Jesus ask a question or issue an order? MARK 1:2 ("...as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger..."--KJ) versus "as it is written in Isaiah the prophet, Behold I send my...."--all other versions). The rest of verse 2 and all of verse 3 came from Isaiah and Malachi, not Isaiah alone. Thus, only the KJV can be interpreted without contradiction. LUKE 2:36-37 ("...she had lived with her husband 7 years after her marriage, and then was a widow until she was 84 years old"--JB, ML, RS, KJ, AS, NI, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS) versus ("...after 7 years of married life she had been a widow for 84 years"--LB, LV, BBE). Was she a widow until age 84 after 7 years of marriage or was she a widow for 84 years after 7 years of married life? LUKE 10:1, 17 ("After this the Lord appointed 70 others...."--KJ, RS, LB, ML, AS, BBE, NWT, NAS, LV) versus ("after this the Lord appointed 72 others"--JB, NI, NEB, NAB, TEV). LUKE 14:5 ("Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit...."--KJ, ML, AS, BBE, NEB) versus ("Which of you, having a son or an ox that has fallen into...."--RS, JB, NI, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, LV). LUKE 17:37 ("Where the body is, there the eagles will be gathered together"--RS, KJ, AS, BBE, NWT) versus ("Where there is a corpse, there the vultures will flock"--ML, LB, JB, NI, NEB, NAB, TEV, NAS, LV). ACTS 3:21 ("...which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began"--KJ, LV) versus ("...that God spoke by the mouth of his holy prophets from of old"--RS, ML, AS, BBE, NI, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS). Since prophets did not exist when the world began, it's understandable that later versions left the KJ translation. "From of old" is much less precise and more easily defended. ACTS 12:25 ("...returned from Jerusalem"--NIV, KJ, RS, ML, JB, AS, BBE, NAB, NAS, LV) versus "...returned to Jerusalem"--NEB, TEV). ACTS 27:12 ("...a harbor in Crete facing southwest and northwest and winter there"--KJ, ML, LB, JB, NI, NEB, NAB, TEV, NAS) versus ("...a harbor of Crete, looking northeast and southeast and winter there"--RS, AS, BBE, NWT). 1 COR. 7:25 ("Now concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord"--KJ, JB, NI, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, NWT, NAS, LV) versus ("Now concerning the unmarried, I have no command of the Lord"--RS, ML, LB, TEV). Unmarried women are certainly not to be equated with virgins. 2 TIM. 1:12 ("...he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him...."--KJ, ML, LB, JB, NI, AS, BBE, NEB, NWT, NAS) versus ("...until that Day what has been entrusted to me"--RS, NEB, TEV). To whom was it entrusted--him or me? JAMES 5:16 ("Confess your faults one to another...."--KJ) versus ("Confess your sins to one another...."--all other versions). Many believe you confess sins to God alone. Judging from this verse, every version but the KJ provides legitimacy to the Catholic confessional. Faults are not necessarily sins. Confessing faults is one thing; confessing sins is another. And lastly, REV. 8:13 ("and I beheld and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven"--KJ) versus ("Then I looked, and heard an eagle crying with a loud voice...."--all other versions). Was an angel flying or an eagle crying?

Except for a few lesser clashes to be mentioned later, that completes our analysis of the largest category which focuses on the contradictory translations (CT) of a particular verse. Next month we'll discuss the key verses within the second category that exposes contradictions between two different verses (CV). Their importance lies in the fact that they often expose attempts to resolve problems by simply rewriting the script.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #268 from James White of Alpha and Omega Ministries, P.O. Box 47041, Phoenix, Arizona 85068 (Part a)

Dear Mr. McKinsey....(Following a malevolent denunciation of my scholarship, a comparison of me to a King James only outcast, and a complaint about the length allotted to critical letters, James said--Ed.). To set the record straight, your comment in the March 1988 edition more than just implied that the originals did not exist and in our phone conversation you know that you directly said such.

Editor's Response to Letter #268 (Part a)

Dear Mr. White. In your own devious style you continue to make accusations without citations. Would you please cite chapter and verse to show where I "more than just implied that the originals did not exist." I've reread that issue and find no statement by me that the originals did not exist and I certainly did not make such an assertion over the phone. What I did ask was for you to conclusively prove they did exist.

Letter #268 Concludes (Part b)

(James continues trying to prove the last 12 verses in the Book of Mark are not genuine and should be expunged. What better way to escape the immunized drinking of any deadly thing and the picking up of serpents promised in verse 18--Ed.). Also the longer ending of Mark is deleted from the straight text of the NASB (it is enclosed in brackets which is a sign of non-originality) and by the NIV (where it is separated by a line). The RSV, as I recall, originally relegated the entire passage to footnotes (it does not any longer). The TEV titles the section "An Old Ending to the Gospel," and the Phillips Modern English entitles it "An ancient appendix." Of course, if you were familiar with the field of textual criticism, you would know why the vast majority of textual critics question the originality of the passage.

Editor's Response to Letter #268 (Part b)

Why don't you stop doubletalking your audience, James? You are the one who is lacking in the field of textual criticism. Enough of this "longer ending," "Old Ending," "ancient appendix," "brackets," and "footnotes" nonsense! Mark 16:9-20 either belongs in the Bible or it doesn't.

Now which is it? Is every reader supposed to flip a coin? Are you saying the creators of every version are allowing readers to decide for themselves whether or not these verses belong? What kind of scholarship is that? You referred to the NASB, the NIV, and the TEV to prove your case. Yet, they all have the 16:9-20 ending as does the revision of the original RSV. If pushed to the wall the translators would have to decide one way or the other, and since they all included these verses in the text, it's logical to conclude they made a positive decision some time ago. If not, then they have done a pathetic job of making their position clear. Like you, they are straddling a nonstradlable fence.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #269 from LWC of Lufkin, Texas

Dear Dennis. Just received BE issue #63 and read it ravenously as usual. The letter from DB and your reply (#252) were especially interesting. In this exchange there is much ammunition for use in debates with bible believers. In fact, the number of indisputable biblical contradictions and errors being uncovered and publicized by BE and other publications is increasing geometrically. What started as a trickle a few years ago is now reaching flood stage and keeps on coming. In light of this development it's hard to understand how unqualified belief in the sanctity of the bible can be maintained.

In their desperation, however, I believe biblicists may have hit upon what they perceive to be a way out of this dilemma. They simply publish a new version of "The Bible" in which key words and passages are conveniently changed so as to eliminate the troublesome contradictions. This tactic was discussed in your dialogue with DM (#249). Fortunately for us, biblicists cannot go back and eliminate these contradictions in the earlier versions, as I'm sure they would like to do. These contradictions remain to haunt them and we should not hesitate to drive the point home at every opportunity.

Concerning 2 Chron. 22:2, it is interesting to note that in the NIV, LB and NASB Ahaziah's age has been changed to 22 years, thus bringing it into agreement with 2 Kings 8:26. In the NIV and LB there are footnotes attributing this change to the correction of previous translation errors. The NAS offers no explanation at all. Thus, another glaring contradiction is conveniently eliminated. Theologians have never been noted for their objectivity where biblical matters are concerned. But the practice of making textual changes, obviously in the interest of political expediency is a new low. I know that it is their bread and butter that is in jeopardy. For that reason I can understand, and maybe to some extent forgive their actions, but intellectual dishonesty and outright fraud are, to say the least, unethical and unbecoming, especially for those to whom many people still look for integrity, honesty, moral leadership, and spiritual guidance.

Editor's Response to Letter #269

Dear LWC. You have focused on a crucial strategem from the biblicists' perspective. When you can't solve a problem just rewrite the script. Unfortunately, this approach is being employed with ever greater frequency. However, it's interesting to note that widespread disagreement prevails over the degree to which this ploy should supercede accurate translation. All too often political expediency accounts for the steady drift away from the King James. Although the latter possesses many problems, it was written in an era when criticisms of the Bible were considerably less widespread and potent than is true today. The forces of freethought were much weaker and the Higher Critics of the 19th Century were yet to appear. Consequently, the role played by expediency was significantly less than that of today. Today's standard defense is that the changes are warranted because of the latest biblical scholarship and manuscript discoveries.

If that were true, then why are so many versions still in agreement with the King James on nearly every point in dispute and why does nearly every change ameliorate a problem rather than heighten it? Moreover, how many new manuscripts have appeared since the King James arose?

Letter #270 from Ken Bonnell, P.O. Box 65706, Los Angeles, California 90065

Dear Dennis...Regarding the Debate Responses to JW of Alpha-Omega Ministries--Best to curb your response; don't "compose in the stick," but sharpen down your response to the fewest words. Your space is too precious to use up with what could be said in fewer words and without emotional invective. Avoid references to "offended ego" and "biblical brain barriers."

The greatest criticism of Archer's ENCYCLOPEDIA is that it misrepresents itself. Dealing with only the major (in the author's view, i.e., those he could handle to his own satisfaction), it is not encyclopaedic in the least. I thumbed it in a bookstore, but concluded it was not really worth the price....

Letter #271 from HLM of Bellbrook, Ohio

Dear Dennis. I was in attendance at your recent debate in Columbus with Jed Smock and thought you handled yourself expertly. However, your opponent seemed to frustrate you slightly in suggesting that, contrary to your claim that the Bible labels us all sinners, little babies are incapable of sinning....

Editor's Response to Letter #271

Dear HLM. Smock's denial of Original Sin was outside orthodox protestant teachings. During our second debate he repeated his position and I was ready with the appropriate information.

Letter #272 from DAP of St. Petersburg, Florida

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I am engaging an extremely sincere Christian in a debate on reality, and I need your help. I have not found any material that equals that which you produce for clarity, brevity, or ease-of-understanding. I am enclosing my check to pay for the 6 back issues that my opponent feels are most relevant. May I have a new back-issue listing? My new good Christian friend didn't bother to return it to me after I let him have it to look at.

Editor's Response to Letter #272

Dear DAP. The reason you have not found any good material in opposition to the Bible is that precious little is available. Paine and Ingersoll did not write very much and the Higher Critics stayed primarily on the periphery. I'm often asked to suggest books to supplement BE but I can't think of many. I've read scores of books and frankly only a few are worthy of recommendation. My favorites would probably be those by Joseph Wheless (Is It God's Word), John Remsburg (The Christ and The Bible), and Thomas Paine (The Age of Reason). Many are too extrabiblical; many are more opinion than proof; some dwell on relatively insignificant matters; some are too narrow in focus although their content is vital, and some reflect the approach of many current critics. They concentrate on what strikes the author's fancy rather than what unnerves biblicists. The latter comes about, in large part, because they avoid debating the other side which, in turn, causes them to lose touch with what works and what doesn't.

Letter #273 from Mark Potts, 8510 E. 66th Pl. S. Apt. A, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133-2008

Dear Dennis....When I lived at NSU, I had several long talks with my roommate about Christianity and the Bible, and I think I've nudged him from the naive biblicism he acquired from his upbringing. All it takes is patience and repeated doses of reason and information. Unfortunately, I'm afraid the rate of conversion is thousands-to-one in favor of the Bible. Too bad we don't control the television networks. According to 1 Kings 3:12, no one living before or after Solomon would be as wise as he. Yet, in Col. 2:2-3 we are informed that Jesus possesses "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Which man is wiser?

According to Rev. 22:11, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Does this verse forbid us from changing our behavior?

According to 2 Cor. 6:16, 1 Cor. 3:16, and 1 Cor. 6:19, the bodies of Christians constitute God's temple. How, then, could Paul's "man of sin" sit in such a temple (2 Thess. 2:3-4).

According to Lev. 20:10 when a man and a woman commit adultery, both of them are to be put to death. Yet this law was rarely enforced against men. For example, in John 8:1-11, when the woman caught "in the very act" of adultery was brought before Jesus and about to be stoned, one is tempted to ask, "But where was this woman's lover, and why wasn't he about to be stoned also?" Moreover, Jesus' rescue of this adulteress was an obstruction of God-ordained justice, and as James 2:10 says, "...whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

An effective question I have found is, "Should I believe in the Gospel because I honestly think it's true, or should I believe in it because I'm threatened with punishment?" If the biblicist answers the former, you can present your errancy arguments to show why you doubt the Bible's validity. If he answers the latter, you can say you have no reason to believe the punishment threats because you doubt the Bible. In any case, you force the biblicist to argue the essential issue--the Bible's validity.

Another good question is "Did you discover the True Religion because you were wise or because you were lucky? Rarely will a biblicist admit he's wise (because of 1 Cor. 1:19-10 and other verses) and an admission that you discovered it through luck means that you have no control over the situation--it's like winning the lottery.

And lastly, according to 2 Cor. 4:3-4, the Gospel "is hid to them that are lost." Who is the Gospel for, then?

Letter #274 from RCC of Nagasaki, Japan

Dear Dennis. I just finished reading issue #65, much enjoyed as usual and very informative. Thanks for being and publishing. I noted in letter #263 from SO of Tallahassee, Florida his #3 contradiction. How many sons did Abraham have? Heb. 11:17 says, "an only begotten son," while Gal. 4:22 says he had two sons, Ishmael and Isaac. Please let him know he should expand the contradiction. He probably forgot Gen. 25:1, 4. By Keturah Abraham had 6 sons.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We have all seen the small pamphlets handed out by religious groups in bus stations, libraries, etc. Because of an apparent demand, we have created 2 of our own entitled, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? and JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER? Each has more than 20 of our best zingers and costs a dime; the price will drop if demand becomes high. They should unnerve any reasonably open biblicist, and hopefully purchasers will hand them out at every opportunity. For now they will be written on both sides of 60 lb. white paper. As they are distributed, please let us know the results so better points can be substituted, if needed, with a new printing. For the first time we are selling material other than BE. A minimum order of 10 is required because of postage costs.

COMMENTARY

Versions Differ (Part Three of a Five-Part Series)--Last month we completed our exposure of situations in which translations of a particular verse were at odds (CT). This month's commentary will dwell on the second category which is composed of contradictions between translations of two different verses (CV). Here, more than anywhere else, is clear evidence of attempts by translators to resolve conflicts by simply rewriting the script. (1) GEN. 14:12 ("And they took Lot Abram's brother's son (i.e., Abram's nephew--Ed.)...."--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, ASV, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, NIV, LV) versus Gen. 14:14 ("And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive"--KJ, ASV, NWT, MT) or ("When Abram heard that his kinsman was taken captive"--RS, ML, JB, NEB, NAS, NIV) or ("And Abram hearing that his brother's son had been...."--BBE, NAB, TEV). A contradiction exists in the KJ, ASV, NWT, and MT. All others wrote the text in such a way as to escape the obvious conflict. 2 SAM. 6:23 ("Michal the daughter of Saul had no child unto the day of her death...."--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, ASV, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, NIV, MT) versus 2 Sam. 21:8 ("...and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul...."--KJ, ASV, NWT, MT) or ("And the five sons of Merab the daughter of Saul...."--RS, ML, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NAS, NIV) or ("And the five sons of Nadab the daughter of Saul...."--LV). Again, only the KJ, ASV, NWT, and MT reveal the contradiction. All others eliminated the problem created by 2 Sam. 21:8 through changing the name of Saul's daughter to Merab or Nadab. 1 CHRON. 18:4 ("And David took from him 1,000 chariots and 7,000 horsemen, and 20,000 footmen...."--all versions) versus 2 Sam. 8:4 ("And David took...700 horsemen and 20,000 footmen"--KJ, RS, ML) or ("David captured 1,700 cavalry and 20,000 infantry"--LB, JB, ASV, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) or ("David captured...7,000 charioteers and 20,000 foot soldiers...."--NIV). Only the NIV resolved this contradiction to any meaningful degree. 2 SAM. 24:9 ("...there were in Israel 800,000 valiant men that drew the sword"--All versions) versus 1 Chron. 21:5 ("All they of Israel were a 1,100,000 that drew the sword"--all versions). In this instance, nobody rewrote the script to escape the dichotomy. Apparently they think one can defend the belief that women or unvaliant men compose the 300,000 difference, a proposition that's not really viable. A classic example is found in 2 CHRON. 9:25 ("Solomon had 4,000 stalls for horses and chariots, and 12,000 horsemen...."--KJ, RS, ML, LB, ASV, BBE, NAB, NAS, MT, LV) or ("Solomon had 4,000 stalls for his horses and chariots and 12,000 horses"--JB, NIV, NEB, TEV, NWT) versus 1 Kings 4:26 ("Solomon had 40,000 stalls of horses for his chariots, and 12,000 horsemen"--KJ, RS, ML, ASV, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) or ("Solomon had 4,000 stalls and 12,000 horses"--JB) or ("Solomon had 4,000 stalls for chariot horses and 12,000 horses"--NIV) or ("Solomon had 40,000 chariot horses in his stalls and 12,000 cavalry horses"--NEB) or ("Solomon had 4,000 stalls for his 12,000 chariot horses and 12,000 cavalry horses"--TEV) or ("Solomon had 4,000 stalls for his 12,000 chariot horses"--NAB) or ("Solomon had 4,000 boxed off spaces for horses for his carriages and 12,000 horsemen"--BBE). Close examination will show that contradictions exist within every version except the JB, NIV, BBE, and NAB. Another exceptionally good example is 1 KINGS 7:26 ("...it contained 2,000 baths"--KJ, RS, JB, NIV, ASV, BBE, NEB, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) or (...its capacity was 18,000 gallons"--ML) or ("...it had a 12,000 gallon capacity"--LB) or ("...its capacity was 2,000 measures"--NAB) or ("...the tank held about 10,000 gallons"--TEV) versus 2 Chron. 4:5 ("...it received and held 3,000 baths"--KJ, RS, JB, NIV, ASV, BBE, NEB, NWT, NAS, MT) or ("...it held 3,000 barrels"--ML, LB) or ("...it had a capacity of 3,000 measures"--NAB) or ("The tank held about 15,000 gallons"--TEV). In this case, any version except the LB or ML will cause a biblicist trouble. 2 KINGS 8:26 ("...22 years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign"--KJ, ML, TEV, LB, RS, JB, ASV, BBE, NIV, NAB, NWT, NEB, NAS, MT, LV) versus 2 Chron. 22:2 ("...42 years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign"--KJ, RS, ML, ASV, NEB, MT) or ("...20 years old was Ahaziah..."--JB) or ("...22 years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign"--BBE, NIV, NAB, NWT, NAS, TEV, LB, LV). Creators of the BBE, NIV, NAB, NWT, NAS, TEV, LB, and LV versions opted for a script alteration to avoid rationalizing. 2 KINGS 24:8 ("Jehoiachin was 18 years old when he began to reign and he reigned in Jerusalem 3 months"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, NIV, ASV, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus 2 Chron. 36:9 ("Jehoiachin was 8 years old when he began to reign, and he reigned 3 months and 10 days in Jerusalem"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, ASV, BBE, NEB, NAB, NAS, MT) or ("Jehoiachin was 18 years old when he became king, and he reigned in Jerusalem 3 months and 10 days"--NIV, TEV, NWT, LV). Biblicists are trapped no matter what path they pursue. 2 KINGS 25:8 ("...and in the 5th month on the 7th day of the month..."--KJ, RS, ML, JB, NIV, ASV, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus Jer. 52:12 ("Now in the 5th month, in the 10th day of the month..."--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, NIV, ASV, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT, LV). This problem, too, is going to embarrass biblicists no matter what version is utilized. That's the primary reason it's in our Bible pamphlet. Adherents to the Bible can only hope nobody notices the clash. 1 CHRON. 19:18 ("...David slew of the Syrians 7,000 men which fought in chariots and 40,000 footmen..."--KJ, RS, ML, LB, JB, NIV, ASV, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT) versus 2 Sam. 10:18 ("David slew the men of 700 chariots...and 40,000 horsemen"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, ASV, NEB, TEV, NWT, NAS, MT) or ("David killed 700 of their chariot teams and 40,000 men"--JB) or ("David killed 700 of their charioteers and 40,000 of their foot soldiers"--NIV, BBE, NAB) or ("David destroyed 1,700 chariots...and slew 4,000 horsemen"--LV). Again, biblicists will have to rely on their opponents' ignorance because no exit exists.

That completes our discussion of key examples in the second category (CV). During the final two months we'll concentrate on verses that are omitted (OT) in one or more versions. The contradictory aspect lies in the fact that translators can't agree on whether or not many verses, some of considerable import, belong in the "authentic" Bible to begin with.

REVIEWS

Among the publications emanating from Alpha and Omega Ministries of Phoenix, Arizona is a 44-page booklet entitled, Letters to an Anti-theist by James White, the director. It consists of three major sections--the extensive correspondence between White and myself, White's response to 14 critical questions posed in an earlier issue of BE, and a final section devoted to criticisms of some points made in BE through the years. The correspondence between us has already been covered in earlier issues of BE and need not be revealed, but White's responses to 14 questions submitted by us months ago and his criticisms of some points we made in days gone by were not addressed. Now is the time to fill that gap. Before beginning, however, we might note that the booklet's title, Letters to an Anti-Theist is based upon the unwarranted assertion by White that BE is an atheist (anti-theist) publication. BE has never taken a position on the existence of a God and I would challenge White to provide evidence to the contrary. Many biblicists live under the mistaken impression that opposition to the Bible is synonymous with atheism. On page 25 White says, "Notice first of all that I have used the term "anti-theist." Many atheists like to say that they have no beliefs, hence they have nothing to defend. But, if atheists have no beliefs, how can they write books about atheism? How can they publish monthly periodicals attacking the Bible? Are they not by doing so asserting something even if that something is negative? Of course they are. So when dealing with people such as Mr. McKinsey, using the term "anti-theist" is perfectly accurate. It is clearly Mr. McKinsey's goal to destroy any trust in the Bible and, by so doing, belief in God. Therefore, he is rightly called an "anti-theist." White's logic is often faulty because of fallacious assumptions and this case is no exception. Because his assumptions are wrong, his reasoning is erroneous and his conclusion is false. First, his initial statement that "many atheists like to say..." is based on the erroneous belief that I'm an atheist. This, in turn, is followed by the irrelevant comment that, "if atheists have no beliefs, how can they write books about atheism?" Our position is more one of agnosticism than atheism and BE is not a book about atheism. In fact, it is not even a book. Second, White's innate belief that opposition to the Bible makes one an atheist is shared by many biblicists and only reveals his myopic view of life. Many people with no view on the existence of a God (agnostics for example) as well as many who believe in a God (Moslems for example) discount the Bible or substantial portions thereof. Theists, such as Thomas Paine, believe in a God but strongly oppose the Bible. Third, White's comment, "are they not by doing so asserting something even if that something is negative?" is deceptive. Yes, periodicals such as BE are asserting something; they are saying the Bible is flawed throughout and not to be trusted, but that doesn't mean they are saying anything about the existence of God. Like many products of Sunday School, White can't seem to separate God from the Bible. He mistakenly equates the two such that a critique or denial of one is viewed as a critique or denial of the other. His comment that, "when dealing with people such as Mr. McKinsey using the term 'anti-theist' is perfectly accurate" is perfectly inaccurate. Fourth, "how can they publish monthly periodicals attacking the Bible" is a misleading observation since BE's primary purpose is to expose information about the Bible that is kept from the laity. This could only be viewed as an "attack" on the Bible by those who have a vested interest in seeing that only one side is presented. And lastly, White only adds to his malaise by saying Mr. McKinsey's goal is to destroy any trust in the Bible and, by so doing, belief in God." BE's subcaption clearly says that its purpose is to expose the Bible's errors, contradictions, and fallacies. That's our goal. The inseparable by-product is destruction of people's trust in the Bible. Common sense should have told him that if destroying people's belief in God were our goal, then dwelling on the Bible would be rather innocuous since Moslems, Hindus, and millions of other individuals believe in a God or gods without adhering to the Bible. If the Bible vanished tomorrow, that would not alter their theistic concepts.

Having registered our objection to the inappropriate title given to the publication, let us turn to White's responses to 14 of the questions posed by BE long ago. The first question we submitted was: Why are we being punished for Adam's sin? After all, he ate the forbidden fruit, we didn't; it's his problem, not ours. And why do women have to endure pain in childbirth because of Eve's behavior, especially in light of Deut. 24:16 and other references? In answer to this White says, "Few doctrines come under more consistent and heavy fire than that of man's sin. This is hardly to surprise us, as man does not like to be reminded of his sin, nor of his responsibilities before God.... First we are not being 'punished' for Adam's sin. Instead, we are living with the consequences of Adam's sin. There is a big difference between them. God does not punish someone else for Adam's sin, and if someone thinks he does, that person is mistaken....when Achan sinned (Joshua 7:20) he was punished by death and his whole family perished with him. They were not punished, but they experienced the results of Achan's sin. They were not said to be guilty but Achan, as the head of his house, was their representative and what he did was considered to be their responsibility as well. The same goes for Adam. As our representative, Adam fell and (according to Paul in Romans 5) we fell with him. We are not punished for his one act--rather we live in a world that is completely affected by that act...."

There is almost no end to the amount of rationalizing biblicists are willing to employ to justify many inane biblical doctrines and this imbroglio is no exception. Their approach is one of making black look white, making the irrational seem logical. White's "explanation" of the dilemmas associated with Original Sin is a clear example. To begin with, his first sentence is false. We are not dealing with "man's sin." Men didn't sin, a man sinned, according to the mythology. One man sinned, not billions. Second, we most assuredly are being punished for Adam's sin. If he had not eaten of the forbidden fruit we would all be living in paradise on earth from conception to death. Vices would be nonexistent and virtues would reign supreme. Third, to say that we are "not being punished" but merely "living with the consequences of Adam's sin" is a distinction without substance, a ruse to avoid the obvious. One might just as well execute an entire town because one of its citizens murdered a friend and then use the pretext that the town was not being punished but only bearing the consequences of one person's act. When Achan and his entire family were killed because of his act they were punished. To say they were not punished but merely experienced the results of Achan's sin is without merit. Using White's logic I could steal a car and say the owner was not robbed but only bearing the consequences of the car being taken. White says what Achan did was considered to be his family's responsibility as well. Why? Considered by whom? Certainly not by a just God! How could people be held responsible for an act they did not commit, that, in fact, was done by another? As I've said before that makes about as much sense as would the following scenario. While sitting at home watching TV one evening the police arrived to arrest me. I asked them why I was being arrested and they said my father in Australia just killed someone. I asked what that had to do with me and they said, "Well he's your father isn't he?" After starting out by telling us they were merely bearing the consequences; White shifted gears and claimed they were actually responsible.

White concludes, "Therefore it is inaccurate to say that we are punished in Adam's place or for Adam's sin. Of course, the anti-theist may reply, "but that's not fair! Why should I live in a messed-up world because of what someone else did? That is true- it's not fair. It is not fair that an innocent person dies when a drunk crosses the line and collides with the innocent person's car. But it happens...."

White alleges that people "live with the consequences" of the acts of others and concedes that's unjust. That's life he says. Drunks are out there. Yes, they are, but the collision was accidental. It was not intentionally planned or willed that innocents be injured because of a drunk's deeds. It was not willed by God that innocent people should suffer because of the drunk's behavior. Yes, innocent people are injured by drunks, but is White saying God caused them to bear the consequences because someone got drunk. No God could be just and condone such an arrangement. In typical apologetic style White is trying to create an analogy where none exists. No amount of Christian obfuscation is going to make an irrational situation look reasonable.

Interestingly enough, White's position is not biblical because it clashes with Paul. The latter clearly states that mankind is not under the cloud of sin because it is bearing the consequences of Adam's act but because everyone actually sinned when Adam sinned. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned"--Rom. 5:12. "All sinned" (past tense). Paul says mankind actually sinned when Adam sinned and that's why they are paying the penalty and suffering the consequences. People did not just inherit the ability to sin because of Adam's act; they did not just inherit a propensity or desire to sin, they are not just bearing the consequences, as White alleges; they sinned, period. If White intends to revamp his drunk analogy to fit Paul's logic and become biblical he is going to have to say that the innocent victims were not innocent after all. They sinned when the drunk sinned and got their just desserts, a position which is even more absurd. Surely White wouldn't say the innocent victims somehow sinned and that's why they were hit by the drunk?

Incidentally, the irrationality of Paul's position is also shown in the fact that in order for everyone to have sinned when Adam sinned, everyone would have to have existed somewhere when Adam lived. That would mean billions of people were waiting somewhere for their turn to be born.

Another question asked in BE months ago was: How can the Resurrection be so important when others were raised before Jesus? One strategy White often employs to elude dilemmas is to shift the focus by dwelling on irrelevancies and raising them to unwarranted levels of significance. His response in this instance is a fine example. "It is true that others were raised from the dead before Jesus was. This statement assumes the Biblical statements concerning those resurrections are true, and therefore the question is really a theological one, and must be answered in that way." Oddly enough, one who believes the Bible is the infallible, inerrant word of God is using the word "assumes." We have always been told that resurrections prior to that of Jesus were real because the Bible says they occurred; now we are told by fundamentalist White that belief in same is really an assumption. Moreover, why that causes the question to shift from biblical to theological and the importance attached thereto are unclear.

White continues, "There is no indication in the Bible that any of the others who were raised from the dead lived eternally. Instead, it is clear that they lived on and then died a natural death. Jesus did not die again--he lives eternally. This makes His resurrection unique as it is a true resurrection to life eternal." To begin with, this is the standard irrelevant tactic I often encounter on radio talk shows that is no more valid now than the first time it surfaced. Paul clearly states in 1 Cor. 15:14, 17 that it's the Resurrection that counts, not the fact that Jesus never died again. Where does Paul attribute importance to the fact that Jesus never died again? It's not germane. We aren't talking about how long people lived after their resurrection but only about Christ's resurrection per se. Secondly, where is the evidence showing that it's "clear" others "lived on and died a natural death?" White is obligated to provide chapter and verse. Otherwise it's merely conjecture. Nowhere does the Bible clearly state these people died again. Thirdly, White's comment that this is what "makes His resurrection unique" flies in the face of Paul's assertion that uniqueness resides in the fact that it occurred at all. In typical apologetic form White again seeks to rewrite and reinterpret the script as expediency dictates. He's added deaths to the Bible that are not mentioned and words to Paul he never said. Fourthly, deception lurks in White's comment that Jesus "lives eternally." According to the Bible that's true of everyone. Whether in heaven, hell, or otherwise, we all live eternally, regardless of our desires. Or maybe White has accepted annihilationism?

White continues, "Secondly, Jesus was God in human flesh. None of the other people who were resurrected were Deity." Even if Jesus were God, which many biblical verses deny, it's irrelevant, since Paul said it's the Resurrection per se that matters.

Again White, "Third, Jesus' resurrection was prophesied long before. He himself foretold it. None of the others foretold their deaths and resurrection. He also said that he had authority to take back his life again (John 10:17-18). No other person claimed to have a part in raising himself or herself." "Prophesied long before?" Long before what? Long before Jesus lived? Where and by whom? Where in the OT is the resurrection of Jesus prophesied? Leaving aside the fact that Jesus did not accurately prophesy the time of his own resurrection, the fact remains that this, too, is irrelevant. Where does Paul stress these points? Are we going to go by what Paul said matters or by what later apologists feel should be stressed? Are we going by the Bible or what its proponents allege? Moreover, Jesus did not raise himself. The Bible repeatedly says he was raised by another, i.e., God (Acts 2:32, 3:15, 4:10, 5:30, 13:30, Rom. 8:11, 10:9).

White concludes, "Finally Jesus' resurrection makes possible the resurrection of all who trust in him. We as believers have the promise of our own resurrection because of the resurrection of our Lord. My resurrection is not guaranteed because of the raising of the son of the widow of Nain or of Lazarus; but, as I am united with Christ, and he was raised, so shall I be...." Again "irrelevant" is the key word. Paul said it's the Resurrection that counts not the results that supposedly emanate from it. Second, as was mentioned earlier, everyone is resurrected eventually; so how could his resurrection "make possible" the resurrection of all who trust in him? Biblical teachings assert that we are all resurrected, except for those alive at the rapture, and we all live eternally. That's unavoidable. Where we reside eventually is another matter. In any event, these are irrelevant secondary issues indicative of one seeking to shift the focus. {To Be Continued}

Letter #275 from John Sikos, P.O. Box 443, Romeo, Michigan 48065-0443

Dear Dennis. I was extremely shocked to read in Issue #66 that you were not sent a copy of Letters to an Anti-theist by JW of Alpha and Omega Ministries. Professional courtesy would require that this be done automatically. I received a copy of the booklet UNSOLICITED (probably because you have permission to publish my name and address), yet JW claims you got a copy only because you circled the proper item on his order sheet. After reading his booklet, I am convinced it was intended for his audience, not you, because it is designed so that someone not familiar with BE would think you had been defeated....

Letter #276 from PD of Mesick, Michigan

Hi Dennis. Your two tracts are what I need to enlighten some of my born-yesterday, fundamentalist friends. The last two issues of BE start to touch on an argument that I have found to be most effective. A significant foundationstone for the fundamentalist belief in the validity of their Bible is the noting that their scripture has been passed through the centuries without so much as "one jot or tittle" being changed. As BE demonstrates, a number of changes (such as Mark 16:9-20) made by church scribes were intentional, and not innocent errors. Thus, instead of saints faithfully copying and translating the scripture, it was done by deceitful men lacking moral integrity, who put the worldly interests of the church hierarchy ahead of any form of eternal punishment for their deeds. That being the case, the fundamentalists must now prove that the particular verse they are quoting is identical to that written by the original "inspired" author, and therefore is the one true, undebatable word of God. Once I have them on the defensive, I can use facts about the different versions and conflicting translations to totally rattle their smug air of superiority. By their own admission, once part of scripture becomes suspect, all of it is in doubt. How delicious. This "authenticity" question often tones down even the most annoying "fire and brimstone" speaker!....

Letter #277 from DM of Dayton, Ohio

Dennis. Please send me your two new pamphlets.... I work with some born-again types, 32nd degree masons, and others who think "if it's in the bible it is correct," period. Want to whip it on them. Keep up the good work.

Letter #278 from PK of Berkeley, California

Dear Dennis. I've never in my life enjoyed reading the Bible as much as I do with your newsletter as my guide. Thanks for your consistently interesting and vitally important work....Best of luck in all your endeavors.

Letter #279 from JQK of New York, New York

Dear Dennis....Someday I hope all the priceless information in BE can be published in book form. You're doing a fantastic job.

Letter #280 from VSF of Garnavillo, Iowa

Dear Mr. McKinsey....Your publication is just wonderful and you are doing a great job. I just can't find words to thank you and look forward each month to receiving it.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) Letters have a much greater chance of being published in BE if they are succinct, to-the-point, well-written (proofread), and reasonably scholarly.

(b) The problems and contradictions highlighted in our two new pamphlets on the Bible and Jesus are synchronized with the King James Version. Always check to see which version of the Bible biblicists are using before assuming a contradiction exists. Modern translators, such as those who created the NIV, have often rewritten the text to remove a problem. Honest, objective scholarship is not one of their hallmarks.

(c) Continuation, alteration, or elimination of the pamphlets depends upon field- tested effectiveness. Please let us know how they fare and the strength of each point.

COMMENTARY

VERSIONS DIFFER (Part Four of a Five-Part Series)--The third and final category within differing versions is composed of variations between translations that are attributable to words or phrases in one text that are omitted in others (OT). Since the number of conflicts is sizable and many are of minimal significance, only those of substantial importance will be outlined. All others at our disposal will only be cited for those who wish to pursue the matter further. PSALM 145:13 ("The Lord is faithful in all his words and gracious in all his deeds"). Maybe the KJ, ML, LB, AS, BBE, NEB, NWT, NAS, and MT feel the Lord is not faithful and gracious since they omit this verse. MATT. 5:22 ("...whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment...." "Without a cause" is omitted in every version except the KJ, ML, and LV. May we infer that the latter allow one to be angry as long as there is a cause while all others prohibit anger for any reason? MATT. 5:44 ("Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them which despitefully use you...."). Only the King James and the Living Bible tell people to bless their cursers and do good to their haters. All others delete the underlined sentence. MATT. 6:6 ("...and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly"). Since believers are often not rewarded openly, if at all, that could account for the fact that every version except the King James and the Living Bible wisely omit the word "openly"? MATT. 6:13 ("For thine is the Kingdom and the power and the glory, for ever"). This powerful verse is omitted in the RS, LB, JB, AS, BBE, NIV, NAB, TEV, NWT, and NEB. Maybe they feel it isn't forever? MATT. 17:21 ("Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting"). Since this verse is omitted in the RS, JB, NIV, BBE, NEB, TEV, and NWT, one might conclude they feel prayer and fasting are unnecessary. MATT. 18:11 ("For the son of man came to save that which was lost"). This important verse is omitted in the RS, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, and the NWT. Perhaps they feel that's not why he came? MATT. 19:9 ("...whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery"). Since this verse is omitted in the RS, ML, LB, JB, NIV, NEB, TEV, NWT, and NAS, are we to conclude they would allow a man to marry a woman who is put away? MATT. 23:14 ("Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widow's houses, and for a pretence make long prayer; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation"). If damnation awaits those making long prayer, then one can understand why this verse is not in the catholic NAB and JB versions. I've witnessed some "Hail Marys" that seemed interminable. However, it must also be noted that it's not in the RS, LB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, TEV, and NWT either so there may be no ulterior motive. Only the KJ, ML, NAS, and LV feel it's authentic. MATT. 24:36 ("But of that day and hour no one knows, not even the angels of heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only"). The KJ and LV are the only two versions without "nor the Son" which could easily lead one to conclude that they are trying to make Jesus look more knowledgeable than he really is. In this case, the KJ and LV would seem to be the least honest translations. MATT. 27:24 ("...I, Pilate, am innocent of the blood of this just person"). It's interesting to note that several versions left out the word "just." One might conclude they don't feel Jesus is just. MARK 1:1 ("The beginning of the gospel about Jesus Christ, the Son of God"). Only one version, the Jehovah's Witnesses' NWT, omits "the Son of God." That's odd since Jesus is referred to several times as the "Son of God" in the Witnesses' catechism entitled, Reasoning from the Scriptures (pages 209-210). MARK 9:29 ("...This can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting"). Every version except the KJ omits "and fasting." Apparently Christians are becoming less fond of physical denial which fasting entails and prayer doesn't. MARK 10:24 ("Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God"). The underlined part is omitted in the RS, NIV, NAB, TEV, NWT, and the NAS. They believe that entering heaven is difficult, period. All others believe it's hard only for those who trust in riches. MARK 11:26 ("But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses"). Many modern versions--RS, LB, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, and the NWT--omit this important verse. MARK 14:68 ("And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew"). The prophecy by Jesus in John 13:38 that the cock would crow after the third denial, not the first, is shown to be false by this verse. The RS, LB, JB, NIV, NEB, NWT, and NAS eliminated the problem by omitting "and the cock crew." MARK 16:9-20--Every version has these verses in one form or another although the NIV has a footnote stating they do not exist in the two most reliable early manuscripts. Whether or not they belong in the "authentic" Bible remains in dispute. LUKE 9:55-56 ("But he turned, and rebuked them and said,...the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them").

Discontent on the part of King James' supporters is understandable in view of the fact that only three modern versions--the ML, NAS, AND LV--have the underlined part. LUKE 11:2 ("...They will be done, as in heaven, so in earth") and LUKE 11:4 ("...but deliver us from evil"). It's interesting to note that every modern version except the LV omits these well-known King James comments. LUKE 24:51 ("...he was parted from them and carried up into heaven") and LUKE 24:52 ("And they worshipped him and returned to Jerusalem with great joy"). The NEB and NAS omit "...carried up into heaven" and "worshipped him" which implies they do not believe these occurred. JOHN 3:13 ("...even the Son of man which is in heaven"). The RS, LB, NIV, BBE, TEV, NWT, and NAS omit the underlined part and imply Jesus was not in heaven. JOHN 6:44 ("He that believeth on me hath everlasting life"). One can understand KJ only supporters being upset when every version except the LB, BBE, and LV omits "on me." Most versions say one need only believe. Belief in Jesus per se is not specified. JOHN 7:8 ("Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast"). After making this statement, Jesus went to the feast. By omitting the key word, "yet," many versions--RS, JB, AS, NEB, NAB, TEV, NAS--are clearly showing Jesus engaged in prevarication. JOHN 7:53-8:11 (The Woman Caught in Adultery). Every version except the NEB and the NWT omits these verses. As with the last 12 verses of Mark 16, the NIV has a footnote stating the earlier and most reliable manuscripts don't have this story. 1 COR. 5:5 ("...that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus"). By omitting the word "Jesus," many versions--JB, NIV, NEB, NAB, TEV, and NWT--imply Jesus is not Lord. 1 COR. 5:7 ("For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us"). When they see the phrase "for us" omitted, it's not hard to understand why the supporters of every version except the KJ, LB, BBE, and LV are disgruntled. Was Jesus sacrificed for who knows what or was he sacrificed "for us"? 1 COR. 10:28 ("...for the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof"). Every version omits this verse except the King James. Perhaps they don't feel the earth is the Lord's afterall? COL. 1:14 ("In whom we have redemption through his blood...."). Every version except the KJ, ML, and LB omit "through his blood." Without that phrase it would appear that mere reliance upon or belief in Jesus, rather than his death on the Cross, is sufficient. 1 PETER 4:1 ("...Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh"). When they see every version except theirs omitting "for us," one can again understand the concerns expressed by KJ and LV supporters. Without it one is not sure why he suffered. And lastly, we have JOHN 14:14 ("Anything you ask me in my name I will do"). The KJ version and many others--RS, JB, AS, NEB, NWT--omit "me" in this verse and by so doing imply that one need not ask Jesus in particular to be satisfied. One need only ask in his name which diminishes his role and importance. Admittedly, in several instances, circumstantial more than solid evidence is being employed to account for the various omissions. But every attorney knows circumstantial evidence is admissible in a court and can be decisive for a conviction.

In closing, it should be noted that biblicists could argue the omissions are justified by the Hebrew and Greek texts. If so, then why do they surface in some versions and not others? More than likely the reason for these differences is attributable to the fact that every one appears in one or more ancient text and their inclusion or exclusion from one or more versions is primarily based on expediency and the philosophy translators seek to convey. (To Be Concluded Next Month)

HEAVEN--From a biblical and theological perspective what is the most important goal of nearly every Christian? To what end are their efforts directed; what's it all for? In a nutshell, it's to save souls from hell and for HEAVEN. Jesus is only a means to that end; he is not the end itself. The overriding purpose is to ferry people into that realm of eternal bliss known as HEAVEN. All the preaching, all the writing, all the time, effort, and money are geared toward that one overarching, all-encompassing aspiration. But, unfortunately, very few of heaven's adherents have seriously thought about all the problems and ramifications, both biblical and practical, associated with what has come to be known as HEAVEN. They haven't thought it through.

Biblically speaking, there are 7 verses and a parable attributing qualities to heaven that range from unacceptable to loathsome. Why would anyone want to cross its threshold in light of the following? REV. 12:7 ("And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels"). Heaven is supposed to be a perfect place. Yet, it experienced a war. How can there be a war in a perfect place and if it happened before why couldn't it occur again? Why would anyone want to go to a region in which war can occur when that's precisely what most people are trying to avoid. MATT. 11:12 ("And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth and the violent take it by force"). Violence and force in a perfect place? REV. 19:14 ("And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses..."). Again, the antithetical idea of war in heaven. MATT. 11:11 ("...he that is least in the Kingdom of heaven is greater than he"). How can heaven, the perfect location, have inequality and levels of status? MATT. 24:35 ("Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away"). The verse clearly states that heaven, like earth, will pass away. Why seek a place that will eventually vanish? Mark 13:31 and Luke 21:33 concur. To forestall the back-to-the-Greek defense and reliance upon the assertion that the word "Heaven" is only referring to the sky above, we should note that it comes from the Greek word "ouranos" which is the only word used for "heaven" in all the gospels. MATT. 13:33 and LUKE 13:20-21 ("...The Kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in 3 measures of meal, till the whole was leavened"). How can heaven be utopian when it's like leaven, a contaminant, as several verses show? 1 COR. 5:8 ("Therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth"), LEV. 10:12 ("And Moses spake unto Aaron,...Take the meat offering that remaineth of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and eat it without leaven...for it must be holy"), 1 COR. 5:6 RSV ("Your boasting is not good. Do you not know that a little leaven leavens the whole lump?"), LUKE 12:1 ("...he began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy"), and MARK 8:15. MATT. 16:19 ("And I will give unto thee the Keys of the Kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven..."). How could people be bound or restrained in a perfect place of freedom? Perhaps it isn't that free? Lastly, we have a parable in MATT. 20:1-16 which clearly demonstrates that heaven is the antithesis of a just environment. Briefly stated, the parable is as follows: Early one morning an estate owner went out and hired some workers for his field at $20 per day. Three, 6, 9, and 11 hours later he hired additional workers. Yet, when everyone was paid that evening, they all received the same amount. In 20:1 Jesus equated this arrangement with heaven. Those who worked the entire day understandably grumbled and Jesus related the dialogue that occurred. "...on receiving it they grumbled at the householder, saying, 'These last worked only one hour, and you have made them equal to us who have borne the burden of the day and the scorching heat.' But he replied to one of them, 'Friend, I am doing you no wrong; did you not agree with me for $20. Take what belongs to you, and go; I choose to give to this last as I give to you. Am I not allowed to do what I choose with what belongs to me?....'" If that's Heaven, Christians are pursuing the kind of milieu that's all too prevalent on earth today. Like war, it's precisely the kind of condition nearly everyone is trying to avoid. For Jesus to quote the landowner (God) as saying, "Friend I am doing you no wrong" is enough to create rejection of Jesus and heaven. While biblical verses show that heaven is far from desirable, many practical problems show it's far from viable. As with the Flood account (See: Issue 11's Commentary) believers must confront the series of practical questions that are engendered. Very few people have taken the time or effort needed to soberly critique what heaven would entail. (1) If the number of rewards and/or possessions in heaven is equal regardless of productivity, as Jesus stated in his parable, won't that create dissension and a feeling among many that heaven is not what they expected? (2) The Bible repeatedly says people will be rewarded according to their works-- MATT. 16:27 ("For the Son of man shall come...and then he shall reward every man according to his works"), ROM. 2:6 ("...the righteous judgment of God; who will render to every man according to his deeds"), REV. 22:12 ("...my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be"), PSALM 62:12 ("...for thou renderest to every man according to his work"), REV. 20:12 ("...and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works"), and REV. 20:13 ("...and they were judged every man according to their works"). But where does the rewarding occur since this world is certainly not the locale and there is no biblical basis for an intermediate stage such as Purgatory? Apparently it occurs in heaven. If so, will some people in heaven have 6 cadillacs while others will have only 1 or 2, figuretively speaking? How rewards will be dispensed and in what form is a very practical question that's rarely addressed. Since some people committed more good deeds on earth than others, some mechanism must exist by which some will receive more rewards than others. As a result, the inequality so evident on earth will continue in heaven. The heaven described by Jesus in his parable, on the other hand, is one in which rewards for labor are equal regardless of one's efforts. So which is the true heaven? One in which people receive equal rewards regardless of the amount of effort demonstrated or one in which rewards are greater for those who generated the larger number of good deeds? (3) Will there be rules, laws, and regulations in heaven or does freedom reign unhindered? The obvious question is how people could interact in any form whatsoever without personal constraints. (4) Is everything in heaven abundant and free as is commonly believed? The answer is either yes or no, assuming something is there besides people. In either case, would heaven be synonymous with paradise? Either we would have to work for that which we sought or we would be given that which we didn't earn. The former does not sound that appealing and the latter violates Paul's admonition that, "when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat" (2 Thess. 3:10). Moreover, to say our finite deeds on earth earn us infinitely free rewards in heaven is as unjust as to say our finite sins on earth earn us infinite punishment in hell. (5) Do you continue to learn in heaven or is your knowledge restricted to that which was learned on earth? If your reservoir of information grows, then how could that occur without interaction with something other than people? If growth does not occur, then aren't unequal levels of awareness eternally fixed? (6) How could heaven be a utopia when every inhabitant will be far from perfect? Even those we love the most have undesirable traits and would have to be changed. Everyone who ever lived is far from perfect, so who can think of any person or group with whom they would want to spend an eternity? If personalities are not altered or perfected in heaven, how will you be kept from encountering unpleasantness from those who earned admittance but are displeasing nevertheless. If people are segregated to avoid this dilemma, you'll be alone forever because everyone displays some disagreeable characteristics. (7) In order for heaven to be a state of bliss, won't the memories of its inhabitants have to be stripped of much that occurred on earth? If not, won't unpleasant periodic flashbacks interrupt an otherwise idyllic existence? Or is all recollection of earthly existence extinguished? One can only speculate as to what the latter would do to a person's level of intelligence. (8) Does everyone in heaven have the same degree of intelligence? If not, then aren't unheavenly feelings of inferiority and inadequacy unavoidable? (9) People change dramatically over the years such that the person you are at 10 often has almost nothing to do with the personality you have at age 90. So do you enter heaven as you were at age 2, 32, or 92? And do you continue to age or is it fixed. If the latter, at what age is it fixed, by whom, and on what basis? Could someone's age be fixed at the mental age of a normal 40 year old when he only lived on earth 2 months? (10) When fetuses and infants die and enter heaven, do they stay at that age or do they grow and develop a personality which never existed on earth? (11) Do people reproduce in heaven or is the number anchored forever? If reproduction is not allowed wouldn't those who wanted children feel they were in something other than heaven? Or is the desire to have children abolished? If the number is allowed to increase, how does this occur? (12) If people are created in heaven, how could God be just, since they would be allowed to by-pass the earthly test that everyone must surmount in order to attain heaven. They never accepted Jesus and/or performed good deeds. (13) How will people be recognized in heaven? If everyone has the appearance they died with on earth won't many be saddled with an appearance they wished to improve or eliminate? Or is the appearance of everyone altered as they desire and you are simply told in some manner who is whom? Or is the appearance of everyone completely abolished? One can only guess how you would recognize someone who has no appearance whatever. (14) And finally, if people will be reunited with their relatives and friends in heaven, will they also be able to reunite with animals? Unless people have their memories of what occurred while on earth radically altered or abolished, won't they also yearn to be with the best companions many ever had? How could this occur since biblicists believe animals have neither souls nor immortality? Or is the desire to reunite with earthly things abolished for everything except people?

These are only a few of many questions that must be addressed by those who take heaven seriously and seek to provide a rationale. Queries of this nature aren't immaterial because millions of people are literally staking their lives on heaven's existence. Everything they do and say is done with an eye on that final arena, the expected reward. They should realize that problems as potent as many found throughout the Bible accompany the whole concept.

Biblicists who really think they have thought it through are urged to write us a letter describing heaven as they think it is or as they would like it to be. You can use any portrayal imaginable. We only ask that it be SPECIFIC AND PRECISE. No glittering generalities, please.

REVIEWS

Last month we addressed answers given by JW of A & O Ministries to two questions posed in BE months ago. Other questions submitted by BE were also addressed by him in Letters to an Anti-theist and two more merit a reply. The first is how Noah (Gen. 6:9) and Job (1:1) could have been perfect if all have sinned (Romans 3:23)? JW's reply was, "Little time need be spent on this, as it is clearly answered by asking the question, 'Why do you equate perfection and sinlessness?' The Hebrew terms used in these passages do not mean sinlessness. Rather, the Hebrew word is tam, which refers to completeness, not sinless perfection. When applied to man, it would refer to a complete man with moral integrity (see: Brown, Driver, Briggs Hebrew lexicon for details). Also we see that Noah offered sacrifices (Gen. 8:20) as did Job, for it was his regular custom (Job 1:5). Why would these men sacrifice if they did not know of their own sin?"

The little time that need be spent is on the rationalizations JW apparently adopted from some prominent apologists to escape this problem. They are the standard fare that's meted out to an uncritical laity and are fatally flawed in several respects. First, JW says, "the Hebrew word is "tam," which refers to completeness, not sinless perfection." Complete in what way? Complete "with moral integrity," says JW. But that's sinlessness. What's the difference? He is either complete morally or he isn't. If he is complete then he's sinless; if he isn't complete then he's a sinner like everyone else. To say someone is a complete man with moral integrity is to say he is sinless. If he isn't a complete man with moral integrity then he's a sinner. There is no inbetween. He is either perfect or he isn't. Like his apologetic mentors, JW carefully avoided giving a precise definition to "a complete man with moral integrity." Why? Because it can only mean "sinless perfection. Second, if Noah was not morally perfect, i.e., sinless, then why was he chosen to be on the Ark? If he was morally imperfect, i.e., a sinner, then he had no more right to be chosen than any other sinner of his day. He should have perished with all the other sinners. Incidentally, there were 7 people on the Ark with Noah. Unless they were morally perfect, what right did they have to be saved either? They, too, were sinners like everyone else. Third, JW says, "Noah offered sacrifices" (Gen. 8:20) and these would not have been necessary if he did not know of his "own sin." What he craftily avoided telling his readers is that: (a) The sacrifices were offered after the Flood had ended which means Noah could have been sinless until the Flood subsided. He could have been sinless while the Ark was being built and after it was launched; (b) Gen. 8:20 does not say the sacrifices were offered because of any sins committed by Noah. In fact, verse 21 implies they were only intended to appease God because the latter said, "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake.... Neither will I again smite any more every living thing...." (c) Biblical sacrifices were offered for a wide variety of reasons. Why assume those in Gen. 8:20 were offered for sins? (d) If they were offered to remove sins why couldn't they have been offered by Noah for the sins of everyone but himself. The text is nebulous on this point. And lastly, JW says Job must have sinned because he, too, offered sacrifices as "was his regular custom" (Job 1:5). At this point JW's "scholarship" sank to a level that can only be described as pathetic, if not desperate. Apparently he is relying on reader lethargy as his sole means of support because one need only read the text to see that Job's sacrifices were offered for his sons and daughters' behavior, not his own. "His sons used to take turns holding feasts in their homes, and they would invite their three sisters to eat and drink with them. When a period of feasting had run its course, Job would send and have them purified. Early in the morning he would sacrifice a burnt offering for each of them, thinking, 'Perhaps my children have sinned and cursed God in their hearts.' This was Job's regular custom" (Job 1:4-5 NIV). And to think apologists accuse us of engaging in eisegesis (reading something into the text that isn't there) and taking verses out-of-context!

Another query addressed by A & O is found in the third section of the same pamphlet. JW writes, "In the February 1983 issue, page 3, McKinsey alleges that Jesus did not fulfill the prophecy of Matt. 12:40 RSV ("For as Jonah was 3 days and 3 nights in the belly of the whale so will the Son of man be 3 days and 3 nights in the heart of the earth"). He bases this on the idea that Jonah was in the whale's belly for 3 days and 3 nights, but Jesus was not in the tomb 72 hours (Friday evening to Sunday morning). He bluntly says, 'His prophecy failed.' Now, some have taken a Wednesday crucifixion position to avoid this, but that is not only unnecessary but Biblically insupportable. Rather, the answer lies in the obvious fact that the Jews counted any portion of a day as a full day. Therefore, Friday was day one, Saturday day two, Sunday day three....

Again, JW has relied on the common rationalizations that permeate the standard apologetic writings. And like them his explanation has the same inaccuracies. First, and most important, how are 3 nights going to be shoved into the time slot from Friday afternoon to Sunday morning? Apologists always seek to ignore the reference to 3 nights. Second, 3, 6, or 10 hours does not make a day. The prophecy says 3 days, not fractions thereof. Please provide chapter and verse to support the assertion that "Jews counted any portion of a day as a full day." Jews know a day's length as well as the rest of us and I've never been shown any portion of their literature to the contrary. Third, JW's allegation that "a Wednesday crucifixion position...is not only unnecessary but biblically insupportable" is only half true. It is necessary but biblically insupportable. And lastly, the prophecy failed because Jonah was not in the whale as Jesus was in the tomb. Jonah remained alive while Jesus was dead.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) We wish to thank some perceptive readers who noticed a couple of errors in our new tracts. In THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? #6 should have Gen. 32:30, not Gen. 32:20 and in JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER? #5 should have Mark 14:66-68 rather than John. (b)

Many readers have requested tapes of my radio appearances. Although they aren't available now, we hope to distribute some eventually.

COMMENTARY

VERSIONS DIFFER (Part Five of a Five-Part Series)--Last month we completed our specific enumeration of significant words, phrases, and sentences that have been omitted in one version or another. This month we'll conclude the third and final category by citing some texts of lesser importance in which some or all of the words have been omitted in one or more versions. Interested parties can look up the specific details and the problems created thereby. In 2 SAM. 23:33 "son of" is omitted in the KJ, RS, LB, AS, TEV, NWT, NAS, and MT. MATT. 9:34 and 16:2b-3a are left out of the NEB. MATT. 12:47 does not exist in the RS, LB, or JB. MATT. 21:44 is not in the RS, JB, NEB, or TEV. In regard to MATT. 27:35 ("And they crucified him, and parted his garments casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots"), only the KJ and ML have the underlined phrase. MARK 7:16 is not in the RS, LB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, TEV, or NWT. MARK 9:44, 46 is not in the RS, LB, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NAB, NEB, TEV, or the NWT. In MARK 10:7, "And cleave to his wife," is not in the JB, NAB, NWT, or the NAS. MARK 15:28 is omitted in the RS, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, and the NWT. LUKE 17:36 is not in the RS, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NAB, NEB, TEV, or the NWT. LUKE 22:19b-20 is not in the NEB. LUKE 22:43-44 is not in the RSV. LUKE 23:17 does not exist in the RS, LB, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, or the NWT. LUKE 23:38 is absent from every version except the KJ and LV. LUKE 24:12 and 24:40 are deleted from the RS and NEB. LUKE 24:36 isn't in the RS, LB, NEB, or the NAS. JOHN 5:3b-4 is omitted from the RS, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, TEV and NWT. ACTS 8:37 is not to be found in the RS, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, TEV or the NWT. ACTS 15:34 is not in the KJ, RS, LB, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, or the NWT. ACTS 24:6c-8a is absent from the RS, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, and NWT. ACTS 28:29 is omitted in the RS, LB, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV and the NWT. ROM. 16:24 is not in the RS, LB, JB, NIV, AS, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV, or the NWT. And finally, the phrase, "and so we are," in JOHN 3:1 is in every version except the King James.

Before ending the entire subject of how versions differ, a few examples that were overlooked earlier need to be covered. GEN. 47:21 ("And as for the people, he removed them to cities from one...."--KJ, ML, AS, NWT, NAS, MT, LV) versus ("...and as for the people, he made slaves of them from one...."--RS, LB, NIV, JB, BBE, NEB, NAB, TEV). Translators can't seem to agree on whether they were removed to the cities or made slaves. Admittedly, many youngsters setting out to make their mark in life have concluded there isn't much difference. MATT. 18:15 ("If thy brother shall trespass against thee"--KJ, RS, ML, LB, AS, BBE, NAB, TEV, NIV, LV) versus ("If your brother commits a sin"--JB, NEB, NWT, NAS). Translations of this verse conflict. The latter refers to sinning in general while the former is only concerned with sins against you in particular. Even if "thee" referred to all of mankind, the problem would remain. LUKE 23:42 ("And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom"--KJ) versus ("And he said, Jesus, remember me when you come into your kingdom"--all other versions). By omitting the word, "Lord," every version except the King James is implicitly denying the deity of Jesus. Only in the KJ is he addressed as "Lord." ACTS 20:7 ("On the Saturday night"--NEB, TEV) versus ("Upon the first day of the week"--all other versions). Saturday is not the first day of the week. PHIL. 2:6 ("...who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God...."--KJ, ML) versus ("Who, being in very nature God, did not consider equality with God something to be grasped...."--NIV, JB, AS, NAB, NEB, TEV, NWT, NAS, RS). This clash is of exceptional importance because every version except the KJ and ML have Jesus denying he can become God's equal. FIRST THESS. 5:22 ("Abstain from all appearance of evil"--KJ, NAB) versus ("Keep away from evil in every form"--all other versions). Rejection of the KJ Version of this verse by nearly every translation available is quite understandable in light of the fact that people should be told to abhor anti-social activities rather than just the appearance of same. Far too many politicians, clergymen, businessmen, celebrities, and other notable public figures appear to be heeding the KJ teaching by abstaining from the appearance of evil while indulging behind the scenes. FIRST TIMOTHY 6:5 ("Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself"--KJ) versus ("And constant friction between men of corrupt mind, who have been robbed of the truth and who think that godliness is a means to financial gain"--all other versions). After listing some characteristics exhibited by people who ignore the teachings of Jesus, only the KJ version of this verse admonishes believers to avoid these individuals. In no other version does this verse say believers are to eschew such people. 1 JOHN 5:7 ("For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one"). The only verse in the entire Bible clearly alleging the Trinity's existence is 1 John 5:7. Yet, it's absent from every version on the market except the King James. Matt. 28:19, 2 Cor. 13:14, and 1 Peter 1:2 have much less potency because oneness is not asserted. And lastly, we have REV. 22:14 ("Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in...."--KJ) versus ("Blessed are those who wash their robes, that they may have the right to the tree of life and that they may enter...."--all other versions). Since the KJ version of this verse is teaching salvation by works, one can easily understand why every modern version changed "do his commandments" to "wash their robes." The latter is more nebulous and does not clearly detract from Paul's doctrine of salvation by faith.

In summary, then, what are the obvious conclusions to be drawn from all the material that has been presented over the last four months concerning differences among versions. First, variations in doctrine and theology emerge because translators often can not agree on how a verse should be translated. Second, theological deviations sometimes emerge because they can not agree on whether or not particular words, phrases, or sentences should even be in the "authentic" Bible. And third, variations in the translation of separate verses have generated textual disagreements as to facts. Anyone who says, as was originally stated on the front page of Issue #66, that "there is nothing in the Christian faith that depends on any disputed passage in Scripture, nothing whatsoever" is either deceived or dishonest. Either his research is wholly inadequate or he knows the truth and has intentionally opted for deception. In either case, he's not to be taken seriously.

CHURCH BY ANOTHER NAME?--For more than 30 years the editor of BE has attended meetings conducted by agnostics, atheists, humanists, rationalists, and other freethought advocates. They are usually congenial and entertaining affairs which highlights the problem. One can't help but ask whether they are a force for change or an accommodation to a feeling of isolation. To what extent are they necessary when so much of that which occurs therein resembles activities within a typical church. As in a church, the same people are usually delivering essentially the same message to the same people; guest speakers are invited; the hat is passed; music is played; performers exhibit their talents; the opposition is satirized and vilified; people leave with elevated spirits; picnics and other socials occur; rummage sales and other money-generating programs take place, and items are sold or distributed free. Praying, genuflecting, costuming, symbolic eating or drinking, hand-raising, eye closing, and religious dancing do not occur, but they are also absent from Unitarian/Universalist churches which are churches, nevertheless. All of the previously-mentioned activities are to be encouraged and promoted as long as they are viewed AS ADJUNCTS TO, RATHER THAN SUBSTITUTES FOR, an effective program of engagement and expansion. Every activity should be judged in terms of how much our effectiveness is enhanced and our membership increased. When meetings become little more than ideological support groups to which we can retire periodically to recharge our batteries, participants are merely temporarily escaping an unfavorable ideological environment to which they must return. Escapism is not the answer. When freethought advocates meet, goals and activities are crucial and real accomplishment must occur. The central issue is whether or not the previously-mentioned activities contribute to a feeling resembling that of a lockerroom at half-time or a barroom at lunch. As long as they help our forces grow and succeed, they are to be promoted. But when they only pacify with temporary feelings of euphoria, changes are in order. When socializing replaces proselytizing, failure replaces success. Interestingly enough, a similar concern is expressed by fundamentalists and evangelicals toward mainline Christian churches; namely, they have jettisoned their fervor to become little more than social organizations. In any event, I'll undoubtedly continue going to freethought meetings whenever practical and voicing my concern as opportunities arise.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #281 from DM of Pasadena, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. Although your reply to letter #269 contains an element of truth, it needs to be balanced with some additional facts. First of all, you should not use the King James translation as a standard (however imperfect) by which to compare all others.... Although you have not stated it out and out, I get the impression that you view the KJ Bible as a standard in honesty which was established before matters heated up, and that the subsequent "drift" from that standard is politically suspect....

Editor's Response to Letter #281 (Part a)

Dear DM. I certainly would not use the KJ as a standard by which to judge anything, especially all others versions, as its imperfections are numerous. My intent was to show that modern translations have sometimes made changes in the KJ text for reasons of political expediency. Although the KJ is often faulty and in need of change, these are not the changes upon which I focused. I dwelled upon those which appear to be unnecessary and/or suspect.

Letter #281 Concludes (Part b)

With respect to your reply to Letter #268b, a bracketed text need not be taken as an alternative option; it may simply be there as a reference for those familiar with the KJ Bible. Since most readers are familiar with the KJ Bible they would normally be interested in seeing those verses which the new translation deleted. Why make the reader look them up?

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #281 (Part b)

In essence, DM, you're saying the bracketed text does not belong in the Bible according to the translators of some modern versions. And the point I was making is that it does belong according to the translators of other versions. So who is correct? Specifically, we were discussing the last 12 verses of Mark 16 which some versions have and others don't. Your key phrase is "which the new translation deleted." Should it have been omitted is the point upon which translators are at odds. Brackets merely highlight the text in dispute; they don't settle the issue. Either it belongs or it doesn't. How do we know which is correct?

Letter #282 from BF of Louisa, Kentucky

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I've found fertile and informative your first part (Issue #58) summarizing your "Speech" of Aug. 29th before the American Rationalist Convention....

Unless my memory fails me, your 58 issues so far have not included a full-dress critique of Gleason Archer's ambitious 475-page ENCYCLOPEDIA OF BIBLE DIFFICULTIES? Or did I overlook it? I suppose that if BE represents the most sustained research and presentation of "faults" manifold in the bible, Archer's book represents the most impressive defense of scripture against all such data, dismissing all criticisms as themselves mistaken or irrelevant, etc.

For the first time I've been delving into Archer's tome and am alternatively impressed and disgusted. Manifestly his command of Hebrew, Aramaic, Greek, all editions of the bible, and all "higher criticism" volumes and articles, make Archer a formidable foe of what BE embodies (though it was published before your series began in 1983). If you have not yet embodied in BE a detailed critique and (where possible or relevant) refutation of his scores of defensive articles, surely one or two BE issues would be a welcome activity.

Archer's book doesn't cover by any means all the items of inconsistency and atrocity that your 58 issues detail.... His harsh defensive judgments in many instances nauseate ethical freethinkers. For example, Archer lauds God's killing of Elisha by 42 boys (2 Kings 22:23-24); those "young men" were equivalent to lethal youth gangs today.... Personally I was aghast at Archer's conclusion that "pacifism is completely lacking in support from the word of God.".... For "the sun stopped" (Joshua 10:12-14) Archer lamely suggests "optical prolongation of sunshine" etc., but admits this exegesis is "of dubious validity."

Editor's Response to Letter #282

Dear BF. I bought, read, and thoroughly redlined Archer's book years ago. Although comments on its contents have occasionally appeared in BE, I have never engaged in a thorough analysis because priority has usually been given to books, articles, and letters directly criticizing BE. Later, I hope to correct the imbalance.

Letter #283 from Namfonos of Annapolis, Maryland

I spent 42 hours discussing theology about 15 years ago with the most educated idiot I ever met. I asked him, "When (not if) you get to Heaven, will you be aware of having been here talking to me?" He said, "Definitely not! Earth is a sinful place, and there is no knowledge of sin in Heaven." After reading Issue #69, I looked in a concordance under heaven, sin, and knowledge but I did not find reference to "no knowledge of sin in heaven."....

Letter #284 from Dan Barker of The Freedom from Religion Foundation, P.O. Box 750, Madison, Wisconsin 53701

Dear Dennis. I am doing some bible study on the contrast between biblical and secular morality (however either of those may be defined.) In the process I "discovered" some contradictions. It is actually kind of fun to find them all on your own. I know you already know about them because you mentioned the first one in the August BE. Seventh (2 Kings 25:8) versus tenth (Jer. 52:12); three (2 Kings 25:17) versus five (Jer. 53:22); five men (2 Kings 25:19) versus seven men (Jer. 52:25); 27th (2 Kings 25:27) versus 25th (Jer. 52:31). You know what I think? Jeremiah's version starts off perfectly, word for word, copying the Second Kings version of the story. But as the narrative continues it becomes slightly different, here and there, until towards the end of sections it gets worse with words being swapped with other words, mistakes, additions, etc. This is exactly what would happen, I think, if the passage were being recited from memory! You start off strong, then it gets a bit fuzzy. What do you think?

I am hearing good things about your pamphlets....Also, I did an informal radio debate with JW on Phoenix KTAR last week....Whenever I mentioned a bible verse, he would jump in to give the "correct" interpretation, in the light of history and in the proper context. Context: the final defense of Xians.... Of course, we all agree that a proper historical examination of the bible involves context, but there has to come a point where an error is recognized for what it is.

I am doing a debate Friday night in Atlanta: "Is the bible an acceptable guide for moral behavior?" The opponent...is liberal so this should be interesting. I am going to make a point (among others) that the liberals give credibility to the bible, which is used to such devastating effect by the fundies....

Editor's Response to Letter #284

Dear Dan. I agree with both your assertions. Much of Jeremiah appears to be a memorized version of Second Kings and biblicists prostrate the "context defense" by repeatedly resorting to it because nothing else comes to mind.

Letter #285 from Anonymous

(The national furor that has arisen over the movie, THE LAST TEMPTATION OF CHRIST makes the following observation particularly appropriate--Ed.). Hebrews 4:15 says that Christ was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. But other scriptures teach that mankind is born with a sinful nature while Christ was not born with one. So how can the temptations be the same???? Obviously either He was not tempted like as we are or else he was born with a sinful nature, making the temptations equal. I have never met a fundamentalist that could even begin to answer this point and I have brought this up with believers that know the bible very well, having studied it for many years.

Letter #286 from IF of Vacaville, California

Dear Dennis. I was surprised you claimed you are not anti-theist with all your years of proving the "holy bible" is a mass of irrational superstitious rantings of priests and their fellows who believed the earth was flat and the sun went around it. They had no sciences to tell them their supernatural beliefs were hogwash....

Does this supposed deity race after the earth in all its gyrations to listen to millions of supplications and at the same time guide the destinies of mankind around the world? With the religious they feel it pays to be ignorant. They feel comfortable with an unseen, do nothing, silent God. God never did anything about mass murders we call wars. Never did anything about diseases that kill, maim or inflict pain. Our prisons are burgeoning with criminals and this deity never intercedes to prevent crimes. Never did anything to prevent national disasters that take human lives whether by the hundreds or thousands. A theist is an unthinking, unquestioning robot addicted to priestcraft. In short, deism is idiocy made respectable. God is man's most useless invention.

Dear IF. Before you move me into a category I wholeheartedly reject, let me state my position on god or theism with unmistakable clarity. As I've said on numerous occasions, the burden of proof lies on he who alleges. Religious people should know that I'm willing to believe in god, ghosts, mediums, demons, angels, spirits, channeling, miracles, horoscopes, astrology, psychics, ouija boards, the supernatural and anything else for that matter as long as they adhere to one proviso. That's all I ask. Just one simple request! Prove it! Don't give me theories, speculations, guesses, hopes, dreams, wishes, desires, beliefs, faith or indoctrinations. Don't give me one-time-only, non-repeatable, non-testable events. Don't give me internal alterations in one's psychology or physiology that can't be tested, observed, or demonstrated, only felt or believed. And don't give me effects that can't be clearly related to the supposed cause. I have no objection to believing in a god as long as proof is forthcoming. Is that too much to ask? But surely theists don't expect me to adopt their belief on the basis of that which has been presented so far. Every "proof" I've heard and every piece of evidence I've seen for the existence of a god is easily countered by evidence to the contrary. No convincing evidence for a god's existence has emerged but I'm more than willing to hear or witness anything to the contrary, as long as cross-examination is permitted. A popular tune on the market containing the lyrics, "Everything is beautiful in it's own way" must have been written by theists because the world reeks with corruption, injustice, deceit, and exploitation. Most of the planet is unfit for human habitation, either physically, mentally, or morally. Most assuredly, if I had the powers of a god most of this world would be dramatically altered. Suffering, injustice, immorality, egotism, exploitation, and deception would experience blows from which they would never recover. No doubt millions of other freethinkers would agree. The theological teaching that adversity exists because people must be tested in order to prove their faith is inane because the tests are unevenly applied; indeed, some people are hardly tested at all while others endure a lifetime of nightmares. Where is solid evidence that an omnipotent being exists somewhere who cares about what happens to people and actively intervenes in human affairs to render assistance? Unless and until convincing evidence emerges, I'll remain a non-theist. "Anti-theist" is too negative an appellation as it conjures up images of one opposing new information or denying a god's existence despite sufficient evidence to the contrary and an atheist is one who flatly states there is no god. As conditions now stand, theology rests far more on superstition and faith than facts and reason.

Letter #287 from LR of North Belmont, North Carolina

First, I would like to commend you on your efforts and fine publication, BE! I think the acronym, BE, is quite appropriate. To the point,...you have talked about tactics in confronting the believers, and I agree with all your suggestions. The salient problem, however, isn't tactics; it is moral courage.... There is a huge population of skeptics and non-believers, I think, who simply lack the courage to confront the religious establishment, even in the smallest of ways--one on one or in letters-to-the-editor. This fear is our largest obstacle. Example: My father and I are both non-believers, but we have to deal with the public (indeed, are dependent upon it) through our small retail business in a small Bible-belt town. The derision that would befall us should our beliefs become public would be economically disastrous.

It is unnecessary to belabor this point by further listing examples. I'm sure you know what you're up against and I wish you well, but I think it is a losing battle. Most non-believers...are content to hold their beliefs to themselves and avoid religious controversy.... I admire you, but your very notoriety provides for you. You can't expect a crusade from people who hold their beliefs in quiet despair. I wish I were wrong.

Dear LR. A couple of points. Years ago I initiated BE although I was, and remain, no more protected than you. Seeing a tremendous need for accurate responses to biblical rationalizations, I decided to fill the void, regardless. I couldn't hold back any longer. Second, although courage is crucial, determination, dedication, and enthusiasm are equally important qualities that are absent from most freethinkers. The latter just don't have the fervor that is so obvious in many of their opponents. If that arises from diminished conviction, then the religious/biblical elements are to be noted for their ability to influence, if not weaken, their staunchest opponents. How many freethinkers are willing to donate the amount of time, effort, and money that is so freely given by millions of biblicists? Publishing BE is like having an unpaid occupation and, frankly, there are a few months when it's less inviting than others. But like Christians going to church several times a week, I feel an inner drive to become involved. Self-discipline, determination, and an ability to bounce forward from setbacks are absolute musts. The members of any football team know they are doomed if these qualities are present in their opponents while absent in themselves. Rugged individualists floating in and out of a movement to which they have only periodic dedication have no chance against an army of persistent, determined, and coordinated believers willing to make requisite sacrifices. It's a full-time job in which personal pleasures are relegated to the backburner. Personally, I enjoy writing BE immensely and receive a pronounced sense of satisfaction and accomplishment. Third, many freethinkers want to become involved on a permanent full-time basis but fail to do so, not out of an absence of courage but because they just don't know what to do. They feel frustrated, isolated, and impotent. After trying various approaches that were not as successful as hoped, they have become discouraged. A primary reason BE appeared was to address this shortfall. Lastly, the battle is by no means lost. Indeed, in many respects the situation has never been better. Anyone who thinks religion in general and the Bible in particular are exceedingly influential should study conditions centuries ago when many governments were little more than theocracies. Conditions are better and continue to improve but they can be far better much faster and that's what is not being accomplished.

Issue No. 71

Nov. 1988

COMMENTARY

WORKS OR WHIM--Whether people are saved by faith and/or works has been one of the most prominent issues throughout the history of biblical disputation. Most biblicists emphasize salvation by faith and employ such verses as ACTS 16:30-31 ("What must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved....") to prove their point. Others contend salvation is by works and quote verses such as MATT. 19:16-17 ("one came and said unto him [Jesus--Ed.], what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?...And he said unto him...if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments"), and still others use verses such as JAMES 2:14 ("What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him") to prove they are of equal importance. There is also a group that quotes verses such as EPH. 1:4-5 ("According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world,....Having predestinated us into the adoption of children by Jesus Christ....") to prove faith and works are of minimal importance since salvation is determined from the beginning. Although salvation by faith is propounded by the largest number of biblicists, especially those of a fundamentalist or evangelical orientation, prior additions of BE clearly showed that many verses of comparable worth teach salvation by works or salvation by predestination rather than salvation by faith. Issues 3, 53 and 54 exposed the conflict between a wide variety of verses each position can rely upon.

But above and beyond the obvious clash between verses per se is the fatal miasma in which faith-alone adherents find themselves. The latter repeatedly tell the world that Christianity is different from all other religions because Christianity alone teaches salvation by faith while all others teach salvation by works: "Ten of the 11 major religions of the world teach salvation by good deeds. Christianity stands alone with its emphasis on grace rather than works for salvation" (I'm Glad You Asked by Boa and Moody, p. 175) and "...every human religion, except Biblical Christianity, is a religion of salvation through both faith and works...." (The Bible Has the Answer by Morris and Clark, p. 60). Over and over again apologists tell others that salvation is a gift, pure and simple. There is absolutely nothing one can do to earn salvation. It's freely given by the grace of God and is not the result of anything you have done or can do. It's an unearned, unmerited gift wholly unobtainable by works. Apologetic writings, especially those encased in a fundamentalist perspective, are replete with three messages in this regard. First, salvation is not earned but obtained wholly without works or merit on our part: "That there is nothing that man can do to merit forgiveness is the clear teaching of the Scripture" (Answers to Questions About the Bible by Mounce, p. 160). "If salvation is really the gift of God's grace...as the Bible teaches, then how can there be a price one has to pay to earn it...." (The Bible Has the Answer by Morris & Clark, p. 144). "There are numerous other false ideas about salvation that are prevalent, but all of them...consist in man's doing something which he feels will help earn his salvation." (The Bible Has the Answer by Morris & Clark, p. 53). Second, salvation is an unearned free gift: "One of the clearest emphases of the gospel is that salvation is a free gift attained not by works of any kind...." (The Bible Has the Answer by Morris & Clark, p. 144), and "Inherent in the idea of a gift is that it must be received from the giver, and this is true of the gift of salvation" (I'm Glad You Asked by Boa & Moody, p. 202). Third and last, salvation comes from God's mercy, his grace: "Oh, if people would only get the idea out of their heads that salvation is by man's good doing instead of the grace of God!" (Dr. Rice, Here is my Question by John R. Rice, p. 281), "...grace is unmerited favor" (Answers to Questions About the Bible by Mounce, p. 156), "...grace is irritating because there is absolutely nothing meritorious about receiving what we do not deserve...God saves people by His grace alone...Grace means enjoying favor when we deserve wrath...In 40 years the Lord has taught me three precious lessons about His grace: First, I can do absolutely nothing to save myself...." (Answering Christianity's Most Puzzling Questions Vol. 1 by Sisson, p. 63, 68), "...men must be saved by the grace of God, without human merit...." (False Doctrines by John R. Rice, p. 77), "...man must be saved, if he is to be saved at all, by grace and not by anything he has achieved or earned" (Does the Bible Contradict Itself by Arndt, p. 133), "If salvation is really the gift of God's grace...as the Bible teaches, then how can there be a price one has to pay to earn it?" (The Bible Has the Answer by Morris & Clark, p. 144), and "In a real sense this is all quite analogous to the Biblical doctrine of grace, which has been accurately defined as the unmerited favor of God.... The sovereign grace of God (and it is sovereign or irresistible because mankind is its recipient wholly apart from merit) is the agency by which men are finally redeemed.... We must understand, then, that faith and works can never in themselves (or together for that matter) save anyone. It is sovereign grace alone that forms the basis for eternal salvation.... Note carefully that if we could earn our salvation in any way then grace would be annulled, for then it is no longer the gift of God but a debt which God owes to us.... the absolute sovereignty of grace is one of the unshakable foundations of essential Christianity" (Essential Christianity by Walter Martin, p. 72-73, 78-79). Key biblical verses in this regard are EPH. 2:8-9 ("For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast"), TITUS 3:5 ("Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us"), 2 TIM. 1:9 ("Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace,...."), ROM. 11:6 ("And if by grace, then it is no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more of grace....") and ROM. 6:23 ("...but the gift of God is eternal life....").

The fatal flaw permeating all of the above lies in the fact that salvation is not a free gift. There is nothing free about it. Even in Christianity it must be earned. You must take an affirmative act, i.e., accept Jesus as your Lord and Savior or face condemnation. Biblical salvation is not a gift by God's grace; it's earned. One merits salvation when he accepts Jesus. In fact, it can't be denied if one commits himself to Christ. Biblicists fail to realize that faith, itself, is a work. You must do something, i.e., believe, in order to be saved. It's not a gift and if you don't fulfill the necessary requirement you can't be saved. Jesus clearly said he was the only way, there is no other: JOHN 14:6 ("I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me"), JOHN 3:18 ("He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already...."), JOHN 3:36 ("He that believeth in the Son hath everlasting life and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life...."), 1 JOHN 5:12 ("He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life"), ACTS 4:12 and 1 COR. 3:11. Thus, you must do something to be saved; you must believe and that's salvation by works. In other words, Christianity is like all other major religions because it, too, requires salvation by works. What you do determines where you go. The only difference lies in the fact that Christianity requires a particular form of work, i.e., belief or faith. If you don't go out of your way to get it, you're lost. Thinking, believing, remembering and other mental processes require effort. Work is involved. If not, then millions of workers are being paid unnecessarily.

Apologists, themselves, admit that faith is a work. "Faith is not feeling; faith is doing" (Dr. Rice Here is my Question by John R. Rice, p. 257) and "Paul goes on to point out that a man's faith in Christ is counted by God as the supreme work of righteousness" (Essential Christianity by Walter Martin, p. 79).

Even the Bible admits faith is a work: 1 THESS. 1:3 ("Remembering without ceasing your work of faith and labour of love,...."), 2 THESS. 1:11 ("...and the work of faith with power"), JOHN 6:29 ("This is the work of God, that ye believe on him...."), and GAL. 5:6 ("but faith which worketh by love"). Faith is as much a work as physical deeds because both require people to do something, to take action. Consequently, salvation is not a free gift. It requires works, is earned or achieved, is based on merit, is not based on grace or God's mercy, and has a price attached. God is burdened with a debt to be paid to all those who fulfill the requirement. Although most biblicists say there is nothing you can do to merit salvation, in reality, precisely the opposite is true. There is not only something you can do; there is something you must do.

The only alternative to salvation by works is salvation by whim in which God, alone, determines who will be saved. This really is salvation by grace because salvation is truly a gift. People are required to do absolutely nothing. Beliefs, behavior, Jesus, morality, faith, and works are irrelevant and immaterial. God simply chooses and salvation really does become a free gift. If you must do anything to receive something, if a price is attached, then it is not a gift. Only when based on God's whim is salvation truly provided gratis.

In essence, all religions, including Christianity, believe in salvation by works or salvation by whim. No third alternative is available. You either earn salvation or you don't. And if you don't, then you freely receive that which others are denied. You receive God's grace which is nothing more than a euphemism for bias and partiality. The concept of grace is clearly antithetical to ROM. 2:11 ("For there is no respect of persons with God"), EPH. 6:9 ("...your master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with him") and other verses which deny God plays favorites.

UNIVERSALISM--One of the more interesting biblical teachings, which fundamentalists detest with all the vigor of a Hitler expounding on the Jews, is the concept of universalism, i.e., the belief that everyone is going to be saved, regardless. There are no exceptions. Denying it has any biblical basis or support, apologists try to avoid discussing the topic and relevant verses as much as possible. But, unfortunately, for them, it can't be shoved under the rug. Although universalism is subject to criticism (but what biblical concept isn't), there are at least 18 verses which lend impressive, if not convincing, credence thereto. JOHN 12:32 ("And I, if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me"), 1 COR. 15:22 ("For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive"), MARK 3:28 ("Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the Sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme"), ROM. 5:18 ("Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life"), ROM. 11:32 RSV ("For God has consigned all to disobedience, that he may have mercy upon all"), 1 JOHN 2:2 ("And he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world"), JOHN 1:29 ("Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world") and 1 TIM. 4:10 ("...we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe") are particularly potent and often quoted by proponents of universalism.

Other relevant verses in this regard are JOHN 1:9 ("That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world"), 1 TIM. 2:4 ("Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth"), HEB. 2:9 ("But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man"), 2 COR. 5:19 ("To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation"), EPH. 1:10 ("That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him"), ACTS 3:21 ("Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began"), COL. 1:19-20 ("For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell; And having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven"), PHIL. 2:10 ("That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth"), TITUS 2:11 ("For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men"), and 2 PETER 3:9 ("The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance"). With verses such as these is it any wonder that universalism has always had adherents within the Christian community.

JESUS' GENEALOGIES--One of the most discussed contradictions in freethought literature is the clash between the genealogies of Jesus found in Matt. 1 and Luke 3. One need only read the text to see that Luke traces the genealogy of Jesus from Jesus back to Adam and God while Matthew begins with Abraham and tracks it to Jesus. Luke lists 77 generations while Matthew has only 44. In order to see the problem in proper perspective one should create a chart listing the names in correct sequence in parallel columns. If horizontal lines are drawn to connect the same names, one can easily see that the lists are almost identical from Abraham to David. However, from David onward there is no similarity despite the fact that they both conclude with Joseph as the father of Jesus. The major reason for the contradictory names given after David is that the account in Luke traces the genealogy through David's son, Nathan, while that in Matthew traces it through another son, Solomon. This would easily account for the wide divergence in names following David but raises a couple of crucial questions: (a) How could Joseph and Jesus be descended from two different sons of David. How could two sons of David father two completely different genealogies which merge together with the last two individuals and (b) How could Jesus have contradictory genealogies? Few apologists deny differences exist so that's not in dispute. The real issue revolves around the common explanation given by most biblicists for two widely different genealogies of the same man. Their strategy hinges on a rather simple ploy. Jesus' genealogy is allegedly traced through Joseph in Matthew and Mary in Luke. Unfortunately for them, the shortcomings in their rationalization are equally simple. First, Mary's name is nowhere to be found in Luke's genealogy. Everybody's name is mentioned but hers. Imagine a genealogy in which every name is mentioned but that of the person whose lineage is being traced! Second, there is no genealogical record of any woman in the entire Bible. Are we to believe Mary is an exception? Third, Joseph's name is mentioned in Luke's genealogy so one can reasonably conclude that it's his lineage, not Mary's. Fourth, and last, according to OT prophecy, the Messiah would be a physical descendant of David. Mary appears to have been from the house of Levi, not David, since her cousin, Elizabeth (Luke 1:36) was a daughter of Aaron (Luke 1:5), i.e., from the house of Levi. If Mary was from the house of Aaron, how could either genealogy be hers since they relate David's lineage? On the other hand, Luke 1:27 and 2:4 show Joseph was of Davidic descent. The attempt to attribute Luke's genealogy to Mary is one of the more transparent subterfuges employed by dishonest apologists. Desperation set in because they just couldn't think of any other rationalization.

Another reason for their devious ploy is that it solves a problem created by the Virgin Birth. According to prophecy the Messiah must be a physical descendant of David. If Jesus' only connection to David is through Joseph, then Jesus couldn't be physically connected to David because the birth was virginal; Joseph was not his biological father. So apologists must attribute one of the genealogies to Mary in order to extend a physical connection from Jesus to David. Hence, the rationalization. One can only wonder why they didn't apply the genealogy in Matthew to Mary instead of the one in Luke since one is no more applicable to her than the other.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #288 from Ed McCartney, P.O. Box 79024, Lakewood, Ohio 44107 (Received in Sept. 1987)

Dear Dennis. In Issue #57 on page 6, (Editor's Response to Letter #228, Part b) you said, "The genealogies in Matthew 1 and Luke 3 clearly show Joseph is the physical, the biological father, of Jesus." How do the genealogies in Matt 1 and Luke 3 clearly show that Joseph is the physical, biological father of Jesus?

(A second letter on the same topic was received from Ed in April 1988.)

Dear Dennis.... I'd like to point out that both Joseph and Mary are descendants of David. Joseph's genealogy is in Matthew 1 and the genealogy of Mary is found in Luke 3.

I've written to you before about these two genealogies and why Joseph's is in Matthew 1 and Mary's is in Luke 3 and you didn't print it. You gave a reason for not printing it. Since you are the editor of BE, it's your business what you print. The point is, you've allowed those two genealogies to be criticized in the past in BE without printing an answer refuting the erroneous criticism.... If you intend to print an answer to the criticism...let me know.

Rom. 1:3 and Rev. 22:16 teach that Jesus Christ is a physical descendant of David. It is through Mary his mother. Her genealogy is shown in Luke 3.... Joseph is not the father of Jesus Christ. David is the father of Jesus Christ through Mary, or on his mother's side. On his Father's side (if it can be said that way) is God.... For these reasons Jesus Christ can be called both the son of David (Matt. 1:1) and the Son of God (Mark 1:1)....

Editor's Response to Letter #288

Dear Ed. I can finally address both your letters. The composition and sequence of the genealogies themselves answer your question. Every individual in both lists is the physical father or son of the next person in line. On what basis, other than apologetic expediency, do you assume that one relationship (Joseph to Jesus in Matthew) is an exception. Certainly nothing in Matt. 1 or Luke 3 warrants it. If 76 relationships in a list of 77 are biological, one would be rather irrational to assume the last is somehow different without strong evidence to the contrary. Following your logic I could make any of the relationships nonphysical.

Moreover, as was mentioned in Issue 6, several verses clearly show Joseph was the physical father of Jesus. Not only did the Jews ("And they said Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know"--John 6:42), ("And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?--Luke 4:22), ("Is not this the carpenter's son?"--Matt. 13:55), Philip ("We have found him, of whom Moses in the law and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph"--John 1:45), and the author of Luke (Luke 2:33, 2:27, 2:41, and 2:43) say Joseph was the father of Jesus, but Mary, herself, said he was ("...and his mother said unto him {Jesus--Ed.}, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing"--Luke 2:48). And who is in a better position to know?--the woman involved or hundreds of biased biblicists who never met Joseph in their lives and aren't even his contemporaries?

Letter #289 from JW of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

Dear Dennis. This is just a letter of support. I admire your quest for truth. It is hard for some people to see the truth as long as they believe what they have been taught to believe. Faith is by definition a belief that does not rest on logical proof or material evidence. I usually challenge Christians by asking them if they are interested in the truth. This is a baited question, because who would not be for truth. I then tell them that if their religion is not sufficient to stand up to inquiry, then it cannot be much of a religion. However, here in Oklahoma, the buckle on the Bible belt, reason is meaningless. A friend of mine, who sends money to Swaggart, was asked by me, how the kangaroos and koala bears got to the Middle East from Australia to get on Noah's Ark. He said, "I don't care; if God said they did, that is good enough for me." I call this "blind faith." I also have another life-long friend who got religion when his marriage started to fail. He attempted to Christianize me, but now that I am starting to show him some biblical errors, he is turning a cold shoulder to me. Which leads me to my maxim: People believe what they want to believe. Christians really are hateful people. They have been taught that everything is either good or evil. Therefore, if you disagree with them or their church, they perceive you as being of the devil. I once asked a street-corner preacher, "What made Satan turn from God, if he had it so good in Heaven?" The preacher turned to the crowd and said, "That's the devil talking through that boy!" It is easier to blame the devil than confront the facts....

Also I admire the way you have taken them on in their own battleground--the Bible. (A prominent national freethought spokesperson--Ed.) misses the whole point. You are not going to change peoples' minds if you ignore the thing that makes up their mind--the Bible.

I tell people they are just a collection of other peoples' ideas and thoughts. I tell them that if you had two babies born at the same hospital on the same day, one a Catholic baby and the other a Jewish baby, and the nurses got them switched accidentally, then the Catholic baby would be raised a Jew, and by the time he or she was 21 years of age, he or she would be convinced that Judaism is the one and only true religion. The Jewish baby would be indoctrinated into the Catholic Church and would just as strongly believe in Catholicism. I use this example to try to get them to be objective about religion.

Letter #290 from JMH of Columbus, Ohio

Dear Mr. McKinsey.... In my short time as a subscriber, I have thoroughly enjoyed your publication, and look forward to it each month. I also enjoyed watching your first debate with Jed Smock and look forward to attending more such debates with biblical "experts" in the future.

I find it continually fascinating that folks will suddenly become nit-picking critics of your critique. If any one of your readers doubts the need for your brand of "bible study," they need only attend one of your debates and observe the tone with which "questions" (read: sermons) are posed to you....

Letter #291 from RM of Salmon Arm, British Columbia

Dear Dennis. To maintain a complete consecutive order of your periodical, I must have Number 66 for which a money order is enclosed. In ordering, it seems that, in all sanctity, I must clutch-and-grab all copies from my voracious readers. Even more, the pamphlets recently published by you are as white caps on a wave....

Letter #292 from Anonymous

Dear Mr. McKinsey....I notice that "Dear Dennis" letters get published as well as those more formally addressed to you as editor. Is there some format that you acknowledge that I can use that will guarantee a letter will not be published in BE? It is somewhat awkward to be always clearly stating or requesting non-publication on the part of your correspondents. Does one need to request explicitly that one's name be withheld or reduced to initials for that to happen? Forgive me for being a little shy. But I suppose some of your readers are too. And it would indeed be a pity if they never established contact for fear of finding themselves in print....

Editor's Response to Letter #292

Dear Anonymous. As I mentioned several years ago, any letter or any part of a letter sent to BE may be published. If you do not want this to occur all you have to do is say so. That's no problem. If you say nothing, we assume there is no objection and it could be entered. That would occur with only your initials and city/state of residence. If you want your full name and address entered, as some do, just indicate as much. You must tell us what you want done. Otherwise, we will proceed on the assumption that there is no problem with publishing its contents.

EDITOR'S NOTE: I would recommend to all supporters of BE that they carry in their purse or billfold copies of the two pamphlets we created last summer. They are of great assistance during unplanned and unexpected encounters with biblicists. For example, when I exited from a theater recently after viewing The Last Temptation of Christ, some points contained therein proved to be rather effective against a distributor of baptist pamphlets. He was visibly shaken during our exchange and threatened to summon the police if I pursued him down the sidewalk.

Issue No. 72

Dec. 1988

COMMENTARY

HOMOSEXUALITY--One of the most controversial biblical teachings pertains to whether or not the Bible condemns or condones homosexuality. Homosexuals and sympathetic ministers have tried to employ biblical precepts in their ongoing dispute with biblicists of a more traditional orientation to prove the Bible supports, or at least doesn't condemn, homosexuality. But one need only read the Book to see their efforts are in vain. There is no sense in arguing with the obvious. Many verses can be used to prove the Bible condemns activities of this nature: LEV. 18:22 ("Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is an abomination"), LEV. 20:13 ("If a man also lie with mankind, as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they shall surely be put to death"), JUDGES 21:11 ("...Ye shall utterly destroy every male, and every woman that hath lain by man"), 1 KINGS 14:24 ("And there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the Lord cast out before the children of Israel"), 1 KINGS 15:12 ("And he took away the sodomites out of the land....") and DEUT. 23:17 ("There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor a sodomite of the sons of Israel").

Of course, homosexuals can always contend these prohibitions are from the Old Law, since all of the verses cited are from the OT, and we aren't under the Old Law any more. However, that can be addressed by citing some equally convincing NT verses: ROM. 1:26-27 ("For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature: And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use (a degrading word--Ed.) of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly...."), 1 COR. 6:9-10 Mod. Lang. ("...Be not misled; neither profligates, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor partakers of homosexuality...will inherit the kingdom of God") and 1 TIM. 1:9-10 NASB ("...the law is not made for a righteous man, but for those who are lawless and rebellious, for the ungodly and sinners...and immoral men and homosexuals....").

The gay community could possibly cite instances in which major biblical figures engaged in activities which could be interpreted as homosexual in nature. For instance, in 2 SAM. 1:26 David said, "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan: very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women" and Paul repeatedly told his followers to greet one another with a holy kiss (ROM. 16:20, 2 COR. 13:12, 1 THESS. 5:26 and 1 PETER 5:14). But these verses are weak and couldn't be used to substantiate strong biblical support for homosexuality.

Is there, then, any approach homosexuals can take to counter the claims of strict constructionists? Yes, indeed. They can always say the Bible is just plain wrong and that's that. The Bible not only allows, but promotes, slavery and that's wrong, and it not only allows, but promotes, the subordination of women and that's wrong (See Issue #8). The biblical stance on homosexuality could be cited as just another instance of an inaccurate and misguided doctrine. Although the editor of BE has no homosexual inclinations, that's the stance he would assume if he did.

ABORTION--Abortion, on the other hand, fares quite differently. Unlike homosexuality, it is not prohibited by any biblical verse or any series of connected verses. The only text that is repeatedly cited in this regard is EX. 21:22-23 ("If men strive and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, and yet no mischief follow: he shall be surely punished, according as the woman's husband will lay upon him; and he shall pay as the judges determine. And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life"). Even fundamentalist, John R. Rice, whom Jerry Falwell described as his mentor, admitted that "only in the case of Ex. 21:22-25 does the Bible specifically mention retaliation for the death or injury of an unborn child" (Abortion by John R. Rice, p. 8). Unfortunately for apologists their favorite quotation is inadequate in several respects. First, we are no longer under the Old Law according to biblicists and EX. 21 is a good example of same. Second, and even more important, careful reading of the words will show that they do not prohibit abortion. In fact, they aren't even discussing abortion. Notice what is said! If two men are fighting and hurt a pregnant woman such that a miscarriage occurs, "yet no mischief follows: he shall surely be punished." The man who caused the miscarriage will be punished and forced to pay by the woman's husband and a judge for what he did to the woman, not for what he did to the fetus. Third, the last line says, "if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life." If any mischief to the woman, not the fetus, follows, then the offender will be killed. The key word is "if." "If" any mischief follows. The mischief has already occurred if the miscarriage was the main concern. Obviously, mischief to the woman is the only concern since the fetus is gone. In truth, Ex. 21:22-23 has nothing to do with abortion. It's actually saying that if two men are fighting and a pregnant woman is injured in the process and has a miscarriage but suffers no other injury, the offender should be punished by the woman's husband. On the other hand, if the woman incurred "mischief," which appears to be death, then the injuring party must die.

Although there are no verses in the Bible clearly in opposition to abortion, is there any strategy by which biblicists can use the Bible to oppose abortion. Yes, there is, but two hurdles must be surmounted. They must not only find verses in opposition to the killing of human beings in general but also find verses saying the fetus is a human being throughout the entire 9-month gestation period. If the fetus is a human being for the entire 9 months and the killing of humans is wrong, then biblical opposition to abortion is demonstrated. If we assume the 6th Commandment (EX. 20:13), REV. 21:8 ("...murderers...shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone..."), 1 JOHN 3:15 ("...and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him"), GEN. 9:6 ("Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man"), and EX. 21:12 ("He that smiteth a man so that he die, shall be surely put to death") are still operative and refer to the killing of human beings, one can reasonably conclude the first hurdle has been scaled.

The second obstacle, however, is considerably more formidable. Apologists must not only employ verses showing that which lives in the womb is a human being, but that it is a human being throughout the entire 9-month period. Having laid down the requirements we can now analyze the most commonly used anti-abortion texts. EX. 23:7 ("Keep thee far from a false matter, and the innocent and righteous slay thou not..."), DEUT. 27:25 ("Cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person"), and 2 KINGS 24:4 ("And also for the innocent blood that he shed; for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood which the Lord would not pardon") are inapplicable because they assume the very point in dispute, i.e., that the fetus is a human being. He would have to be a human being in order to be innocent. Everyone would agree that the slaying of innocent people is wrong, but apologists are obligated to prove the fetus is "people" according to the Bible before claiming the Bible prohibits abortion. Humanity precedes innocence.

Moreover, PSALM 58:3 ("The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies"), JOB 14:4 ("Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one"), and JOB 15:14 ("What is man, that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?") not only show that newborns are not innocent but deal a fatal blow to the whole "age of accountability" idea. In fact, one could argue that PSALM 51:5 ("Behold, I was shapen in iniquity: and in sin did my mother conceive me") shows that the fetus, itself, is not innocent if one believes it's a human being. It's hard to conceive of one being shapen in sin and iniquity while remaining pure.

RUTH 4:13 ("So Boaz took Ruth, and she was his wife: and when he went in unto her, the Lord gave her conception, and she bare a son"), GEN. 29:32 ("And Leah conceived, and bare a son..."), and GEN. 30:22-23 ("...and God hearkened to her, and opened her womb and she conceived, and bare a son...") are used by abortion opponents in a feeble attempt to ignore the nine month gestation period by equating conception with bearing a son. All three verses say a son emerged at birth, but none says he was a son at conception or during the nine months of gestation.

The point at which a human being comes onto the scene is the key question not only with the biblical but the scientific and legal community as well. Is it at conception, at birth, or at some point during the nine intervening months? ISA. 49:5 ("And now, saith the Lord that formed me from the womb to be his servant...."), ISA. 45:1 ("...The Lord hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name"), and Eccle. 11:5 are used by anti-abortionists but only prove fetuses become human beings at some point during the gestation period, not at conception. Whether formed "from" the womb (i.e., after leaving) or "in" the womb, the fact remains that these verses are not saying he was formed at conception.

Biblicists also rely upon PSALM 139:13-16 RSV ("For thou didst form my inward parts, thou didst knit me together in my mother's womb...my frame was not hidden from thee, when I was being made in secret,.... Thy eyes beheld my unformed substance....") to prove the fetus is a human being but fail to realize these verses could only be used to prove the fetus formed at conception becomes a human being at some point during the nine months. How could one be a human being at conception, if one is knit together, formed, and made in secret during the pregnancy?

MATT. 1:18 ("When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost") and GEN. 25:21-24 ("...and Rebekah, the wife of Isaac, conceived, and the children struggled together within her.... And the Lord said unto her, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels, and the one people shall be stronger than the other people....and when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold there were twins in her womb") are stronger than any anti-abortion verses that have been discussed so far because they clearly show the fetus is a child at some point during the gestation period according to the Bible. They are strongly supported by LUKE 1:41 ("And it came to pass that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her [Elisabeth's--Ed.] womb....") and LUKE 1:44 ("For lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy") which, when used in conjunction with LUKE 1:36 ("And, behold, thy cousin Elizabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren"), prove the Bible teaches the fetus is a human being by the 6th month of the pregnancy.

What, then, can we conclude from all of the verses discussed so far. In essence, biblicists can use the Bible to prove the fetus is a human being not only at birth but by the 6th month of gestation. However, they can't use the Bible to clearly prove the fetus is a human being at conception or during the 1st and 2nd trimesters and that's when nearly all abortions occur.

They do have one final verse that could be interpreted as their strongest suit, however. JER. 1:4-5 ("Then the word of the Lord came unto me saying, Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations") appears to be the only verse in the entire Bible alleging someone is not only a human being at conception but prior to same. Unfortunately for the anti-abortionists the key phrase ("Before I formed thee in the belly, I knew thee") is ambiguous. Does it mean the speaker did not yet exist but God had already planned what he would be prior to conception or he already existed and God knew what he was? Obviously, antiabortionists will favor the latter. Second, God is speaking to Jeremiah alone. Upon what basis do they assume this applies to all of humanity. And finally, retreat to a verse of this nature means that apologists have abandoned any attempt to prove from the Bible that the fetus is a human being physically during the first 6 months of gestation. Instead, they are saying the fetus is a human being before conception, spiritually speaking, which is much less demonstrable and harder to prove.

REVIEWS

Some time ago we received a pamphlet distributed by the Gay Rescue Mission of San Francisco entitled Gay Life in the Holy Bible. The document clearly seeks to allay the fears and apprehensions of homosexuals influenced by biblical teachings. It states, in part, "The OT is contradictory about Gay sex. Leviticus says that men who lay with men should be put to death.... Leviticus does damn Gay sex, but with equal vehemence it condemns "leaving thine abode with thy head uncovered, traveling in a wheeled vehicle on the Sabbath, cutting thy hair and trimming thy beard.... And it is further said by Leviticus that if ever in your entire life you eat so much as one morsel of pork, duck, or goose, you are going to burn in hell forever without the slightest chance of redemption. The next time someone quotes the anti-Gay verse in the OT, tell them they should spend equal time damning the hatless, the clean-shaven, the short-haired, the Sunday riders, and pork eaters." Although some of the narrative is subject to dispute and there is more than one anti-gay verse, the pamphlet's point is well taken and that's why biblicalists resort to NT quotes.

The pamphlet continues, "Homosexual love is praised as greater than the love of man for woman in 2 SAM. 1:26 ('...thy [Jonathan--Ed.] love to me [David--Ed.] was wonderful, passing the love of women'). God's favorite person, David, had a homosexual love affair." But can one automatically conclude that strong love between two men must involve homosexuality. Many men, including myself, have had intense love for their fathers without homosexuality being involved. The text is not sufficiently clear in the example cited to draw that conclusion.

The pamphlet then made a poignant observation that seems to have eluded the apologetic community. "The OT condemns heterosexual rape in Judges 19 and many other places, but no one has ever interpreted that to be a condemnation of consenting heterosexuality. The story of Sodom and Gomorrah in Gen. 19 (mainly verses 1 to 12--Ed.) is about homosexual rape and those who hate Gays have interpreted it as a condemnation of voluntary, consenting homosexuality." Threats and intimidation were a dominant theme in Gen. 19 and that's not what gays are advocating. What was condemned in Gen. 19 is the question. Was it homosexuality per se or threats and intended rape by homosexuals?

And finally, using a variation on the "God is Love" theme, the pamphlet said, "Jesus never mentioned homosexuals. Exactly opposite from the hate-filled Paul, Jesus taught us to love everyone, even our enemies and those who hate us. The only time Jesus mentions hell as a punishment for sin is in reference to the sin of hate (Matt. 5:22). He refused to condemn anyone, saying, 'I have come not to condemn mankind but to save the world.' (At this point the incident wherein Jesus absolved the adulteress of guilt was related--Ed.)... Paul taught a vengeful God that will punish us for even the slightest offense. Jesus taught a forgiving, loving Heavenly Father. Once Jesus was asked to read a scripture, (Isaiah 61:1-2), ending with 'the day of the vengeance of our God.' When Jesus came to the part about a vengeful God, He refused to read it, but He 'closed the book handed it back to the attendant and sat down' (Luke 4:16-20)."

The pamphlet continues, "Jesus approved of physical affection between men. He often kissed other men, and at the Last Supper, 'One of the disciples, he whom Jesus loved was reclining with his head on Jesus' bosom' (John 13:23). 'He whom Jesus loved....' is mentioned 17 times in the Gospel...."

We don't advocate the "God is Love" or "Jesus is Love" approach because of major reservations about its textual viability. Nor would we assume kissing and hugging are to be equated with homosexuality.

On page 246 in the Encyclopedia of Bible Difficulties apologist Gleason Archer opened the abortion issue with an important observation. He says that since the "human status of a fetus in the womb until it reaches an advanced stage of gestation" is under scrutiny, it becomes essential to establish the Bible's viewpoint. He asks, "At what stage does God (which he equates with the Bible--Ed.) consider the fetus to be a human being...?" He begins by alleging that Psalm 139:13 RSV ("For thou didst form my inward parts, thou didst knit me together in my mother's womb") indicates very definitely that God's personal regard for the embryo begins from the time of its inception." But where does the verse say anything with respect to God's personal regard for the embryo or when this alleged respect began? All the speaker is saying is that he was put together in his mother's womb. If he was formed in his mother's womb, then how could he have been a human being at conception?

After quoting Psalm 139:16 ("Thy eyes beheld my unformed substance; in thy book were written, every one of them, the days that were formed for me, when as yet there were none of them") Archer continues with, "It is reassuring to know that even though many thousands of embryos and fetuses are deliberately aborted every year...God had their genetic code all worked out and has a definite plan for their lives." In effect, Archer is admitting verse 16 does not definitely say people are human beings prior to conception because having "their genetic code all worked out" and "a definite plan for their lives" does not mean they exist, only that plans have been laid for their existence.

In 1975 Sword of the Lord Publisher, John R. Rice, made an anti-abortion argument based on Psalm 51:5 ("Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me"). On page 13 of Abortion he said, "Now give attention for a moment to that tiny bit in the womb of David's mother. As it begins to take shape, David said, 'I was shapen....' It was David even then....When the conception took place, it was David who was conceived. The honest inference is that from the very time of conception it was the person who would later be known as David." The arguments of Rice are not valid for several reasons. First, the phrase "I was shapen in iniquity" clearly refers to someone or something being brought into existence, something that does not yet exist, like a house under construction. At what point does the house exist? Certainly not when only the basement has been dug or the foundation laid. Second, if David was shapened in iniquity then he was not shapened at the moment of conception. Rice clearly refers to the "tiny bit" beginning to take shape. How could the "tiny bit" be David if it was yet to be shapened? How could something be human that has no shape? Even an amoeba has shape. Third, according to several versions (ASV, NIV, NASB), the phrase "shapen in iniquity" could refer to the period from birth onward, not from conception onward. And finally, based on his analysis of the verse, Rice came to the unwarranted conclusion that "when the conception took place, it was David who was conceived." He assumed the very point in dispute, i.e., humanity was created at conception. In the minds of many humanity may arise at conception, but that isn't what this verse says. The honest inference to be drawn from Psalm 51:5 is not that a person exists from conception but that Rice has taken liberties with an imprecise text.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #293 from AGH of Sonoma, California

Dear Dennis. I do hope that real soon you will be able to do a commentary on what the Bible has to say about Lesbians and Gays. I went to the San Francisco Gay Freedom Day Parade, along with 250,000 others, and I was shocked to see all the Gay religious groups represented and marching. Could you state exactly what the Bible says about this subject: homosexuality....

Going on the assumption the Bible doesn't approve of Gays, how is it possible that there are so many Gay priests, ministers, and others claiming to be Christians, who promote Christianity. How is it possible that anyone could promote the very thing that promises them eternal hell, and demands they be put to death on earth? I watched Troy Perry and Jerry Falwell on Phil Donahue, and Perry said he was aware of the various verses (he stated the verses) that were used to justify discrimination against Gays, but that there were 10 times as many that talked about love and positive things. Either the Bible is God's word and all of it is true, as Falwell claims, or it is not, which can be verified simply by reading it. I feel that lesbians and gays really need to be informed about what is in the book, and Dennis, as the only real authority on the Bible as far as I know, anyway, I am hoping that you can put together another of your objective and impartial works of art (Commentary). Dennis I could never thank you enough for what you are doing to free America. I really hope that I will see freedom in my lifetime.

I feel that I am the best person to make my decisions for me, what I read, what I watch, what I say, what I put into my body. I don't do drugs, or cigs, or alcohol and I don't feel the government has the right to interfere in my peaceful, noncoercive, behavior....

Well I've taken enough of your time, thanx again so much, Dennis, for the wonderful job you are doing. I never tire of rereading all issues of BE over and over again.

Oh, I did write Phil Donahue and told him he should beg you to be on his show. I guess I should have included a copy of BE....If you are on TV or the radio you should announce it in BE....I'd feel real disappointed if I missed you on a program.

Editor's Response to Letter #293

Dear AGH. As you probably realize, this month's commentary sought to address most of your questions. As far as the Bible having 10 times as many verses talking about love and positive things is concerned, I'm not sure what verses Perry is referring to. I know of none advocating love of homosexuality. The Bible speaks of God's love but not his love of anything and everything. The "God is Love" approach is an ineffective strategem that's fraught with inadequacies. The God of the Bible displays anything but love in many instances. A sizable number of verses show he is clearly deficient in sympathy and compassion for those who violate his maxims and many who don't. Wailing and gnashing of teeth in eternal torment for finite crimes are hardly indicative of one consumed by love at all costs.

Letter #294 from Dan Barker of the Freedom From Religion Foundation, P.O. Box 750, Madison, Wisconsin 53701

Dear Dennis. Hardly a week goes by when I am not able to refer someone to B.E. It is so nice to have you as a resource. Just yesterday a man from Tennessee called to ask about bible contradictions. He liked our "Confused" nontract, but he wanted more.

I think you have a good point about freethought gatherings. Our annual conventions are always a lot of fun, and they are usually quite informative, but I feel they are necessary. We are required to meet, at least the board of directors, by law. And they are fun. They are a chance to finally meet some of the people around the country with whom we have been corresponding. There are a lot of atheists and agnostics who feel like they are the only ones in the world -- they are simply hungry to be around other freethinkers. Many of them (too many, I think) would rather not get involved in any activism, for various reasons, including possible job loss, or family strains, etc. (One of our members had her house burned down! She will be telling her story this week at our convention.)

I remember when I was a brand-new freethinker: I was starving for some "fellowship" and interaction with other rational minds. Not that I had anything particular in mind--I just wanted to be where some of their experience and knowledge could "rub-off," if you know what I mean. Often, just being around other activists can be "inspiring" or motivating. We usually have people at conventions who say, "I have been challenged to do something, say something, write letters, challenge local ministers...." And we always have some people who say, "This is the first time I have ever been around people who think the same way I do, where I am not afraid to say what I feel....."

Editor's Response to Letter #294

Dear Dan. Meetings by your board of directors are certainly necessary. That wasn't what I had in mind nor did I mean to disparage the "supportive" aspect of freethought gatherings. I was primarily referring to meetings in which supporting supersedes reporting, playing supersedes planning, and eating supersedes beating.

Incidentally, I want to take this opportunity to thank you and other leaders in your organization for the support and cooperation they have given BE. And after seeing you on national TV several times, I've concluded you are doing well as a sensitive, articulate and representative spokesperson for the freethought movement.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #295 from WAA of Madera, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I would like to make some comments on the difference of translations you began in issue #66. At the present time I have only four different versions to go by, the KJ, NIV, NAS, and the LB.

The following are two conflicts that I did not see in any of your issues of BE. Exodus 22:9 ("...both parties shall come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn..."--KJ, NIV, NAS) versus ("...both parties...shall come before God...and the one whom God declares guilty...."--LB).

Exodus 22:28 ("Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people"--KJ) versus ("Do not blaspheme God or curse the ruler of your people"--LB, NIV, NAS).

Editor's Response to Letter #295 (Part a)

Dear WAA. You are correct. They weren't included and probably should have been.

Letter #295 Continues (Part b)

On page 1 in Issue #70 you stated the following were not in the versions you listed, but actually they are. Matt. 12:47 is in the NIV; Luke 17:36 is in the LB, but written a little differently; Luke 23:38 is in the NIV, NAS, and LB; Luke 24:26 is in the NAS and LB, and John 3:3-4 is in the NIV.

In Issue #66, page 3 you quoted the part of Acts 20:28 which says ("...of God, which he obtained with the blood of his own Son"). You incorrectly stated "his own Son" appears in the NIV, NAS, and the LB. Actually these three versions agree with the KJV which has "his own blood" rather than "his own Son."

Editor's Response to Letter #295 (Part b)

I rechecked my notes and the versions involved and discovered you are correct on every count WAA. Your thorough homework is to be commended. Too bad you aren't available to check my research each month. That's the kind of assistance I need. Errors of this nature aren't major, but they are irritating and do occur occasionally. My notes were correct but that wasn't sufficient. They were transferred incorrectly. Luke 24:26 should have been Luke 24:36 and John 3:3-4 should have been John 5:3b-4. I said Luke 23:38 is absent from every version except the KJ and LV. Actually that's only true of that part of the verse which says, "in letters of Greek and Latin and Hebrew."

Letter #295 Continues (Part c)

Since you didn't list the RSV, ML, NAS, LV and MT among those versions not having Acts 15:34, I assumed these five do. However, of my four versions (the KJ, LB, NIV, and NAS), I could only go by the NAS which...does not have the verse in the text itself.

Editor's Response to Letter #295 (Part c)

I'm afraid you are in error this time WAA. My copy of the NAS has Acts 15:34, although a footnote says many of the early manuscripts do not. Interestingly enough, although you do not have a copy of the RSV you mentioned it and piqued my interest. I should have listed it among those versions not having Acts 15:34, since the verse only appears in a RSV footnote.

Letter #295 Continues (Part d)

On page #1 of Issue #69, Psalm 145:15 should have been 145:17. This verse is not omitted in the NIV as you stated.

On page 2 of Issue #69, you said Luke 9:55-56 was in the NAS but it is not in mine....

Editor's Response to Letter #295 (Part d)

As far as Psalm 145:15 is concerned, WAA, we both erred. You said it should have been 145:17 and I said 145:15 when it should have been 145:13. I also mistakenly listed all the versions that have the latter half of Psalm 145:13 rather than all those that don't. Again, my notes were correct but I miscopied.

Your version of the NASB may not have Luke 9:55-56 but mine does. Again, our versions of the NAS appear to be in disagreement.

Letter #295 Continues (Part e)

You stated 1 John 5:7 ("For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one") is the only verse in the entire Bible clearly alleging the Trinity's existence. Would Matt. 28:19 ("Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost") be another one?

Editor's Response to Letter #295 (Part e)

As I said on page 2 in Issue #70, WAA, Matt. 28:19 has "much less potency because oneness is not asserted." The verse does not say they are equal or identical; whereas, 1 John 5:7 says "these three are one."

Letter #295 Concludes (Part f)

Of the 15 different Bible translations you listed in issue #66 could you please tell me which versions religious denominations use...? Thank you for your time and once again keep up the good work with BE.

Editor's Concluding Response to Letter #295 (Part f)

In simple terms I would give the following analyses of the standard versions listed earlier. The King James or Authorized Version was issued in 1611 and has been the most widely accepted protestant version in the English-speaking world. By the late 1800's so many changes were needed in the KJ that a Revised Version (RV) was issued in England in the 1880's. Because the RV was oriented toward the old country, an American Version known as the American Standard Version (ASV) appeared in 1901. The ASV was itself revised in 1952 by a group of essentially liberal protestants who created the Revised Standard Version (RSV). The New World Translation (NWT) appeared in 1961 and is the standard text of the Jehovah's Witnesses. The Jerusalem Bible (JB) of 1966 and the New American Bible of 1970 are products of the Catholic Church and reflect the philosophy of same. The former is oriented toward England while the latter is essentially the standard catholic text in the United States. The New English Bible (NEB) of 1970 and the New American Standard Bible (NASB) of 1971 are new conservative translations with a more scholarly orientation. The New International Version (NIV) of 1973 is also a recent conservative translation that's less difficult to read. The Bible in Basic English (BBE) of 1949, Today's English Version (TEV) of 1966 and the Living Bible (LB) of 1971 are written in a popular, if not simplistic, style that often sacrifices accuracy for ease of reading. The LB is so inaccurate that it's not worthy of serious consideration. Personally I think the NIV and LB are the most political, the RSV is the least political, the RSV is the most liberal, the LB is the most inaccurate, the KJ is the most nebulous, and the LB is the easiest to read.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #296 from DAP of St. Petersburg, Florida

Dear Mr. McKinsey. I thought I was a fairly smart guy until I read your work. I now see I'm just a beginner. What you have produced is simply outstanding. I have in my miniscule library works by some of the authors that are mentioned in your offerings. (Kersey Graves, Ingersoll, Joseph McCabe, etc.). I would suggest to you, and rightfully so, that the works you have generated are of equal literary status! I would also suggest that you may have exceeded these aforementioned gentlemen in that you seem to have written more for the comprehension of "the common man." Literary enlightenment is useless to someone who cannot understand what he is reading; Clarity, Brevity, and Ease of Understanding are musts. Now that you have demonstrated conclusively that which is NOT real, I will ask you to remark on what IS real: (1) Where do we come from? (2) Why are we here? (3) Where do we go at death....

In closing, I would like to thank you for what you have done. I fear the loving Christians among us may not give you your fair due, so I will do it for them....

Editor's Response to Letter #296

Dear DAP. Your comments are very gracious. We always appreciate positive reinforcement. As far as your questions are concerned, I have no idea where we came from, if anywhere, why we are here, if there is a reason, or where we are going, if anywhere, nor does anyone else. Speculation and guesswork abound. Untold numbers of people with all sorts of answers will assure you they know, when, in fact, they are only whistling in the dark. I learned years ago that most of life's critical questions have no definitive answers. That's a major reason conflicts abound. With no demonstrably correct and provable answers to life's fundamental questions, people proceed from a wide divergence of basic assumptions.

Letter #297 from Mark Potts, 8510 E. 66th Pl. #A, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74133-2008

(Mark has undoubtedly contributed more letters to this publication than any other reader. Adjectives applicable to many of his points range from picayune and provisional to probing and profound. We have never devoted a substantial portion of BE to a series of letters from one individual, but an exception is in order. Anyone as energetic and "evangelistically-minded" as Mark deserves recognition--Ed.) (From Letter #1)--Dear Dennis. According to 2 Cor. 4:4 ("In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not....") and John 16:11 ("Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged") Satan runs this planet. That being the case, why do Christians pray to God rather than him for rain?

Some Christians argue that there is "no time" in heaven. But according to Rev. 8:1 RSV, "there was silence in heaven for half an hour." The "tree of life" in heaven also yields its fruit each month (Rev. 22:2).

Heaven also has linear dimensions because the heavenly city can be measured with a "rod" (Rev. 21:15-17 RSV). And apparently there is gravity there as well because angels fall on their faces (Rev. 7:11)....

(From Letter #2)--...When a biblicist points to someone like Hitler as an example of the dangers of "unbelief" you might say, that according to Romans 13, all governments are instituted by God, and the ruler is not a terror to good conduct, but to bad. Doesn't that mean Germans had to follow Hitler? And why does God allow people like Hitler to become rulers?....When biblicists challenge you about "going to heaven" you can say, "Why would anyone want to go to heaven when that's where Satan came from?"

Another good question is: Can Christians choose to rebel against God once they get to heaven? If the answer is yes then existence in heaven will be insecure. If the response is no, then once you get to heaven you'll become a robot. Moreover, Jesus indicated that "Heaven and earth shall pass away" (Matt. 24:35), so Christians better not expect to stay there very long.

(From Letter #3)--I have yet to see any signs of intellectual honesty or humility coming from...any apologist. It would be so refreshing for one of them to publicly say to you, "You've brought up a genuine problem. I'll give you the answer I learned in seminary though I don't know if it's correct."

I have an answer for those apologists who insist you must know Greek and Hebrew to "understand" the Bible. You don't need to know how a television set works to be able to judge the quality of the programming. If the message is defective, it doesn't matter what language it's written in.

Apologists maintain that biblical assertions constitute fundamental knowledge about reality. But if all the scientific literature in the world were destroyed and the knowledge lost, most of it could be rediscovered and reconstructed through experiment. However, if all the biblical literature were destroyed and the knowledge of biblical traditions lost, there would be NO WAY to rediscover the stories about the six days of Creation, Adam and Eve, Noah and the Ark, the Crucifixion, the Virgin Birth, the Resurrection, Heaven, etc. The Bible is the only source for this information, and there is nothing inherently true about it.

(From Letter #4)--...According to 1 Sam. 15:23 ("For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry....") rebellion is comparable to witchcraft. I was not aware that George Washington was a witch.

According to Col. 2:2-3 ("...and of Christ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge") Jesus possesses all knowledge. But in Matt. 24:36 ("But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only") Jesus admits ignorance of the time of his "return."

Matt. 24:36 also bears on those modern biblicists who try to predict Jesus' "return" on the basis of Daniel, Ezekiel and other OT books. Jesus had access to the SAME books, so if HE couldn't figure it out, why should we expect modern end-of-the-age predictors to be any wiser?

A comment on Christian expectation about heaven. Heaven is supposed to be a "spiritual" place, yet the Book of Revelation describes it as full of material artifacts--linen, scrolls, robes, bowls, swords, gold, pearls, minerals, and thrones. Heaven sounds more like a Middle Eastern market than the home of the saints. Doesn't that strike you as odd?....

(From Letter #5)--I agree with your response to Letter #258 that Christians are capable of logical thought processes. Many of the apologists whose works I've read could have made brilliant careers as creative writers or attorneys. It's a shame they just happen to waste their brain power on defending the Bible.

Speaking of logic, I have trouble understanding the reasoning of liberal Christians. The inerrantists argue, in effect, that the Bible is magic paper from heaven. One step away from this, and it seems to me you'd be on a slippery slope which eventually leads to BE's position--namely, the Bible is the product of fallible human forces.

But in practice, the slope from inerrancy to errancy seems to be sticky. These inbetween people seem to argue, "Well, part of the Bible is inerrant." But this is illogical. Which parts are inerrant, how do you distinguish the inerrant from the errant, and how do you resolve differences? At least the inerrantist position is logically consistent, as is BE's position.

Another thing: I've noticed a curious thing about apologists. When they seek to convert the typical credulous, uncritical, unsophisticated "unbeliever," common English translations of the Bible are adequate--often amazingly so. But when the same apologists confront someone who asks critical questions about the Bible's validity, all of a sudden English versions become impotent and the critic needs 10 years of university education in Greek and Hebrew to understand the Bible.

This behavior reveals the mendacity of many apologists. They go around "saving" the masses by preaching to them in their native tongue, not by packing them off to a university to study biblical languages first. The Greek/Hebrew defense is basically a way of intimidating the Bible's critics.

The admiration by fundamentalists for the reformers of the reformation is ironic in light of a major scholarly project of the Reformation: the translation of the Bible into the common languages of Europe. The purpose was to give any literate person access to god's word "without having to depend on the authority of the Roman Church." I am sure there were many Catholic theologians who opposed this effort on the grounds that you need to know Greek and Hebrew to "understand" the Bible. Were the Reformers mistaken?....

(From Letter #6)--Recently I told you about Edgar Whisenant, who was advertising that the "rapture" of the church would occur some time over Sept. 11-13, 1988. On Tuesday morning, Sept. 13th, from midnight till 5:00 AM, the Tulsa radio station KRMG held a "rapture watch party" on the parking lot of its office building. A live talk show was being broadcast there, so a fellow Bible critic and I went there to educate people about the errors of the Bible. Each of us got about five minutes of airtime. When I got my turn, I pointed out the saying in computer science known as (GIGO) "Garbage in, garbage out." (If your assumptions are flawed, then your conclusions can't be too reliable). The Bible is full of things that just ain't so. So, when people use it to try to predict the future, OF COURSE they'll be wrong.... Alas, people have drawn the wrong conclusion from the failure of Whisenant's prophecy. Instead of concluding that biblicism is probably nonsense from cover to cover (though you and I can delete the "probably"), they are concluding that of that day and hour knoweth no man. What does it take to pound sense into people?

(From Letter #7)--(Mark wrote the following to an apologist who criticized BE--Ed.)....I have a few comments on your answer to Dennis McKinsey's question about what happens to people who never hear about Jesus. First, you state that "God...has the perfect right to do with his creation as he sees fit." I doubt you really believe this. You are actually hoping that God will treat you in a way you see fit. Otherwise, God could "see fit" to renege on his promises without notice and set up a new system of rules. You might argue that God wouldn't do such a thing, but "God does not sit before the judgment bar of man's reason or man's sense of what is right and wrong." Neither you nor I are in a position to tell God what to do or to predict his behavior. God did repent on numerous occasions. Remember?

Second, you compared God to a governor who pardons one prisoner on death row while leaving the rest to face execution, with the implication that all humanity is jailed in this death row. But this is a bad analogy, for prisoners on death row know: (1) why they are there; (2) the punishment they face; (3) the existence of the governor, and (4) the fact that a pardon is possible....

Third, you allude to Zwingli's belief that the "mentally incompetent" belong to God's elect. If that's true, we could create as many "elect" as we like by inflicting brain damage on babies. Moreover, do unsaved adults join the "elect" when they develop Alzheimer's disease?

And fourth, I have to side with McKinsey's claim that the only way to get saved is through the technicality of accepting Jesus. You claim people are punished for their behavior; yet you and I have heard conversion stories that begin with, "Before I met Jesus, I was a bulimic, promiscuous, heavy metal, coke-addict with AIDS who had an abortion." These converts used to be despicable, yet I have never heard a Christian say that these people will still be punished for their sins after accepting Jesus. If Hitler had accepted Jesus just before he died in his bunker, he would have been saved according to Christian teaching. Yet, if harmless Anne Frank (who was above the age of accountability and mentally competent) had died in a Nazi death camp without saying the magic words at the last moment, she would have gone to hell. (Is she there now?)....

(From Letter #8)--Recently I attended a lecture by John Clayton, who twists science to support the Bible. His organization is called "Does God Exist".... I had an opportunity to publicly ask him a couple of BE-derived questions, but they seem to have had little effect. First, I asked him about the people who never hear about Jesus, such as the modern Japanese. He denied this was a problem and indicated that God had it all worked out somehow. I then asked that if such unevangelized people are in no kind of danger, why do Christians send missionaries to them? He responded that it was to give them the social advantages of Christianity. I ridiculed his reply by pointing out that the Japanese are healthy, orderly, and productive (not to say rich) without the Gospel; so it is hard to see what "social advantages" they could derive from it. He responded that all those reports about the "utopian" nature of modern Japan are lies and that Japan is actually sickly and crime-ridden.... At another opportunity I asked about the problems involved with salvation. I objected to the "escape clause" nature of "accepting Jesus" and noticed that Hitler could have gotten "saved" in his bunker before he died. I also pointed out the biblical inconsistencies regarding salvation, such as Jesus' advice to the young man in Matt. 19 versus salvation by faith and predestination in other verses. This didn't faze Clayton either, because he said I was merely repeating what other Christians had told me without really reading what the Bible says....

Of course, when it gets really sticky in informal debates, he can always fall back on 1 Cor. 2:14 which says I can not receive spiritual things because I am the natural man. But how can he understand them? Wasn't he the natural man at one time? Then how could he have understood and followed the spiritual instructions for getting saved?....

(From Letter #9)--In Gen. 9:9-10 god makes a covenant not only with Noah and his family, but also "with every living creature." Why would god make a covenant with animals and plants?....

In Mark 5:7 a "man with an unclean spirit" says to Jesus, "I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not." If the man is speaking, why would he beg gentle Jesus not to torment him? And if the "unclean spirit" (whatever that is) is speaking, why would it call on god for help and protection?....

In the "Lord's Prayer" (Matt. 6:9-13), we are supposed to pray "lead us not into temptation." Why do we have to ask god not to tempt us? I thought tempting people was satan's job.

(From Letter #10)--Biblicists can point to verses such as John 3:16, 1 Tim. 2:3-4, and Rev. 7:9 to bolster their claim that Jesus' actions were for the benefit of everyone. But how did Jesus understand his own mission? In Matt. 15:24 Jesus stated that he was "not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." And he referred to the Gentiles as "dogs" when a Canaanite/Syrophenician woman asked for his magic to cure her possessed daughter (Matt. 15:26 and Mark 7:27). If Jesus' actions by his own admission are EXPLICITLY intended for the Jews ONLY, how could he be the savior for anyone else? Sounds like they had "spin doctors" to heal the truth even back then. The NT itself could be the ultimate result of spin-doctor surgery on Jesus' original message.

EDITOR'S NOTE: (a) We would like to take this opportunity to thank those unsung heroes who have contributed funds to BE on their own initiative. We occasionally receive support of this nature and are most appreciative. Financial assistance provides the oil that keeps the whole apparatus rolling. We have never solicited money but it's certainly nice to know there are people who realize it's a pre-requisite and donate without requests.

(b) Not long ago we received a call from a woman who wanted to oppose biblicism and aid our cause but wanted to have as little contact with the Bible as possible because she "couldn't stand the thing." She wanted to know if there was some way to effectively debunk the Bible without reading it. I said that's like a student asking a literature teacher if there was some way he could pass his course with an "A" without reading the textbook. The teacher would probably respond, "None that I can think of, but if one emerges I'll definitely tell you and everyone else, as I'm sure many would like to know."

COMMENTARY

THE APOSTLES--Although nearly everyone knows there were 12 apostles, most do not realize their names are listed four different times in the NT and the listings conflict. Who were the twelve apostles; that's the question. Ten of the names present no problem. Simon (Peter), Andrew, James (Zebedee's Son), John, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew, and James (Alphaeus' Son) are found in all four accounts. Judas Iscariot is found in the first 3 accounts and his replacement, Matthias, is in the fourth. But the final two names create a problem. Matt. 10:2-4 and Mark 3:16-19 have Lebbaeus (Thaddaeus) and Simon the Canaanite, while Luke 6:13-16 and Acts 1:13 & 26 have Simon (Zelotes) and Judas (James' brother). Since there is no scriptural basis for assuming Lebbaeus (Thaddaeus) is Judas (James' brother), a contradiction exists between Matt./Mark and Luke/Acts and unless Simon the Canaanite is Simon Zelotes (Simon the Zealot), another conflict is evident.

POLYGAMY--Many people have condemned the practice of polygamy as repugnant, if not immoral. In fact, the admission of Utah into the Union was held in abeyance until the Mormons officially repudiated the practice. Utah became a state in 1896 only after the policy had been changed by clerical/political leaders. In defense of their position Mormons repeatedly invoked the Bible and, unfortunately for biblicists opposed to polygamy, the Bible not only fails to condemn the practice but lends considerable support to its legitimacy. Many of the OT heroes, the patriarchs, had several wives. Scriptural backing for Mormon behavior is not hard to find. Key figures in this regard are Gideon ("Gideon had threescore and ten sons of his body begotten: for he had many wives"--Judges 8:20), Solomon ("And he had 700 wives, princesses, and 360 concubines...."--1 Kings 11:3), Jacob ("Then Jacob rose up, and set his sons and his wives upon camels"--Gen. 31:17), Esau ("Esau took his wives, and his sons, and his daughters...."--Gen. 36:6), Rehoboam ("Rehoboam loved Maachah the daughter of Abraham above all his wives and his concubines...."--2 Chron. 11:21).

But, undoubtedly, the most prominent polygamist is the OT patriarch, David. He is crucial to this discussion not only because an exceptional number of verses show he had many wives: 2 Sam. 5:13 ("David took him more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem...."), 1 Chron. 14:3 ("David took more wives at Jerusalem...."), 1 Sam. 25:43, 27:3, 30:5, 30:18, 2 Sam. 2:2, 3:2-5, 12:7-8, and 12:11, but also because many verses show he was the essence of moral rectitude: 1 Sam. 25:28 ("...because my lord {David--Ed.} fighteth the battles of the Lord, and evil hath not been found in thee all thy days"), 2 Sam. 19:27 ("...but my lord the king {David--Ed.} is an angel of God..."), 1 Kings 15:3 ("...his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as the heart of David his father"), Acts 13:22 ("I {God--Ed.} have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart which shall fulfill all my will") and 1 Kings 9:4, 11:4, 11:6, 15:11 and Neh. 12:36. If David was an angel of God in whom evil had not been found in all the days of his life, if his heart was perfect with the Lord and he was a man after God's own heart, it's virtually impossible to find biblical condemnation of polygamy that is worthy of serious consideration. David lived after the Old Law in general and the Ten Commandments in particular were enacted so there could not have been any laws in opposition to his behavior "because David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from anything that he {God--Ed.} commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite" (1 Kings 15:5). Even if NT maxims in opposition to polygamy could be produced, they would be all but worthless since they would only prove God had changed his mind with respect to what was moral. While moral in the OT, polygamy became immoral in the New. In effect, morals would be changing with time and biblicists would be hardpressed to reconcile this with Mal. 3:6 ("For I am the Lord, I change not") and the "Situation Ethics" which they constantly deplore.

Deut. 21:15-16 not only fails to condemn polygamy but actually provides rules by which the sons of one's wives are to be treated. The only verse that seems to forestall polygamy is Deut.

17:17 ("Neither shall he multiply wives to himself...."), but it appears to be applicable only to one individual in a particular situation.

NT SUPPORT FOR THE MIRACULOUS--A large number of biblicists adhere to what is known as the liberal view of the Bible, a critical component of which is that many well-known biblical events are to be viewed allegorically or symbolically rather than literally. From their perspective, Adam and Eve, the Flood, Jonah and the Whale, and Balaam's Talking Ass, for example, are not to be taken as actual accounts of real events but mythological stories created to convey a message. Fundamentalists and other inerrantists are seen as childish ideologues rigidly adhering to a literal interpretation. Unfortunately, liberals fail to realize their position is biblically untenable and wholly inconsistent. You can't relegate these stories to the realm of fable and folklore without simultaneously destroying not only the divinity and existence of Jesus but the veracity of Paul and Peter. And, of course, if these occur the NT all but disintegrates and Christianity rapidly follows suit. The reasoning in this regard is rather simple. Adam and Eve had to have been real live human beings because Jesus ("Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning and made them male and female...."--Matt. 19:4), ("But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female"--Mark 10:6) and Paul ("For Adam was first formed then Eve"--1 Tim. 2:13), ("Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses"--Rom. 5:14), ("The first man Adam was made a living soul"--1 Cor. 15:45) said they were. To say they were fictional is to say Jesus and Paul were lying. And if these two men are deceivers, all of Christianity could be fraudulent. In 2 Cor. 11:3 ("But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtily....") and 1 Tim. 2:14 ("Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression") Paul said a real serpent tempted a real Eve. Anyone holding to the contrary simply doesn't believe Paul is a credible source. If Adam and Eve were fictional then so was Original Sin. And if it's fabulous there would have been no evil in the world and no need for Jesus to have died for our sins. The Passion, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection, would have been useless. Even more important, if Adam was fictional then so were Jesus, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David because the genealogy of Jesus in Luke 3 clearly shows they descended from Adam. Real people can't be descended from a mythological figure.

Noah and the Flood had to have been real because Jesus ("But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark. And knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be"--Matt. 24:37-39, Luke 17:26-27), Paul ("By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house...."--Heb. 11:7), and Peter ("...when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water"--1 Peter 3:20), ("and spared not the old world, but saved Noah the 8th person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly"--2 Peter 2:5), ("Whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water perished"--2 Peter 3:6) said they were. Fire and brimstone had to have rained on Sodom and Gomorrah because Jesus ("But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all"--Luke 19:29), Paul ("...we would have fared like Sodom and been made like Gomorrah"--Rom. 9:29) and Peter ("and turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes...."--2 Peter 2:6) said they did. The murdering of a real Abel ("From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias"--Luke 11:51, Matt. 23:35), the swallowing of Jonah by a whale ("For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly"--Matt. 12:40), the eating of manna in the wilderness ("your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness"--John 6:49), the punishing of Lot's wife ("Remember Lot's wife"--Matt. 17:32) and the meeting of Moses with the burning bush ("Now that the dead are raised, even Moses shewed at the bush...."--Luke 20:37) must be believed if Jesus is God and God cannot lie ("God is not a man that he should lie...."--Num. 23:19). If Jesus is always truthful, then Moses ("For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me"--John 5:46) could not have been fictional as some liberals contend, nor could Elijah (Luke 4:25), Isaiah (Matt. 12:17), Daniel (Matt. 24:15), David (Matt. 22:45), Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob (Matt. 8:11). Jesus upheld the existence of angels (Matt. 25:31, 18:10, 13:39) and a real Devil (Luke 10:18, Matt. 4:7, 25:41), and his followers must believe likewise. Otherwise Jesus is a deceiver. Anyone who does not believe the Israelites crossed the Red Sea on dry land ("By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned"--Heb. 11:29) and the walls of Jericho collapsed ("By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days"--Heb. 11:30) is simultaneously contending Paul is not credible. And anyone who claims belief in talking donkeys ("...the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbad the madness of the prophet"--2 Peter 2:16) is nonsense is doubting the truthfulness of Peter. In essence, anyone who takes the Bible seriously must believe in a large number of incredible events or undermine not only the reliability of key NT figures but the Bible itself.

PETER VERSUS THE NT--The third most important NT individual, Peter, not only made a sizable number of comments that conflict with verses in the OT, which will be discussed later, but a number of comments in the Book of Acts that fly in the face of other parts of the NT: (1) "The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. For of a truth against the holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together,...." (Acts 4:26-27) versus "When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and worked his hands before the multitude, saying I am innocent of the blood of this just person...." (Matt. 27:24). In Acts Peter alleged that Pilate, along with Herod, was against Christ, but Matthew clearly shows that Pilate not only was not against Jesus but considered him an innocent and just person. (2) "The God our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree" (Acts 5:30) versus "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross" (Matt. 27:40). Peter and Matthew can't agree on the particulars of the Crucifixion. Did Jesus die on a tree or a cross? Was he hanged or crucified? And was he slain before being hanged as Acts implies or was he conversant while being crucified as Matthew implies? (3) "And they were all {including the Apostles--Ed.} filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to...." (Acts 2:4) versus "And when he had said this, he breathed on them {including the Apostles--Ed.}, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost...." (John 20:22). Acts 2:4 says the apostles, among others, were all filled with the Holy Ghost; yet, according to John 20:22, they had already received the Holy Ghost. If they lost the Holy Ghost which later returned, then they temporarily lost the assurance of salvation which fundamentalists claim they obtained forever when they accepted Jesus. (4) "Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he {Judas--Ed.} burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out" (Acts 1:18) versus "Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders. Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us?.... And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself. And the chief priests, took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood. And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in" (Matt. 27:3-7). Peter's account in Acts of what occurred with respect to Judas' betrayal differs from Matthew's in several respects. (a) Peter says Judas used the 30 pieces of silver to purchase a field, while Matthew says he threw the money on the temple floor and left. (b) Peter says Judas purchased a field with the 30 pieces of silver, but Matthew says the priests used the money to purchase a potter's field. (c) And Peter says Judas burst open in the middle and all his bowels gushed out, whereas Matthew says he died by hanging himself. (5) "...and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood" (Acts 1:18-19) versus "And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood. And they took counsel, and bought with them, the potter's field, to bury strangers in. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood,...." (Matt. 27:6-8). Peter says the field was called "The field of blood" because the blood of Judas was poured on it, while Matthew says it was called "The field of blood" because it was bought with blood money.

Lastly, a couple of comments by Peter in the Book of Acts generate problems of their own. (6)"Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts 2:36). How could God have made Jesus both Lord and Christ when that would have meant he was neither at one time? (7)"He seeing this before spoke of the resurrection of Christ that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption" (Acts 2:31). When was the soul of Jesus in hell? "Left" in hell means it was there at one time.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter # 298 from PM of CATHOLIC ANSWERS, San Diego, California

Dear Dennis.... I'm glad to know you found the books I sent, Catholicism and Fundamentalism and Theology for Beginners, to be interesting. I'm looking forward to seeing a review of both in one of your upcoming issues.

If you really want to tangle with the "True" Christian Church you need to focus on the Catholic Church. Train your sights on Catholic Answers. That's what we are here for--to offer a reasoned defense of the faith using Scripture, history, and logic. You're wasting your time jousting with the garden variety Fundamentalists I read about in your newsletter. They do a superb job of making a lot of noise, but their arguments have rather little substance.

Would you be interested in engaging us in a written debate, perhaps one that would appear in installments in both Biblical Errancy and Catholic Answers? It could focus on some particular facet of the Atheist/Christian polemic such as the Incarnation of Christ, the historicity and inspiration of the Bible, the Resurrection, the Trinity or any of a number of germane topics. I'm certain your readers would love it--I know ours would.

Dennis, if you want a real challenge (and I suspect you do), take us on. I think you'll find the exchange quite stimulating. Looking forward to hearing from you.

Editor's Response to Letter #298

Dear PM. Although we are willing to accept your challenge to a reasoned debate, several points should be made beforehand. (1) I'm certainly not wasting my time by jousting with "garden variety Fundamentalists." They are: a substantial portion of this country's population, a force to be reckoned with, at the forefront of most regressive social ideas and anti-freethought initiatives, extremely well-financed, and providers of the best apologetic for the most powerful and influential piece of literature in North America. (2) Many, if not most, of the arguments used in BE are as applicable to catholicism as fundamentalism, unless you no longer believe in the Resurrection, the Crucifixion, the Trinity, Original Sin, the Atonement, and a multitude of other biblical concepts. If catholics believe the Bible is God's Word and Jesus and Paul are not only wholly consistent in their statements but also perfect examples of moral rectitude, then catholicism is by no means exempt from BE's critique. (3) BE is primarily concerned with the Bible's validity and our dialogue would have to focus on catholicism vis-a-vis the Bible. (4) The most productive role for BE would probably be that of a judge between catholicism and fundamentalism since they have you trapped on some points and you have them cornered on others. (5) Before entering into an extended debate of this nature, I intend to exhaust my notes on the Bible's inadequacies and that will require some time. Still, there is no reason we can't address some of catholicism's deviations from, and conflicts with, the Bible. (6) As far as periodic installments are concerned, we can't make any guarantees. That's bad policy. Each issue must be weighed on its merits. (7) BE has never focused on any denomination or religion, per se, since that not only would be a major deviation from the purpose of this newsletter, which is to expose the Bible, but could lead people to the erroneous conclusion that organizations that aren't addressed are somehow correct. Once our notebooks have been exhausted, however, this policy will be modified to include particular organizations and their theological approaches to the Bible. (8) Since catholicism gives many extrabiblical writings, documents, and decrees importance comparable to that of the Bible, you must provide me with a list of that which you consider to be as authoritative as the Bible. I've read many but by no means all. Before we can engage in a dialogue I need a current, comprehensive listing of all catholic teachings on faith and morals that are comparable to that which emanated from the Council of Trent. I want to know what biblically-related doctrines catholics consider to be of such importance that they can be viewed as having "ex cathedra" standing, not those you consider customs or disciplines, which can be changed on a moment's notice. Analyzing doctrines that can be changed at will would be a waste of time. That truly would be jousting of a fruitless variety. The big advantage in debating fundamentalists is that they have a definite and limited set of authoritative writings that can't be increased or decreased, i.e., the 66 books within their Bible. I need a list of yours.

Letter #299 from WAA of Madera, California

Dear Dennis. First of all, I would like to commend you on the tremendous job you are doing with BE. I enjoy every issue. The point I would like to make is this: in Issue #68, first page, you quoted from 2 Samuel 6:23 ("Michal the daughter of Saul had no child unto the day of her death...") versus 2 Samuel 21:8 ("...and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul...").

It seems to be a good contradiction, but reading the complete verse of 2 Samuel 21:8, the five sons of Michal were not actually her own but the adopted sons she brought up for Adriel. This being the case, wouldn't 2 Sam. 6:23 be correct and not really a contradiction?

Editor's Response to Letter #299

Dear WAA. Suggestions are welcome but I think you should reread 2 Sam. 21:8. What led you to believe the five sons of Michal were adopted? My ASV and Masoretic Text say, "...and the five sons of Michal whom she bare to Adriel the son of Barzillai...."

Letter #300 from DM of Pasadena, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. If you do not support the accuracy of the KJ Bible, at least with respect to the appropriate verses, then what is your motive in comparing the KJ Bible to later translations. Your strongest argument here is to show that there are a significant number of unjustified differences between the KJ Bible and the modern translations, differences which are best explained in terms of political expediency. If you accept that, as suggested by your reply to my letter #281, then you should defend the necessary verses in the KJ Bible. Differences which seem unnecessary as political to you may not be so clear to another....

Editor's Response to Letter #300 (Part a)

Dear DM. I think you missed my point. BE does not defend any version of the Bible as you might have noticed from the recent commentaries devoted to differing versions. Sometimes the KJ translators covered up problems which more recent translations exposed and sometimes the reverse was true. No preference is intended. The preference many modern translations have toward "Thou shalt not murder" rather than "Thou shalt not kill" is a classic example of what I call political expediency. However, "political expediency" is based on judgment calls by myself and I'm not going-to-the-mat to defend them. I only ask observers to objectively judge the facts themselves after viewing the evidence, the trends, and the changing views of the latest biblical teachings and interpretations. It's sufficiently clear to me that the Bible is a political document used for partisan purposes that's constantly rewritten and reinterpreted as conditions dictate.

Letter #300 Continues (Part b)

Some of the differences among the translations do look suspicious and a book devoted to a careful study of these differences would make for fascinating reading. I hope that somebody, somewhere, has the time and ability to write it, and I hope that the translators' own reasons for the changes will be sought out. I look forward to reading that book someday.... The fact that Bibles disagree on a point does not imply that the issue cannot be resolved....

Editor's Response to Letter #300 (Part b)

You are assuming that the differences can be reconciled when the fact that they haven't been lends more credence to the belief that they can't be. The point repeatedly made in five consecutive recent issues of BE is that versions clash in far too many instances. How differences arose and whether or not they can be resolved is another issue. The point is that they exist; they haven't been eliminated, and that's what matters. To just gratuitously assume that they can be reconciled is unwarranted.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #301 from MJ of Wenatchee, Washington

Dear Dennis. Enclosed you will find a check in the amount of $10 for 100 of your corrected editions of your two pamphlets created last summer. I distributed the previous 100 to individuals in two western provinces of Canada and five western states of the U.S. I have observed that they have been of great interest to most of the individuals I have distributed them to and greatly influenced several Christians I am associated with. These Christians were completely unaware of any internal contradictions contained within the Bible. In my opinion, your pamphlets are a great informative and educational tool.

I recently read a question and answer article written by Billy Graham concerning personal wealth.... Dennis, I was absolutely shocked by Dr. Graham's response to the reader's question of whether the Bible condoned or condemned the accumulation of personal wealth. Dr. Graham virtually ignored almost all of the phrases attributed to Jesus concerning Jesus' admonition against the accumulation of personal wealth.... In my encounters with Christians (conservative, moderate or liberal) I have found the issue of Jesus' teachings concerning personal wealth to be one of the most sensitive issues they do not want to discuss. In our Western culture where material possessions and personal wealth are often equated with success, many Christians find it very convenient to ignore the phrases on personal wealth attributed to Jesus. Keep up the good work.

Letter #302 from JF of Decatur, Georgia

Dear Dennis McKinsey. Enclosed is my BE subscription renewal which affords me an opportunity to let you know how much I enjoy your publication. The amount of study that must go into your commentaries truly amazes me. Your refutation of positions taken by the religionist letter writers are, in my mind, irrefutable....

Letter #303 from HKA of Portland, Oregon

I had a conversation with a died-in-the-wool believer the other day and the words began to get a little heavy. I said, "Just where is god and point out just one thing that he has done." It was a nice, warm, sunny day and he said, "Look outdoors and you can see god everywhere--the birds, grass,trees, etc. "Everywhere," I asked. "Absolutely," he answered. I said, I have a pain in my neck. Is he there too?" End of conversation.

COMMENTARY

JESUS ISN'T QUALIFIED--For nearly 2,000 years Christians have contended Jesus is the long-awaited Messiah predicted in the OT. Unfortunately, they have conveniently ignored eight major reasons Jesus couldn't fill the bill. There is no way he could qualify as the following facts show. (1) NT verses repeatedly say that Jesus was not only from the province of Galilee: MATT. 26:69 ("Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee"), LUKE 23:6-7 LB ("Is he then a Galilean? Pilate asked. When they told him yes,...."), LUKE 22:59 RSV ("Certainly this man {Peter--Ed.} also was with him {Jesus--Ed.}, for he is a Galilean") and the Galilean city of Nazareth specifically: MARK 1:24 ("...what have we to do with thee thou Jesus of Nazareth"), JOHN 1:45 ("...Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph"), and LUKE 1:26 ("...the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth"), but also was a prophet: ("And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee"--MATT. 21:11). Yet, scripture says that no prophet can come from Galilee ("Search and you will see that no prophet is to rise from Galilee"--JOHN 7:52 RSV) and nothing good can come from Nazareth ("We have found him of whom Moses in the law and also the prophets wrote, Jesus of Nazareth.... Nathanael said to him, 'Can anything good come out of Nazareth'"--JOHN 1:45-46 RSV). (2) MICAH 5:2 predicted the Messiah would come from Bethlehem in the province of Judea. But John 7:40-42 RSV ("When they heard these words, some of the people said, This {Jesus--Ed.} is really the prophet. Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Is the Christ to come from Galilee? Has not the scripture said that the Christ is descended from David, and comes from Bethlehem {in Judea--Ed.}....") disqualifies Jesus by showing he came from Galilee not Judea. (3) Jesus is a descendant of Coniah (Jeconiah, Jeconias) as the genealogy in MATT. 1:11 ("Jeconias begat Salathiel") through MATT. 1:16 ("And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ") shows. In JER. 22:28-30 ("Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vassal wherein is no pleasure? why are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not? Thus said the Lord, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah") God said Coniah would never have a descendant who sat on David's throne. Yet, many prophecies, such as that found in LUKE 1:32 ("He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David"), show that Jesus must sit on David's throne eventually. (4) We have already seen that Jesus is a descendant of Coniah. FIRST CHRONICLES 3:16 ("And the sons of Jehoiakim: Jeconiah {Coniah--Ed.} his son....") shows that Coniah is a son of Jehoiakim. So Jesus is a descendant of Jehoiakim too. But JER. 36:30 ("Therefore thus saith the Lord of Jehoiakim king of Judah; He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David") says Jehoiakim would never have a descendant upon the throne of David. So, again, we see that Jesus is disqualified since he must sit upon the throne of David. God's commands given through Jeremiah that neither Jehoiakim nor his son Jeconiah (Coniah--Ed.) could have any progeny who would sit on David's throne exclude Jesus. (5) Jesus couldn't be the Messiah because LUKE 3:31 ("...which was the son of Nathan, which was the son of David {in the genealogy of Jesus--Ed.}") shows Nathan is an ancestor of Jesus and Nathan was excluded from any claim to the throne of David because his brother, Solomon, was chosen to head the Davidic line instead: 1 CHRON. 29:1 ("Furthermore David the king said unto all the congregation, Solomon my son, whom alone God hath chosen...."), 1 CHRON. 28:5 ("And of all my sons, for the Lord hath given me many sons, he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the Kingdom of the Lord over Israel"), and 1 CHRON. 29:24 ("And all the princes, and the mighty men, and all the sons likewise of King David, submitted themselves unto Solomon the king"). (6) In MATT. 20:28 ("Even as the son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many") Jesus said that he came to minister, not to be ministered unto. But, that is diametrically opposed to the OT's presentation of the Messiah. According to PSALM 72:11 ("Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him"), DAN. 7:14 ("And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away...."), and DAN. 7:27 ("And the kingdom and dominion...shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose Kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him"), the Messiah will come to be served, not serve others. (7) ROM. 1:3 ("Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh"), PSALM 132:11 ("The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne"), ACTS 2:30 ("Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne"), ACTS 13:22-23 ("...I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfill all my will. Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus"), 2 TIM. 2:8 ("Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to my gospel"), and PSALM 89:3-4 ("I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations") clearly show that the Messiah must be an actual son of David according to the flesh. Since Joseph could not be his physical father if there was a Virgin Birth and the genealogies in Matthew 1 and Luke 3 show that Jesus is related to David through Joseph only, then Jesus couldn't be the Messiah. There is no physical connection to David. (8) And finally: (a) Nowhere throughout the OT is the power of redeeming from sin and the authority of spiritual salvation attributed to the Messiah; (b) Nowhere in the OT does it mention the Messiah's power and glory in heaven, any statement that the Messiah is God, or that God claims to be a man or the son of man ("God is not a man, that he should lie...."--NUM. 23:19); (c) The word "Messiah" means "anointed" and signified neither holiness nor godliness. Kings and priests were anointed as signs of distinction and authority, but they claimed neither equality with God nor sinlessness. Several verses prove as much: 1 SAM. 10:1 ("Then Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kissed him, and said, Is it not because the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance"), LEV. 4:3 ("If the priest that is anointed do sin according to the sin of the people...."), ISA. 45:1 ("Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus...."), PSALM 105:15 ("Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm"), and 2 SAM. 23:1 ("Now these be the last words of David....the anointed of the God of Jacob....").

IGNORED TEACHINGS (Part 4)--Issues 16, 17, and 18 dealt with NT and OT teachings that were conveniently ignored by Christian apologists for the sake of expediency. As was stated at the beginning of Issue 18, biblicists "leap in and out of the Old Law like a porpoise in a ship's wake. If they like it, they quote it; if they don't, they won't. What follows are additional OT maxims supplementing those in Issue 18's Commentary that are systematically ignored. (a) EX. 22:2-3 MOD. LANG. ("When a burglar is caught breaking in and is fatally beaten, there shall be no charge of manslaughter, unless it happened after dawn, in which case there is manslaughter"). One can readily understand why this rule is not quoted since the time of day would have little relevance to whether or not a killing was manslaughter. Justice and OT teachings are often at odds. (b) EX. 22:25 RSV ("If you lend money to any of my people with you who is poor, you shall not be to him as a creditor, and you shall not exact interest from him") and LEV. 25:35-37 RSV ("And if your brother becomes poor and cannot maintain himself with you, you shall maintain him.... Take no interest from him or increase, but fear your God.... You shall not lend him your money at interest, nor give him your food for profit"). Adherence to these rules would all but abolish capitalism. So they aren't quoted very often either. (c) EX. 22:29-30 ("Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy liquors: the firstborn of thy sons shalt thou give unto me. Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep: seven days it shall be with his dam; on the 8th day thou shalt give it me"). Verses clearly advocating child-sacrifice are systematically ignored and no longer quoted either. (d) DEUT. 22:8 RSV ("When you build a new house, you shall make a parapet for your roof, that you may not bring the guilt of blood upon your house, if any one fall from it"). One would be hard-pressed to find any home-builder who would put any credence in an OT maxim requiring parapets to be added to the roofs of homes for reasons of safety. (e) DEUT. 22:12 RSV ("You shall make yourself tassels on the four corners of your cloak with which you cover yourself"). Nor do many people urge others to put four tassels on the corners of their cloak. (f) DEUT. 23:24-25 RSV ("When you go into your neighbor's vineyard, you may eat your fill of grapes, as many as you wish, but you shall not put any in your vessel. When you go into your neighbor's standing grain, you may pluck the ears with your hand, but you shall not put a sickle to your neighbor's standing grain"). One can understand why biblicists don't quote this requirement very often. What right does anyone have to take his neighbor's property at will. Because there is no sign of the owner's acquiescence in this instance, God appears to be condoning theft. (g) And LEV. 19:19 ("...neither shall a garment mingled of linen and woolen come upon thee"). Almost no one in the garment industry pays any heed to this OT decree and many people wear clothing in which wool and linen are mixed.

On the other hand, Christians have not hesitated to use other OT maxims that are found along with those that are rejected. In fact, some have been given great importance despite the fact that distinctions between that which is acceptable and that which isn't are wholly arbitrary. If one is going to utilize the Old Law, then he must accept all of its precepts, not just those that are expedient. One can't pick and choose without some kind of valid, objective criterion for making distinctions. Just as the rules that have already been quoted are almost universally rejected, those which follow have been employed to regulate human behavior by sizable segments of the population in recent history. (h) DEUT. 22:5 ("The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God"). Opponents of changes in female dress in recent years have quoted this verse repeatedly. (i) EX. 22:18 ("Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live"). This has been one of the most notorious of all verses found in the Old Law. Not long ago it was cited profusely and brought devastation to the lives of thousands. (j) LEV. 3:17 ("It shall be a perpetual statute for your generations throughout all your dwellings, that ye eat neither fat nor blood"), LEV. 7:26 ("Moreover ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings"), LEV. 17:10 ("And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people"), LEV. 17:14 ("...Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off"), DEUT. 12:23 ("Only be sure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life; and thou mayest not eat the life with the flesh"), and GEN. 9:3-4 ("Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you, even as the green herb have I given you all things. But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat"). Even though we are supposed to no longer be under the Old Law, Jehovah's Witnesses use these verses every day in their on-going opposition to blood transfusions. What is the relationship between the eating of blood and transfusions, you ask? On page 216 in You Can Live Forever in Paradise on Earth the JW's clearly explain why they are opposed to blood transfusions. "Another common practice in various parts of the world is the eating of blood. Thus animals not properly bled are eaten or the blood may be drained out and used for food in a meal. Yet God's Word forbids the eating of blood. (Genesis 9:3-4; Leviticus 17:10) What, then, about taking a blood transfusion? Some persons may reason that getting a blood transfusion is not actually 'eating.' But is it not true that when a patient is unable to take food through his mouth, the doctor often recommends feeding him by the same method in which a blood transfusion is given? The Bible tells us to 'abstain from...blood.' What does this mean? If a doctor were to tell you to abstain from alcohol, would that simply mean that you should not take it through your mouth but that you could transfuse it directly into your veins? Of course not! So, too, 'abstaining from blood' means not taking it into your body at all." On page 73 in Reasoning from the Scriptures the JW's say, "In a hospital, when a patient cannot eat through his mouth, he is fed intravenously. Now, would a person who never put blood into his mouth but who accepted blood by transfusion really be obeying the command to 'keep abstaining from blood'?" Simply stated their position is that people are fed intravenously every day in hospitals. If you are given blood intravenously, then you are eating blood and this is forbidden by the Bible, especially in the OT. (k) EX. 23:10-11 ("For six years you shall sow your land and gather in its yield; but the seventh year you shall let it rest and lie fallow, that the poor of your people may eat; and what they leave the wild beasts may eat. You shall do likewise with your vineyard, and with your olive orchard"). Apologists cite this verse as an example of biblical wisdom with respect to the agricultural policy of allowing one's land to lie dormant periodically. (l) And finally, some Christians even quote LEV. 7:23 ("Speak unto the children of Israel, saying. Ye shall eat no manner of fat....") to prove the OT was ahead of its time because of the Levitical injunction against the consumption of fat.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #304 from DEM of Pasadena, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. I received your two leaflets today, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD? and JESUS CHRIST IS THE ANSWER? A couple of points are either erroneous or weak, and they need to be addressed: (a) Did Solomon's house contain 2,000 baths {1 Kings 7:26} or 3,000 baths {2 Chron. 4:5}. "Baths" refers to a unit of volume and not to washing stations in Solomon's house! It is the volume of the molten sea (a large bronze basin) whose volume is twice given with conflicting numbers.

Editor's Response to Letter #304 (Part a)

Dear DEM. This topic was covered in the VERSIONS DIFFER section in a prior issue. Eleven of the 15 versions I have say "baths;" a couple say barrels, and three say gallons. Even if your correction is valid, the contradiction remains.

Letter #304 Continues (Part b)

The fact that the Hebrews classified the bat as being a "bird" is an error only if the Hebrew word for "bird" is identical to our word for "bird." Certainly, they have the right to define the use of their words, and if they choose to include bats within the group of flying creatures they call "birds" that's their business. The best that the critic can do is argue that "birds" should not be used in the translation, and that God should have differentiated between the bat and our "bird" if only for the sake of us modern readers.

Editor's Response to Letter #304 (Part b)

If the Hebrew word for "bird" is not identical to our word for "bird," then you are saying scholars can't translate correctly. Could I ask what your qualifications are with respect to a knowledge of Hebrew? Virtually every translator says they are identical. Do you have any evidence to the contrary? When the biblical text has a bat listed at the end of a list of 19 flying creatures, which the text calls "birds," that's pretty conclusive evidence the author of Leviticus considered the bat to be a bird. Every version I have says "birds" and includes the bat in the list.

You stated that "the best that the critic can do is argue that 'birds' should not be used in the translation." Not true! Critics such as myself don't have the problem. Critics such as yourself have the burden of proving you know Hebrew better than the translators of nearly every version on the market and can prove the word "bird" was not the correct English word to use for the Hebrew term.

Letter #304 Continues (Part c)

Jesus may not have said "It is more blessed to give than to receive" at least in the Bible, but the reader will simply assume that Jesus made the statement outside the Bible. The point is too weak to be of any use.

Editor's Response to Letter #304 (Part c)

The last point made in the pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD, was that Jesus never made the quote attributed to him by Paul to the effect that it's more blessed to give than to receive. You said that the "reader will simply assume that Jesus made the statement outside of the Bible." No, many will conclude that he didn't make it at all since Paul had no personal contact with him. Paul talked to the Lord on the road to Damascus, not Jesus per se. It will also diminish the strength of an important concept--concern for others--that has always been attributed to Jesus. Finally, when you gratuitously assume that he made the statement outside the Bible, you are guessing, pure and simple. I want them to know the statement is definitely not in the Book.

Letter #304 Concludes (Part d)

I feel that your pamphlet could be strengthened if you took only 10 items and included the usual rationalizations. The latter step would go far to wake up those who "know" that all the problems have been "answered." Showing that such answers fail is a strong point you shouldn't omit as it adds another dimension.

Editor's Response to Letter #304 Concludes (Part d)

Again we disagree, DEM. Most people receiving my pamphlets don't even know there are contradictions in the Bible. If you present only a few which they might be able to resolve in their own minds and add some apologetic rationalizations, that will not only tend to undermine the critical thought process I'm trying to create but dramatically reduce the strength of the pamphlets. This could very well be the only time these people will ever have any contact with the other side and it's important to inundate them with so many problems that they will feel overwhelmed and lose any will to respond. They hear enough "answers" to biblical criticisms as it is. How many pamphlets of any organization give the other side's point of view? We leave activities of that nature to BE itself, while nearly all others exclude it entirely.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #305 from FG of East Pittsburg, Pennsylvania (Part a)

Dear Dennis. You have produced a body of literature in the last 5 or 6 years which has, more than any writer I know, shorn of external philosophy, demonstrated that the Bible is self-contradictory. It's your achievement in life, Dennis. As Mr. Potts said, "The Bible is not magic paper from Heaven." The Bible's self-contradictions are evident even from casual reading. It should come as no surprise that many more seminarians have doubts than true believers in the general public. But those doubts are often never discussed or even discussable except on a one-to-one basis.

In writing to you today I mean to ask two questions I am asking myself. Quite possibly you've considered them before. First, is it possible to be a Christian without an inerrant Bible? I don't quite buy the idea that "if all is not inerrant, the whole thing collapses." After all, some statements out of a given set may be true and some may be false. Which are which can be separated in principle by reference to externalities, e.g., historical scholarship and archeology....

Editor's Response to Letter #305 (Part a)

Dear FG. We appreciate your gracious comments but would like to respond to several of your observations. First, whether or not one can be a Christian while doubting the Bible's inerrancy is a question that should be directed to the Christian community. We are far more concerned with ascertaining what is accurate and consistent than ascribing labels to individuals and groups. Who is a Christian and who isn't means far less to us than who is telling the truth and who isn't. Secondly, once you admit the Bible is not inerrant, you're going to have a hard time proving it emanated from a perfect being. How are you going to prove it's God's word? How can a perfect being produce an imperfect book? Third, once you admit there are errors and mistakes within the Bible, you face the hurdle of separating that which is true from that which isn't. At that point opinions, theories, guesstimates, preferences, and feelings assume precedence. As subjectivity comes in the door, objectivity goes out the window. What is your criterion for determining what is true? You say that true and false statements "can be separated in principle by reference to externalities e.g., historical scholarship and archeology." In fact, scholars are by no means in agreement with respect to historical events. But, even more important, hundreds of biblical contradictions, such as theological and doctrinal conflicts, are entirely contained within the text. How are they going to be resolved? For example, can you provide an historical or archeological resolution of the problems that are on the two pamphlets we created? Can you use historical information to determine whether or not salvation comes by works, faith, or predestination? Perhaps I'm wrong, FG, but I sense a Christian background in your philosophy that you can't seem to jettison.

Letter #305 Continues (Part b)

....If one seeks to be able to call oneself a Christian because to do otherwise nowadays is to invite public disapproval, then one is not being intellectually honest.... People have asked me if I am. I say, "define Christian." The answer is: "Do you believe Christ was the son of God?" I think, well, the term "son of God" is used allegorically elsewhere in the Bible and indeed Christ was not specific in stating that he and God had a genetic relationship. I mean, are we demanding Christ's chromosomes be partly nonhuman? If not, we are talking about an allegorical 'son of God', who was at most an extraordinary human. So I say, "Yes." If they ask, "Do you believe in the Bible?" I ask, "Which version?" And then I must honestly answer "No." The above strategy is one of a person lacking courage of convictions and it is a strategy which I quickly discarded because it is dishonest and cowardly....

Secondly, what program do you envisage for getting BE's message out to the nation at large? I've asked this of myself. I can only do a one-to-one on students or street proselytizers. Random radio appearances and one-to-one diffusion do not seem like an efficient program. But perhaps I seek a gigantism that just isn't feasible.... In my daydreams I can imagine a county-wide pilot program. It would consist of a low cost ultra-cheap (or even free) well-written paperback at the high school sophomore level that would persuasively deal with BE's best questions. Then videotapes of BE-based Biblical discussions could be installed in every library in that county.

Editor's Response to Letter #305 (Part b)

Rest assured we are always contemplating ways to expand BE's influence, FG. We appreciate your interest in this question. As you know, BE is a strong believer in proselytization and persuasion and any effective plan to aid that effort is always welcome. As you have probably noticed, throughout the history of this publication letters in which people are relating their experiences and efforts to influence, inform, and persuade others to reject the Bible have always received precedence in BE. Activities of this nature have always been of prime importance to us. After all, if you don't take it to the other side, you have left them in control, unhindered and unopposed.

Letter #306 from RH of New York, New York

Dear Dennis....Your work continues to astound and illuminate. The words on liberal interpretation in the last issue do a perfect job of refuting the more moderate Christians; they have no more leg to stand on now in my eyes than the fundies whom you refute in every issue. You have my admiration and every hope for continued success. Whenever BE gets incorporated into a big book, I'll really look forward to seeing sparks fly.

COMMENTARY

MESSIANIC PROPHECIES (Part One of a Five-Part Series)--With the possible exception of eschatology (biblical predictions of what is to come) in no area of scripture does the Christian imagination wander more wildly and irresponsibly than in that of messianic prophecy (OT predictions of the coming Messiah). Christian apologists have diligently searched the OT for any verse, any text, any word, that could possibly be twisted, distorted, or perverted in such a manner as to link Jesus with the foretold Messiah. With what can only be described as reckless abandon, they have interpreted sizable portions of the OT for purely partisan theological purposes. Regardless of relativity, anything and everything of a positive or uplifting nature has been depicted as a type or harbinger of Jesus and everything of a negative, but equally applicable import, has been ignored or minimized. Hundreds of verses have been interpreted either literally or figuratively, as conditions dictate, with little regard for context or original intent. Except in the arena of eschatology, here, more than anywhere else, the full breadth and depth of Christian duplicity rears its ugly head. Perversion, prevarication, and pathetic prognostication are only some of the descriptive terms one could apply to their strategy of deception. "Everything in the Jewish books is perverted and distorted into meanings never intended by the writers." ("Examination of the Prophecies", The Life and Works of Paine, Vol. 9, p. 241) and "...whoever will take the trouble to read attentively, will find in all those passages where the OT is cited, only an obvious abuse of words, and the seal of falsehood on almost every page" (Voltaire on Religion by Ken Applegate, p. 147). Interestingly enough, apologists rely heavily and freely upon the very tactic--taking out of context--which they so readily attribute to their opponents. As Paine said, "The practise which the writers of the books (gospels--Ed.) employ is not more false than it is absurd. They state some trifling case of the person they call Jesus Christ, and then cut out a sentence from some passage of the OT and call it a prophecy of that case. But when the words thus cut out are restored to the places they are taken from, and read with the words before and after them, they give the lie to the NT" (The Life and Works of Paine, Vol. 9, p. 269).

Not long ago we heard a debate in which a noted fundamentalist contended Jesus had to be the Messiah because no one else could fulfill so many of the OT prophecies. From his perspective there was no one else who could "fill the bill." A few of the prophecies may fit certain individuals but no one else could fit so many. The odds were just too great. Josh McDowell expressed the attitude typical of most apologists when he said, "Now the OT was written over a period of a thousand years and contains over 333 messianic prophecies....all of the prophecies that were fulfilled in one person, Jesus Christ, were written down at least 400 years before he was born because the OT was completed around 450-400 B.C...there are 60 major prophecies and 270 ramifications, all fulfilled in one person, Jesus Christ....Let's apply the modern science of probability. For only 48 of these prophecies to be fulfilled in any one individual using the modern science of probability, is one in every 1×10 to the 157th power. That means 157 zeroes" (Evidence for Faith, Practical Apologetics by Josh McDowell, pages 159 & 161). The importance of this entire field lies not only in its alleged "proof" that Jesus is the long-sought Savior of the world but in the constant reliance upon accurate biblical prophecy as proof of the Bible's uniqueness. As the apologist in the debate said with reference to the Bible's predictive accuracy in general, "There aren't that many atoms in the universe." In other words, pure mathematics not only proves Jesus is the Messiah but the Bible is God's Word. No other book even comes close to having so many accurate prophecies; at least that's the theory. When asked how their book differs from the writings of the Moslems, Hindus, Buddhists, etc., the most common reply by biblicists is that the Bible contains hundreds of accurate prophecies which the others lack. The ability to predict the future is seen as proof that the Bible alone is God's word because only God knows the future.

So what's the problem biblicists ask. The problem is quite simple. Not one of the prophecies cited clearly pertains to Jesus. The entire messianic structure is built on conjecture, speculation, and interpolation. Ingersoll stated BE's position even more forcefully. "There is no prophecy in the OT foretelling the coming of Jesus Christ. There is not one word in the OT referring to him in any way--not one word. The only way to prove this is to take your Bible, and wherever you find these words; 'That it might be fulfilled' and 'which was spoken' turn to the OT and find what was written, and you will see that it had not the slightest possible reference to the thing recounted in the NT--not the slightest" (Ingersoll's Works, Vol. 5, p. 277). Because this topic is of such importance to the Bible's validity in general and the messiahship of Jesus in particular, an all but exhaustive critique of the "Messianic prophecies" is in order.

Having emphasized the importance of this subject in general, we can now proceed to a discussion of specifics. Some of the major prophecies allegedly applicable to Jesus were presented in prior issues and need not be repeated. Micah 5:2-5:6 was covered on pages 2 & 3 of Issue #7; Isaiah 7:11-20, 8:2-8, & Psalm 22 were covered on pages 3-5 of Issue #24; Gen. 21:12, Num. 24:17-19, Deut. 18:15-18, Psalms 2:6, 72:10, & Isaiah 52:13-53:12 were covered on pages 1-4 of Issue #30; and Isaiah 42:1-2, 19-20, and Gen. 49:10-12 were covered on pages 1 & 2 of Issue #31. What follows is an almost exhaustive listing in biblical order of the remaining OT verses that are alleged to be messianic and the reasons they aren't applicable to Jesus. (1) GEN. 3:15 ("...and I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel"). There is no reason to believe the seed referred to is Jesus specifically. It could just as easily apply to any good person who ever lived, any person who ever fought evil. The verse is much too vague to refer to anyone in particular. (2) GEN. 9:27 ("God shall enlarge Japheth, and he {allegedly Jesus--Ed.} shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant"). (a) It says Japheth, not Jesus or God, will dwell in the tents or be a descendant of Shem. (b) Canaan was never a servant of Jesus. (3) GEN. 17:19 & 21:12 ("...and thou shalt call his name Isaac; and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him"). (a) Many people are descended from Isaac. Why assume this refers to Jesus in particular? "Seed" refers to all of one's descendants. This covenant is being established with all of Isaac's descendants, not just one particular, unspecified individual. (4) GEN. 22:18 ("And in thy {Abraham's--Ed.} seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice"). (a) Christians allege that this promise given to Abraham regarding the blessing of all nations through his seed referred to Jesus as the pre-eminent posterity of Abraham. Yet, the prior verse, Gen. 22:17 ("That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore...") clearly shows that no single person is meant. It is referring to all of Abraham's posterity. (b) By saying "descendants," which is plural, instead of "seed," the RSV translation clearly shows far more than one person is being referred to. (c) All the nations of the earth have not been blessed in Abraham, in Jacob, or in their descendants, the Jews. (d) Even if this did apply to Christianity, it is unfulfilled since most of the earth does not believe in Jesus. (e) And lastly, one could easily argue that Christianity has been anything but a blessing to humanity. (5) GEN. 26:4 ("And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven and will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed"). Again "seed" is obviously referring to many people, not just one particular person who is unspecified. (6) EX. 12:46 ("In one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth aught of the flesh abroad out of the house; neither shall ye break a bone thereof"). Christians allege John 19:36 ("The scripture should be fulfilled, a bone of him shall not be broken") in the NT was a fulfillment of this prophecy. But this couldn't be referring to Jesus because: (a) Ex. 12:46 in the RSV and Num. 9:12 in the KJV show that John 19:36 should have been translated: "Nor break any bone of it," not "of him." "Of it" is neuter, not masculine. John 19:36 was translated as "of him" so it could refer to Jesus; (b) A prior verse Ex. 12:5 ("Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the 1st year: ye shall take it out from the sheep or the goats") shows an actual sheep is being discussed, not a man; (c) The verse says the flesh thereof can only be eaten in one house, whereas Jesus can be eaten in any home; (d) The prior verse Ex. 12:45 ("A foreigner and an hired servant shall not eat thereof") says foreigners and hired servants can't eat of the flesh, whereas Jesus came for everybody; (e) And finally, verse 48 says no uncircumcised person can eat the sheep whereas Jesus can be eaten by anyone. (7) DEUT. 21:23 ("His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; {for he that is hanged is accursed of God}"). (a) How could Jesus, the perfect being, be "accursed of God?" (b) The prior verse, Deut. 21:22 ("And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree") clearly shows that hanging, not crucifying, is being referred to, and Jesus was not hanged. (c) The same prior verse is pronouncing sentence on a man who actually committed a sin. This couldn't be referring to Jesus since he was allegedly sinless. (d) And Jesus died on a cross, not a tree. (8) 2 SAM. 7:12-13 ("...I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build an house for my name, and I will stablish the throne of his kingdom for ever"). (a) Jesus' kingdom is yet to be established at all, much less, forever. (b) The next verse, 2 Sam. 7:14 ("...If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of man, and with the stripes of the children of men"), shows Jesus is not the person being discussed. God would certainly not imply that his perfect son, Jesus, would sin and might have to be punished. (9) 1 CHRON. 17:11-12 ("And it shall come to pass, when thy (David's--Ed.) days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons...."). (a) The "Seed" couldn't be Jesus because the seed is to appear "when thy days be expired" not 1,000 years after David, when Jesus appeared. (b) Also, one can't help but wonder how Jesus could be the person under discussion since he was a "descendant" of David, not one of his "sons." (10) PSALM 2:2 ("The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his anointed...."). (a) When did the kings of the earth set themselves against Jesus who is supposedly the anointed? They knew nothing about him nor did they have any hand in his death. They probably did not even know he lived. They neither conspired nor took counsel together against him. A few Roman soldiers, some Jews, and local governors did the killing. (b) David was the anointed being referred to as 1 Sam. 16:3 & 12-13 show. He was the chief (anointed) of Israel by the express command of God. (11) PSALM 2:6 ("Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion"). When did this occur to Jesus? Moreover, "have set" is past tense, not future. (12) PSALM 2:7 ("...the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee"). (a) Ex. 4:22 ("Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son") shows Israel itself was referred to as the son of God. Why assume it's Jesus? (b) How could Jesus have a less than eternal life span as "begotten" implies? (13) PSALM 2:9 ("Thou shalt break them--the heathen--with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel"). The Christian idea of the Messiah is different from the OT presentation. Jesus did not "break with a rod of iron" or "dash to pieces." This could hardly be applicable to the "prince of peace." (14) PSALM 2:12 ("Blessed are all they that put their trust in him"). This means trusting in "Jehovah," not the Messiah, as the prior verse, Psalm 2:11 ("Serve the Lord with fear") shows. "Him" is referring to the Lord, not the Messiah. (15) PSALM 16:10 ("For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption"). (a) Over and over again "Holy One" is used in the OT with reference to the Lord, not the Messiah or Jesus. (b) Some scholars say the Psalmist used a Hebrew word that should have been translated as "thy follower," "thy worshipper," "thy servant," or "thy disciple," but not "thine holy one." (c) That David was referring to himself when he said "not leave my soul in hell" can be seen in Psalm 45:15 ("But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave: for he shall receive me"). "Grave" and "hell" come from the same Hebrew word "sheol." (16) PSALM 21:3 ("...thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head"). Jesus never received a crown of gold, pure or otherwise. If anything, his was composed of thorns. (17) PSALM 21:4 ("He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever"). (a) According to Matt. 27:46 ("My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me") Jesus was given death not life. (b) If this refers to the divine Jesus, how could he have been given something he already had, namely, eternal life. (c) If this refers to the human Jesus, he can't be said to have had much of a life since he only lived approximately 33 years. He certainly did not live forever on earth. (18) PSALM 21:5 RSV ("His glory is great through thy help; splendor and majesty thou dost bestow upon him"). (a) If this were applicable, Jesus would not be divine since deity already has splendor and majesty. He would be a mere human receiving splendor and majesty. (b) If this is referring to his humanity, in fact, he was belittled and scorned. (19) PSALM 21:7 ("For the King {allegedly Jesus--Ed.} trusteth in the Lord, and through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved"). (a) If this refers to Jesus' divinity, he has no need to trust in another--God. Nor would he have need for the Most High that he should not be moved. (b) If this refers to his humanity, he was certainly moved--in downfall and death. (20) PSALM 27:12 ("Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies; for false witnesses are risen up against me, and such as breathe out cruelty"). Supposedly this pertains to Jesus and is fulfilled in Matt. 26:60 ("...though many false witnesses came, yet found they none. At last came two false witnesses...."). It does not pertain to Jesus because: (a) In Psalm 27:9 the speaker who is allegedly speaking for Jesus says, "...leave me not, neither forsake me, O God of my salvation." How could God be the salvation of Jesus, his equal? Why would a perfect being need to be saved? And God did forsake Jesus as Jesus stated in Matt. 27:46 ("My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?"). (b) In Psalm 27:6 the speaker says, "I will sing praises unto the Lord." There is no evidence in the gospels that Jesus ever sang praises to the Lord. (c) In Psalm 27:10 the speaker says, "When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." Nowhere do the gospels say that the father and mother of Jesus forsook him or that he was taken up when this occurred. (21) PSALM 30:3 ("O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave...."). This could not be referring to Jesus because: (a) The rest of the verse ("...thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit") shows he never died and was never buried. (b) According to the prior verse ("O Lord my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me"), Jesus was to have been healed. Being crucified is hardly equivalent to being healed. (c) Would the same speaker, who is supposedly Jesus--mankind's saviour, make the following comment found in the ninth verse-- ("What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit?")? (22) While on the cross Jesus supposedly fulfilled PSALM 31:5 ("Into thine hand I commit my spirit....") when he said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (Luke 23:46). But the comment in Psalms is not applicable to Jesus as several subsequent verses show. (a) Psalm 31:6 RSV ("I have hated them that regard lying vanities") immediately follows and would mean Jesus hated people. (b) Jesus was delivered into the hands of his enemies which contradicts Psalm 31:8 RSV ("...and hast not delivered me into the hand of the enemy"). (c) Psalm 31:10 RSV ("...my strength faileth because of mine iniquity, and my bones are consumed") would mean he committed iniquity. (d) And Psalm 31:17 RSV ("...let the wicked be ashamed and let them be silent in the grave") would mean he wished the worst upon his enemies. (23) PSALM 31:2 ("...deliver me speedily: be thou my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me") is not applicable to Jesus because it contradicts the NT teaching that Jesus died in accordance with his will. The Psalmist prayed to be rescued. (24) And PSALM 34:20 ("He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken") is supposedly fulfilled by John 19:33 ("...they brake not his legs") and John 19:36 ("...that the scripture should be fulfilled. A bone of him shall not be broken"). But Psalms couldn't be referring to Jesus because: (a) Psalm 34:4 ("I sought the Lord, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears") says he sought the Lord and was delivered; whereas Jesus cried vainly for help while on the cross. (b) And Psalm 34:19 ("Many are the afflictions of the righteous but the Lord delivereth him out of them all") which immediately precedes the verse under discussion says a righteous person (singular) would be delivered from all affliction; whereas the allegedly righteous Jesus was crucified.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #307 from DM of Pasadena, California (Part a)

Dear Dennis. (Generally speaking--Ed.) if you intend to claim that verse "x" in the King James Bible has been changed by Bible version "B" for political reasons, then a necessary condition is the elimination of the case whereby Bible "B" sports a superior translation of verse "x"..... In that sense you must defend the translation of verse "x" in the King James Bible as being superior to that in Bible "B"..... I thought that you might be subscribing to a general conspiracy theory--a serious error.... If you intend to claim that political expediency is an important factor in the writing of modern Bibles, then you are obliged to "go to the mat." It's one of those jobs that must either be done whole-hog or not at all....

Editor's Response to Letter #307 (Part a)

Dear DM. There is no doubt in my mind that the Bible is completely enveloped in political expediency and the text has been altered as times and conditions dictate. Before you choose to believe otherwise, I'd strongly suggest that you compare the top 15 versions on the market with respect to many key verses. Note the date the version emerged, the environment in which it appeared, the individual or organization sponsoring its appearance, the audience for which it's intended, and the implications of the alterations. You may not see a pattern of tendentious reasoning, but I do. I am not obliged to "go to the mat" to defend my position because it's only offered as a personal observation which others are free to view as they choose.

Letter #307 Concludes (Part b)

...Finally, I want to point out an excellent pamphlet item. Jonah 3:3 ("...Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three day's journey") asserts that the city of Nineveh {the old Assyrian capital} is a very great city which takes 3 days to cross! Thus, we easily have a city which is 60 miles in diameter! Archaeological digs reveal Nineveh to be no more than about 2 miles at its greatest extent. I quoted this verse to a Jehovah's Witness and stumped her cold. She promised to research it and get back to me, but I never heard from her again! The Hebrew word which is rendered as "city" also applies to Jerusalem, Jericho, and virtually every other city mentioned in the Bible. That sinks any claim that a "province" was "really" referred to. Another answer claims that, actually, the circumference was being referred to. But a city with a 19 mile diameter is hardly an improvement! Another potential claim views Jonah as walking "through" the city in a roundabout way. Not only would that be a very improbable (and unreliable) way to describe the size of a city, but the ruse is clearly shot down in many of the better translations. The 3 day figure is an attempt to impress the reader with the size of Nineveh--the Assyrians having been the first world-class power that Israel ran into. In doing so, the inspired writer of Jonah got carried away! One of the nice features of the above item is that it...presents a simple, concrete image which immediately presses the absurdity home.

Letter #308 from LWC of Lufkin, Texas

Dear Dennis. This is to call your attention to an important typo in Issue #74. Under "Polygamy" in line 10 (wives...) shouldn't Judges 8:20 be changed to Judges 8:30? Please understand that my intention is to be helpful, not critical. Your outstanding work is most helpful and much appreciated. Keep it up.

Editor's Response to Letter #308

Dear LWC. You are correct; we erred. Although painful, corrections of this nature are always welcome. My ego will have to bow to precision.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #309 from Steve Roelke of Anaheim, California

Dear Dennis. I've some ideas on how to considerably increase the amount of exposure, national and local, that B.E. now gets. I recently bought myself a personal computer and a modem and I've started engaging Christians in discussions of biblical errancy at every opportunity I get. I'm on a couple of local Christian boards and several other boards that have religious conferences, some of which are transmitted nationally. I have typed up your "Sample" B.E. issue and several of your commentaries. I type more of the commentaries as I have time, but once typed I can send them to a bulletin board with ease. Each of your commentaries that I upload to a board has a header with your name, address, and subscription information. What I would like to do is to get in touch with any of the subscribers of B.E. that would be interested in working together. The keys are communication, cooperation, and organization. There are relatively so few subscribers to B.E. that we need to pool our resources and share ideas. We need to start putting Biblical Errancy's name out there for more people to see. We have the ability to reach a tremendous number of people, at little or no cost. We could divide up the work of typing 73 commentaries (I've done 4 so far), exchange copies of our discussions with Christians (I have a long one on the Tyre prophecy that's pretty good), and just work together in discussions on the Bible on various bulletin boards. I'm sure some of your subscribers have been doing much of this already, and I'd like very much to get in touch with them. Ideally a nationally centralized bulletin board or nationally echoed religious conference would be best and least expensive, but for now anyone interested can leave a message for me VIA MODEM at the PCLAIR in Santa Ana, CA (phone 714-839-9580 [8-n-1]); the KANDY SHACK in Garden Grove, CA (ph 714-636-2667 [8-n-1]); or write to: Steve Roelke, 4313 E. Riverdale, Anaheim, California 92807. Also, do you know of anyone who has made or is in the process of making, a complete index of B.E? Finally, I want to commend you for the outstanding job you have been doing all these years Dennis. No doubt the rewards have been few, but what you are doing is of considerable importance. Thanks alot for all your hard work and dedication!

(A Subsequent Letter by Steve Re-addressed the Same Topic--Ed.).

Hello Dennis. I'd like to commend you once again for the excellent work you are doing....I am just beginning to really get into the fray myself. I am concentrating on computer bulletin boards....It is a really wonderful medium in which to discuss the Bible. You have plenty of time to analyze, research, and prepare responses which can then be saved and sent to any number of persons. I am typing a collection of files on various subjects, derived from BE of course, which I can upload easily at any time. Furthermore, as you well know, it really helps one to learn the ins-and-outs of apologists' arguments....

Editor's Response to Letter #309 and the Subsequent Letter

Dear Steve. You have come across an idea that is well worth exploring. Putting BE on boards via modems has great promise. Hopefully subscribers to BE who have computers and modems will contact you and seek to establish a modus operandi. Most freethought advocates have little or no contact with biblicists on a daily basis and this appears to be an excellent way to remedy the situation. You can't expose someone's mistakes if there is no means by which to reach him or her on a routine basis. BE will publish the ID numbers of anyone who wishes to join you or others in this endeavor.

We do have someone who is creating an index of BE by listing the location of every verse in the Bible mentioned in BE. I haven't contacted him lately so I'm not sure how far that has progressed. We do need an individual, however, to create an index showing the location of every subject discussed in BE. Perhaps someone will volunteer.

Your compliments are most kind and your dedication is to be applauded. If only we had thousands of like mind! Fortunately, BE has a number of supporters behind the scenes who distribute our literature, disseminate our ideas and otherwise aid the cause. They don't receive the notoriety that is so richly deserved, but they are out there, nevertheless. We heartily salute them.

COMMENTARY

MESSIANIC PROPHECIES (Part Two of a Five Part Series)--This month's commentary will continue last month's listing of messianic prophecies attributed to Jesus and explain why they are inapplicable. (25) PSALMS 35:11 and 35:19 ("False witnesses did rise up; they laid to my charge things that I knew not....Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully rejoice over me: neither let them wink with the eye that hate me without cause") are not fulfilled by Matt. 26:59-61, Mark 14:57-58 and John 15:24-25 for several reasons. (a) When did witnesses come forward to ask Jesus questions? Some testified, but they didn't query him. (b) If the Psalms are referring to Jesus and Jesus is God, how could he not know something? (c) Psalm 35:16 says, "they gnashed upon me with their teeth." When was Jesus bitten, literally bitten, by his opponents? (d) Psalm 35:7 RSV ("...without cause they dug a pit for my life") and Psalm 35:19 say he was hated without a cause. Jesus, on the other hand, was hated with justifiable cause in that he did not deny he claimed to be "The King of the Jews." (e) In Psalm 35:23 the speaker, who is allegedly Jesus, is talking to a being he refers to as "my God and my Lord." Did Jesus have a God? (f) The speaker asks to be judged by God in the next verse ("Judge me, O Lord my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not rejoice over me"). Would Jesus ask to be judged and did God ever judge Jesus? (26) Jesus supposedly fulfilled PSALM 38:11 ("My lovers and my friends stand aloof from my sore; and my kinsmen stand afar off") in Matt. 27:55 ("And many women were there beholding afar off...."), Mark 15:40, and Luke 23:49. But it couldn't be referring to him because of the following verses which are referring to the same person: (a) Psalm 38:3 ("...neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin") says he sinned. (b) Psalm 38:4 ("For mine iniquities are gone over mine head....") says he committed iniquities. (c) In Psalm 38:5 ("My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness") the speaker says he is foolish. (d) In Psalm 38:7 ("For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease; and there is no soundness in my flesh") the speaker says he has a loathsome disease. (e) In verse 11 the speaker says he has "lovers." (f) In Psalm 38:11 ("For I will declare mine iniquity; I will be sorry for my sin") he says he committed sin and iniquity. (g) And in Psalm 38:22 ("Make haste to help me, O Lord of my salvation") the speaker seeks salvation. Could these verses apply to Jesus? Would the perfect Jesus need to be saved? (27) PSALM 40:7-8 ("Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea thy law is within my heart"). (a) Would Jesus call God, "my God"? (b) The same speaker also uttered Psalm 40:12 ("...mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head....") which could not be applicable to Jesus. (c) In Psalm 40:13 ("Be pleased, O Lord to deliver me: O' Lord, make haste to help me") the speaker prayed earnestly to be delivered which conflicts with Paul's statements in Gal. 1:4, 2:20, Eph. 5:2, 25, 1 Tim. 2:6, Heb. 7:27, & Heb. 9:14 that Jesus died willingly. (28) PSALM 41:9 ("Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me") is not a reference to Judas by Jesus because: (a) The speaker in Psalm 41:4, who is also allegedly Jesus, says, "...Lord, be merciful unto me; heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee." Would Jesus have sinned against God? Moreover, it's hard to imagine Jesus, who is God, having a soul. (b) The speaker says in Psalm 41:8 ("An evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him; and now that he lieth he shall rise up no more"). Yet Jesus died by crucifixion, not a disease. (c) The same speaker, who is allegedly Jesus, says in Psalm 41:11 ("By this I know that thou favorest me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me"). But his enemies clearly triumphed over Jesus since they killed and buried him. (d) The speaker also says in Psalm 41:10 ("But thou, O Lord, be merciful unto me, and raise me up, that I may requite them"). Jesus, the perfect, forgiving being, wants to get even? (29) PSALM 45:3, 5 ("Gird thy {allegedly Jesus--Ed.} sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty....Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the King's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee"). (a) These verses do not suit the purported character of Jesus. Who can apply the praises of these warlike attributes to the "Prince of Peace?" This language is contrary to the idea of Christ presented in the NT. (b) When did the people fall under Jesus' arrows? (c) Psalm 45:8 says, "All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces...." Would a poor peasant have clothes that smelled of expensive fragrances? According to Scripture Jesus was poor and possessed few garments. (d) Psalm 45:8 RSV ("From ivory palaces stringed instruments make you glad....") doesn't apply to a lowly man of the people. Moreover, what ivory palaces had stringed instruments that were making Jesus glad? (e) Since Psalm 45:9 says, "Kings' daughters were among thy honorable women", most apologists would prefer to avoid this one entirely. (f) Psalm 45:9 ("...at your right hand stands the queen in gold of Ophir"). What queen stood at the right hand of Jesus in gold of Ophir? (30) PSALM 55:12-13 RSV ("It is not an enemy who taunts me; then I could bear it: it is not an adversary who deals insolently with me, then I could hide from him. But it is you {allegedly Judas--Ed.}, my equal, my companion, my familiar friend"). (a) Judas was far from being the equal of Jesus. (b) Would Jesus say "Destroy, Oh Lord" which the speaker says in verse 9? (c) Would pacific Jesus ask God to let his enemies "go down quick into hell" as is stated in verse 15? AGAIN AND AGAIN WE SEE THAT CONTEXT IS FATAL TO THE APOLOGETIC POSITION. (31) PSALM 68:18 ("Thou didst ascend the high mount, leading captives in thy train, and receiving gifts among men...."). When did Jesus lead captives to a high mount? (32) The speaker in PSALM 69:5 ("O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my sins are not hidden from thee") and PSALM 69:9 ("For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me {allegedly Jesus--Ed.} up; and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me") couldn't be Jesus since he is allegedly perfection personified and couldn't have committed sins. (33) PSALM 69:4 ("They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty...."). Jesus allegedly fulfills this prophecy in John 15:23-25. Yet, the verse is clearly not referring to him because: (a) The next verse says, "O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my sins are not hid from thee." According to NT verses Jesus was neither foolish nor sinful. (b) Nowhere in John 15:23-25 does Jesus state that his enemies are more than the hairs of his head. (c) And, as was stated earlier, Jesus was not hated without cause. (34) PSALM 69:21 ("They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink"). Jesus did not fulfill this prophecy either because: (a) the same sinful person is speaking who spoke in Psalms 69:4-5. (b) Matt. 27:34 ("They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall") says the gall and vinegar were mingled together, not given separately. (c) Matt. 27:34 RSV ("...they offered him wine to drink....") says he was given wine to drink, not vinegar. Wine is not vinegar. (d) Referring to the same person, the 26th verse says, "For they persecute him whom thou hast smitten, and him whom thou hast wounded, they afflict still more". God never smote Jesus nor did he ever wound him. (e) Would the allegedly kind and forgiving Jesus curse his enemies as the same individual did in verses 22 to 29 ("Let their own table before them become a snare; let their sacrificial feasts be a trap. Let their eyes be darkened, so that they cannot see; and make their loins tremble continually. Pour out thy indignation upon them and let thy burning anger overtake them...."). (35) PSALM 72:1 ("Give the King thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the King's son") is not applicable to Jesus either because: (a) If "the King's son" is Jesus, who was the father of Jesus who was also a King? (b) If the King is Jesus, when did Jesus have a son and when was he a king? (c) How could Jesus be given righteousness when he already had it? (d) How could God give Jesus anything when Jesus already had everything God had? According to John 10:30 ("I and my father are one") they are equal? (36) PSALM 72:2, 4 ("He shall judge the people with righteousness, and the poor with judgment....He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor"). (a) Jesus never judged the poor of the people or saved the children of the needy. (b) He never broke the oppressor into pieces. (37) PSALM 72:7 ("In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth"). The righteous did not flourish in his days and there was no peace, although the moon still endures. (38) PSALM 72:8 ("He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth"), PSALM 72:9 ("They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust"), PSALM 72:11 ("Yea, all Kings shall fall down before him: All nations shall serve him"), PSALM 72:14 ("...and to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba...."), and PSALM 72:17 ("All nations shall call him blessed") say that Jesus shall rule. None of these occurred while he dwelled on earth. (39) PSALM 72:14 ("He shall redeem their {the poor and needy} soul from deceit and violence"). Jesus never redeemed the soul of the needy from deceit or violence. (40) PSALM 88:8 ("Thou {God--Ed.} hast put away mine acquaintance far from me {Jesus--Ed.}; thou hast made me an abomination unto them...."). This verse couldn't be referring to Jesus because: (a) The 1st verse ("O Lord God of my salvation....") says the speaker seeks salvation which the perfect Jesus wouldn't need. (b) In the 4th verse ("I am a man that hath no strength") the speaker says he has no strength while Matt. 28:18 ("And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth") says Jesus was all powerful. (c) In Psalm 88:7 ("Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves") the speaker says God afflicted him; in Psalm 88:14 ("Lord, why castest thou off my soul") the speaker says God cast off his soul, and in Psalm 88:15 ("...I suffer thy terrors I am distracted") and Psalm 88:16 ("Thy fierce wrath goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off") the speaker says he was a victim of God's terrors. In none of these verses could the speaker be Jesus. (41) In PSALM 89:3-4 ("I {God--Ed.} have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish for ever: and build up thy throne to all generations"). As was stated previously, "seed" is referring to all of David's descendants, not just one particular individual. The RSV translation actually says "descendants." The same principle applies to Psalm 89:29-30 ("His {David's--Ed.} seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. If his children forsake my law...."). The verse mentions "his children" so why assume its referring to Jesus specifically? (42) PSALM 109:6-8 RSV ("Appoint a wicked man against him; let an accuser bring him to trial. When he is tried, let him come forth guilty; let his prayer be counted as sin! May his days be few; may another seize his goods!") is allegedly referring to the trial, possessions, and lifespan of Jesus but is inapplicable because: (a) A prayer of Jesus couldn't be counted as sin. (b) Jesus had no goods to seize according to Luke 9:58 ("...but the Son of man hath no where to lay his head"). (c) Verse 9 ("Let his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow") clearly shows Jesus is not the person under discussion since he had neither a wife nor children. (43) Finally, we have PSALM 109:4-5 ("In return for my love they accuse me, even as I make prayer for them. So they reward me evil for good and hatred for my love"). The magnanimity of love shown in these verses couldn't apply to Jesus because subsequent verses demonstrate the speaker wanted retaliation. Psalm 109:20 and 28-29 ("May this be the reward of my accusers from the Lord, of those who speak evil against my life!... Let my assailants be put to shame; may thy servant be glad! May my accusers be clothed with dishonor; may they be wrapped in their own shame as in a mantle") express an attitude that is directly contrary to that exhibited by Jesus in Luke 23:34 ("Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do").

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter # 310 from TF of Pasadena, Maryland (Part a)

(TF is the founder and coordinator of the MENSA special interest group called "Bible Answers," and editor of its monthly publication, Bible Answers Newsletter. Two of his recent issues were devoted to rebuttals of BE's two pamphlets. Before beginning his critique he stated the following-Ed.). A reader of the July 1988 issue of our publication apparently noticed my statement, "We have not yet had the benefit of any challenges from atheists, let alone well-informed atheists." He has sent me two pamphlets written specifically to challenge Bible-believers. The pamphlets also give the name and address devoted to the goal of proving or demonstrating biblical errancy. The organization is not identified as atheistic, but it is explicitly opposed to the inerrancy of the Bible. Therefore it serves our purposes. Judge for yourselves whether the challenges are "well-informed." My thanks to the person who sent the material. He is not a subscriber but I will send him the issues which contain the answers proposed by our readers....I truly enjoyed doing the research. My job is a whole lot easier when readers submit specific questions or challenges. (After reproducing BE's pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD?, TF said--Ed.). I left the grammar and punctuation as they were, so that I would not misrepresent the author in any way. I now address the author: Before I respond to the numbered challenges, I extend a challenge of my own: Prove that your assertion is true, that the Bible "contains hundreds of problems and contradictions that can't be solved." Mere assertion is not enough.

(At this point TF addressed BE's first point which was: If you must accept Jesus as your savior in order to be saved {John 14:6}, what about the billions of beings that die as fetuses, infants, mental deficient, etc.? For them to accept Jesus would be impossible, so they are condemned to hell because of conditions over which they had no control. Deut. 32:4 says God is just, but where is the justice?--Ed.).

You assert that it is "impossible" for certain people to accept Jesus as Savior. Suppose each person has a conscious, competent soul at conception? I don't advocate that doctrine, but I see that you haven't proved yours.

However much we speculate about the degrees of penalty and reward for various individuals, all Bible-believers agree that God will judge with righteous judgment. You cite John 14:6 which states that "no man cometh unto the Father, but by" Jesus. All who are saved are saved by his power. That verse does not say that anyone goes to hell or that anyone goes to heaven. John 3:16-19 concludes with "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." People are responsible individually for the arrogant rejection of the truths God has made clear to them individually. Children are less culpable. "But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 19:14).

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part a)

Dear TF. With all due respect, I think you would do well to consult notable apologists before engaging in apologetics. I'd suggest Josh McDowell and Gleason Archer for openers. Their grasp of the imbroglis our pamphlets expose is much more perceptive and their rationalizations are more relevant. Your explanations, on the other hand, are often without substance, disjointed, and not germane. The present example is a case in point. First, you say, "suppose each person has a conscious, competent soul at conception." Surely you not saying an embryo can consciously accept Jesus as his or her savior, because that is what is required. You admit you are "supposing" rather than providing evidence. I can understand your reluctance to advocate such a doctrine directly; it's inane. Leaving aside the tangential issue of whether or not an embryo is a "person" at conception, an embryo is neither competent nor conscious, in any meaningful sense, at conception. You say that I "haven't proved" my doctrine in this regard. But I am under no obligation to prove something does not exist which you claim does. The burden of proof lies on he who alleges; that's axiomatic. You are obligated to prove that an embryo is "conscious and competent" at conception sufficient to make a calculated decision to accept Jesus. You can "suppose" anything you like but that has nothing to do with proof. Second, if embryos and infants were as conscious and competent as you imply, why wouldn't they also be morally responsible for their behavior? Third, how would they even learn about Jesus? Were they preached to through the abdominal wall and in the crib? How far do you want to carry this? Fourth, mentally deficient people with very low IQ's couldn't accept Jesus no matter where they were. Many are not conscious of what is required nor are they competent to make decisions. Fifth, you say that, "all Bible-believers agree that God will judge with righteous judgment." But what people believe is irrelevant. The question is what the Book says. And the Book repeatedly says that if you don't accept Jesus as your saviour you are doomed. John 14:6 ("I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man {NO MAN--Ed.} cometh unto the Father, but by me"), John 3:18 ("He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God"), John 3:36 ("He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him"), 1 John 5:12 ("He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life"), Acts 4:12 ("Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved"), and 1 Cor. 3:11 make that abundantly clear. What biblicists, such as yourself, don't realize is that the Book has locked you in; there is no escape. Absolutist statements are always dangerous and this is a prime example. Christianity has no answer for this problem; it never has and never will. More sophisticated strategies try to employ the 1st chapter of Romans but that's doomed from the start because salvation requires acceptance of Jesus in particular as one's Savior not a general belief in God. Sixth, believers may believe that God will judge with righteous judgment but that's not in accordance with the text. The latter shows he will judge on the basis of one's attitude toward Jesus. Righteousness has nothing to do with the issue. Even if you were to find statements to the effect that judgment will be based on righteousness, you would have only escaped one contradiction to face another. Seventh, you say that "all who are saved are saved by his power." But the Book says we are saved by accepting Jesus, not "by his power," except in so far as it comes over you after you have accepted him. You save yourself; he doesn't do it for you. Eighth, you say that John 14:6 "does not say that anyone goes to hell or that anyone goes to heaven." But it most assuredly does. If you aren't saved, where else can you go except to hell? If being saved means attaining heaven, then being lost means condemnation to hell. Are you saying there is a third option? If so, could you provide biblical support? Ninth, I'm not sure why you quoted John 3:19 when the prior verse proves precisely the point I'm making and was quoted earlier. When read in context one can easily see that this is the kind of verse you should avoid. Tenth, after quoting John 3:19 you say that, "people are responsible individually for the arrogant rejection of the truths God has made clear to them individually." But what has this to do with the issue? When and how could fetuses, infants, and the mentally deficient "arrogantly reject" anything and how was the requisite information "made clear" to them? Eleventh, you say that, "children are less culpable." What do you mean, "less culpable"? They either are or they aren't culpable. The Bible rarely allows for shades of gray or intermediate stages. You either are or you aren't. You talk as if the Book were rational and allowed for gradations. And lastly, you quoted Matt. 19:14 which says that children compose heaven. As used by you, the verse means either that children, including fetuses and infants, have accepted Jesus and attained heaven or heaven is composed of people who did not accept Jesus, which would contradict the verses I quoted earlier. Either way, a problem remains.

Letter #310 Continues (Part b)

(After addressing our pamphlet's first point, TF criticised the second--Why are we being punished for Adam's sin? After all, he ate the forbidden fruit, we didn't; it's his problem not ours, especially in light of Deut. 24:16 which says the children shall not be punished for the sins of their fathers--Ed.). It is more accurate to say that we are penalized by Adam's sin, rather than for his sin. (A hemophiliac may die of AIDS because of someone else's sin.) We should recognize that we inherited the earth from Adam. As a result of Adam's offense, God chose not to renew some of the blessings he had previously renewed on a daily basis. God never took away anything that Adam (or you) had a right to possess. We may resent the fact that Adam did not give us a better inheritance. Better yet, let's rejoice that Jesus has obtained a greater inheritance than Adam ever could (and has offered it to us). See 1 Peter 1:4 ("To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you").

Incidentally, Deut. 24:16 refers only to the death penalty as enforced by the government of Israel, and is not otherwise generalized.

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part b)

Your response to this contradiction also merits a reply, TF. First, your preference to use "by" rather than "for" Adam's sin only creates a distinction without a difference. The fact is that we are bearing the burden, we are being punished, for what someone else did. Your hemophiliac example isn't analogous because a conscious decision by a just being was not involved. Fate and chance rather than conscious intent determined the outcome. It was not consciously willed by an outside power that the hemophiliac would suffer because of another's behavior. Second, your comment that "...God chose not to renew some of the blessings he had previously renewed on a daily basis" is nothing more than an attempt to soft-pedal an event which gave rise to a catastrophic injustice. Because of Adam and Eve's sin, the world allegedly reeks with antisocial behavior, mankind was denied a heaven-on-earth, and women must bear pain in childbirth. Third, you say that "God never took away anything that Adam (or you) had a right to possess." I beg to differ. When I'm denied something which I would have received except for another's misbehavior, that's losing something I had a right to possess. I did nothing to lose it and would have received it but for another's bad deeds. That's injustice. Fourth, you say that "we may resent the fact that Adam did not give us a better inheritance." Judging from the world's condition, that's putting it mildly. But more importantly, we have a right to be resentful not only against Adam but against God. At least that's the logical conclusion to which Christian theology leads. Fifth, your comment that we should "rejoice that Jesus has obtained a greater inheritance than Adam ever could (and has offered it to us)" is one of the most common subterfuges used by the more subtle apologists. In effect, they are saying, "Wasn't Jesus marvelous to provide us a way out of this quagmire." But that's irrelevant. The fact remains that if God had been just from the beginning we would never have been in the dilemma to begin with. How we get out of the problem is not the issue. The issue is how we could have gotten into it from the beginning if God was just. Realizing the obvious injustice that is involved, apologists often try to shift the focus from how we got into the problem to how Jesus provided a way out. And lastly, your comment that Deut. 24:16 ("The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers, every man shall be put to death for his own sin") refers only to the death penalty as enforced by the government of Israel and is not otherwise generalized exemplifies a ruse often employed by biblicists. If they like an OT verse, or a NT verse for that matter, they say it applies to everybody. If they don't like it, such as verses requiring death for: striking your father or your mother (Ex. 21:15), committing adultery (Deut. 22:22), or being a witch (Ex. 22:18), they say it is no longer applicable. Upon what basis do you assume that it only applies to the government of Israel and is not to be generalized? Are you going to apply the same criterion to every maxim in the OT including the Ten Commandments and if not, why not? Where do you draw the line and upon what basis? (To Be Continued)

EDITOR'S NOTE: While praising BE, a couple of readers have criticised the quality of its printing. We admit the print is rather condensed and columns might help. But the latter would require a new computer and double-spacing would mean twice as many years would be required to exhaust our notes, unless we doubled our number of pages. The latter would entail increasing our prices substantially which we are determined to avoid. Although we recently experienced an increase in printing and mailing costs, we are determined to hold the line. More white space means less information. Deep inside I can't help but feel that anyone who can't or won't navigate 3 or 4 pages of single-spaced commentaries each month probably won't have sufficient stamina over the long run to cope with the determination of biblicists, regardless.

COMMENTARY

MESSIANIC PROPHECIES (Part Three of a Five-Part Series)--April and May's commentaries focused on the inapplicability of the alleged messianic prophecies and this month's commentary will continue that enumeration. (44) PSALM 110:1 ("The Lord {allegedly God--Ed.} said unto my Lord {allegedly Jesus--Ed.}, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool"). (a) If "my Lord" were Jesus this would contradict one of the primary tenets of Christianity (1 Cor. 15:24, 25, 28) which is that Jesus is to do the work of subduing the enemies of God and not God himself. (b) My "Lord" comes from the Hebrew word addressed to one of superior age, rank, or influence. It has nothing to do with Jesus, God, or any part of the Trinity. The Hebrew word for lord, "adonee," was applied by David to King Saul on at least two occasions (1 Sam. 24:8, 10). Thus, if this lord refers to a person who is part of and one with God, Saul, to whom David also refers as "adonee," could be also. If David wrote this Psalm, then Saul must be the "adonee" of the Psalm, since he is the only person David ever acknowledged as his lord and master. (c) "Adonee" appears often in the OT, but nowhere is it applied to the Almighty. However, it is applied to Abraham (Gen. 23:6, 11, 15), the king of Egypt (Gen. 40:1), Laban (Gen. 31:35), and Esau (Gen. 32:4). (d) The language implies God is speaking to a person already existing, i.e., David, not Jesus. David is the "my Lord." (e) "Lord" in "my Lord" should not be capitalized as the RSV shows. It refers to a lord here on earth, i.e. nobility, not a divine being. It is only a title of courtesy. There is only one Lord with a capital "L" and that refers to God as 1 Kings 1:36-37, for example, shows. (f) This was probably written by a contemporary of David who is referring to David, his sovereign, as "my lord." (45) PSALM 110:2-3 ("The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power..."). The rod of thy strength is inapplicable to Jesus because he never ruled in the midst of his enemies and never had a day of power. (46) PSALM 118:26 ("Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord..."). It says, "cometh in the name of the Lord." It did not say he was the Lord. Why assume it is referring to Jesus? (47) PROV. 30:4 ("Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended? who hath gathered the wind in his fists? who hath bound the waters in a garment? who hath established all the ends of the earth? what is his name, and what is his son's name, if thou canst tell?"). This couldn't be referring to Jesus because his name was known then and is known now. Moreover, he had no son. (48) ISAIAH 9:6 ("For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace"). Although taunted as a prime messianic prophecy this verse is inapplicable to Jesus for several reasons: (a) The use of "us" and "is" shows that he (Isaiah--Ed.) is speaking only in the present tense, to the Jews living in his own time around 742 B.C. Isaiah's contemporaries will receive the child, not their distant descendants. (b) Nobody calls or called Jesus Wonderful, Counsellor, or Everlasting Father. (c) He is the Everlasting Son, not Father. How could Jesus talk to God the Father if he were God the Father as this verse contends? (d) The "Prince of Peace" is contrary to Matt. 10:34 which says Jesus came to bring a sword, not peace. (49) ISAIAH 9:7 ("Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever"). Jesus did not set up a government of peace without end or, indeed, any government. (50) ISAIAH 11:1-3 ("And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and the fear of the Lord: And shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord...."). (a) How could Jesus gain the spirit of the Lord, the spirit of wisdom and the spirit of might? As God's co-equal he would already have had them. (b) Would Jesus fear his co-equal, God? (51) ISALIAH 11:4 ("But with righteousness shall he judge the poor,....and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked...."). When did Jesus judge the poor, smite the earth with the rod of his mouth and slay the wicked? The allegedly meek victim, i.e. Jesus, who went as a lamb to the slaughter, can hardly be described as slaying the wicked with the breath of his mouth. (52) ISALIAH 11:6-7 ("The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: And the lion shall eat straw like the ox"). When the Messiah came there was to be peace between ferocious and domestic animals and they were not to injure human beings. This is also predicted in Isa. 65:25, Ezek. 34:25, 28, and Hosea 2:18. Jesus certainly never brought in an era of universal peace. Beasts and nations still fight and slay as of yore. (53) ISALIAH 11:11 ("And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people...."). This isn't saying the Messiah will come a second time as some allege, but only that the Lord will again try to bring his Remnant back to Israel. (54) ISALIAH 16:5 RSV ("Then a throng will be established in steadfast love and on it will sit in faithfulness in the tent of David one who judges and seeks justice and is swift to righteousness"). Jesus never sat in David's tent or judged while he was on earth. (55) ISALIAH 32:1 ("Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment"). (a) There is no divinity implied here. Ishmaelites could just as easily say this passage refers to their supreme ruler. Their evidence is just as good as that for Jesus. (b) The entire verse is speculative, anyway. (56) ISALIAH 40:4-5 ("Every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be made low...and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it"). Christians apply this prophecy to Christ; but "all flesh" have not seen this glorious revelation, or even heard of it, although nearly 2,000 years have elapsed since the boasted fulfillment in Christ. (57) ISALIAH 49:5 RSV ("...and my God has become my strength"). (a) Yet, God did not become Jesus' strength or protect him from his enemies. (b) Would Jesus, who is God's equal, say this or needs God's strength? (58) ISALIAH 49:6 ("I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth"). (a) If this is Jesus, it contradicts his description of his mission in Matthew 15:24 ("But he answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel"). (b) How did Jesus illuminate the eyes of the Gentiles or the nations? Most of the nations, such as Moslems, do not accept him as the Savior. (59) ISALIAH 49:7 ("...Kings shall see and arise; princes, and they shall prostrate themselves...."). Kings and princes have never paid homage to Jesus. (60) ISALIAH 49:8-9 RSV ("...I have kept you and given you as a covenant to the people, to establish the land, to apportion the desolate heritages; saying to the prisoners, come forth, to those who are in darkness, Appear"). This could not be referring to Jesus since Christ did not conduct the people out of captivity. (61) ISALIAH 50:6 ("I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to those who pulled out the beard; I hid not my face from shame and spitting"). (a) This could not be referring to Jesus because the same verse says his oppressors pulled out his beard. When did Jesus have his beard pulled out? (b) Verse 8 ("he who vindicates me is near....Who is my adversary? Let him come near to me") says the speaker's justifier is near. Yet, all of Jesus' justifiers were far away while his accusers were near. According to Matt. 27:46 and Psalm 22:1-2 ("My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring? O my God, I cry in the daytime, but thou hearest not....") even his father in heaven was far away in his time of trouble. (62) ISALIAH 61:1-2 ("The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted...to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn"). (a) This couldn't be Jesus because it implies the person under discussion received the Spirit of the Lord which Jesus always had. (b) Jesus has always been anointed. He didn't receive it. (c) Ishmaelites and the other nations could also say that this was said of their leaders. (d) This statement was actually made by Isaiah concerning himself long before Jesus was born. (63) ISAIAH 63:3-6 ("I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come....therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me. And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury...."). (a) But Jesus did have some of the people with him. (b) The meek and mild Jesus admits he will exhibit anger and fury and tread people down?? (c) Since the NT never refers to "their blood" being sprinkled on the garments of Jesus, it is nothing more than speculation that this refers to Jesus. (d) Instead of "the year of my redeemed is come" the RSV and Mod. Lang. Versions have "my year of redemption" and "the year of my redemption has come" respectively. They certainly couldn't be referring to Jesus who needed no redemption. (e) How could the perfect Jesus have a "day of vengeance in his heart?" Would Jesus want to get even with people? (f) How could the arm of Jesus bring salvation to himself when he needed no salvation? (64) And finally, ISAIAH 65:9 ("And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains. And mine elect shall inherit it and my servants shall dwell there"). By saying "bring forth descendants" from Jacob, rather than "bring forth a seed," the RSV shows that "seed" refers to many people, not one. The RSV and Mod. Lang. Versions say "inheritors" not "an inheritor" which also shows that many people are being referred to rather than one. So the verse couldn't be referring only to Jesus.

DIALOGUE AND DEBATE

Letter #310 Continues from Last Month (Part c)

(BE's 7th point on its pamphlet, THE BIBLE IS GOD'S WORD, was: Rom. 3:23 says "All have sinned." All means all. Yet, Gen. 6:9 says Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations. Job 1:1 and 1:8 say Job was perfect. How could these men have been perfect if all have sinned? What follows is TF's reply--Ed.). Noah and Job were "perfect." In 2 Tim. 3:16-17 Paul tells us that "all scripture is given by...God... that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works." Those who are "perfect" are complete, healthy, and exemplary in their relative moral development.

Nevertheless, all have sinned, except for Jesus. Even our best actions are corrupted by impure motives (Isa. 64:6). Jesus alone was perfect and sinless.

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part c)

You say "those who are perfect are complete...and exemplary in their 'relative' moral development." What does that mean? If it means they are perfect, then they are morally perfect, period, and that contradicts Rom. 3:23. If it means they are more moral than anyone else, but less than perfect, then they are morally imperfect like everyone else. Either they are morally perfect or they aren't. There is no inbetween. You are engaging in doubletalk, TF. The Bible says they are perfect and that settles it. If Noah was not morally perfect, then he had no more right to be saved on the Ark than anyone else because he was a sinner like everyone else. The difference between Noah and all others would be one of degree not kind. If Jesus, alone, was perfect and sinless, then Noah and Job were morally imperfect and Gen. 6:9 and Job 1:1 are false. You can't have it both ways.

Letter #310 Continues (Part d)

(BE's 23rd point on the same pamphlet was: For justice to exist, punishment must fit the crime. No matter how many bad deeds one commits in this world, there is a limit. Yet Hell's punishment is infinitely greater. What follows is TF's reply--Ed.). I haven't found the verse which defines hell's punishment as being "infinitely greater" than we deserve. Punishment must fit the crime. Hell is not "infinitely greater." It is infinite in its duration. It is easy to define an infinite series which has a finite total. Nevertheless, hell is clearly something to avoid.

Editor's Response to Letter #310 (Part d)

Again, TF, your answer is wholly inadequate for several reasons. First, unless biblical authors completely take leave of their senses, no verse is going to admit "hell's punishment is 'infinitely greater' than we deserve." Logic rather than biblical authors provide the evidence. Matt. 25:46 ("And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal"), Matt. 3:12 ("...but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire"), Dan. 12:2 ("And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt"), Rev. 14:11 ("And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast..."), Rev. 20:10 ("And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone...and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever"), and Rev. 20:15 show that people are punished in Hell for eternity. Yet, there is no way anyone can commit an infinite number of sins, since we only live for a finite number of years. The obvious conclusion is that if anyone is punished in hell for eternity, then the punishment is far greater than that which is warranted. Second, your assertion that "hell is not infinitely greater. It is infinite in its duration" is another distinction without substance. One's punishment in Hell is either infinite or it isn't; there is no inbetween. Since the prior verses show it is eternal, justice is impossible. No one's evil deeds are infinite. Third, perhaps you're trying to say Hell is eternal but punishment in Hell is finite? If so, could you provide biblical support for this and state where people go after serving their time in agony? Fourth, I'm not even sure you understand simple math. How can an infinite series have a finite total? The number of finites within an infinite series is infinite, not finite. (To Be Continued)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letter #311 from Paul Keller of Grand Forks, North Dakota

Dear Dennis.Last Thursday I spoke on atheism to two classes at a high school. They were "Bible as Literature" classes. Your leaflets were very useful for provoking questions. Please send 50 more of each. There were some questions about the "Jesus Christ is the Answer" pamphlet. The teacher looked up #5 in I don't know what version and found that the cock crowed after the second denial. Number 5 says it occurred after the first. Of course, it is still not the third, as was prophecied. Also, in #4 the bible says the first day of the week. She thought maybe that was Monday. I said it is considered to be Sunday.... My goal was to get the students to question and I sure did that. By the end of each class they were peppering me with questions even though both classes started out very quiet.

Editor's Response to Letter #311

Dear Paul. First, I want to congratulate you on getting into a high school class with this kind of information. Most "Bible as Literature" classes are little more than subterfuges used by biblicists for worming biblical indoctrination into public education. I'm surprised you even got a hearing. The teacher must have been exceptional. Second, I rechecked my pamphlets and found no errors.

Mark 14:66-68 clearly contradicts the prophecy found in John 13:38. You might ask the teacher what she was referring to. I'd like to know. Third, I don't think there is much dispute about Sunday being the first day of the week. That's not a real issue. The seventh day is Saturday and that's the sabbath, the day of rest. Keep up your excellent work. If only more people were doing the same!

Letter #312 from DL of Ipswich, Massachusetts

(DL sent the following letter to a radio talk-show host. For this, we are most grateful--Ed.). Dear Mr. Burns. I had hoped that Dennis McKinsey, editor of the national periodical Biblical Errancy, would have been a guest on your talk show by now. Since that has not taken place I felt I should write to you again and include some additional BE literature. I don't think I could impress upon you in a letter the importance of the work that Mr. McKinsey is so dedicated to concerning the Bible. However, I have sent you his powerful commentary taken from Issue #31 of BE entitled What is Needed which I hope you will take the time to read. I've also included an article taken from Issue #69, on Heaven which I think is a classic.... I want to wish you continued success with the best and most informative talk show in the New England area. Yours in Freethought!

Letter #313 from DL of Ipswich, Massachusetts

(DL is undoubtedly one of BE's most energetic and dedicated supporters as another one of his letters demonstrates--Ed.). Dear Mr. Donahue. I try to look in on your program as often as possible. You are without question the number one host of all the talk show hosts. The wide variety of interesting topics and the superb manner in which you present them to the public is quite apparent. You are a really great communicator. Phil, you are deserving of many compliments, one being for having done a number of shows on religion....Just recently you had Dan Barker from the Freedom From Religion Foundation on one of your shows.

There is another gentleman that needs to be heard on a national talk show. His name is Dennis McKinsey and he has a national periodical called Biblical Errancy. I have been in contact by letter with three excellent local talk shows out of the Boston area and hope he will soon be a guest on at least one of those programs.... Mr. McKinsey has been on a number of local talk shows around the country and a little over a year ago I heard him on a radio program out of Buffalo, New York. The show was just about the most interesting and liveliest of programs on religion that I have ever heard! Dennis will be on national television eventually for it's just a matter of time, so why not have him make his first appearance as a guest on the Donahue Show. I can not think of one reason why the Bible should not be discussed on national television, can you?

I have been receiving Biblical Errancy for about two years and also have all of the prior issues of this periodical. Along with this letter, I have sent you his sample issue and issue #58. I might suggest to you or anyone else who will be reading these newsletters, and I hope they will, to read No. 58 first and be sure to read the letter from South Pasadena, California and the Editor's response in the sample issue. I've also included an article taken from the 1988 September issue on Heaven which I think is a classic.

Phil, I wish you continued success with the best and most informative talk show in the country and please don't pass up the opportunity to be the first to have Dennis McKinsey as your guest on a program in the near future. Yours in freethought!

Letter #314 from Dennis McKinsey to the Federal Communications Commissioner on Sept. 11, 1976

(Long before BE existed I struggled against religious dominance of the air-ways. BE has published many letters from others so I thought it might be interesting and informative to print one of my own which was recently unearthed--Ed.). Dear Commissioner Wiley: My name is Dennis McKinsey and I live in the Miami Valley of Western Ohio. In my area there exists a call-in radio station known as WAVI which is hosted by several talk-masters, some of whom are quite unjust in the methodology by which they conduct conversations. One individual is particularly flagrant in this regard. His name is Keith Hardin and he acts as an emcee for a couple of religious call-in programs on Sunday mornings. Apparently he feels that callers should be allowed to speak, providing they do not imply that the Bible lacks validity or accuracy. One does not need to make statements; asking questions is sufficient. Several times he has found himself without an answer and rather than reason through the problem he has simply terminated the call. In so far as I can remember he has never allowed me to complete any concept I sought to develop. The censorship which he exercises is clear and obvious to anyone who cares to listen. After receiving far too many unwarranted cut-offs, I challenged him to a debate over the Bible and stated my willingness to go to the station on any Sunday of his choosing. He not only stated that he felt it would be a waste of time (something only the audience is prepared to judge objectively) but no longer will allow me to speak because I challenged him. I told him a much more balanced presentation of both positions would be possible if he did not "have all that electronic equipment down at the station to run interference." Several times, including the last Sunday in August, 1976, he has resorted to a clearly deceptive and quite dishonest maneuver by which to give the audience the impression that the caller is being unreasonable. Essentially what happens is as follows: When Hardin finds himself in a predicament from which there is no escape, he will turn down the volume which prevents the caller, i.e. me, from hearing him while all other controls remain the same. While the caller, i.e. me, is talking and hearing no response from the other end of the line he naturally assumes that the talkmaster is continuing to listen. The caller ends each sentence and, hearing no response, continues to speak. Deception lies in the fact that the caller does not realize that the talkmaster is simultaneously making such statements as, "But sir, may I say this" or "I would like to say" or "Could I just say this." Meanwhile the caller keeps talking not realizing that the host is trying to speak or, at least giving the impression of same. Finally the talkmaster will hang up the phone with such words as, "Well, if he isn't going to allow me to speak there is no sense in continuing the conversation." Of course, members of the audience, who can hear everybody, have been deceived as to what really occurred and say to themselves, "I would have cut him off too if I had been the talkmaster."

It is clear that I am not going to receive a hearing with respect to the Sunday morning programs conducted by Keith Hardin. He not only hosts nearly two hours of programming but operates the electronic equipment during Mike Willis' one hour Bible Forum program. As now constituted the programs are little more than propaganda agencies for groups that will allow no significant criticism of the Bible. Arguments over interpretation of the Bible are permitted; discussions concerning the validity of the book itself are not. I have tape recordings of the conversations that have occurred and would be glad to make them available to anyone who may have questions as to what occurs. After listening to the tapes I am sure you would agree that a doctrine of fairness is not a significant factor in this matter. Even when one is allowed to propound a question, the talkmaster will often waste little time in terminating the call so that he can provide any response, no matter how weak, fully cognizant of the caller's inability to rebut. To be heard fully without interruption is my only concern. They seek a monologue; I seek a dialogue. I have called several talkmasters to express my dissatisfaction, but to no avail. The program manager told me he has received complaints from other people concerning Keith Hardin and promised to "talk to him." As of the present nothing has changed. I would appreciate action by your office in this matter. I might add that after many calls to Pastor Mike Willis he stated, "I am simply not going to allow you to destroy the effectiveness of this program."

(Readers of BE might be interested in knowing that I received a reply from the FCC to the effect that they do not, and will not, exercise any kind of oversight in matters of this nature. The moral of the story is that one need only buy himself a program or radio station in order to repeatedly tell the world that black is white without fear of correction--Ed.).

Letter #315 from RWH of Piqua, Ohio

Dear Dennis. Thanks to BE I have shown many people that the Bible does have major problems. I love it. Please send me #32 and #33. Also, please send me 10 each of your two pamphlets....

COMMENTARY

MESSIANIC PROPHECIES (Part Four of a Five-Part Series)--For several months we have been listing the OT messianic prophecies that are allegedly referring to Jesus and explaining why they are inapplicable. This month's commentary will continue that enumeration and begin with the book of Jeremiah. (65) JER. 23:5-6 ("Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS"). (a) Jesus could not be that Branch because he was not a physical descendant of David. Joseph was not his physical father and that breaks the genealogical chain. (b) The Branch of David was to be a king who would save them from their enemies. Jesus was not a king and he did not save them from their enemies. (c) Jesus never reigned, prospered, or executed judgment. During his time Judah was still subjugated by Gentiles and Israel had apparently vanished amidst captivities. (d) Several Hebrew scholars claim the KJV should have translated the final underlined part as: "this is the name whereby they shall call themselves: The Eternal is our righteousness." They claim the following deceptive changes were made in the KJV: (d1) "The name" was changed to "his name." (d2) The pronoun "they" relating to the people of Judah and Israel was changed to "he." (d3) The word "Eternal" was incorrectly translated as "Lord." (d4) "The Lord our righteousness" was printed in capital letters to point to an atoning redeemer when the same phrase is used in Jer. 33:16 but not capitalized. (e) Some critics claim there should be an "is" between "Lord" and "our." Leaving out the "is" imputes both lordship and righteousness to Jesus rather than God. It wrongly imputes divinity to the Messiah. The RSV correctly translates this verse as "The Lord is our righteousness." (f) There are no indications of Jesus ever being called "The Lord our righteousness" except by those seeking to fulfill the prophecy. (66) DAN. 7:13 ("I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him"). (a) It says one "like" the Son of man came.... It doesn't say he "was" the Son of man. (b) Even if the Son of man is the Messiah, the text distinguishes between him and God by saying he was brought to God, the Ancient of Days. (67) DAN. 9:24-25 ("Seventy weeks (70 X 7 = 490 years) are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins....and to anoint the most Holy....from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks (7 + 62 =69) and (69 X 7 = 483 years): the street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times"). This begins, of course, the famous prophecy of Daniel which apologists have seized with maximum celerity. Unfortunately, problems abound. (a) The words "week" and "weeks" come from the Hebrew word which means 7 days, not 7 years. (b) Unlike the RSV which says, "Seventy weeks of years," the KJV says "Seventy weeks." These weeks are real weeks of seven days each, not
